with eagernesse, proportionable to this loue, defend this proprietie; and because their right is sometime ambiguous, and doubtfull in it selfe, and sometime in their opinion only (selfe-loue casting a vaile before their eyes;) they fall into emnitie and contention, both challenging a right and proprietie vnto the things they loue. Which contentions and vnfriendly brawles can no otherwise be auoided, than either by not hauing, or not immoderately louing the matter or occasiō of their discord. Thus Honours are the causes of emnitie amongst men, whilest they striue who shall haue them, or detract from one anothers prayse, or doe not giue expected commendations; or are ready to supplant their best respected friends when they stand in their way, and hinder their rising; not sticking to vse all fraud and deceit, lying and dissembling, nor to commit any outrage, wronging and oppressing, killing and destroying, those who being ouerthrowne, may inrich them with their glorious spoyles; or doe by their standing against them keep them back from enjoying their ambitious desires. Wherein they make no difference of friendship or kinred; for if once they bee possessed and haunted with this proud furie, they are ready to make warre against their owne Brethren, to ouerthrow their Family, and professe open emnitie against their owne Fathers, if they doe but stop them in their eager pursuit of Honour and Preferment. So also what so great cause is there of emnitie and contention, as worldly riches? Which being immoderately loued, doe cause men to offer any wrong or injury vnto their Neighbours, which may further them to the fruition of that which they so much affect. For whilest all desire to haue them in abundance, and in respect of their limitted quantitie they must of necessitie be but in the possession of a few, hence it is that they continually striue and contend, who shall haue the pre-eminence of seizing vpon, and possessing this Golden Bootie. And because selfe-loue so blindeth men that euery one thinketh himselfe worthiest, and iudgeth his least shew of title, the best right; they are ready to incroach vpon their Neighbours, and to intitle themselues vnto their possessions; if they be strong enough seazing vpon them by force and violence; or if they want this tyrannous and ouer-bearing power, they will endeuour secretly to circumuent them by fraud and deceit; or openly vnder colour of Law to prey vpon their estates. Neither is there any thing more common than this, among couetous Worldlings; vnto whom riches is the fuell of their contentions, which being set a fire with their burning concupiscence, flame out into wrath and emnitie. So that (as one saith) if they had not just men among them, which whilest they striue to make peace and part these contending theeues, doe become a Bootie vnto them both, they would deuoure one another with their eager contentions; like famished wilde Beasts, which with mortall furie would, when hunger pincheth them, fight with those of their owne kind, that after the conquest they might prey vpon them, if there were not some harmelesse Lambes neere vnto them, which part this strife, by becomming a more easie prey vnto them both. And as this is to be daily obserued amongst ordinary Neighbours, so no where more commonly than amongst most intimate friends, and neerest kinred, where by reason of their intercourse of dealing, or occasion of diuiding their conjoyned right, (euery one being to haue that portion which their Predecessours left them) there are vsually the most hot contentions and most implacable emnitie. Yea, this strife and discord is not only caused whilest men labour to rob one another of their right, but euen when they prouide for them in abundance, and only for a time keepe them backe from the enjoying these rich possessions, which they so eagerly couet. In which respect it may bee truly said, that he who gathereth much, maketh his Heire his enemy; it being a sufficient quarrell and cause of emnitie, that hee liueth ouer-long, so as hee cannot Vulture-like prey vpon him; and the greater his gaine shall bee after his Predecessours death, the greater is his griefe because he is not dead alreadie; and the greater his joy when hee is departed. Neither is this onely to be obserued amongst Worldlings, but euen among Gods faithfull Seruants, who as they are the more corrupted with the loue of riches, so are they more apt vpon their occasion, to raise Suites and contentions one against another; as wee may see in the example of the Corinthians, who for this corruption are reproued by the Apostle. The like may be said of voluptuous pleasures, which being immoderately loued are the common causes of dissention, when as one man encroacheth vpon anothers delights, and vseth any meanes to restraine him from these pleasures, which he so fondly affecteth, that hee is readie in a mortall quarrell to hazard his life, rather then to be depriued of that which his soule so entirely loueth. And therefore seeing these worldly things, which in themselues are scarce worth the desiring, are the common causes of so much jarring discord, and implacable emnitie, let vs not set our hearts vpon them, but vpon Gods spirituall graces, which the more they abound among men, the more also is their loue and peace increased; and as the heauenly joyes of Gods Kingdome, wherewith all being fully satisfied, there can bee no cause of emnitie about them. Yea, because euery one shall haue so much, that hee can haue no more; and yet through the perfecti-

Chrysost. in Epist. ad Eph. 4 Hom. 9. Tom. 4

1. Cor. 6.

on of our loue shall enjoy the happinesse of all others; therefore the more they haue, the more we shall loue them, being (as it were) the rich treasuries of our joyes, and the meanes whereby they are infinitely multiplied by communication; whereas they vnto which we haue a proprietie, are so great in respect of vs who are full of them, that they doe not admit of any increase.

3. Sect. 13. That worldly things expose their owners to innumerable dangers.

Lastly, the more men abound with these wordly benefits, the more subject they are to innumerable dangers, because euery one is ready to doe them a mischiefe, not onely out of their enuie and enmitie, which they beare towards them in respect of their great prosperitie; but for the loue that they haue to their estates, which maketh them most ready vpon al occasions to destroy the owner, either that the object of their enuy being remoued, they may be freed from this pining disease, and grow into better liking; or that being destroyed, they may prey vpon them, and take into their hands the things which they possessed, as Ahab did Naboths Vineyard. To which purpose the Wise man saith, that Prou. 1 30. the prosperitie of fooles destroyeth them; not only as it encourageth them in the wayes of sinne, which bring eternall destruction to their soules, but also as it exposes their persons and estates to a temporall destruction herein this life. For who in the time of peace are so much endangered to the trecherie and falshood of sycophants & slanderers, as they whose prosperitie maketh them a fit prey to be seazed on? For whereas they neuer regard those who are of meane qualitie, as being the object rather of pittie, than of enuie, and can with their spoile bring no profit; they bend all their forces against those who are in a prosperous estate, making them guiltie, because they are rich, and thinking it a sufficient quarrell against their peace and saferie, because they haue something in their possession which they desire to seaze vpon, they being readie to seeke their destruction not so much for hatred to their persons, as for loue to their riches, pleasures or preferments, that they may out of their ruine raise their owne estate. Like vnto Hunters which pursue the silly Beasts, hauing no other quarrell vnto them, but because they presume euery day to weare such rich Furres, as are fit for Kings on their greatest Festiuals: or vnto Fishermen, which make a prey of the poore shel-fish, for the precious pearle which they keep in their weake holds, as better beseeming Princes sitting on their Royall Throne, than the worthlesse Muscle which tumbleth in the mud. So likewise in common calamities, who are more exposed to dangers, than they who are most noted, and most enuied? And who are more in the eye and enuie of all, which are readiest to destroy, than they who haue high places, and great wealth? It is not the poore Cottager, but the rich Alderman that inticeth the forraging Souldier to the spoile: it is not the silly Pioner or common Souldier that is the marke of the cunning Musketiere, but the gallant Capeaine, and great Commander: and in bloudie Battailes the death of a good Leader is more desired by his enemies, than of his whole company: and the life of the King or Generall of the field is more sought for, than of halfe the Armie. And as the skilfull Archer doth not make choice of the least and dimmest marke (or though he should, were not like to hit it) but of that which is fairest and brightest, because it seemeth to inuite the eye, and to giue vnto him some hope of hitting: and as the cunning Marke-man letteth passe the rascall Deere, and leuelleth his killing arrow at the fattest in the Heard: so the more flourishing a mans estate is, and the more goodly shew he maketh in the eyes of men, the fairer marke he is for mischiefe to shoot at, and the likelier he is to be hit, and deadly wounded with the piercing arrowes of armed enuie and powerfull malice; seeing like the Glow-worme hee is ready in the night of danger to discouer himselfe with his owne remarkable brightnesse, so as hee cannot flie the pursuer, but lighteth (as it were) a Candle for the destroyer to find him. So that a mans life and state is neuer in more danger of being Eclypsed, than when they are in the full of prosperity; nor hee euer more in perill to bee catched and insnared in the nets of mischiefe, than when he is securely preying vpon these alluring baites. For he hath many Corriuals in his loue, who would willingly by his death make a passage for their hopes; and he cannot want danger who enjoyeth alone, that which is desired of many; seeing the loue of his estate procureth hatred to himselfe. To which purpose one saith, that all those temporall benefits with which the World seemeth to pleasure his Fauourites, are rather dangerous snares to catch vs, than ornaments to adorne vs; in which who so resteth and reposeth any confidence, hath more pride, than cause of securitie. And as these worldly things doe expose vs to the assault, and lay vs open to the wounds of enemies; so when they doe strike and pierce vs with their enuenomed arrowes, these wounds which they make are more deepe and desperate. For whereas a man loseth a small estate with small griefe, because there is but little losse, and that easily repaired and recouered; these great estates being ruined bring also great sorrow; because there is much losse, and no hope of rising and reuiuing left, seeing they haue had so deepe a downfall, from so lofty and high a standing. And as they hazard vs to be spoiled of our liues and liberties by open enemies; so they much more endanger vs to more secret and pernicious foes, pleasing pleasing Parasites, and smoothing flatterers; whose speeches deliuered by falsehood, and receiued with selfe-loue, tend to the robbing vs of all vertue, and spirituall grace, and to the vtter destruction both of our soules and bodies; for it is this honey of worldly prosperitie which inticeth these hungry flyes to come vnto vs; which whilest they sucke, they defile vs with their flatteries, and empties vs of all good, that they may fill their owne bellies.

Whereby it appeareth, that these worldly things which men so fondly affect, doe not free them from dangers, but rather expose them to innumerable perils both open and violent, and such also as are treacherous and secret; which wee shall yet more plainly discerne if wee consider some particulars. For who seeth not that those who are aduanced to the highest pitch of Honours, are daily indangered to the greatest downfals? And whereas they who stand on the plain ground, are not likely to fall; or if they doe, sustaine no hurt? they who are carried to the top of the high pinacle of preferment, cannot faile their tooting, but they are indangered by a grieuous fall to be mortally bruised. Vnto which they are daily subject, both through hatred which men beare to their persons, and for their loue to their places & preferments; for ouer-topping all their inferiours with sterne pride, and by their commanding and ouer-ruling power forcing in them a wofull respect; by being thus seruilely feared, they also find cause of fearing, hauing endangered themselues to all whom they haue wronged by pride, tyrannie, and injustice, who watch but for a day, and fit opportunitie of practising cruell reuenge. Or if they haue no quarrell to their persons, yet the loue which they beare to their Honourable Preferments, maketh them willing and ready to supplant and ouerthrow them, when as they conceiue but the least hope of rising by their fall.

In respect whereof they who are aduanced to these high places are fitly compared to those, who with great labour and difficulty climbe vp to the top of some high Promontorie, and steepe rocke; where they are not onely in danger of falling, by their owne slips, but also are exposed to stormes and tempests, and endangered to be strucken and blasted with thunder and lightning. For daily are they in perill of perishing by secret conspiracies, or open violence, like vnto lofty Turrets in the time of a siege, whilest the either battered by force, as being the fittest marke for the Canon to play vpon, or vndermined with subtiltie. For in the time of trouble and common calamitie, these great Potentates haue the same priuiledge that high trees haue in the furious storme, which are through their height strowdly shaken, if not quite ouer-turned and rooted vp, when the low shrubs are out of danger, or that which great fish haue aboue the little frie, when they are taken in the same net, who are reserued for the Dresser, being fit to feed vpon, and to benefit the taker; whereas the small Ones are cast againe into the water, because they are vnprofitable and of little worth. An example whereof wee haue in Zedechiah, who being ouercome, had his sonnes slaine before his face, and afterwards his eyes put out, and carried into captiuitie, when the poorer sort of people were set at libertie, and left behind to dresse the Vines, and till the Land. And in the time of peace and securitie, when treacherie is plotting, and rebellion intended, they haue the Royall Prerogatiue of drinking first, if not alone, of poysoned cups. Neither are these deadly potions drunke out of earthen pots, or wooden dishes; but out of siluer plate, or cups of Gold.

1. King. 25. 7, 12. Sed nulla aconita bibuntur fictilibus: tunc illa tempestas cum pocula fumes gemmata, & lato Setinum ardebit in auro, Iuuen. Satyr. 10.

The like also may be said of riches and abundance, which are so farre from securing their Owners from dangers, that they more than any thing else expose them to them. For they are the hoped hire, and inticing baites, which encourage and allure Theeues, Slanderers, and powerfull oppressors in the time of peace to spie all aduantages, and to bend all their policie, might and malice against those whose abound with them; that bringing them to destruction, they may make their goods a prey, not sticking at all to kill their bodie, that they may seize vpon their Golden Fleece. And as the Wolfe and Butcher doe make choice of the fattest of the Flocke; so both the deceiuer and the destroyer chuse them who haue the fattest states, letting them passe by vntouched who being an vnprofitable prey, will not helpe to enrich the spoilers; and therefore the Prophet pronounceth a woe against them who load themselues with thicke clay, because they shall rise vp suddenly that shall deuoure them; and awake who shall stirre and vexe them; and they shall bee their prey. In which respect the poore estate hath aboue the rich the priuiledge of securitie; for whereas they may sleepe soundly, and without feare of perill, in a slender built Cottage, hauing no other guard than their owne powertie, and a doore latch, which they also vse, rather to keepe out beasts and ill weather, than theeues and robbers: they who abound with riches are neuer without danger, or at least feare of spoyling, though they lie vnder the safe custodie of stone wals, double doores, strong lockes, bolts and barres, which can neither be picked or put back with cunning, nor yet broken with force and violence. And whereas the poore man being on the high way alone euen in the darkest night, will sing merrily before the thiefe, because his

9. Sect. 15. That riches bring with them many dangers. Diuitiæ illæ quas putatis plenas esse deliciarum, plenissimæ sunt periculorum, Aug. in Psal. 9. Serm. 1. Tom. 10.

Habac. 2. 6, 7.

Optimum munimentum domi paupertas, Senec.

Nudum latro transmittit. Etiam in obsessa via pauperi pax est, Senec. Epist. 14.

pouertie hath procured his Passport, and hath made the robber either his friend to pittie him, or a careleſſe enemy, who therefore alone maligneth him, becauſe he cannot haue a quarrell to his purſe; the rich can ſcarce trauell at noone day ſecurely without company; and hauing this helpe to backe him, oftentimes he groweth jealous and fearefull of his guard. And as they thus draw dangers vpon them, ſo when they come, they make them leſſe able to eſcape them: for whereas poore men are alwayes in readineſſe and fitly prepared for flight; hauing nothing elſe but themſelues to carrie, and may goe which way they will vnknowne and vnregarded, neuer troubling their heads in thinking what to carrie, or how to conuey it, but onely how they may eſcape; the richer ſort cannot ſtirre but they haue many eyes to obſerue them; and louing their wealth as well as their liues, they cannot find in their hearts to leaue it all behind them, though they doe not know how with any ſafety to diſpoſe of it, ſeeing carrying it with them it is both a clogge to hinder their flight, and a ſtrong motiue to cauſe their enemies to purſue them with greater eagerneſſe. And as the ſhip heauily laden with rich wares doth allure the Pyrate to haue it in chaſe, and is hindred alſo with her heauy burthen from making away from her cruell purſuer, ſo that it is impoſſible to eſcape; whereas another which hath no other waighe but her owne ballaſt, ſaileth by ſwiftly and ſecurely, hauing nothing in her to intice a robber, nor giuing him any hope of fetching her in with his beſt ſpeed: ſo hee who hath little fleeth in time of danger cheerefully and ſecurely, hauing neither theſe golden clogges to burthen his body; nor care and griefe to oppreſſe his minde; ſo as he neither groaneth vnder his beloued load, nor grieueth for that which he hath left behind him: whereas he who hath worldly abundance is troubled with all theſe impediments; being turmoyled with his carriages, and ſorrowing for that which hee could not carrie, and equally caring for that which hee hath loſt, and for that which hee ſtill hath; which though it be ſo much that it bringeth toile to his body, and trouble to his minde, yet nothing grieueth him ſo much, as that he hath not more cauſe of toile and trouble. In reſpect of which difficulties that riches bring in eſcaping dangers, one compareth rich men to Cities without wals, which haue abundance of wealth to allure the enemy to the ſpoile, but no ſtrength to make reſiſtance; or like vnto thoſe who being purſued for their liues, doe flee away with long ropes tied to their legges, or with ſide garments, which euery ſtep they are ready to tread vpon, and catch a fall; whereby their ſpeed is hindred, and they betrayed into their enemies hands. Whereas they who are but in a poore eſtate, like vnto thoſe who are naked or lightly clad, eaſily ſlip out of the enemies hand, when he hath nothing to hold by, and being eſcaped, can haſt away with nimble ſpeed.

Finally, voluptuous pleaſures expoſe men to innumerable dangers, whileſt they arme all againſt them who are Corriuals with them in their delights; and alſo make them leſſe able to reſiſt and ſtand in their owne defence, ſeeing they both weaken the body, and effeminate the minde, as before I haue ſhewed. And therefore ſeeing theſe worldly things are ſo full of dangers, and hazard their Owners to ſo many miſchiefes, let vs labour to auoid theſe euils: and if wee cannot be perſwaded to follow his counſell who aduiſeth vs to keepe nothing in our poſſeſſion which the betrayer and ſpoyler may take away to his great gaine; and to haue as little as may be about vs to allure the thiefe; becauſe few or none thirſt after mans bloud only for it ſelfe, and almoſt all more reckon vpon the profit, than thinke on their quarrell; yet at leaſt let vs poſſeſſe them with moderate loue, and following the Apoſtles admonition, let vs haue them, as though wee had them not, keeping them with cold affections; and parting with them when they wil needs be gone with cheerefull mindes. And let vs labour aboue all things to furniſh our ſelues with Gods ſpirituall & ſauing graces, knowledge, faith, aſſiance, patience, a good conſcience, and the reſt, which will be armour of proofe againſt all perils, and ſoueraigne medicines and ſalues to cure thoſe wounds and hurts, which by any aduerſe accident ſhall happen to pierce vs. And let vs ſet our hearts and affections on our heauenly joyes and euerlaſting treaſures, daily labouring in the vſe of all good meanes, to be more and more aſſured of them; ſeeing enjoying them, wee ſhall not bee in danger of any enemy; but be ſecurely happy, and out of the perill of all aſſailants.

CHAP. XXXIV.

Of the manifold ſpirituall euils which worldly things bring to thoſe that ſet their hearts vpon them.

Chryſoſt. in Luc 16. de Lazaro conc. 1. & in Hebræos cap. 10. Homil. 19.

HEE haue ſhewed what ciuill euils and miſchiefes vſuall accompany theſe worldly things, eſpecially when they are exceſſiuely eſteemed and immoderately loued: Now weare to treate of thoſe ſpirituall euils which they bring with them, the which are either temporall, in this life, or eternall in the life to come. Concerning the former, weeare to know know, that if wee ſet our hearts on theſe vanities, the gaine and acceſſe of them will not ſo much adde to our outward eſtate, as they detract from the riches of our ſoules; neither will the carnall good they bring, in any proportion counteruaile the ſpirituall harmes which attend vpon them. For firſt, they choake the ſeede of the Word, and make it vnfruitfull, from which alone the gifts and graces of Gods Spirit ſpring. In which reſpect our Sauiour calleth riches thornes, which filling mens minds with worldly cares (as it were with ſo many prickles and ſharpe points) doe choake this ſeed as ſoone as it ſpringeth vp; and ſuch thornes alſo are honours and worldly pleaſures, when mens affections are ſet vpon them. For thus are they to vs of a thornie qualitie and nature, whileſt they catch and hold vs faſt in worldly imployments, ſo as we cannot frequent the aſſemblies of the Saints to heare the Word of God, but when we are inuited to this heauenly banquet, we are ready to pretend excuſes, like thoſe who were called to the Kings ſupper: or elſe whileſt being come within hearing, they make vs with encombred Martha to neglect the Word, & to embrace the World; and to ſtop our eares againſt all admonitions; as the Lord complaineth of the people of the Iewes. I ſpake (ſaith he) vnto thee when thou waſt in proſperitie, but thou ſaideſt I will not heare, this hath beene thy manner from thy youth, that thou wouldeſt not obey my voyce. So although the Prophet Ezechiel was an eloquent and powerfull teacher of Gods word, ſo that the people had no exceptions to take againſt him, why they ſhould not come to heare him; yet this immoderate loue of riches made their comming altogether vnprofitable. For ſo the Lord telleth him, that the people reſorted vnto him, after the accuſtomed manner, and did ſit before him, and heare his words, but they would not doe them; for with their mouthes they made ioſts, and their heart did goe after their couetouſneſſe. Neither doe they onely diſtract mens minds in hearing, ſo as they cannot attend vnto that which is ſpoken, but if in a deuouter fit they haue receiued any profitable inſtruction, they preſently choake it, and make it to bee quite forgotten before it can be brought to any vſe or practice. Yea if the heart bee ſtrongly infected with the poyſon of worldly couetouſneſſe, it will make men not onely to neglect, but euen to ſcorne thoſe profitable admonitions which are deliuered in the miniſterie of the word, for the reforming of this and other vices: as wee may ſee in the example of the Scribes and Phariſies, who mocked and derided our Sauiour Chriſt, when he perſwaded them to the workes of mercy, and that they ſhould not doe ſeruice to the earthly Mammon.

And as they doe choake in vs the ſeede of the Word, and make it vnfruitfull; ſo doe they conſequently rob and ſpoile vs of all the ſanctifying gifts, and ſauing graces, of Gods holy Spirit, if once wee ouerualue and ſet our heart vpon them. As for example, honours ambitiouſly affected and immoderately loued, doe keepe all ſauing graces from entring into our hearts; or if theſe ſeeds be allready ſowen in them, they doe ſo nip them, that they will neuer proſper and flouriſh: for the graſſe of Gods graces cannot grow on the high mountaines of pride; neither will the water of Gods holy Spirit reſt on the loftie hils to make them fruitfull, but deſcends downe into the low valleyes of humble and contrite hearts. And as a veſſell cannot bee filled with wholeſome oyle or ſweet water, but preſently the ayre is driuen out and giueth place: ſo the heart of man cannot be filled with the precious ointment of ſanctifying grace, till the wind of vaine glory bee expelled. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that as vaine-glory is the cauſe of many euils, ſo eſpecially of this, that it emptieth the ſoule of all ſpirituall riches, and depriueth vs of the profit, which we might take by them. As therefore the immoderate loue of worldly honours doth ſwell the hearts of thoſe that haue them with pride and vaine glorie; ſo theſe dropſie and corrupt humors being once receiued do preſently coole and drowne the vitall heate of Gods Spirit, and ſo diſable both ſoule and body in all liuely and ſpirituall operations, that they cannot performe the workes of godlineſſe. So that fulneſſe of pride argueth emptineſſe of grace; and where there is much vaine-glory, there certainely is litle goodneſſe. For as addle egges flote aloft, when the other which are good ſincke to the bottome: and as the empteſt veſſell giues the greateſt ſound, and the fruitleſſe eare of corne holdeth its head higheſt: ſo hee is moſt puffed vp, and loftie in his owne conceit, who is moſt emptie of grace, and diſfurniſhed of all ſpirituall goodneſſe. Thus alſo riches too much affected, become (as our Sauiour Chriſt hath taught vs) thornes which will let no graces grow in vs, and come to ripeneſſe; and therefore the Apoſtle Paul telleth vs, that we muſt flie couetouſneſſe, before wee can follow after righteouſneſſe, godlineſſe, faith, loue, patience, and meekeneſſe. So that it is hard to haue worldly gaine, and ſpirituall grace; to bee rich in poſſeſſions, and rich in godlineſſe; to haue cheſts full of earthly treaſures, and hearts well furniſhed with the ſauing graces of Gods holy Spirit. For theſe earthly vanities intangle mens hearts with the birdlime of carnall loue, which being admitted doth quench in vs the loue of God which is the fountaine of grace and true obedience. Now

9. Sect. 2. That abundance of worldly things impouerith vs in Gods ſpirituall graces.

Chryſoſt. in Gen. 1. Hom. 5.

Luke 8. 14.

1. Tim. 6. 11.

Pili ingrum, ita & denarium. Lucrum in arca, damnum in conſcientia. Tritis pelli, & peridis ſdem. Acquirit pecunia, & perdit ſalutem. Auguſt.

Quid prodeſt plena bonis arca, mens conſcientia? &c. Auguſtin. de verb. Dom. Serm. 12. Cato Maior.

what (as one ſaith) will it profit vs, to haue full coffers and emptie conſciences? to haue goods, and not to bee good? For who hath not juſt cauſe of bluſhing and ſhame, though his houſe bee full of goods, if he knoweth that they haue an euill Maſter? The like alſo may bee ſaid of voluptuous pleaſures; for as the heathen man could truely ſay, the tree of vertue cannot grow in the land of pleaſures; becauſe they who are addicted to carnall delights are made ſo purſie and ſhort winded, that they cannot take the paines to aſcend the hill of vertue; neither in truth haue they any deſire; for they iudge all things by ſenſe, and not by reaſon; and eſteeme that beſt, which is ſweeteſt to their appetite. In a word, if wee make our hearts the harborrough of any worldly vanities, they will not ſuffer any ſpirituall graces to lodge and mingle with them. For example, if wee ſet our hearts on honours, they will not admit faith to haue an entrance. For as our Sauiour ſpeaketh, How can yee beleeue which receiue honour one of another, and ſeeke not the honour which commeth of God alone? And the ſame effect hath the immoderate loue of riches; for as the Apoſtle teacheth vs, they who luſted after money erred from the faith, and pierced themſelues through with many ſorrowes. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that if any bee intangled with the ſnares of worldly riches, the medicine of faith cannot profit him. So alſo they quench in vs the flames of Gods loue; for if any man loue the world, the loue of the Father dwelleth not in him: yea this loue of the world is enmitie with God, as the Apoſtle teacheth vs. Now they who loue not God doe not truſt, nor hope in him; neither yet performe any other duty, ſeeing loue is the fountaine of all true obedience. And therefore wee muſt emptie our hearts of this worldly loue, if wee would haue any ſanctifying graces to dwell in them; wee muſt learne to contemne theſe earthly vanities, before wee can eſteeme, or with any deſire ſeeke after faith, affiance, hope, loue, or any other ſauing grace of Gods holy ſpirit; for the oile of Gods graces, and theſe wateriſh vanities will not mixe together.

Cic. 2. de finib.

Iohn 5. 44.

1. Tim. 6. 10. Ambroſ. Tom. 3. Serm. 2.

1. Iohn 2. 15.

Iames 4. 4.

Second. 3. That earthly abundance doth infatuate the vnderſtanding.

Secondly, worldly proſperitie and abundance of theſe earthly things, doe, when they are immoderately loued, dimme the eyes of the vnderſtanding, euen in reſpect of ciuill wiſdome, and make them ſtarke blind and very fooles, in diſcerning ſpirituall things. For who ſeeth not, that commonly they are moſt fooliſh, vpon whom the world moſt fawneth? and that it is the lot of very few in this life to be happy and wiſe? For as thoſe who are cockred by their parents, become fooliſh with wantonneſſe; ſo when men grow wanton with ouermuch worldly felicity, they are ſo beſotted with folly, that they neither know themſelues, nor other men. And as thoſe who haue walked in the ſnow, and haue had the bright beames of the Sunne ſhining in their eyes, are made hereby corporally blind; ſo thoſe who haue had theſe bright obiects of proſperitie alwayes in their ſight, are blinded ſpiritually in their minds and vnderſtandings; for as though theſe were contrary betweene themſelues, and to vs incompatible, to haue a great eſtate, and a good vnderſtanding; ſo much better ſighted we are in time of aduerſitie, than in proſperitie. But as this confluence of worldly benefits makes men dim-ſighted in ciuill wiſdome, ſo ſtarke blind in the wayes of God. And therefore the Pſalmiſt ioyneth both theſe together, worldly proſperitie, and ignorance of Gods will: his wayes (ſaith he) alwayes proſper, and Gods iudgements are high aboue his ſight. And hence it is, that the Apoſtle affirming that Satan blindeth the eyes of worldlings, doth call him in that place, the God of the world; implying thereby, that he vſeth the World, and worldly vanities, as his inſtruments for the ſmiting of them with this ſpirituall blindneſſe. In whom (ſaith hee) the God of this world hath blinded the minds, that is, of the Infidels, that the light of the glorious Goſpell of Chriſt, which is the image of God, ſhould not ſhine vnto them. For Satan caſteth this duſt of worldly vanities, into the eyes of carnall men, that they may not diſcerne the ſhining beames of Gods truth; but may grope at noone day, and for want of this ſpirituall light to guide them, may erre out of the right way, which leadeth to glory and eternall happineſſe, and goe the broad and plaine way which leadeth to deſtruction. In which reſpect, theſe worldly things may fitly bee compared to pleaſant wines, which being drunke in abundance, ſo intoxicate the braine, that there is for the time, no difference betweene drunkards, and fooles, or madmen: for ſo they who abound in all earthly proſperitie, haue their vnderſtandings infatuated, and their ſenſes beſotted with much drinking of theſe golden cups, ſo as they haue no more wiſdome or iudgement to diſcerne of ſpirituall things, than very fooles or franticke perſons. For as mad-men doe not ſee things as they are in truth, but as their lunatike and diſeaſe doth offer them to their deluded phantaſie; ſo neither do they, who go a madding after worldly vanities, vnderſtand and iudge of worldly and ſpirituall things, as they are in their owne nature, and according to their true worth and value, but are wholly led with their diſeaſe, iudging neither according to religion, nor yet well grounded reaſon, but as they are deluded and miſguided with their carnall concupiſcence.

Pſalm. 10. 5.

2. Cor. 4. 4.

Matth. 7. 13.

A ſimilitude betweene ſpirituall and bodily ſickneſſe. Senec. Epiſt. 94.

Nimium ſecundis rebus homines inſanire. Liuius.

ſcence. And that worldlings, are in truth thus mad and fooliſh, and wholly blinded with the things whereupon they haue ſet their hearts, it may clearely appeare, if wee conſider their whole courſe and cariage. For who but fooles and mad-men would lay vp their treaſures there, where they haue no certaintie to continue one houre, and where all their predeceſſours hauing ſtored vp all their riches haue beene robbed of them; not placing any part of them in their owne countrie, where they are to remaine as long as they liue? But thus doe theſe blinded worldlings lay vp their treaſures on earth, where they cannot ſtay, and where they haue ſeene by their owne experience all their anceſtors robbed, if not by men, yet by death, of all their riches; and ſend no part of their wealth before them into our heauenly countrie, where wee ſhall remaine for euer. So who but fooles and mad-men would exchange pure gold for ſhining braſſe, and a faire inheritance, for ſome childiſh trifles; but thus doe worldlings, who are content by wilfull ſinning to loſe Heauen for earth, true glory for falſe vanities, and euerlaſting happineſſe which ſhall neuer end, for baſe delights, and counterfait comforts which are euer ending. Who but fooles and mad-men, when the fire ragingly burneth, would, to quench it, caſt on more wood & oile? But thus doe worldlings, who ſeeke to quench the burning heate of their vnſatiable concupiſcence, by multiplying, and heaping vpon the fire, worldly vanities, riches, pleaſures and preferments, which are the fuell of their luſts, by the acceſſe whereof, they are more enraged. Who but fooles and mad-men, being in their pilgrimage, and trauelling through theeuiſh places, would carrie all their iewels and treaſures about them, which not onely ouer-burthen them in their iourney, but are in continuall danger to be taken away by robbers, & alſo endanger their owners to their rage & crueltie? whereas they might ſafely ſend them before them, and follow after with ſecuritie and comfort. But thus doe worldlings, who trauelling in our earthly pilgrimage, carrie all their treaſures with them, openly in their hands in the middeſt of robbers, tyring themſelues with the cariage, and hazarding their liues to bee murthered for their goods; whereas they might by bils of exchange, ſend them ſafely into our heauenly countrie, in the ſafe cuſtody of Gods factors, the poore members of Ieſus Chriſt, and ſo in the pilgrimage of this tranſitorie life, trauell after them with much comfort and contentment. Who but fooles and mad-men would ſet their hearts and affections vpon their Inne, where they are to continue but a night, and fall to building, purchaſing, and planting, as though they were there to end their dayes? But thus worldlings doe place all their loue on the things of this life; and ſettle their affections on the World, purchaſing, planting, and building here on Earth, where they can make no ſtay, but may to day before to morow bee taken away, and leaue all behind them; to bee inioyed ſometimes by ſtrangers, and ſometime alſo by their enemies. Who but fooles and mad-men would continue ſtill perſwaded of that, which is is continually and daily confuted by experience? But thus doe worldlings, who imagine that they ſhall liue long, & attaine vnto old age, yea immortalitie; notwithſtanding they daily ſee both weake and ſtrong, young and old arreſted by death, and twentie for one before they haue trauelled halfe their iourney; either in their childhood or full ſtrength. Who but fooles and mad-men, ſpend their whole time in thoſe things, for the doing whereof they can giue no reaſon, nor know any end of all their actions? But thus worldlings liue to old age, not knowing the end wherfore they liue, nor the cauſe why they were ſent into the world: namely, by their faithfull ſeruice to glorifie God in their owne ſaluation; and therefore they vtterly neglect this maine buſineſſe, of which they are ignorant, and ſpend their whole time about worldly vanities, and in performing ſeruice to ſinne and Satan. Who but fooles and mad-men would make ſale of their chiefe iewell, which is of infinite worth and value, for a baſe trifle which is vncertaine alſo in the poſſeſſion? But thus doe worldlings, by lying, ſwearing, deceiuing, and oppreſſing, ſet their ſoules to ſale, which is of infinite more worth, than the whole World, for euery ſmall pittance of worldly vanities, and (as it were) to make themſelues kings of a little mole-hill. Who but fooles and mad-men would, becauſe they are acting the part of a great Monarch, contemne their owne Soueraigne, and proudly inſult ouer their fellowes and companions, ſeeing within a few houres, they ſhall bee againe equall with the meaneſt? But this folly doe worldlings fall into, who being for a moment in worldly pompe and proſperitie, deſpiſe the King of Heauen and Earth, and cartie themſelues proudly and diſdainfully to their fellow ſeruants, who, when their part is acted, and the night of death approcheth, ſhall againe become their equals, as they were at their firſt entrance vpon this worldly ſtage. Who but fooles and mad-men would bee carefull of maintaining their credit among their fellow malefactors, and carefully hide their faults from thoſe who are alike guiltie; and neuer at all reſpect the preſence of their iudge; but deſperately commit all crimes and outrages before his face? But thus doe worldlings, who ſtanding vpon their reputation, heedfully fully hide their faults from men, who are alike sinfull to themselues; and neuer care to commit most outragious wickednesse in the sight of God, before whom, one day they must appeare to be acquitted or condemned. Finally, who but fooles and mad-men would make delay of dispatching those things which are of greatest waight, and deferre their most important businesse to their best leisure; and presently vndertake the obtaining of euery slight trifle, which onely bringeth some present delight, and is of no necessarie or profitable vse? But thus carnall worldlings doe first labour after earthly vanities, which are of no value, vaine and momentanie; and deferre their repentance to the end of life, when hauing increased the heauie burthen of sinne, they shall bee much more vnable to cast it off; and neglect the assurance of their owne saluation, which should bee most deare vnto them, as a thing not worth the hauing, or which they may haue at pleasure; though it bee the free gift of God, which hee seldome bestoweth vpon those, who haue so long and often refused and contemned it.

Mark 8.36.

Q. Sect. 4. That honours, riches and pleasures make men blind in finding the way to Heauen.

And thus it appeareth that these worldly things doe infatuate the vnderstanding and euen blinde the eyes of the soule, so as they cannot spiritually discerne the way of saluation, nor how to escape that broad way which leadeth to destruction; but as blinde men are ready to stumble against euery stone, to runne their heads against the walls and trees, and to fall headlong to their destruction into euery pit and ditch: so those who haue their soules blinded with the immoderate loue of these earthly vanities, are ready to stumble at euery stone of offence, whereby they fall into sin, and are hindred in the wayes of godlinesse; and to plunge themselues headlong into those ditches and pits of vice and wickednesse, to their eternall perdition and condemnation, which Satan and the world doe dig for them; so oft as they are inticed to goe on these in desperate courses, with the alluring promises of earthly benefits; wilfully falling (as the Apostle speaketh) for the loue of earthly abundance, into temptations and snares, and into many foolish and noysome lusts, which drowne them in perdition and destruction. 1. Tim. 6. 9. And thus the immoderate loue of honours and preferments, doe so blinde the eyes of ambitious worldlings, that they pursue with headlong haste glory and aduancement, neuer discerning nor greatly caring whether they bee in the way that leadeth to Hell and destruction, or in the way that bringeth vnto life and happinesse. It maketh them foolish in respect of spirituall wisedome, which guideth vs to euerlasting glory, and with proud contempt to disdaine it as childish simplicitie, esteeming them onely wise who with their Machiauellian policies doe attaine vnto earthly preferments, though this wisedome bee earthly, carnall, and diuellish, leading men as it were hoodwinckt into eternall death. It causeth them like fooles or mad-men, when they are hungry, to gape after the winde, and to seeke to satisfie their emptie soules with feeding on the breath of vulgar prayses; neglecting in the meane time that substantiall foode, and true nourishment of euerlasting glory and heauenly happinesse. In respect whereof this folly of worldings, is by the Prophet compared to the folly of drunkennesse, which maketh men to follow their present appetite, and to stop their eares against all reason and well-grounded perswasions. And the Prophet Dauid compareth them to the brutish creatures, which are onely guided with sense, and haue no vse of reason: Man (saith he) in honour, vnderstandeth not, hee is like to Beasts that perish. The which their brutish folly and franticke madnes, is so much the greater and more vncurable, because they thinke themselues wise, and all other men fooles and idiots in comparison of them. For so the Wise man affirmeth, that if a man bee wise in his owne conceit, there is more hope of a foole, than of him. For as one saith, the longer pride lodgeth in the heart, the more hardly it is discerned, and the more wee are infected with this disease, the lesse we seeke it. For as the stormie winds blowing vpon the calme Sea doe turne it vp from the very bottome, and mingle together the waters with the sands; so the windy storme of ambition and vaine-glorie, rushing into the heart and minde, doth ouerturne all, and put out the eyes of the soule, knowledge and vnderstanding. The like also may be said of riches, which being immoderately loued, doe so infatuate the minde of the couetous man, that hee hath wit for nothing, but to gather wealth; and like the blinde moale hee knoweth onely to dig in the Earth, and to hunt after his prey, and is starke blind in the wayes of God, and in discerning the bright shining light of his truth. Yea when once this cloud of couetousnesse hath darkened, and (as it were) cast a thicke foggy mist of ignorance, before the eyes of his soule, hee is so blind that hee can put no difference betweene friend & foe, kinred and stranger, good and euill, right and wrong, the seruice of God, and the seruice of the diuell, but is content to make vse of all persons, & of all courses whatsoeuer, so farre forth onely as they may serue as his instruments, for the gathering or increasing of his wealth. And as those who are in the darke can put no difference betweene precious stones & worthlesse peebles, copper and gold, the most orient colour, and a duskish russet: so they who

Lam. 3. 36. Hos. 12. 1. Hab. 2. 15. Psal. 49. 20. Prou. 26. 12. Greg. Moral. lib. 34. cap. 8. Chrysost. in Matth. hom. 64. Tom. 4.

who haue their vnderstandings darkned with couetousnesse, are ready in their blinded iudgements, to preferre the world before God, Earth before Heauen, and things temporarie before things eternall, because they are subiect to their grosse senses, and may be palpably felt, and euen groped out in this night of their ignorance. In a word, according to the measure of his gaine which hee may make by any thing, such is his knowledge of it, such also is the proportion of his loue. Hee knoweth and taketh acquaintance of his friends when they may profit him; but if they are like to bee his hindrance, hee passeth by and cannot see them, or seeing know them. If a stranger will aduance his gaine, hee esteemeth him aboue a Brother or a Father; yea if an enemie will helpe to increase his riches, hee shall be espoused his dearest friend. If he can make any profit by religion, hee will take acquaintance of it, and no man in outward shew shall bee more deuout; but if it will not stand with his worldly aduantage, hee will with Demas, forsake it, and with Demetrius persecute it. Finally, nothing more than voluptuous pleasures do infatuate the vnderstanding, and blind the eyes of the soule, so as they are not able to iudge and determine any thing according to reason, but measure all things by brutish sensualitie. And as thicke and darke clouds doe hide from our bodily eyes the light of the Sunne; so those vapours and fumes which arise into the head out of stomacks distempered with surfetting and drunkennesse, doe so intoxicate the braine, and hide the light of reason, and the illumination of Gods spirit, from the eye of the soule, that it is vtterly vnable to discerne of spirituall things, or what is fit and requisite in ciuill wisdome and discretion, but giueth it selfe wholy to be guided with voluptuousnesse and carnall concupiscence. To which purpose one saith, that a fat belly seldome produceth any witty inuention: and an other affirmeth, that hee deceiueth himselfe who thinketh that hee may cram his belly with daintie messes and drinkes, and haue any leasure to studie wisdome. Yea euen the heathen man could teach vs, that voluptuous pleasure, as an enemie vnto reason, doth hinder wise counsell, and dazeleth the eyes of the minde, and that it can hold with vertue no acquaintance and correspondence. And hence it is that the Wise man calleth mirth madnesse; and the Greekes call gluttonie the throte or belly-frenzie; because they who are subiect vnto it, are most sottish and foolish in all their courses, measuring all things according to their sensuall appetite, and not according to the light of reason. But aboue all pleasures, lust and vncleannes doth infatuate the vnderstanding; and quite putting out the eyes of the soule, doth lead a man in a headlong course into Hell and destruction. And therefore the lasciuious wanton, and filthy fornicatour, by a certaine kinde of proprietie or eminencie is called a foole, who is not leade by his owne reason, but by the direction and commandement of his Harlot, following her as an oxe that goeth to the slaughter, and as a foole to the stocks for correction; till a dart stricke through his liuer; and as a bird hasteth to the snare, not knowing that hee is in danger. Prou. 7. 7. 22. 23

But as the abundance of these worldly things, immoderately loued, doe make men blind and ignorant in the knowledge of all things, so especially of themselues and of their friends; for they who are pampred with prosperitie, forget their humane and fraile condition, whereby they are become miserable, both in respect of sinne and punishment; and are ready in their pride and selfe-loue to deifie themselues, and to imagine that they are creatures diuine and immortall. And this maketh them also to disdaine and contemne their brethren, as though they were not made by the same worke-man, of the same matter, and in the same mould; but creatures (if at least creatures) of purer substance, and of a farre more excellent nature and condition. And thus the ambitious man being aduanced vnto honours and preferments, can neuer haue a true sight and knowledge of himselfe; partly because his owne pride and selfe-loue blindeth him, so as hee can neuer make a true estimate of his owne worth, and partly because hee hath a whole cloud of parasites and flatterers about him, which dazle his sight, and with ouer-partiall prayses extoll his good parts, and magnifie his gifts farre aboue their true value; so as he can neuer see them as they are in truth, but as these false glasses offer them to his view. Vnto which hee is content to giue more credit, than either to the testimonie of his friends, or his owne sight and iudgement, because their vntruths are more pleasing and delightfull; as if deformed creatures being magnified for their beautie, should voluntarily put out their eyes, because by looking in true glasses, they should discouer this false and vndeserued commendations. And thus also riches and abundance of worldly pleasures and delights, doe puffe men vp with pride, whereby they forget their owne frailetie and mortalitie, and are apt to conceiue, that they exceed all others as much in true worth and excellencie, as they are preferred before them in riches and delights. Now what can be more miserable, than for a man to be ignorant of himselfe, and to imagine that hee is happie when hee is wretched, excellent when hee is base; highly in Gods loue, when he is deeply in his his displeasure; and better than a man, when hee is worse than a Diuell? seeing if a man know not his humane frailtie, he will neuer seeke after spirituall perfection; if he doe not see his beggerie, he will neuer labour after true riches; if hee feele not his sicknesse, hee will neuer seeke to haue it cured; and if hee doe not discerne his worldly miserie, he will neuer hunger after heauenly happinesse.

9. Sect. 5. That worldly abundance makes men so ignorant that they cannot know themselues.

9. Sect. 6. That worldly abundance makes men ignorant of their friends.

And as this confluence of worldly things doth so blind the eyes of those who haue them, that they doe not know themselues; so much more doe they make them ignorant of their friends, bringing with them a kind of impossibilitie of discerning a true friend who loueth their person, from a flatterer, who loueth their estate; one who loueth them for their owne sake, and for their vertues and good parts, from another who loueth them for the vse which they can make of them, by communicating with them in their worldly happinesse. It is true that happy men neuer want kindred nor friends; but who among this multitude are friends to them, and who friends for their owne sake, that they may share with them in their wealth or honours, it can hardly be determined till their prosperitie and they being seuered, flatterers leaue them and follow their estate, and true friends adhere still vnto them, because their person, vertues and good parts doe still remaine. For whereas hee who is faithfull alwayes delights in his friends companie, but then most officiously resorts vnto him when his worldly prosperitie hath left him; because then especially hee needs his helpe and comfort, and himselfe hath best opportunitie of approuing his friendship to be sound and substantiall in this time of triall, because according to the prouerbe, a friend in need, is a friend indeed: and that other vttered by more sanctified lips; A friend loueth at all times, and a brother is borne for aduersitie: contrariwise, a false friend whose iron heart is drawne with the loadstone of profit or delight, lasteth in a seeming constancie as long as these last, and leaueth when these faile and are taken away. In which respect one compareth men vnto springs or fountaines of Water, which are resorted vnto by many whilest they haue store of Water, but are neglected vtterly when they are become drie. And the holy man Iob likeneth false friends to little brookes which haue abundance of Water, so as they ouerflow in the time of Winter, when there is no need of them; but are drie in the drought of Summer, deceiuing those who resort vnto them to quench their thirst. For as euery one will bee allied vnto him who may helpe maduance his worldly estate; so it is hard for the poore to finde a kinsman (and much more a faithfull friend) because no man is willing to acknowledge him who standeth in need, fearing lest taking acquaintance he should craue his helpe. When therefore a man liuing in worldly prosperity is beloued of many, hee is very vncertaine whether they loue himselfe, or his prosperous estate; and it is onely the losse of this earthly happinesse, which can determine this doubt, as being the onely touch-stone of vnfained loue; for as prosperity doth not shew a friend, so neither doth aduersitie conceale an enemie. For how many haue we knowne vpon whom almost euery one hath fawned whilest the World smiled on them; who when it hath afterwards frowned, haue turned their fauours into scornes, and their friendship into enmitie? and being true louers of their proper object vpon which they haue set their hearts, namely the prosperitie of the World, they leaue the persons, whom it forsaketh, and make choice of others whom it accompanieth, howsoeuer vnworthy they haue thought them, in times past, of the least sparke of loue or shew of friendship. Of this holy Iob iustly complaineth. My neighbours haue forsaken me, and my familiars haue forgotten mee: and Dauid also in many places; I am become a stranger vnto my brethren, and an alient to my Mothers sonnes: and againe, My familiar friend whom I trusted, which did eate of my bread, hath lifted vp the heele against me. So the Church in time of affliction maketh this lamentation, that among all her louers shee hath none to comfort her, and that all her friends deale vnfaithfully with her, and became her enemies.

And thus it is impossible for those who are aduanced vnto honours, to discerne true friends, from false flatterers; because if many loue their persons, there are many more that loue their places and preferments: according to that of the Wise man, Many reuerence the face of the Prince, and euery one is a friend to him that giueth gifts: all which are ready to forsake them, if they be once displaced out of the throne of honour. A notable example whereof wee haue in Ahab, who whilest hee liued was honoured as a King, and well was hee that could haue the keeping of one of his Children, to shew hereby his loue vnto their Father; but no sooner was he ouerthrowne, and Iehu proclaimed King, but they presently adore this rising Sunne, and at his commandement, of guardians to their Masters children, they become Butchers, and send their heads to Iehu for a present. So euery one in our ward shew will be the friend of him who aboundeth with worldly wealth; and as the Wise man saith, riches gather many friends: but who among this multitude are friends to the rich, and who to riches, it cannot bee discerned, Τῶν εὐτυχούντων πάντες εἰσὶ συγγενεῖς. Felicium omnes sunt affines. Menander apud Stob.

Prou. 17. 17.

M. Greenham.

Iob 6. 15. 16. 17.

Menander in Adelphis apud Stobæum.

Iob 19. 14.

Pſal. 38. 11. and 88. 8.

Lament. 1.

Prou. 19.

discerned, till pouertie as a fanne seuer them, parting the chaffe of flatterie, from the good graine of true fidelitie. For many who thinke it a thraldome to bee linked in loue, with such as being destitute of all good parts, are void of all desert; yet are well contented to continue bound and fettered still, because their chaines of bondage are of gold; but no sooner doe their riches faile, but presently they faile with them, and plainly shew that all this while they were not friends to their persons, but to their owne profit. And as flies forsake the Kitchin being swept and cleansed, and Waspes the Honey pot when it is empty and cleane washed, about which they swarmed in great multitudes, whilest being ful they might suck from it any sweetnesse; so these false friends haunt and flocke vnto the houses of the rich, whilest their store lasteth; but if by any casualtie they be stripped of their wealth, presently their friendship faileth when the cause thereof is taken away. Foolish therefore is their conceit, who being rich thinke all friends that fawne vpon them; or who imagine that they can buy loue with gifts and benefits, which is only purchased with mutuall loue, vertue, good parts, and wel-deseruing; without which, great gifts are to the receiuers in this respect esteemed injuries, because they binde them to such, vnto whom they haue to be beholding. To which purpose one saith, that true friendship is not venall, and of a slauish nature; but full of beautie, free and liberall: for it is a vertue, and not a gainfull and illiberall contract, which is not procured and bought with money, but with loue, not with offering great prizes for it, but by mutuall contending who shall exceed one another in loue and kindnesse: in which regard the friendship betweene the poore is more faithfull commonly than that which is betweene the rich; who oftentimes want true friends, when the poore abound with them. Neither can that be esteemed true friendship which is mingled and corrupted with false flatterie: but such is the ordinary friendship towards the rich, who are flattered and soothed in all their sayings in hope of gaine; whereas no man cunningly fawneth vpon the poorer sort, where no profit is expected; but that friendship which is professed towards them is simple, true, and without all dissimulation. The like also may bee said of voluptuous pleasures, with which when a man abounds, he can hardly know a true friend, from a wanton play-fellow, or one who keepeth him company for loue of his person, from another who is tied for a time in the bond of delight, and familiarly resorteth vnto him, because they communicate together in the same pleasures, sports, and recreations. For how many are there who are friends only for good fellowship, and are tied to one another (as we say) by the teeth, spending their time in their mutuall feasting, drinking, banquetting, and belly cheare; who part friendship when they part Neighbour-hood, and continue no longer in their loue and league, than they haue opportunity to entertaine one another with these voluptuous pleasures? How many are there who are friends whilest they take delight in the same sports and pastimes, and may game and reuell mutually together, who often become strangers, and sometimes enemies, when either they take no further delight in their pleasures and recreations, or by their distance of dwelling, cannot ioyne together as in former times; or finally doe any way crosse one another in their games and sports? For because their friendship had only these grounds whereupon it was first buile, and afterwards wholly rested: therefore when they sink and faile, this tottring building erected on them must needs come to ruine & be vtter ouerthrowne.

Sect. 8. That earthly abundance causeth securitie.

A third spirituall euill which vsually accompanieth worldly prosperity and abundance of earthly things; is, that they commonly lull men asleepe in carnall securitie, whereby they put farre from them the euill day, as though they were priuiledged and exempted from all Gods iudgements, notwithstanding that they goe on in their sins, and daily prouoke his wrath against them. For because they enioy worldly prosperitie, and abound in all earthly blessings, therefore they presume that they are highly in Gods loue and fauour, and that hee liketh and approueth them in all their courses, because he so multiplyeth his benefits, and giueth vnto them such liberall wages, as they imagine, for their well deseruing. And so these temporary and outward gifts, through the iust iudgement of God, and their grosse abuse of his bounteous mercy, doe become vnto them gifts of iustice and wrath, rather than of mercie and loue; and like vnto Iaels milke bring them into such a deepe slumber, or rather dead sleepe of carnall securitie, that they neuer awake, but are mortally wounded, and made an easie prey to their spiritual enemies, who doe pursue them for their liues. Thus Dauid saith, that because the wicked mans ways did prosper, therefore Gods iudgements were high aboue his sight, and he at defiance without his enemies, saying in his heart, I shall neuer be moued, nor be in danger. So the Rulers of Iudah hauing the World at will and carrying all things according to their owne pleasure, are said in the securitie of their hearts, to haue made a couenant with death, and an agreement with Hell: promising vnto themselues, that though a scourge should run ouer and passe through, it should not come neere them, because they had made falshood their refuge, and hid themselues vnder vani-

Psal. 10. 6.

Esay 28. 15.

tie.

tie. Thus also the same Prophet bringeth in the Epicures encouraging one another in their securitie: Esay 56.12. Come, I will bring wine, and we will fill our selues with strong drinke, and to morrow shall be as this day, and much more abundant. And so the Prophet Amos telleth the people, that by their prosperity they were brought into security, with which when they were possessed they vtterly neglected the threatnings of Gods judgements. For hauing said, that they had put farre away the euill day, and approached to the seate of iniquitie; hee presently inferreth this as the cause thereof, that they did lie vpon beds of Ivory, and stretch themselues vpon their beds, and did eate the Lambes of the flocke, and the Calues out of the stall; that they did sing to the sound of the Viall, and inuented vnto themselues instruments of Musique, for their carnall delight, as Dauid did for Gods seruice; that they did drinke wine in bowles, and anoint themselues with the chiefe ointments, &c. Finally, our Sauiour Christ saith, that the people of the old World liuing in all prosperitie and ease, did stop their eares to Noahs preaching, and put off from them all feare of Gods threatned iudgements, spending their time in eating and drinking, building and planting, buying and selling, marrying, and giuing in marriage, vntil the very day that the flood came, and drowned them all. And sheweth that the like carnall securitie should wholly possesse men at the end of the World, grounding vpon this premonition an effectuall exhortation. Take heed to your selues (saith he) lest at any time your hearts be oppressed with surfetting and drunkennesse, and cares of this life, and lest that day come vpon you at vnawares; because it shall come on the World as a snare on the silly bird, which taketh her suddenly, whilest she securely feedeth vpon the bait, and feareth no danger. The which is necessary for all men to lay it to their hearts, seeing not onely carnall Worldlings, but also Gods faithfull seruants are apt to bee lulled a sleepe with these pleasing songs of plenty and prosperitie, as we may see in the example of Dauid, who said in his prosperitie he should neuer be moued, because God of his goodnesse had made his hill so strong. So the sonne of Syrach giueth warning that in the time of plenty we be not ouertaken with securitie. Say not (saith he) I haue enough and possesse many things, and what euill can come to me hereafter? but in thy good estate remember aduersitie, and in aduersitie forget not prosperitie. And not without good cause, seeing through our heedlesse negligence, we are enbone all other perils likely to be catched in this trap. In regard whereof one truly saith, that felicitie is more to be feared than misery, because this out of tribulation bringeth forth good fruit, but worldly happinesse cor-

Esay 56.12.

Amos 6.3,4,5.

Esay 47.8.

Luke 17.26,28.

Luke 21.34.

Psal. 30.8.

Eccles. 11. 24,25.

Aug. enarrat. in Psal. 67. 12. Tom. 8.

rupteth the mind with peruerse securitie, and maketh way for the Deuils tentations. Besides which danger this carnall securitie bred in vs by flourishing prosperitie, as a bad daughter of a good mother, doth as much as any thing expose vs to Gods heauy iudgements, which most suddenly surprize all those who neuer suspect them, but carelesly contemne them; as we may plainly see, if we will but examine the fore-alleadged examples. And this also the Wise man teacheth vs: for neither (saith hee) doth man know his time; but as the fishes which are taken in an euill net, and as the birds that are caught in the snare: so are the children of men snared in the euill time, when it falleth vpon them suddenly. From which fearefull plagues if we would be exempted, wee must take heed that this worldly prosperitie doe not rock vs asleepe in the cradle of securitie, and that with greater watchfulnesse, because wee are easily brought into this deepe sleepe, when wee haue once drunke deeply of these sweet potions.

Eccles. 9.12.

The fourth spirituall euill which vsually accompanieth worldly prosperitie, and abundance of earthly things, is, impenitencie and hardnes of heart; for as men in their carnall securitie, put from them the euill day, so together with it the day of their repentance, and conuersion vnto God. And howsoeuer it be not altogether impossible for those who flourish in worldly prosperitie, to repent of their sinnes; yet it is a worke of exceeding great difficultie, and quite against nature, that worldly joy and godly sorrow should dwell together. The which will plainly appeare if wee doe but make vse of our daily experience, and consider mens common and continuall practice. For howsoeuer when their sweet sinnes haue an after taste of bitter punishment, they may by sense of paine be moued to dislike and loath them; yet when they prosper in their wickednesse, and doe not onely take pleasure in the sinne it selfe, which is most delightfull to their carnall appetite, but also find the fruits thereof alike sweet and pleasant, growing great by their ambition, waxing rich by their fraud and oppression, and enjoying their health the better by the vse of worldly delights; then are they encouraged to goe on in their wicked courses, and insoparably wedded vnto their sinne, being not only tied vnto it with the strong cord of their corruption, but also in the most infringeable bond of benefit, which they haue neither will nor power to breake. In which respect there cannot be a more fearefull iudgement of God vpon sinfull man, than when sinne hauing gone before, hee suffereth prosperitie to follow after, not only because hauing (as they take it) their wickednesse richly rewarded, they are ready to thinke (as the Psalmist speaketh) that God is

Mmm 3

iuices thereby, allureth perfons of all ranks to the World, and loue thereof, and to seeke earthly pleasures in steed of heauenly glory and so compromiseth matters, that they will haue both Heauen and earth, God and the World, and all happinesse. Yea euen those who of this life, they take many pleasures, both better sort, and in their kinde, they will haue some, as well as the rich, which is not enough, vnlesse they deserue abundantly to shew all sorts of humanity and loue to others, they spend liberally and willingly to feed the poore, to clothe the naked, garment of righteousnesse, and to visit the sicke, verance and goodnesse, that they may crucifie the flesh, and so mortifie the earthly members, wounde it with sinne to eternall death, the outward man may flourish in wealth, abundance. And yet for all this, he will not leaue towards their bodies, to the full, and superfluities: for first the pallate, they seeke meates in their seasonings, and dainties, to please it with delicious confections, they are daily vnsatisfied with worldly loue to meate, meates, cost, fare, and sumptuous entertainment, they spare not expence, trauell, and sorrow, to procure all varietie of delicates, and dainties, they are carefully bent to the obtaining of honour, and preferment, to the getting of wealth, and riches, to the purchasing of worldly things, which they loue better then either body or soule. And finally, when by all this care and paines they haue gotten them into their possession, they will neither pinch backe and belly, what they will spend, and diminish that, which their soule to deerely loueth. And if we reason, who can imagine that he, who so much loues the World, should not also loue his owne body, or soule? Seeing he taketh a wilfull course of sinne for the obseruing of his earthly desires, whereby he endangereth them both (as it were) headlong into Hell; the one to be tormented in vnquenchable flames, the other to be punished with heauie punishment, the fierce and implacable wrath of God. And therefore in regard truly said, that he who loueth the World himselfe, seeing if he haue any loue at all, it is false and counterfeit, and he is to blame truly hateth, because the finall end of all is false and counterfeit, and persistance in that, which proceed from the cruell malice of the enemy of our soules.

The sinfull will which the great profperitie and abundance of earthly blessings bring to many, doe exceedingly aggrauate their sinnes. For those who abuse them in their pride, and make sport of God and men. For they should according to the greatnesse of his benefits, doth publish, and proclaime his glorie, and thankfulnesse and obedi-

Nulla pæna simul stare potest & argenti & animæ amor. Chrysost. in Rom. 8. Ser. 13

Col. 2. 8. Matters impertinent to worldly things, ought not to be medled with.

Sect. 12. That earthly abundance aggrauates their sinnes that haue it.

wise abuse his gifts to wanton sinnes, and satisfie their wicked desires, this doth much aggrauate their sinne, and prouoke the more them vnto vehement displeasure. Besides, they are influenced to the corrupt prosecution of their wicked courses, and behauiour is obserued, the more imitated and followed by those who behold and decline vpon it. Whereby the sinnes of great men are doubled and redoubled, in case they be exemplarie and scandalous, drawing others, as euill precedents, vnto imitating of the like wickednesse. In regard whereof it is truly said, that in the greatest profperitie there is least libertie, because in great Personages, apparances of euill are fowler, and faults crimes; seeing they vngratefully neglect the Lord, vnto whom they are bound in so many and extraordinary bonds of loue; and also grieue the way of their owne damnation, hardned, and imboldened by their euill example to the like, and pitty. So likewise this great and dangerous estate in the World, doth make men so much proner to offend in the sight of God, as it makes them more proud, insolent, and oppressive vnto men and injurious, when hauing gotten law in their owne hands, they do what they will without resistance; and beholding thus offended, it doth much shew and aggrauate their faults to see the gifts and talents a vessell are notably dissonant, whilest it stands in the temple, but plainly appeare when it is filled with water; so to behold a man in the midst of worldly riches and preferment, but in miseries not much obserued, but no sooner is he exalted and (as it were) filled with these large gifts of worldly prosperitie, but his corruptions and spirituall leakes are conspicuous in the sight of all men. So that if there be any in great perhaps great and extraordinarie reformation, they doe in climing vp to these high places, and continuing still in their vices and sinnes, but (like Apes on the tops of houses) draw more the more readily to looke vpon them, and looking to behold their nakednesse and filthinesse. And as the greatnes of a false Base doth make the Image vpon it to seeme so much the lesse; so the greatnesse of some places doth but the more extenuate their worth, and shew the great disproportion, betweene their aduancement and desert. Neither doe faults alone more clearely appeare in great Personages, like small spots in the fairest picture, and little moates in the beames of the Sunne: but being discerned, they are more sharply censured and condemned, because they are not only aggrauated by the greatnesse of their estate; but also by the greatnesse of their example vnto those, who cannot attaine to that height. Whereby it commeth to passe, that when there is no shew of argument more plausible to to their hearers, than the ripping vp, diuulging, censuring, and condemning of the faults of their Superiours.

The seuenth spirituall euil accompanying these worldly things, is, that they expose men vnto all tentations, and make them willing to yeeld to Satans wicked suggestions, and the Worlds inticements, and to become their readie instruments for the committing of any sinne, so they may haue but hope to obtaine any of these earthly vanities, whereupon they haue set their hearts. In which respect, it may betruly said, that as the loue of God is the fountaine of all true obedience, so the loue of the World is the chiefe, and almost only motiue vnto all sinne, and consequently the onely meanes which Satan hath to draw men from God, and to hold them in his miserable bondage and subiection. For who would renounce the seruice of God, and serue the Deuill, if it were not to receiue this wages of iniquitie? Who in the spirituall conflict, would leaue the Standard of the Lord of Hosts, who being Omnipotent in power, is sure in the end to haue the victory, and hath promised to all his Souldiers no lesse than Crownes and Kingdomes; were it not that Satan allureth and hireth them to fight on his side, with the present pay of worldly riches, pleasures and preferments? Who by sinning would hazard his soule to eternall torments, if hee were not allured with these inticing baits of earthly vanities? Who would entertaine sinne, if it should come alone, and appeare in its owne vgly and monstrous shape, though now they willingly giue it the best welcome, and lodge it in their hearts, because it commeth disguised, and (as it were) guilded ouer with this worldly beautie? Who would be at Satans absolute command to doe his will, without hope of any reward; though now they willingly hearken, when he saith, All this will I giue thee if thou wilt do me seruice? Would wee therefore know wherein Satans power chiefly consisteth, whereby he vanquisheth such great multitudes, and raigneth and ruleth as the Prince of the World in the hearts of rebelleuers? Surely it is not so much in his owne strength, as in these worldly aides. For his power and malice is so limited by God, that he cannot ouercome by force and violence any, who haue but so much as a desire to make resistance; and hee is onely permitted to get the victorie ouer those, who are willing to be ouercome, and to lead them alone into his seruitude & subiection, whom hee can perswade to acknowledge him as their Lord and Master. And therefore hee seldome bringeth his forces against vs into the open field, ot attempteth to ouercome vs by force and violence; but hee seeketh trecherously to betray vs, by perswading vs to a parley, wherein he vseth these worldly vanities, as his eloquent and most preuailing Orators, to allure vs to leaue the Lord, and to listen vnto him, seeing he perswadeth vs to nothing, but that which tendeth to our present profit, and which is most pleasing to our naturall appetites. He will make vs beleeue that the sinne is but small, and the reward great; and say vnto vs, as Bersabe to her sonne, I haue a small suite vnto thee; denie me not. Though if we haue wisdome to discerne it, wee shall easily perceiue that our harkening vnto it, will cost vs no lesse, than the losse of Gods Kingdome. He will offer vs Honours, and promise that we shall be highly aduanced aboue other men, but we must first by sinne bow vnto him, and doe him reuerence: he will promise vs riches, but vpon the condition that wee bee content to vse fraude, and deceit, oppression and crueltie, for the compassing of them. Hee will tender vnto vs varietie of delights; but if wee will haue them, wee must to enjoy them, neglect the seruice of God, and vse them immoderately and in excesse. Vnto which perswasions, we are too too readie to listen and yeeld, not simply, because Satan requireth it, but because we dote on the loue of these worldly things which he offereth vnto vs. These then are that treble cord of vanitie, whereby the Deuill draweth men into all iniquitie; these are the stythies of this hellish Vulcan, whereupon he hammereth and forgeth his chaines of tentations, wherewith he draweth men into the pit of perdition, and his mortall darts, with which hee woundeth them to eternall death. These are the nailes wherewith hee fastneth the hearts of carnall men to the earth, so as they can neuer lift them vp in any heauenly meditation. These are the Tempters choisest and best approued weapons, wherewith being armed, he presumed to encounter our Sauiour Christ, the eternall Son of God: All this will I giue thee, if thou wilt fall downe and worship me. Matth. 4. 3. 8. 9. These are his allurements, wherewith hee inticeth vs to swallow the deadly hookes of sinnes, which are so vgly and monstrous in their owne nature, that we would no more easily be perswaded to swallow them, than the fish the bare hooke, if they were not couered with these alluring baits, which are so pleasing to our carnall appetites. These are the woods and bushes, wherein Satan layeth his secret ambushments, that hee may suddenly assault and ouercome vs at vnawares, whom he could not vanquish in a pitched battell; and the bootie which he inticeth vs to prey vpon to our destruction.

In a word, as these worldly things are the Tempters chiefe inducements to perswade vs vnto sinne, so are they the instruments and meanes of wickednesse, when wee are inticed to entertaine their euill motions. For by the helpe of these

Basil. in tract. de rebus secular.

Prodigals maintain their Harlots, and themselues also in their riotous courses; by these the Glutton and Epicure vphold their proud brauerie and delicious fare, and are inabled to passe their time in voluptuous and carnall delights; with these are men armed for any villany, and are strengthened and borne out in tyrannie, crueltie, and oppression. All which happeneth not out of the nature of the things themselues (as before I haue shewed) but through the corruption of those who hauing them, doe abuse them, both as occasions and meanes, inducements vnto, and helpes and furtherances of their wicked courses.

Luke 15,13,30. 1. Sam. 25.36. Luke 16.19.

9. Sect. 13. That honours expose men to tentations.

But let vs for the better clearing of the former point, more specially consider of those instances, Honours, riches and pleasures, and shew how they seuerally are by the malice of Satan and our corruption, prouocations vnto sinne, and the ordinary wages of impietie and wickednesse. And first for honours; who seeth not, that being immoderately loued and desired, they lay men open to entertaine the tentations of the Deuill, and make them willing to commit any outrage and wickednesse, which seemeth to promise them any glory or preferment? what fraud and dissimulation will they spare to vse? whom will they not supplant? what friend will they not betray? what Kinsman, Brother, or Father will they respect? yea whose ruine will they not plot? and whose bloud will they not spill, that they may obtaine their ambitious desires, and aduance themselues to their affected promotions? What was the cause which moued Adam to neglect the voice of his Creatour, and to hearken to the tempter, but his aspiring ambition which made him to listen vnto Satan vpon the first offer of Honour, when hee promised that they should be equall with God? What was the cause of Caines murther, Corahs conspiracie, Abimelech his cruel slaughter of his brethren; of Absalons vnnaturall rebellion against his louing Father; of Balaams desire to haue cursed Israel; of Hamans bloody plot to murther all the Iewes; of Nebuchadnezzars Idolatry, and of Herods arrogancie, whereby hee intitled himselfe to Gods Royalties? What but vaine glory, and worldly Honours immoderately loued and desired?

Gen. 3.5.

Num. 22.17, 18.

9. Sect. 14. That riches make way for the tentations of the Deuill. 1. Tim. 6.9, 10.

The like also may be said of worldly riches, which being ouer-valued and too much affected, become of Gods blessings, Sathans baites, wherewith he inticeth men to fall into tentations and snares, and into many foolish and noysome lusts, which drowne men in perdition; for the desire of money is the roote of all euill, as the Apostle speaketh. And hence it is that the Lord commandeth the Israelites to burne with fire the grauen Images and Idols of the heathen, and not to couet the siluer and gold that is on them, nor to take it vnto them, lest they should be snared therewith. To which purpose one saith, that there is a snare in Gold, Birdlime in Siluer, intangling nets and grins in Lands and Lordships: and therefore, that if we too greedily couet Gold, we shall be strangled and choaked; if we too eagerly seeke Siluer, we shall be catched in this lime; if we couetously seaze vpon these large Lordships, we shall be intangled and insnared. And another exhorteth vs by all meanes to flee the immoderate loue of Gold, as being a flattering Traytour to our soules, the parent of sinne, and the Deuils Deputie to draw vs on into all wickednesse. Yea, so deceitfull are these snares that few escape them; and so strong they are to hold all whom they catch, that few who are once intangled in them, can euer get freedome and deliuerance. And therefore the Sonne of Syrach maketh it one of the wonders of the World, to find a man perfect in this triall: who (saith he) hath beene tried thereby, and found perfect? Let him bee an example of glory, &c. So that Satan, the great enemie of our saluation, hath not much adoe to vanquish and lead captiue vnto all manner of sinne, those who set their hearts vpon these worldly riches, seeing to get the prey, they are ready of themselues without his instigation, to runne willingly into these snares, and with all speed to preuent one another in catching of these baits, euen when the hooke of sinne lying hid in them, is ready to choake them; striuing who shall doe most diligent seruice to the Prince of darknesse, when he offereth for their reward the rich wages of worldly wealth. Yea, and when they finde themselues catched in these nets of perdition, by feeding on this pleasing baite, so farre are they from desiring, and vsing the meanes of their deliuerance, that they rejoyce in their snares, and desire more and more to bee intangled, as though they thought it a thraldome to be set at libertie, and the greatest freedome to be so inthralled. For who seeth not by daily experience, that couetous men, like fish about the baited hooke, striue who shall catch the choaking prey, not caring to be taken, so they may take it; to lose themselues, for worldly gaine; and whilest they may prey on this baite of wealth, to make their soules a prey to that hellish fisher, who seeketh to catch them on the hooke of perdition? Who seeth not that for the getting of wealth they are willing to omit all duties to God and man; to neglect friends & kinred, to lie, dissemble, defraud, oppresse, and what not, that by spoiling others, they may increase their owne stocke? And as Satan now preuaileth by the helpe of this golden baite in catching of innumerable soules in the snares of sinne, so hath he euer done in former times; for herewith he allured Achan to to theft, Gehezie to take the vntimely bribe, to Gods dishonour, and his Masters discredit; Achab to murther and oppression; Ananias and Sapbira to lie vnto the holy Ghost; Demas to embrace the World, and leaue Christ; and Iudas to betray his Lord and Master, and together with him his owne soule. Euen as in our owne dayes by the same meanes he allureth Magistrates to receiue bribes, and peruert justice; Ministers to make simoniacall contracts, and to multiplie their liuings, taking all the care for the fleece, and nothing for the flocke; Lawyers to plead in bad causes, and to oppose the good; Officers to play the extortioners; Land-lords to vse cruelty and oppression; and Citizens to rob their neighbours by fraud and deceit. And that which is most lamentable, hee doth insnare in sinne with this bait of riches, not worldlings onely, who make a god of gaine, but euen professors of religion, who are ready oftentimes to straine their consciences, and (as it were) to set them vpon the racke, for the inriching of themselues with this Mammon of iniquitie.

Finally, worldly pleasures immoderately loued, become tentations and snares to intangle vs in sinne, and those sweete poisons which with their pleasing delight allure vs to drinke with them the deadly poyson of impietie and wickednesse. With this inticing baite Satan perswaded our first parents to eate the forbidden fruit, because it was beautifull to the eye: herewith he allured the sonnes of God to match in marriage with the daughters of men, when they saw that they were faire to looke vpon: with it hee inticed Lot to loyne in neighbourhood with the wicked Sodomites, because their countrey was pleasant and delightfull, and afterwards to commit those grieuous sinnes of drunkennesse and incest: with this bait of pleasure he drew the people of Sodome and Gomorrah to vnnaturall filthinesse, & so fall into all manner of abominations: with it he intised the Israelites to commit whoredome with the Midianitish women; Dauid to adulterie and murther; and Salomon to fornication both corporall and spirituall. And this is that bewitching allurement, whereby the diuell so much preuaileth euen in these dayes, by causing men to fall in this spirituall fight into these lime pits of carnall pleasures, and so obtaining an easie victorie, he leadeth them away captiue into all manner of sinne, as chambring and wantonnesse, lust, vncleannesse, gluttony and drunkennesse, and whatsoeuer other wickednesse may further them either in the procuring, or enioying of their carnall delights. With all which the flesh being fed and pampered, becommeth a strong assistant vnto Satan in assaulting the spirituall man, and in leading him captiue vnto sinne. whereby the folly of worldlings clearely appeareth, in that they willingly nourish this secret traytor, and strengthen this enemie against themselues, taking all their care in getting, and their comfort in enioying that, which inthralleth them in the bondage of sinne, and both furthereth and encreaseth their fearefull condemnation: as though the wicked flesh were not a soile fertile enough to nourish and bring forth the fruits of wickednesse, vnlesse it were made more ranke with this dung of worldly vanities. And thus haue I shewed that these earthly things, honours, riches & pleasures being immoderately loued and desired, doe become the Diuels baits and snares to intangle vs in sinne to our perdition and destruction: whereby it appeareth how dangerous and desperate the estate of worldlings is, who are on all sides beset with nets, which that deadly fowler Satan doth continually watch, and (as Bildad speaketh) doe walke in the middest of snares, so as they cannot step forward a foot to atchieue their desires, but they are in danger of catching; yea and haue not onely snares vnder their feete, but ouer their heads ready to fall vpon them, and to catch them by the neckes; for so the Psalmist saith, that God doth raine snares vpon the wicked, so as they can no more auoid them, than the drops of Water which come downe in a stormie shower. The which their case is so much more desperate, because they are so farre from shunning these nets and snares, that they willingly seeke them, and wilfully leape into them, not caring to intangle their soules in sinne and death, so they may prey for the present vpon the worlds alluring baits: like herein to the silly flies, which need no call to allure them to the hony-pot, nor force to thrust them in, seeing they are ready to come of their own accord, and to drowne themselues, without any compulsion of outward violence. But let vs, who haue better hopes auoid their folly, and weane our affections from this worldly dotage, which in the end will bring destruction: for why should we be in loue with these baits of vanitie, seeing vnder them is hid the hooke of sinne which will mortally choake vs? why should wee with such care seeke these snares, which being found will but intangle vs, and make vs Satans prey? why should wee so greedily snatch and hold these pricking thornes, which when we haue them will pierce and wound vs? and so eagerly catch this treble cord of vanitie, as soone as Satan doth but cast it out, that so he might draw vs into Hell and destruction? Let vs not therefore prey greedily on the fowlers baits, that wee bee not catched in his snares; and seeing there is no safetie or securitie vpon the earth, which is full of grins and nets; let vs follow the example of the silly bird, which mounteth aloft towards Heauen, when shee seeth any danger of being catched, thereby making frustrate the fowlers hopes; for as the Wise man speaketh, in vaine is the net spread before all that hath wing, because it is in their power to escape by flight: and so if we will escape the manifold snares and nets which Satan and the world haue laid to catch vs, let not our hearts and affections bee still groueling on the earth, but let vs mount aloft with the wings of faith and loue, and haue our conuersation in Heauen, minding and meditating vpon those surpassing ioyes, which are there reserued for vs; and so shall wee contemne these worldly things as base vanities, in comparison of that eternall and vnspeakeable happinesse; and be freed from the danger of these snares: so as with the Psalmist wee may sing to the prayse of God: our soule is escaped, euen as a bird out of the snare of the fowler, the snare is broken and wee are deliuered. For there is no danger of the snare if we neglect, or but lightly esteeme of the baite, neither can Satan that cunning fowler euer catch vs in his nets, vnlesse we stoope when we heare his alluring call, and greedily hunger after that prey, which he hath purposely set out, that hee may prey vpon vs.

Iob 18. 8.

Psalme 11. 6.

Prou. 1. 17.

Philip. 3. 20. Colos. 3. 1.

Psalme 124. 7. Non capit laqueum nisi ante te esca coperit: dum praedam petis laqueus ipse te nectit. Ambros. in Psal. 118. Serm. 14.

2. Sect. 16. That worldly things immoderately loued expose men to Gods wrath and heauie iudgements.

The last spirituall euill which these worldly things immoderately loued, doe bring to those who so affect them, is, that they expose them to the heauie wrath of God, and his fearefull plagues and punishments, in the day of his visitation. For when men haue set their hearts and affections (which are Gods due, and doe rightly appertaine to him alone) vpon these earthly vanities and are by them made the seruants of sinne, and slaues of Satan, ready to perpetrate and commit any wickednesse, which may helpe forward to the obtaining of these things which they so much desire, and yet notwithstanding passe their time in securitie, and reioyce in the fruition of their beloued vanities, blessing themselues in their vaine hopes, as though they needed no other supplie of their wants, nor further helpe to be freed out of dangers; then the Lord being zealous of his owne glory, doth cause his vengeance to wax hot against them, and pursueth them with his iudgements and plagues till he haue vtterly destroyed them, euen, when they least suspect any danger of approaching euill. So the Lord threatneth worldly men, who tooke all their delight in earthly things, and in the fruition of them passed their time in impenitencie and securitie, promising vnto themselues immunitie in time of danger, that hee would sweepe away their vaine confidence, disanull their couenant with death and agreement with Hell, and that when the scourge passed ouer, it should not ouer-passe them, but take them away, &c. And the Apostle describing the enemies of the crosse of Christ, ioyneth these together, that they were such as did mind earthly things, and had damnation for their end. How little therefore are we beholding to the World and worldly things, seeing their friendship and loue exposes vs to the wrath and anger of God; and by satisfying our desires in the fruition of some small benefits, doe make vs (whilest we too much dote vpon them) liable to Gods greatest iudgements, and most grieuous punishments? But this will yet more plainly appeare, if wee further consider the speciall instances, and first these worldly honours when they are excessiuely loued and ouergreedily desired, doe by our wicked getting, and proud keeping them, expose vs to Gods wrath and vengeance, in the day of his visitation. For hard and almost impossible it is, to the corrupt nature of man to bee aduanced to high places and great dignities, and not to be proud of his preferment; hard it is to be magnified among the people, and not also too much to magnifie a mans owne worth, and to ouerweene his gifts and good parts: hard it is for a man to bee great and glorious vpon earth, and to keepe a due remembrance of him from whom he hath receiued his glorie and greatnesse. And contrariwise, through the same corruption of our nature, those who are aduanced to honorable places are apt to bee puffed vp in pride, to forget the Lord who hath preferred them, to rob him of his glory, and to arrogate the prayse of their preferments, to themselues, their owne polices, and good parts which is due and peculiar to God alone, by reason of which abuse they commonly make God their enemie, and inflame his wrath against them, for their sacrilegious impietie. And the more gloriously they shine before men, the more their honour is obscured in the sight of God: the more they magnifie and extoll themselues, the more doth he vilifie and contemne them; yea he doth not onely despise them in their greatest pride as abiects, but opposeth against them as enemies, and as his corriuals in that which is most deare vnto him, his honour and glory; as though he should say; To me belongeth this combate against the proud, with mine own hand must mine owne title bee tried, and glory defended; this man encroching vpon my right, challengeth me to the fight, as my specially aduersarie and enemie, and therefore I will take mine owne cause into mine owne hand, and auenge me of my foes who rise vp and rebell against me. Now what can befall them but confusion, shame and destruction, against whom God purposely op-oppoſeth as a ſharpe & ſeuere enemie, ſeeing he is ſo powerfull that none can ſtand before him in his anger, nor deliuer himſelfe or any other out of his hand; but ſtrong and weake, King and people, are all alike liable to his plagues, when he goeth his circuite of viſitation, and ſitteth in his aſſizes to iudge the earth? Of which fearefull vengeance executed vpon proud potentates wee haue many examples, as in Pharaoh drowned in the red Sea, in Corah and his confederates, ſwallowed aliue by the earth, in Abimelech killed by a woman, Abſalon hanged by his owne haire, and Haman on his owne gallowes, Athaliah, Nebuchadnezer, Herode and many others. And thus alſo riches being immoderately loued, doe expoſe thoſe who haue them to Gods wrath, and bring vpon them his fearefull iudgements. So Zophar ſpeaking of the couetous worldling, ſaith, that as hee hath deuoured ſubſtance, ſo he ſhall vomit it againe; for God ſhall draw it out of his belly: he ſhall ſucke the gall of aſpes, and the vipers tongue ſhall ſley him, &c. And the Prophet Eſay denounceth a fearefull woe againſt them, who ioyned houſe to houſe, and field to field, as though they would dwell alone vpon the earth: and the Prophet Habacuk likewiſe, woe be vnto him (ſaith he) that coueteth an euill couetouſneſſe to his houſe, that he may ſet his neſt on high, to eſcape the power of euill. Thou haſt conſulted ſhame to thine owne houſe, by deſtroying many people, and haſt ſinned againſt thine owne ſoule: for the ſtone ſhall crie out of the wall, and the beame of timber ſhall anſwere it. An example of which fearefull vengeance executed vpon the couetous we haue in Achan, who was deſtroyed with all his familie; in Balaam, who was ſlaine with the Madianites, for affecting the reward of iniquitie. In Gehezi, who together with all his poſteritie was ſmitten with leproſie. In Tyre, who had heaped vp ſiluer as duſt, and gold as the mire in the ſtreets, whom the Lord threateneth to ſpoile of all her wealth, and to conſume her with fire, though ſhee were enuironed with the Sea, and wanted no Water to quench it. The like alſo may be ſaid of voluptuous pleaſures, which make vs liable to Gods wrath and vengeance, when wee ſet our hearts vpon them, and take more care to pleaſe our ſelues, than to pleaſe God. And thus the Lord puniſhed that delight which our firſt parents tooke in eating of the forbidden fruit, with the loſſe of Paradiſe, and that which was worſe, with the loſſe of his fauour: Noahs drunkenneſſe with the ſcorne and contempt of his ſonnes: Lots inceſt with a curſed poſteritie, the Sodomites falſeſſe and filthineſſe; with fire and brimſtone from Heauen. And Lots wife for looking backe, with a deſire to inioy thoſe pleaſures of ſinfull Sodome, was turned into a pillar of ſalt, that ſhe might (as one ſaith) ſeaſon vs with her example, and keepe vs from luſting after theſe worldly vanities. And thus the whole tribe of Beniamin almoſt were vtterly deſtroyed for not puniſhing the abominable vncleanneſſe of ſome few among them. And euen Dauid himſelfe loſt that delight which hee had taken in his vnlawfull luſt, with the ſting of conſcience, apprehenſion of Gods wrath, and by his owne ſonnes ſhamfull abuſing of his concubines in the ſight of the people. Which iudgements and puniſhments if any eſcape in this life (as they ſeldome doe, becauſe voluptuous pleaſures doe almoſt alwayes bring their puniſhment with them) yet they ſhall moſt ſurely be ouertaken with Gods plagues in the life to come: according to that of the wiſe Preacher: Reioyce O young man in thy youth, and let thy heart cheere thee in the dayes of thy youth, and walke in the wayes of thine heart, and in the ſight of thine eyes; but know that for all theſe things God will bring thee to iudgement. Eccleſ. 11. 9.

Esay 28. 17. 18.

Philip. 3.

O sacrilegious [illegible] Epist.

Vxor Lot reſpexit, & vbi reſpexit, ibi remanſit. In ſalem conuerſa eſt, vt prudentes condiret exemplo. Auguſt. Serm. 29. Tom. 10.

CHAP. XXXV.

Of the euerlaſting euils which worldly things immoderately loued, doe bring to thoſe who haue them.

AND thus haue I ſhewed the temporall euils both ciuill and ſpirituall, which doe accompanie theſe worldly things, when they are ouerualued aboue their worth, and immoderatly affected and deſired. It now followeth that wee intreate briefly of thoſe which are euerlaſting in the life to come. For well were it with worldlings, if the earthly things which they immoderately loue, were onely hurtfull to their ſoules and bodies while they continue here; for then they might ſet their temporall gaine againſt their temporall loſſe, and haue their hurts counteruailed (at leſt in their opinion) by their profit and benefit. But this maketh their eſtate moſt miſerable, in that their worldly delights and comforts, are but momentanie and of ſhort continuance; and the euils and puniſhments vnto which they haue made themſelues liable, either by their wicked getting or abuſing them, ſhall bee endleſſe and euerlaſting. For as the wounds of the body are ſoone made, and long in curing: ſo theſe ſores of ſinne which attend vpon the euill getting or keeping of earthly vanities, are made in a moment, but when they are made, they are neuer cured, vnleſſe in this life wee apply vnto them the precious balſom of Chriſts blood, and waſh theſe ſpirituall wounds with the teares and water of

9. Sect. 1. That worldly things immoderately loued hinder vs from attaining the ioyes of Gods Kingdome.

of true repentance. Now these euils which they bring in respect of the life to come, are either priuatiue or positiue. The priuatiue euill which these worldly things immoderately loued bring, is that they depriue and hinder those who set their hearts vpon them, of the eternall ioyes of Heauen. For the Psalmist, enquiring of the diuine Oracle of truth: who shall ascend into the mountaine of the Lord; and who shall stand in his holy place; receiueth this answere: he that hath innocent hands, and a pure heart, which hath not lift vp his mind vnto vanitie, nor sworne deceitfully. And the Apostle speaking of those who are effectually called to the fruition of these ioyes, saith, that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the World to confound the wise, and God hath chosen the weake things of the World, to confound the mighty things; and vile things of the World, and things which are despised hath God chosen, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are. And in another place hee telleth vs, that he who soweth to the flesh, shall of his flesh reape corruption; euen as contrariwise, hee that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reape life euerlasting. So that commonly those whom the World refuseth, God chuseth, whom it disgraceth, he honoureth; and contrariwise, they whom the World magnifieth, those the Lord despiseth, whom it imbraceth, those hee reiecteth. And hard it is and euen impossible, that our hearts should bee fixed on the World, and yet our soules inherit eternall happinesse, that we should haue our conuersation in the World as Citizens of the Earth, and yet hold sure our inheritance of Gods kingdome. And therefore as some thinke, our Sauiour before hee would giue his disciples some small glimps of that heauenly glory in his transfiguration, first withdrew them apart vnto mount Thabor, separating and diuiding them (as it were) from the World, to teach vs typically this lesson, that hee who will euer hope to see and enioy eternall glory, must first draw his affections from the World, and haue his conuersation in Heauen, seeking those things which are aboue, and raising his meditations into the mountaine of Gods holinesse. To this purpose one exhorteth vs to weane our affections from the loue of these worldly vanities, because if our hearts bee fixed vnto them, they will depriue vs of euerlasting glory: Learne to contemne (saith he) those things whilest thou art aliue, which thou canst not haue after thou art dead. For it is hard, yea altogether impossible, that a man should with immoderate loue enioy these temporall good things, and those that are eternall; that hee should here glut his appetite, and there haue his soule satisfied with heauenly ioyes, and so passe from one delight to another, and appeare glorious both in Earth and Heauen, &c. seeing the more wee are delighted with earthly vanities, the more are wee separated from eternall glory.

Psal. 24. 3. 4.

1. Cor. 1. 26. 27.

Gal. 6. 6. 8.

Mark. 9. 2.

Bernard. de inter. domo. cap. 45.

Now if wee would know the reasons why both these cannot stand together, and why wee cannot set our hearts vpon the things of the World whilest wee continue with them, and afterwards inherit heauenly happinesse; they are easily rendred. For first, those who too much affect these earthly things, they too little regard, or vtterly contemne that eternall glory in the life to come; if they bee in loue with the flesh pots of Egypt, they will neuer trauell cheerefully towards the land of promise; if with Esau they more esteeme their pottage than their patrimonie, they will take no great paines to bee assured of it, or sell all their title and interest which they haue in it at the basest prizes, if they can be content with the prodigall Son to feed on the huskes of worldly vanities, among the filthy swine, so long as they can haue plenty of them, they will neuer care to returne vnto their heauenly Father, neither will they giue all they haue to buy this precious pearle of glory, if they more esteeme their earthly possessions, and in comparison of them basely value those heauenly treasures. So one saith, that holy delight in heauenly happinesse shunneth the heart which is prepossessed with worldly desires, neither can there bee any mixture of things truely substantiall, with emptie vanities; of true things with false; eternall with transitorie; spirituall with corporall, the highest with the lowest, so as a man may at the same time sauour of those things which are aboue, and those things which are beneath. For these worldly things haue in them a bewitching quality, whereby those who affect them, are blinded that they cannot see those heauenly riches, though much greater and better, and so being out sight, they are also out of mind, & are either quite forgotten, or vtterly disregarded. And as he who loueth an harlot doth presently loath his Wife, taking his whole delight in her companie and wanton dalliance, and esteeming his owne home a iaile or prison; so they who set their hearts vpon this worldly strumpet, doe presently contemne our husband Iesus Christ, and flee from our heauenly home, as if it were the place of their banishment. And this the Apostle implieth, where hee saith that the outward forme or beautifull appearance of this world doth seduce or misleade men out of their way, like the going Fire which leades those who behold it into hedges and ditches, and so blindeth and dazleth them, that they cannot

cannot find the way to their owne home. In which regard this bewitching World is fitly likened to a kind of Serpent called by the Grecians scytale, which when shee cannot ouertake the fleeing passengers, doth with her beautifull colours astonish and amaze them, so as they haue no power to passe away till shee haue stung them: for so doth the counterfait beautie and brauerie of the World inueigle and bewitch those who behold it with ouerpartiall eyes, that they stand astonished till it haue stung them with carnall concupiscence, and doting loue, so as they haue neither will nor power to set one foote forward towards their heauenly countrie. But as the Rubenites hauing taken a liking of the countrie which was first conquered, because it was fit to feed their Cattell (although it were far from the Temple, where they should receiue the food of their soules) and therefore to enioy it renounced all interest in the Land of promise: so these worldlings set their hearts and affections vpon the earth and earthly vanities, because they are at hand, and fit to feed their sensuall and brutish appetites, preferring it before the heauenly Canaan, and Temple of Gods holinesse, where their soules might bee satisfied with those rauishing ioyes, and surpassing pleasures which are at Gods right hand for euermore. Or if they doe not hinder them from this heauenly happinesse, by causing them to forget and vtterly neglect it, yet at least, by slacking their pace, and causing them to seeke after it negligently and remissely. And whereas there is such a zeale in those who attaine vnto the kingdome of Heauen, that as our Sauiour Christ saith, they striue to enter into the straite gate, and are ready to take possession of it by an holy kind of violence and force, sparing for no paines, nor staying for any danger; these men who are wedded to the World, are cold and slacke in this pursuit, being altogether vnwilling to take any paines, or to sustaine the least brunt of any danger. Or if at any time they shew a little earnestnesse more than ordinarie, presently this zeale is quenched with these worrish and earthly vanities, and the World catching fast hold of them, maketh them to stay, and neuer ceaseth wrestling with them till they haue the foile and ouerthrow. In which conflict these worldly things are vnto them but as clothes to wrastlers, whereon their aduersarie taketh faster hold to giue them a fall; and (as one saith) the world casteth vpon them this dust of earthly vanities, that hee may seaze on them the surer, and keepe them from slipping out of his vnkind imbracements; from which dangers they might be freed, either if they were naked and destitute of these worldly vanities, or at least if they kept them on as loose garments, which are easily pulled off; being not farre in loue with them whilest they haue them, and standing firmely in their patience, and well contented in their minds, when they are taken away.

Q. Sect. 3. That the Lord will not giue the heauenly ioyes to those who more esteeme earthly trifles.

Finally, as these worldly things immoderately loued, doe hinder men from seeking after the heauenly ioyes of Gods kingdome, so doe they moue the Lord to restraine his bountifull hand, from giuing and bestowing them. For hee onely giueth his best gifts to those who best esteeme them, and bestoweth his benefits vpon them alone who doe seeke and sue for them; seeing those onely who feele their owne want, and acknowledge the incomparable worth of these rich gifts, will euer be truely thankfull for them. Now who that is wise among men would bestow his greatest benefits where hee is sure to receiue the least thankes? Who would giue gifts of value, to those who cannot value them, but preferre euery base trifle aboue them, in their foolish estimation? Who would bestow a rich diamond on him, who more esteemeth of a painted glasse; or a piece of gold on such an one as more highly valueth a shining counter? Who would make him his heire to a goodly inheritance, who preferreth before it, euen in his ripest iudgement, a top and scourge, or some such childish vanity? or make him lord of his lasting labours, who taketh more delight in a butterflie, or a brittle sopie bubble? And doe wee thinke the Lord lesse wise than man, that hee should bestow these eternall treasures vpon those who contemne them, preferring before them euery childish trifle, and worldly vanitie? will he giue his chiefe iewels to those who doe not know how to value them? and make them heires of an eternall kingdome, who more highly esteeme, and deerely loue, and earnestly desire, and painefully seeke these earthly trifles, which are as contemptible in their worth, as momentanie and vncertaine in their continuance? No no assuredly: these prophane Esaus must not haue the birthright and blessing, who following their carnall appetite doe preferre before it a messe of pottage. These carnall Israelites who more esteeme worldly bondage, than the glorious liberty of the Sonnes of God, and the flesh-pots of Egypt, more than the fruitfull Canaan, shall perish in this earthly wildernesse, and neuer enter into the Holy Land. These Sonnes of Adam, who loue an Apple better than their Creatour, and care more for the present to please their licorous palate, and carnall appetite, than for those ioyes which are vnspeakeable and eternall, shall neuer (without serious repentance) bee thought fit inhabitants for the heauenly paradise. They who wish the wife of Lot, looke backe to this Sodome of sinne, which which by Gods determinate sentence, is destinated to fire and brimstone, delighting more in these pleasures of vanitie, than in Gods gracious deliuerance, shall be made fearefull examples of his heauie iudgements, and pillars or lasting monuments, to giue others warning, that they bee more wise in this choice. For as our Sauiour Christ hath taught vs; No man that putteth his hand to the plough, and looketh backe, is apt and fit for the Kingdome of God, and they who will not forsake all to follow him, yea, hate Father and Mother, Wife and Children, Brethren and Sisters, and their owne life also, when they come in comparison with the loue of Christ, and his Holy Father, hee will neuer thinke them worthy to be his disciples, to follow him in the Kingdome of grace, and much lesse as coheires to raigne together with him in the Kingdome of gory.

Luke 17.32.

Luke 9.62.

and 14.26.

9. Sect. 4. That earthly honors hinder those, who set their hearts on them for attaining heauenly glory.

But let vs descend from the generall to the speciall instances. And first for honours, and the vaine-glory of the World, what greater impediment can there bee than they, to hinder any from attaining the eternall glory of Gods Kingdome, when being inioyed or desired, they are ouervalued, and too much loued and affected? For (as I haue shewed) they make men the ready instruments of any sinne (whereby a present forfeiture is made of our heauenly inheritance) for the getting or preseruing of their honour and aduancement. They willingly neglect the chiefe priuiledges and prerogatiues of the Sonnes of God, and onely plot and take paines in aspiring to their ambitious ends. They are apt to despise the exercises of religion, and to contemne the meanes of their saluation, as publike prayer, and the ministery of the Word, as better befitting the vulgar people, than such as they, who are so highly aduanced aboue the common sort. Or if they heare the Word, they will not regard the threatnings of Gods iudgements against sinne, nor stoope to take vpon them the yoke of Iesus Christ, submitting themselues to bee guided and ruled by his ordinance, as being a thing too base for their honour and greatnesse. Finally, they skorne to goe in that onely way, which leadeth to eternall life and happinesse; but chuse by-waies of their owne, as though they disdained to goe to Heauen in vulgar company, or to bee saued after a common fashion. For the Lord hath appointed, that all who desire to attaine vnto heauenly happinesse, should take paines, in trauelling the narrow and afflicted way, and in entring the low and straite gate that leadeth to life; but they refuse this difficult course, and chuse the broad way of ease and libertie, if not licentiousnesse. Our Sauiour hath told them, that they who will find rest to their soules, must stoope to take his yoke vpon them, and learne to imitate his example, who was meeke and lowly in heart; whereas they thinke to come to the glory of his Kingdome, by that glorious way, in which ambitious pride hath set them, carrying their heads on high, and walking with stretched out necks; and that which is worse, with hearts swollen with pride, and full of vaine-glory, and haughtie insolence. So elsewhere he teacheth them, that to such as are like vnto little children belongeth the Kingdome of Heauen: and yet more plainly, that except those whose who are high minded & ambitious bee conuerted, and become as little children (namely, in meekenesse and humilitie) they shall neuer enter into the Kingdome of Heauen; and contrariwise, whosoeuer shall humble himselfe as a little child, the same is the greatest in the Kingdome of Heauen. Thus also he saith, that he who exalteth himselfe shall be brought low, and he that humbleth himselfe shall bee exalted. Foolish therefore is ambition, which euer aspireth to rise, and alwayes neglecteth the meanes of rising to the chiefe preferments: but when it mounteth to the clouds, and desireth most to touch the Heauens, euen then it is most deiected, one foot still holding possession of Hell in the behalfe of the whole body. And vnhappie (as one saith) is the the ambitious man, which knoweth not how to compasse the greatest things, but seeketh to waxe great by small trifles, and to bee onely little in that which is greatest, and most desirable. For whereas it is the onely way to true greatnesse and glory, to be humble and lowly in a mans owne eyes, because (as our Sauiour hath taught vs) euen Publicans and sinners shall enter sooner into Gods Kingdome, than proud Pharisies, though they bee neuer so much magnified amongst men; they labour to aduance themselues vnto honours, by pride and ambitious aspiring, which when they haue them, are scarce worth their labour; as if when Kingdomes and true Monarchies were offered, and in dealing to those who would heartily desire and sue for them; men should vtterly neglect these chiefe preferments, and contend one with another, who for an houre should bee King in a play. But if wee would auoid this folly, and not be ouertaken with this worldly dotage, let vs labour to attaine those chiefe preferments, and heauenly glory, by going in that way of humilitie which Christ hath first traced before vs: and as those, who raise the highest building, doe first lay the lowest and deepest foundation, or else it will soone fall, and come to ruine; so if wee meane to become such Temples, as are fit for God eternally to dwell in, let vs begin our building on the low foundation of humilitie. For can come to the end. And as thoſe who haue ſhoes farre too wide for their feet, or garments which being farre too ſide, trayne on the ground, are ſcarce able to trauell a long iourney, ſo thoſe who are ouer-charged with riches, and much more ſtore of worldly goods then is conuenient for their place and calling, are ſcarce able to paſſe on their iourney which leadeth to Heauen, in regard of the great impediments which their ſuperfluous riches cauſe vnto them.

Matth. 7.13.14.

Matth. 11.29.

Chryſoſt. hom. 7. de pœniten.

Luke 6. 24. Our Sauiour Chriſt pronounceth a full woe againſt them, ſaying: Woe be to you rich men, for you haue receiued your conſolation. For in ſuch words he ſignifieth what may befall a man, euen to the loſing of Gods kingdome, for the ſeeking and enioying of worldly riches. Which ſet ſuch a ſtay in many a mans heart, as they can neuer get it out, but loſe both heauen and earth, rather then they will forgoe their goods. Which cauſed the rich man in the Goſpell, to be ſo much troubled in mind, when he was commanded to ſell all that he had, and giue it to the poore, that he might follow Chriſt. Luke 18. 23. For he was very rich, and had many poſſeſſions, and therefore he could not finde in his heart to forſake them. Which ſtay in the heart of man, is the cauſe why he is ſo vnwilling to leaue his goods, when he is commanded to doe it, for the ſeeking of the kingdome of God. Matth. 19. 22. For he had many poſſeſſions. Which ſtay in the heart of man, is the cauſe why he is ſo vnwilling to leaue his goods, when he is commanded to doe it, for the ſeeking of the kingdome of God. Matth. 19. 22. For he had many poſſeſſions. Which ſtay in the heart of man, is the cauſe why he is ſo vnwilling to leaue his goods, when he is commanded to doe it, for the ſeeking of the kingdome of God. Matth. 19. 22. For he had many poſſeſſions.

Bernard. Ser. in Pſal. 23. Which ſtay in the heart of man, is the cauſe why he is ſo vnwilling to leaue his goods, when he is commanded to doe it, for the ſeeking of the kingdome of God. Matth. 19. 22. For he had many poſſeſſions. Which ſtay in the heart of man, is the cauſe why he is ſo vnwilling to leaue his goods, when he is commanded to doe it, for the ſeeking of the kingdome of God. Matth. 19. 22. For he had many poſſeſſions. Which ſtay in the heart of man, is the cauſe why he is ſo vnwilling to leaue his goods, when he is commanded to doe it, for the ſeeking of the kingdome of God. Matth. 19. 22. For he had many poſſeſſions.

and (as he were) glued vnto vs with carnall loue, they hinder vs from attaining vnto this eternall happinesse; so we either hold these things with such couetous and careleſſe reſpect, as that we may with ease lay them aside, when we finde that they hinder vs in our seeking towards our heauenly countrey: or if they offer to take faster hold, and so intangle vs in the seares of sinne, so as we cannot goe forward in our course of godlinesse; let vs, as the Apoſtle exhorteth vs, lay aside every thing that preſſeth downe, and the sinne that hangeth ſo faſtly, and let vs runne with patience the race that is ſet before vs, that ſo we may obtaine the crowne of glorie. Euery man that preſſeth mightily to attaine vnto heauen, muſt lay aſide all things which might hinder him in running: all this to obtaine a corruptible crowne: how much more ſhould we follow the like preſſes, to obtaine that glorious crowne of bleſſedneſſe, which is incorruptible? And, if, as our Saviour Chriſt hath taught vs, we muſt pluck out our right eye, and cut off our right hand and foote, if they offend vs, and by cauſing vs to fall into ſin, doe hinder vs in that Chriſtian courſe, which would bring vs to eternall happineſſe; becauſe it is better to enter into eternall life lame, or maimed, or with one eye then hauing two hands, two feete, and two eyes, to be caſt into euerlaſting fire; then how much rather ſhould we part chearefully with thoſe worldly riches, pleaſures, and preferments, when by vnlawfull getting, or keeping them, they will cauſe vs ingroſſe, and foule vp the volume roll of the inyes of heauen? for before it is to enter into theſe newly ruling ſtates, ſtored, ſtrengthned, ſtiffned, and full of ſinnewes, ſhall ſtanding abounding in riches, glorie, and carnall pleaſures, ſo be after wards throwne headlong into thoſe hellish tormentes, and vnquenchable flames? Matth.

Secondly, the more we abound with theſe earthly things in this life, the greater ſhall be our reckoning in the life to come; & the greater alſo ſhall be their puniſhment, who cannot be able to yeelde a iuſt account to our gracious Lord and Maſter at this laſt and dreadfull day: for though by faith & repentance whilſt they ſtrained here, gotten a generall acquittance for all that wherein they came ſhort in their reckoning. For according to the number of thoſe talents which haue formerly been intruſted vnto vs by God, the more will be required proportionable increaſe, and the greater gifts we haue receiued from God, the more glorie he reſpecteth from vs, the greater meaſure of fruit he looketh for: which he both euidently ſhewed in this ſtrong, that greater meaſure of loue, and obedience will be required of vs from thoſe to whom more is forgiuen. In like ſort he will require more of thoſe vnto whom more honour and glorie is giuen in this life, then of thoſe vnto whom leſſe honour hath been giuen: for they who haue receiued fiue, muſt with them gaine other fiue, and they who haue receiued ten, muſt increaſe them foure more, if euer they meane to heare that ſweete and comfortable ſaying, well done good and faithfull ſeruant, thou haſt been faithfull in little, I will make thee ruler ouer much, enter into thy maſters ioy. O then what a terrible day will this be to thoſe who cannot make euen their accounts, nor yeeld an anſwerable increaſe to their great Lord and Maſter, when in the preſence of his Saints and Angels, he ſhall call them before him to giue a reckoning? what a day of trembling and feare will this be to thoſe vnprofitable ſeruants, who haue hid their maſters talent in a napkin, ſo as they cannot returne it with any increaſe? And how much more horrible then will it bee to them, who haue rioteouſly waſted, and ſpent their Lords rich talents, in their wicked and worldly courſes, whereby they haue diſhonoured their maſter and hurt their fellow ſeruants? For what ſhame and confuſion of face ſhall they bee poſſeſſed with, who haue received liberall wages from the Lord, that they might be the better incouraged and inabled to doe him ſeruice, when their Iudge ſhall tell them, and their owne conſcience ſhall witnes againſt them, that they haue abuſed this rich bountie of God in the ſeruice of ſinne and Satan, and ſpent his rich treaſures vpon their owne luſts? How will they then deſire the Hils to fal vpon and couer them from their wrathfull Iudge; that together with them they may hide their reckoning? What would they then giue that they had imployed their proſperity for the ſetting forth of Gods glorie, and had vſed all his gifts to the honour of the giuer? And becauſe they haue failed herein, how many Worlds, if they had them, would they part with, that they might haue but one day more to liue, wherein they might ſee ſtraight their reckonings by true repentance, and faith in Ieſus Chriſt? But alas! it will be to late, ſeeing the acceptable time and day of ſalvation is now paſt, and now their teares, groanes, ſorrowes, and lamentations, ſhall be beginnings and parts of the hellish puniſhments; which if they had been vſed in time and improued to the beſt in this life, would, though Gods gracious and free pardon, and the precious merits of Ieſus Chriſt, but onely vnto them, remaine aſſurance of the pardon of all their ſinnes, reconciliation with God, and of the euerlaſting inheritance, and neuer ending ioyes of his heauenly kingdome.

But let vs not be heere cheeting of this our ſelues in the ſpeciall example of our firſt ſin, Honeſty; the more they are inclined to ſuperfluous expences, the greater reckoning they muſt make of it at the day of iuſt iudgement: for they haue receiued honour from God, that they might re-

Matth. 25. 21.

Qui plurima habet pauper eſt. Quare? quid debet. Quantum inquis? Omnia: niſi forte iudicis intereſſe, vtrum aliquid ab homine, an à Deo mutuum ſumpſerit. Senec. Epiſt. 87.

Q. Sect. 8. That honours, riches, & pleaſures doe but increaſe our bils of accounts.

returne honour to him; they are by speciall priuiledge made glorious before men, that they might shine before them in an holy example, and glorifie God more then others, whilest as presidents of godlinesse and righteousnesse, they draw on all their inferiours to a Christian imitation. Finally, they haue beene aduanced by God to power and authoritie, that they might in his place, and as his Deputies, rule their inferiours, euen as the Lord himselfe would rule, if hee were vpon the earth, countenancing the good, and discouraging the euill, rewarding vertue, and punishing vice, defending the innocent, and suppressing those who are vniust and injurious, patronizing and maintayning iustice, and discountenancing vnjustice, and sinne. Of which the further off they haue beene from yeelding any reckoning in this life, the more strait account will the Lord take of them in the life to come. And therefore if they haue not only failed in all these duties, but wilfully neglected them, and vsed all their credit and power to quite contrarie purposes; as for example, if hauing beene honoured by God, they haue dishonoured him, contemning his seruice themselues, and hindring others who would haue performed it; if they haue scorned Religion, and made but a jeast of godlinesse; if they haue made no conscience of swearing and forswearing, cursing and blaspheming; and spent all their liues in riotous and voluptuous liuing; if they haue not only themselues thus offended God, but haue made their faults scandalous and their sins exemplary, drawing on their inferiours to the imitation of their wickednesse: If being in the place of God they haue ruled and gouerned, as the Deuill himselfe would doe if hee were in a humane shape, discountenancing those who are good, and incouraging those who are euill, punishing vertue, and rewarding vice, defending the faultie, and supplanting the innocent, and either for fauour, friends, rewards, or respect of persons, vpholding injustice and oppression, and ouer-throwing iustice and right; then shall they haue a most fearefull reckoning to make at the day of iudgement, and wish rather that they had liued in reproach and contempt, than that hauing had all these Honours and Preferments, they should bee brought to such a dreadfull account. And thus they who haue most abounded in riches, shall haue their reckoning hereby much increased; for the Lord hath bestowed vpon men these talents, not that they should keepe them hid in a napkin, but that they should put them out to profit and aduantage, as when they employ them to the glory of God, in furthering the exercise of his worship and seruice, in relieuing the more members of Iesus Christ, and in practising the works of mercie and charitie. And therefore in what a fearefull case shall they be at this day, who hauerudely neglected these religious and Christian vses, and contrariwise haue abused their riches, by either spending them vpon their owne lusts, in belly cheare, and bravery, or imploying them as helpes to hinder Gods worship, and to oppresse and injure the poore with all crueltie and tyranny? Finally, what a fearefull reckoning haue they to make, who haue spent the greatest part of their liues in voluptuous pleasures, as though they had quite forgotten the end wherefore they came into the World; as in surfeiting and drunkennes, chambring and wantonnesse, gaming and reuelling, playing and sporting; not caring to make any wicked course for the compassing of their pleasures, nor making conscience of any delight, whether it bee lawfull or vnlawfull, so it may please their carnall appetite. O what reward can these men expect in this day of the Lord, when their owne consciences shall tell them, that they haue spent all their liues in the seruice of sin and Satan, and in fulfilling the lusts of their owne flesh? What account will they then make to their Iudge, when being demanded how they haue spent their precious time, their strength, and wealth, which in plentiful manner they had receiued at the hands of God, they shall be able to make no other answer, but that they haue consumed them all in voluptuous vanities, and vtterly neglected the seruice of their Creator and eternall Redeemer; spending all their daies either in idlenes, or in superfluous and wanton vses, which they should haue bestowed in glorifying God, and in getting assurance of their owne saluation; wasting their strength in obeying their fleshly lusts, which should haue beene imployed in doing seruice to their Maker and Redeemer; and bestowing all their riches in superfluous delights, suffering the poore to starue for want of bread to feed them, and of cloathes to couer their nakednesse.

Lastly, as the abundance of these wordly things, abused through immoderate lust, increaseth the reckoning of those who haue had them, so do they also increase their punishments and hellish condemnation, when as they are altogether vnable to set straight their reckoning, being called to giue their accounts before their Iudge. For it is iust with God, that those who in this life haue abused the greatest prosperity, should in the life to come endure the greatest miseries; that they who are most deeply indebted to Gods bounty for his benefits, should haue the greatest imprisonment, when hauing thankfully and vnbeleeuingly spent the Lords talents, they haue nothing to pay: that they who haue most dishonored God in his owne gifts, should proportionable receiue the greatest greeuous torments of punishment: and finally those who hauing attained the ninth, or tenth degree haue performed worthy seruice, and the hundred with most seruice. To these also they the abundance of their worldly things shall be lost (as it were) the greatest part of their reward; which being for the most part the flame of Gods burning wrath, shall eternally consume them who haue thus wilfully abused them; and their burning concupiscence after those earthly vanities, shall but increase the furious heate of those hellish flames, which shall torment them with tortures that are intolerable, and yet endlesse and euerlasting. So the greater blessings men haue had in earth, the greater shall be their shame and confusion, and reproach, if they haue abused them to the dishonour of God and oppression of his seruants; for the mighty shall be mightily tormented: And he who in Lord ouer all will feare no person, neither shall he spare any greatnesse; for he hath made the small and great, and careth for all alike; but for the mighty shall there abide the sorer triall. To which purpose one saith, that the higher a wicked man liuing in his sinnes is exalted, the more dreadfully shall he be ouer-whelmed with grieuous punishments; for when the cause which aduanced him is vanished, that remayneth which is punished. He who is without defect hee ouer-runneth in the way, shall be damned in the end of his journey; and he who ouer-runneth to destruction by the prosperitie of this present life, passeth (as it were) by sweet bloomes, into the dungeon of darknesse, or place of execution. This also those who haue abounded with abused riches, shall in the world to come exceed in punishment; and therefore our Sauiour pronounceth a woe against them, because already in this world they had receiued all their consolation. And the Apostle prophecying of their future miserie, saith; Goe to you rich men; weepe and howle, for your miseries that shall come vpon you: your riches are corrupt, and your garments are moth-eaten: your gold and siluer is canckered, and the rust of them shall be a witnesse against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire: you haue heaped vp treasure for the last dayes. Behold the hire of the labourers which haue reaped your fields (which is of you kept backe by fraud) crieth, and the cries of them which haue reaped, are entred into the eares of the Lord of Hosts; yee haue liued in pleasures on the earth and in wantonnesse, yee haue nourished your hearts as in a day of slaughter. So that the greater riches, the greater torments, if either they haue beene vnjustly gotten, or ill kept; in which respect wel may they be called thornes, which not only in this life pricke those that hold them, wound them with tentations, and pierce them through with many sorrowes, but also in the life to come serue as thornes to kindle the fire of Hell, and to make it burne with greater heat and fiercenesse. Which that we may preuent, let vs follow the counsel of the Sonne of Syrach; Lord (saith he) giue me neither riches nor pouerty, feed me with conuenient foode for me: lest I be full and deny thee, and say, who is the Lord? or lest I be poore and steale, and take the name of my God in vaine. Finally, those who haue spent their dayes in vnlawfull pleasures, or haue abused those which are lawfull, through their immoderation and excesse, either in their delights, or in their losse, shall haue their sorrowes and torments the more increased at the day of God appearing to iudge the quicke and dead. In which respect our Sauiour pronounceth a fearefull woe against voluptuous worldlings; woe be vnto you (saith hee) that are full, for you shall hunger; woe be vnto you that now laugh, for you shall waile and weepe. So the Apostle Peter saith, that they shall receiue the wages of vnrighteousnesse, which count it pleasure to liue deliciously for a season. And the Apostle affigneth this as one reason, why the wealthy in the World had cause to weepe and howle, in regard of the miseries that should come vpon them, because they had liued in pleasure on the earth, and in wantonnesse. To which purpose one saith, that looke how many carnall and vnlawfull delights worldlings haue had in this life, and so many grieuous punishments they shall indure when God shall take deserued vengeance on them in the life to come; for thence are we punished, whence we are wickedly delighted: and whereas the pleasure passeth as being momentanie, the sinne and punishment remaine as being euerlasting. An example whereof wee haue in the rich Glutton, vnto whom Abraham saith, that because in his life he had receiued his pleasures, being clothed in purple and fine linnen, and faring deliciously euery day, therefore hee was now tormented in Hell torments, and hauing sinned in surfeiting and gluttonie to please his palate and carnal appetite, he could not now obtaine so much as a drop of water to coole his tongue. So likewise in the whore of Babylon; vpon whom the Lord passeth this dreadfull sentence, that in as much as she glorified her selfe, and liued in pleasure, shee should vnspeakeably haue so much torment and sorrow giuen vnto her. By which examples let vs take warning, carefully auoyding these sweet poysons, which though they be long before they worke, yet shall bee most deadly in operation; let vs not thirst after this pleasing milke, though it be offered vnto vs in a Lordly dish; seeing in the end it will bring vs into that deepe sleepe of eternall death: and finally let vs stop our eares against the bewitching tunes of these swette singing Syrens, which will make vs runne our selues on the rocks of destruction, and to be swallowed vp in a Sea of mi-

Luke 6.25.

2. Pet. 2.13.

Quæ furiæ obtestamenta mala, aut quæ tormenta dira in pœna? nulli malis puniuntur nisi mali delectantur: transit voluptas & peccatum remanet, Bernard. meditat. cap. 13.

Luk. 16.19, &c.

Apoc. 18.7.

sery and perdition which is endlesse and intolerable.

§. Sect. 10. The conclusion dissuading from the loue of the World; vpon the former consideration.

Finally, seeing these worldly things inmoderately loued, and ouer-valued, aboue their worth, doe not only in this life bring vpon vs so many and great euils, but also in the life to come deprive vs of our heauenly ioyes, increase the bils of our accounts at the day of iudgement, and plunge vs into eternall death and condemnation; let vs (we tender the saluation of our soules, or feare that dreadfull reckoning at the day of iudgement, or would auoid those hellish and euerlasting torments) weane our hearts and affections from the immoderate loue of the World and worldly vanities; For what will it profit vs to gaine the whole world, and lose our owne soules? What will it auaile vs that we haue beene honourable vpon earth, and aduanced to the chiefe places and preferments, when as all these momentany vanities being passed as a shadow, wee find our selues inglorious in Gods sight, deprined of the glory of his Kingdome, and couered with endlesse shame and disgrace? What ioy shall we then take to remember, that all men haue crept and crouched vnto vs, when as we shall be disdained as vile persons, and laughed to scorne as fooles, by the poorest and simplest of Gods Saints, yea insulted ouer, and euen despitefully trodden vnder foot by the vgly, cursed & damned Spirits? What delight shall we take to thinke, that we haue sate in the highest places, and haue dwelt in stately Palaces, and Prince-like houses, when as being turned out of all, we shall be bound hand and foot, and cast into vtter darknesse, and into the dungeon of Hell? What comfort shall we take in our heapes of Gold, and great Lands and Lordships which wee haue left behind vs; when as we feele by lamentable experience, that we haue by this momentany riches lost the euerlasting treasures of Gods Kingdome; and haue treasured vp a fearefull measure of Gods wrath and condemnation; (which for euer shall seaze vpon and consume vs)? What delight shall wee take in our passed pleasures, sports, and pastimes; when as now being vanished, nothing remaines such but howling and yelling, weeping and gnashing of teeth? What pleasure shall we haue to thinke of our full Tables, and delicate drinkes; when as now by most earnest entreatie, we cannot obtaine so much as a drop of water to coole our thirst? What will it profit vs to haue for a moment enjoyed sweet Gardens, pleasant Orchards, delightfull walkes, and melodious Musicke, when as now hauing abandoned vs, wee are tortified with Gods wrath, and scorched in the vnquenchable flames of Hell? O then let vs remember this in time that we may preuent it for euer; and whilest the Lord giueth vs space to make our free choice, let vs preferre in our iudgements, and seek after with all our hearts and affections, those heauenly and eternall ioyes, before these earthly and momentanie vanities; and so weane our hearts and affections from the loue of the World and worldly things, that we doe not spend any vnlawfull meanes for the getting or keeping thereof; and so hazard the losse of our glorious and euerlasting inheritance, and endanger bodie and soule to those intolerable and euer-ending tormentes: and that the rather because after death there is no repentance, nor hope of recouerie after some triall and taste of these miseries, seeing out of Hell there is no redemption, nor Goale-deliuery out of this prison of vtter darknesse.

Mark 8. 36.

The end of the second Booke.

THE

THE CHRISTIAN WARFARE.

The second Part.

SHEWING AND PROVING THAT THOUGH THE WORLD AND WORDLY things, were in themselues esteemable and worthy loue, yet not in respect of vs who are pilgrimes on Earth, and Citizens of Heauen.

The third Booke.

CHAP. 1.

That we should not for our hearts on the world and worldly things, because we are but pilgrimes and strangers, on Earth.

THis Iacob both in the behalfe of himselfe and his Ancestors calleth the dayes of their pilgrimage. And Dauid in many places confesseth the same both of himselfe and his Predecessors. I am (saith he) a stranger before thee and a sojourner like all my Fathers, our dayes are as a shadow vpon the Earth, neither is there abiding. The which as it is manifest by the Scriptures, so also may it be demonstrated by euident reason; for that is to be esteemed a mans countrie, where his chiefe friends and kindred remaine, where his home and habitance doe lie, where he is to spend the most part of his life, where he hath most contentments, and best entertainment. But the faithfull haue all their kindred in Heauen, hauing some few who are pilgrimes with them on the Earth; for there is not onely their heauenly Father, Christ Iesus their elder Brother, with all their Ancestors who haue formerly liued but innumerable other Brethren and Sisters who are together with them Children of the same spirituall Parents; there also they haue their chiefe treasures and patrimonies euen an inheritance vndefiled, and that 1. Pet. 1. 4. fadeth not away, as the Apostle speaketh: there they are to spend all their liues, hauing a few dayes in which they are to finish their pilgrimage, which though they were equall to those of Methusalah yet were they

Gen. 47. 9.

1. Chron. 29. 15. Psal. 39. 12. & 119. 19.

not so much as a minute in comparison of eternitie

certaine

there all teares shall bee wiped away from their eyes, and there they shall haue mansion houses, inheritances, crownes of glory, and fulnesse of ioy for euermore: whereas contrariwise the World affordeth them nothing but vaine and worthlesse trifles, vncertaine possessions, and vnprofitable gaines; and that with the mixture of innumerable miseries, trasles, losses, troubles, vexations, afflictions, and malicious persecutions. The which is ment to be vnderstood of all men generally, for as for worldlings they haue heerein their end and their portion, but of the faithfull onely. In whom earthly pleasures, carnall lusts, and worldly concupiscence. And (as one saith) hee is to bee reputed a stranger vpon earth, who can truely say that his conuersation is in Heauen, who hath his portion in the Lord, who can inwardly grieue that he liueth but too long in this place of pilgrimage and banishment, who is tired with the tediousnesse of this life, and is glutted and loatheth the length and prolixity of his earthly habitation, it being contrary to his desire, and enforcing him often to crie out, woe bee to them that dwell among the Barbars, who feareth not to bee dissolued, and if hee be, presumeth that hee shall be with Christ. Hee is a Citizen of the Saints who hath laid vp his treasure in Heauen. For this man departing out of this earthly Egypt, doth not desire to returne againe, neither doth he trace vnto decrepite old age, or the very confines of death. Hee taketh no care for the building of new barnes, for the storing vp of his corne, seeing hee is here to liue the life of a stranger, but being onely rich in fruitfull vertues, he gathereth those things together, which neither old age can destroy, nor death take away.

Ambros. in Psa. 118. Serm. 1. Phil. 3. 20.

Psal. 120. 5. Phil. 1. 23.

2. Sect. 2. That this should weane our hearts from the world, because we liue as strangers in it.

Now this consideration that wee are not in our owne countrie, but remaine for a while vpon the earth as pilgrims and strangers, should serue as an effectuall reason to weane our hearts from the loue of the World and worldly vanities, and to place them on Heauen, and on heauenly ioyes, which is our owne country and place of residence. For, as we know, pilgrimes and strangers being trauelling in a far countrie, doe not set their hearts on the things which they see by the way, because they are quickly to leaue them; but their minds and meditations doe wholly runne vpon their owne countrie, and their hearts are fixed on those pleasures, profits and preferments, which after their iourney is finished, they shall there enioy for terme of life. And therefore if wee be pilgrims on earth, we must follow their practice, and set our hearts on the World and earthly things,

[illegible] village,

[illegible] to enioy them is very short. For let him who hath enioyed worldly prosperities the longest time looke backe, and hee shall see, that all which is past is but a dreame or shadow, and as the twinckling of an eye in respect of eternitie. But all our loue and longing must be placed on the heauenly inheritance, where we are for euer to enioy an eternall weight of glory, and happinesse without end. Wee must vse this World, not as our country, but as our way wherein wee are trauelling towards our heauenly home, and take account to passe through it as the Children of Israel were commanded to goe through Edom, without staying any stay, or hauing any commerce or dealing with the inhabitants, more than our present necessities will inforce vpon vs. For (as one saith) this life present is a pilgrimage, and he who longeth and sigheth after his owne country, vnto him his place of peregrination is a tedious torment, though vnto others it may seeme a paradise of delight. The world is vnto vs a dangerous Sea, and our life is allotted vs as a time of passage, wherein we may goe forward in our voyage, and discouer the port of happinesse, that with ioy wee may enter into it: and therefore let vs not desire to bee alwayes sailing, and to bee still in danger, not onely of being [illegible] by the surging waues of misery and affliction, but also of the spirituall pirats, which are ready to rob vs of Gods sanctifying graces, and to captiue and inthrall vs in the prison of destruction; and of splitting our ships vpon the rockes of sinne, being misled in our voyage by the worlds false fires, and drawne out of the right way by his subtill temptations: but let vs rather desire to arriue at the hauen of rest, where we shall be free from all their dangers, and for euer enioy secure felicitie. Neither must wee make account that the places where we now abide, are our homes and habitations, but onely our Inns and lodgings by the way, where we are not to leade our liues, but to rest for one night, and so to bee gone. To which purpose one saith, that hee is a Christian, who being both in his house and country, doth neuertheless acknowledge, that he is in them but as a pilgrime or stranger, and that Heauen is his country, where he shall haue an inheritance for euer, and not a guest for a time. For in truth euery one here is a guest and a stranger in his owne house, for if he were not so, why doth he not stay in it, but after a short abode passeth away? and if any bee necessarily to trauell and goe a way, he is to be esteemed a stranger; let him not deceiue himselfe heeis a guest; whether he will or no, heeis a guest. Yes, but he bequeatheth

Aug. in Ps. 38. Tom. 8.

Quarters, his house, when hee departeth out of his Children, Kinne, but getteth a guest, who entering, leaueth his lodging to other guests; euen so it is in this life, whereas one commeth, another goeth away. For euen hee, death, in his house and earthly habitation, liueth as his Father gaue place vnto him, so he is to giue place vnto his successors in posterity; and as himselfe succeeds, so must he to them, who succeed him in the liuing. And as wee are to esteeme the World our way, wherein like pilgrimes we trauell towards our heauenly countrie; so also we are to esteeme the things of this life as necessaries for our journey, and like the prouision which we find meet in our way when we come to our Inne, the which wee cannot carrie with vs; but leaue in what case we found it. And if we should thus esteeme of the World and worldly vanities, then would we not ouerualue and set our hearts vpon them, (as the Apostle speaketh) vse things as though we vsed them not: not as places to rest in, or things wherein we take our chiefe repose, but as way to trauell by, and as necessaries to further vs in our iourney. For what wise trauiller would sit still and loiter in his iourney, because he is in a faire way, and is not rather encouraged thereby to trauell cheerefully to his wished home? Who would fixe his heart and affections on those delights which hee seeth as hee passeth by? or thinke in his trauell hee may take his pleasure in them, as he goeth by them, and not in his sight vse them, in which he hath not an houres interest, as that hee will neglect future hopes and permanent delights in his owne country? Who vseth to build when hee entendeth to his Inne? or taketh his chiefe contentment in those buildings which hee findeth there already, in his stately and well furnished Chamber, his safe lodging, daintie fare, pleasant walkes, faire gardens, and courteous entertainment? Seeing he must day, hee must leaue them all, and count it a reckoning for the short time that hee hath inioyed them? Are not therefore men as wise in their generation, in the things appertaining to this life, euery one making large prouision where he is long to continue, and hauing the place best, where he is best prouided, and contrariwise esteeming himselfe but small time where hee is to make but a short stay, and vseth lightly that which he cannot long enjoy: so let vs lay vp our treasures in Heauen, and with our treasures our hearts also, where we are to remaine for euer; and not carrie them about vs in the way, where we shall surely bee robbed; nor leaue them as heire-loomes in the Inne from whence we must depart the next morning. Let vs like trauellers refresh our selues with the things of this life, and so make get for more on our iourney, and with continuall minds leaue that which remaineth in the Inne. For whether we will or no, we must depart and carrie nothing with vs: because we haue no further interest vnto any thing, but for the short time of our residence, and that vpon hard conditions. Another traueller shall come after vs and inioy them, but neither shall he take them away, because he hath found them, being left by vs; so must we also leaue them to bee found of those that follow after him. Let vs vse worldly things as wise pilgrimes doe their stuffe, and other necessaries or ornaments for their iourney; so long as they helpe vs forward in our way let vs make vse of them, and accordingly esteeme them; but if they become troublesome hinderances, and cumbersome burthens, let vs leaue them behind vs, or cast them away; according to the Apostles exhortation: Cast away euery thing that presseth downe, and the sinne that hangeth fast on, and let vs runne with patience the race which is set before vs. Neither must we doe this onely when the things we carrie are of small account, but when they are as deare and precious vnto vs as our right eye, hand, or foote, as our Sauiour hath taught vs. Let vs imitate the Eagle, which seldome lighteth on the earth, but when being constrained with hunger, shee stoopeth to her prey, and when shee hath fed, mounteth aloft againe aboue the cloudes: so let not vs suffer our hearts and affections any longer to rest vpon the earth, than we are compelled with our present necessity; but like the true Eagles of Iesus Christ, let vs repair thither where the dead carcasse is, and being fed herewith, let vs mount aloft in diuine contemplation, and haue our conuersation in Heauen, as the Apostle exhorteth vs. Finally, as pilgrimes and trauellers when they are in their iourney towards their countrie, cast away all impediments which might hinder and tire them in their trauell: so let vs who like pilgrimes are trauelling towards our heauenly home, auoid all incumbrances, and carefully abandon all things which might any wayes hinder vs from attaining to the end of our iourney, viz. from the inioying that eternall happinesse which is reserued for Gods Saints in his glorious Kingdome. Now there is no like impediment to hinder vs in this Christian course and passage, to the loue of the World and worldly vanities, as I haue already shewed. For they who fall in loue with the place of their pilgrimage, will take neither care nor paines in trauelling towards their owne countrie, and they who set their hearts vpon these earthly things, will by them as by stocks and stones be let out of the way, and hindred with them, so as they

Heb. 12. 1.

Mat. 5. 29. 30.

Phil. 3. 20.

they will want all pretence and colour to doe so, because they will haue no reason for the enioying of their loue to the things of this world, seeing they are but pilgrimes and strangers, hasting from them to their heauenly countrie. Now this is the first reason, which should moue vs to set our affections on the things aboue, and not on the things of the earth. For we haue many enemies lying in ambush against vs, who watch all occasions to set vpon vs, and if they can finde vs carrying any of our treasure with vs, they will not faile to set vpon vs, and to take it from vs. Now the greatest treasure that we carrie with vs, is our affections, which if we suffer to be set vpon the things of this world, we shall be readie to lose them, and so to be robbed of our greatest treasure. Wherefore we must not suffer our worldly lusts of pleasure, profit, and ambition, to be any way in vs: for so soone as Satan seeth our hearts set vpon the pleasures, profits, and preferments of this life, he will be ready to set vpon vs, and to take them from vs. Yea, we shall be driuen to fight against the flesh, the world, and the diuell, before we can get the victorie ouer them. Now if we be ouercome in this fight, we shall be hindred from trauelling on in our heauenly iourney, and so be in danger to lose the crowne of glorie, which is prepared for vs in heauen. Wherefore we must not suffer our hearts to be set vpon the things of this world, but we must labour to get the victorie ouer them, that we may be free to trauell on in our heauenly iourney.

1. Pet. 2. 11.

2. Sect. 4. That wee should not set our heart and affections on the world, because it is the place of our warfare.

But the world is not simply a place of pilgrimage alone, where we might trauell with some quietnesse and securitie to the end of our iourney, but also a place of warfare, wherein we are assaulted on all sides (as it were in a strange and forraine countrie) and by all possible meanes hindred in our spirituall voyage to the holy land. And therefore, as we haue little cause to set our hearts and affections on the world, and the vanities thereof, because we can stay here but a short time, and are euery day flitting from them: so much lesse if we consider, that this short time is full of trouble, seeing we are on euery side beset with our spirituall enemies. So Iacob saith, that the dayes of his pilgrimage were not onely few, but euill also, in respect of his manifold troubles and molestations. And Iob affirmeth, that man, who is borne of woman, is but of short continuance, and full of trouble. And the Apostle teacheth vs, that whilest we continue here, we had need to be alwayes in the complete armour of a Christian, because we fight not onely against flesh and blood, but against principalities, powers, and worldly gouernors, the princes of the darknesse of this world, and against spirituall wickednesse, which are in high places. Now who would build, and set vp his mansion house in the Campe, or place of his warfare? who would bring with carrie about him his whole substance and treasure, which will but cumber him, in his fight, and put spirites and courage into his enemies, to worke his ouerthrow, that they may preuaile vpon him? So the Apostle saith, that no man warreth, entangleth

Gen. 47. 9.

Iob 14. 1.

Ephes. 6. 12.

1. Tim. 6.

Chap.

CHAP. II.

That wee should contemne the world, and worldly matters, if wee consider that wee are Citizens of Heauen, and heires of Glory.

A Second reason, why wee aboue all other should not much esteeme, or ouer intentiuely loue the World, and worldly vanities; is, because as we are pilgrimes here, and therefore must necessarily passe them in our passage; so wee are Citizens of the new Ierusalem, the Kingdome of Heauen. So the Apostle saith, that, we hauing through Christ an entrance vnto the Father by one spirit, are now no more strangers and forreiners, but Citizens with the Saints, and of the houshold of God. And speaking of Abraham, the Father of the faithfull, hee saith, that he abode in the land of promise, as in a strange country, and as one that dwelt in tents, who is alwaies ready to remoue and flit away; because he looked for a Citie, hauing a foundation, whose builder and maker is God. Neither was this peculiar to him alone, but generall to all his children, who followed him in the faith; of whom it is said, That they haue here no continuing Citie, but that they seeke one to come. And the reason is apparant: for we are Citizens and subjects of that Kingdome, whereof Christ Iesus is Lord and King; but himselfe hath plainely told vs, that his Kingdome is not of this world, but that hee raigneth and ruleth in that Kingdome of eternall glory; and therefore whosoeuer are subjects vnto him, they cannot be free Denizens of the World, but Citizens of Heauen. Vnto which wee might adde, that as our Lord and King made but a short stay vpon the Earth, but keepeth his Court and residence in the new Ierusalem which is aboue: so wee his people and faithfull subjects, who are also seruants of his familie, yea, members of his glorious body, shall make here but a momentanie abode; but after wee are departed hence, shall haue in Heauen euerlasting habitations; in which respect also, as wee are here strangers and pilgrimes, so may wee bee rightly called Citizens of Heauen, and free burgesses of the new Ierusalem. Now what can be a more forcible argument to weane our hearts and affections from the World and worldly vanities, than to consider, that as wee are here strangers, and haue no abiding or resting place; so wee are subjects and Citizens of that glorious Kingdome, whereof the Lord himselfe and his Son Christ is Ruler and chiefe Soueraigne? For who would not contemne a flitting tent, in comparison of a goodly mansion and stately palace? Who would not set light by a poore cottage, ment, which is possessed at the will and pleasure of the Landlord, in respect of a rich inheritance, and a large Lordship, in which he hath assurance to himselfe and his heires for euer? Who would be a subject of that Kingdome, where the prince and soueraigne is but a stue; whereas he might be an effectuall member of a great commanding Monarchie? And who would preferre his pedling freedome in a country village for a few daies, before his enfranchizment and priuiledges in the chiefe city of the country, which hee may haue for euer? And yet all these similitudes are but some little shadowes and darke resemblances, to expresse the incomparable difference betweene the Earth and Heauen, the momentany trifles of this life, and those vnualuable and eternall excellencies, which are reserued for the Saints in the life to come. For looke how much a Monarchie is to be preferred before a mole-hill, the brightnesse of the Sunne, before the dim shining of a glo-worme, and the richest treasures, before the basest pebble stone: and so, and much more are those euerlasting ioyes of Heauen, to be preferred before the best things the World can brag off, though it were a long and flourishing Monarchie ouer all the Kingdomes of the Earth. It is true indeed, that these earthly things being neere vnto vs, and subject to our senses, doe make a flourishing shew at the first sight, to those who are still conuersant among them, and neuer knew any thing better; but if in diuine contemplation, our minds and meditations could mount aloft, and be but a while exercised in the view and consideration of those incomparable ioyes, which God hath prepared for his elect, these worldly and transitory things below would seeme little and litle worth. For as he who is seated on an exceeding high mountaine, iudgeth euery thing small which he seeth in a low valley; so if our minds were placed in Heauen, and our hearts fixed on that diuine and endlesse glory, wee would thinke the greatest things on Earth, as small as motes in the Sunne, and as smally also to be regarded; according to the example of the Apostle Paul, who after he had beene rapt vp into the third Heauen, and had a sight and taste of those vnspeakable ioyes, did in regard of them, esteeme the Worlds chiefest excellencies, but as drosse and dung. Whereas now alas these earthly things, though they bee small and contemptible, doe hide those superexceeding ioyes of Gods Kingdome, from the eyes of those men, who are still poring on the Earth, and are neuer rapt vp on hie in spirituall meditations, but lie groueling vpon the ground, spending all their thoughts vpon their worldly affaires. And as a small dish being held neere the eyes, hideth from our sight a great mountaine; raine; and a little hill or cloud, the whole body of the Sunne, though it be farre bigger than the whole Earth; so these earthly trifles being placed neere our sight, doe so shadow and ouercloud these great and shining excellencies, that we cannot truly behold them nor rightly iudge of their greatnesse and value. And therefore if we would view them aright, and haue some true glimpse at least of this diuine glory, wee must by heauenly meditation let the eyes of our soule mount aboue them; or else wee must remoue them further from vs, and then they will seeme small, and smally to be regarded, in comparison of the incomparable greatnesse and goodnesse of these heauenly ioyes, and euerlasting glory.

2. Cor. 12. 2.

Phil. 3. 7. 8.

9. Sect. 2. That the loue of the world may well fit an ignorant worldling; but ill becometh a Christian, who hath assurance of future happinesse.

It is no maruell if heretofore liuing in ignorance, wee did not esteeme of these diuine excellencies, but preferred before them these worldly vanities, becausse they were subiect to our senses; for there is no desire of that which is not knowne, and the bright Sun-shine day is all alike to him, who is starke blind, vnto the darkest night. It is no wonder if before wee heard of Heauen, we esteemed the World as our chiefest Paradise, and worldly things, as the heauenly ioyes; becausse euery man naturally affecteth blessednesse, and desireth that which is chiefely good; which when through his naturall ignorance and blindnesse, hee cannot discerne, or attaine vnto, he is ready to place his heart and affections vpon that which is best, in his owne knowledge and opinion. But now after that the grace of God which bringeth saluation vnto all men hath appeared, and taught vs that we should denie vngodlinesse, and worldly lusts, and that we should liue soberly and righteously, and godly in this present World; looking for the blessed hope, and appearing of the glory of the mighty God, and of our Sauiour Iesus Christ; it were more than madnesse, if wee should suffer our selues still so bee transported with worldly concupiscence, and prefer the present satisfying of our carnall desires, before the eternall fruition of our heauenly ioyes. It is not much to bee maruelled at, if children wanting wit and experience, to guide them better, doe affect childish trifles, and foolish vanities; for as the Apostle saith, When I was a Childe, I spake as a Childe, I vnderstood as a Childe, I thought as a Child: and it is counted in them no great absurdity, if they spend their time in idle sports, and preferre an apple before a goodly Lordship, and a top and scourge before their patrimonie; but when they come to ripe yeeres, it is then expected, that they put away Childish things, contemne those toies which before they so much esteemed, and affect things more graue and weightie, as beseeth their age and better knowledge; becausse hauing attained vnto a more solid iudgement, they easily discerne the vanity of these worthlesse trifles, and so it is not meet to bee regarded, if worldly men, being infants in knowledge, before Christs loue was preached vnto them, and the riches and glory of his Kingdome manifested, did like Children, affect worldly vanities, and because they knew no better, tooke their whole delight in these trifling toies, but now being attained to more ripe knowledge, and hauing beene made acquainted both with the vanity, and basenesse of these worthlesse trifles, and with the excellencie and riches of Gods Kingdome, they are to lay aside their childish loue, no more taking their chiefe delight in these momentanie vanities and earthly things; but rather, to spend their thoughts and meditations, and imploy all their labours and indeauours to assure themselues of those incomparable ioyes of Heauen. And as the Apostle speaketh; they are now as obedient Children not to fashion themselues according to the former lusts of their ignorance, but to be holy in their whole conuersation, as hee who hath called them is also holy; knowing that they were not redeemed with corruptible things, as siluer and gold, from their former vaine conuersation, receiued by tradition of the Fathers, but with the precious blood of Christ. For as there is nothing more seemely, or that setteth more ridiculous folly, than to see an old man doe after the vanities of youth, and with like heate of affection, follow in his age those trifling and regardlesse toyes, which he delighted in when he was a Child, as riding vpon a sticke, building houses in the dust or sande, and such like childish exercises; and if any should so behaue himselfe, who seeing his great stature, and small discretion, his manly personage, and child-like folly, would not iudge him either out of his wits, or neuer in them? so much more ridiculous and foolish is the behauiour of worldlings, who being old in yeeres, remaine very babes in their knowledge and affections, and after those rich treasures of Gods heauenly kingdome are discouered vnto them, doe neglect and contemne them as heretofore, and preferre before them, both in their iudgements and affections, these momentanie vanities, and earthly trifles.

Tit 2. 11. 12. 13

1. Cor. 13. 11.

Whilest wee remained in the state of sinne, and were the deuoted vassals of sin and Satan, our base desires did well sort and agree with our base condition; and whilest wee were Citizens of the World, and Children of the Earth, it might suit with our place and calling, to affect and desire earthly commodities, and to esteeme the riches, pleasures and preferments of the place whereof we were inhabitants, at high rates:

vsing: but now that God hath dignified vs with most royall priuiledges, and made vs of Citizens of the World, free Denizens of Heauen, and of the Houses of Saints; We owne dutifull subiection and seruice, yea, homage vnto our glorious Kingdome; but by considering this high calling, for shame forbeare base desires, nor suffering our hearts to be grouelling on the earth, pollishing in earthly substance, and worldly delights: but filling them vp according to the height of our hopes, let vs aime at nobler than worldly and Kingdomes, and such like vnnecessary, and of this world, seeing they are vaine and of little worth; but those which are most glorious and euerlasting in the World to come. For it is but a base and vnseemely thing, that a Princes Sonne for a trifling gaine, should spend his time and strength in seruile and sordid actions, seruing Hoggers, and playing the Skull, and running on errands at the command of those whome hee should command: how much more vilely and abjectly base is it for vs, who are (as the Apostle speaketh) the a generation of God, his b sonnes and children in Iesus Christ, yea c fellowes of God, and coheires with Christ, that we should spend our precious time in sucking after contemptible vanities, and do seruile seruice and homage vnto Satan, for the base hire of those worldly trifles, notwithstanding of our personall preheminence, and glorious Inheritance, but hauing this faith for the perfect fruition of those immortall ioyes? I beseech you were (as the Apostle exhorteth vs) should the prospect of this glorious Inheritance, and hauing in mind, as it was fitting for vs, that we should be buried in the world, hauing our hearts bewitched and oppressed with the cares of this life, and with the vnspeakeable weight of these earthly things; but now we are reuiued with the blood of Christ, and quickned with his death, yea, by vertue of his resurrection, God hath raised vs vp to a glorious new life, and hath set vs in Iesus Christ made vs for to sit with him in heauenly places, to shew vnto vs the exceeding riches of his grace: and therefore the Apostle exhorteth vs, If we be risen with Christ, seeke those things which are aboue, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God; and set our affections on things which are aboue, and not on things which are on the earth. For if it were a sufficient reason vnto Iacob to neglect his seruice in the land of Canaan, because Pharaoh promised the best things of Egypt when he came into his Kingdome, how much more should it be vnto vs, vnto the contempt of these worldly and substantiall vanities, seeing wee haue the infallible promise of God himselfe, that we shall enjoy the best things of his heauenly Kingdome, if we will but seeke after them? Let vs therefore, that we fore with the Grecians) man is called Microcosmos, to put in mind, that how soeuer hee did wallow on the earth, yet hee should still lift vp his eyes and heart towards Heauen, that so hee might be occupied in meditation on his Creatour, and on those diuine ioyes, and eternall glory which are there reserued for him. And it is further noted, that of all the parts of mans body, the Head which is the seat of the vnderstanding, and the place wherein the Soule sheweth and exerciseth its chiefe faculties and functions, is most remote from the earth, and nearest vnto Heauen: by which fabrique and wise placing of these humane parts, the Lord would teach vs, that we should as little as may be, trouble our heads with earthly cogitations, but rather exercise them continually in spirituall and heauenly meditations. And therefore according both to our name and nature, let vs not haue our minds nailed to the earth, and wholly conuersant in worldly things; but let vs continually lift them vp in diuine contemplation; and as the Apostle exhorteth vs, Haue our conuersation in heauen, from whence we looke for a Sauiour, euen our Lord Iesus Christ. And for as much as they are continually ouer-poysed with worldly cares, and necessary imployments in the earth, let vs daily draw them vp, seeing they naturally affect like the peyses of a clocke, and exercise them continually in diuine and heauenly meditations, that so by their resting on the earth, our course in godlinesse be not hindred and stayed. Whilest we were without Christ, aliants from the Common-wealth of Israel, strangers from the couenants of promise, and had no hope, and were without God in the world, as the Apostle speaketh; it is no marueill if wee much esteemed our earthly habitation, and made Idols of worldly things, as riches, pleasures & preferments, by setting our hearts and affections wholly on them: for so is this naturally imprinted in our hearts, that there is a God, that when we are ignorant of the true diuine nature and essence, rather than wee will bee without a Deitie which we may adore, wee are readie to create and worship the baseft creatures but now that in Christ Iesus we which once were farre off, are made neere by his blood, and are no more strangers and forreiners, but Citizens with the Saints, and of the houshold of God, let vs leaue these Idols to be adored by the Gentiles, who haue no knowledge of the true God, nor interest in his heauenly Kingdome, and let them seeke things present, who haue no hope to enjoy Gods gracious & rich promises concerning things to come: & let it be a forcible argument (as our Saviour vseth it) to restraine vs from the immoderate labouring or caring for the things of this life, that the Gentiles who haue no better hopes, seeke wholly after these trifles, but let vs who haue

Eph. 2. 12.

Phil. 3. 19.

Matthæi sententiam sic explicat Augustinus; Non dubitemus, quæcunque promissa quæ fides nostra non credunt, Deum habere. 6. 32. 33.

more knowledge, and better assurance, seeke
Heb. 13. 5, 6. first the kingdome of God, and his righteousnesse, seeing we haue Gods infallible promise, that these things, without our seeking care, shall in some competent sufficiencie be ministred vnto vs.

Q. Sect. 4. That earthly honours, riches and pleasures, are base & of no worth, in comparison of the treasures, glory, & ioyes of Heauen.

More especially, seeing vs haue assurance of eternall glorie, and be adopted heires of the kingdome of heauen; yet we neede our iudgements ouerrulue, and affections, not in our affections and cares, vainely and carefully loue and seeke the vaine glorie of the world, & these momentany honors & preferments; which befitteth them, who haue no hope of better aduancement; but ill, beseemeth vs, who expect within a while such glory and greatnes. And this argument Ieremie vseth to Ierem. 45. 4, 5. dissuade Baruch from looking after preferments in the world, because they were momentanie and of no continuance. Behold, saith the Lord, that which I haue built will I destroy, and that which I haue planted, will I plucke vp, euen that whole land, and seekest thou great things for thy selfe? seeke them not. And our Saujour Christ by the same reason perswadeth his disciples not to aspire ambitiously after wordly superioritie and soueraignetie, because it better befitted earthly potentates, who had no hope of raigning in the Marke 10. 42. kingdome of God: Ye know (saith he) that they which seeme to haue rule among the Gentiles, haue dominion ouer them, and they that be great among them, exercise authority ouer them; but it shall not be so among you, &c. So seeing this world is the place of our pilgrimage, and heauen our country, where vnualuable treasures are reserued for vs, it is now no time to affect worldly wealth, and abundance of this earthly riches, for as the Apostle teacheth vs, it becommeth Saints to Ephes. 5. 3. be so far from imbracing and practising couetousnes, that it should not be once named among them; both because their title is most tickle and vncertain to this earthly trash; & because also they haue sure interest in those vnualuable and eternall treasures which are reserued for them in heauen. So that it may
2. King. 5. 26. be fitly said to Christians, as Elisha speaketh to Gehazi: Is this a time to take money, and to receiue garments, oliues, or vineyards, and sheepe, and oxen, and men seruants, and maid seruants? especially when the leprosie of sin accompanieth them, which excludeth vs from the societie of the Saints, and bringeth in the end eternall death. To this purpose doth Peraeus fitly speake: He (saith he) loueth not his money too much, who loueth God enough &c. O therefore that we could loue the Lord as hee worthily deserueth, and so should wee loue our siluer little or nothing: that would our money be only an helpfull furtherance in our pilgrimage, and not a prouoking bait to our concupiscence, which we should vse for necessitie alone, and not enjoy for delight, &c. Vse this world, but so as the world doth not fasten on thee; the end of thy comming into it, is not that to make any stay; but to passe through it as a place of pilgrimage: thou art not in no case entertained to goe on againe, and not to entreate: thou art a traueller, and the world is thine Inne; vse therefore thy money as the trauailer in his Inne vseth his table, cup and bed; namely, as things to leaue all behind him, and not to make any stay with them. Finally, howsoeuer these may bee some shewes of reason, why ignorant Worldlings should set their hearts vpon worldly and carnall pleasures, because they are acquainted with no better delights; yet is it more than foolish madnesse, for those to doe on them, who haue beene enlightned with the knowledge of Gods Truth, or haue euer had but the least taste of the heauenly ioyes, because they are vaine and momentanie, and these most excellent and eternall. And this argument the Apostle vseth to weane our hearts from these voluptuous and sinfull pleasures: The night (saith he) is past, and the day is at hand, let vs therefore cast away the workes of darknesse, and let vs put on the armour of light: so that we walke honestly as in the day, not in glutonie and drunkennesse, not in chambring and wantonnesse, not in strife and enuying. But put ye on the Lord Iesus Christ, and make not prouision for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts thereof. Ier. 22. 15. Is it not indeed thus if the loue of God, and the World should stand together, if we could as the Iewes indeuour, place our hearts and affections both vpon heauenly & earthly things; if we could exercise loue, and carefully seeke the things of this life, & after be sure to find the glory and happinesse of the life to come; if we could follow Christ of the one side, and afterwards obtaine the freedome and priuiledges of the new Ierusalem, there were some reason why we should be so much affected, and wish such ardent loue of it, and seeke after these worldly matters. But the Scriptures haue plainly taught vs, that the glorie of the world is enmitie with God; that he cannot serue God and riches, that we must forsake all, if we will be Christs Disciples, and finally, that as many as belong to his kingdome of grace, and afterward shall raigne with him in his Kingdome of glory, are chosen out and separated from the World; and therefore we are put to our choice, whether we will be louers of God, or the World, Citizens of the earth, or Citizens of heauen, seeing both will not stand together. For as those who were Citizens of Rome, lost their freedome if they became Citizens of any other Citie; so shall we lose our freedome and priuiledge in the new Ierusalem, if we become Citizens of this earth. To this purpose one saith, that many hauing gotten that which belonged vn-

to

to others, haue left that which appertained to themselues: these worldly things are alienated from vs, and our possession is in the Kingdome of Heauen; and therefore let vs take heed, lest by couting that which is the right of others, we lose that which is our owne. It is said of Caine, that hee built the first Citie vpon the earth, to shew, that hee seeketh an habitation and abiding place in this World, who is excommunicate from the communion of Saints, and banished out of our heauenly Country. Whereas Abraham the Father of the faithfull, Isaac, and Iacob with the rest of the Patriarchs, liued in Tents, to shew that like pilgrimes they were still in removing to their owne country, as the Apostle obserueth. And therefore if we would not be like reprobate Caine, or desire to imbrace their holy Patriarches, let vs not settle our affections, and fix our hearts vpon the world, and worldly vanities; but only vse them as necessaries for our passage, and contemne them when we find them impediments, or when they come in comparison of Gods spirituall graces, or heauenly ioyes.

Which that we may the rather doe, let vs consider, that all Gods saints and seruants haue gone before vs in this holie practise, as precedents and examples: for no sooner were they made partakers of the gifts & graces of God & holy spirit, and had but some little taste of the heauenly happines, but presently they contemned the world with the vanities thereof, and were readie to leaue it and follow Christ, and euen to lay downe their liues for the profession of the Gospell. It were endlesse to name all; some few shall suffice. The Apostle Paul professeth, that he desired to k know nothing but Iesus Christ & him crucified, and saith l God forbid that he should reioyce in any thing, but in the crosse of our Lord Iesus Christ; whereby the World was crucified vnto him, and hee vnto the world. Yea hee accounted all things a losse, and as dung that hee might winne Christ. So elsewhere hee professeth, that hee sought not the praise of men, neither of the Thessalonians nor any other. Thus also Abraham at Gods commandement left his owne Country, and contemned all the profits, pleasures, and preferments which it might haue yeelded vnto him, in comparison of the Land of promise, though hee dwelt therein as a stranger, and had little ioy and possession in it, but only as it was a type of the heauenly Canaan. So Moses refused to be called the sonne of Pharaohs daughter, and was content to abandon all the profits which he might haue had in the Land of Egypt, and chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enioy the pleasures of sinne for a season; esteeming the reproches of Christ greater riches, than the treasures of Egypt, and that because hee had respect to the recompence of the reward, as the Apostle teacheth vs. Yea, Dauid himselfe though he had all the royalties, profits, and delights, which a Kingdome could afford vnto him; yet could they not allure him to fixe his heart vpon them, but only hee vsed them as necessary helpes for his journey, remembring that he was but a stranger and sojourner vpon the earth, and that his dayes were like a shadow which hath no abiding. Finally, no sooner were the Disciples of the Primitiue Church conuerted to the faith, and had some assurance of their saluation, and some little knowledge and taste of the treasures, glory, and ioyes, prepared for them in the Kingdome of God; but presently they contemned earthly riches, and hauing sold their Houses and Lands, laid the price downe at the Apostles feet, that there might be a distribution, to euery one according to his need. But aboue all examples, let vs propound vnto vs our Sauiour Christs, who by his contempt of the World and worldly things, hath taught vs also to despise and contemne them. For being the most glorious and eternall Sonne of God, hee did not here in this World seeke for Honour and Soueraignetie, yea, he refused it when it was offered, and when he perceiued that the people sought after him to make him a King, hee departed and hid himselfe in a desert place. And though he were the King of Heauen and Earth, yet he professeth that he came into the world not to be serued but to serue, and that he did not receiue honour from men. Yea, in his greatest glorie which hee had amongst men, and when hee would make some shew that indeed he was a King, it is said that he came meeke and lowly, sitting on an asses colt, hauing only some of his Disciples spare clothes vnder him, in stead of rich and kingly furniture. So though hee might haue had the riches of the earth at his commandement, yet hee contemned abundance, and contenting himselfe with necessaries only, he gaue the ouerplus to the reliefe of the poore. Thus wee reade that certaine women ministred to his necessities, that he had not money in his purse to pay his tribute, but was faine to borrow it of a fishe fish, whereas he might as easily haue commanded the sea to haue cast vp her treasures and pearles, if hee had regarded them. So himselfe saith, that o the foxes had holes, and the birds of heauen nests, but the sonne of man had not wherein to rest his head. All which pouertie hee willingly vndertooke, that hee might inrich vs with heauenly treasure, as the Apostle testifieth, p Ye know (saith he) the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, that he being rich for your sakes became poore, that ye by his pouertie might be made rich. The like contempt he also shewed of worldly pleasures, spending his time in k Mark. 10. 45.

l Iohn 5. 41.
m Mat. 21. 5, 8.
n Matth. 17. 27.
o Matth. 8. 20.
p 2 Cor. 8. 9.

watching, and praying, preaching, and teaching; in wearisome iourneys, and sore trauell, accounting it his chief pleasure to please his heauenly Father, and euen his q meate and drinke to doe his will. Finally, in all things our Sauiour Christ humbled himselfe, setting light by worldly prosperity in comparison of that Glory which was reserued for him with his Father. Whose example wee also are to imitate, as the Apostle exhorteth vs: Let (saith hee) the same minde be in you, that was euen in Christ Iesus, who being in the forme of God, thought it not robberie to be equall with God: but he made himselfe of no reputation, and tooke on him the forme of a seruant, and was made like vnto men, and was found in shape as a man. He humbled himselfe and became obedient vnto the death, euen the death of the crosse: wherefore God hath also exalted him, and giuen him a name aboue euery name. O why therefore should wee ambitiously aspire vnto honours, seeing the sonne of God himselfe was content for our sakes to be thus abased? Why should the seruant desire immoderately to be aduanced, when his Lord & Master was thus humbled? Why should we greedily seek after those riches which Christ Iesus the wisedome of his Father contemned; seeing if they had been absolutely good, and worth the hauing, he who is Lord of heauen and earth, might haue abounded with them? Why should we dote vpon voluptuous pleasures, seeing our Sauiour spent his time in painfull labours, and attained vnto the eternall ioyes of his fathers kingdome, by trauelling in the vnpleasant way of troubles and afflictions? In a word, why should wee adore the world as our earthly idoll, and set our hearts and affections vpon these momentany vanities, when as all the faithfull from time to time, haue by the contempt of them entred into euerlasting glorie? Why should wee dreame of hauing a speciall dispensation and priuiledge, about all the rest of Gods faithfull children, and thinke that we may cleaue and cling vnto the world and worldly things with our hearts and affections, and yet neuertheless arise to bee possessors of that glory, and to enioy that heauenly inheritance, notwithstanding that all these clogs doe hang vpon vs, and keepe vs downe; whereas all the rest of Gods children in former times haue by many tribulations entred into the Kingdome of Heauen; and haue in respect of their heart and affections (though not in regard of the possession) shaken off these cumbersome burthens, and by the contempt of worldly vanities, haue aspired into that heauenly happinesse, and euerlasting glorie?

q Iohn 4.34.

Phil.2. 6.7.

Acts 14.22.

CHAP. III.

Of the ioyes of heauen; that they are ineffable and inconceiuable: and of the names and titles which in the Scripture are giuen vnto them.

BY that which hath beene said it may appeare, both that the world, and the vanities thereof, are of no true worth or excellencie; and also that though they were in themselues of some value, yet not vnto vs, who are heere pilgrims and strangers, and citizens and inhabitants of another citie and countrie, euen the new Ierusalem, and heauenly Canaan. For experience teacheth vs, that though men in their trauailes doe passe by lands and kingdomes much more rich, fruitfull, and pleasant than their owne; yet because they haue neither interest, nor abiding in them, they preferre before them their owne home, and take their chiefe delight in seeing (as wee say) the smoake of their owne countrie, because there is the place of their residing, wherein they haue their part and share of all the commodities and delights which it affoordeth, for the maintenance and preseruation of their liues. And we know that this proprietie maketh poore men also in the same countrie, to take more comfort and pleasure, in their own houses, though thatched, and ill furnished; and in their owne gardens, fields, and orchards, though they are rude, disordred, and vnpleasant, than in those which appertaine vnto other men, though neuer so curious, artificiall, and delightfull. In which respect though the things of this life were to bee preferred before those of the life to come, yet by the same reason wee should little regard them, in comparison of the other, because we haue no right, interest, and inheritance in them, but only passe by them, and vse them as helps, whereby wee may the better bee inabled to attaine vnto our iourneys end, and haue the other reserued for vs in our patrimonie, which wee shal hold for the tearme of that life which shall be endlesse and euerlasting. But as men hauing proprietie vnto those things which are most excellent, & by infinite degrees to be preferred before such things as belong vnto others, doe in comparison of their own possessions basely esteeme, and easily contemne that, vnto which they haue no right and title; as the French man or Italian hauing goodly inheritances in their owne countries, may easily despise the deserts of Arabia for their barennes, and the northerne climes almost inhabitable, by reason of their extreame cold: so this being our case, and we hauing a country most rich, most glorious, full of all goodnesse and blessednesse, it may bee a thing easie for all those who consider of it, to contemne temne and set lightly by this earthly desert, and to preferre before it our heauenly country, much more than the children of Israel preferred the fruitful land of Canaan before that waste and desert wildernesse, through which they had trauelled towards their owne countrie. But for as much as men in the world doe so much ouerualue this place of their pilgrimage, and lightly esteeme of our heauenly habitation; delighting themselues here as in their paradise, and mourning and fearing to depart vnto their owne home, as though it were the place of their exile and banishment: and seeing all this loue of the one, proceedeth from a supposed excellencie, and this dislike or loathing of the other, from a false conceit, that by our change, our state shall be impaired, and we in worse case than wee were before; which can proceed from nothing but from grosse ignorance, or Pagan-like infidelity, whereby either we know not what ioy and happinesse is prepared for Gods saints, or doe not beleeue that we shall haue our part and interest in them; therefore as I haue already shewed the base worthlesnesse, and vaine vnprofitablenesse of worldly things, that wee might be freed from that deluding opinion which doth bewitch vs with their loue: so now for conclusion of this booke, I will also increate of the diuine excellencie of our heauenly ioyes, that hauing some knowledge and tast of them, wee may bee rauished with their loue, and in comparison of them, & the meanes of attaining vnto them, lightly esteeme & contemne these worldly toyes, and trifling vanities.

Wherein my purpose is to auoid curious and friuolous questions, which as they haue no vse or profit, so no true ground out of Gods Word; and to content my selfe with that which may bee said of these heauenly ioyes, either directly out of the Scriptures, or may by necessarie consequence be gathered from these infallible testimonies. The which because they speake sparingly in this argument, in respect of the glory and greatnesse of these surpassing ioyes; therefore I would admonish the reader, that hee doe not expect any full or perfect description of them, seeing this is altogether impossible, either to me, or any other liuing, whilest we remayne here in this place of our pilgrimage, as being a secret which is not to be reuealed by discourse, but by experience and fruition. For so the Apostle Iohn plainly affirmeth, that wee are now the sonnes of God, but yet it doth not appeare what we shall be; and the Apostle Paul saith, that God dwelleth in the light which none can attaine vnto, whom neuer man saw, neither can see. Of which our insufficiency in comprehending these heauenly mysteries, diuers reasons may be rendred: first, because the Lord would haue the full and perfect knowledge of these diuine excellencies concealed, to exercise hereby our Faith, Loue, Obedience and Patience: for he would haue vs whilest wee continue here to liue by faith, and not by sight, to seeke after these ioyes vpon his Word, though we haue no distinct and sensible knowledge of them in our selues; to do our worke and performe our dutie as well for loue to himselfe, as for the reward which we are to receiue, and hauing done what hee enioyneth vs, wholy to referre the wages to his own bountie. Whereas if there were a cleere and distinct knowledge of those heauenly excellencies, and surpassing ioyes in euery one of vs, it were not thankworthy to be a Christian, neither had we any occasion of approouing our Faith, Loue, and willing obedience vnto God, seeing they would rauish vs with their beautie and excellencie, and make vs respectiue of our dutie, if not for loue towards God, yet at least for the rewards sake. And this cause the Apostle Paul seemeth to intimate, where he saith, that hee was taken vp into paradise, and there heard words, which could not againe be spoken by him, and which were not lawfull for man to vtter; as being secrets of State, the knowledge whereof was appropriated to those who were admitted Citizens and free Burgesses of that glorious Kingdom. Another cause may be our imperfection in knowledge, which is a fruit and punishment of our sinne, accompanying vs as long as we continue in this life. For the Apostle telleth vs, that wee know but in part, and see as through a glasse darkly, and that to see face to face, and to know as we are known, is reserued for the life to come. So that when we haue sought out as much as we can these inscrutable and hidden mysteries, we may cry out with Iob; Lo these are part of his wayes, but how little a portion heare we of him! And who can vnderstand his fearefull power? Neither need this to seeme strange vnto any, if we doe but consider that our knowledge and vnderstanding hath receiued so great a maime by our originall sinne, that we are ignorant for the most part of the things appertaining to this life, knowing them not in their true nature, formes, and essence, but onely in their figures, qualities, and properties; and that not by a present, immediate and cleere vnderstanding, but onely by sense, obseruation, induction, and experience. In which respect it is impossible to make a blind man by descriptions cleerely to know the nature of colours, and to conceiue of the brightnesse of the Sunne, because he wanteth those organs and instruments of knowledge which should conueigh it to the common sense, phantasie, and vnderstanding: or to make a man perfectly to conceiue of the sweetnesse of hony, and the delightfull odour of a Rose, who wants those senses of taste and smelling. And this reason the author of the Booke of Wis-

2. Cor. 12. 4.

1. Cor. 13. 9, 12.

Iob 26. 14.

Wisd. 9. 16.

doeth plainly expresseth: Hardly (saith hee) can wee discerne the things that are vpon earth, and with great labour find wee out the things that are before vs: & who then can seek out the things that are in Heauen? To which purpose another saith, that it is not for vs in this time of ignorance, whilest we remayne in our earthly bodies, to mount into the Clouds, to pierce this fulnesse of Light, to breake into this bottomlesse profunditie of Glory, or to dwell in this vnapprochable brightnesse: for this is reserued for our last day, when we shall be presented vnto God, glorious, and without spot or wrinkle; for how shal wee see God in his glory, and behold the beautifull brightnesse of his heauenly habitation; seeing our vnderstandings are so blinded with ignorance that wee doe not know our selues, nor in any perfection conceiue what our owne soules are, which is the chiefe part of our essence and being? Finally, it is impossible till wee come to Heauen, and haue our vnderstandings inlightened and inlerged by him who first made them, that we should conceiue, and comprehend these ioyes in regard of their greatnesse, and surpassing excellencie. For as our weake eyes cannot behold the Sun, but it presently dazleth them, and if they bee not turned away maketh them blind, because this too excelling object corrupteth the sense: so our weake vnderstandings cannot possibly conceiue and comprehend the glorious brightnesse of these heauenly ioyes; and if aboue their reach and capacitie they attempt it, they are presently surcharged with their glory and greatnesse. And the reason hereof is cleere and euident; for seeing this glory and happinesse consisteth principally in the vision and fruition of God, who is infinite and incomprehensible, therefore it is as impossible in this life for any man to comprehend them, as to containe the Ocean in the shel of a Nut. To which purpose one saith, what this eternal glory is, with what treasures this heauenly Kingdome aboundeth, and with what glorious brightnesse it shineth, it cannot be expressed, but is rather with prayses to be admired and magnified. But yet though this heauenly glory cannot be fully expressed, it is not wholly to be pretermitted though it cannot be purtrayed (as it were) in liuely colours, yet it is not to be left vnshadowed; for seeing we know but in part, therefore as it is not fit to comprehend the whole; so neither to omit and let that part passe which we conceiue: and seeing the Holy Ghost hath in many places of the Scripures in some darke manner shadowed this glory, and giuen vs a taste of these ioyes, wee must not neglect it because we cannot haue our full draught; and because we cannot comprehend as much as we would, we must not slightly ouerpasse that which we can: considering that God hath purposely granted vs a sight of these first fruits, that we may more hartily long after the whole haruest, and hath in his holy word giuen vs a tast of this happinesse, that wee may vse all possible meanes to come vnto this fountaine of glory, where wee may drinke our fil; and hath giuen vs liberty both to thinke and speake of the ioyes of his kingdome according to our measure and proportion, though we cannot fully conceiue them; euen as we haue liberty to thinke and speake of his owne infinite maiesty with respective reuerence, although hee be ineffable and incomprehensible. As therefore Moses for his sinne was not suffered to enter into the land of promise, and so to take a particular view of euery part of the earthly Canaan, and yet was permitted to goe to the top of mount Abarim, and thence to take some general sight and notice of it; so although wee by our sinnes haue the eyes of our vnderstandings so dimmed, that wee cannot cleerely and distinctly behold the glorious beauty of the holy land; yet let vs take some such generall view as the Lord in his Word reuealeth it vnto vs. And as those who cannot behold the sunne shining in his full brightnesse, attaine vnto such a sight of it as they are capable of by looking vpon it, or rather the image and resemblance of it, in a standing poole, or dish of water; so though we cannot see these glorious ioyes in their owne perfect beautie, because our vnderstandings would bee astonished & confounded; yet let vs (as it were) by reflection discouer them as well as wee can, in some earthly shadowes and resemblances. Onely as one exhorteth, Let vs not curiously seeke out that, which the Apostles themselues could not fully expresse; neither let any man desire to know of mee that, of which I haue this onely knowledge, that I know it not; vnlesse hee would learne to bee ignorant of that, which we ought onely thus far to know, that it cannot be known of vs.

Bernard. super Cantica, Serm. 38.

Augustin. Tom. 8. Serm. 1.

Nec ideo tamen debemus tacere, sed dicere quantum valemus, quia dicere quantum volo, non valeo. Augustin. lib. medit. cap. 18.

First, therefore that wee may haue some small glimpse of this glory, weare to know, that this Kingdome of God, and ioyes of Heauen, is nothing else but that chiefe happinesse and supreame felicitie, which the holy Saints, who haue faithfully serued God in this life, shal eternally enjoy with God himselfe, and his Sonne Christ, in the life to come; whilest being freed from all worldly euils and miseries, they doe communicate in all the heauenly happinesse, and vnspeakeable blessednesse prepared for them, especially in the fruition of God, who being infinite in all perfection, shall be all in all vnto them. Which ioyes, that wee may the better conceiue of, let vs first consider of the Names, Titles, and Epithets, which in the Scripeures are giuen vnto them; and afterwards speake, according to the measure of knowledge reuealed vnto vs, of the parts thereof. Concerning the former, we haue of them great varietie rietie in the booke of God, whereby both the great excellencie, perfect sufficiencie, incomparable glory, ranishing delight, and eternall felicitie of this heauenly glory is implied and signified. The greatnesse and excellencie of this eternall blessednesse is noted, when as it is called a [a] Kingdome, seeing there is no riches, glory, or pleasures which a Kingdome affordeth not: and lest wee should conceiue that it yeeldeth no better treasures, honours and delights, than earthly Kingdoomes doe, it is called the [b] Kingdome of Heauen: to note vnto vs, that as farre as Heauen exceedeth Earth in largenesse, statelinesse, height and beautie, so much the priuiledges and roiall prerogatiues of this heauenly kingdome, exceed the earthly in greatnesse and in glorie. Yea, it is called also the [c] Kingdome of God, to shew vnto vs, that it is absolute in all perfection, and as farre aboue earthly Kingdoomes in maiestie and true felicitie, as the King of Kings excelleth the petie Princes of the World. In the same respect it is called the [d] new Ierusalem, and the Citie of God: to signifie, that it is the place which God hath specially chosen, the Metropolis, or chiefe seate of his boundles Empire, and, as it were, the Court of the great King, where our Lord and Soueraigne, who is omnipresent, and filleth heauen & earth, doth keepe his chiefe residence, and therein manifest his glory and greatnes. And therefore looke how much the chiefe Citie of the Kingdome, & the Princes roiall court doe excell in riches and glorie, the poorest & remotest countrie villages and so, and much more doth this heauenly City, and court roiall of the King of Kings, excell all worldly empire and dominion. The perfect sufficiencie of these heauenly ioyes is also noted by the names which are giuen vnto them; for they are called a [e] liuely fountaine, and the well of the water of life, of which, whosoeuer drinks shall neuer thirst: to shew vnto vs, that as he who hath an euer spritging fountaine, can neuer want Water; so hee who is once possessed with these heauenly ioyes, hath alwaies sufficiencie of all glory and goodnesse. And in the same respect they are called [f] blessednesse and felicitie: vnto which is required the confluence of all perfections, full contentment, and the fruition of our summum bonum, and chiefe happinesse: so that where blessednesse is, nothing is troublesome, nothing wanting, but all good things are present in possession, which the hart of man can desire and wish. The incomparable glory likewise of this heauenly happinesse, is liuely signified by the titles and similitudes whereby it is described; for it is called the mysticall [g] Temple, wherein our great King vouchsafeth his glorious presence, and is continually praysed and magnified, by many millions of his heauenly quiristers, and holy seruants: it is called the throne of God, whereon hee sitteth, whilest he raigneth and ruleth ouer all his creatures, and whereon he vouchsafeth to allow [h] vs a place to sit together with him. Finally, it is called a Crowne, to shew, that it is full of glorie and maiestie; and lest wee should thinke it a crowne gotten or possessed with tyrannie and iniustice, it is called a [i] crowne of righteousnesse: and lest we should feare, that like earthly crownes, it should bee subject to change and alteration; it is called a [k] crowne incorruptible, which cannot be taken from vs; and a [l] crowne of life, and therefore not to bee left or lost by death; and lest wee should imagine that it is a copper crowne, base and of small value, it is not onely said to bee a glorious crowne, but a [m] crowne of glory, and of beautie. Yea, it is called [o] glory it selfe, to note vnto vs, that nothing in Heauen or Earth can bee more glorious. Thus also the ranishing ioy of this glorious Kingdome is plainely noted by those titles and similitudes which are in the word of God ascribed and applied vnto it: for it is resembled by a [p] great Feast and banquet, where nothing is to bee found but mirth and gladnesse, yea to a [q] marriage supper, which exceedeth all other feasts in ioy and delight. It is called [r] rest, wherein being freed from our labours, we shal wholy giue our selues to pleasure; and that not an idle rest, which is more tedious and loathsome, than businesse and imployment, but a rest which comforteth and [s] refresheth vs, being spent in glorifying God, and in singing praises to him, who is the authour of all our welfare. So it is called [t] fulnesse of ioy, to shew vnto vs, that we shall haue our hearts fully satisfied with those pleasures, and that there shall bee no part of vs emptie and void of delight. And the [u] swift flowing riuer, and torrent of pleasures: to note that they are like a streame, which hauing an indeficient and euerspringing fountaine, the God of all ioy and comfort, can neuer become drie; and that wee shall bee wholly carried and transported by their loue, like a little boate in a swift current. Yea, and as though there were nothing now in Earth fit to resemble the greatnesse of this heauenly ioy, it is called [x] Paradise, which was that place of all ioy and happinesse, and that garden of pleasure and delight, in which our first parents were placed in the state of innocencie. And as though this temporary and finite happinesse were not enough to expresse this eternall and vnspeakeable glory, it is called the [y] ioy of our great Lord and Master, King of Heauen and Earth: to shew vnto vs, that seeing it is his ioy wherein he delighteth, it must needs like himselfe, be infinite and eternall. Finally, the perpetuitie and euerlasting con-

a Apoc.5.12.
b Matth.3.2.
c 1.Cor.9.24.
d Apoc.3.12.
e Psal.36.9.
f Luke 1.45.
g Apoc.7.15.
h Apoc.3.21.
i 2.Tim 4.8.
k 1.Cor.9.25.
l Iames 1.12. Apoc.2.10.
m 1.Pet.5.4. Prou.4.9.
o Rom.9.23.
p Apoc.19.9.
q Matth.22.2.
r 2.Thes.1.7.
s Act.3.19.
t Psal.16.11.
u Psalm 36.8.
x Luke 23.43. Apoc.2.7.
y Matth.25.21.

tinuance of this heauenly happinesse, and ineffable glory, is plainely signified by those names and titles, which in Gods Word are ascribed vnto it. For it is called a mansion and dwelling house, wherein wee are to remaine, and continually to inhabite in our owne Countrie, and is herein opposed to our earthly tents and tabernacles, out of which wee are still flitting and remooving. It is called, not a tenement at will, to bee possessed and left at the Landlords pleasure, but b an inheritance, not like vnto our earthly patrimonies, which in a short time, are taken away from vs, or we from them, but an inheritance immortall, vndefiled, and that fadeth not away. In which sense also it is called an c incorruptible crowne, which cannot perish; a d fountaine of life, which is neuer drie; e eternall life, which is subject to no mortalitie or end; f vncorrupted treasures, which neither can perish, nor be stollen away; a g Kingdome which cannot bee shaken with any violence; and h eternall glory, which neither hath any limits, nor knoweth end. Seeing therefore names wisely giuen doe signifie the nature and properities of the things named, how vnspeakeable and infinit are these ioyes of Heauen in all goodnesse, glorie and happinesse, which the wisdome of God himselfe hath imposed all these names vpon, as knowing that no one, or few of them, are sufficient to expresse, or so much as darkely to resemble their infinit perfection, and surpassing excellencie?

a Iohn 14.2.
2. Cor. 5. 1.
b 1. Pet. 1. 4.
c 1. Pet. 5. 4.
d Apoc. 22. 6.
e Iohn 3. 16.
f Matth. 6. 20.
g Heb. 12. 28.
h 1. Pet. 5. 10.

CHAP. IIII.

Of the happinesse of the soule in the ioyes of Heauen, and wherein it consisteth.

1. Sect. 1. That all defects & wants in the soule shall be perfectly supplied.

AND thus wee see in part, the excellency of these heauenly ioyes, by the names and titles which in the Scriptures are giuen vnto them. Now wee are to speake of the parts of these ioyes, which are principally two: the first is the ablence of all euill, the second is the presence of all good: for when wee haue freedome from all those euils which trouble vs, and haue the fruition of all good things which may comfort and delight vs, then, and then alone, can wee truly bee said to haue attained vnto blessednesse. The former of these the Grecians signified by that name which they gaue vnto it, as though he alone were blessed, who was exempted from the power of fate and death, and freed from all miseries and calamities: the other the Hebrew name implieth, for being a Word in the plurall number it, signifieth (as the learned Hebricians obserue) that there onely is true blessednesse, where there is a plenitude and confluence of all good. Seeing therefore the Scriptures plainely teach vs, that whosoeuer attaine vnto these heauenly ioyes, shall be truely and perfectly blessed; from hence it followeth by necessarie consequence, that all those who shall be partakers of these ioyes, shall also be perfectly freed from all euils which might any way hurt or molest them, and also fully replenished with all manner of good, which may benefit and delight them. For there (as one saith) is infinite ioy, mirth without mourning, health without sickenesse, a pleasant way without labour, light without darkenesse, life without death, all good without any euill. Where youth neuer waxeth old, where life knoweth no end, where beautie neuer decaieth, where the fire of loue neuer cooleth, where health neuer is enfeebled, where ioy neuer decreaseth, where griefe is neuer felt, where grones and lamentations are neuer heard, where nothing sorrowfull is euer seene, where ioy still aboundeth, where no euill is euer feared, because there our chiefe good is inioyed, which is to behold the face of our God, who is infinite in all vertue and perfection. Whosoeuer then is a Citizen of this new Ierusalem, and made partaker of this heauenly happinesse, he shall bee perfectly freed from all those euils, with which this fraile life is so much molested, and induced with all good, and inriched with all blessings and benefits, of which in this World, we are so destitute and naked. Now the euils vnto which in this life wee are subject, are either priuatiue, consisting in the ablence of those things which are good; or positive, consisting in the presence of those things which are euill; and both these respect, either the soule, or body alone, or the whole person. The defects and wants in the soule in this life are diuers; as first, the want of knowledge in the vnderstanding, whereby wee might know God and his will, that wee might obey it, and our selues also; which wee were indued with in our creation, but lost it by the fall of our first parents. Vnto which wee may adde the want of conformitie in our wils to the perfect will of God, the want of strength and abilitie in our memories to remember that which is good, and that which God reueileth vnto vs concerning himselfe, or his will. And finally, the want of Gods image, chiefly consisting in wisedome, righteousnesse and holinesse; which is wretchedly defaced by our fall, and these excellent graces of God cleane blotted out. All which, as they are in part renewed by our regeneration in this life, although it be in great weaknesse, imperfection, and corruption; so shall they bee perfectly restored (and that in farre greater excellencie, then they were in our creation) in the life to come. For then shall wee perfectly know God, Eustathius Iudaeos dicit scribit quod vt qui duodecim dies nupsit.

God, and know our selues, according to that measure of knowledge which a creature is capable of; then shall our wils bee so perfectly conformable to the will of God, that we shall take our chiefe delight to serue and please him; then shall wee remember all his mercies and goodnesse, especially those which concerne our creation, redemption and glorification, that wee may laud his name, who hath beene so gracious vnto vs in a word, then shall the image of God be perfectly renewed, and wee shall be indued with all true wisdome, holinesse and righteousnesse, as wee shall more clearely declare hereafter.

And as all the defects of the soule shall be supplied, so are there many euils and corruptions, from which it shall be deliuered: as for example, the vnderstanding is exceedingly blinded with ignorance, so as wee naturally neither know God nor our selues, what is true happinesse, nor the meanes to attaine vnto it. And as we are so blind as moles in spirituall and heauenly things, so wee haue little knowledge in things naturall and ciuill; and yet such is our folly, that though in these maine points, the knowledge whereof is necessary to saluation, wits are so blind and ignorant, that our whole life were too little and too short, to bee imployed in the searching out of them, yet are we ready to neglect these, and to spend our time in the discussing of curious questions, of which the end of knowing is only to know them, they hauing no further vse or profit. But in the kingdome of Heauen we shall be freed both from this ignorance and curiositie, for we shall be endued with the knowledge of God, and in him we shall know all things; and therefore our curiositie also shall cease, as being needlesse, seeing we shal be fully satisfied with all wisdome and knowledge, as is shal better appeare hereafter. Now if in this life men haue such a gracious burthen, that men who haue so much sense as to feele their miserie, are content to spend their whole time, and euen to consume their strength, that they may be eased of it; and if Philosophers haue beene so ravished with a dimme sparke of knowledge, which was first kindled by the light of nature, and after blowne vpon, and stirred by their owne labour and industrie, that in comparison thereof they haue contemned all the riches, pleasures and preferments in the world; and if wee Christians illuminated by Gods Spirit, take such ioy and comfort in our knowledge, which is but in part, whereby we see darkely, as through a glasse, that we detestedly preferre it before all the world and the vanities thereof, how shall we then rejoyce, when being admitted into the heauenly ioyes of the full of vnderstanding shall fill all eares from our eyes? how shall our hearts be cheared, when being deliuered from this Egyptian darknesse, wee shall in this heauenly Gothen, haue the light of knowledge and truth clearely shining about vs, hauing not the least mist or cloud to hinder our sight, from beholding the brightnesse of Gods goodnesse and glorie? And if such a small sparke of this knowledge, bee so pleasant and delightfull, what will it then bee when this light shall be so encreased, that it shal match the Sunne in his full strength? If our darkenesse and dimme sight, as through a glasse be so esteemable, what shall it bee, when we shal see face to face? 1. Cor. 13. 12.

So also our wils shall in the life to come bee freed from all euill, and that both in respect of their impurtie and corruption, and also in regard of their impotencie and imperfection. In this life they are peruerse, stubborne, and rebellious; most backward to any thing which is good, and prone vnto all euill, and in stead of conformitie betweene them and the will of God, there is such flat opposition and repugnancie, that the very knowledge of that which God requireth, is a sufficient motiue to make vs will the contrarie, and his prohibitions set a maruellous edge on our appetites to doe that which wee know he hath forbidden: but in the life to come all this corruption and peruersnesse of our wils shall bee taken away, and they being made wholy conformable to the will of God, shall not will any thing which is euill and sinfull, but that onely which is just, acceptable, and pleasing in his sight. Yea then all our desire shall be to glorifie God, to praise and serue him, not as we doe here, with great reluctation, conflicts and oppositions, but with a full and perfect consent, freely, and with much more alacritie and cheerefulnesse, than euer wee wooke it following our owne lusts and the pleasures of this life, so that as our Saviour Christ speaketh of himselfe, it shall be more pleasing vnto vs than our meate and drinke, when here wee are most an hungred, to doe the will of our heauenly Father. And that which ought chiefly to comfort vs, our wils shall be most free, but yet inclinable onely to chuse that which is good, like the will of God himselfe, who though he most freely willeth, yet hee never willeth any euill, his will being the perfect rule of all iustice, so that we shall not onely not chuse any euill or sinne, but not haue any inclination or ability to make such choice, both because our sanctification shall bee then most perfect, which is now imperfect and onely begun. Whereof it will come to passe that we shall haue a perfect hatred of sinne, and a perfect loue of righteousnesse and holinesse, and also because our wils shall neuer be forsaken of God, and left to themselues, but

Q. Sect. 3. That our wils shall be freed from their peruersenes, and be made conformable to the will of God.

Rom. 7. 18

Iohn 4.

shal

shall alwayes be so effectually, and powerfully ruled and gouerned by the most wise and just will of God, that it shall not bee possible for them to erre, or to digresse any whit out of the way of justice and truth. In which respect our will shall not be like vnto Adams, arbitrarie to good or euill, or mutably and changeably good; but like Gods will, most immutable and constant in all goodnesse, righteousnesse, and holinesse, so as it shall be altogether impossible vnto vs, either to will that which God nilleth, or to nil that which hee willeth: the which immutabilitie in goodnesse, shall not then be grounded on our owne strength and abilities of nature, for then had wee cause justly to feare, that we might like Adam be againe circumuented by Satans subtilties; but it shall haue this firmenesse and immutabilitie from Gods eternall loue and election, which is immutable, and on his gracious and neuer failing promises, which (as the Apostle saith) are Yea and Amen, subject to no change or alteration: for hee who hath promised that our ioyes shal be eternall, hath consequently vndertaken to preserue vs from falling into any sinne, which would cut off our happinesse, and ruine our joy. To this purpose one of the Ancients speaketh no lesse excellently than fitly; The first free will (saith he) which was giuen to man, when hee was first created in righteousnesse and holinesse, was that hee was able not to sinne, but withall that he could also sin if hee would: but our free will in Heauen shall bee much more powerfull than this, in that it shall haue no power to sinne; but this shall be the gift of God, and not by the power of our naturall faculties. For it is one thing to be God, and another thing to haue participation and communion with God: for God in his owne nature cannot sinne; but hee who is partaker of God, receiues this power from him, that hee cannot sinne, &c. For as the first immortalitie which Adam lost by sinning, was to be able not to die, but his last shall bee, not to be able to die; so the first free will was, to be able not to sinne; but the last free will shal bee, not to be able to sinne; for our willing of righteousnesse and holinesse, shal bee alike vnloseable with our felicitie, &c. The other euill from which our wils shal bee freed, is, impotencie and inabilitie, to effect that which they will; for in this life although they doe with all earnestnesse desire many things, yet they are not able to atchieue them, because they are not agreeable and conformable to the will of God, and therefore he crosseth and frustrateth them: but in the life to come they shall be effectuall and powerfull in atchieuing whatsoeuer they desire, because they are in all things agreeable and subordinate to the will of God, and consequently doe most surely attaine vnto their ends, seeing there is no power in Heauen or in Earth, which is able to crosse and defeate the will of God, his will being most wise and immutable, and his power omnipotent and vnresistable. To which purpose the same Author (as it is ascribed vnto him) saith, that because our wils are one and the same with Gods will, therefore we shal bee after a sort omnipotent, in bringing our wils to passe, as God also is omnipotent: for as God can doe whatsoeuer hee will doe by himselfe, so shall wee doe whatsoeuer we will doe, by him, because wee shal will nothing else, but that which hee also willeth, and he also willeth whatsoeuer we will and desire, and whatsoeuer hee willeth that must necessarily come to passe; seeing he is most powerfull and omnipotent, to effect his will. Now if worldly Princes and Potentates account it a chiefe part of their regal happinesse, that they may haue their wils; though in truth they are as often crossed herein as inferiour persons, partly through the repugnancie and opposition of their owne passions and desires, and partly through the discrepancie and contrariete of their state affaires, and of the things themselues which they desire to effect: and though when they haue their wils they receiue thereby little comfort and contentment, because oftentimes being led by passion, they are opposed to the reuealed will of God, reason, and euen the light of nature, which worketh in them both afore and after their wils are accomplished, grieuous conflicts betweene their will and their conscience, terrors, feares, and many troubles of minde: how infinitely more happie shall the poorest Saint of God be in the kingdome of Heauen, when in all things which they can desire they shal haue their will, without any crosse or opposition; and it being wholy conformable to the will of God, and to the rule of holy reason, shal also haue in accomplishing of it, joy, peace and full contentment, not onely because it is done, but also because God and their owne reason and conscience approue the doing of it?

The like also may be said of our memories, for whereas in this life wee cannot imprint in them any good thing, but presently it will be blotted out, nor blot out any ill thing once written, but that our corruption like aqua fortis will doe out the litterature and staine, and so renue it, that it will againe become legible; in the ioyes of Heauen wee shall be freed from this corruption; and our memories shall become faire tables of such an holy Making, that they will easily receiue the writing and impression of Gods will, imprinted in them by the finger of his Spirit, neuer againe to bee blotted out; and contrariwise will not by any possible means, meanes, receiue the print or impression of any euill, but whether it bee sinne or punishments it shal vtterly bee done away and forgotten, so farre forth as the remembrance thereof would bring vnto vs any vexation or discomfort. For howsoeuer wee shal forget both our sinnes and miseries, as they haue beene dishonourable to God, and causes vnto vs of griefe and sorrow; yet shal wee so farre forth remember them, as they may make vs in all loue and thankfulnesse to laud and magnifie our gracious God, for his merciful and marueilous deliuerance of vs from all these euils. And therefore (as it is distinguished) we shal be mindful of our passed euills in respect of our rationall knowledge, and faculty of vnderstanding; but vtterly forgetful of them in respect of our sense, feeling and experience: euen as we see the skilfull Physitian knoweth all diseases of the body in his skill and theory; but in respect of his owne sense and experience, is ignorant of all those, which he neuer suffered. Finally, our consciences in the fruition of their heauenly ioyes shal be freed from all their corruptions, vnto which in this life they are subiect; as from their impuritie, stupiditie and sleepinesse, or their terrible accusations, horrors, and feares; and being full of ioy and peace, in regard that all our actions and endeauours shall bee most holy, righteous, and agreeable with the will of God, they shal onely obserue our hearts, affections, and actions, (not as in this life to preuent their disorder, and digressions, that they may recall and reclaime them) but that taking notice of their perfect conformitie with the will of God, and approuing them, they may thereby continually repue our ioy and comfort, and minister matter vnto vs of praysing and glorifying God, for preseruing vs in this puritie and holinesse. O how much therefore will this adde to our heauenly ioyes, when we shal forget all, which being remembred might molest and trouble vs; and retaine all those good things in perfect memorie, the remembrance whereof may bring vnto vs any ioy and contentment? how happy and blessed shal wee be, when our consciences shal leaue off to accuse and terrifie vs; and bee onely exercised in iustifying vs, and in giuing approbation to all our actions?

Prima libertas immortalitas fuit, quam peccando Adam perdidit, posse non mori, nouissima erit non posse mori: ita primum liberum arbitrium fuit posse non peccare, nouissimum non posse peccare. August. de Ciuit. Dei. lib. 22. cap. 30.

And these are the defects of our soules, which shal then bee supplied, and the euils from which they shal be deliuered: which being vnderstood, wee shal not nede to speake much of those good things, and of the excellent parts and qualities, wherewith they shal bee beautified and adorned, seeing there is the same reason of contraries, and the one being known, doth by direct opposition shew the nature and qualities of the other. In a word therefore, as our soules shal bee freed from ignorance, so they shal be endued with heauenly wisedome, whereby they shal know God in that perfection, that the creature is capable of, the high mysterie of the Trinitie, and of the vnion of Christs humanitie to the diuine nature, and of the faithful vnto Christ. And this knowledge shal not then bee darke, and as in a glasse, like our dimme knowledge in this life, but cleare and perspicuous, and (as it were) face to face; it shal not then be in part onely, but whole and perfect; for then shall wee know, euen as we are known. In this life wee lie (as it were) in a dungeon of darknesse; and all the comfort that wee haue is, that the light of Gods truth, whereby the eyes of our minds are illightned, with some small and dimme knowledge of God, shineth vnto vs, as thorow a little chinke or hole: but when we attaine to heauenly happinesse, and enjoy the glorious libertie of the sonnes of God, then shal wee be compassed about with light, as with a garment, and our minds shal receiue perfect illumination, and fulnesse of knowledge. Finally, we shal not attaine vnto this diuine knowledge, as in this life, with paines and excessiue labour, whereby we consume the body to enrich the soule, neither yet by secondarie and inferiour meanes, as namely, the hearing, reading, and meditation of the Word, and the vse of the Sacraments, through which we see after all our study and industrie but darkely, and (as it were) thorow some dimme glasse; but wee shall haue it with all ease and facilitie by the immediate illumination of Gods holy spirit, whereby being inlightned, wee shal see all things clearely, and without vaile or shadow, seeing at this day there shall bee no ministery of Man or Angel, but God shall be all in all. So also our soules shal bee indued with perfect holinesse, whereby wee shal be inabled to performe all good duties vnto God, that so wee may euerlastingly glorifie him; and with perfect righteousnesse, whereby with like perfection wee shall performe all duties of loue and iustice, which wee owe to one another, to our mutuall ioy and vnspeakable comfort. But because this holinesse and righteousnesse belong not to the soule alone, but vnto the whole man, I will referre them to their proper place.

1. Cor. 13. 9. 10. 12. 1. Cor. 15. 8.

CHAP. V.

Of the speciall happinesse and felicitie of our bodies in the Kingdome of Heauen.

AND this shal bee the happinesse of our soules. Our bodies likewise shall bee freed from all euill, and replenished with all good: and first

Ioh. Stil. 1. That we shall be freed from all bodily wants & grieuances;

no hunger and thirst.

first they shal haue all their defects and wants supplyed, and all imperfections taken away. They shall then be freed from hunger and thirst, and consequently shall haue no need of meate and drinke. And this our Sauiour implieth, where he saith, that in the resurrection wee shall be like the Angels of God in Heauen; and plainely expresseth it to his Apostle Iohn, where describing the state of the blessed, he saith, they shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more. To which purpose one saith, that there we hunger and thirst, and haue need to bee satisfied: but though wee haue this want in our way, wee shal in our country haue satietie. The reason whereof is cleere and manifest; for seeing our bodies shal bee immortal and incorruptible, therefore no part of their substance can consume or waste, and consequently they shall neede no refreshing or reparation by meate and drinke. Againe, to need meate and drinke are infirmities of nature, which growing to extremitie cause death; but (as one saith) there shal no infirmitie and corruption rise with vs; and by the same reason, neither shal wee then haue those things which ordinarily serue for the supplie of these infirmities and imperfections. Only wee shal then haue that bread of life, which for our sakes came downe from Heauen, and that fountaine of life, of which whosoeuer drinke shal neuer thirst, with whose presence our soules shal bee satisfied, according to that of the Psalmist: They shall be satisfied with the fatnes of thine house, and thou shalt giue them drinke out of the riuer of thy pleasures; for with thee is the well of life, and in thy light shall wee see light. Now if any obiect that the Scriptures make mention of eating and drinking in the kingdome of Heauen; and that our Sauiour Christ promiseth to appoint a kingdome to his Disciples, where they should eate and drinke at his table: the answere is, that these are but borrowed speeches, wherby the holy Ghost fitteth himselfe to our capacitie, that hee might giue vs some taste of these heauenly ioyes in these earthly actions, which in their owne excellencie, are vnto vs vnconceiuable. Euen as Wisedome is is said to haue killed her victuals, drawne out her wine, and prepared her table. Which bodily actions cannot agree to wisedome which is of a spirituall nature, but are onely borrowed speeches whereby the excellencie and profit of Gods spirituall graces, as the knowledge of God, a good conscience, and ioy in the holy Ghost are noted and signified. And if it bee further alleaged that the Angels themselues and our Sauiour Christ after his resurrection, are said to haue eaten and drunken; wee are to know that in those places, they were actions of power, and not of any necessitie; and our Sauiour did not eate for hunger, but that he might shew the truth of his humane nature, by these naturall actions of eating & drinking; neither were these meates and drinkes turned into nourishment, or to the increasing, or preseruing the substance of his body, but were againe dissolued into their first principles and elements. Now if an epicure placing a part of his happinesse in eating and drinking, shall thinke in this respect that our estate shall bee worse because wee shall not haue the pleasure of meate and drinke; let him know that our pleasure and delight shall be infinitly more, in our participation of our spirituall nourishment the bread and water of life. And if hee shall aske what imployment wee can haue, when as wee shall haue no vse of these naturall actions, it is all alike (as one saith) as if the daughters of Danae should bee carefull what to doe, if they had filled their leaking vessell. For hunger and thirst are among those punishments which are due vnto sin, from which when we are deliuered, we are restored to a degree of happinesse; and these meates and drinkes being taken at the best, are the comforts of pilgrimes, and not the delights of the blessed; and howsoeuer it is good to haue them when wee want them, yet it is better not to want them, than to haue them.

Matth. 22. 30.

Apoc. 7. 16.

Symb. ad Catechum. lib. 1. cap. 11.

Psal. 36. 8.

Luk. 22. 29. 30.

Prou 9. 2.

So we shall not in this heauenly happinesse stand in need of sleepe, seeing we shall not be spent or wearied by labour; nor shall need to haue our spirits refreshed, seeing we shal liue by the al-sufficient spirit of God, which can neuer neede any renouation. We shall not there need physicke, seeing wee shal enioy perpetuall health, nor any more clog our stomacks, and emptie our purses, with these lothsome druggs, seeing after we haue tasted of the tree of life, we shall be priuiledged and preserued from all diseases. Wee shall not there want clothes, seeing God will giue vnto vs the a long white garments of immortalitie, that neuer can bee worne out; which shal bee so beautiful and glorious, that (like the Sun) wee shal bee best adorned, when wee haue no other couering, but our owne resplendent and Majesticall brightenesse. Wee shal not in these ioyes neede the ayre to coole our heate and keepe vs from stifling; neither yet breathing and respiration, seeing we shall not liue any longer by the helpe of this animal faculty, but (as the Apostle teacheth vs) shall bee immediatly quickened by b Gods holy spirit, which also giueth life to Christ our head. We shall not there neede the Sun, for c the glory of God shall lighten this heauenly City, and the Lambe shall bee the light of it. To this purpose also the Prophet Esay saith: Thou shalt haue no more Sun to shine by day, neither shall the bright-

a Apoc. 19.

b Rom. 8.

c Apoc. 21. and 22. Esay 60.

nesse

vse of the Moone shine vnto thee: for the Lord shall be thine euerlasting light, and thy God thy glory. Thy Sunne shall neuer goe downe, neither shall thy Moone be hid: for the Lord shall be thine euerlasting light, and the dayes of thy sorrow shall be ended. And because this Sunne neuer setteth, there shall neuer be any night there; and consequently no need of any watch to keepe the gates of that Citie, or of the helpe of Candle light, as the Apostle speaketh. And yet though the gates be still open, no vncleane thing shall euer enter that holy Citie, it being the nature of that Land to put to flight all hurtful vermine, and the poysonous brood of the olde Serpent. In a word, in this fulnesse of ioy we shal not want any thing, for e God shall be vnto vs all in all; & he who is f all-sufficient shal also be our g exceeding great reward.

And as we shal haue all our bodily wants supplyed with all manner of good, and our defects and imperfections wholy abolished; so also shall our bodies be freed from al those pestifer euils, wherwith in this life they are so much troubled and afflicted; for there shalbe no more sutte, because there shalbe no more sinne; and consequently there shal bee no plagues and punishments, which are contained and comprised in the malediction. There shal be no faintnesse, because no trauel, nor languishing wearinesse, because we shal enjoy perpetual rest; there shal bee no seruitude and bondage, because wee shal all enjoy the liberty of the sonnes of God; nor base subiection, seeing we shal all reigne as Kings, neither acknowledging fealty vnto none but to the great Monarch of Heauen and Earth, who also will require no other tribute of vs, but prayse and thanksgiuing for all his benefits. There our bodies shal not bee parched with heate, seeing wee shal haue a comfortable shade and refreshing vnder the shadow of Gods wings, and the Tree of Life; neither shal they be pinched with chilling cold, seeing the Sunne of righteousnesse wil continually shine vpon vs, and comfortably warme vs with the beames of his loue. They shal not there haue any monstrous shapes, blemishes, and deformities, but bee restored to perfect beauty, seeing these are the fruits and effects of sinne, which must of necessitie cease, when their cause ceaseth. There they shal not be molested with wounds and skarres, nor wasted and consumed with sicknesses and diseases; there shal be no loathsome Leprosie, nor spreading Plagues, nor pining Consumptions, nor raging Feuers. There the head shal be free from Megrims, the hands from Palsies, the feet from Gouts, the eyes from dimnesse, the eares from deafnes, the ioynts from lamenesse, the bones from aches, and the whole body both from desperate diseases, and the smallest maladies. In a word, as the body shal be priuiledged from entertaining these Harbingers of Death, so shal they bee freed from giuing any more Lodging to that al-killing Tyrant; for then not only the sting of Death, but euen Death it selfe shal be taken away. 1. Cor. 15. 54.

And these with many more, are the euils from which our bodies shall be deliuered. The good things, and excellent parts which shall be communicated vnto them, are diuers. As first, they shall be spirituall bodies, as the Apostle also testifieth: It is sowne a naturall body and is raised a spirituall body: As it is written, the first man Adam was made a liuing spirit, &c. Whereby wee are not to vnderstand that the substance of our bodies shall be spirituall, or that they shall be turned into spirits; for wee shall rise with the same bodies, consisting, in respect of their substance, of flesh and bones, as they now doe. Neither doth the Apostle say, that wee shall become spirits, but that wee shall haue spirituall bodies. Now it is one thing to be a spirit, or spirituall substance, and another thing to haue a spirituall body; for a spirit hath neither flesh nor bones, but a spirituall body hath both. Againe, it is vnnaturall and impossible for a body to bee changed into a spirit, seeing they haue not the same matter; and contrary also to the Scriptures, which teach vs, that man shall rise to inherit glory: now a perfect man consisteth as wel of a body as of a soule; and therefore hee cannot be all spirit, but must haue as well a corporall as a spirituall substance. Furthermore, holy Iob professeth his assurance, that hee should see God in his flesh, and that he the very same, and not another should see him, and that his owne eyes should behold him. Finally, such as our Sauiour Christs body was, such also shal ours be, but he had a true, materiall, and physicall body, consisting of flesh and bloud, which might not onely be seene, but also handled; for so himselfe saith, Behold my handes and my feet, for it is I my selfe; handle mee and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as you see mee haue. Neither is that obiection of any force, that we shall be like the Angels in Heauen and therefore spirits; seeing the contrary rather followeth; wee shal be like them, and therefore not the same. And not like them in all things, but in not eating and drinking, marrying, and giuing in matriage, and such like. Whereas therefore the Apostle saith, that we shal haue spirituall bodies, & opposeth them to natural and physicall bodies, it is not to be vnderstood generally of all natural bodies, but of such alone as we now haue, which are subiect to mortalitie & corruption. Neither is it his meaning, that they shall be spirituall in regard of their substance, which shall bee one and the same as now it is, but in diuers other respects. As first, because they shall be quickned by the Spirit of God, and be preserued and continued in their § Sect. 4. Of the good things which shall be communicated to our bodies; & first spirituall qualities. 1. Cor. 44. 45.

Luke 24. 39.

Matth. 22. 30.

their liues, by the vertue and vigour of this spirit, which dwelling primarily and aboue measure in Christ our Head, is from him communicated to vs who are his members, & shal no more liue by their animal faculty, nor need for the preseruation of their liues, meat, drinke, clothing, sleepe, physicke and such like helpes which are altogether necessary in this state of mortalitie. In which respects they shall cease to be naturall bodies, as they shall be freed from these animal faculties, of nourishing, increasing and multiplying by generation; for no more shall they liue by vertue of meat and drinke thrice concocted, first in the stomacke, turning it to chylus; then in the miseraicke veines and liuer, conuerting it into bloud; and lastly in the seuerall parts, when it is turned into their substance, either for the augmentation or preseruation of the body; but shall be spirituall and heauenly, liuing without all these helpes, by sole vertue of Gods Spirit, and that life which they communicate from Christ their Head, and so shall in respect of this spirituall quickening become spirituall, euen as the wax of the Candle being kindled by the fire becommeth a flame, and like vnto the fire whereby it is kindled. But yet it shall remayne naturall, as it still retaineth in owne substance, and the faculties of reason, sense, and motion, whereby it shall still be guided and gouerned; by vertue of that power which our soules shall receiue from the Spirit of God. Againe, they may be called after the resurrection, spirituall, because they shall in all things be subject to Gods Spirit, and be by it wholy ruled and gouerned; for that which in this behalfe the soule is in this life to the body, that in the life to come shall the Spirit of God be to both soule and body, obeying it in all things, not in part onely and imperfectly as in this world, but most perfectly, wholy, and willingly without the least dislike or reluctation. In which respect also it may be called spirituall, as it doth attaine vnto spirituall, angelicall, and most absolute and free obedience. And with this agreeth the iudgement of that worthy ancient. When as (saith hee) wee heare that our bodies are to become spirituall, wee are not so to vnderstand it, as though our body should be changed into a spirituall substance, and so become a spirit; for neither our body now which is called animal is changed into a soule, but retayneth in owne substance. But that is said to be a spirituall body, which is so in all things subject to the Spirit of God, as beseemeth that heauenly habitation, all humane fragilitie, and earthly infirmity, being changed and turned into heauenly puritie, and immortalitie. Finally, our bodies shall be spirituall, in regard that they shal be indued and adorned with spirituall qualities; for to this end the Apostles discourse wholy tendeth, not to shew that they shal haue their substance spirituall in the resurrection, but onely their qualities, that whereas now they are mortal, corruptible, earthly, and infected with earthly qualities, as heauinesse, slowenesse, faintnesse, weaknesse and the rest, they shal then become immortal, incorruptible, heauenly, and indued with heauenly and spirituall qualities.

August. de fide & symbolo cap. 5. tom. 3.

Now these spirituall qualities are diuers: as first immortality; for our Sauiour Christ saith, they shall die no more, for it is meet as the Saints shal be equall vnto the Angels, and are the sonnes of God, &c. And the Apostle telleth vs that our mortall must put on immortalitie. So by the same reason they must needs be incorruptible: for as he speaketh in the same Chapter our bodies are sowne in corruption, and raised in incorruption: and againe, our corruptible must put on incorruption. Vnto this we may adde their agilitie, and their quicke, nimble, and light motion; for being glorified, they are perfectly ruled by the soule, and yeeld vnto it ready seruice, not being now hindred by their weight or sluggishnesse from the present performing of any action wherein it wil imploy them: as they shal be able to ascend, as well as descend, as we see in the example of our Sauiour, ascending into Heauen in the sight of his Apostles; and to moue from place to place with incredible swiftnesse, not being at all hindred by their weight. For if (as one saith) Lead, which naturally sinketh to the bottome as soone as it is cast into the water, may by the art of the workman be made in such a forme, thinne, hollow, and like a Boat, that it wil swimme and floate aloft, that we think that God cannot giue that ability to our body, that the workman to the Lead? And if the water which is naturally heauy, can be made so thinne and subtile, that it hangeth in the Aire, and is caried about with the wind, how much more may a glorified body, quickened by Gods Spirit, be freed from its dul heauinesse, and haue power to ascend, and to moue which way the soule pleaseth to guide it? Againe, we see by experience, that the heauier a body is, the slower it naturally is, and vnfit for motion, and the lighter it is, the more swift and nimble; & yet who seeth not, that a mans body which is lean & weak, though it be light, yet moueth slowly; and that his body who is in good liking, strong and vigorous, though it be more heauy, is quicke and swift in motion? If therefore health can worke this great difference, and make that which is heauy to bee caried by another, light to be caried by it selfe; euen as the want thereof maketh that heauy to it selfe, which is light vnto another, how much more shal this be effected by immortalitie, and the quickening vertue of Gods powerfull Spirit? But whether this motion shal bee equal in swiftnesse to our soules and thoughts, and whether our bodies shal be able in an instant to passe from place to place, as some do judge; or whether they shal onely move with great and extraordinary speed, passing whither they wil, though it be in great distance, in a very short time, we cannot determine; howsoever I thinke this latter much more probable. Finally, our bodies being freed from their earthly grossenesse, shall be subtilized and of a much more fine and pure substance, not by diminution of their quantity, for in this respect it shal retaine all its dimensions, not by reason of any rare faction, as water is made subtile, in the mists and clouds; for then our bodies could not be solid, as our Saviour Christ was after his resurrection; but in respect of the complete perfection of it, in its essence and kind, which perfection is hindred from the dominion of Gods spirit dwelling in it, & of the glorified soule which doth informe it, vnto which it is subiect; and by reason of this perfection which it hath from them, is fit and able for the performing of all actions and motions of the soule wherein it will imploy it; for otherwise it would stil be a burthen & hinderance to the soule as it is in this life. And in respect of this subtility, whereby it is inferred to be subtile, and (as it were) the ready instrument of the soule, it cannot bee hindred in its motion by the opposition of any solid body, nor vnenclosed, imprisoned, or violently detained in any place. Of which wee haue an example in our Saviour Christs body after his resurrection, which by reason of the subtility thereof did suddenly appeare vnto his Apostles, and presently againe disappeared, and also did come amongst them into the roome where they were, the doore being shut; not by penetrating their substance, which is against the nature of a body, consisting of flesh and bones; but by their insensible yeelding to give passage to this most perfect body, that it might hereby bee imployed in such actions as his holy spirit, and most diuine soule ordained it. Finally, to this subtility we may also referre that most acute, quicke, and exquisite perception and comprehension of the soules, which the glorified body shal haue, & this pitifie of the affections, whereby (notwithstanding they communicate with the body) they shall be most obedient and susceptible to the mind, and no more troubled and disturbed with their grossenesse and impurity.

equall

To these spiritual qualities we may adde diuers others, as namely, they shall bee indued with great power and strength, and easy for euermore perfect health: and whereas whereas the soule being a spirit, mighty, and powerfull, exerces there its strength, because of the weakenesse of the body, which is its organ and instrument, in respect whereof we see by experience, that it exerciseth its functions and actions more strongly or weakly, according to the measure of bodily strength and health which it vseth and imployeth: in our heauenly Countrie our bodies shal enjoy such perfect health, and be indued with such powerfull strength, that they shal match the ability of the soule, and become so fit for it in vigour and might, that it shal not as it doth now hinder the actions thereof with its weaknesse, and wearinesse, but become a perfect and sufficient instrument for all imployments. And this quality the Apostle attributeth vnto it, where he saith, that it is sowne in weaknesse, but is raised in power. So also they shal bee indued with impassibility, and be freed from suffering any hurt or detriment from any outward agent, to which in this life they are so much subjected; and consequently they shalbe freed from all alteration, diminution, and corruption: for seeing all passion or suffering proceedeth from an outer-bearing power of the agent over the patient; and for as much as nothing can thus ouer-rule, but by ouercomming the forme of the patient, which resisteth all outward force as long as it hath any ability; and finally, seeing our humane bodies shal bee perfectly subjected vnto our soules, by which they are informed, euen as the soule also is perfectly subjected vnto God; by whose vertue and power they are defended from all outward violence, hurts and injuries; therefore necessarily they become impassible, and free from evil, because there is no outward agent able to ouercome our powerful soules, & the most powerful Spirit of God, not so strong and mighty to hurt our bodies, as they are to preserue and defend them.

1. Cor. 15. 43.

3. Sect. 7. That our bodies shall be beautifull, and of a comely stature and proportion.

Finally, they shal be adorned with most compleat and perfect beauty, and that both in respect of the comely and due proportion, and symmetry of all the parts and members, and the quantity and stature of the whole body; and also in respect of the colour & complexion. So that their our bodies shal be freed from all maymes, defects, and monstrous shapes, from all deformities, blemishes, and disgraces, from all disproportion, & vnseemely shape of the members one with another, and in themselues; and the whole man shal be adorned and graced with a goodly shape, feature and comelinesse. And as there shal be perfection of all the parts of the body, so also of the whole in respect of age and stature. For although we can gather little touching this point directly and plainely out of the Scriptures, yet may it be inferred by consequence, and concluded by good reason; for if old age and childhood bee the imperfections of man, the one not having attained the perfection of stature, and the other declining past it, shal the soule be more compleat and perfect, & seeing both a great like and dwarfish stature, are the aberrations of nature, and much more imperfect than a proportionable person, and a body of a conuenient and comely quantity; then it will follow hereupon that al the saints of heauen shal bee of a middle and perfect age, and though not of an exact equality, yet of a comely and goodly stature, for as much as in the state of blessednesse al imperfections and infirmities shall bee taken away, and that which is most perfect and excellent shal bee receiued and inioyed. And of this I am the more certainely perswaded, because God in the first creation, making man his most perfect creature, did make him neither a child nor old man, but of a middle and perfect age, not yet of huge stature (for giants came long after, through that monstrous and vnequall matching of the sons of God with the daughters of men) nor of dwarfish smalnesse, in which there is no maiesty or comelinesse; but of such a mean and conuenient stature, as might make maiesty and beauty meet together. And therefore seeing our resurrection shal be a renouation, and (as it were) a new and more perfect creation, than the first in Adam; it is more than probable, that there will bee a conformity and likenesse betweene them, saining that the latter shall bee much more perfect and excellent, God then purposing to shew his extraordinarie goodnesse, mercie, wisdome and power, in aduancing the blessed estate and condition of the vessels of grace, whom he hath chosen to honour and euerlasting glory. Againe, if the Lord promiseth to his Church, euen in the state of imperfect regeneration, such a vigorous and flourishing condition, that there should be neither child nor old man amongst them, in respect of the infirmities & weaknesses of these ages, but all should bee of full and perfect strength; how much more will he confer and bestow vpon vs this vigorous perfection and strengthen our renouation & state of glorie? Finally, we know that our Saiuour Christ continued in this life to his perfect age; and before the time, wherein according to the common course of nature, his bodie should haue declined, hee laid it aside by death, and after rising againe, hee ascended with it into glory, in this perfect age. From which some not improbably do gather that seeing wee shall bee made conformable vnto our head in glorie, we shall not be vnlike him in this vigorous maturitie and perfect age; but shal, if we die in our infancy, attaine vnto that perfection and ripenes, by the seruice and power of God, which time & continuance here would haue brought vs vnto: and if wee die in old age, shall by the same diuine might, bee freed from all the infirmities thereof, and be renewed and restored againe to our perfect vigour, strength and beauty.

Vnto this symmetrie and fit proportion of all the members and parts, shall be added the other part of beautie, consisting not only in the pleasing mixture of those two liuely colours of white & red, but also in the bright shining, and glorious maiestie of the body. For if Moses mortall and earthly bodie, being but a while conuersant with God, did so participate of his glory, that his face did shine, when he returned into the congregation, so as Aaron and the people could not looke vpon him, till he had cast a vaile ouer it; how much more shal ours, being glorified, immortal, and heauenly, when they shal bee continually conuersant with God, and enjoy his glorious presence for euermore? And if our Sauiour Christ, before hee was glorified, in his temporary Transfiguration, did shine like the Sun in his glorious brightnesse, and had euen his clothes made as white as the Light, then shal we also the members of his body bee conformable to Christ our Head, and be like vnto him in this glorious quality, though not in equalitie. And this also the Scriptures plainly testifie; for so Daniel saith, that they who be wise, shall shine as the brightnesse of the firmament, and they that turne many vnto righteousnesse, shall shine as the starres for euer and euer. Which is to be vnderstood comparatiuely, namely, that these shal as much excel other of the Saints in glorious brightnesse, as the firmament the earth, or the starres the firmament: for when Christ simply speaketh of the shining brightnesse of the Saints, hee saith of them all that the iust men shal then shine as the Sunne in the Kingdome of their Father. The which glory and brightnes shal extend euen to their very garments, and robes of immortality and righteousnesse; for, as the Apostle saith, the Spouse of Christ, the Church, shall be arrayed with pure linnen and shining. To this purpose one saith, that men in the Kingdome of Heauen shal bee like vnto the Angels, not in substance, but in blessednesse; and the just shal shine like the Sunne in the Kingdome of their Father: and if the brightnesse of the body shal match the Light of the Sunne, what doe you thinke shal be the glory of the soule? Now if we further adde, that this beauty and brightnesse, shal be ioyned with great maiesty and glory, what can be added to this excellency and perfection? But herein we shal as much excel the Sunne, as a liuing, reasonable, and glorified creature excelleth another which is destitute of life, sensles and meerely natural; as which the Apostle aymeth, where he saith, that though our body be sowne in dishonour, base and contemptible, yet it is rayled in glory. The which may further appeare, if wee consider that the Scriptures in many places teach vs, that in the resurrection to this heauenly happinesse, our bodies shal be likened glorified

Body

Gen. 6. 4.

Esay 65. 20.

Credibilius accipitur & probabilius plenas ætates resurrecturos, vt reddatur numerus quod accessurum erat tempore. August. de resur. corporum serm. 4. Tom. 10. serm. 247.

Body of our Sauiour Christ, for so the Apostle telleth vs, that God hath predestinate vs to be made like to the image of his Son, that he might be the first borne of many brethren. So elsewhere he saith, that as we bear the image of the earthly Adam, such are they which are earthly; and such as is the heauenly, such are they also that are heauenly. And as we haue borne the image of the earthly, so shall we beare the image of the heauenly. And in another place he affirmeth, that we all beholding, as in a mirrour, the glory of the Lord with open face, and are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, as by the spirit of the Lord. And again he saith, that when Christ, which is our life shall appeare, we shall appeare with him in glory. But most plainly in the Epistle to the Philippians he teacheth it, that Christ Iesus shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like vnto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able to subdue all things to himself. And with him agreeth the testimony of the Apostle Iohn, as being both guided by the same Spirit; We know (saith he) that when he shall appeare, we shall be like vnto him. And as this is confirmed with plentiful testimonies, so it standeth with good reason; for seeing Iesus Christ is our Head, and we the members of his Body, decorum and comelinesse requireth, that we should be conformable & like vnto him; for ill would it beseeme a glorious Head to haue an inglorious body, and not to haue the rest of the members suteable with it in majestie and perfection. Now if we further inquire, what is the glory of the Body of Christ our Head, the Apostle Iohn (who did behold it but through these dimme spectacles of mortality) will tel vs, that his face shone as the Sun shineth in his chiefe strength, and yet this was but a glimpse of his glory, such as this blessed Apostle was capable of in this fraile condition, and could behold with his weake sight; and therefore our Sauiour himselfe further saith, that at the last iudgement, the sonne of man shall come in the glory of his Father. In comparison of whole shining brightnesse and most glorious Majesty, the Sun is but a shadow, yea grosse & palpable darknes. Seeing therefore Christ shal be like vnto his Father, & we like vnto Christ, how beautiful & glorious shal we be at the day of his blessed appearing? Now if we would know by what means our earthly bodies shal be made thus beautiful, and ful of glorious Majesty, it is by that communion which we shal haue with Christ our Head, by his Spirit, and by that communion which we shal haue with God through him. For he being ioyned to the Godhead, and we vnto him, it followeth hereupon, that as he communicateth with his Father in glory & majesty; so we also communicate with him, & by his Conformitie, haue the streames of glory and happinesse from God, who as the fountaine of all Majestie & blessednes, deriued vnto vs.

Chap. VI.

Of the felicitie and blessednesse of the whole man, bodie and soule, consisting in his freedome from euil, and fruition of good.

ANd thus haue I shadowed out the ioyes, which we shal attaine vnto in our bodies and soules seuerally, when we come into our heauenly country. Now wee are to speake of those which concerne the whole man, consisting both in our freedome from euil, and in our communication of that positiue good, and those vnspeakable ioyes which are there prepared for vs. The euils from which we shall then be deliuered, are either internall, or externall; the former are such as are inherent in our selues, and the other adherent and accidentall, from all which wee shall be freed in this day of our ful redemption. As first, we shall be deliuered from the corruption, and troublesome disorder of our turbulent affections; some whereof, being in their owne nature euill, and some vnprofitable, and of no further vse, shall be vtterly abolished, and the rest which are still necessary, shall be perfectly sanctified, and made so holy and pure, that they shall in all things be subiect to Gods will, and to the rule of holy reason, & fit and ready to serue and glorifie God. Then shall malice cease, seeing there shall be no enemie to maligne; there pining enuie shall haue no place, because our owne desires shal be fully satisfied, and we shal be as glorious and happy as we would be, and if any haue more glory than we, our ioy shal be the greater, because we shal communicate with him therein, by reason of our perfect loue. There shal be no place for scornful contempt, & proud disdaine, because euery one shal be glorious and happy, and yet haue no greater happines & glory, than euery other of the Saints shal like and approue. Neither then shall we haue any doubts, or be subiect to despaire, because all our hopes shal be fully satisfied, and wee shal haue secure assurance of Gods loue. There shal be no need of desiring, longing, & wishing, because we shall enioy all which wee can desire; and all that we can wish is, that (if it were possible) we might more glorifie God, who of his infinite grace and mercy hath thus glorified vs. There we shal not be distracted betweene hope and feare, for our hopes shal be fully satisfied, and al cause of feare shal be taken away, so that the passions of dul stupidity, pale wanneste, and trembling horror shal no more annoy vs, seeing we shal be freed from al danger of losing our heauenly happinesse, and of being circumuented by the malice of any enemy. Then shal our hearts no more be filled with anger, nor burne with desire of ciuil reuenge, seeing there shal be no euil to offend vs, nor any foe to oppose against vs; for the Lambe of God, and the Lion of the Tribe of Iuda, wil at that day haue all his and our enemies subdued and trodden vnder foot. There shal be no place for zeale, seeing we shal all alike loue God, and chearefully joyne together in his worship and seruice: not yet for pitie, seeing sinne shal be abolished both in our selues and others; there shal be no shamefastnesse, because no guiltinesse; nor no need of mercie, because there is no sense of misery. There shal be no jealousies and suspitions, because our hearts being transparent, we shal cleerely see, and be certainly assured of one anothers loue; nor contending emulation, vnlesse it be, who shal loue God best, and shew most loue, both to Christ our Head, and all our fellow-members of his glorious Body. Finally, in this heauenly joy, there shal be no place for sorrow, heauinesse, griefe and mourning, no sighing and groning, weeping and sobbing; for at that day the Lord wil a wipe away the teares from all faces and eyes, and there shal in this new Ierusalem, b the voice of weeping be no more heard, nor the voyce of crying; and because death, griefe and paine shal haue no place, the c dayes of sorrow and mourning shal then be ended. But the other affections which are of necessary vse, shal then being purified and perfited, be made seruiceable for the glorifying of God. For there we shal haue perfection of loue, and so, more affecting the World and worldly things, nor the sinful pleasures of the flesh, but consemning the one, in comparison of our heauenly excellencies, and being quite weaned and purged from the other, we shal with all our hearts, minds and soules, loue the Lord aboue all things, and his holy Saints and Angels, our Brethren, & copartners in joy, as our selues. There shall we haue perfect assurance in God, securely resting, and wholly depending vpon his loue and power for our preseruation, and the continuance of our joy; and then shal our hearts and minds be ful of holy admiration, and rauishing wonder, to see and enjoy the glorious Trinity, and the vnconceiuable pleasures of this heauenly happinesse. Then shal wee be ful of joy and gladnesse in the fruition of God, and that eternal felicitie, yea we shal triumph with joy, and with an holy boasting glory in our gladnesse. And finally, we shal then haue peaceful mindes, and ful contentment, hauing what wee wil, and not hauing what we wil not. Neither shal there at ains day be any reluctation, or repugnancie betweene our passions and affections, the one controlling the other, as they doe in this life, but then they being al subjected to holy reason, shal haue conformity, peace, and concord among themselues.

§. Sect. 1. That we shall no more be molested with our turbulent affections.

Furthermore, in these heauenly joyes wee shal be freed from all weaknesse and impotencie, and shal be indued with power and ability to doe whatsoeuer wee wil; for (as I haue said) our wils shal be perfectly conformable to Gods wil, so that we shal wil whatsoeuer he willeth, whose will and power no-thing can resist. Wee shall be freed from all sinne, not onely in respect of the guilt and punishment, but also the corruption and power of sinning. For (as one saith) here we are commanded that wee doe not sinne, there we are rewarded that we cannot sinne; here weare enjoyned not to obey our sinful concupiscence, there our reward shal be, not to haue any concupiscence vnto sinne. So elsewhere: we shal not then sinne, not only in act and deed, but not so much as in concupiscence and desire, when as we shal behold the face of God, which subdueth all concupiscence vnto euil: for so sweete is hee and beautiful, that when we see him, nothing else can delight vs; but there wee shal haue an vnsatiable satiety, without loathing, and being alwayes ful, wee shal stil hunger. Now what can be more comfortable than this, to be freed not only from sinne, but from power of sinning: to be deliuered not only from the wrath and displeasure of God, but from committing any thing which might deserue it? what can be more effectual to make vs loathe this World, and with longing desire to seeke this heauenly and holy Kingdome, and with the Apostle Paul to be dissolued, and to bee with Christ, seeing then wee shal be freed from this body of sinne, and be vnburthened of this masse and heauy load of wickednes? The sense whereof made the Apostle Paul lamentably to complaine: O wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer me from the bodie of this death; and so labour so earnestly with God by hearty prayer, that he might be freed from the buffetings of Satan, and the pricke in the flesh. Finally, as wee shal at this day be freed from sinne the cursed mother, so also from death the dreadful offspring of that wicked parent: for then being made equal with the Angels, a we shal (as our Sauiour saith) die no more, neither b shal there be there any more death, seeing c God will destroy death for euer, as the Prophet speaketh; so that it being (wallowed vp in victorie, wee may with the Apostle triumphing say, O death where is thy sting? O graue where is thy victorie? and conclude with that graceful praise of Gods mercie and goodnesse, Thanked be vnto God which hath giuen vs victorie, through Iesus Christ our Lord.

And as we shal bee deliuered from these internal euils, so also from those which are external and accidentall: as for example, we shal be freed from our painfull labors, wherein wee here spend our lines, and consume our strength; and shal obtaine eternall rest, and keepe a perpetual Sabbath vnto God: &

whereas

a Esay 25.8. Apoc. 7.17.
b Apoc. 21.4. Esay 65.19.
c Ier. 30.20.

h. Sect. 2.

sobernes in this life we cannot lawfully eate our bread, vnlesse wee earne it with the swear of our browes, nor purchase vnto our selues any thing which is good, without the coine of painfull labour: in this state of blessednes this troublesome toile shall cease, and wee shall attaine vnto whatsoeuer we can desire, with rest and quietnesse. So also in this heauenly happinesse wee shall bee freed from the societie and company of worldly wicked men, and shall no more bee corrupted and poysoned by their euill example, whileſt either wee are drawne to imitate them, or to giue some approbation to their sinnes by Word or countenance, because we would not incurre their displeasure, or lose some worldly aduantage: nor yet be offended when by their euill conuersation they dishonour God, and vex our righteous soules, making vs often to crie out with Dauid: Woe is me that I remaine in Meshech, and dwell in the tents of Kedar: for being deliuered from this sinfull World, we looke for new Heauens, and a new earth, according to Gods promise, wherein dwelleth righteousnesse, as the Apostle speaketh. Againe, as we shall be deliuered from the company, so also from the cruelty of wicked worldlings, and be no more endangered to their iniuries, oppressions, and bloody persecutions. For then we shall haue the vpper hand of all who assault vs; and triumph in victorie ouer them, who haue formerly troden vs vnder foote. Then shall our noisome prisons bee changed into a paradise of heauenly pleasures: then shall our bands and holes, be turned into most glorious and precious ornaments of joy and happinesse: then for mens railings and proud menaces, we shall haue the approbation of God, and applause of the Saints and Angels: then our reproches and disgraces shall be turned into heauenly honour, and euerlasting glorie; and for our bitter sufferings, and sore combats we shall haue a crowne of victorie, and a full recompence of reward. Furthermore, we shall then be deliuered from the cruell assaults of our spirituall enemies, and attaine vnto, after a full and finall victorie, a glorious triumph, and euerlasting peace. In this World we are exercised and turmoiled in a continuall conflict against the cruell enemies of our saluation, Satan, the World, and our owne Flesh: and sometime Amalek, sometime Israel hath the vpper hand: but then wee shall be freed from these troubles and dangers, so as we shall no more neede to feare the assaults of Satan, the allurements and persecutions of the World, nor the frailtie and treacherie of our owne flesh; neither shall they then be able to ouercome and foile vs, nor so much as to assault vs, or once by all their power and malice to disturbe our ioyes: for in the heauenly happinesse (as one saith) no friend perisheth, nor enemie entreth: and therefore the gates of this heauenly City need no shutting, because no enemie can approach vnto them. Finally, by this heauenly happinesse wee shall be exempted and freed from all miseries and afflictions, with which this mortall life is made bitter and irksome, and then (as Zophar speaketh) wee shall forget our misories, or remember them as waters that are past. For there shall be no thunder, lightnings, and earth-quakes, no stormie tempests, scorching heate, nor extremitie of cold; there shall be no nakednesse, famine, warre, or plague; no griefe for the departure of true friends, nor discontent for the treacherie and infidelitie of those which are false. But I shall not need to insist in particulars, seeing I haue already more largely expressed them; vnto which, if need were, I doubt not but euery Reader may adde a great number out of his owne feeling and experience.

In caelestibus gaudijs nullus perit amicus: nullus admittitur inimicus. August. Apocal. 21. 25. Isa 12. 26.

Beati regnum Dei ostati comparatur, quando tunc maroris nostri nubila transeunt, & vitae Dies aeternus solis claritate fulgescit. Gregor. lib. 40. Homil. Homil. 1

But as the whole man shal be freed from all euils; so also he shal be replenished with all good, and haue the fruition of those heauenly ioyes; which as they are vnconceiueable and infinite, so also they shal be endlesse and euerlasting: the former point the Apostle expresseth, where he saith, that the things which the eye hath not seene, neither eare hath heard, neither euer entered into mans heart, are which God hath prepared for them that loue him. For if this bee true of the great works of our redemption, and of the hidden mysteries of Christian religion; how much more of that greater worke of our glorification, and of those vnspeakeable and incomprehensible ioyes, which God hath prepared for his Saints and Angels? which though they be vnto vs inuisible, & in themselues infinite, yet it shal not be amisse according to the small measure of knowledge which wee haue receiued, to adde something of them: that by the consideration hereof, we may haue our affections weaned from the immoderate loue of these base and earthly vanities, and may haue our hearts so inflamed with these diuine and heauenly excellencies, that we may vse all good meanes whereby we may attaine vnto them. And that we may the better conceiue of the greatnesse of these ioyes which are in themselues vnconceiueable, and may haue some little glimpse of this glorious light, I will first set downe some reasons which may necessarily proue, that though in this place of banishment and time of ignorance, wee cannot perfectly know and distinctly expresse what these ioyes be, yet it must needs bee that they are most excellent, and afterward in some sort the description shadow out this inestimable and vnconceiueable glory, by setting downe ¶. Sect. 4. Reasons to proue that the ioyes of Heauen must needs be most excellent and blessed. 1. Cor. 2. 9.

(though but darkely) some particulars wherein their excellencie and perfection doth consist. The arguments to proue this point may bee taken from the lesse to the greater, wherein we are to vse the best things of the World, as steps whereby being raised we may obtaine some darke prospect of this glory, as it were a farre off; and as soiles to set out the better the incomparable beautie of that inualuable iewell the blessednesse of the Saints and ioyes of Heauen. For thus wee may reason and necessarily conclude, that if the Lord who is infinite in all goodnesse, wisdome and power, hath in this life prouided such a world for the good and bad together, for strangers as well as his friends, yea for Turkes, Pagans, Infidels, Atheists, blasphemers, and persecutors, who are his professed enemies, as well as his faithfull seruants and deare children; what glory and happinesse hath hee prepared for them in the world to come? If all haue in common such profits and delights, how glorious and great is that peculiar portion reserued for the Saints? If this world destinated to destruction, haue such a goodly vaulted roofe, adorned in the day with such a glorious Sunne, and in the night with the Moone, shining with such beautie and brightnesse, bespangled also with such a multitude of starres, as it were precious shining iewels and rich diamonds, and such a goodly floore as the Earth is, beautified with such variety of beasts, birds, trees, plants wholesome hearbes, & odoriferous flowers, no lesse delightfull to the sight for their admirable colours and figures, than to the smell for their pleasant and sweet sent, and watred with so many Chrystall springs and cleare streames, riuers and brookes; if wee haue here such musicke to delight the eare, the naturall melodie of sweet singing birds, and the artificiall harmonie of instruments and voices made by men; such delightful meates and drinkes to please the taste, and such soft and beautiful rayment, goodly houses, and doune lodgings to delight the feeling; such orchards, such gardens, such walkes, such groues and shades, such fields, such medowes, such iewels and such treasures, in all which Gods enemies and reprobate men haue for the most part a farre larger share, than the deare seruants of God; then how incomparably more excellent is the Kingdome of Heauen, the place of Gods owne residence, appointed to continue for euer, and purposely prepared for the holy Saints, the vessels of Gods mercie, ordained to life and glory, whom God loueth as the apple of his eye, and for whose sake hee made the world and all these creatures, and gaue his Sonne of infinite more worthinesse many millions of times, to worke the worke of their redemption and saluation? If this world, which in comparison is but a cottage, prepared, not for a lasting habitation, but for present vse, like a shed to beare off a storme, be so stately built, and so richly furnished, what shall wee thinke of the state, beautie, and glorie which is reserued for vs in our Manour and mansion houses, which are the chiefe seates of our heauenly inheritance? If the out-borders of Gods Kingdome be so rich and beautifull, how much more excellent is the Kings Court, the great Monarch of Heauen and Earth, where he chiefely sheweth his glory and Majestie? If the Lord in his rich bountie, hath appointed vnto vs a place of such profit and delight for our exile and banishment, how rich and full of all pleasures is his owne countrie, which he reserueth for his owne vse, to shew therin his owne glorious presence, & for the reward of those whom he most graceth with his fauour? If the place of our pilgrimage haue so many delights and comforts, what pleasure and contentment shall wee find in our heauenly home? If wee haue so many causes of ioy and reioycing in this valley of teares, and time of mourning for our sinnes, how shall wee triumph with ioy, and be euen rauished with delight, on our mariage day, when as all our sinnes being forgiuen, and we reconciled and restored to the fauour of God, wee shall haue the wedding betweene vs and our husband Christ solemnized, when as girding himselfe about, and making vs to sit downe at the table, he will come forth in great Majestie and glorie, and minister vnto vs at his feast; and afterwards carie vs into the bridall Chamber of rest and happinesse, that wee may eternally solace our selues with him in heauenly delights? If the World, which is but (as it were) a prison, wherein we are kept in safe custody, till we be brought forth to appeare before Gods tribunall seat at the day of iudgement, be so excellently adorned, and so richly furnished with varietie of delights, that worldly men could find in their hearts to remaine in it for euer; how excellent and absolute in all perfection, is that Kingdome which he hath prepared to be the Countrie and Citie of the Saints, and his owne Kingly palace which hee hath built to be the seat of his Majestie, and the Throne and Theater of his glorie? Finally, if there be so great varietie of profits and pleasures in this world, where the Lord would haue his elect afflicted and corrected for their faults, that they might amend them, what infinite & incomparable treasures, ioyes and delights, hath he prouided for them in Heauen, where he purposeth to reward them, to communicate vnto them the full streames of his bountie and goodnesse, to set vpon their heads crownes of glory, and to cloth and compasse them about with ioy and happinesse? Surely the ioyes of this place place are so infinit and incomprehensible, that the Apostle Paul who had sometheim reuiled onely, was so delighted, and wasn satisfied with them, that he was needfull that he should haue a pricke in the flesh, and the messenger of Satan to buffet him, that hee might not bee exalted aboue measure through the excellencie and abundance of reuelations. And therefore if Paul so triumphed in ioy, because hee had for a short time beheld that heauenly happinesse in vision only, what vnspeakeable rauishing delight shall the elect attaine vnto, who shall not onely see it, but enioy it, and that not for a short time alone, but for euer and euer.

CHAP. VII.

That in Heauen we shall abound with all happinesse, both in respect of our persons and estate. And that there are degrees of happinesse.

BVt let vs not rest alone in generalities, and onely know and beleeue, that such excellent ioyes are prepared for vs in Heauen, as doe without all comparison exceed all the pleasures and comforts which this world affoordeth; but also let vs descend to some specials, and so (according to the darke measure of knowledge which we haue in this place of ignorance) let vs shadow out, and make some rude draught of these diuine ioyes and heauenly happinesse, by setting downe some particulars, that so hauing some dim sight, and small taste of them, wee may thereby the rather bee incouraged to seeke after their full fruition. And for order sake let vs distinguish them into either those ioyes the matter whereof we shall haue within vs; or those which are grounded on such things as are with vs and about vs. And first we are to know that the image of God, which was wholy defaced and blotted out by sin, and is but in part onely repaired by regeneration in this life, shall bee perfectly renued and reformed in the life to come. For as in our first creation wee were made according to this image and similitude; so shall wee in farre greater perfection bee restored vnto this diuine beautie in our regeneration at the last day. For then in our soules shall be a liuely resemblance of the wisedome, holinesse, and righteousnesse of God, and our bodies also shall carrie some similitude of him; not in their matter and substance (for they are corporall, and hee spirituall) but in their beautie, brightnesse, and glorious Maiestie. So that euen wee shall not grope in the darkenesse of ignorance, as wee now doe, knowing little of God and his workes, as of our selues; but we shall haue a cleere knowledge of these diuine excellencies, as wee haue in part shewed, and shall more fully see downe hereafter. Thus also both in our bodies and soules we shall be throughly purged and cleansed from all filthinesse of sinne, prophanenes, and impietie, and we shall bee holy as our God is holy, not in equality of measure which is impossible, but in similitude and resemblance. For now we shall be glorious, not hauing spot or wrinkle or any such thing, but holy and without blame, as the Apostle speaketh. By reason of which puritie and holines of our natures, we shall take all our delight in the seruice of God, glorifying and praysing his holy name without ceasing for euermore. So shall wee also in this life of glory bee freed from all manner of vnrighteousnesse, and bee made throughly conformable both in our wils, affections, and actions to the most perfect will of God, which is the exact rule of all iustice, so as we shall not in the least thought and desire decline or digresse from it on the right hand or on the left. Finally, our bodies shall bee indued with diuine beautie, and haue such an excellent and heauenly Maiestie shining in them, that these glorious beames shall easily with their likenesse and resemblance, bring any that behold them to that Sunne of perfect beautie, from whom they haue receiued all their light, and these little sparkes of diuine excellencie, may guide them with their similitude to that glorious and infinite flame by which they haue beene kindled.

Ephes. 5. 27.

Secondly, wee shall be replenished with fulnesse of ioy without glutting, with satietie without loathing, and haue a perpetuall continuance of heauenly delights without cloying. For at the same time our desires shall bee satisfied, and not decreased, our wils and longing shall be accomplished, and yet continued, and wee shall still thirst, and still haue our fill; so that by enioying our desires, we shall haue contentment, and by louing and desiring that wee enioy, all loathing shall bee auoided. So Dauid saith, that in Gods presence there is fulnesse of ioy, and yet notwithstanding this fulnesse, there is at his right hand pleasures for euermore. And elsewhere, I will beholde thy face in righteousnesse, and when I awake I shall be satisfied with thy image. Vpon the occasion of which words one obiecteth, that glutting and loathing followeth satietie: and then answereth, that it is not so in this heauenly fulnes, for that there may be no griefe and vexation in the minde, desiring, they are satisfied; and lest there should bee any loathing in this fulnesse, they desire this satietie. And therefore they desire without any trouble, because satietie accompanieth their desires, and they are satiate without cloying, because their satietie is still kindled and sharpned

S. Aug. 2. That the ioyes of heauen shal fill vs without glutting, and satiate vs without loathing.

Psal. 16. 11. and 17. 15.

Gregor. Moral. lib. 18. cap. 28.

Satietas erit insatiabilis, nullum fastidium. Semper esuriemus, semper satiari cupiemus. August. de tempore, serm. 1. in 90. Tom. 10.

ned by their renued desiring. And this shall be our estate and disposition when we haue this fruition of this fountaine of life; for at the same time we shal haue a satisfied thirst, and a thirsting satietie, hauing in our thirst not the least necessitie, nor in our satietie any loathing, because being satisfied wee shall thirst, & thirsting we shal be satisfied. So that we shall haue in these heauenly ioyes an insatiable satietie, fulnesse without loathing, and alwaies hungring, wee shall alwaies bee satisfied. The which though it may seeme a riddle, yet wee may easily resolue it, if wee consider that we haue this thirsting fulnesse of ioy from the fruition of God himselfe, who being infinite in all perfection, must needs fully satisfie all those who enioy him; and because he is thus infinit there can bee no tedious cloying, or loathsome glutting, seeing they haue in him continuall and endlesse varietie of ioyes and delights; and being satisfied with the fruition of some, they see others, after which they thirst and hunger. Neither must wee thinke that they are wearie of the old, when they affect new, for this is onely incident to worldly ioyes, which being imperfect doe not bring contentment; but euen the same heauenly ioyes, at the same time, worke both satietie and thirst, because being absolute in all perfection, they giue full contentment, and contenting vs they inflame our loue, and because wee loue them, they kindle still in vs a thirsting desire, to haue still the fruition of that which wee loue no lesse dearely than deseruedly. Now furthermore hauing this pleasing satietie not onely in our appetites, affections, and desires, but also in our wils, and vnderstandings, and in all other powers and faculties of our bodies and soules, being perfectly ioyned in a bond of felicitie one with another, and with their seuerall functions and operations: there will from hence follow such full and perfect contentment vnto euery one with their owne state and condition, that none will desire to bee other than he is; nor wish to change with another, though hee haue a superiour degree in glory.

2. Sect. 3. That the ioyes of heauen shall be most excellent, in regard of the things about vs.

And this is that ioy and blessednesse which wee shall haue in respect of our owne estate, and the excellent parts and properties wherewith wee our selues shall be indued; besides which wee shall haue infinite cause of ioy and contentment in respect of that glory, excellencie, and al-sufficiencie of those things which are about vs. In regard whereof it is truly said by the holy Apostle, that the afflictions of this present time are not worthie of the glory which shall be shewed vnto vs. Rom. 8. 18. For as hee saith elsewhere, our light affliction which is but for a moment, causeth vnto vs a farre most excellent, and aeternall weight of glory: and againe, the things which eye hath not seene, neither eare hath heard, neither came into mans heart, are which God hath prepared for those that loue him. For there (as one saith) is ioy without sorrow, which causeth eternall gladnesse; there shall be all good, and shall not be any euill; there shall be whatsoeuer we will, and shall not be what we will not; there our life shal be truely vitall, sweete and louely, being eternall and eternally blessed. There shal be no assauleing enemie, nor any alluring baite of temptation, but chiefe & certaine securitie, secure tranquillitie, peacefull pleasure, pleasant happinesse, happy eternity, eternall blessednesse, the blessed Trinitie, of the Trinitie Vnitie, of the Vnitie Deity; and of this Deity a happy vision and fruition, which is the chiefe part of our Masters joy. So elsewhere hee hath this holy and heauenly meditation: What (saith he) louest thou O my body? what desirest thou O my soule? whatsoeuer it is that you loue and desire, there shall you surely finde it. If beautie delight thee, the just shall shine like the Sunne in his brightnesse; if such swiftnesse, power, and freedome of the body that nothing can hinder or resist, we shall bee like the holy Angels; if a life long and healthy, there is eternall health, and healthfull eternitie; if satietie, we shall be satisfied with Gods image when hee appeareth; if melody, there shall be a full quire of Saints and Angels singing prayses vnto God; if pleasure, God will make vs drinke of the riuer of his delights; if wisedome, we shal be taught of God; if friendship, we shall loue God more than any thing, and our neighbours as our selues; if concord, it shal bee our meate and drinke, to haue one minde and one will, because we shall all be conformable to the will of God; if power we shall be omnipotent in our will, because it is also Gods will; if wee take pleasure in honour and riches, God will make his good and faithfull Seruants rulers ouer much, and they shall bee the Sonnes of God and heires of his Kingdome: finally, if we desire true securitie, we shall be so sure that wee shall neuer lose these ioyes, as wee are sure that we would not willingly bee depriued of them; neither will our louing God, who prouided for vs these ioyes when wee were strangers and enemies, take them away from vs against our wils, being reconciled, and become his friends. In a word, so many and excellent shall these ioyes of Heauen bee, that the heart of man shall not bee able to containe and comprehend them; for wee shall haue abundant ioy and glory within vs, and round about vs; and because wee cannot compasse them, being infinite and incomprehensible, they shall inclose and compasse vs. Vnto which (as some thinke) our Sauiour in the parable alludeth; for whereas in this this World ioy is said to enter into vs, because it is not so great but that it may easily be comprehended; hee biddeth the faithfull seruant to enter into his Masters ioy, because those heauenly ioyes are so ineffable and vnconceiuable, that the Saints of God cannot containe them, but are contained, and on all sides compassed and included with them. No maruell then if these ioyes cannot in this time of ignorance and miserie bee expressed or conceiued, seeing they cannot bee comprehended when they are enioyed; hee being infinite and incomprehensible who is the chiefe cause and obiect of all our ioy. Onely they may bee darkly shadowed by some earthly similitudes and resemblances which are within the compasse of our capacitie. As for example, some compare this heauenly happinesse, to the state of such an one, as being vniuersall Monarch ouer the whole World, should enioy a long, peaceable, and prosperous raigne, without any warres, care, trouble or vexation, louing all, and being beloued of all his subiects. Or to an imaginarie addition of a King's Childe out of his mothers wombe set on the Throne of the Kingdome not according to the ordinary manner, by degrees, when he commeth to age, but assuming vnto age and soueraignetie together, and all vpon a sudden. Or as if a man should in the same houre lie in a darke and noisome dungeon, hungrie, naked, and comfortlesse, continually expecting a cruell and shamefull death, and instantly be aduanced to a Kingdome, and to the fruition of all delights which it could yeeld him. Others expresse them by making a proportionable comparison betweene the Mothers wombe, the world, and the kingdome of Heauen: namely, that this heauenly Kingdome as much exceedeth this world in glory, beauty, and variety of all delights, as the World herein excelleth the Mothers wombe: in which comparison if there bee any disproportion, it is because our heauenly ioyes being infinite and without the mixture of any miserie, doe by innumerable degrees exceed the pleasures and Maiestie of the World, more than the World exceedeth that darke and close prison of the Mothers belly.

By all which it appeareth that these heauenly ioyes bee vnspeakable, and in themselues infinite and incomprehensible, but yet in respect of vs who shall enioy them, there are (I take it) diuers degrees of them. For whereas in these heauenly ioyes there are two things to be considered, the first is the cause or obiect of this ioy and happinesse, the other the application, comprehension, and fruition of them: it is true in the former respect, one cannot bee more happy and blessed than another, because all shall inioy God, as their summum bonum, and chiefe good, and those heauenly ioyes which hee will communicate vnto them: but in respect of the other, there are diuers degrees, as one more than another is more capable and comprehensiue of this infinite goodnesse, whereby he is fitted and disposed to a more large and perfect fruition of God, and is become more blessed, because hee more inioyeth his summum bonum. Euen as diuers vessels being filled in the same sea, there is no difference in the Water wherewith they are filled, which is sufficient to fill them, though they were neuer so great: but yet one of them may hold more than another, according as they exceed in bignesse and largenesse of capacitie. And this (as I take it) is cleere enough in the Scriptures, in the twelfe of Daniel it is said, shall they that be wise shall shine as the brightnesse of the firmament, and they that turne many to righteousnesse, shall shine as the starres for euer and euer. Both which though they bee vnderstood of the same Preachers of righteousnesse which shall conuert men to the faith, and therefore there is no comparison made betweene the wise, and such as conuert others, nor betweene the brightnesse of the firmament, and the brightnesse of the starres; yet I doubt not, that in both these they are preferred before other men, who haue not that excellencie of wisedome, and fruites of their ministerie, and that is the meaning of the holy Ghost there to shew, that as they excell others in their gifts and fruitfull labours, so also they shall excell them in glory and happinesse. The Apostle also seemeth to signifie this, where he saith, there is one glorie of the Sunne, another glorie of the Moone, and another glorie of the Starres, for Starre differeth from Starre in glorie, so also is the resurrection of the dead. Against our Sauiours words appropriateth this to his Apostles as a speciall priuiledge and prerogatiue in regard of the dignitie of their office, their labours, and faithfulnesse, that they shall sit vpon twelue Thrones, iudging the twelue tribes of Israel. And the Apostle speaketh to some of a peculiar crowne laid vp for him in regard of his extraordinarie sufferings & labours. Finally, whereas the Scriptures propound not onely eternall life in generall to all the faithfull, but also speciall wages and rewards according to their workes, and that faithfull seruice which they haue done vnto God, thereby it appeareth that according to the measure of our graces and obedience in this life, wee shall haue a proportionable degree of glory in the life to come.

Vnto these reasonings may be added diuers reasons as well seeing the diuersitie of gifts in this World giue his glorie occasion of diuers and vnequall proportions of ioyes, greater, and to others a lesse measure, it is

Dan. 12. 3.

1. Cor. 15. 40. 42.

Matth. 19. 28.

2. Tim. 4. 8.

Q. 10. 5.

Diuers reasons to proue that there are diuers degrees of glory and and some obiections answered.

more than probable that he will accordingly giue vnto the Saints diuers measure and proportion of glory and felicitie, in the Kingdome of Heauen, when as hee will reward and crowne them his gifts according to his gracious and free promises. And this our Sauiour Christ seemeth to intimate in the parable where the Lord maketh his faithfull seruant, who by well vsing his ten talents had gained other ten, ruler ouer ten Cities, and according to the same proportion, another, who with his fiue talents had gained fiue more, the gouernment of fiue Cities. Againe, the punishment of the wicked and reprobate shall bee diuers in their measure and proportion, according to the qualitie of their sinnes; in which respect our Sauiour Christ saith, that it shall be easier for Sodome and Gomorrah in the day of iudgement, than for that Citie which contemned the preaching of the Gospell; and for Tyre and Sidon, than for Corazin and Bethsaida, who were not conuerted by Christs doctrine and miracles. Whereas it may be obiected, that the reason followeth not, because the wicked are punished for their sinnes, but the faithfull are not saued for their merits, but by the obedience, righteousnesse, and death of Christ, which equally appertaineth to all the faithfull; To this I answere first, that God hath not onely generally promised vnto all eternall life for the death and merits of Christ, but also that he will of his free grace and liberall bounticle reward euery one according to their workes which they haue done in the flesh, as the Apostle saith, that [illegible] Secondly, howsoeuer euerlasting life belongeth to all them who haue their part in Christ, and interest in the death and obedience of him, yet so much as these are diuersly applied by some more weakely, by others more strongly, according to the diuers measure and degree of their faith; so answerably these diuers degrees shall haue diuers rewards, and a different measure of glorie ioined vnto them; for as all the faithfull haue their part in Christ, and one and the same Sauiour equally belongeth to them all, but in respect of the application (howsoeuer he is truly applied to all) yet all apprehend him not alike, but some weakely by their little faith, and others more strongly by their full perswasion, and according to their strength of apprehension, and diuers measure of faith, bring forth proportionably good workes, godlinesse, and [illegible] and consequently all the faithfull haue [illegible] common to them all; but yet in regard that those who haue had a greater measure of faith, and other sanctifying gifts and graces on the Earth, shall answerably haue a more large and strong apprehension of these ioyes, and haue a greater and more ample capacitie to receiue and containe them, there shall bee diuers degrees of glory and happinesse. Euen as those who are at one feast or banquet, haue all the same meate and dainties set before them, but yet haue different degrees of comfort and fruition in feeding on them, according to the goodnesse or weaknesse of their stomackes; in which respect though all be equally satisfied, yet he who hath the sharper appetite, and stronger digestion, hath the largest share, and the fruition of it with most pleasure and delight. Finally, in the inchoation and beginning of our glorification, which is in this life, when as being sanctified we are endued with peace of conscience, and ioy in the holy Ghost, there are diuers degrees of grace, holinesse, and spirituall ioy and comfort, some hauing a greater, and some a lesse measure: and therefore the Lord being constant, vniforme, and immutable in his courses and proceedings, we may conclude, that hee will obserue the same tenure in accomplishing and perfecting our glorification, giuing vnto those a greater measure and higher degree of glorie and happinesse in his kingdome, who in this life had the greatest beginnings, and largest proportion of grace and sanctification. But against this is obiected the parable of the labourers in the vineyard, where all are said to haue equality of reward; and the last as well as the first to haue receiued a pennie. To which I answere, that the scope of this parable is not to shew, that there shall bee equalitie of rewards in the Kingdome of Heauen, but that God in his infinite mercy will giue vnto those who are called at the last houre euerlasting life, as well as vnto them who are first called; and therefore those who are first called, haue no cause to triumph and insult ouer those who are called last: but hereupon it followeth not, that because they haue the same kingdome, glorie, and happinesse, therefore they shall haue the same degree; seeing wee may all haue the freedome and generall priuiledges of the same Citie, and yet haue therein diuers offices and preferments. All shall haue indeed the same life, glory and happinesse, in respect of the obiect which is the Lord himselfe and the ioyes of Heauen; but all shall not (as I haue shewed) haue equall application, apprehension, and capacitie in conceiuing and comprehending of these obiects, by reason whereof one shall conceiue more ioy and happinesse than another, though all shall be full and perfectly replenished. Others obiect, that all shall haue

Luke 19.16.17.

Matth. 10.15.

Matth. 11.22.

Rom. 2.6.

2 Cor. 5.10.

1 Cor. 15.41.

Reuel. 22.12.

haue the fruition of our summum bonum and chiefest happinesse; and therefore if all haue the chiefest happinesse, none can be superiour vnto other. Vnto which the same answere serueth: for all shal equally enjoy the summum bonum, the obiect and cause of our happinesse, but not in equalitie, in respect of the application and comprehension of this infinite good and chiefe happinesse, which (as I haue said) shal bee in diuers measures and degrees.

Finally, whereas they obiect, if some haue a greater measure of joy and happinesse than others, then they shal want who haue not so much as they; and wanting shal not be full satisfied and contented, but contrariwise shal bee apt to enuy those who excel them, and to wish their owne aduancement; all which argue insufficiencie and imperfection, from which that heauenly happinesse is exempted: To this I answere, that though there be inequality of joy, yet there is sufficiency, seeing euery one shal be filled, and haue as much joy and happines as he can containe or yet desire, and consequently being fully satisfied and contented they shal not enuy any Superiour, or desire to change. For no man would desire, to haue as much powred into a greater, because it is insufficient to containe it, & being ful, the ouerplus would but spil and run ouer: and as no man, but a Glutton, being filled and satisfied at a plentiful Banquet, would enuy him selfe low because his stomacke conteineth more, and none but a foole, being of a low stature would euer desire to be apparelled in the clothes of a taller man, but rather such as are fit for his own personage: so euery Saint being filled and satisfied with a sufficient measure of glory and happinesse, is wel contented with his estate, and desireth not such a proportion as is vnmeete and vnfit for him. Againe, being fellow-members of the same Body, whereof Christ Iesus is the Head, wee shal be contents with that proportion of glory and happines, which is fit for vs in our seuerall places, as being most comely and conuenient both for the part it selfe, and for the whole Body; euen as the members of the naturall body are contented with their owne beauty, proportion, and place: because if they should be greater or lesser, higher or lower, or not themselues, but the same with others, or finally any otherwise disposed, than as they are in their own nature and creation, it were vnto them selues a deformitie, and would make the whole body monstrous, and therefore the hand or foot, desire not to be the head or eare, nor enuy vnto them their greater honour and dignity: so the members of this heauenly body, are contented with their degree, and desire to be no other, nor enuy their fellowes in glory, their greater aduancement; because all haue receiued such a measure of glory as is most conuenient & comely, both for themselues, and for the glorious perfection of the whole body; and to be higher or lower than Gods Wisdome hath disposed of them, would but deforme and disgrace the whole, and euery seuerall part. Finally, though there be inequality of glory, there can be no discontent in any, because he hath not so much, nor enuy towards another, because he hath more; seeing like the members of the same body they receiue their greater excellencie and perfection, not for themselues alone, but for the good of all their fellow-members, and of the whole Body. And moreouer, because through that perfection of loue which shall be amongst them, they shal communicate with one another in all their happinesse, rejoycing as much in their glory and felicity, as in that which they themselues haue received, therfore there can be no place to enuy or discontent.

CHAP. VIII.

That Heauen is a place most glorious; and of the blessed societie with the Saints, Angels and our Saviour Christ.

AND thus haue I (though but in darke manner) described the ioyes of heauen, both which concerne the excellent condition of our owne persons, and also those things which are about vs. Vnto which we may now adde the excellencie and glorious beautie of the place where, and of the society with whom, wee shal enioy al this happinesse. And first for the place of our happinesse; it is not the earth, aire, or firmament, wherein the starres are fixed, but the heauen of heauens, or the supreme and highest heauen, into which Christ as hee was man ascended, and so was made higher than all the visible heauens, as the Apostle speaketh; which is also that which the Apostle Paul calleth the third heauen, into which he was taken vp: Howsoeuer some think that after the resurrection, the blessed saints shal not be confined to any place, but haue the vse both of heauen and earth for their habitation, in both which they shal enioy the presence of God, and all diuine and heauenly happinesse. The which their opinion they ground vpon those places of Scripture, wherein it is not onely said, that there shal be new heauens and new earth, but also that therein shal dwel righteousnesse, that is, the holy and iust who shal haue true righteousnesse, and liue the heauenly life, & make kings & Inogers vpon the earth. But concerning this point I can affirme nothing, and glad we know this much for our ioy and comfort, that wheresoeuer the Kingdom of this

a. Sect. 8. That the Heauen of Heauens shall be the place of our happines, which is most beautifull and glorious.

Heb. 7. 26.

2. Cor. 12. 2.

a Esay 65. 17. and 66. 22. Apoc. 21. 1.

b 2. Pet. 3. 13. c Apoc. 5. 10.

this seat of blessednesse shal be, is incertainely most glorious and maiestical. Neither must we thinke that the Lord hath onely prouided for vs goodly and rich furniture, but also stately palaces and glorious mansions. For if earthly kings will haue habitations answerable to the greatnes of their maiesty, wherein they keepe their chiefe residence; then how glorious and ful of stately maiesty is this heauenly palace, which is the chiefe seat of the King of kings, where he communicateth himselfe to his chiefe nobles and courtiers, the holy Angels, and blessed Saints? But hard and impossible it is to describe in a liuely manner, the excellencie and statelinesse of this glorious mansion, and city of the saints, in al the particulars thereof; only this wee may conclude, that it is; first, of most large and almost infinite extent and circuit, seeing it is to be the seat and habitation of innumerable Saints and Angels, vnto the maiesty whereof is required that it be most ample and spatious, that they may haue liberty and roome enough. For as it is one part of the wicked's disgrace & punishment, that they shall be thrust together in a straite roome, and like stinking tares and noisome weeds bee crusht together, & tied in bundles that they may be cast into the fire: so contrariwise it is more than probable, that the seat of the blessed is most ample and spatious, that so it may bee the more glorious, stately, and magnificent. And this appeareth also by euidence of reason: for if the visible heauens be so many and innumerable degrees greater than the earth; then how much more ample and spatious is the Heauen of Heauens, which doth inclose and compasse them, as they doe the Aire and Earth? Secondly, wee may be assured that this place is most holy and pure, seeing it is the seat, not only of the holy Saints and Angels, but also of the Lord, who is holinesse it selfe. For if that place of his temporall and momentany presence, when as he appeared vnto Moses, was holy; how much more holy are the Heauens, which is the place of his continuall residence? In respect of which purity and holinesse it will not admit of any impure guest; for as it is said, no vncleane thing shall enter in thither, neither whatsoeuer worketh abomination and lies. Finally, we may be assured though we cannot describe it according to its worth and excellency, that it is a place most glorious and maiestical. For if the Tabernacle when God gaue some such visible signes of his presence, as the people in their frailty and mortality were capable of, was filled with glory; how ful of glory and maiesty is the highest Heauen, where God keepeth his chiefe residence, and manifesteth his glory and greatnesse, in a farre greater measure to his Saints and Angels, which are

Matth. 13. 30.

Exod. 33.

Apoc. 22. 27.

Exod. 40. 34.

excellency being in it selfe ineffable and vnconceiuable; the Apostle describeth according to our weake capacity, by such visible and earthly things as are most precious and glorious. And first hee saith, that this new Ierusalem and City of God, is ful of Gods glory, and her shining like vnto a stone most precious, and as a Iasper stone, cleere as chrystal: that it hath a wal great and high, and twelue gates, and at the gates twelue Angels; that it is both in length and in bredth twelue thousand furlongs; that the building of the wal of it was of Iasper, and the City of pure gold, like vnto glasse, cleere and transparent, pure and glorious: that the foundations of the wal of the City are garnished with all manner of precious stones: the first foundation of Iasper, the second of Saphire, the third of Calcedonie, the fourth of an Emerald, the fifth of a Sardonyx, the sixth of a Sardius, the seuenth of a Chrysolite, the eight of a Beryl, the ninth of a Topaz, the tenth of a Chrysoprasus, the eleuenth of a Iacynth, the twelfth of an Amethyst. That the twelue gates were twelue Pearles, and euery gate of one Pearle, and the street of the Citie pure gold, and like shining glasse. All which if it be to be vnderstood (as some would haue it) of the glory of the Church here on earth, when as Iewes and Gentiles shal be ioyned together before the comming of Christ to iudgement; it is no lesse forcible to proue that the Heauen of Heauens is a place most glorious; for if there be such glory, beautie, and maiesty in the Church militant how innumerable degrees shall it be increased and inlarged in the Church triumphant? if there be such excellency to be seene on earth, what shall we thinke of the Heauen of Heauens? And surely, if these out-eases of this Imperiall Heauen, the starry firmament, daily subiect to our view, be so glorious; How much more maiesticall is that place reserued for Gods Saints? If the roofe of our prison and earthly habitation be so curiously vaulted, and so richly garnished and bespangled with bright shining lights, and beautiful starres; what workmanship, what maiesty, and incomparable excellency may we expect in the Palace of the great King, and the heauenly habitation of the Saints and Angels? If the very porch and first entry bee so stately and glorious; how full of maiesty, beauty and glory, are the chiefe roomes, and the Presence-chamber of this great and glorious Monarch of Heauen and Earth.

Now this glory and happinesse of the place, we may adde that felicity, ioy, and contentment which wee shall take in our company; for first, we shall haue the society and fellowship of the Saints and blessed Angels; according to that of our Sauiour Christ, many shall come from the East and West, and shall sit downe with Abraham, and Isaac, and and Iacob, in the Kingdome of Heauen. And because there shal be perfect loue and charity among vs, euery one louing another as themselues, and rejoycing as much in their happines and felicity as in their own, hereof it wil come to passe that according to the innumerable number of the Saints and Angels, so infinitely shal our joyes be doubled & reflected, and that which one hath not of this glory and happinesse in himselfe, because he is not capable of it, he shal enjoy it through his perfect loue, in the rest of this holy and heauenly Society; they being mutually one to another, storehouses and treasuries of these euerlasting joyes, to keepe for their vse and comfort, that which themselues cannot containe and comprehend. So that this joy of Loue and perfect Charity, shal infinitely exceed al other heauenly ioyes which belong peculiarly vnto any one; seeing therby euery one perfectly enioyeth all the happinesse and blessednes of the whole society of the Saints and Angels, whose glory as it is most excellent, so their number numberlesse. Now if these heauenly ioyes bee so vnspeakeable and so incomprehensible in euery one, that he can scarce containe them, how shall we be ravished with ioy and delight, when wee shall communicate in the glory and happinesse of so great a multitude? And if there be such ioy and sweet content on earth, whilest two or three liuing in all prosperity, dearely loue one another, who notwithstanding loue imperfectly, and spend the least part of their time in their mutuall fellowship with their beloued friends; what infinite ioy and rejoycing shall there be, when all the saints shall be joyned in their hearts with the bond of perfect charity, and in their persons in a neere fellowship and society, neuer againe to be seperated and diuided? Neither shall heere (as in the earth) propriety vnto these spiritual ioyes, and heauenly treasures be any cause of difference, by reason that the ones hauing them, is the cause why others want them; seeing all these vnualuable riches, and vnspeakeable happinesse shal lie out in common, for the vse and comfort of all the inhabitants. And as all shal ioyntly enioy this kingdome of glory in an holy communion, so euery one shal enioy it wholly vnto himselfe; euen as the Sun serueth for the vse and benefit of the whole world; and yet euery one indued with sight inioyeth it wholly, as though no other were partner with him. And therefore because the ones hauing of this heauenly joy and blessednesse, is so farre from hindring of another, that contrariwise through that communion and perfect loue which is amongst them, euery one enioyeth another's happinesse, and so by this fellowship hath his ioyes infinitely multiplied; from hence will spring vnspeakeable joy in one another's loue, and vnconceiuable loue by reason of this joy.

But here it may bee demanded, whether in this heauenly societie, we shall know euery one their earthly friends, kindred and acquaintance. To which I answere, that it were better if we would learne to know, and to bee assured, that wee our selues shal bee happie members of this heauenly societie; for what will it profit a man to know, that the Saints shall haue this knowledge one of another, if he be ignorant of the meanes whereby he may come to be in this number? Secondly, I answere, that if this particular knowledge, which here wee so much desire would after that manner which we desire it, any whit aduance our joy and heauenly happinesse; then most certainely wee shall attaine vnto it, and shall euery man know his neere and deare friends, as wife, husband, father, mother, sisters, brethren, children, and familiar acquaintance, seeing nothing shall bee wanting to that felicitie and blessednes, which may make it perfect and compleate; & contrariwise if it will not, wee haue no reason greatly to desire it. Finally, I answere more plainely and directly, that in the heauenly ioyes, wee shall all know, and knowing so vneone another, but yet not after a carnall and worldly manner. The former point is more than probable; for being plentifully indued with Gods spirit, and hauing thereby our minds illuminated with all knowledge and spirituall wisdome, we shall bee inabled to know, not onely those who haue beene formerly of our acquaintance, but euen strangers, whom we neuer saw. For if Adam before the fall, had his mind so inlightned with wisedome and knowledge, that he knew Eue and from whence she came, at the first sight; and if the Apostles accompanying Christ in his transfiguration, and hauing but a small beginning, and a little taste of their glorification were able thereby to know Moses and Elias whom they had neuer seene: And (as some adde) if Dives (as it is in the parable) knew Abraham, and Lazarus in his bosome in so great a distance; then how much more shall they, who are perfectly glorified, and indued with all knowledge, through the illumination of Gods holy spirit, know all their friends and kindred, with whom formerly they haue beene acquainted? But yet this knowledge, both in respect of the cause and manner thereof is not worldly and carnall, neither shal we know them by their outward shape and fauour; for this is impossible, in regard of the great difference betweene a bodie mortal, and immortal, earthly and glorified, which, as I said, shal bee freed from all blemishes and imperfections, either of age or stature; nor by the helpe of our naturall memorie, which in such length of time, and great alterations, which in the meanetime shall happen, must of necessitie faile vs, but by that diuine illumination of § Sect. 3. Whether we shall in Heauen know one another.

Gen.2.23.

Matth.17.4.

Luke 16.

Gods spirit, which maketh acquaintance & strangers all alike knowne vnto vs. In both which respects, the Apostle Paul saith, that from henceforth we know no man after the flesh; yea, though we had knowne Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more. Whereby is meant, that the knowledge which we haue one of another, is not in outward and worldly respects, but diuine and spirituall, as wee know them in Christ, by the inlightning of the spirit. And the like also may be said of our loue towards them, which shall no more bee, in regard of our earthly kindred, acquaintance and friendship, all which shall be abolished, but in respect that they are the members of Iesus Christ, copartners of the same ioyes, and fellow members vnited one to another by the same spirit. Neither shall we more reioyce in the societie of our earthly kindred and acquaintance, or better loue them in these earthly respects; for this would not augment and increase, but diminish and detract both from our loue and ioy, seeing this shal be the perfection of them both, to bee towards all in the highest degree, louing and reioycing in the happinesse of euery one of God Saints, much more than the tenderest mother can loue her child, or wife her husband, and as much as they loue themselues, and reioyce in their owne happinesse. And if there bee then any difference in our loue, it shall bee in diuine and spirituall respects, euen as our loue shall bee diuine and spirituall, namely, as wee shall more loue them, who haue greatest excellency of gifts, and measure of glory, hauing a more perfect apprehension of God, and that heauenly blessednesse, and the greatest proportion of that holy spirit, which shall be the bond of our vnion, and cause of our loue.

2. Cor. 5. 16.

Q. Sect. 4. That it shall be a great part of our heauenly happinesse to enioy the company of our Sauiour Christ.

But as wee shal haue knowledge of all the blessed Saints, and louing them as our selues, shal haue great ioy in their societies so especially shal we know our Sauiour Iesus Christ louing him aboue all the rest, yea and more than wee loue our selues, and taking vnconceiuable ioy in that vnion and communion, which wee shal haue with him, in all that glory and happinesse, wherein hee shal bee farre preferred before all the sonnes of men. Of this special knowledge of Christ, himselfe speaketh. Father (saith he) I will that they which thou hast giuen me, be with mee, euen where I am, that they may behold my glory which thou hast giuen me. Yea, in this knowledge of him, he placeth a chiefe part of our heauenly happinesse, saying, that this is life eternall, to know God, and whom he hath sent Iesus Christ. Of which happinesse, holy Iob assureth himselfe, where he saith, that he was vndoubtedly sure that his Redeemer liued, but also that he should see and behold him with his bodily eyes. By which knowledge of Christ, and fellowship with him, wee shall haue inestimable ioy and comfort; for if Iohn the Baptist sprang for ioy in his mothers belly, at the presence of Christ in his first conception; if his earnest desire to see Christ in the flesh, made old Simeon wish the prolonging of his life; and hauing obteined his desire, and seene Christ his saluation, was most willing to depart in peace: if the eyes of the Disciples were blessed by Christs owne testimony, because they had seen that, which many many Prophets and Kings had desired to see, and yet could not, to wit, the Sauiour of the World clothed with our humane nature, and but in the estate of a seruant, despised of men, and contemptible in the World: And finally, if Peter, Iames, and Iohn, seeing but some smal sparkes of his glory and majestie in his transfiguration, were so rauished with delight, that setting aside all worldly desires, they wished only the continuance of this ioy; then what inestimable pleasure, comfort, and rejoycing shall we haue, when wee shall continually behold our Sauiour Christ in his glory and majesty, adorned in his Kingly attire, accompanied with his blessed Saints and Angels, and sitting at the right hand of his Father, like a triumphant Conquerour, hauing subdued and trodden vnder foot all his and our enemies? especially considering that wee shal not be bare beholders onely of his glory and happinesse, but shall communicate with him, as members of his body, in all his ioyes, and be made partakers of all his glory. O what rauishing joy shal then possesse our soules, when as we, who haue long betne contracted to our Lord and Husband, shal see that blessed time come, when we shal haue that royal marriage betweene him and vs solemnized in the presence of God and his holy Angels, and shal haue the fruition of him, and all his happines, when as wee shal not be able to determine, whether the glorious majestie, or the vnmatchable loue of our deare Husband shal exceed one the other? What delight and comfort shal we then feele, when we poore contemptible members, base, and inglorious in the world, shal be vnited to our most glorious head, Iesus Christ, and by vertue of this vnion with him, shal also be glorified, and communicate with him in all his felicity, and heauenly joy? O how shal at this day our hearts and soules bee able to containe that pleasure and delight, when wee shal haue so neere societie and fellowship with our blessed Sauiour & Redeemer, who hath loued vs so dearely, that when we were Bankrupts to Gods Iustice, he became our surtetie, and discharged our debt to the vtmost farthing? When we were enemies, he wrought our reconciliation; when we were condemned, he procured our pardō; when we were the slaues of sinne and Satan, he powerfully redeemed vs; and when we were in the state of condemnation, damnation, & the very flames of hel fire, he bringthe vs into the state of saluation, and made vs the sonnes of God, and coheires with him to all the glory and heauenly happinesse. All which he effected by humbling himselfe vnto the state of a seruant, when he enioyed with his Father al glory and Maiesty, and by suffering miseries and afflictions, hunger, wearinesse, griefe, and worldly contempt, scornings, reuilings, buffetings, scourgings, and finally, that sharpe and shameful death of the Crosse, and his Fathers heauy displeasure, much more bitter and intolerable then all the rest of his bodily sufferings. O how then shall wee rejoyce in his Loue, and in louing him againe, for all his grace and goodnesse vnto vs?

Iohn 17. 24. Verse 3.

Iob 19. 25, 27.

CHAP. IX.

Of the fruition of God, and of those vnspeakable ioyes which will arise from it.

AND thus haue I shewed what inestimable ioyes are prepared for the Saints, both in respect of the things within them; and without them; all which, though they are so great, that the heart of man cannot possibly conceiue them; yet they all but litle or nothing, in comparison of that incomprehensible joy and happinesse, which we shal haue in the fruition of God himselfe, infinite in all goodnes and perfection; whereby we shal for euer enioy his presence, behold his face and glory, and be vnited vnto him in a blessed and holy communion, that so he may become all in all. Which joy being like the author and obiect thereof, infinite and incomprehensible, it is not to bee expected, that I should in the least measure, as it is in it owne nature, expresse it; seeing in regard of its infinite perfection, the heart of man cannot conceiue the least part thereof, much lesse his tongue or pen vtter it; only I wil content my selfe to haue shadowed it out in some darke manner, and to discouer it by the light of the word, as it were a farre off, expecting the full reuelation thereof in the great day of Gods appearing. First therefore we are to know, that as God is the chiefe author and cause of all our happines, electing vs to eternal life before the world was, creating vs vnto glory and graciously affording vnto vs all the meanes of our saluation; so also he is the chief obiect, and (as it were) materiall cause, and substance, of all our ioy and happinesse. And (as one saith) it is he, both which crowneth vs with a glorious crown, & is also himself this crowne of glorie; it is he that promiseth, and who is also that which is promised, he is the rewarder, and he also is our reward. And finally, he giueth vnto vs heauenly happinesse and blessednesse, and is also this blessednesse and felicitie it selfe. And thus the Lord promiseth vnto Abraham, not onely that he would reward him greatly, but also that he himselfe would bee his exceeding great reward. And holy Dauid in many places calleth the Lord his life, his light, his glorie, his strength, his portion, and the lot of his inheritance: and finally affirmeth, that when her should appeare, hee should bee throughly satisfied with his image, because in his presence is fulnesse of ioy, and pleasures at his right hand for euermore. To which purpose one saith, that it shall bee our reward to see God, to liue with God, to liue of God, to bee with God, and to bee in God, who shall be all in all: to haue God, who is the summum bonum, and chiefe good; for where the chiefe good is, there is the chiefe happines, the chiefe pleasure, true libertie, perfect charity, eternall securitie, & secure eternity: there is true gladnes and reioycing, perfect knowledge, all fulnes, and all blessednesse; there is Peace, Piety, Goodnesse, Light, Vertue, Honesty, the ioy of conciuing Mirth, Sweetnesse, Life eternal, Glory, Prayse, Rest, Loue, and sweet Concords. And this (namely, that God is our summum bonum, and chiefe happinesse) the very Heathens themselues from time to time haue confessed and acknowledged, as it were easie to shew, had not that ornament of true Nobilitie, and excellent instrument of Gods Glory, by his learned labours shewed this at large, and saued me this labour.

Now as the Lord is our reward and the perfection of our joy and happinesse; so wee are further to know, that aboue all other rewards he is most excellent; and of all other joyes, by infinite degrees most delightfull: for whereas other joyes in Heauen exceedingly please, it is he alone that can fully content vs: whereas others are inestimable and of great worth; it is he only who is al-sufficient, and being infinite in all goodnes and perfection, doth giue vnto vs ful contentment, & cõplet happinesse. And this is that which he himselfe saith vnto Abraham; I am God al-sufficient, walke before me and be thou vpright: and hereof it is, that hauing promised in the Reuelation to him that ouercommeth, that he shall inherit all things, hee sheweth how hee shal be made thus compleate, saying, I will be his God, and he shall be my Sonne. And indeed how can hee want light, that hath this Sunne of righteousnesse still shining vpon him? How can hee lacke warmth, who is continually heated with the flames of this diuine Loue? How can he thirst, who hath this euer-springing fountain whereof all earthly streames of the water of life? And in a word, how can he want any good who enioyeth the chiefe goodnesse, in whom all vertue, knowledge, and whatsoeuer goodnesse can be named, or desired are most absolute, and in all ful

Gen.15.1. Psal.16.5,11.

Psal.17.15.

Bernard. meditat. deuot. cap.4.

Mom. de verit. relig. Christ. cap.29.

Q. Sect.2. This all ioy & happinesse accompanieth our fruition of God, as being the perfection and accomplishment of them all.

Gen.17.1.

Apoc.21.7.

fulnesse and perfection? For (as one saith) his diuine beauty the Angels wonder at, by his power the dead are raised, of his wisdome there is no number, or measure, whose Kingdome knoweth no end, whose glory cannot change, whose light so farre excelleth the Sunne, that in comparison thereof it is but darkenes; who in sweetnesse so farre exceedeth Honey, that being compared, it is as bitter as Wormwood: whose face if the damned soules could behold, they would feele no punishment, no griefe or heauinesse; whose presence would change Hel it selfe into a Paradise of pleasure and delight. Whereby it appeareth, not only that God is the chiefe and supreame cause, and object of all our felicitie and blessednes in the Kingdome of Heauen; but also that he is Al-sufficient to make vs perfectly happy, as being our summum bonum, infinite in all goodnesse and perfection. Now further wee are to know, that the fruition of this God Al-sufficient, and our chiefe and supreame good, is that which we call blessednesse, and our heauenly happinesse. Of which fruition of God, there are made three degrees, or diuers manners: First, when we enjoy God in his creatures; in them seeing and vnderstanding his wisdome, power, and goodnes, in his creating, preseruing, gouerning and disposing of all the creatures in Heauen and Earth most wisely, mightily, and graciously. To which purpose the Psalmist saith, that the Heauens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth the worke of his hands: and the Apostle Paul more plainly affirmeth, that the inuisible things of God, that is, his eternall power and Godhead, are seene in the creation of the world, being considered in his workes. Secondly, we are said to enjoy him in our selues, and that diuersly in respect of the diuers faculties of our soules, as in our vnderstandings, when they are enlightned with the beames of his wisdome, and diuine knowledge, wherby we are enabled to know him, and our selues, together with his will and workes; in our wils and desires, when he repleniseth them with perfect iustice and righteousnesse, whereby they are made conformable to his will (in which sense they are pronounced blessed, who hunger after righteousnesse, because they shall be satisfied) and inabled to refuse that which God disliketh, and to chuse that which he loueth. Finally, we enjoy him in our heart, and affections, when as louing him aboue all, and wholy depending vpon his power and goodnesse, wee attaine vnto peace and tranquillity of minde, and are replenished with all joy and delight: in which respect wee shall be most happy, when as our knowledge cannot puffe vs vp by reason of our righteousnesse, nor our righteousnesse be distastful and troublesome by reason of our joy. And lastly, we are said to enjoy God in himselfe, which of all the rest is most pleasing & delightfull; when we shal know him in his persons, nature, and attributes, not as in this life darkly, and through a glasse, but as the Apostle speaketh face to face: for this (as our Saviour saith) is eternall life to know God, and whom he hath sent Iesus Christ. Neither shal this fruition consist in a bare knowledge of God the Father, his Sonne, and holy Spirit, but in that communion which wee shall haue with them whereby they will become vnto vs all in all, as wee shall see hereafter. And that not in a party, or imperfect communion, whereby euery of the Saints should haue their share in this blessed fruition; for God is a most perfect and indiuisible essence, so that they who enjoy him, enjoy him wholy; without any sharing and diuision. For as on the earth, euery one totally enjoyeth the light of the Sunne; and as a speech made among a multitude, is not diuided by words & syllables, but is wholy & intirely receiued of all the hearers: so much more may our God whose essence is most simple, pure, indiuisible, & omnipresent, not filling one place more than another with his presence, but all alike, whether they be neere at hand, or more remote; communicate himself to be enjoyed totally & wholy, of all, & euery of the blessed Saints.

By all which is is cleare and manifest, that howsoeuer there are innumerable and inestimable ioyes in Heauen, yet the fruition of God is the chiefe, and the perfection of them all, with which alone, without all the rest wee should be most perfectly blessed, and without which, though we had all the other, our happinesse should be maimed and imperfect: for inioying God infinite in all perfection, our hearts and soules shal be fully satisfied and replenished with joy, and (as one saith) hee is too too couetous, who is not sufficed with the fruition of God; and without him, though wee had all other ioyes of Heauen and Earth, there would still remaine an emptines in the soule, which would keepe vs from full contentment, and make vs still seeke after more happinesse. Concerning the former; how can it be but there must needs bee perfection of joy, where God himselfe our chiefe goodnesse shal be enjoyed? for if the beautie of vertue, being beheld and well discerned, would (as one saith) stirre vp in vs, a wonderfull loue and admiration of it; how much more will the sight and fruition of God doe this, who is the fountaine of all vertue and goodnesse, infinite in all glory and perfection? If the Queene of Saba thought Salomons seruants happy, because they alwaies stood before him, and heard his wisdome; how much more blessed are they, who enjoy Gods presence for euermore, who being a boundlesse Ocean of wisdome, from which those little droppes distilled, can neuer be drie,

Aug. de Triplici habitac. c. 4.

Aug. de Spiritu & Anima, cap. 65.

Psal. 19. 1.

Rom. 1. 20.

Matth. 5. 6.

1. Ioan. 1. 3.

Plato.

1. King. 10.

drie, but shal continually haue riuers and fountaines of diuine prudence flowing from him? If Moses attained vnto an extraordinarie measure of ioy and happinesse, when he was admitted to see Gods hinder parts, and some small beames of his infinite glory and Maiestie; how happy and blessed shall we be, when wee shal be admitted into his glorious presence, and continually see him face to face? If we so much desire to see, and see with ioy and admiration, men who are excellent in any kind, as those who are exceeding wise, valorous, strong, beautiful, learned, or indued with some extraordinarie parts, although they bee but mained and imperfect, then how shall wee be rauished with ioy and holy wonder, when wee shall both see and enioy God himselfe, in whom all excellencies doe concurre, and that infinitely and in all fulnesse and perfection? If we could find a man in whom the graces and good parts, not only of all other men, but also of all the rest of the creatures, fully concurred, as the faith of Abraham, the piety of Dauid, the loue of Ionathan, the wisdome of Salomon, the beautie of Absalon, the strength of Sampson, the sweetnesse of odoriferous flowers, the brightnesse of the Sunne, &c. who would not admire his excellency, and thinke himselfe happy, if hee might enioy his loue and company? but all the goodnesse, beauty, excellencie, and perfection of all the creatures ioyned together, is nothing in comparison of that, which wee shal see and enioy in our all-sufficient Creator, they being all but little drops of this euer-springing fountaine, small sparkes of this great flame, and lesse than a graine of sand, in comparison of the whole Earth and Heauens: seeing he hath in him all beautie, glory, and goodnesse, which they haue but in small portions; hee hath that in all perfections, which they haue imperfectly, and in some little degree; and infinitly aboue all measure, whereas they haue it but in their measure and proportion. Whereof it is that what excellencies and good parts are attributed to the creatures (as we say in the concrete) as being properties and qualities of their nature and substance, they are all attributed vnto God in the abstract, as being his very nature it selfe, and of his essence and Being. So the creatures are called good, but the Creator goodnesse it selfe; man is said to be wise, holy, just, louing, when as he hath these graces and vertues imparted vnto him; but God is wisdome, holinesse, justice, loue, not receiuing them from any other, but hauing them eternally in his owne nature and Being. In which respect it is said, that there is none good but God, that he is only wise: that there is none holy as the Lord, for there is none besides him: because none are so in their owne nature, and from themselues; but what they haue, they haue receiued it from God. From whence we may conclude, that if there be any beautie, excellencie, goodnesse and perfection in the creatures, it is infinitely more in the Creator, from whom they first had it: for if he could without impairing of his owne excellencie and substance, impart vnto his creatures, such goodnesse, beautie, and perfection, by his sole word, making them of nothing such as they are, and enriching them with so many good parts and properties, without impouerishing himselfe, or abating any whit of his owne store; how glorious, how gracious, how beautifull and infinite in all perfection is hee in his owne nature and Essence, which wanteth nothing, though hee haue made his creatures to abound? To this purpose the author of the booke of Wisdome saith: that though they had such pleasure in the beautie of their idols (as the Sunne, Moone, and rest of the creatures) yet should they haue knowne how much more excellent he is that made them: for the first author of beautie hath created these things; or if they marueled at the power and operation of them, yet should they haue perceiued thereby, how much he that made these things is mightier: for by the greatnesse and the beauty of the creatures, the Creator being compared with them, may be considered. For if the singular parts of beautie and goodnesse, being diuided and dispersed amongst the creatures, be so louely and delightfull; then what admirable loue and delight shall we haue in the chiefe goodnesse, in whom alone they are contained, compacted, and infinitly surpassed and excelled? If life created be so pleasant, how much more is life the Creator? if health bee so sweete and comfortable, how much more is he that made health? if wisdome be louely, consisting in the knowledge of things created, how infinitely louely is that wisdome, which hath created them all of nothing? Doe wee therefore loue beautie in the creatures? wee shall see it infinitely redoubled in the Creator, from which chrystall fountaine these little drops haue flowed. Doe we loue vertue and goodnesse in men? they are infinite in the God of vertue and goodnesse. Doe we delight in wisdome? hee is the God of all wisdome and knowledge, from which great light, men haue receiued these little sparkes. Doe we desire honours, riches, and pleasures? why, he is the God of all glory, who satisfieth and filleth all with his hidden treasures, and in his presence is fulnesse of ioy, and at his right hand pleasures for euermore. In a word, whatsoeuer is good, pleasant, and desireable in all the creatures, it is conioyned and by infinite degrees surpassed in the Creatour, from whom they haue had all their excellencie, without any wisdom 13. 3.4.5.

August. Meditat. cap. 18.

Psalm 16.11.

diminution of his fulneſſe and perfection.

And thus it appeareth, that the perfection of our happineſſe conſiſteth in the fruition of our ſummum bonum, and ſupreme good, which when wee enjoy, we can want nothing, and wanting him, can neuer bee ſatisfied with all other good. For the heart and mind of man is of ſuch large capacity, that nothing can fill it but he who being infinite did firſt make it. And becauſe God alone is our ſummum bonum, and the ſupreme end of all our indeauours and deſires; therefore if wee ſhould injoy all the World, and could engroſſe all the pleaſures of Heauen and Earth, wee ſhould not reſt ſatisfied and contented, becauſe we haue not attained vnto our end, and that chiefe and ſupreme good at which wee naturally aime in our deſires. Againe, ſeeing none are bleſſed, but thoſe who are perfectly ſatisfied and contented, and none thus ſatisfied, but they who enjoy God, their ſummum bonum, who, as he freeth them from all euill, ſo alſo hee repleniſheth them with all good: therefore without this fruition of God, though we ſhould haue neuer ſo much good, yet wee ſhould not attaine vnto full happineſſe and felicity. So one ſaith, that whatſoeuer is leſſe than God, though wee ſhould receiue it for our reward, wee ſhould yet deſire more, and they who haue not their deſires ſatisfied, haue not attained vnto fulneſſe of joy. And therefore he concludeth in another place; that whatſoeuer is preſent when God is abſent, is not ſweet and comfortable; and that he did not deſire any, or all thoſe things which God hath giuen, vnleſſe hee who gaue them, giue himſelfe alſo. So that wee may ſay with Dauid: Whom haue I in Heauen but thee? and I haue deſired none in the Earth beſides thee: and conclude with him, that they are truely bleſſed, not who abound with worldly plenty and proſperity, but who haue Iehouah to be their God.

§. Sect. 4. That all the heauenly ioyes without the fruition of God could not make vs perfectly happy.

Auguſt. de cognit. vitæ vitæ. cap. 47. Quiquid nobis adeſſe præter Deum nec eſſe dixit. Nolumus omnia quæ dedit, ſi non det ſeipſum qui omnia dedit. Auguſt. in Pſal. 85. Pſa. 73. 25. Pſal. 144. 15.

CHAP. X.

Of the viſion and ſight of God, and of that communion which wee ſhall haue with him.

§. Sect. 1. Wherein the viſion of God chiefly conſiſteth, and that it is not a darke ſight, as in this life, but a cleere knowledge of him.

HAue generally ſhewed that God is the ſupreme cauſe and maine object of our heauenly happineſſe, and that as in the fruition of him conſiſteth our chiefe bleſſedneſſe; ſo without him wee can neuer attaine to true and compleate felicity. In the next place let vs ſomewhat intreate of the ſpeciall parts of this fruition; which conſiſt either in the viſion, ſight, and knowledge of God, or in that communion which wee ſhall haue with him. Concerning the former, wee are ſaid in Heauen to enjoy the viſion of God, and to ſee him, when wee haue not onely in our vnderſtanding ſuch a perfect and cleere knowledge of him, his nature, attributes, perſon, will, and workes, as the creature is capable of, but when as thus knowing him, our hearts and affections doe adhere vnto him, in moſt feruent loue, reioycing in, and prayſing him, and conforming our ſelues in all things according to his will. Neither are wee to conceiue, that this viſion is a bare and naked ſight and knowledge, but ſuch as is apprehenſiue and operatiue, both in our affections and actions. For ſo theſe words of ſenſe and knowledge doe vſually in the Scriptures ſignifie, not a bare ſight alone, and naked knowledge, whereby the obiect is apprehended in the ſenſe and mind, but alſo the operations and functions of the wil, heart, and affections, together with the effects and actions which do follow and accompanie this ſight and knowledge. So Dauid profeſſeth that hee beleeueth to ſee the goodneſſe of the Lord in the land of the liuing: that is, to haue the benefit and fruition of it. And Chriſt ſaith, that he who beleeueth not, ſhall not ſee life; and contrariwiſe, that the faithfull ſhall not ſee death; whereby is meant, that they ſhould not taſte the joy of the one, nor theſe the puniſhment of the other: and elſewhere, that his ſheepe heare his voyce, that is, beleeue and obey it, in their heart, affections, and converſation. And thus alſo we are ſaid to ſee God, and to know him, not onely when in our vnderſtandings wee conceiue ſome bare notions of his nature and attributes, but alſo when wee apprehend and receiue him into our hearts, ſoules, and affections, and injoying him, doe rejoyce in his fruition. Whereby we vnderſtand, not only what this heauenly viſion is, but alſo what is the chiefe obiect thereof, namely, the Lord himſelfe, his nature, perſons, glory and Majeſty. And this is ſignified by the ſeeing of Gods face, of which the Scriptures make mention. Thus the Pſalmiſt ſaith, I will behold thy face in righteouſneſſe, and when I awake I ſhall bee ſatisfied with thine image. So it is ſaid, that the faithfull ſhall ſee Gods face, and his name ſhall bee written in their foreheads: And the Apoſtle Iohn affirmeth, that we ſhall ſee him as he is. In this life, as wee doe receiue the firſt fruits of our glorification, ſo anſwerably we haue a viſion and ſight of God; but it is (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) darke, as though it were through a glaſſe; and that either as wee ſee the wiſedome, power, and goodneſſe of God ſhining (though dimly) in the glaſſe of the creatures, which is our naturall viſion and ſeeing of him, common vnto vs with the Gentiles and Heathens: or that ſymbolicall ſight and viſion, when as wee haue haue some small glimpse of his glory, by some signes, shadowes, and darke resemblances. In which kind Moses is said to haue seene Gods hinder parts, that is, some small signes and apparances of his glorious presence; and Esay affirmeth, that hee thus saw the Lord sitting vpon an high Throne, and lifted vp, and the lower parts thereof filled the Temple, and the Seraphims stood vpon it. Or finally, the vision of faith, whereby we see God in his Word, not only described vnto vs in his attributes and persons, but also in that liuely image of his Son, in whom the glory of the Father shined, both in his heauenly doctrine, and most powerfull miracles. In which sense Christ saith to Philip, hee that hath seene me, hath seene my Father. But in the life to come we shall see God face to face, that is, with a cleere and manifest knowledge, and not in darke glasses, shadowes, and resemblances: but as he is. Not that we shall behold him in his full quantitie which is infinite, and therefore incomprehensible, but so much as the creature is capable of; and in his nature and attributes, knowing him in his wisdome, power, goodnesse, justice and the rest (all shadowes and vailes being taken away) much more perfectly and clerely than Adam did before his fall. For as we know men by their faces, and are able thereby to distinguish them from all others: so by that sight of God, whereby wee shall with the cleere eyes of our vnderstandings know his substance, nature, and attributes, we shall be able not onely to know him in himselfe, but also to distinguish him from all the creatures. Whereby we are not to conceiue that our knowledge of God in this life, and in the life to come shall be diuers in themselues, and differing in their substance and essence, but onely in degree and excellency; for so the Apostle saith, that now we know in part, that is, imperfectly and obscurely, but then face to face. Whereby he signifieth, that this knowledge of God in this life, is a part and beginning of the other, and not of a diuers kind and different nature. And that wee know and vnderstand as children: whereby is meant, that as children haue but a weake and imperfect knowledge, whereby they do but after a childish manner conceiue of high matters, as of Kings, Empires, forraine countries, State affaires, when they heare their parents talking of them, sometimes imitating them in their words and discourses, and not cleerely vnderstanding what they say; but when they come to ripe age, they haue in substance indeed and nature, the same vnderstanding and knowledge, but in farre greater growth, perfection and excellency, euen as they haue being men, the same bodies which they had in their infancie, but much more strong and perfect. And as we see the same sunne, with the same eyes, and after the same manner, through a thicke mist or cloud, which wee doe in a cleere day, though much more obscurely and imperfectly: so shall wee with the same vnderstandings, see the same God, after the same spirituall maner in Heauen, as we doe on the Earth, but yet in respect of the measure and degree, with much more excellencie, clearenesse and perfection. For here wee see God and conceiue of the ioyes of his kingdome, after a simple, weake, and childish manner, speaking of them as we haue heard and read in the Word of our heauenly Father, and not perfectly vnderstanding what wee say, because wanting experience and perfect vnderstanding of that which wee discourse of, we are not able to comprehend it. But in the life to come we shall see God face to face, and know him as wee are knowne, that is, cleerely, experimentally, substantially, and essentially, without any darke riddles or shadowes of obscurity; without which vision and knowledge there could be no perfection of happinesse. For then alone are we truely blessed, when as wee haue our wils and all our desires throughly satisfied; but it is impossible that we should bee thus satisfied and contented, vnlesse we be filled with the diuine nature, in our vnderstandings apprehending, and with our wils, desires, and affections, louing and imbracing this most perfect substance, and diuine essence; seeing (as I haue said) their capacity is so large, that nothing but an infinite goodnesse can fill and satisfie them. Neither is it possible that our minds should bee contented and at quiet, when as we see many excellent effects, and doe not know the more excellent causes; and when as we behold and know the beautifull creatures, and are ignorant, or not throughly acquainted with the Creator himselfe, of infinite more beauty and perfection.

Pſal. 17. 15. Apoc. 22. 4. 1. Ioh. 3. 2. Rom. 8. 24.

Whereby we are not grossly to conceiue, that we shall see Gods nature and substance with our bodily eyes; for hee is spirituall and they corporall; but with the spirituall, and pure eyes of our minds and vnderstandings shall wee behold this pure, perfect and spirituall substance; neither can (as one saith) the essence of God be seene with corporall eyes, for then should he be also corporall, and visibly circumscribed in a space or place, and not incomprehensible and omni-present, but diuisible and circumscripcible: but the inuisible God is seene inuisibly, that is, by that part of our nature which is inuisible: to wit, a pure and vndefiled minde or soule. Notwithstanding though wee cannot see God effectually with our bodily eyes; yet shall we spiritually behold him in his visible creatures, in whose glorified

Sect. 2. That our vision of God shall be spirituall, and how farre forth we may beleiue to see him with our bodily eyes; and that in him we shall haue the knowledge of all diuine mysteries. August. epist. 112. Tom. 2.

glorified bodies, his glory, wisedome, and power shall cleerely shine. And though we cannot see the Deitie or diuine nature, because in its owne essence it is spirituall and inuisible, yet shall we see God, in that liuely image of his Sonne and our Sauiour Iesus Christ, who is God and-man. In which sense Iob saith, that he shall see God in his flesh, that is, Christ Iesus his redeemer, and in him, as his perfect image and liuely picture, in whom all the fulnesse of the Godhead dwelleth bodily, as the Apostle speaketh, shall wee see the Father and his Holy Spirit. And as wee cannot in this life see the substance and essence of our soules with our bodily eyes; but yet can with them behold them in the functions, operations, and actions which they exercise in the body; so though wecannot visibly and sensibly see the inuisible and incomprehensible God in his owne spiritual nature and Being; yet may wee behold him in his creatures, exercising in them his wisedome, power, and goodnesse, especially in that liuely character, and perfect paterne, his Sonne Iesus Christ. But our chiefe vision and knowledge of God shall be spirituall in our soule, minde, and vnderstanding, wherewith we shall cleerely behold Gods essence and nature, in all his attributes and perfections, and also his persons, conceiuing the great mysterie of the Trinitie, the Father, Sonne, and holy Spirit, in the Vnity of their most simple and vndiuided nature; and cleerely knowing the eternall generation of the Son by the Father, and the proceeding of the holy Spirit, and what distinction and difference there is betweene them. Then shall we know how all things in God are one and the same (except onely the relation of the persons one to another) and that there is no diuersitie of faculties, but one pure and perfect essence, nor his wisedome, goodnesse, iustice, mercy, and the rest of the attributes different the one from the other, but all one and the same in God, yea of God, as being all of his essence and Being. Then shall wee vnderstand how God is wholy euery-where, and yet without place; great without quantitie, and good without quality. Then shall we know those great mysteries of Christs two natures conioyned in the same person in the hypostaticall vnion; and of the vnion of our bodies with our head Christ, by the same Spirit dwelling in vs; whereby we become flesh of his flesh, & bone of his bones, though we be farre remote the one from the other; then shall we be acquainted with the causes of Gods eternall counsell in our election, creation, redemption, and in the gathering and gouerning of his Church, with all other his workes of wonder. Then shall wee know the spirituall substances of Angels, the nature, essence, and beginning of our owne soules; together with the hidden formes of other creatures. In a word, euery mysterie or secret whatsoeuer which is profitable, and the knowledge thereof by vs desired, shall there be vnderstood of vs; seeing blessednesse consisteth in full contentment, and wee cannot rest quiet and content, vnlesse our desires be perfectly satisfied. All which excellent and bottomlesse mysteries shall not grow stale and common vnto the Saints as soone as they haue conceiued them, but for euer remaine new and wonderfull; neither shall they procure in the beholders lesse admiration and wonder after many thousand yeeres beholding them, than at their first illumination and acquaintance with them. So that being illuminated with that diuine light of Gods holy Spirit, wee shall not onely see God, but by him his workes and creatures; and as in this life we see God in the creatures, so in the life to come, we shall see the creatures in and by God; for then he alone shall be our Sunne which shall giue vs all our light, as the holy Ghost speaketh. And as in this World wherein things are sensible, we haue our power of seeing the creatures from the benefit of the Sunne inlightning the ayre, and the obiect, that wee may behold and discerne it in; so God the intelligible Sun of the World, with the beames and light of his holy spirit, doth so illighten the minds of the blessed, that thereby they are inabled to see his owne face and essence, will, and counsels, with open and cleere view, and also his creatures and workes of wonder which hee hath made for our delight and admiration, and for his owne prayse and glory. By all which it appeareth that one of the greatest parts of our heauenly happinesse, consisteth in our vision and ioyfull knowledge of God, whereby we shall not onely know himselfe, but his creatures and workes of excellencie, in and by the light of his Spirit. So our Sauiour saith, that the pure in heart are [a] blessed, because they shall see God: and that [b] eternall life consisteth in the knowledge of God, and his Sonne Christ. So the Apostles Paul and Iohn, doe make it a chiefe part of our happinesse, that we shall [c] see God face to face, know him as we are knowne, and [d] see him as he is. And the Prophet Dauid saith, that beholding Gods face in righteousnesse, he should be [e] satisfied with his image. And hence it is that our Sauiour earnestly desiring the happinesse of his seruants, doth intreate of his Father, that those whom he had [f] giuen him might bee with him, and behold his glory. And this standeth with good reason that this vision and knowledge of God should be a chiefe and principall part of our happinesse; first, because our vnderstanding being the chiefest faculty of the chiefest part of Iob 19.27.

Col. 2.9.

Aug. de ciu. Dei lib. 22. cap. 29.

Apoc. 22.

a Matth. 5.

b Ioh. 17.

c 1. Cor. 13.

d 1. Ioh. 3.

e Psal. 17.15.

f Ioh. 17.24.

of man, it must needs bee a chiefe part of our ioy and glory to haue it satisfied and contented. But how can it be satisfied if seeing excellent effects, it doe not see the cause; and if knowing the rare workes of God, it doe not also know the workman? Againe, if there should be in Heauen no true knowledge of God, there could be no loue of him, and consequently no pleasure and delight: for howsoeuer we may loue an vnlikning, yet wee cannot loue a thing vnknowne; and if wee doe not loue it, wee take no comfort or ioy in the being of it. So that take away knowledge and take away loue and delight; and contrariwise presuppose excellencie and perfection of the obiect, and the greater our knowledge is, the greater will be our loue, the greater also our pleasure and contentment in the fruition of it.

The other part of our fruition of God, is communion with him; neither shall wee onely see and behold him in all his goodnes, glory, and Majestie, but we shall also in a most blessed manner bee vnited vnto him, and communicate with him in all his happinesse, which is the supreme end of our creation and redemption, and the very perfection of our glorification. For therefore did the Lord create vs according to his own image, and conformable to himselfe in wisedome, righteousnesse and holinesse, that he might dwell with vs, and in vs, as in his holy Temple and habitation, and that wee might haue communion with him in all his excellencies and perfections. And when this communion was dissolued and broken off by the fall of our first parents, and our sins had separated betweene our God and vs, because our bodies and soules being corrupted and defiled with sinne and wickednesse, were more fit to bee the habitations and dwelling places of the wicked and vncleane spirits, than the temples of the holy Ghost; then the Lord louing vs as his creatures ordained to glorie, with an eternall loue, and taking compassion of our miserable condition, sent his Sonne into the World to bee our Mediatour, and to repaire this communion betweene him and vs, by taking our nature vpon him, and vniting it to the diuine nature, that so it being vnited to his Deitie, and we to his Humanitie, by this mediation and bond we might be reunited vnto him, and that much more perfectly than in our first creation. So that the bond of our vnion with God is our Sauiour Christ, who being God and man, by his humane nature assumed, vniteth vs to God, and by his diuine nature assuming, vniteth God vnto vs, and by vertue of this vnion maketh vs partakers of God, and to haue communion with him in all his goodnesse and diuine excellencies, and to become againe the habitations of God, and the temples of his holy Spirit. Now the meanes whereby we are vnited vnto Christ, he becomming our Head, and we the members of his body, are not onely his Assuming of our nature, but also our receiuing of his Spirit, whereby being vnited vnto Christ, and becomming one with him, as the Head and Members of the Body are one, because they are informed with the same soule, wee are quickned thereby and doe liue the [a] life of Christ, as the Apostle speaketh. So it is said, that wee [b] are built together to bee the habitation of God by the spirit, that [c] by one spirit we are baptized into one body, that [d] he who is ioyned with the Lord, is one spirit with him; and contrariwise, that [e] hee who hath not the spirit of Christ, the same is none of his. The which communion betweene God and vs through Iesus Christ, is begun in this life, truly, though in respect of the degree, it be weake and imperfect: for as we haue receiued but the first fruites of the Spirit, so we haue but a small and weake entrance into this communion, and that by certaine inferiour meanes and instruments. For first by [baptisme] wee are outwardly and sacramentally ingrafted into the body of Christ, and after by the preaching of the Gospell, made effectuall by the inward operation of Gods holy Spirit, a liuely faith is begun in vs, whereby we apply vnto our selues Christ and all his benefits, and so haue communion and fellowship with him. The which vnion and communion is more and more confirmed by the receiuing of the Lords Supper, because by it our faith, which is on our part the bond thereof, is strengthened and increased.

But howsoeuer this communion with God and his sonne Christ, be the same in nature and substance, with that which wee haue with them in this life, yet doe they exceedingly differ in the quantitie and degree, in the inferiour meanes which God vseth to haue communion with vs, and in the bond on our part, whereby we are vnited vnto Christ. For then we hauing fulnesse of the Spirit, shall be fully and perfectly vnited vnto our Head and Sauiour, and through him vnto God; inioying him in a neere, excellent, and vnspeakeable manner. And whereas in this life God communicateth vnto vs Himselfe, his mercy, and goodnes, by inferiour meanes, and secondarie causes; as his spirituall graces, by the meanes and Ministerie of his Word and Sacraments; his temporall benefits tending to our preseruation, and the maintenance of our life, by his creatures, as meate, drinke, clothing, the sunne, ayre, earth, and the rest; after this life these inferiour causes and meanes shall cease, and God without them shall be all in all, supplying vs with all things which wee a Gal.2.20. Col.3.3.4.

b Ephe.2.22.
c 1. Cor.12.13.
d 1. Cor.6.17.
e Rom.8.9.

Q. Sect. 4.
That our communion with God shall be much more excellent and perfect than it is in this life.

can

can desire, immediatly by his owne al-sufficiencie, and perfecting our happinesse by himselfe alone, without any helpes or inferiour instruments. Finally, the bond of our vnion with Christ in this life, is a true faith, which in the life to come shall cease, and wee shall be vnited vnto him, and through him vnto God immediately by his spirit, which shall dwell in vs. And on our part, in stead of faith, wee shall be vnited vnto the blessed Trinitie, by that perfect vision and knowledge of God, it being the nature of true and effectuall knowledge, to comprehend and (as it were) to infold as much as may be the object or thing known, either receiuing it selfe, or the species and forme thereof into the mind and vnderstanding: and by that perfect loue, which wee shall haue of God the Father, his Son, and Holy Spirit, the nature whereof is, to transforme (as much as may bee) the party louing into the thing beloued, and to make all things common betweene them. Whereby we may partly, and in some darke maner vnderstand, what that diuine and holy vnion betweene God and vs shall be in the life to come: namely, a communion with God, in all his goodnesse and perfections, through the Spirit of God dwelling in vs, vniting vs first vnto Christ, and in him to God the Father; and through our knowledge and loue of God, seeing and inioying him, whereby wee shall become the habitations and Temples of the Deitie, in which it will eternally dwell, and God shall become vnto vs all in all, immediately quickning, preseruing, and glorifying vs by himselfe, without the helpe and ministerie of inferiour meanes. And of this vnion, the scriptures speake plentifully. For so the Apostle Peter saith, that wee shall be made partakers of 2. Pet. 1. 4. the diuine nature. And our Saviour Christ prayeth for all his elect, that they may bee all one, as he and his Father were one: b I b Iohn 17. 22. pray (saith he) for all that shall beleeue in me, that they all may be one, as thou O Father art in me, and I in thee, euen that they may bee also one in vs. And in this respect, they are said to be the Temples of God, in which he dwelleth. c You are (saith the A- c 2 Cor. 6. 16. postle) the temple of the liuing God; as God hath said, I will dwell among them, and walke there: I will be their God, and they shall be my people. So elsewhere he saith, d that d Ephes. 2. 22. they are built together to be the habitation of God by the spirit. And this is the voice of God from Heauen, e Behold the Taber- e Apoc. 21. 3. nacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall bee his people, and God himselfe shall bee their God with them.

§. Sect. 5. Of the excellent fruits

And this is that communion which the glorified Saints shall haue with God and our Saviour Christ, the fruits and benefits whereof are infinite and inestimable: for communicating with God, who is infinite in all perfections, in his goodnesse, glory, and excellencie, wee shall abound with all blessings which our hearts can desire, and farre aboue all which we can conceiue; for whether it be glory, riches, pleasures, beautie, loue, wisedome, or whatsoeuer other excellencies wee can conceiue, wee shall find them infinitely contained in the fountaine and treasurie of all goodnesse. Againe, being vnited vnto God, and communicating with him in the vertue and power of his holy Spirit, wee shall be quickned thereby, and liue the life of God, in puritie, eternitie, and all perfection, not in the quantitie, for God is infinite in all good, but in qualitie and similitude, according to our measure and proportion. To which purpose one saith, that, as the soule is the life of the body; so God is the life of the soule; and as the body is dead, when it hath not the soule, so the soule is dead when it wanteth God. And as the blind man is said to haue dead eyes, when they are depriued of light and sight; so the soule is dead, if it doe not inioy God, the life of blessednesse. Furthermore by vertue of this communion it commeth to passe, that God al-sufficient is vnto vs all in all, as the Apostle speaketh, that is, doth free vs from all euill, and repleniish and furnish vs with all good, which our hearts can desire, and that immediately by himselfe, and not by secondary helps, and inferiour means, as hee doth in this life. To which purpose else-where hee desireth, that the Ephesians might know the loue of Christ, which passeth Ephes. 3. 19. all knowledge, that they might be filled with all fulnesse of God. In this life, God is not thus all in all, as he will be in the life to come, partly because he vseth for the procuring of our good, many meanes and instruments by which hee worketh; and partly because hee doth not giue vnto vs all things in any excellency and perfection, in which respect it is truly said, that Gods gifts are not now all in Vincentius Lirinensis cap. 37. ad Lib. Commonit. all, but some in euery man, as Wisdome in Salomon, piety in Dauid, patience in Iob, and so in the rest; but in our heauenly happinesse, when God shall be all in all, we shall excel in all goodnes, vertue, glory and perfection. Neither shal wee then need any thing, because we shal enjoy God Al-sufficient, who wil by himselfe supply all our wants, and grant vnto vs all our wishes. So the Apostle saith, that in the heauenly Ierusalem: There shall be no Temple, for the Lord Apoc. 21. 22. God Almighty, and the Lambe shall be the Temple of it, and wee shal worship God in God: not Sunne or Moone to shine in it, for the glory of the Lord shall light it, and the Lambe shall be the light of it. And therefore wee shal no more need these worldly lights, than we need the light of a Candle, when the Sunne

Sunne shineth. We shall not need the Word and Sacraments, as meanes whereby we may more firmely be vnited vnto God; for then God will communicate himselfe vnto vs immediately without these secondary and inferiour helpes. Neither shal wee need food, apparel, sleepe, and other meanes of preseruing life, seeing God wil immediately quicken vs, by his holy Spirit dwelling in vs. Thus this shal bee the perfection of our heauenly happinesse, that God most wise, omnipotent, and All-sufficient, shal by himselfe free and preserue vs from euil, and fil, and furnish vs with all good: and though when we haue spoken neuer so much of this eternal blessednesse, wee cannot attaine vnto the excellency thereof, yet let vs know, that this is the summe of all, that God is all, as the sonne of Syrach speaketh. Finally, by our communion with God, we shal become as like vnto him, as a finite creature may resemble the infinite Creatour; like in goodnesse, like in glory, like in eternitie, and in all perfection; vnto the Apostle Paul saith, That wee shall beholde as in a mirrour, the glory of the Lord with open face, and shall be changed into the same Image from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord. And the Apostle Iohn saith, that when he shall appeare, wee shall be like vnto him, because we shall see him as he is. For as a drop of water being put into a vessel of Wine, hath it owne nature altered, and receiueth both the taste and colour of the Wine: And as Iron lying long in the fire, retayning its owne substance, receiueth the fires properties of light and heat, and becommeth like vnto it: And as the Sun-beames shining in the Ayre, doe make it bright and cleere, like the Sunne it selfe: And finally, as a glasse hauing the Sunne shining on it, receiueth in it a liuely Image of the Sunne both in figure and light: so the faithful being conderiant with God vnto all eternitie, shal be, as it were, swallowed vp of that infinite excellency; and though they retaine their owne nature and substance, yet shal they be so indued with diuine qualities, that they shal be liuely Images, and, as it were, little models of Gods infinite goodnesse, glory and perfection. And to conclude all in a word, by this communion we shal attaine vnto perfect blessednesse, wee hauing in God whatsoeuer wee desire. For (as one saith) What seekest thou elsewhere not in him? What desirest thou besides him? What pleaseth thee without him? He hath made all, he hath all, he is all. Whatsoeuer good thing thou desirest, whatsoeuer beautiful thing thou likest, whatsoeuer sweet and delightful thing thou requirest, in him thou shalt find it, and in him thou shalt enjoy it. If thou wilt reioyce, hee is joy; if thou wilt flourish, hee is the garland; if thou wilt be crowned, hee is the Crowne; if thou wilt ouercome, he is the victory; if thou desire sire power, he is omnipotent; if fortitude, he is a God of strength; if righteousnesse, he is iustice it selfe; if prudence, he is the fountaine of Wisedome; if Charitie, he is Loue; if riches, he is a treasure that can neuer faile; if thou wouldest be beautifull, hee is beautie it selfe; if thou seekest honour, he is a God of glory and majesty; if peace, he is peace eternal; if fulnesse of all good, he is an infinite and inexhaustable goodnesse, and whatsoeuer good thou canst desire, this summum bonum, and chiefe good shall replenish thee with it.

CHAP. XI.

Of our perfect loue of God, our vnseparable delight in praysing him; our perpetuall Sabbath, continuall ioy, and reioycing in the fruition of God; and of the eternitie of all this our happinesse.

BVt seeing it were infinite to stand in such particulars; because God, whom we enjoy, is infinite in all goodnesse and perfection; therefore leauing all the rest of the fruits which our communion with God will yeeld vnto vs; I will only insist in that heauenly loue, and the fruits thereof, wherwith being vnited vnto God, we shall loue him, and he vs; which is the bond of our vnion with him, and the very perfection of our happinesse. For when we shall see Gods excellencies and perfections, and communicate with him in all his happinesse, and call to minde the infinite loue wherewith he hath alwayes loued vs, chusing vs vnto life before we were, creating vs according to his owne Image vnto glory, sustaining vs by his power and prouidence from time to time, and preseruing and protecting vs in the middest of innumerable dangers; redeeming vs by giuing his onely Sonne as the price of our redemption, calling vs by his Word and Spirit, to the participation of him, and all his benefits, justifying, sanctifying, and finally, imparting vnto vs the joyes of Heauen, yea, himselfe, his glory, goodnesse, and eternall happinesse to be enjoyed of vs; then wil this exceeding loue of God inflame our hearts with loue towards him againe, fill and replenish them with infinite joy in his fruition, and make vs to take our whole delight in thinking, speaking, and doing whatsoeuer we know may be pleasing & acceptable vnto him: then shall it be our pleasure to thinke and speake of his mercies and goodnesse, to sing his prayses, and with all our might to extoll, and magnifie his beauty and excellency in himselfe, and his benefits and blessednesse communicated vnto vs: then shall not his Commandements bee grieuous vnto vs, but we shal performe them with all alacrity,

Q. Sect. 1. That we shall most perfectly loue God, and be most happy in this our loue.

joy

joy and comfort: then shall we (as one saith) haue an holy otium, and good leisure to contemplate Gods diuine excellencies, and seeing them, wee shall loue them, and louing shal prayse them. And this shal bee our end without end; for what other end haue wee, but to come to that Kingdom which hath no end? then being freed from all euill, and fully repleniſhed with all good, wee shal contemplate and behold Gods beauty and goodneſſe, which doth repleniſh and fill vs; and he shall be the end of all our desires, whom wee shal see without end, loue without loathing, and prayse without wearineſſe. Of all which loue and joy the Lord himselfe is the sole Author, efficient, object, end and fruit. For first in our creation, hee wrought in vs this faculty or affection of loue, whereby man desireth to imbrace and vnite vnto himselfe the thing beloued, that so enjoying it, he may rest contented, and rejoyce in this fruition. And that to this mayne end, that we might desire, imbrace, and be vnited with all our hearts, wils and affections, vnto himselfe our supreame good, who is infinite in all beauty and perfection, & so by this bond of loue become one with him. For as the Apoſtle saith, God is loue, and he that dwelleth in loue, dwelleth in God, and God in him. So the Lord is the efficient cause of our loue, whileſt he communicateth himselfe vnto vs, who is worthy of all loue, and with the infinite flames of his loue towards vs, doth inflame our hearts with loue towardes him: and the object likewiſe of our affection being most louely and ful of all beauty, excellency, and perfection. And finally, he is the supreme end, and from him alone haue wee all the fruit of our loue, whilest imbracing him in our harts and affections, who containeth all good and perfection, wee are fullie satisfied, repleniſhed with delight, and made thereby most happie and bleſſed. For seeing it is the nature of loue to vnite the person louing, with the thing beloued, yea, to transforme him as much as may be, into the same nature, and to adorne him with the same excellencies which it affecteth: and seeing our loue of God shal bee so perfect, that wee shall loue him with all the powers of our soules, much more ardently than we do our selues; hereof it will come to passe, that we shal much more reioyce in his glory and bleſſednes, than in our owne; and the fuller our hearts be with his loue, the more ioy shall wee haue in beholding his felicitie. As therefore wee loue God because he communicateth vnto vs heauenly happineſſe, so shal wee be most happy, because we loue him. For then are wee perfectly bleſſed, when we haue the full fruition of our summum bonum, and chiefe happineſſe, and the chiefe meanes, whereby wee imbrace and inioy it, is, when our wils desire it, and our hearts and affections are set vpon it. And as wee are thus happie and bleſſed, because wee shall perfectlie loue the Lord, so much more, because he will loue vs, both because his loue is infinite, and far beyond all degrees of comparison surpaſſing ours; and also because it is actiue, operatiue, and most powerfull to communicate vnto vs all goodneſſe and perfections; for louing our Being, he causeth vs to bee: louing vs by his grace, he communicateth grace vnto vs; louing vs vnto glory and eternall happines, he doth by this loue glorifie vs, and make vs happie. Wherein the loue of God infinitly exceedeth the loue of men: for they loue one another, because they find them worthie their loue, as being beautifull, good, vertuous, and indued with good parts; but God by his louing vs, maketh vs worthie his loue; and doth not therefore first loue vs, because wee are good, beautifull, and full of vertue, and perfection, but because he loueth vs, he imparteth vnto vs Beautie, Vertue, Goodneſſe, and all good parts, framing the object of his Loue to his owne minde, that he may eternally delight in louing of it, being fitted and made worthy of his loue and fauour.

And thus being filled with Gods loue, and through this loue repleniſhed with all joy and bleſſednesse; we shal take all our delight in prayſing and magnifying the Lord, and in speaking of his infinite Wisdome, Power, Majesty, Iuſtice, Goodneſſe, Mercy, and of the reſt of his attributes and perfections; singing continually Pſalmes of prayse & thanksgiuing to God the Father, his Sonne, and holy Spirit, for our Creation, Redemption, Glorification; because in the one he hath giuen vs our selues, in the other his Sonne, and in the laſt Himself to be enjoyed for the perfecting of our happineſſe. For as in this life we offer this seruice vnto God, because wee haue nothing else to giue vnto him for all his benefits, but the sacrifice of prayse & thanksgiuing, (neither can we render vnto him any present to shew our loue, which is more acceptable, than the lauding and magnifying of his excellencies in himselfe, and his mercy and goodneſſe towards vs) so shall wee performe this seruice vnto God eternally in the heauenly joyes, with as much more rejoycing, alacrity and comfort, as we haue a more ful sight of his glory and majesty, and a more compleat, and perfect fruition of his grace and goodneſſe. For (as one saith) God is the end of our desires, whom wee shall see without end, loue without loathing, and prayse without wearineſſe. Of which diuine and heauenly prayses wee haue some taste in the holy Scriptures: so Dauid hauing receiued the first fruits of glorification, in his assurance of Gods loue, peace of conscience, and joy in the Holy Ghost, had his heart filled with thankfulneſſe, and his mouth with thanksgiuing, taking his chiefe pleasure in re-

Auguſt. de ciuit. Dei lib. 22. cap. 30.

Auguſt. de ſpiritu & anima cap. 65.

Ipſe facit vt deſideres; ipſe eſt quod deſideratur. Cauſa diligendi Deum Deus eſt. Ipſe dat vt capiamus, ipſe creat affectionem, deſiderium ipſe conſummat. Bernard. de dilig. Deo tract.

1. Iohn 4. 16.

recording Gods mercies, and in singing his prayses; as it plentifully appeareth in the Booke of the Psalmes. So the foure and twenty Elders in the Reuelation, fall downe before God, and worship him, saying: Thou art worthy O Lord to receiue glory, and honour, and power; for thou hast created all things, and for thy wils sake they are, and haue beene created: so they are said to haue taken their Harps and golden Vials, and to haue sung this new Song in the prayse of our Sauiour, saying, Thou art worthy to take the Booke, and open the seales thereof, because thou wast killed, and hast redeemed vs to God by thy bloud, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made vs vnto our God Kings and Priest, and wee shall raigne on the earth. And with them ioyne thousand thousands of the Saints, singing and saying with a loud voice; Worthy is the Lambe that was killed, to receiue power, and riches, and wisdome, and strength, and honour, and glory, and prayse, &c. And elsewhere it is said, that a great multitude which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the Throne, and before the Lambe clothed with long white robes, and palmes in their hands, and cryed with a loud voice saying: Saluation commeth of our God, that sitteth vpon the Throne, and of the Lambe: and all the Angels stood about the Throne, and about the Elders, and the foure beasts, and they fell downe before the Throne on their faces, and worshipped God; saying, Amen, Prayse, and glory, and wisdome, and thankes, and honour, and power, and might, be vnto God for euermore. Amen. Which holy exercise (as he saith) they performe continually vnto God in his Temple day and night. And in another place hee saith, that hee heard a great voice, of a great multitude in Heauen, saying, Hallelujah saluation, and glory, and honour, and power, be to the Lord our God; for true and righteous are his iudgements. All which worship and seruice shall be performed vnto God, in, and by God, for there shal be no Temple, Ceremony, preaching of the Word, or Sacraments; for God immediately with his holy Spirit shal both incite and inable vs with all ioy to performe these duties, and hee shal be our Temple, Light, and all in all. All which actions of prayse and thankesgiuing, as they tend to the glory of God, so chiefly and principally to our owne good; for Gods glory in its owne nature and essence, being infinite and most perfect, cannot be increased by our prayses, but is only manifested to his best beloued creatures, for their owne good and glory. And as the Sunne draweth vp vapours from the Sea and other waters, not for its owne vse and benefit, but that it may cause them to distill downe in raine to water the earth, and make it fruitfull: so the Lord with the beames of his grace and holy Spirit, draweth from vs these prayses and thankesgiuings, not for his owne good, vnto which nothing can be added, but that his Saints and holy Angels by these heauenly exercises of his seruice, may haue an increase of their ioy and blessednes.

And because this shal be our continuall exercise to contemplate Gods infinite beauty, glory, and perfections, hereof it will come to passe, that wee shal keepe an eternall Sabbath, and perpetual rest vnto the Lord, for his glory and our own infinite ioy and comfort. Neither is it to be thought, that in this heauenly happinesse, we shall spend our time in slothful ease, and idle rest, which is more tedious and lothsome than the painfullest labour; but that we shal wholy rest from sin, and performe vnto God, pure and perfect seruice; and also from the fruits of sinne, as the troubles and grieuances of this life, our painful labours, wearines of body, and cares of minde; and enioy peaceable quietnesse in the vision and fruition of God, without any trouble care, or other molestation. So the Apostle Paul saith, that the Lord at his appearing, will free vs from our troubles, and giue vnto vs rest: and else-where he affirmeth, that there remayneth a rest to the people of God: for hee that is entred into his rest, hath also ceased from his owne workes, as God from his: And the Apostle Iohn telleth vs that in our heauenly happinesse, there shall bee no more sorrow, nor crying, nor pain, because God shall wipe all teares from our eyes. And this is the perfection of that rest, which our Sauiour promiseth. Take my yoke on you (saith hee) and learne of me, that I am meeke and lowly in heart, and you shall find rest to your soules. Besides, we shal rest in our wils and desires, and no more (as in this life) couet after better, or other things; because hauing attained vnto the fruition of our summum bonum, and perfection of happines, we shal be throughly, and fully satisfied, there being nothing in heauen or in earth which wee can desire more. For as in nature rest is the end of motion, and the appetite ceaseth as being satisfied, when the matter hath attained its desired forme: and as the body resteth, when it is come vnto the place vnto which it trauelled: so our soules endeauouring to obtaine those things which they loue and desire, that being thereby fully satisfied and contented, they may rest and rejoyce in their fruition, hauing attained vnto the fruition of God, and that heauenly happinesse, and infinite ioy in his presence, and being satiate without satietie with his goodnesse and perfection, doe peacefully and most ioyfully rest in this blessed communion with him.

For with this rest there shall be ioyned all peace, comfort, ioy, and rejoycing in God,

Reuel. 4. 8. 9. 10. 11.

Reuel. 5. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13.

Reuel. 7. 9. 10. 11. 12.

Reuel. 19. 1. 2.

Reuel. 21. 4.

Matth. 11. 29.

Esay 66. 23.

2. Thess. 1. 7.

Heb. 4. 9. 10.

Reuel. 21. 4.

Matth. 11. 29.

¶. Sect. 3. That wee shall keepe an eternall Sabbath vnto God.

¶ Sect. 4. That in our heauenly happines we shall haue all ioy, comfort, peace and reioycing in God.

and in the fruition of our heauenly happines, which is (as it were) the top of our perfection, and the harueſt of our glory. For as the ſight and preſence of God, is the roote of all our felicity and bleſſedneſſe, the loue and fruition of him, the body, boughes, and branches of this Tree of Life eternall; ſo this joy and gladneſſe, rejoycing and triumphing in God, our ſummum bonum, ſhal be the fruit vpon which wee ſhal feed to our euerlaſting comfort: when as ſeeing, enjoying, louing, prayſing, and reſting in him; wee ſhal take infinite pleaſure and delight in the ſight of his beauty and glory, in the taſt of his ſweetneſſe and bounty, and in the fruition of his goodneſſe and perfection. And hence it is, that our Sauiour Chriſt calleth our heauenly happineſſe by the name of joy: Enter (ſaith he) into thy Maſters ioy: and the Pſalmiſt, fulneſſe of ioy and eternall pleaſures; and that they are deſcribed by the actions of pleaſure which we vſe in this life, as eating, drinking, ſinging playing on inſtruments & ſuch like: to note vnto vs, that our ſweet repoſe in God, accompanied with all theſe joyes, comforts and delights, is the conſummation and perfection of all our happineſſe. For as in this life God hath endued man with ſuch a nature, that his will, heart and affections, embracing their loued and liked objects, hee is ſweetly affected with them, and hath his heart opened with joy, that (as much as may be) it may receiue them into it, and ſo rejoyce in their fruition; with which joy and gladneſſe the heart is cheared, the health preſerued, and the life prolonged: ſo he retayning ſtill his nature, and natural faculties, though in farre greater excellency and perfection, doth, when hee ſeeth his ſummum bonum and chiefe happineſſe, God infinite in all perfection, with his will and ſoule embrace this moſt beloued object, and hauing his heart with this heauenly Viſion, filled with all joy and gladneſſe, it doth more and more dilate and enlarge it, to make an open entrance & paſſage for this chiefe good which it moſt dearely loueth, that by a more full fruition of it, there may be ſtill greater cauſe of glorying and rejoycing. And this is that peace and infinite joy which is begunne in all the faithfull, euen in this life; when as knowing God in Chriſt, and being aſſured by faith of the pardon of our ſinnes, of our reconciliation, and recouery of his loue and fauour, by our Sauiours perfect and al-ſufficient ſatisfaction, and of thoſe future joyes which in our heauenly Country are prepared and reſerued for vs; we doe joy and rejoyce in this knowledge and aſſurance, not only when we enjoy worldly proſperity, but alſo in our greateſt afflictions and perſecutions. Neither is the joy and peace of the faithfull in earth, of a diuers kinde, and different nature to that which the Saints ſhal haue in Heauen; for the whole Kingdome of God, comprising both the Kingdome of grace, and the Kingdome of glory, is righteouſneſſe, peace, and ioy in the holy Ghoſt, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh: but the difference betweene them, is in their degree and quantity; for as the knowledge, fruition, and loue of God is weake and imperfect in this life; ſo alſo is our peace and joy; beſides that it is continually moleſted and diſturbed, with many cares, feares, and griefes, ariſing both from the things without vs, and within vs; from all which imperfections and troubles we being perfectly freed in our heauenly Country, ſhal alſo attaine vnto perfect peace, and compleate fulneſſe of joy and comfort; ſo as it ſhal not be like our worldly joy, counterfeit, outward, and mixt with griefe and ſorrow, according to the ſaying of the Wiſe man, euen in laughing the heart is ſorrowfull, and the end of that mirth is heauineſſe: but kindly, hearty, pure and ſincere, without the mixture of either griefe or miſery; not tickle and inconſtant, rejoycing and mourning almoſt with the ſame breath, but moſt conſtant and durable, permanent and continuall, being free, both from end, and all diſtraction and perturbation: not cauſed by bitter quips and biting girds, nor yet by fooliſh jeſting, and filthy ſpeaking; but ſpirituall, graue and holy, hauing a farre different roote from which it ſpringeth, namely, the fruition of God, and our heauenly happineſſe. Finally, our joyes ſhal not like the pleaſures of the World, become tedious in their vſe, and loathſome if there be not continually new variety, but ſhal conſtantly remaine ſweet and pleaſant, bringing fulneſſe without loathing, and ſatiety without tediouſneſſe. Now what ſhal be the ſubject and cauſe of this our joy, ſo infinite, and ſo endleſſe, I haue in part ſhewed, namely, becauſe we ſhal be freed from all euil, and repleniſhed with all good, hauing our minds enlightened, our wils reformed, our conſciences purged and purified, our affections ſanctified, our whole man perfectly glorified. And alſo becauſe wee ſhall enjoy the ſociety of the Angels and Saints, our fellowſhip with the Sonne of God, and our Sauiour, whoſe excellencies in himſelfe and benefits deriued to vs, we ſhall behold and admire, and admiring, againe contemplate: our communion alſo with the Spirit of God dwelling in vs; which being ſuch a Comforter, and infuſing ſuch joy into our hearts in this life, that enableth vs to endure not only with patience, but with comfort and rejoycing all troubles and tortures, afflictions, and perſecutions; with what infinite joy wil it fill vs in the world to come in the fruition of God, and all his benefits? Vnto which ſome alſo adde that exceeding joy, which the Saints ſhal haue, when they ſee Gods and their enemies trodden vnder foote, and bearing

Matth. 25. 21.

Pſal. 16. 11.

Rom. 14. 17.

Prou. 14. 13.

Rom. 5. 3.

ring deserued punishment for their sinnes, not out of the hatred of their persons, and desire of reuenge, but because God is glorified in the execution of Iustice, and in verifying his threatnings, according to that of the Psalmist: The righteous shall reioyce, when he seeth the vengeance, hee shall wash his feet in the blood of the wicked, and shall say verily there is a fruit for the righteous, doubtlesse there is a God that iudgeth the earth: an example whereof wee haue in the Saints, reioycing and praysing God, because hee had shewed his truth, and executed his righteousnesse, in the punishment and destruction of the Whore of Babylon.

All which their ioy is made most perfect and compleat, because it shal not continue onely for a time, but remayne and endure for euer and euer; for the ioy which our Sauiour will giue vnto vs, no man shal be able to take it from vs. And this is the last point which I propounded, without which all the rest were maymed & vnperfect; for though our heauenly happines werein it selfe neuer so compleat and absolute in all perfections, yet if it were not also permanent and euerlasting, and infinite in time, as well as incomprehensible in quantitie, we could not be said to be perfectly happy, and truly blessed. For though we were sure they should continue many hundred thousand of yeeres, yet if wee also knew, that they would then end and leaue vs, wee should be as much discontented, that the time would come when as wee should be depriued of them, as comforted in their present fruition; yea, the greater and more excellent our ioyes should be whilest wee haue them, the greater would in this respect our sorrow & griefe be, to thinke that we should once be dispoyled of them; whereas now finding them for the present infinite, and in respect of the time to come endlesse, nothing can be added to their perfection. But the eternity of these ioyes may as cleerely be proued out of the holy Scriptures, as their vnconceiueable excellency. So the Psalmist saith, that in Gods a presence is fulnesse of ioy, and at his right hand pleasures for euermore. And our Sauiour promiseth, that they who b eate of the bread of life shall liue for euer: and saith, that it is c life eternall to know God and his Sonne Christ. And in this the Apostle maketh an opposition betweene the things of this life, & the life to come; In that the d world passeth away, and the lusts thereof: but hee that fulfilleth the will of God abideth euer. So the Kingdome of glory is said to be so constant and permanent that it cannot be shaken, and hath the Epithete of eternity, oftentimes attributed vnto it: thus it is called e eternall glory, vnto which the God of all grace hath called vs by Iesus Christ; and an f eternall inheritance, which can neuer fade nor perish. So the Apostle saith, that g Christ was appointed to bee our mediatour, that through his death those which are called, might receiue the promise of an eternall inheritance. And the Apostle Peter telleth vs, that we haue h an inheritance, immortall, and vndefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserued in Heauen for vs. And in this respect the estate of the faithfull, is by the Psalmist made much more excellent than the state of the wicked; that whereas these with all their power and might shall bee quite ruitied and ouerthrowne, the just are vpholden by God, and shall haue an i inheritance which shall be perpetuall. Finally, the Kingdome of our Sauiour Christ is said to be eternall and consequently his subjects ouer whom he raigneth must liue eternally with him: and lest wee should thinke that hee continuing in his regencie, may make choice of other subjects, they also are specified to be the house of Iacob, that is, his Church, and faithfull, the true posterity of Abraham according to the promise. For so the Angell of God saith vnto the blessed virgin: k He shall reigne ouer the house of Iacob for euer, and of his Kingdome shall be no end. And to put the matter out of all doubt, that wee also shall reigne with him; it is not onely said in the Scriptures, that wee shall be l incorruptible and immortall; but more precisely, that wee m shall reigne in this Kingdome of glory for euermore. Foolish therefore is the dreame and dotage of those Heretiques, who imagined that this heauenly glory and happinesse should continue but a thousand yeeres; seeing the Scriptures so plentifully proue, that they shall bee endlesse and euerlasting. And as weake and feeble is their ground and foundation, whereupon they build their vaine opinion; namely, because it is said in the Reuelation, that the faithfull shall reigne with God and our Sauiour Christ a thousand yeeres: which is not to be vnderstood of the Kingdome of glory in Heauen, but of the Kingdome of grace in Earth, as the words immediately going before, specially limiting it to the first resurrection, which is our regeneration, whereby in this world we rise from the death of sinne, to holinesse and newnesse of life, doe plainely shew. So that notwithstanding their foolish and vngrounded assertion wee may conclude, that as the ioyes of Heauen are in their quantity and quality most excellent and vnspeakeable, infinite and incomprehensible; so also in respect of time they are endlesse and euerlasting, not onely in themselues, but also vnto vs, seeing they shall neuer bee taken from vs, nor we from them; but after many thousand millions of yeeres expired, they shall be as far from their end as the first day when wee entred into them. For otherwise wee should not attaine vnto perfect felicity, and compleat blessednesse, which the Scrip-

a Psal.16.11.
b Ioh.6.58.
c Ioh.17.3.
d 1.Ioh.2.17.
e 1.Pet.5.10.
f Heb.9.15.
g Heb.9.15.
h 1.Pet.1.4.
i Psal.37.27,28
k Luke 1.33. Dan.7.27.
l 1.Cor.15.53. 2.Tim.1.10.
m Apoc.22.5.

tures so often doe promise vnto vs; seeing it comprehendeth not only an infinite quantitie and measure of happinesse, but also an euerlasting time, and a perpetuall continuance of this glory and felicity, without the assurance whereof wee could neuer bee secure, nor our hearts and desires fully satisfied, and without which securitie and satietie there can bee no perfect blessednesse and felicitie.

CHAP. XII.

Of the vses of the former doctrine concerning the ioyes of Heauen.

Sect. 1. That we should spend our time rather in getting assurance of these heauenly ioyes, then in curious inquiring after them. 1. Cor. 2. 9.

AND thus haue I darkely shadowed out the ioyes of Heauen, which no mortall man can describe according to their glory & full perfections: for as the Apostle hath taught vs, the things which God hath prepared for all those that loue him, are such, as neither eye hath seene, nor eare hath heard, nor hart conceiued. And as another saith, so innumerable & incomprehensible be these euerlasting ioyes of Gods Kingdome, that all the Arithmeticians in the world cannot sufficiently number thē, nor Geometricians measure them; not all the Grammarians, Logicians, and Rhetoricians, to the full expresse them. That therefore you may somewhat supply that wherein the former discription is defectiue, call to mind all those ioyes which you haue euer seene, and say with your selues, that they are not these, but farre greater, because your eyes haue beheld them. Recall to your memories all those delights and comforts, which you haue euer beene told of, and then withall thinke that they are not these, but much more excellent, because your eares haue heard them; yea faine in your imaginations, whatsoeuer glory and happinesse your mind can conceiue and comprehend, and conclude with ioy, that they are not these, but much more admirable and incomprehensible, because your heart and soule hath beene able to conceiue them; seeing the Apostle hath plainely told vs, that these heauenly ioyes are so infinite, and farre aboue all humane reach, that neither the eye, eare, nor heart, haue seene, heard, or conceiued the least part of this diuine glory, and surpassing excellencie. And therefore seeing they cannot perfectly be known before they be enioyed, let vs not (as many doe) spend our time in curious questions, and busie our selues in searching what is done in Heauen, and what are the particular degrees of euery ones glory, neglecting in the meane time the way which should bring vs vnto this happinesse; but considering that this Kingdome is a garland and crowne of glory, which none obtaine but they who runne a race; let vs not foolishly stand still and loiter, enquiring after those hidden and vnknowne iewels, wherewith this crowne is enriched and adorned; but let vs first runne this race, that wee may be assured that wee shall obtaine it, and then shall wee haue time and leasure enough to consider of its worth and excellency. Now is the time wherein we must striue against the enemies of our saluation, that hauing the victorie, wee may receiue the crowne of glory; and as the Apostle saith, if any man striue for a masterie, he is not crowned except hee striue as he ought to doe. Now is our seed time, & hereafter shal be our haruest of happinesse, &(as in the same place he telleth vs) the husbandman must labour before hee receiue the fruits. And that we may not deceiue our selues in thinking that we shall find it an easie passage to flesh and bloud, and that we may with small paines and trouble come to the end of our iourney; let vs consider that the enemies of our saluation are not few and feeble, but many and potent, euen principalities, powers, gouernours and great Princes, as the Apostle calleth them; who are not easily ouercome, vnlesse we be armed with the spirituall armour, and fight couragiously vnto the end: and that our way to Heauen is not by a faire and pleasant Sea, vpon which wee might saile, though we spend our time in sleeping, and attaine vnto the hauen by other mens labours before wee are aware; but a iourney by land; and that the way which wee trauell, is not champion, and delightfull to the old Adam, but (as our Sauiour calleth it) a narrow and afflicted path, in it selfe rough, and full of rubs, and beset on all sides with the thornes of afflictions, and briars of tribulations, which are likely to discourage vs that wee will not, or hinder vs that wee cannot goe forward to our iourneyes end, vnlesse ;wee breake through them with a magnanimous spirit, and Christian resolution. The gate which entreth into this heauenly Paradise, is (as Christ also telleth vs) so straite and vneasie for entrance, that we must striue (if we will haue any passage) to enter into it; and that not according to our owne superstitions, but Gods direction; for as much as he saith in another place: many shall seeke to enter in, but shall not be able. And (as the Apostle speaketh) if the righteous be scarcely saued; that is, not without great paines and difficultie, where shall the vngodly and sinner appeare?

But yet let not this labour and vneasie passage discourage and hinder vs from entring or going forward in this difficult and afflicted way, seeing if wee take the paines which God hath prescribed, we shall most certainly obtaine the reward; and when we enioy

1. Cor. 14. 24.

2. Tim. 2. 5.

Eph. 6. 12.

Mat. 7. 13. Act. 14. 22. 2. Tim. 3. 12.

Luke 13. 24. 1. Pet. 4. 18.

Sect. That the ... in ... ning the ... of Heauen ... should ... courage ...

enioy it, we shall be sure to finde it worth our labour: for the Apostle telleth vs, that the afflictions of this present life are not worthy the glory which shall bee reuealed in vs; because (as elsewhere he speaketh) these light and momentanie afflictions, shall cause vnto vs farre most excellent, and an eternall weight of glory. Yea rather let vs with great courage and resolution, passe through all dangers, and endure all paines and labour, that we may attaine vnto this eternall rest and glorious Kingdome. For if men for the obtaining of a corruptible crowne, are content to oppresse themselues with cares, to endure all labours, to run a thousand desperate courses, and euen to hazard their owne soules; yea, if they bee willing, for the smallest preferments and profits of a Kingdome, to trauell by Sea and Land, to spend their strength, and consume their bodies, and to indanger themselues daily to many deaths, though (as I haue shewed) they are but of small worth, and lesse certaintie for their continuance; what cares, dangers, and labours should wee thinke too much for the obtaining of a crowne, which is most glorious and incorruptible, and a Kingdome without end? But yet alas, such is either the great infidelitie of men, that they doe not beleeue these things, though God who is truth it selfe doe promise them; or their negligence, that they neuer so much as thinke and meditate vpon them; or their securitie and presumption, that they hope to obtaine this Kingdome whether they seeke it or no; or finally, such is their prophanenesse and carnall folly, that they esteeme these earthly and momentanie trifles, vaine honours, vncertaine riches, and brutish pleasures, more than these vnspeakable ioyes and euerlasting glory. For that they stand thus affected, it may plainly appeare by their practise and our daily experience. For whereas if any man of credit should promise vnto them, I will not say a Kingdome, but some small profit, pleasure, or preferment, vpon condition that they will take some paines in suing and seeking to obtaine it; how readily and earnestly will they become seekers and suters, that they may inrich themselues with these earthly benefits? But when Christ the eternall verity, who neuer failed of his Word, offereth this heauenly Kingdome of his free grace, as a reward of their paines, if they will labour to obtaine it; how little doe they regard it? how slowly doe they seeke it? thereby shewing manifestly that either they doe not beleeue Gods promise, or doe so basely esteeme the thing promised, that they preferre liuing in these worldly trifles and worthlesse vanities. If an earthly King should promise to his subiect some great honourable and high preferment, on this condition, that hee shew himselfe dutifull and obedient, in performing some of his lawfull commandements; with how great care and diligence would hee yeeld obedience? and how much more if hee should promise, yea and confirme it by his hand, seale, and Oath, that he would adopt him for his Sonne, and make him heire apparant of his Kingdome? But when God thus promiseth his heauenly benefits, and offereth vnto vs his Kingdome of glory, and to make vs heires of this eternall inheritance, if wee will bestow any paines in seeking of it; how few are the number that regard his promises, or bestow any labour in attaining to this assurance? and yet there is great difference, both in respect of the persons promising, and the things promised. For a King being mortall, and mutable, may either die, and so cannot; or change his minde vpon some displeasure, and so will not performe his promise, or though neither of these fall out, hee may die to whom the promise is made, before him that made it, and so neuer come to inherit the Kingdome: But God is immortall and immutable, and as he cannot die, so he cannot be changed, and therefore will most certainely performe his promise, if wee performe the condition of our dutie and obedience. And againe, there is great difference betweene the things promised, euen as great, as betweene Heauen and Earth, a substance and a shadow, momentany pleasure, and euerlasting ioy, betweene a flitting and fading Kingdome, incumbred with many crosses and afflictions, and a Kingdome absolute in all perfection, infinite, endlesse, replenished with all glory, ioy and riches, and obnoxious to no trouble and incumbrance.

Q. Sect. 3. Of the meanes whereby wee may be assured to attaine vnto our heauenly ioyes.

But let vs, who haue seene some small shadow and resemblance of this heauenly happinesse, and most perfect glory, auoid, and not suffer our selues to be carried away with this common streame of worldly dotage; but as farre as we see the eternall ioyes of Heauen, to exceed the momentanie pleasures which are in Earth, so much let our loue, care, and paines exceed in desiring and seeking to obtaine them. And that wee may not spend our paines in the trauelling of a wrong way, and so in the end complaine that we haue laboured in vaine, let vs make choice of that onely way Iesus Christ, desiring to bee true members ingrafted into his glorious body by a liuely faith, that so in him we may be the Sonnes of God, and the adopted heires of his glorious Kingdome. Let vs adioyne our selues to the Kingdome of grace, professing our subiection vnto God, and communicating with the rest of the Saints in the exercises of the true religion; as calling vpon God, hearing his Word, receiuing his Sacraments, and submitting our selues to be ordred and ruled by the outward discipline and gouernment of the Church. Yea we must not onely outwardly professe our selues the subiects and seruants of God, but wee must also liue like his subiects in obedience to his will and word. Matth. 15.8. For in vaine doe wee draw neere vnto God with our lips, if our hearts be farre from him; in vaine wee heare the Word, vnlesse wee obey it; in vaine doe wee receiue the Sacraments without hand and mouth, vnlesse we also receiue, and apply Christ vnto vs with a true faith, and shew the vigour and vertue of this holy vnion in our vnfained repentance, dying vnto sinne, and rising againe to newnesse of life; in vaine doe wee submit our selues to the outward gouernment of the Church, vnlesse also Christ doe inwardly raigne and rule in vs by the scepter of his Word and Holy Spirit: finally, in vaine doe we professe our selues Gods subiects and seruants, if wee liue like the seruants of sin, and slaues of Satan. Whereas contrariwise, if wee so liue in holy obedience to Gods will, with faith and a good conscience, as wee may bee assured thereby, that wee are true members of the Kingdome of grace, wee may also be ascertained, that wee shall bee heires of the Kingdome of glory, this being the Porch or suburbs whereby we enter into our heauenly mansions, and the new Ierusalem, the Citie of God. In a word, if euer wee thinke to raigne triumphantly in the Kingdome of Heauen, and to haue our portion and share in that eternall glorie; wee must haue the Kingdome of God begun in vs in this life, and be replenished with the gifts and graces of his holy Spirit: for as the Apostle teacheth vs, a the Kingdome of God is righteousnesse, and peace, and ioy in the Holy Ghost. If wee meane to haue Christ Iesus liuing in vs vnto glory, we must liue in him vnto grace and holinesse; so as wee may say with the Apostle, that b we liue no more now, but Christ liueth in vs, and in that we now liue in the flesh, we liue by the faith in the Son of God; for there is none shall eternally liue in Heauen, in whom life eternall is not begun on Earth, because none shall be saued but they who haue faith; and he that c beleeueth hath euerlasting life, and hath passed from death to life already, as our Sauiour speaketh. Finally, if we would haue any hope to liue that life of glory and happinesse, wee must first liue the life of grace and holinesse. If wee would bee d satisfied with Gods image, we must behold his face in righteousnesse; if we would be e partakers of Gods goodnesse in the World to come, wee must in this life be indued with his feare; if wee would haue the fruition of God f al-sufficient, we must walke before him and be vpright. If we would ascend into the g mountaine of the Lord, and stand in the place of his holinesse, we must haue innocent hands, and a pure heart; and find in our selues conformitie with that excellent description, which the Lord himselfe maketh vnto the Psalmist, of an heauenly inhabitant; if we would not let the h second death take hold of vs, but contrariwise attaine vnto heauenly blessednesse, wee must haue our part in the first resurrection; and to conclude this point, if we would be like our Saviour Christ when he appeareth, and would i see God as he is, whose vision, as I haue shewed, is our chiefe felicitie, wee must, as the Apostle telleth vs, purge our selues, euen as hee is pure; for without holinesse wee shall neuer see God: and if we remaine in our vncleanesse, and pollution of sinne, wee shall neuer find entrance into the k City of God, nor bee admitted as inhabitants of the Kingdome of Heauen, which as much excelleth in puritie and perfection, as in glory, happinesse, and vnspeakeable ioyes.

Iohn 4. 6.

And thus haue I, through the gracious assistance of Gods Holy Spirit, finished this part also of the Christian Warfare, wherein I haue indeauoured to arme euery man against the tentations of worldly prosperitie, by shewing and proouing that the world and worldly things are base and contemptible, and not worthy any loue and esteeme, in comparison of Gods spirituall graces and heauenly ioyes. For if these earthly things which carnall worldlings doe so much affect, bee vaine and worthlesse, and Gods spirituall graces, and heauenly ioyes bee most excellent and precious; they vnprofitable euen in this life, and these most beneficiall both in this life, and the life to come; if they in themselues are miserable comforters, and bring many other miseries attending on them, and these most sweete and delightfull, without the mixture of any euill; if they be vncertaine to be gotten by those who loue them, and fugitiue to those who most runne after them, and these most assuredly obtained by those who desire them, and vse the meanes whereby they may injoy them; if they be as vncertaine in their possession, as in their pursuit, being euery day ready to leaue their owners, or their owners to leaue them, and these most constant, permanent & eternall: finally, if they through our corruption abusing them, doe so much hurt vs, being the causes, occasions, and instruments of so manifold euils; and these so much benefit vs, adorning vs with all glory, inriching vs with all good, replenishing vs, both in our soules and bodies with all ioyes, pleasures and delights, and making vs in all respects truly happy, and eternally blessed: what doting folly and franticke madnesse is it, either in our iudgements or affections, to preferre the worlds base, worthlesse and momentany trifles, before a Rom. 14.17.

b Gal. 2.20.
c Ioh. 5.24.
d Psal. 17.15.
e Psal. 31.19.
f Gen. 17.1.
g Psal. 15.1.2.3. & 24.3.4.
h Apoc.
i 1. Ioh.
k Apoc.

fore these inestimable iewels, and heauenly treasures? Wee account him a Childe or a foole, who will preferre a counter before a Kingdome, a shadow before a substance, and euery base trifle, before his patrimonie and inheritance: and wee both wonder and laugh at the simplicitie of the barbarous nations, who will exchange their gold and pearles, for a knife or glasse; but how much more absurd and ridiculous is their folly and madnesse, who preferre Earth before Heauen, Mammon before God, and the vaine pleasures of sin, which last but for a season, before the Kingdome of glory, and those vnspeakeable ioyes which shall neuer end? Let vs therefore beware of this worldly frensie; and seeing we professe the name of Christ, and boast our selues of our heauenly hopes, as though wee were assured of them, and expected eternall Crownes and Kingdomes, let vs bee ashamed that our practice should bewray our iudgements and affections, manifestly shewing by our neglect of things spirituall and eternall, and by our earnest and incessant seeking of things momentany and temporall, that wee more esteeme Earth than Heauen, and desire more the short possession of these worldly vanities, than the euerlasting fruition of God himselfe, and those glorious ioyes of his heauenly Kingdome. We know that those who haue fed on dainties, doe loath the taste of grosser meates; and that when the Sunne shineth vpon the fire, it maketh the light thereof like vnto a painted colour, and much abateth of its heate, if it doe not quite extinguish it: and so let vs who haue tasted how good God is, and the most delicate sweetnesse of those heauenly ioyes, learne to loath the swinish husks of filthy pleasures, and the windy pulse of worldly honours; and seeing the diuine light of that heauenly glorie hath shined vnto vs, let it dimme the light of carnall reason, and abate, if not extinguish, the flame and fire of our earthly concupiscence. For this is the end, as the Apostle teacheth vs, why the Lord in mercie hath caused his truth to shine vnto vs, and to inlighten our minds with those glorious raies. The grace of God (saith he) that bringeth saluation vnto all men hath appeared, and teacheth vs, that we should denie vngodlinesse, and worldly lusts, and that wee should liue soberly, and righteously, and godly in this present World. Let vs not too much esteeme and affect this state of mortality, seeing wee our selues are immortall, nor value these earthly things at high rates, as though they were parts and members of our bodies, but onely account of them as haire, nailes, and other excrements, making a fit proportion of them to serue for ornament and vse, but cutting them off (at least in our hearts & affections) when being more than needs, they grow superfluous. Wee are pilgrimes on Earth, and therefore let our hearts be specially set and fixed on our heauenly countrie; we are to runne a race for no lesse a prize, than the crowne of glory, and therefore let vs so runne, that we may obtaine, and as the Apostle exhorteth vs, let vs cast away euery thing that presseth downe, and the sinne that hangeth so fast on, and runne with patience the race that is set before vs. Wee are now fighting in a spirituall warfare: and (as the Apostle saith) no man that warreth, intangleth himselfe with the affaires of this life, because he would please him who hath chosen him to be a Souldier. Wee are now contending for victorie, and wrastling not with flesh and blood, but against principalities, powers, and worldly gouernours. Let vs therefore so fight and striue, that wee may haue a glorious conquest ouer the spirituall enemies of our saluation, and so obtaine the crowne of victorie, which God hath promised vs, euen that glorious felicitie, and eternall happinesse of his heauenly Kingdome. The which he grant vnto vs which hath dearely bought it for vs, Iesus Christ the righteous, to whom with the Father, and his Holy Spirit, one true, inuisible, most glorious, most gracious, and only wise God, bee ascribed of vs, and of his whole Church, all honour and glory, prayse and thanksgiuing, power, majestie and dominion, both now and for euermore. Amen.

Tit. 2.11.12.

1. Cor. 9.23.24.

Heb. 12.1.

2. Tim. 2.4.

Ephes. 6.12.

FINIS.

THE CHRISTIAN WARFARE,

The Third Part.

OR, CONSOLATIONS FOR THE AFFLICTED:

Wherein is shewed, how the Christian may bee armed and strengthened against the tentations of the WORLD on the left hand, arising from trouble and affliction; and inabled to beare all crosses and miseries with patience, comfort and thanksgiving.

By I. DOWNAME Bachelar in Diuinitie, and Preacher of GODS Word.

IAMES 1.2.

My Brethren count it exceeding ioy, when yee fall into diuers tentations.

2. COR. 4. 17.

For the light affliction which is but for a moment, causeth vnto vs a farre more excellent and an eternall weight of glorie.

LONDON,
Printed by William Stansby, 1633.

TO THE MOST REVEREND FATHER IN GOD, GEORGE:

By GODS prouidence Archbiſhop of Canterburie, Primate of all England, and Metropolitan, and one of his MAIESTIES moſt Honourable Priuie Councell, I.D. wiſheth all riches of Gods graces in this life, and of glory in the life to come.

I Will not (I hope) be thought vnprofitable, (moſt Reuerend Father in God) that in this time of peace and flouriſhing proſperitie of our Church and Country, I write of Warfare with the World, and our combat with afflictions, ſeeing we haue no aſſurance that theſe temporall bleſsings and Halcyon dayes will be continued; but rather may probably expect and iuſtly feare, that according to that viciſſitude and mutuall interchange of worldly things, which both the Scriptures and the experience of all ages paſt haue made knowne vnto vs, there may happily come a wane after this full, a low ebbe after this high tide, and a darke night of ſorrow and mourning, after this bright Sunſhine day of gladneſſe and reioycing. And that the rather, becauſe by our ſinnes long agoe we haue deſerued to be diſpoyled of Gods long continued fauours, and with vnreſiſtable violence doe pull and hale his iuſt iudgements vpon our guiltie heads. For to ſay nothing of the deſperate wickedneſſe of prophane men, who being rotten members of this bodie of our Church and Countrie, doe deſerue to be cut off (which is not commonly effected without the griefe and ſmart of all thoſe ſounder parts which are neere about them) who doth not ſee that the beſt Seruants and deareſt Children of God, are by long eaſe growne ſo ſlothfull and ſecure, and ſo corrupted with continuall peace and prosperitie, that they need to be quickened and rouzed vp with Gods scourges of correction, and to be purged from their drosse and rust by the fierie triall? And therefore it will not be amisse, if in this Summer and Sunshine of our prosperitie, we erect shelters to shade vs against the stormie tempests of approching troubles; and in the dayes of our peace, doe prepare our selues for this spirituall Warfare, building Fortresses and Bulwarkes for our defence before we be assaulted by the enemy, & putting on our spirituall armour, before our great Commander doe summon vs to the fight, and cause the alarme to be sounded to the Battaile. For then shall wee most securely enioy our peace, when as wee stand vpon our guard, and haue our weapons in readinesse to resist the enemy; and then shall our ioy of prosperitie bee most sweet and delightfull, when it is not embittered with the feare of losing it, nor with the expectation of those afflictions, whose force and furie we are by due preparation enabled to ouercome. Yea, though the body of our State had a sound constitution, and did not onely for the present enioy the health of flourishing prosperitie, but were also assured that it would continue for the time to come: yet are there many members of it, which being diseased with the sores of affliction, doe need to haue the plaisters of comfort applyed vnto them. And though the whole army of our Church Militant doe not yet ioyne in a mayn battaile with these spirituall enemies, yet are there many of Gods Souldiers picked out by our Lord and Generall, to skirmish in their courses with them, who need to bee instructed in this spirituall Warfare, and to be so trained in the skill of this fight, that when they are assaulted, they may manfully stand vnto it and obtaine the victory. In which respects, I tendring the future benefit of the whole body, and the present good of euery particular member, haue vndertaken this paines in preparing them for this fight. In which my endeuours, if God so blesse mee, that I attaine vnto my end, I shall haue no small ioy, seeing I shall communicate with them in all their consolation, and triumph together in their victorious conquest. Or if I faile hereof, yet shall I not lose all my labour, seeing whilest I prouided these cordials of comfort for the curing of others, I my selfe haue beene cheered by them in my wants and weaknesse; and whilest I cooked others meate, haue somewhat stayed my fainting stomacks by licking mine owne fingers and tasting of these meates, as they passed thorow my hands.

rupted

Now these my labours I humbly offer to your Graces patronage, as an vnfained testimony of that loue and duty which your worth and merit doe iustly challenge. For if the Elder that doth gouerne well, be worthy of double honour, especially if he labour painfully in the Word and Doctrine; how much are we bound to shew by all meanes, with what zeale wee honour you, who by your gouernment (as chiefe Lieutenant vnder our dread Soueraigne) preserue among vs the purity of our Christian Religion, from being tainted and corrupted by Errours and Heresies (herein extending your care not only vnto vs, but also to our Neighbour Churches round about vs) and continue with increase the peace of our Church, defending vs all you may from the inroades and inuasions of our Romish enemies: and also (as though you were quite freed from the waight of this burthen) doe continually imploy your selfe in sound doctrine and painfull preaching not only vrging those, who are vnder your gouernment to take like fruitfull paines by your graue authoritie, fatherly admonitions, and earnest exhortations; tations; but also shaming those who neglect it, by your example; seeing they come farre short of you, in that which they haue only to intend, who are otherwise taken vp in such a multitude of businesse. The which I write not to get vnto my selfe the base reward of a seruile flatterer (for who yet could euer challenge mee of such selfe-respecting flattery?) but that God may be glorified in those excellent gifts wherewith he hath inriched you; and that they being continued vpon this record for after ages, you may not only be acknowledged a worthy President and Gouernour vnto vs, but be imitated as a precedent and patterne vnto those who shall come after you, and so leaue behind you such a sweet sent of a good Name, as it were, of a precious ointment, that those who yet breathe not, may be refreshed by it.

The Lord long continue, increase and multiply these his good gifts and graces in you, that he more and more may haue the glory of them, his Church and Children the vse and benefit, and your selfe both the present comfort of a good conscience, and the greater measure of glory and happinesse at the day of Christs appearing.

Your Graces in all obseruant duty,

{ to be commanded,

IOHN DOWNĀME.

A

In the third part of the Christian Warfare against the World, wee are to consider,

- 1. Of the enemies against whō wee must fight, which are the World's forces on the left hand: viz. afflictions in which wee are to consider, Chap. 1, to 3:
  - 1. Their nature & qualitie, which is deciphered by Lib. 1. chap. 1, 2.
    - Diuers descriptions of afflictions, Lib. 1. chap. 1. Sect. 3, 4.
    - Shewing their
      - Causes:
        - Efficient.
        - Finall.
      - Effects, Lib. 1. chap. 1.
      - Subject.
      - Adjuncts and properties.
  - 2. The manner of their fight by a dangerous tentation, Lib. 1. chap 3.
    - Arising from them, Lib. 1. chap. 3.
    - Strongly vrged by
      1. Sathan, Lib. 1. chap. 3. Sect. 2.
      2. The World. Sect. 3.
      3. Our owne flesh. Sect. 4.
- 2. The meanes to ouercome them, which respect either
  - Preparation to the fight; vnto which is required
    - Prouision of spirituall Armour, consisting of many parts: as, Lib. 1. cap. 4.
      1. Sauing knowledge, Lib. 4 chap. 4. Sect. 4.
      2. Iustifying faith, Sect. 5.
      3. Truth or affiance in God, Sect. 6.
      4. Hope in God, Sect. 7.
      5. Loue of God, Sect. 8.
      6. True humilitie, Sect. 9.
      7. Vnfained repentance, Sect. 10, 11, 12.
      8. A good conscience, Sect. 13.
    - Trayning in this Warfare, vnto which is required the knowing and obseruing of eight Rules, whereby wee may be inabled to demeane our selues well in this conflict, Lib. 1. cap. 5.
  - Fight it selfe. See B.

B

The fight it self, vnto which is required holy and Christian behauiour both in the

- Conflict, in which is required that wee beare our afflictions with patience, where wee are to consider;
  - First, of patience it self, Lib. 1. ch. 2. where is shewed:
    1. What it is, chap. 2. Sect. 1, 2.
    2. The obiect of it.
    3. The nature and properties of it, Sect. 4. to 13.
  - The meanes to attaine to it, which are of two sorts,
    - 1. Reasons commending this vertue to our loue, and inciting vs to seeke after it, as the
      1. Excellency, Chap. 2 Sect. 1.
      2. Vtilitie, Sect. 2.
      3. Necessitie, Sect. 3.
    - 2. Actions to bee performed of vs, which respect either
      - Prayer, where consider
        - Of the reasons which may moue vs to performe this dutie in our afflictions, chap. 3. Sect. 2. to 6.
        - Of the things required in this Prayer, both in respect of the
          - Prayer it selfe, whereof the
            - Person that prayes,
            - matter,
            - manner,
            - time and continuance,
      - Meditation, vide C.
- Victory, namely thanksgiuing and praising God, Lib. 2. chap. vlt.

- Causes and effects of our afflictions,
  - Efficient, Vide D.
  - Finall, Vide E.
- Enduring of the Crosse: and these are either spirituall, springing out of holy Scriptures, which are either
  - Simple, arising either from the
    - Subiect and adiuncts of our afflictions:
      - Subiect: taken from the consideration of the place; Chap. 28.
      - Adiuncts: as the
        - Necessitie, Profit, Brevitie, Lightnesse, } of them, Chap. 28. Sect. 5.
        - And our assistants,
          - The Angels, Sect. 6.
          - Our Saviour Christ, Sect. 7.
  - Comparative, raised by comparing our lesser afflictions with the greater of
    - 1. Gods dearest children, as either
      - All the faithfull, Chap. 29.
      - Our Saviour Christ, Chap. 30.
    - 2. Of Worldlings, for attaining their worldly ends, Chap. 31. Sect. 1, 2, 3.
    - 3. With the punishments of the damned, Sect. 4.
    - 4. With the eternall ioyes which follow our short afflictions, Chap. 31. Sect. 5.
- Civill, and worldly, grounded vpon meere morall considerations: which are especially two:
  - Imparting our griefe to a friend, Chap. 32. Sect. 2, 3.
  - Lawfull
    - Labour,
    - Recreation, } 2. Sect. 4.
- End, assuring vs of a seasonable deliverance: which are taken from Gods
  - All seeing knowledge, Presence with vs to helpe vs, Omnipotent power, Infinite loue. } Chap. 33.
  - Gracious promises, where of the meanes to strengthen our faith when God deferreth to accomplish his promises, Chap. 34.
- Inlisting, namely God, in a three fold respect:
  1. Predestination, ordayning vs vnto them, chap. 6. Sect. 1.
  2. Execution, whereby according to his purpose he doth effect it, chap. 6. Sect. 2, 3, 4.
  3. Prouidence, whereby he rules and disposeth them for his glory and our good, Ch. 9.
- Vs, the deserning cause, sin and, chap. 8.
- Moouing the Lord to afflict vs, which are either in
  - Measure, Chapter 10. both in respect of
    - The afflictions themselues, and that in respect of their
      - Quantitie, which is small, Sect. 4.
      - Time, which is short, Sect. 5.
    - Vs, who beare them, seeing they doe not exceed
      - Our strength, chap. 11.
      - Necessitie, chap. 12.
  - God, namely, his loue, correcting vs as a Father; & not his wrath, punishing as a Iudge, chap. 9. which loue appeareth in our afflictions, both in the
    - Ends made knowne in their effects,

E

Finall causes of afflictions are either

- Gods glory, Chap. 14.
- Our good, and that whether we respect our
  - Neighbours,
  - Our selues, where is proued that afflictions are
    - not hurtfull, Chap. 15.
    - profitable, *

* profitable, both in respect of

- this life, & that whether wee consider them as
  - Trialls,
    - spirituall, vide F.
    - chastisements in which respect God aduanceth our good, and that both
  - earthly and worldly benefits, which are increased by afflictions, as
    1. Wisdome and policie, Chap. 5. §. 1.
    2. Abilitie to discerne friends from flatterers, §. 2.
    3. A good name, § 3.
    4. Better taste of Gods benefits, §. 4.
- life to come, for by them hee
  - preserueth vs from condemnation, Chap. 26. §. 1.
  - furthereth our saluation, and increaseth our happinesse, §. 2.

F

Spirituall, seeing by them the Lord furthereth our

- Effectuall calling and conuersion, Chap. 18.
- Sanctification whilest God vseth them as meanes to
  - free vs from sinne, both by
    - preuenting, Chap. 19. §. 1.
    - Mortifying, Chap. 19. §. 3.
  - * To furnish vs with spirituall graces,
    - First in general, Chap. 20. §. 1, 2.
      - * To furnish vs with spirituall graces, the which is proued:
        - God, either in the
          - Vnderstanding which are either the
            - Knowledge, C. 20. §. 1, 4.
            - Remembrance, Ch. 20. §. 5.
            - of God.
          - Heart and affections
            - Affiance,
            - Hope,
            - Loue,
            - Feare,
            - Humilitie.
            - Chap.
        - In both together, namely,
          - Faith, Chap. 21.
          - Fruits of them all,
            - Repentance,
            - New obedience, &c.
      - 2. More particularly, the speciall graces wherewith they furnish vs, respect either
        - Our Neighbours, for by afflictions wee are mooued to imbrace
          - Iustice, Chap. 24. §. 1.
          - Compassion, §. 2.
          - Humilitie and Meekenesse, §. 3.
        - Our selues, for by afflictions wee haue increase of
          - The knowledge of our selues, §. 4.
          - Strength to beare them, §. 5.
          - Courage and fortitude, §. 6.
          - Temperance, Sobrietie, Modestie, Chastitie, §. 7.

THE

THE CHRISTIAN WARFARE,

The third Part.

OF AFFLICTIONS, WHICH ARE THE SECOND SORT OF WORLDLY Enemies, their Nature, Properties and the manner of their fight, and how wee may be so prepared and armed for this ſpirituall Warfare, as that we may be aſſured to obtaine the victory.

The firſt Booke.

Chap. I.

Of afflictions, which are the ſecond ſorts of our worldly Enemies, of their power and danger: what they are, and of the diuers kinds of them.

WEll may the Chriſtians life bee called a Warfare on Earth, and the whole number of the elect and faithfull a Church militant, or royall armie of the Lord of hoſts, ſeeing whileſt wee continue here, we are beſet on all ſides with enemies, mightie, and malitious; which neuer ceaſe to aſſault and vexe vs, either with the lighter skirmiſh of weaker trialls, or the maine battell of ſtronger tentations, vntill by death obtaining a full victorie, the retrait is ſounded by our great Commander, and thoſe receiued into the Church triumphant, who haue fought valiantly in the Church Militant, that they who haue contemned worldly ſhame may bee crowned with heauenly glory, and they triumph in ioy and happineſſe, who to obtaine the victory haue fought vnto blood. For no ſooner are Sathan and his Angels beaten backe, and that huge army of his helliſh tentations diſcomfited and ouercome with the Word of God, and the aſſiſtance of his Holy Spirit; but gathering againe their ſcattered forces, and adioyning vnto them their ſtrong aids the World and the Fleſh, with theſe freſh ſupplies they ſet forward againe with ſuch hope and courage, as though they had neuer receiued any ouerthrow, and (as it were) filled with shame and malice because of their former foyle, they redouble their force and affresh assault vs with greater furie. The consideration whereof as it should moue all Christians to shake off securitie, and to stand vpon their guard with all care and watchfulnesse, armed at all points with their spirituall armour, that so they may be ready for the encounter; so should it moue all Gods faithfull Ministers, who are made Captaines and Leaders vnder our great Commander; to traine vp Gods people and Souldiers vnder their charge in that skil which is required in this spiritual Warfare, & teach them so to vse their weapons, that they may be the better inabled to defend themselues and offend the enemy. In conscience of which duty I (the weakest and vnworthiest of many) haue vndertaken this hard taske, and hauing laid open the malice, might, and politicke stratagems of our Arch-enemie the Diuell, and instructed the weake Christian (according to my mediocrity of skill) in the art of this Christian Warfare, and taught him how to prepare himselfe for the day of conflict, and so to buckle vnto him the Christian armour, and manage his spirituall weapons, that he may bee assured to foyle his enemy and obtaine the victory; no sooner had I ended this labour, but I presently discouered new forces led vnder the conduct of the World, one of Sathans chiefest commanders and strongest ayds, armed with no lesse power and malice to worke the Christians ouerthrow, that so they may againe be made the captaines of sin, & regained to the seruice of their olde master, the Prince of darknes, and god of this world. And being hartened and encouraged by that late victory obtained against that chiefe enemy of our saluation, and resting assured, by that experience which I haue had of the inuincible strength of my great Lord and commander assisting mee in this fight, or the goodnesse of the spirituall armour, and of the excellency of that both defending and wounding sword of Gods Word, that if now againe I gaue the assault, I should also obtaine the victory; I willingly re-entred the field with a purpose to encounter these new supplies: and first taking a view of the enemie, that I might discouer their strength, number, and militarie discipline, I perceiued that they so farre excelled in might, multitude, and warlike policy, that they were an army plainely inuincible in respect of humane strength. In the front and maine battell were marshalled the Worlds glorious and glittering troops of prosperity, armed with those often approued weapons of honours, pleasures and riches, wherewithall few are encountred who are not also ouercome. And obseruing the manner of their fight, I found it to be no lesse admirable than dangerous, for they ouercame by yeelding, wounded by perswading, killed by imbracing, and whilest casting away their Armes and all signes of hostility, they offered themselues as captiues and slaues, they became conquerours of those who tooke them, iaylors of those that kept them, and commanders of those who seemed to hold them in captiuity. In the flanke and rere-ward were ranged those terrible troops of aduersity and affliction, there placed by the Diuell and the World, to vanquish those by force, violence, and furious encounter, who could not be ouercome by the perswading allurements of deceiptfull prosperity, and these enemies seemed to bee of hideous strength, and in respect of their sterne and grimme visage, proud threats, and dangerous weapons, fearefull to looke vpon.

Against the former (as order required) I made my first assault, teaching the Christian Souldier, who will ioyne with mee in this fight, to ouercome them by contemning them, and to stand with impregnable strength against their trecherous furie, and smooth smiling malice, by turning his eyes from their alluring baits, by refusing their falsefauours, by stopping his eares against their charming perswasions, and by suspecting most their malitious attempts, when as with greatest shew of loue they smile and fawne vpon him. And thus hauing enabled him, by the assistance of Gods Spirit, and his owne carefull endeuour to beate backe the force of these enemies also, and to put them to flight: it now remaineth that being armed with Gods might, and defended with the Christian armour, especially with the shield of faith, and sword of the Spirit, wee doe encounter those other sort of enemies; not doubting (being thus assisted) but we shall also giue them the foyle, and so obtaine full victory against these worldly forces. For howsoeuer this enemy aduersity, and these innumerable troops of afflictions, are in shew much more terrible than prosperity, and those glorious forces led vnder his conduct; yet are they much weaker in truth, and lesse dangerous when wee come to buckle with them. For these indeed, are grimme in their outward visage and appearance, but not so fearefull, when hauing experience of their strength, they are become more familiar with vs; like those Barbarians which, when they were to fight with their enemies, painted themselues that they might appeare more terrible, whereas in truth they were weake and naked, vnable to endure the first onset: For so these afflictions haue in them but a painted shadow of fiercenesse, and doe put on but an vgly visard to make them full of terrour at their first appearing, whereas if the visard bee done done away, and wee ceaſing to looke vpon them through the falſe glaſſe of feare and aſtoniſhment, doe behold them with a true iudgement, wee ſhall find them ſo tolerable and eaſie to be endured, through the aſſiſtance of Gods Spirit, that there will bee no cauſe of terrour and amazement. But on the other ſide thoſe enemies, proſperity, and worldly allurements, hiding hoſtility vnder pretence of friendſhip, and being much ſtronger, and more forcible than they ſeeme in outward appearances, doe bring vs into a pernicious ſecurity, and without ſhew of aſſault get the victory. Afflictions like billes and pikes make a terrible ſhew when they cannot reach vs: but the tentations of proſperity like vnſeene bullets wound and kill vs before they are diſcerned. They like the fiery Serpents ſting vs, but with ſenſe of paine, make vs ſeeke for remedy, looking vp to the true braſen Serpent, that we may bee cured; theſe like the viper putting vs to no paine, bring vs into a ſweet ſlumber of ſecurity, which endeth in that dead ſleepe of death and condemnation. They wound with paine and enforce vs with torment to ſeeke recouery, theſe with delight, making vs to loue ſtill the weapons that hurt vs, and to abhorre the meanes whereby we may bee healed, becauſe euen our wounds and ſores are pleaſing vnto vs. The one like the winde boyſterouſly blowing vpon vs, make vs more carefull to hold faſt the garment of Gods graces that it be not taken from vs; the other like the Sunne warming vs with delight, cauſe vs of our owne accord to caſt it from vs. Finally they vanquiſhing vs by force make vs captiues vnto ſinne, who are willing vpon the next opportunity to come out of thraldome and re-gaine our liberty, becauſe wee find but hard entertainment; theſe making conqueſt not onely of our ſtrength and power, but alſo of our hearts, wills and affections, retaine vs in a voluntary ſeruitude, for the wages of worldly vanities; ſo as we haue no deſire to come out of this pleaſing bondage, nor to recouer our liberty though the meanes were offered vs. In all which and many other reſpects Salomon truly ſaith, that, It is better to goe into the houſe of mourning, than into the houſe of feaſting, and preferreth anger before laughter, affirming that the heart of the wiſe is in the houſe of mourning, but the heart of fooles is in the houſe of mirth. Eccl. 7.3.6.7.

But howſoeuer aduerſitie and afflictions be enemies vnto our ſaluation, leſſe dangerous than thoſe of proſperity and worldly abundance; yet are they ſtrong enough to worke our ouerthrow, vnleſſe we be aſſiſted with the power of Gods might, armed with the Chriſtian armour, and with care and watchfulneſſe doe learne and practiſe all good meanes which may inable vs to make reſiſtance and obtaine the victory. And therefore let vs in the next place fit our ſelues againſt the day of conflict, and as we haue learned to contemne the World when it fawneth, ſo alſo let vs learne not to feare it when it frowneth and rageth; that ſo when our great commander ſoundeth the alarme vnto battell, wee may with comfort and courage enter the field, and becomming conquerours, may receiue the Crowne of victory, glory matchleſſe, and happineſſe endleſſe. And to this purpoſe let vs conſider of the nature, quality and ſtrength of theſe our enemies; and then of the meanes whereby wee may bee inabled to endure their encounters, abate their ſtrength and fury, and ſo obtaine the victory. Concerning the former wee are to know that afflictions diuerſly conſidered may bee diuerſly deſcribed; for if we looke vpon them as they are in their owne nature, and by God inflicted vpon the wicked; they are thoſe euils of puniſhment, wherewith he beginneth juſtly to puniſh their ſinnes euen in this life, and (as it were) the flaſhes of Hell fire, and firſt entrance into vtter deſtruction; as it may hereby appeare in that they are all comprized vnder the curſe of the Law, and denounced and threatned againſt the tranſgreſſours of it. Againe if we conſider them as inflicted by God vpon the faithfull, they are thoſe fatherly chaſtiſements, wherewith out of his loue and wiſedome hee either correcteth them for their ſinnes, that being brought to repentance they may not be condemned with the World; or trieth them that his ſpirituall graces beſtowed on them may more clearely ſhine to his owne glory that gaue them, and the furthering and aſſuring of their ſaluation who haue receiued them. So that howſoeuer the afflictions of the wicked, and of the faithfull are all one in reſpect of their matter, yet they differ in reſpect of the author, the one being the puniſhments of an angry and juſt judge, the other the chaſtiſements and trials of a gracious and louing Father; and in reſpect of their vſe and end, the one tending to deſtroy, the other to ſaue; the one to puniſh, the other to correct; the one to begin the torments of Hell, the other to fit and prepare for the ioyes of Heauen. Furthermore if we conſider afflictions in reſpect of vs vpon whom they are inflicted, wee may define them to be; all that our nature abhorreth, and that croſſeth our deſires; or all thoſe croſſes which either in their owne nature, or through our opinion doe moleſt and greeue vs. Neither are thoſe alone afflictions vnto vs which are ſo in truth, and in their owne nature, but thoſe alſo which wee conceit ſo to be in the eſtimation of our opinions: yea it may be truely ſaid that as theſe in number doe

1. Cor. 11. 32.

Ad tantam inepti-am peruentum eſt vt non dolore tantum ſed doloris opinione vexemur. Sen. l. b. in ſap. non. Cad. iniur. cap 4.

doe much exceed the other, ſo are they much more intolerable to thoſe that beare them. For whereas there is one affliction truely ſo in its owne nature laide vpon men, there are many which they fancie to themſelues out of meere conceipt, the which wanting ſtrength to hurt them becauſe they haue no true exiſtence, they make powerfull enough to deiect their minds by the ſtrength of their apprehenſion. Thus one torments himſelfe with greefe, becauſe he hath loſt thoſe riches, which if hee had ſtill poſſeſſed he would neuer haue vſed; another vexeth himſelfe about the ſmoake of honour, eating out his heart with ſorrow becauſe hee is put from that authoritie which whil'ſt hee had it, oppreſſed him with the burthen; and pining with griefe becauſe his ſuperiour either frowned vpon or graced him not; becauſe he is bearded by his equals, and not according to expectation reſpected and reuerenced by his inferiours; and becauſe he hath not the wall and precedence, or higher place of thoſe, before whom his proud conceipt preferreth him. Thus a bare feare of expected euills which neuer happen, doth as much vexe men, as thoſe which they truely ſuffer, and a bare ſuſpition of faultineſſe in their friends as much tormenteth them, as if they were truely guilty. And as this opinion giues life and being to many afflictions, ſo alſo their quantity and meaſure; by reaſon whereof that which is a light affliction to one, is intolerable to another: and that which maketh one to grone vnder it as being an vnſupportable waight, is by another caried with eaſe. One is moſt tender when his honour is touched; another little reſpecteth this, but groweth very paſſionate if he be wronged in his riches; this man is patient in bearing blowes, yet cannot indure contumelious wordes; but another is ſenſible onely of ſmart, and careth not for the winde of words, ſo he may ſleepe in a whole skinne. Yea by reaſon of this opinion, croſſes are made comforts, and great bleſſings in themſelues are turned into great afflictions, in conceipt: and hereof it is, that that which is one mans delight, is anothers torment, and that which one affecteth as his paradiſe, another loatheth as his hell. One thinketh reſtraint of his liberty to be an intolerable bondage, though he fare daintily, lie ſoft, and abound in all plenty: another would willingly preſſe into ſuch a priſon, and could be content to become an immured Anachoret to haue ſuch eaſe with ſuch abundance. One taketh his chiefe contentment in eaſe and idleneſſe, and to another it is the greateſt paines to ſit ſtill and doe nothing, ſeeing all his delight is in buſineſſe and imployment: and accordingly as hee is afflicted and tormented with the leaſt labour, ſo this man is no leſſe moleſted and grieued, if for want of imployment he be forced to waſt his time in languiſhing idleneſſe. Finally if we conſider afflictions in reſpect of the World inflicting them vpon the faithfull, they are thoſe tentations on the left hand, grounded on all thoſe miſeries which are incident to the life of man, whether in reſpect of his mind, body, name, ſtate or friends, whereby the World as the inſtrument of Sathan endeauoureth to diſcourage and hinder them in the way of godlineſſe and righteouſneſſe which leadeth to Gods kingdome, and to diuert and thruſt them into the way of ſinne which leadeth to deſtruction. By all which it appeareth what wee vnderſtand by afflictions, namely all euills of puniſhment ſent of God, either as from a father to correct vs, or as a iudge to puniſh vs; all things which croſſe our deſires, and doe moleſt and grieue vs, either in their owne nature, or through our opinion and conceipt; and finally all the miſeries of this life which the Diuell and the World do caſt in our way, as we are running in the race of godlineſſe for the garland of eternall happineſſe, that like briars they may hold vs from going forward, or like thornes vnder our feete may vexe and torment vs, that ſo being weary in this vnpleaſant paſſage, wee may turne aſide into that broad and delightfull way of ſinne which leadeth to deſtruction.

Opinio eſt ergo quæ nos cruciat & tanti quodq; malum eſt quanti illud taxauimus. In noſtra poteſtate remedium habemus. Senec. conſol. ad Marciam. 19.

And thus our afflictions are but bare puniſhments onely, or elſe joyned with ſinne: Bare puniſhments I call thoſe plagues, croſſes, loſſes, troubles and trialls which by God are inflicted vpon men; and that either vpon the wicked for the ſatisfying of his juſtice which is offended, in regard of whom they are properly called puniſhments as tending to their hurt and deſtruction; or vpon the faithfull for their chaſtiſment or triall, in reſpect of whom they are improperly, and in a large ſignification called puniſhments, becauſe they are not inflicted to ſatisfie Gods juſtice which is fully ſatisfied by Chriſt, but out of fatherly loue for their amendment, that they may not bee condemned with the World. Puniſhment joyned with ſinne is, when as God puniſheth one ſinne with another, not by infuſing into men any corruption or malitiouſneſſe, for ſeeing he is moſt holy and pure, and his will the rule of all juſtice, hee cannot be ſaid to be the authour of ſin, nor to haue any hand in that euill which his nature abhorreth, and his juſtice puniſheth; but when for their formes ſinne he leaueth them to their owne corruptions, luſts, vile affections, and to a reprobate minde, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, Rom. 1. 24. 26. 28. and being ſo left to themſelues they runne headlong into wickedneſſe: for that men may become as bad as Cain, Saul, Ahab, or Iudas, it needeth not that

Rom. 1. 24. 28.

that externall wickednesse should be infused into them, seeing it is enough if they be left of God to their owne naturall corruption which inclineth them to all manner of sin; euen as for the descending of a stone, it is not needfull to cast it to the Earth, but onely to leaue holding of it, and then it will fall downe in its owne nature. And as the boat goes vp the streame by an externall strength thrusting it on, but needeth not any to carrie it downe, seeing it driueth that way of its owne accord; so we goe against the streame of our naturall corruptions towards the hauen of rest, by the assistance of the diuine power which helpeth vs forward; but wee need not to be thrust downward, seeing it is sufficient if the Lord withhold his hand and leaue vs to our owne naturall inclination. Againe the Lord punisheth in men one sinne with another; when like a righteous judge hee doth punish their former sins by deliuering them into the power of his executioner Sathan, to bee tempted and ouercome by him; suffering them to bee ruled by him, because they haue pulled their neckes from the yoke of his subiection, and to raw in his gallies, because they would not freely serue their great King and Master. Neither is the Lord hereby made the author of sinne, seeing he onely performeth a just act of a righteous judge, in deliuering vp wicked men for their demerits to Sathan, as his executioner to bee blinded, misled, and punished by him; nor yet are they any whit excused, in that being deliuered vp of God they run headlong into all sinne; because they haue deseruedly brought vpon themselues this fearefull judgement, by their former sinnes; and now are ready to commit all wickednesse, not by any outward violence, forcing them thereunto, but by Sathans perswasion alluring them, and their owne sinfull lusts inclining them to perpetrate these sinnes with all chearefulnes and delight, hauing therein no respect vnto God or his judgements; but onely to please and satisfie their owne corrupt will and carnall lusts. So that God punisheth one sinne with another, not by infusing wickednesse, or by tempting, that is, alluring and prouoking men vnto sin; for thus God tempteth no man, as the Apostle affirmeth: but by withdrawing his grace, and by leauing men to be misled by their owne corruptions. Hee leadeth men into temptation, and deliuereth them into euill; not by perswading or compelling them to commit wickednesse, for his nature abhorreth it, and his will is the rule of all iustice, but by giuing them ouer, and deliuering them vp, as a righteous judge, vnto the Diuell his executioner, to be for their former sinnes further blinded, hardned and made more wicked, that their condemnation might bee more just and fearefull in the life to come. And of this wee haue manifold examples in the Scriptures, for thus the Lord hardned Pharaohs heart, when he denied to giue him the oyle of his grace whereby it might be softned, and left him to his owne obstinacie, and Sathans temptations. Thus he punished the spiritual whoredome of the Israelites, by giuing them vp to commit corporall vncleannesse. Hos. 4. Thus hee punished the couetousnesse and worldlinesse of Iudas, by permitting Sathan to enter into him, and so to carry him to the committing of that horrible treason against his Master. Thus hee punished the Gentiles idolatry, by giuing them vp to their owne hearts lusts, vnto vncleannesse, to defile their owne bodies betweene themselues; and vnto vile affections, and to a reprobate mind, to doe those things which are not conuenient. And thus the Apostle saith, that because men receiued not the loue of the truth, that they might bee saued, therefore God would send them strong delusions, that they should beleeue lyes, that all might bee damned which beleeued not the truth, but had pleasure in vnrighteousnesse. The which judgement wee see powerfully inflicted vpon many Apostates in these dayes, who are giuen ouer of God to bee deluded and seduced by Priests and Iesuites, because they haue not loued God his truth, but haue shut their eyes against the light of the Gospell. Euen as the like was threatned against the Iewes. Esa. 6 9. Goe and say to this people, yee shall heare indeed but yee shall not vnderstand, ye shall plainely see and not perceiue: make the heart of the people fat, make their eares heauy, and shut their eyes, lest they should see with their eyes, and heare with their eares, and vnderstand with their hearts, and conuert, and be healed them, the which accordingly was inflicted on them as the Apostle obserueth, Act. 28. 25, 26. And this is the fearefull last punishment of all others; for other afflictions are vsuall meanes to draw vs neerer vnto God but these make vs flee further from him; they sharpen our sight, these make vs the more blind; they like good tilers draw out the core of our corruptions, but these make vs to rot and perishe in our sinnes. From which neuertheless Gods seruants are not exempted, as appeareth in the example of Lot, whose drunkennesse God punished by giuing him ouer to commit the sinne of incest; in Dauid, whose adultery God punished by leauing him to himselfe, and withdrawing his grace, whereby it came to passe that hee also fell into the sinne of murther; and whose pride and confidence in the arme of flesh he punished by moouing him, that is, by suffering Sathan his executioner to prouoke him to number the people; as may appeare by comparing the story in the second

Exod. 7. 3. 22. & 9. 12.

Hos. 4. 13, 14.
Iohn 13. 26. 27.

Rom. 1. 24. 26. 28.

2. Thes. 2. 11, 12.

Esa. 6. 9.

Act. 28. 25.

2. Sam. 24. 1. with 1. Chron. 21. 1.

second booke of Samuel, with the same recorded in the first of Chronicles: for whereas in the one place he saith, that God moued Dauid against Israell to cause them to bee numbred, in the other it is said that Sathan prouoked him to doe it, whereby is meant, that God as a righteous iudge, intending to punish Dauids sinne, and thereupon to take occasion to punish the sinnes of the people, did giue or deliuer him into the power of Sathan, as vnto the executioner of his punishments, to bee tempted by him vnto the committing of this sinne. And thus God punished the pride, presumption, and selfe-confidence of Peter by suffering Satan to sift him like wheat, and to preuaile thus farre against him, as to moue him first to deny, and then to forsweare his Master.

CHAP. II.

Of the causes, effects, subiect and adiuncts of afflictions.

§ Sect. 1. Of the efficient and impulsiue cause of afflictions.

AND thus wee see what afflictions are, both as they are punishments, properly so called, and as they are chastisements and corrections; now briefly wee will consider of their causes, effects, subiects and adiuncts or qualities, that so their nature being better vnderstood, there may bee a fitter passage to the discourse following. And first wee are to know that the Lord himselfe is the chiefe efficient and principall cause of all afflictions, which are not sinnes; for so himselfe speaketh by his Prophet; Shall there be euill in a City (that is the euill of punishment and chastisement) and the Lord hath not done it? not that it is Gods proper and ordinary worke to afflict his creatures; for being the chiefe goodnesse, hee chiefely intendeth doing good, he delighteth in the conuersion of sinners, and in shewing mercy; and thus doing hee doth his owne proper and vsuall worke, familiar to his owne nature; whereas the other is his worke improperly, and as the Prophet calleth it, his strange worke, and his strange act, which with a kind of necessity wee force vpon his iustice, by our sin and wickednesse. So that the meritorious cause of afflictions is sinne, whereby men offend against Gods iustice in transgressing his Law, as shall more fully appeare hereafter and that whether wee respect the wicked or the faithfull; although there bee great difference in the end why God afflicteth them; for (as I haue said) these punishments are laide vpon the wicked for sin, that Gods iustice may bee satisfied by taking due vengeance on them; but howsoeuer they are also inflicted vpon the faithfull for sin, yet not to the former end, but that they may be brought vnto the sight and sense of it, that they may repent of it, and for the time to come forsake it, that so they may not bee condemned with the world. The impulsiue or motiue cause, wherby the Lord is incited to inflict these punishments and afflictions, is his iustice which is heereby manifested; for if euen in this life God punisheth the sinnes of the wicked, where they are to receiue all their good, as Abraham speaketh to Dines, then how much more grieuous punishments remaine for them in the life to come, which is the time appointed for their torment? And if hee punish and chastise the sinnes of his faithfull Children, where shall the wicked and the vngodly appeare? as the Apostle speaketh. If hee will not suffer them to escape without seuere correction, whose sinnes are punished in Christ euen by his death as being satisfactorie, and in themselues by repentance, as being the fruit of their faith, loue and zeale, which cause them to bewaile and lament for him whom they haue pearced, and to afflict their soules with bitter sorrow, for that they haue offended him who hath so loued them; then how certainely will there be a day of iudgement, wherein God will manifest the seuerity of his iustice, in punishing their outragious sinnes, which haue with an high hand sinned against him, seeing they haue not had their punishments here, but haue passed their time in all worldly prosperity, pleasure and delight? Secondly the mercy of God moueth him also to inflict on the faithfull these afflictions, that it may bee manifested to his glory and their comfort, whilest hereby hee stoppeth them in their course of sinne, and draweth them neerer to himselfe when they goe astray, that so escaping condemnation, they may walke in that way of holinesse, which will bring them to eternall happinesse. The instrumentall causes of these punishments and afflictions are the whole Army of Gods creatures, which as they are his ready instruments, in deriuing his blessings and benefits to those that feare and serue him; so are they no lesse ready with all chearefulnesse, to inflict those punishments, which his iustice hath pronounced against the wicked for their confusion and destruction; and those afflictions wherewith hee correcteth the slips and faules of his owne seruants, that they may bee brought to repentance and amendment. But especially this Lord of hosts imployeth in this seruice his Angels; and that both the good Angels, who are ministring Spirits, alwayes prest to doe his will, as appeareth in the destruction of the hoast of Senacherib; and in the seuentie thousand Israelites slaine by the Angell of God with the sword of pestilence; and also the euill and wicked spirits, as appeareth in the

Amos 3. 6.

Micheh. 7. 18.

Esay 28. 21.

Luk. 16. 25.

1. Pet. 4. 18.

Zach. 12. 10.

the afflictions of Iob, and in the deceiuing and ouerthrowing of Ahab, in the tormenting of Saul, in the afflicting of the Apostle Paul, and in the tempting of our Sauiour Christ himselfe. And for this purpose hee no lesse vsually imployeth the World, that is, worldly wicked men, sometime to execute his iudgements one vpon another, and sometimes as his rods and whips, wherwith hee correcteth the faults of his owne children and seruants: and that either, when by their allurements, perswasions and euill example; or threats, violence and persecution they draw them into sinne; or when after they haue committed it, they serue as instruments to correct and chastise those offences, which through their inducements the faithfull haue fallen into. As wee may see in the example of the Israelites thus afflicted with the Canaanites, Moabites, Philistims, Aramits and Babilonians. All which (if wee looke to their owne intentions) had no purpose at all to bee Gods instruments for the correcting of his children; but chiefly aimed at their destruction, being moued thereunto with enuy, rage, hatred couetousnesse, and ambitious desire of soueraignty; but if we respect the will and worke of God, they were so ruled by his power and prouidence, that they were but his bare instruments for the chastising of his seruants for their amendment.

The ends of these afflictions for which God correcteth his Children are manifold; as principally his owne glory in the manifestation of his justice, mercy, wisedome, power and prouidence; and next hereunto the good and saluation of the faithfull, whom he thus chastiseth with these temporary afflictions, that repenting of their euill wayes, they may not bee condemned with the World: that he may hereby strengthen and increase in them their faith, affiance, hope, patience, humility, obedience and all other sanctifying and sauing graces; that they may be brought to a true hatred of sin, when as they feele and tast the bitter fruits thereof; and to loath the World where they find no better entertainment; that their flesh with the coruptions thereof may bee mortified and crucified, and the spirituall man receiuing more strength hereby may hold it in subiection: and finally that being hereby put in minde of their corruption and mortality, they may not fixe and settle their hopes and hearts vpon the things of this life, but may bee moued to desire earnestly with the Apostle Paul to be dissolued and to be with Christ, seeing that is best of all; the which with diuers other ends of these afflictions, I onely heere name, because afterwards I shall haue fit occasion to intreat more largely of them. The effects of these crosses and corrections are all those benefits and blessings, which God propoundeth for his ends in inflicting them; for seeing he is infinite both in wisdome and power, hee can faile of nothing which he intendeth, but alwaies attaineth vnto his ends, & mightily effecteth all these things at which hee aymeth. The subject of these afflictions (if we respect the place) is this miserable World; for this is the valley of death, the vale of teares, the fiery furnace, in which when we haue beene tried and approued, we shall be laid vp in Gods treasury of blessednesse; the lists of our spirituall combat, in which when wee haue fought and ouercome, wee shall afterwards triumph in glory and bee crowned with victory; the race, wherein hauing run wee get the price and garland of blessednesse: the vineyard, in which wee labour till the night of death, when as wee shall receiue the wages of euerlasting happinesse; and finally the place of our pilgrimage, which when we haue trauailed, we shall ioyfully arriue at our owne country, and enter into the paradise of our delights. But if we respect the subject vpon which they are exercised, then is it the whole Christian man with all that belongeth vnto him; as his body, soule, name, state and friends, there being no part of him or his, which is not a fit subject for sorrow and smart, and a fit place where afflictions vsually may keepe their residence. The adjuncts, properties, and qualities of these afflictions are manifold. In respect of their time they last onely for this life: and therefore are of [a] short and momentany continuance; they are for their waight, light and easie to bee borne by those who are assisted by Gods Spirit; in respect of ourselues, they are [b] sharpe and bitter vntill by often tasting them, they are made more familiar vnto vs. In respect of the fruit which through the blessing of God ariseth from them, they are vnto the faithfull exceeding profitable, stopping them in the course of sinne, pricking them forward in the race of new obedience, preseruing them from the [c] condemnation of the World, and bringing forth the quiet fruit of righteousnesse vnto them, which are thereby exercised, as the Apostle speaketh, [d] Heb. 12.11.

a 2. Cor. 4. 17.

b Heb. 12.11. Lamen. 3.19.

c 1. Cor. 11.32.

d Heb. 12.11.

But this profit and fruit is not to bee attributed vnto afflictions in themselues, for if we respect them in their owne nature they are euill, and so the Lord himselfe stileth them; Esay 45. 7. I make peace, and create euill. So the Prophet speaketh. Amos. 3. Shall there bee euill in a City, and the Lord hath not done it? Yea as they are in themselues euill; so are they of a contagious quality spreading their poyson, and making those things euill which are good in their owne nature, and therefore the wise man saith, that all the dayes of the afflicted are euill. Of which Iacob hauing experience com-

Ser. 3. That afflictions are euill in their owne nature. Esa. 45.7. Amos 3.6.

Pro. 15.15. Gen. 47.9.

complaineth, that the dayes of his life had beene few and euill, in respect of the manifold miseries which he had indured. And this reason it selfe will teach vs, for what are afflictions (in their owne nature) but the punishments of sinne, the fruits of Gods iust displeasure, a prelude to death; small flashes of those endlesse flames of torment, the blacke guard of Hell and destruction, the first beginning of enerlasting torments, and enemies to our joy, peace and comfort, of which the faithfull at last shall haue the victory, when as all teares shall be wiped from their eyes, and they receiued into those eternall joyes, from which all these crosses and molestations shal bee for euer banished? Yea, though reason were silent, yet sense it selfe would learne vs this lesson, that afflictions are euill and to be auoided, seeing they are the mother and nurses of smart and sorrow, terrible in their very sound, fearefull to looke vpon, bitter to the taste, painfull to our feeling, and tormenting vs whilest they touch vs. Whereof it is, that the lamenting Church joyneth together her crosses and her griefes, and remembring her affliction could not forget her mourning, because though memory should haue failed, taste, distasted with this Wormewood and gall, would haue brought sorrow to minde, and ministred matter of just complayning. Remembring (saith she) my affliction and my mourning, the Wormewood and the gall, my soule hath them in remembrance, and is humbled in me. And hereof it is, that not onely wise men but Fooles and Idiots, yea, euen the bruit beasts that haue no vnderstanding, taught onely by sense and instinct of nature, doe flee these euils, and feare them at their first appearance, as robbing them of their pleasure, plunging them into griefe and misery, and tending to the hurt and vtter destruction of their essence and being. And as they are in themselues euill trees, so naturally they bring forth euill fruits, vnlesse grace being ingrafted in them doe alter their nature. As wee may see in the example of wicked men, who the more they are afflicted, the more they hate God, despaire of his mercy, murmure and repine against his prouidence, and vse all vnlawfull meanes, and wicked courses, to ease themselues of these afflictions, which they find so painfull to them: the which they would not doe, if these afflictions were in their owne nature simply good, seeing (as our Sauiour hath taught vs) a good tree cannot bring forth euill fruit. And therefore that extreame is to be auoyded, which some vndiscreetly run into, who because they often obserue men to bee bettered by their crosses, and that much better fruits doe vsually spring from affliction, than prosperity and worldly plenty, do condemne this estate as euill, and magnifie the other, as good and profitable in it selfe: as though our health and safety were to be ascribed to this deadly poyson, and not rather, to the loue and skill of our heauenly Physician, who by his wise tempering of it hath altered its nature, and being hurtfull in it selfe, hath made it helpfull vnto vs. And although afflictions serue as instruments and meanes to reclaime men from sinne, and to increase in them sauing and sanctifying graces, yet are we not simply to desire or pray for them, nor yet to afflict our selues and to pull crosses vnto vs, and lay them on our owne shoulders, seeing they are euill in their owne nature, and worke those former good effects not properly by themselues, but by accident, as they are so disposed by the infinite wisdome, goodnesse, and power of God, who is able to bring light out of darknesse, and good out of euill.

So with no lesse care, we must auoid the contrary extreame, whereinto worldly men run more vsually, who remaining still in loue with their sinne, which is the greatest euil, yea in truth, if we speak absolutely, and properly, the onely euill, doe abhorre and flee from these afflictions, esteeming them onely, or at least the most intolerable euill, which neuertheless doe not make men euil, but oftentimes (through the blessing of God) much the better. To which purpose weare to know, that howsoeuer afflictions are euill in their owne nature, yet not simply and absolutely (for thus sinne only is euill) but of an indifferent quality, and inclinable to goode. For if wee respect the chiefe efficient and author from whom they come, they are good, either as they are punishments inflicted by a righteous Iudge, or chastisements comming from the hand of a mercifull Father; neither can any euill, properly so called, proceed from the fountaine of all goodnesse, whose will is the rule of all Iustice and righteousnesse. And as proceeding from the chiefe goodnesse, as their author, they are therefore good; so also because they haue had for their subject the chiefe goodnesse, euen our Sauiour Iesus Christ God and Man, who whilest he liued in this World was as much afflicted as any other; whose most pure nature could not admit of any thing, which in its owne nature was simply euill, and was able to turne all things (which was not so) into good. Euen as the sweet perfume is not sweete to it selfe alone, but is able to make sweet whatsoeuer toucheth it. To which purpose one saith, that the man Christ contemned all earthly good, that hee might shew them to be contemptible; and sustained all earthly euils, which hee commanded others to beare with patience, that happinesse might not be sought in them, nor vnhappinesse feared in these. So also they helpe vs to come to this chiefe goodnesse, and in this respect also they are not euill; for God in his eternall counsell hath ordained them as meanes to fur-

Lamen. 3. 19.

Matth. 7. 18.

further his Elect in attaining to saluation. For those which hee knew before, hee also did predestinate to be made like to the image of his Sonne, that is, to be conformable vnto him in his sufferings, as elsewhere he expoundeth it. So he willeth, that no man should be moued or offended with these afflictions of the faithfull, seeing we our selues know that we are appointed thereunto. And thus they are the meanes to make vs draw neere vnto this chief goodnesse in this life, by true repentance, and feruent Prayer; and the way which leadeth to this eternall and heauenly happines, of which wee shall haue the full fruition in the life to come: for they are that narrow way and straight gate, which leade to these euerlasting ioyes; and if wee meane euer to come thither, wee must by many afflictions enter into the Kingdome of God, as the Apostle speaketh, Acts 14.22. So that in respect of Gods Decree and Ordinance they are good to the faithfull, because through his blessing they tend to their good, euen the furnishing them with Gods graces and the euerlasting saluation of their soules. Whereby it appeareth, that afflictions (in respect of their subject) are of an indifferent nature, good to those who rightly vse, and profit by them; and euill to those, who take occasion by them to hasten, and increase their condemnation in abusing them vnto sinne, wherein they are not vnfitly compared to the red Sea, which according to its owne nature drowned the Egyptians, but by the power and blessing of God was the meanes of the Israelites preseruation and deliuerance: for so these afflictions which drowne vnbelieuers and worldlings in the gulfe of desperation, doe serue for a ready, though strait, way, to conduct the true Israelites into the heauenly Canaan, and as a wall on either hand to keepe them from erring and going astray into the by-paths of sinne, and to preserue them harmelesse from the most dangerous assaults of their spirituall enemies.

CHAP. III.

Of the tentation of afflictions, and how it is vrged by the enemies of our saluation.

BVt howsoeuer afflictions through the blessing of God, and his ouer-ruling wisedome and power, become vnto the faithfull, not onely harmeles, but also profitable, and deserue as meanes to further their saluation; yet are they in their owne nature painfull and hurtfull, and so dangerous and pernicious vnto vs, that though wee had no other enemies, yet these were strong enough to giue vs a foyle or ouerthrow, and so hinder the saluation of our soules, if the Lord should withdraw his helping hand, and leaue vs to our owne strength. For in themselues they are the ground and foundation of a strong tentation; namely, that because wee are thus afflicted, it is a certaine signe that we are condemned of God as wicked and reprobate men, and for our sins iustly cast out of his loue and fauour; that wee are pursued by his wrath, which beginneth to inflict those deserued punishments vpon vs in this life wherewith wee shall bee ouerwhelmed in the life to come; and therefore that our estate is most miserable and desperate, our burthen for the present being intolerable and we without hope of ease for the time to come; if at least God hauing forsaken vs, wee doe not helpe our selues with our own power and politie, and (those meanes fayling which Gods Word warranteth as lawfull) wee doe not find some other meanes of our owne deuising, whereby we may bee eased and deliuered. The scope of which tentation is to ouerthrow our faith, hope, and affiance in God, as being our chiefe enemy, who doth thus afflict vs; to plunge vs into deepe despaire and so driue vs into all impatiencie, that thereby wee may bee moued to murmure and repine against the diuine prouidence, and euen to blaspheme God to his face; to cast off all profession of Religion, all feare and seruice of God as being bootlesse and vnprofitable, and finally to cease relying vpon his power and promises, and to vse all wicked and vnlawfull meanes for the remouall of these afflictions.

§. Sect. 2. How the tentation of afflictions is vrged by Sathan.

And this tentation being in it selfe very dangerous, is made much more strong and powerfull to worke our ouerthrow, as it is vrged and inforced by the spirituall enemies of our saluation. For Sathan is ready to tell vs that these afflictions are the iust punishments of our sinnes, and the signes of Gods wrath and heauy displeasure, that they are testimonies to assure vs that wee are cast out of his loue and fauour; for if God loued and delighted in vs, he would communicate his blessings vnto vs, which are the pledges of his loue, and not continually torment vs with these plagues and punishments, afflictions of minde and body, sicknesse and diseases, imprisonment and banishment, losse of goods and friends, and innumerable other miseries, which in his Law he hath threatned against the wicked and reprobate: And thus he vrged this tentation against our Sauiour Christ himselfe, vsing his power and worke of necessaries, as a reason to proue that he was not the Sonne of God. If (saith he) thou be the Sonne of God, command that these stones be made bread, as though he should haue said, thy poore and penny-ydden estate euidently euinceth thee not to be the Sonne of God, as thou doest boast thy selfe to be, for if thou wert, thou wouldest not be in such want and distresse as now thou art. And this is the not suffer thee to want common necessaries; or else at least thou hast power in thy selfe, to make prouision of fit meanes for the preseruing of thy life; and without dependancie on him, art able of thy selfe to make bread of stones wherewith thou mayest nourish thy body, and preserue thy life.

Matth. 4. 3. Luke 4. 3.

Q. Sect. 3. How the tentation of afflictions is vrged by the World.

But especially the World and wicked Worldlings enforce this tentation of afflictions. For as they are alwayes ready to persecute Gods Seruants, and both in their words and actions to do them all the hurt they can, by wrong, injustice, violence, and oppression, because they make conscience of their wayes, and will not run with them into the same excesse of riot and outragious wickednesse; that so they may discourage them in their vertuous courses, and make them to become as bad as themselues or else may satisfie their spight and spleene against them by vexing and tormenting them: so when by their meanes and malice they lye vnder these heauy burthens, instead of pitying or easing their distressed estate, with all their skill and power they increase their afflictions, aggrauate their sorrowes, and labour all they can to disarme them of all patience, whereby they might be comforted in their grieuous miseries. So the Lord saith, that when being angry with his people for their sinnes, he deliuered them into the hands of the Babylonians: they shewed no mercy vnto them, but did lay their very heauy yoke vpon the aged. And for this he professeth, that he was greatly angry against the careless heathen, but as for when he was angry but a little with his people, they helped forward their affliction. By all which, these wicked Worldlings doe adde such waight to this heauy burthen, as vnlesse the faithful were supported with the power of Gods might, it would presently ouer-whelme them. For first worldly wicked men (with whom sometimes Gods Seruants themselues conspire in this vnrighteous iudgement) thrust them downe, who are already falling, increasing and strengthning the afflictions, and decreasing and weakning the patience of the faithfull with their false censures and vniust condemnations; whereby they are ready vpon euery occasion to be offended, not onely at the crosse it selfe, but also at all men most miserable, abhorred and forsaken of God, and of all others to be the greatest sinners, either in respect of some apparent, which the world takes notice of, or secret hidden sinnes and grosse hypocrisie which the Lord hath seene in them, though they haue thought well of themselues, which hath mooued him in this extraordinary manner to afflict and punish them. Of this we haue an example in Iobs friends, who when they should haue dealt iust so with him, as they would haue done with any other man, vnder that colour of zeale to the glory of God vnto his heauy vexation of the sufferer, they forbare not to

Esay 47. 6.

Zach. 1. 15.

Iob 12. 6.

ence in those Iews who condemned the b Galilæans, and them vpon whom the tower of Siloam fell, to be greater sinners than all other men, because of those extraordinary iudgements which were inflicted vpon them: and in the c Barbarians, who seeing the Viper leape vpon Pauls hand, concluded presently that he was a murtherer, whom vengeance would not suffer to liue. Yea, euen in the Disciples themselues, who conjectured that either the d blinde man or his parents, had by some speciall sinne brought vpon him this speciall punishment. Againe, worldly men adde vnto the waight of affliction by insulting ouer those who are thus dejected, and treading in their necks, whom the hand of God hath cast down & humbled. And thus they e insulted ouer Dauid, f saying vnto his soule that there was no helpe for him in his God and elsewhere he complaineth that g in his aduersity his enemies reioyced and gathered themselues together, yea, the very abiects assembled themselues against him, tearing him and ceasing not; and that his teares were his meate and drinke, whilest they daily said vnto him, where is thy God? A particular example whereof we haue in Shemei, who in Dauids affliction insulted ouer him, h cursing him and saying, come forth thou murtherer and wicked man, the Lord hath brought vpon thee all the blood of the house of Saul, &c. And thus they railed on our Sauiour Christ himself hanging on the Crosse, i wagging their heads and saying, Hey, thou that destroyest the Temple, and buildest it in three dayes, saue thy selfe and come downe from the Crosse. And with this insulting and triumphing is often ioyned mocking and derision, as we may see in the example of afflicted Iob, who though in his prosperity hee were reuerenced as a King, yet in his afflictions he was k mocked by those who were younger than he, yea euen by abiect persons, whose fathers he had refused to set with the dogges of his flockes. So Dauid complayneth, that the wicked made songs of him, and l laughed him to scorne when hee was in misery; yea, it was not his case alone but common to him with all the Church, for being in captiuity, by way of derision, they willed them to m sing some of the Songs of Sion. Thus also Ieremy complaineth, n I am in derision daily, and euery one mocketh me. Yea, euen our Sauiour Christ himselfe, as hee had the greatest measure of affliction, so was hee reproued all other scorned and derided, for they put on him a Crowne of Thornes, & a purple Robe, they bowed downe vnto and mocked him saying, God saue the King of the Iewes. Finally, worldly men adde vnto the afflictions of Gods Seruants by contemning and despising them in their afflictions, for as they labour by all meanes to make themselues contemptible and of an abiect condition, so hauing brought

brought them into this estate, they despitefully despise them as the very off-scourings of all things. They make them poore by oppression or deceit, and then contemne them because of their pouerty; they load them with slanders and foule imputations, and then despise them as men defamed and of euill report; and in a word, they helpe to plunge them into all miseries, and then disgrace and lightly value them, as being miserable and of an abiect fortune. And this Iob obserueth, where he saith, that he who is ready to fall, is as a spent Lampe despised in the opinion of the rich. The which contempt, derision, insulting and spitefull censuring vsed by wicked Worldlings towards the faithful in their afflictions is much more intolerable, and giueth a farre more fierce assault to their patience, than all the troubles and miseries which they sustaine; for though they can be content to stoope and humble themselues vnder the hand of God, and quietly beare the burthen which hee layeth vpon them; yet their stomackes rise, and their hearts are ready to boyle with anger, and impatiencie, when men, who should rather pitty them, doe deride and scorne, contemne and insult ouer them in their distresse. But especially the strength of this tentation is increased, when as the afflictions of the faithfull are thus aggrauated, not onely by strangers from whom they expect no better, but also by their friends and acquaintance, by their kindred and allies, who are bound vnto them not onely in nature and neerenesse of bloud, but also by many benefits bestowed, and many good offices performed vnto them. For this made Iobs afflictions grieuous and intolerable, when vnto them were added the vniust criminations and hard censures of his friends, from whom hee expected comfort, whereas their mercy & compassion towards him would haue made his heauy burthen light, like a load carried vpon many shoulders. And this made him to complaine that they were miserable comforters, because they had opened their mouthes vpon him, and smitten him on the cheeke in reproch, and had gathered themselues together against him: that they spoke eloquently against him, vexing his soule and tormenting him with words; that they had many times reproched him and were not ashamed, but were impudent towards him. This made him to cry out in that great passion. Haue pitie vpon mee (O yee my friends) for the hand of God hath touched me. Why doe yee persecute me as God, and are not satisfied with my flesh? And as his afflictions were increased by the vnpleasing societie of some of his friends, who in steed of comforting tormented him, so by others of them, whilest they did abandon and forsake him, because of his afflictions; the which his misery in respect of this defection he elsewhere bewayleth; He hath (saith he) remooued my brethren farre from mee, and also mine acquaintance were strangers vnto me; my neighbours haue forsaken mee, and my familiars haue forgotten me, &c. Of this also Dauid complayneth. My louers and my friends stand aside from my plague, and my kinsmen stand afarre off, and elsewhere he saith, thou hast put mine acquaintance farre from mee, and made me to be abhorred of them. My louers and my friends hast thou put away from me, and mine acquaintance hid themselues. But most intolerable are the afflictions of the faithfull, when as their friends, from whom chiefly they expect comfort, doe not onely neglect this duty, but also are the meanes and instruments to bring vpon them all these miseries and crosses; and of this Dauid complayneth, My familiar friend whom I trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lifted vp the heele against mee: yea so strong was this tentation in his apprehension, that he was ready to sinke vnder it, as hee implyeth else-where. Surely (saith he) mine enemy did not diffame me, for I could haue born it, neither did my aduersary exalt himselfe against me, for I would haue hid mee from him, but it was thou, O man, euen my companion, my guide and my familiar, which delighted in consulting together, and went into the house of God as companions.

Iob 19.13,14.

Psal.38.12.

Psal 88.8.

Psal.41.9.

Psal.55.12,13,14.

Q. Sect. 4. How the tentation of afflictions is admitted and vrged by the flesh.

And as the world doth exceedingly enforce this tentation of afflictions, partly as the meanes of inflicting them, and partly as it doth aggrauate and increase them being inflicted: so the corrupt flesh is as ready to admit and entertain this tentation; and iudging all things according to sense and present apprehension, as in the time of prosperitie it swelleth with pride and presumption, perswading men that none more than they are in Gods loue and fauour, because they haue had the largest draught of temporall benefits allowed vnto them; so in the time of aduersitie and affliction, it is as basely dejected and plunged into the bottomles gulfe of horrour and despaire, perswading men that they are forsaken of God, and pursued with his wrath, which now beginneth to take vengeance against them. From whence proceedeth their murmuring and repining against God and his prouidence; their impatiencie to beare that crosse from which they haue no hope to bee eased; and their resolution to vse all vnlawfull meanes to vnburthen themselues, when lawfull meanes faile and will not helpe. So that this tentation of afflictions being so strongly vrged by the Deuil and the World, and so readily entertained by our corrupt flesh, must needs be very potent and powerfull to preuaile against those who are assaulted with it; and that not only meere worldlings, who esteeming the Worlds prosperity as their chiefe Paradise, doe abhorre affliction as their greatest Hell; but euen Gods faithfull seruants, who nourishing this traytour (the flesh) in their bosomes are betrayed by it, and so often foyled in this combate of tentations. Of the former we haue manifold examples among worldly wicked men, who being pressed with the waight of afflictions, seeke to ease their stomackes, by belching out their blasphemies against God; and feeling present smart, and hauing no hope of being eased for the time to come, fall into such impatiencie, that some languish in melancholy & discontent, refusing those comforts which they might enjoy, because they are depriued of some which they desire; and becomming in all things miserable through their owne wilfull choice, because in some things they are miserable through necessitie. Others tyred with the burthen of afflictions grow weary of their liues, and by laying violent hands vpon themselues, shorten their dayes wilfully, leaping into the endlesse torments of Hell, to auoide the temporary miseries of this World. Finally, others wanting strength and patience to beare their afflictions, and also this courage and desperate resolution to put an end vnto them by such a violent course, doe willingly fall into any manner of sinne, and practice all vnlawfull meanes, which seeme to promise vnto them the least hope of ease and freedome. Of the other we haue an example in the Israelites, who though they were the sole people of God, deliuered by his mighty power from their malicious enemies, and enriched with many blessings (as it were) from the immediate hand of God, yet being a little afflicted and pinched with want, doe murmure and repine against the Lord, their Creatour and Redeemer, being moued hereunto, sometime through a bare and false feare of not preuailing against their enemies, and sometime for want of such [b] meat as they lusted after, and of [c] water to quench their thirst. Yea, euen Iob himselfe renowned for patience, being sore pressed with the waight of afflictions; doth often breake out into great impatiency, vttering such words as were not farre from blasphemy, if they had proceeded from a setled iudgement, and not from a sudden and distempered passion. For he curseth his Natiuity, and wisheth that he had neuer bin, or that he had miscarried in the birth; he complaineth that God was his enemy, and that he did shoot at him his enuenomed Arrowes, that hee oppressed him by strong hand, without hearing his cause, and that his terrours did fight against him. Thus also Dauid by his afflictions was brought sometimes to the brinke of despaire, and sometime to bewray his impatiencie; for he cryeth out that he was forsaken of God, that hee heard not his prayers, nor regarded his roring, that Gods mercies were cleane gone, and his promises vtterly failed; that hee had rejected his soule and pressed him down with his terrors and indignation; that the state of the wicked was happy, & that he had washed his hands in innocencie in vaine, because he was punished and chastened euery morning. And the like or greater impatiency was shewed by the Prophet Ieremy, who also curseth the day of his birth, and the man, that brought first newes hereof to his father, and wisheth that his mothers belly had beene his graue, or her wombe a perpetuall conception, because he came forth of it to see labour and sorrow, and that his dayes should be consumed with shame.

a *Numb.*14.2.
b *Exod.*16.3.
c *Numb.*20.3.

Psal.31.22. 77.33.40.59. 73.13.

Ier.20.14.

CHAP. IV.

Of the preparation, which is required before the conflict of afflictions; and first of our spirituall armour which wee must buckle vnto vs.

BY all which it appeareth, that these tentations of affliction, though they be not altogether so dangerous and powerfull as those of prosperity, yet are they strong enough to ouercome vs, if wee be left to our selues, and to make vs the captiues of sinne and Sathan. And therefore, as on the one side we are not in such a cowardly manner to feare these mighty enemies, nor dispayring of victory to cast away our weapons, and betake our selues to flight: so on the other side, wee are not securely to contemne them, as being easie to ouercome; for if they haue foyled Gods greatest Worthies and most valiant Captaines; how shall not we be indangered, yea vanquished by them, if we were left vnto our owne strength, who are but vnexperienced weaklings and common Souldiers? But seeing the strength of our enemies, and our owne weakenesse, wee must be moued hereby by a liuely faith, to rest vpon the power of Gods might assisting vs, to implore his helpe and succour in this spirituall conflict; and then in the next place, to vse all the good means appointed by God, for the defending of our selues, and the obtayning of victory. Of which (as order requireth) I am now to speake; for as in worldly warres, it is requisite and necessary that we first know the nature, qualitie, disposition and strength of our enemies, and then accordingly to thinke of the meanes, whereby wee may bee inabled to make resistance and obtaine the victory; so must we do in this spirituall Warfare; & therefore hauing already entreated of the formes point, I come now to the other, in speaking whereof my purpose is (by the assistance of God) to shew, first the meanes wherby the Christian may be strengthened to beare with patience, and by bearing to ouercome all afflictions in generall; and then, besides the application of the generalls, to insist in the speciall meanes, whereby they may be armed and prepared against some speciall and particular crosses and calamities.

ring

The meanes, whereby wee may bee strengthened against all afflictions generally, may bee referred to two heads, for either they respect preparation, or else action and execution; for as in warlike expeditions, those who desire victory ouer their mighty enemies, do first prepare their forces, furnishing them with armour, weapons, and all other warlike necessaries, and then enter the field, courageously withstanding, or charging the enemy, wisely managing all the meanes prouided in the time of preparation for their best aduantage, and neuer giuing ouer their valiant fight, till they haue put their enemies to flight and obtained victory: so must wee in this spirituall Warfare, first prepare our selues for the fight, and then manfully & Christianly demeane our selues in the day of battell. And vnto this preparation the Sonne of Syrach perswadeth all those, who intend to serue the Lord in this spirituall Warfare. My Sonne (saith he) if thou wilt come into the seruice of God, stand fast in righteousnesse and feare, and prepare thy soule to tentation; settle thine heart and be patient, bow downe thine eare, and receiue the words of vnderstanding, and shrinke not away when thou art assayed, but wait vpon God patiently. For if all bee deferred to the day of battell, and no preparation made before we enter the field, and the alarme bee founded; if in the time of peace, wee neuer thinke of Warre, and in prosperity, neuer prepare for the day of aduersity and affliction; if wee neuer expect nor feare the enemy, till he be in sight & ready to encounter vs, but are then to be trained in this martiall discipline, when we should fight; to seeke for weapons, when we should vse them; and to put on our spirituall armour, when as already the skirmish is begun, it is a thousand to one that we shall be wounded to the death in the first encounter, put to flight, and easily ouercome, being altogether vnable to make any resistance.

Now vnto this preparation there is required, first that wee prouide and put on the spirituall armour, and then that wee bee trained in the knowledge and skill of this Christian Warfare, whereby wee may be enabled to vse our weapons, and strength to our best aduantage; vnto which is required the learning and obseruing of certaine rules and instructions, whereby wee may know how to carry and demeane our selues in this spirituall conflict. The weapons and armour required to this Warfare are nor the sword, speare and canon, nor the harnesse and shield of iron and steele, for we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against spirituall wickednesses, as the Apostle speaketh; but that spirituall armour of a Christian, euen all Gods sanctifying and saluing graces, with which if wee bee furnished, wee shall by them bee inabled to make resistance and obtaine the victory, partly because, knowing the goodnesse of our armour wee shall bee more bold and confident, and valiantly sustaine the fiercest encounter in hope of victorie, and partly, and that more principally, because the Lord of hosts our great commander, which hee seeth vs armed, with his owne furniture, and adorned with his owne colours, will graciously acknowledge vs for souldiers of his owne band, and strengthen and assist vs with his owne almighty power, whereby we are sure to put our enemies to flight and obtaine the conquest. Neither will it stand with the glory of our mighty Generall, to haue his owne faithfull souldiers and seruants to bee foyled and ouercome, or to haue his owne furniture, armour and weapons to bee found weake and insufficient, when they come to be tried and approued. Eph. 6.12.

Now the first part of this spirituall Armour, which we must put on in this time of preparation, is sauing knowledge; for this is the eye of the soule, which must guide vs in all our trauels, & that heauenly light, which must direct vs in these crooked and rugged wayes, which if wee want, we shall stumble and fall at euery stone of offence, and loose our selues in this labyrinth of troubles; it is the pilote which must gouerne and guide vs in these tempestuous stormes of miseries and afflictions, whilest wee saile in the dangerous Sea of this wretched World, without whose helpe wee shall dash against the rockes of desperation, bee ouerset and swallowed with the boysterous blasts, and huge billowes of troubles and calamities, and so make shipwracke of our soules; in a word, it is the sterne and Carde, from which wee haue all our direction through this sea of miseries into our heauenly country, without the helpe whereof we should hold wrong courses, and neuer find the way into the hauen of rest. But if we haue the eye of sauing knowledge illightned with the bright-shining beames of the holy Scriptures, we shall be so guided thereby, that wee shall easily ouercome all difficulties, escape all dangers, and notwithstanding all these lets and impediments, safely attaine vnto the end of our hopes, the euerlasting saluation of our soules. For if we haue learned out of Gods Word that all these afflictions come from God, and that not as an angry iudge, but as a mercifull and louing Father; not as signes of his displeasure, but as testimonies of his fauour, and markes of our adoption; not to punish vs for sinne, but to purge vs from it; not to destroy, but to increase and plant his graces in vs; not to condemne vs, but to further our saluation; making this streit gate and narrow and afflicted way, to serue for a passage and entrance into the ioyes of heauen, and finally, that the Lord our louing Father will not correct vs without measure, and aboue our strength, yea no more nor longer than is necessarily required for our amendment, and for the better fitting of vs for his seruice and our glory; and that then hee will deliuer vs from all these troubles, Apoc.21.4. Esa.61.3. wipe all teares from our eyes, and giue vs beauty for ashes, the oyle of ioy for mourning, and the garment of gladnesse for the spirit of heauinesse: then shall wee be sufficiently strengthned against the day of triall, withstand all these sharpe encounters, and obtaining victory ouer these enemies of our saluation, we shall with peace and comfort hold on the iourney course of righteousnesse towards our heauenly country, and bee rather furthered than hindred in our iourney by their assaults.

Q. Sect. 4.
Of the first part of our spirituall armour, which is sauing knowledge.

Vt nauis cum vndarum tempestate quassatur nisi gubernatorem periti simum habeat, à fluctibus mersa aut obruta conteritur: ita & homo cum in aliquibus aduersis fuerit constitutus, nisi habuerit mentem diuini eloquij erudite animum sibi frangitur & salutis sue substantiam demergit. Basil. tract. de consol. in aduers.

6. Sect. 5. Of the second part of our spirituall armour, which is a iustifying faith.

The second part of this Armour is a liuely and iustifying faith; for this is that impenetrable shield, which cannot bee pearced with these fiery darts, and that high and impregnable rampire and bulwarke, which our spirituall enemies can neither mount with their longest scaling ladders, nor batter and ouerthrow with their strongest engines of trials and temptations. And therefore, if we would ouercome by patience, when we are assaulted with afflictions, wee must in our preparation buckle vnto vs this shield of faith, and lay this foundation vpon which our patience chiefly resteth: for these two alwayes goe together, so that if faith goe not before, it is impossible that true and Christian patience should follow after. And hence it is, that they are conioyned in the Scriptures; so the Apostle exhorteth vs to Heb.6.12. be followers of them, who through faith and patience inherit the promises; and thus the Apostle Iohn coupleth them together, Here (saith he) is the patience and faith of the Saints. If ther wee would ouercome the World, as well when it frowneth as when it fawneth, and stand inuincible both against his bewitching allurements, & proud threats, let vs buckle vnto vs this faith, as a principall part of our Christian Armour, wherby we are enabled to get the conquest, 1.Iohn 5.4. for this is the victory, that ouercommeth the World, euen our faith. The which will euidently appeare vnto vs, if we consider, that it is faith alone which pulleth out the sting of afflictions, and so maketh them to become harmelesse; for thereby we are assured of remission of our sinnes, of our peace and reconciliation with God; and therefore that wee are not now punished as slaues, but chastised as sonnes; the which maketh vs not onely patient, but euen ioyfull in our afflictions; for as the Apostle saith, Rom.5.1. being iustified by faith we haue peace towards God through our Lord Iesus Christ, and in this faith we stand and reioyce, not only in the hope of the glory of God, but also in tribulations. So is faith onely, which giueth vnto vs title and interest vnto all the gracious promises of the Gospell, as being the alone condition of the couenant of grace betweene God and vs; and therefore as without faith, all the comforts of the Gospell are no comforts vnto vs, because wee haue no right vnto them; so being indued therewith, wee haue our share and part in them all, whether they concerne this life or the life to come. For example, by this faith we are assured that Iehouah is our Lord and King, our Redeemer and Sauiour, our sanctifier and preseruer; that he is on our side, and therefore wee neede not to feare who oppose against vs; that hee will deny nothing vnto vs which is good and profitable; Rom.8. Vers.32. for if hee spared not his owne sonne, but gaue him for vs all to death, how shall he not with him giue vs all things also, as the Apostle speaketh: that hee ruleth and disposeth all things with his prouidence, and particularly all our crosses and calamities, euen to the falling of the least hayre of our head, and therefore that all shall turne to our good, Rom.8. and worke together for the best, through his wisedome, power and goodnesse, ordering them to this end. Furthermore by this faith we are so firmely vnited vnto Iesus Christ our Head, that nothing can deuide vs, whereby wee are assured, that there is not any thing, Rom.8. which can separate vs from Gods loue, because nothing can part Christ and vs, in whom he loueth vs. So hereby wee are certainely perswaded, that Iesus Christ did not onely suffer for vs, but that he doth also suffer with vs, who is able to ease and comfort vs, by vpholding vs when we are ready to faint, and bearing the greatest part of our burthen. That if wee suffer with Christ 2.Tim.2. we shall raigne with him, and that our light and momentanie afflictions shall cause vnto 2.Cor.4.17. vs, a farre most excellent, and an eternall weight of glory. Finally by this faith we are assured, that God himselfe is present with vs in all our troubles, that hee measureth out vnto vs this bitter draught in a just and conuenient proportion, and when hee hath wrought in vs his owne good worke of grace, hee will remoue the crosse, and giue vnto vs a joyfull deliuerance. So that there are no comforts like those which are brought vnto vs by a liuely faith, vnto which when we haue attained in full measure, we may in all our afflictions say with the Psalmist, God is is our hope and strength, ready to bee found. Therefore will we not feare though the earth be moued, and though the mountaines fall into the middest of the Sea, though the waters rage and bee troubled, and the mountaines greatly shake at the surges of the same. Neither is there any triall or tentation so great, which faith doth not easily ouercome, as the Apostle maketh it plaine vnto vs in the example of Abraham, who by faith offered vp his onely sonne Isaac when he was tryed; and of the rest of Gods Saints, who being strong in faith, bore with patience those great afflictions; being content to indure the racke and would not bee deliuered, that they might receiue a better resurrection; to bee tryed by mockings and scourgings (the one whipping the soule, the other the body) by bonds & imprisonment, by stoning and cutting in sunder, ouer which they triumphed, as glorious conquerers, by their faith, as the Apostle witnesseth. And therefore if we would stand in the day of battel, we must in our preparation buckle vnto vs this shield of faith which is the chiefe instrument of deriuing vnto vs from God all comfort & consolation.

The third part of our Armour, is a firme trust and affiance in God through Iesus Christ, the which (as also those other parts that remaine) is the fruit of a liuely faith; for being thereby assured that God is both omnipotent in power, and almighty to saue and deliuer vs, infinite in wisdome and knowledge, beholding and disposing, as all other things, so all our troubles and afflictions; and that as in himselfe hee is loue and truth, so hee is most louing and careful ouer vs, and alwayes ready to make good his promises, concerning his assistance and our deliuerance; we rest & rely vpon him in all our afflictions for help & succour as vpon our omnipotent and all-sufficient creatour, preseruer & redeemer; and resigne our selues ouer vnto him our most faithfull Sauiour; hauing a firme and strong affiance and confidence in him, that hee will vphold vs in all our troubles, and deliuer vs from all our afflictions, when as it shall bee most fit for his owne glory, and our spirituall and euerlasting good. And this is that confidence wherewith if we be indued, wee shall thereby bee meruailously vpheld in all our trials, and haue our patience so strengthened and confirmed, that we shall easily beare all afflictions which hee shall lay vpon vs, in whom wee put our trust, and couragiously indure the brunt of all tentations, not fearing what may befal vs, seeing all things are ordered and disposed by his most wise prouidence, who is our chiefe Rocke of defence, vpon whom wee rest in all difficulties and dangers. An example whereof we haue in Iob, who being so confident in Gods mercy and goodnesse, that he professeth [a] though he should kill him, yet hee would trust in him; was also a patterne of pacience to all posterity; and so Dauid resting vpon the Lord, as vpon his [b] rocke and fortresse, his deliuerer and strength, his shield, the horne of his saluation and his refuge, is hereby so armed with patience, that in his greatest affliction he saith, [c] heere am I, let him doe to me as seemeth good in his eyes, and when as in his greatest distresse hee was forsaken of all other hope and helpe, hee is said to haue [d] comforted himselfe in the Lord his God. This made him, when sense of paine would haue forced him to murmure & complaine, to hold his peace and beare all with patience because [e] the Lord had done it. Yea as hereby hee patiently suffered his present euils, so hee was bold and confident against all future crosses, for [f] trusting in God, he did not feare what man could doe vnto him; yea hee professeth, because the Lord was his [g] shepheard, and tooke care of him, that though hee should walke through the valley of the shadow of death hee would feare no euill; and that [h] he slept securely, not fearing ten thousand of his enemies enclosing him about, because the Lord sustained him. And therefore if wee would haue our patience confirmed and strengthened both against present and future euils, wee must seeke to attaine vnto this affiance, and trust in God, as in our mighty and mercifull Father; and so shall wee with patience and meeknesse depend vpon his prouidence, both for supplying of those wants which pinch vs, for our preseruation from those dangers we feare, and for deliuerance from these present miseries and afflictions, which we feele and suffer; seeing he is all-sufficient to prouide for vs, omnipotent to defend vs, and infinite both in power and loue to saue all those who trust in him.

[a] Iob 13.15.
[b] Psalm 18.1.2.
[c] 2 Sam. 15.26.
[d] 1 Sam. 30.6.
[e] Psal 39.9.
[f] Psal. 56.4.11.
[g] Psal. 23.1.4.&
[h] 3.5.& 4.8.

9. Sect. 7. Of the fourth part of our spirituall armour, which is Hope in God

The fourth peece of armour, which wee must prouide against the day of triall, is hope in God, whereby wee expect the performance of all those promises, which are made vnto vs in the Gospell, and especially such as concerne Gods assisting and strengthening of vs in the day of tentation, or our deliuerance from all our troubles. The which also is a fruit of our faith and affiance in God; for when wee beleeue all his gracious promises made vnto vs, for the supplying of our wants, protection from perils, and deliuerance from those euils which wee sustaine and suffer; and doe relye vpon them with assured confidence; then doe wee also wait Gods leasure attend his pleasure, and hopefully expect when these promises shall bee performed, and made good vnto vs for our vse and benefit. And this the Apostle teacheth vs, where he saith, that Faith is the ground of things hoped for, and the euidence of things which are not seene Heb. 11. 1.

seene; and the Prophet implyeth it, where he willeth those that beleeue, not to make haste, but to wait Gods leasure, and hopefully to expect the accomplishment of his promises. Now as this hope is the daughter of faith and affiance, so it is the nurse of patience, whereby it is fed and nourished, and so strengthened and vpheld, that it cannot faint or fall. So the Apostle telleth vs, that wee are saued by hope which expecteth things inuisible, and if we hope for that we see not, wee doe with patience abide for it. And thus doth our hope strengthen our patience, as it expecteth the performance of Gods promises, either respecting this life or the life to come. In respect of this life our patience is confirmed, whilest we hopefully expect the performance of Gods promise for our deliuerance out of our afflictions, and in the meane time his assistance to strengthen vs, in the bearing of all those crosse and calamities which he layeth vpon vs: for when wee hope that our troubles will haue an end, and that the cloud of calamities being blowne away, the Sun of Gods fauour will shine againe vnto vs; when wee expect rest and peace, after our labour and dangerous Warfare, and that our mourning shall bee turned into joy, and our troubles into comforts; then doe wee beare the present brunt with patience, in respect of these future hopes; and are eased in those miseries which wee feele, by that immunity and freedome which wee expect. And thus doth the Mariner whilest the storme lasteth, take excessiue paines to saue his ship and life, in hope that it will be ouerblowne, when as againe he shall haue faire weather and a good passage; thus doth the poore man patiently indure his toylsome labour, whilest hee hopeth that his paines will bring riches, and his riches rest; thus doth he who is tormented with a feauer, beare with patience his present griefe, whilest he hopeth for the end of his fit, and the recouery of his health; and thus doth the poore traueller patiently hold out in his weary iourny, whilest he hopeth for sweet repose at his iourneys end. Whereas when hope vtterly faileth, the sayler letteth his ship roame at the mercy of the wind and weather; the poore man loytereth, preferring ease rest before hopelesse labour; the sicke man is as much tormented with impatiencie, and tyred with tossing, as with the sense and smart of his sickenesse and disease; and the poore traueller fainteth not more for want of rest, than for want of hope of attaining the end of his labour. But especially is our patience confirmed by those hopes which respect the life to come; for then wee cast away euerything that presseth downe, and the sinne that hangeth so fast on, and run with patience the race which is set before vs, when wee looke vnto Iesus the author and finisher of our Faith, who for the joy which was set before him endured the crosse, despised shame, and is set at the right hand of the throne of God. Then doe we patiently beare all crosses and troubles, when our faith apprehendeth and our hope expecteth (after our light and momentany afflictions) a farre most excellent and an eternall crowne of glory: because wee count that the afflictions of this present time are not worthy the glory which shall be shewed vnto vs: then doe wee with Moses refuse to bee heires of worldly happinesse, and chuse rather to suffer aduersity with the people of God, than to enioy the pleasures of sinne for a season; esteeming the rebuke of Christ greater riches than treasures of this earthly Egypt, when we hopefully expect the recompence of reward; and that all teares being wiped from our eyes, wee shall haue fulnesse of joy; and pleasures at Gods right hand for euermore. Then doe wee patiently endure the miseries of this life, when in respect of future hopes, they are not all able to make vs miserable: and finally then doe wee with quiet meekenesse suffer with Dauid long furrowes to bee made on our backes, and submit our selues to be euen harrowed with crosses, and to bee threshed and winnowed with these tentations, when as faith assureth vs, that the seede of happinesse is sowne in the deepe furrowes of affliction, and hope expecteth a fruitfull haruest. Whereas on the other side if hope forsake vs, then our patience also; and no sooner doe wee despaire of helpe and deliuerance, but presently wee begin to bewray our impatiency, murmure and repine against Gods prouidence, and euen to blaspheme him to his face, as Satan judged of Iob, out of his owne experience.

The fifth peece of armour, which wee must prepare and put on, to strengthen vs against the assaults of afflictions and tentations, is charity and the true loue of God, for as this is the oyle which maketh vs nimble and actiue in obedience, and in the workes of godlinesse; so also it suppleth and softneth the swelling tumors of our corruptions, whereby Christs yoke becommeth ease and his burthen light, and if this heauenly flame haue illightned and warmed our hearts, it will so mitigate and euen extinguish the fire of afflictions, that it cannot burne vs, and make it more like a colour or shadow, than any substance or reall quality; or if wee be scorched by it, this heauenly and vitall heat will draw out that which is earthly, and so take away and ease vs of all griefe and torment. For it is the nature of loue to make things strange to become familiar, difficult things ease, and causeth men both to attempt, and also happily to atchieue that which otherwise would seeme

Isa.28.16.

Rom.8.24.25.

Ipsa spes peregrinationi necessaria est, ipsa est quæ consolatur in via, via tor enim quando laborat ambulando, idèo laborem tolerat, quia peruenire sperat. tolle illi spem perueniendi, continuò frangantur vires ambulandi Aug. in Rom. 8. 31. Tom. 10. Serm. 16.

Heb.12.1.2.

1.Cor.4.9. Rom.8.18.

Heb.11.24.25. Apoc.21.4. Psalm.6.6.

§ Sect.8. Of the fifth peece of spirituall armour, which is charity and the true loue of God.

seeme impossible. So that if wee loue the Lord, nothing will bee hard vnto vs which he enjoyneth vs, his will and pleasure will be the rule of our contentment, and whatsoeuer commeth from him for the triall of our loue & obedience, we will take it well at his hands, and beare it not onely with patience, but euen with gladnesse and reioycing, seeing wee haue fit occasion to approue our loue vnto him by these trialls. Againe our loue to God is a notable meanes to worke and increase in vs patience in afflictions, because our loue toward him assureth vs of his loue towards vs, seeing our loue is but some small reflection of that heauenly heat, and but a little sparke of that infinite diuine flame; neither doe wee beginne with him, but wee loue him, because he loueth vs first, as the Apostle speaketh. Now whosoeuer is thus assured of the loue of God towards him, he may also with patience beare those crosses which come from him, seeing they are not the punishments of a just judge, but the chastisements of a louing Father, in which hee aymeth not at his hurt and destruction, but at the bettering of his estate, and the euerlasting saluation of his soule. Furthermore this loue worketh patience by giuing vs hope and assurance of our deliuerance, seeing hereby we know, that God taketh no delight in the torments of those that loue him. And therefore when hee hath effected his owne good worke in vs, and hath recouered our spirituall health by these bitter and vnpleasant medicines, hee will minister them no more vnto vs: but as he can, because his power neuer faileth him; so hee will, because his loue neuer faileth vs, deliuer vs in most conuenient time out of all our troubles, and in the meane while will be present with vs, and so support vs with his might, that though we be sometime foyled, yet we shall neuer be ouercome. And these bonds of loue, whereby God hath voluntarily tyed himselfe to helpe and succour vs, he hath further strengthened by the strong and inuiolable cable of his truth, promising deliuerance (to those that loue him) out of all their euils and afflictions; Because (saith he) he hath loued me therefore will I deliuer him, I will exalt him because he hath knowne my name, he shall call vpon me, and I will heare him, I will bee with him in trouble, I will deliuer him and glorifie him, with long life will I satisfie him, and shew him my saluation. Or if in his wisedome hee thinketh it fit to continue vpon such their crosses and calamities, yet shall they not hurt them, but bee turned to their good. For he hath assured vs, that all things (euen troubles and afflictions) shall worke together for the best vnto them that loue God. Finally seeing afflictions are that narrow way, and straight gate which leadeth vs into Gods presence, and no man can come vnto him, but by the difficult passage of trialls and tribulations; therefore loue, desiring nothing in comparison of Gods presence, and fearing nothing so much as to be excluded from it, doth make vs not to respect the foulenesse of the way, by which we are conducted to that faire end of our desires, and to trauell not onely with patience, but also with joy in this vnpleasant passage, rushing through those thornes and briars of troubles, which would stop and hinder vs, leaping ouer all blockes of difficulties which lye in the way, and running resolutely through Fire and Water, tortures and torments, thicke and thinne, not caring what wee indure and suffer, so wee may come vnto God, whom wee so deerely loue, and in his fruition haue fulnesse of joy for euermore. And therefore, if wee would beare with ease this cumbersome burthen of afflictions, let vs labour after loue, which will make it light; if wee would not bee weary in trauelling this foule way, let vs chuse loue to accompany vs in our iourney, and so hauing the Lord continually for the obiect of our sight, and hasting to enjoy him whom wee so dearely loue, wee shall not tyre in our trauels, but patiently passe all difficulties, and with much joy and comfort come at the length to our iourneyes end.

Rom. 8.19.

Psal. 14.15.

Sect. 8.

Rom. 7.14. & 14.22.

9. Sect. 9.
Of the sixth peece of our spirituall armour, which is true humilitie.

The sixth part of our spirituall armour is true humility, by which our patience is so notably strengthened and confirmed, that we may surely conclude, where the one is, there is the other, and where there is a great measure of humility, there also there is patience in like proportion. An example whereof wee haue in Iob, who as he was a paterne of patience, so also of humility: for in sight and sense of his owne baseneſſe, hee saith to corruption, thou art my father, and to the worme, thou art my mother, and my sister. And so vile he was in his owne eyes, when he appeared in Gods presence, that he abhorred himselfe, and repented in dust and ashes: So Dauid who had so debyed himselfe, that he was in his owne sight a flea, a Partrich on the mountaines, yea, a worme and no man, in his afflictions was armed with like patience, laying his hand vpon his mouth, because God had done it. But aboue all is the example of our Sauiour Christ, who as he exceeded all men in humilitie & meeknesse, so also in patience; and as being the glorious Sonne of God, equall to his Father, he was content in humility to abase himselfe and to become of no reputation, taking vpon him the state of a seruant, and submitting himselfe in obedience to his Father, to the death, yea the shamefull death of the crosse; so being in this affliction, hee as much exceeded all in patience, offering his backe to the

Iob. 17.14.

chap. 42.6.

Psal. 39.9.

Phil. 2. 6.7.

the smiter, and his cheeke to the nippers, and with meekenesse suffering his face to bee buffeted, his head to bee pricked with thornes, his body to bee whipped, and after crucified, and that when almost all scorned and derided him, and none pitied him in his miseries; all which he suffered with meekenesse, and when he was oppressed and afflicted, hee opened not his mouth, but was brought as a sheepe to the slaughter, and as a sheepe before the shearer is dumbe, so hee opened not his mouth; and as the Apostle speaketh, when he was reuiled, reuiled not againe; when hee suffered, he threatned not, but committed it to him that iudgeth righteously. And therefore if wee will learne of Christ, and imbrace and imitate his meekenesse and humilitie, then will wee also with patience take his yoke vpon vs. For if wee haue an humble conceite of our selues, in respect not onely of our vilenesse and basenesse, but also of our corruption and sinfulnesse: then will we alwayes conclude, that our condition, though neuer so meane and miserable, is yet better than wee haue deserued; that if wee had our due, we should suffer farre greater punishments: and that it is the great mercy of the Lord that we are not vtterly consumed, as the Church confesseth in her greatest afflictions; and this will make vs not onely with patience, but also with thankfulnesse beare lighter crosses, when as wee know and acknowledge that we haue justly deserued to haue farre heauier laide vpon vs. Moreouer, if we be thus humbled in our owne eyes, then will wee deny our selues and all that is in vs, that God may be all in all; then will we submit our will, which is subject to bee mislead by errour and ignorance, vnto the will of God, and bee contented in all things to be guided and gouerned by his prouidence, because he is infinite in wisedome, and knoweth what is best for vs; infinite in power, and therefore able to effect what his wisedome seeth best; and infinite also in loue and compassion, and therefore alwayes ready to bring good vnto vs out of the greatest euill. And this is that which the Apostle requireth, namely, that those who suffer according to the will of God, should commit their soules to him in well doing, as vnto a faithfull creatour, resting contented with his good pleasure, in whatsoeuer estate it is his will to place and bestow them; whether it be prosperity or aduersity, health or sickenesse, plenty or pouerty, honour or dishonour, life or death. An example whereof wee haue in Dauid, who in his greatest extremitie submitted himselfe to Gods good pleasure: Here I am (saith he) let him doe vnto me as seemeth good in his eyes. As also in iust Iob, who being spoyled of all his great substance, and brought to extreame pouerty, humbled himselfe and worshipped, saying, Naked came I out of my mothers wombe, and naked shall I returne thither; the Lord hath giuen, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord. And againe being grieuously afflicted with sores and sickenesse, and prouoked to impatiencie by his wife, he saith vnto her, Thou speakest like a foolish woman. What, shall we receiue good at the hand of God, and shall we not receiue euill? But aboue all, the example of our Sauiour Christ is to bee propounded vnto vs for our imitation, who being to suffer the cursed and shamefull death of the crosse, and the heauie burthen of Gods wrath due to our sinnes, which his naturall and humane will most feared and abhorred, yet with all humilitie and patience submitteth himselfe to his Fathers pleasure; O my father (saith he) if it be possible let this cup passe from mee; neuertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt: and againe, O my Father, if this cup cannot passe away from me, but that I must drinke it, thy will be done. And if we can thus submit our wills vnto the will of God, and resigne our bodies, soules and states to bee ordered and disposed of according to his good pleasure, it will exceedingly lighten our burthen, and ease our smart: whereas if this humilitie be wanting, there will bee nothing but impatiencie, murmuring and repining, fretting and fuming, as though our punishment were aboue our fault, and we suffered things farre vnworthy of vs. By which meanes the waight of our afflictions is exceedingly aggrauated, for whereas in their owne nature they did onely presse vs, now also they vex and gaule vs; like the yoke caried by the stubburne and refractarie oxe, which by his much struggling fretteth off the skinne, whereas it might bee caried with ease and without hurt, if hee would goe quietly, submitting himselfe to his owners pleasure. Finally, this humility whereby wee deny our selues, and yeeld in all things vnto Gods good will, is most necessary for the time of affliction, not onely as a meanes to confirme our patience, whilest the hand of God is vpon vs, but also to free vs from all our crosses and calamities; for aboue all other sinnes the Lord like a wise Father correcteth in his children their pride and stubbornesse, and although other offences may bee the causes mouing him to chastize them, yet if with meeknesse and quietnesse of Spirit, they submit themselues in all humility vnder his chastizing hand, he will in tender compassion spare them, and not deale with them according to their sinnes, nor reward them according to their iniquities: whereas if they shew themselues stubborne and rebellious, proud and impatient, whatsoeuer their faults bee, which were the occasion of their correction, hee will in this case lay on loade and Esai.50.6.7.

Esa.53.7.
1.Pet.2.23.
Lamen.3.22.
1.Pet.4.19.
2.Sam.15.26.
Iob.1.21.
Iob.2.10.
Mat.26.39.
Psal.103.10.

and not spare, till he haue broken and pulled downe their stomacks, brought them vpon their knees, and haue caused them to submit themselues with all humilitie and meeknesse vnto his good will and pleasure. Which when hee hath effected, then hee will spare vs as a louing Father spareth his onely Sonne, and being humbled, he will not only cease correcting vs, but also receiue vs into his former fauour, and set his face vpon vs for good and not for euill. So the Lord saith, that he taketh delight to dwell with him, that is of an humble and contrite spirit, to reuiue the humble, and to giue life to them that are of a contrite heart, and that when Children are thus broken & humbled, he will not contend with them for euer, nor be alwayes wroth, for so the spirit should faile before him: but vpon this humiliation hee will be reconciled, exalt them who are thus abased, and take them vp in his armes of mercy and compassion, who haue cast themselues downe, acknowledging their faults, and crauing pardon, as we may see in the example of the prodigall Sonne.

The seauenth part of our Christian Armour, to strengthen vs against the assaults of affliction, is vnfained repentance for our sinnes, euen an hearty sorrow for our sinnes past, in this respect, because by them wee haue dishonoured and displeased our gracious God and mercifull Father, a true hatred of them both in regard of their owne vglinesse, and also of the bitter fruites of misery and affliction which spring from them, and a stedfast purpose of heart to leaue and forsake them for the time to come, and to serue the Lord in the contrary duties of holinesse and righteousnesse, all the remainder of our liues. For if wee doe thus begin, and often renew our repentance as we renew our sins, then shall we thereby most assuredly either preuent these afflictions, and keep them from falling vpon vs, or bee deliuered from them, if already they be imposed, or finally beare them with such patience and comfort, that they shall be vnto vs not only harmelesse, but euen good & profitable. Concerning the first, the Lord giueth vs a generall rule for the expounding of all his threatnings, that they are alwayes to be vnderstood vpon the condition of impenitency, and our perseuerance in sinne; namely that if wee goe forward in our wickednesse, and will not be reclaimed by these threats, then the iudgements threatned shall surely be inflicted, but if wee forsake our sinne, and turne vnto the Lord by vnfained repentance, then this obligation of threatning, binding vs to satisfie Gods iustice by suffering punishment, is made voide and cancelled. So also the same rule is giuen for the expounding of Gods promises, namely, that if we continue to feare and serue him, they shall bee made good vnto vs; but if like wandering Planets, wee retrograde in the wayes of godlinesse, and slide backe into our former course of wickednesse, then also this bond assuring vs of Gods blessings, is made frustrate and of no vertue vnto vs, because the condition thereof is not obserued. Of this the Prophet Ionas seemeth to haue beene forgetfull, which maketh him so mush out of patience, because Niniueh was not destroyed, according to the outward letter of his threatning: whereas Gods truth and their preseruation and deliuerance, might well stand both together, seeing this threatning was not absolute but conditionall, and they made it voide by their publicke and solemne humiliation and repentance. But the Lord plainely expresseth it by his Prophet Ieremie: I will (saith he) speake suddenly against a nation, or against a Kingdome to plucke it vp, and to roote it out, and to destroy it: but if that nation against whom I haue pronounced turne from their wickednesse, I will repent of the plague that I thought to bring vpon them. And I will speake suddenly concerning a Nation, and concerning a Kingdome, to build it, and to plant it, but if it doe euill in my sight, and heare not my voyce, I will repent of the good that I thought to doe for them. And hereupon hee calleth the people of the Iewes to repentance, that so they might escape his iudgements in the same place threatned against them. Speake thou therefore (saith he) vnto the men of Iudah, and to the inhabitants of Ierusalem, saying, thus saith the Lord, Behold, I prepare a plague for you, and purpose a thing against you: returne you therefore euery one from his euill way, and make your wayes and your workes good. So elsewhere to the same purpose: Breake vp (saith he) your fallow ground, and sowe not among thornes, be circumcised to the Lord, and take away the fore-skin of your hearts, yee men of Iudah and inhabitants of Ierusalem, lest my wrath come forth like fire, and burne that none can quench it, because of the wickednesse of your inuentions. And againe: Goe and cry these words towards the North, and say, thou disobedient Israell returne, saith the Lord, and I will not let my wrath fall vpon you, &c. And in another place: Now therefore amend your wayes, and your workes, and heare the voyce of the Lord your God, that the Lord may repent him of the plague that he hath pronounced against you. So when by a dreame the Lord had threatned against Nebuchadnezzar a strait full iudgement for his Idolatry, pride and cruelty: the Prophet Daniel counselleth him, to breake off his sinnes by righteousnesse, and his iniquities by mercy towards the poore, that this might be a healing of his error. So powerfully doth not repentance

Ier.18.7,8,9.

verse.11.

Ier.4.4.

chap.36.3.

Dan.4.24.

tance preuaile with God, for the with-holding of his threatned punishments, that euen after sentence of condemnation is pronounced, execution begun, and Gods messengers and serjants are sent out already for the attaching of sinners with his judgements; those who haue vnfainedly repented of their sins, haue a protection from God, and being intertained for his seruants, and made knowne so to be, by his liuery and cognizance, are priuiledged from this generall arrest, and exempted from hauing any part in these common calamities. So the Lord intending to bring destruction vpon the inhabitants of Ierusalem, commandeth his Angell to goe Ezek. 9.4,5,6. through the middest of the Citie, euen through the middest of Ierusalem, and to set a marke vpon the foreheads of them, that mourned and cried out for all the abominations that be done in the middest thereof. And to the other Angels, the Ministers of his wrath and vengeance he said, Goe after him through the Citie and smite; let your eye spare none, neither haue pitie: destroy vtterly the old and the young, the maids, and the children, and the women, but touch no man vpon whom is the marke, and beginne at my Sanctuary.

§ Sect. 11. That repentance is a notable meanes, whereby wee may be freed out of afflictions.

By all which it appeareth, that vnfained repentance is a notable meanes for the preuenting of Gods judgements, and the escaping of those afflictions, which our sins haue deseruedly drawne vpon vs. Whereas if wee continue in impenitency, we shall inflame Gods wrath against vs; if wee be not offended with our selues for our sinnes, wee shall make God offended with vs; if wee will not iudge our selues, wee shall not escape Gods iudgements; if we doe not in sorrow and humilitie lay them open by confession before God, the Lord will lay open our shame by our fearefull punishments before men. And finally, if we doe not by vnfained repentance take vpon our selues an holy reuenge, that God may be glorified; Gods anger will wax hot, and hee will glorifie his owne name by manifesting his iustice in our confusion. For sinne deserueth anger and iudgement, and anger and iudgement it will haue, either from our selues, or else from God; neither need we to feare that wee shall haue them from both, seeing our condemning and punishing of our selues, by vnfained sorrow for our offences, doth make vs stand absolued and acquitted before the Tribunall of Gods iudgement. But as repentance is a preseruatiue to keepe vs from the taynture and infection of miseries: so being falne into them, it is a singuler Antidote to expell this poyson, and a restorative to recouer vs vnto our former estate and condition. And as the Lord is ready vpon our true repentance to pull backe his iudgements, when they are ready to fall vpon vs; so being plunged into them, he is ready to pull vs from them, as the Ninevites were vpon the last with penitent and contrite hearts we humble our selues before him, imploring mercy and forgiuenesse. For as the Lord is slow to anger, so when he is prouoked, he will Psal.103.8. Ier.3.12. not alwayes chide, nor keepe his anger for euer. And of this we haue continuall experience in the people of Israel in the time of the Iudges and Kings, who no sooner repented of their sinnes, but the Lord presently forgaue them, and eased them of their afflictions. And our Sauiour hath left a perpetuall president of it in the prodigall sonne, whom his father vpon his conuersion and humiliation receiued into his fauour, comforted him in his distresse, & relieued all his wants. With these examples agree plaine places of Scripture: for thus the Lord inuiteth his people of the Iewes vnto repentance, that hee might deliuer them out of all their calamities, into which they were plunged by reason of their sinnes. O yee disobedient children (saith he) returne and I will Ier.3.22. heale your rebellions. So by the Prophet Ezechiel he willeth the people to returne from Psal.85.4. Iam.5.20. their transgressions, that so iniquitie might not be their destruction, protesting vnto them, that he desired not the death of him that dyeth, but rather that they should returne and liue. And when as the people thought it too late to returne, because not onely the sentence was passed out of Gods mouth, whereby they were adiudged to punishment, but execution also was already begun, for so they say, If our Ezek.33.10. transgressions and our sinnes be vpon vs, and we are consumed because of them, how should we then liue? The Lord returneth this comfortable answere by the Prophet: Say vnto them, as I liue, saith the Lord God, I desire not the death of the wicked, but that he turn from his way & liue. Turne you, turne you from your euil wayes, for why will ye die, O ye house of Israel? And as this wel becommeth the infinite mercy and goodnes of God, so it also agreeth with the rule of reason, that where the cause is taken away, there the effect also must needs cease. For our sinnes are the causes of our afflictions, as appeareth by the words of the Apostle, where hauing shewed how the Corinthians sinned in vnworthy receiuing of the Sacrament, hee addeth, for this cause 1.Cor.11.30. many are weake, and sicke among you, and many sleepe. And for the continuing and multiplying of our sinnes, is the cause which moueth the Lord to continue and multiply our afflictions; for if notwithstanding his more gentle chastisements we will not obey him, but walke against him stubbornely, then (as he Lev.26.21,24. 1.Sam.5.10. hath threatned) then will walke stubbornely in hiring or against me, and will also chastise you seuen times more according to your sinnes; for when he hath begun, he also will make an end, either for our conuersion and reformation, or for our confusion and destruction, as he saith to Eli. Whence we may inferre that as sinne is the cause which moueth the Lord to inflict

and

and continue his corrections vpon vs, so the leauing and forsaking of these sinnes will moue him to pardon vs & grant deliuerance.

And thus doth repentance vsually through the infinite mercy of God, free and deliuer vs from those afflictions and miseries, into which sinne plungeth vs: But if the Lord for his owne glory, our triall, and the exercise and increase of his graces in vs, doth after our true repentance, suffer still the crosse to lie vpon vs; yet are wee so eased and strengthened hereby, that we beare his chastizements not onely with patience and peace, but also with joy and comfort. For then we are ready to sinke vnder our burthen, when vnto the waight of our afflictions is added the intolerable waight of sinne, and of the wrath of God which doth accompany it; and then we faint vnder the easiest load, when wee are weakened with selfe-guiltinesse, and consider that the sins which we nourish in our bosomes and are loath to leaue, are the causes of all our miseries. But when we haue cast away euery thing that presseth downe, and the sinne that hangeth fast on, when wee haue vnburthened our selues of our owne load, & beare onely that which God hath imposed, then shall we truly find that our afflictions are but light, as the Apostle speaketh, and that when we are most pressed with them, we may euen runne with patience the race which is set before vs. Now repentance doth take away all our sinne, not by merit, but through Gods mercy and his gracious and free promises made vnto it; and maketh vs to appeare innocent, as though these sinnes had beene neuer committed by vs; and consequently it plucketh out of our afflictions the sting of sinne, and of Gods anger due vnto it, it maketh them to become harmelesse vnto vs, so that like the Serpent without a sting, they may feare vs with their hissing, but cannot hurt vs with their biting: Neither (as one saith) can aduersitie harme vs, if iniquitie like a Tyrant doe not reigne ouer vs. For if we haue truly repented vs of our sinnes, then are we assured by Gods infallible truth, that they are pardoned and quite blotted out of his remembrance; that we are now reconciled vnto him, and of enemies, are become seruants and children; that now there is not onely peace betweene vs, but euen loue and amity; and that therefore the afflictions we beare, are not the fruits of enmity and wrath for our destruction, but trials, whereby our gracious Father prooueth and approueth our loue and obedience; and whereby our Captaine and great Commander trieth our valour, our skill in the Christian Warfare, and the goodnesse of those spirituall weapons and armour, wherewith he hath fitted vs against the day of battle. From which assurance of peace and amity with God, ariseth peace of conscience, which doth exceedingly comfort and strengthen vs in all afflictions, pouerty and imprisonment, griefes and sicknesses; yea euen in the agony of death it selfe, as our Sauiour implyeth in that speech to the sicke of the Palsie; Sonne, be of good comfort, for thy sins are forgiuen thee. Finally, this peace with God, and peace of conscience, which followeth true repentance, is also accompanied with joy in the Holy Ghost, whereby we rejoyce in Gods mercy and the assurance of our saluation, not onely in prosperitie, but also in aduersity and tribulation, as the Apostle speaketh. The consideration whereof should make vs earnestly indeuour and labour in the practice of repentance; and not to be discouraged with the present bitternes and vnpleasantnesse which we feele in it; seeing wee shall find, that (as one saith) these teares are full of joy, and this mourning the matter of our mirth; and therefore let vs grieue with this griefe which is the mother of rejoycing, and not rejoyce with that joy which is the parent of heauines; let vs poure out these teares which are the seeds of pleasure, & not laugh with that laughter, which shall end in wailing and gnashing of teeth; let vs (as the Apostle speaketh) repent with that repentance which is neuer to be repented of, and not imbrace the joyes of the impenitent, which shall be accompanied with eternall sorrow and lamentation. And because we haue it not at our owne becke, let vs beg it of God, & seeing in our corrections we behaue our selues like vntamed bullocks, which are not hurt so much with the waight of the yoke, as with their owne strugling and impatience, let vs pray earnestly with the Church: Conuert thou me, and I shall be conuerted, for thou art the Lord my God.

The last part of armour which wee must prouide and put on, is a good conscience, by which the heart is defended against the assaults of affliction; so that though the outward parts (as it were) the vtmost sconces and forts, bee battered and beaten downe with crosses and calamities, yet so long as this Bulwarke remayneth sound and strong, it will so defend the castle of the heart, that it will neuer be surprized and sacked, nor be cowardly yeelded vp vnto our spirituall enemies. And this good conscience the Apostle requireth in those who wil professe the faith of Christ, and suffer for their profession; because (as hee addeth) it is better if the will of God be so: that we suffer for well doing, than for euil doing. Now that wee may obtaine this, there is required not onely that wee labour to keepe our conscience cleere towards men, by leading a spotlesse and vnblameable life, but also towards God, by doing all good duties in simplicity & sincerity of heart; and that as much as in vs lieth, wee nourish in vs innocencie, & be faultles & vnreprouable, as also that we adorn our soules & bodies with

Matth. 9. 2.

Rom. 5. 3.

Hæc lachrymæ multâ sunt plenæ lætitiâ, huiusmodi luctus lætitiæ materia, &c. Chrysost. hom. ad pop. 66.

Ier. 31. 18.

9. Sect. 13. Of the eighth peece of our spirituall armour, which is a good conscience.

1. Pet. 3. 16, 17.

Acts 24. 16.

all vertue and pietie; for this is the chiefe meanes of getting and retaining a good conscience, when as wee keepe it cleere and vnspotted of sinne. But if through frailtie and infirmitie, wee haue defiled our consciences with the filth of sinne and wickednesse, then in the next place wee must labour to purge and cleanse them, washing out these spots and staines with the precious bloud of Christ applyed by faith, and by the teares of vnfained repentance, issuing from the fountaine of a contrite heart: for by faith our sinnes are not imputed vnto vs, and by repentance (as I haue said) they are so done away, and quite blotted out of Gods remembrance, as if they had neuer beene committed by vs. And this is the meanes to get and preserue a good conscience, which when we haue attained vnto, it will serue as a brazen wall against all the assaults of affliction, and so strengthen and confirme our patience, that we shal not sinke nor faint in the greatest troubles; neither can (as one saith) tribulation, treachery & treason, nor any thing else, deject and cast downe a godly minde thus armed and defended. But as a sparke or fiery cole falling into water, is presently extinguished: so the heate and excesse of all sorrow and griefe is cooled and quenched, when it befalleth him, who hath a good conscience. And therfore if we would haue patience in the time of trouble and affliction, let vs keepe our consciences cleere and vnspotted from sinne, and adorne our selues with all grace and godlinesse, for other vertues and patience are inseparable companions, which alwayes accompany the one the other; and therefore the Apostle linketh them together; Ioyne (saith hee) vertue with your faith, and with vertue knowledge, and with knowledge temperance, and with temperance patience, and with patience godlinesse, &c. For if we haue our soules adorned with these vertues and graces, and bring forth the fruits of new obedience, it is a notable means to confirme our faith and hope in God for helpe and deliuerance, according to that; turne thou to thy God, keep mercie and iudgement, and hope still in thy God; and being assured hereof, wee doe with patience waite Gods leisure for the accomplishment of his promises. And this appeareth in the examples of Gods Saints; for thus doth Iob in his greatest extremitie comfort himselfe, and strengthen his patience, by calling to minde his diligence and vprightnesse of heart in the seruice of God; which Sathan knew well enough, and therefore sought to disarme him of this helpe, and to plucke from him this stay of his patience, whilest he vsed his wife and three friends as his instruments, to conuince him of hypocrisie and impietie against God. And thus doth Ezechias comfort himselfe & strengthen his faith, hope, and patience, by calling to minde his integrity of heart in Gods seruice; I beseech thee O Lord (saith he) remember now, how I haue walked before thee in truth, and with a perfect heart, and haue done that which was good in thy sight. And so Dauid doth vsually comfort himself, and confirme his patience, by remembring his innocency, and sincerity in the performance of all good duties both towards God and his Neighbours, as appeareth in many places of the Psalmes. But contrariwise where the conscience is defiled and stained with sin; there is nothing but impatiency, murmuring and repining, because selfe-guiltines maketh them that are afflicted to conceiue of God as of their enemy, and that the miseries they suffer, are the punishments of a reuenging Iudge, and not the chastizements of a louing Father. So that an euill conscience maketh the smallest and lightest afflictions great and intolerable; because it selfe being most heauy and burthensome, doth adde exceeding waight to this loade of the crosse, pressing the bearer down like water in leaden vessels, which would be carried with ease in leather or wood. To this purpose (one saith) that among all tribulations and humane griefes, there is none greater than a conscience burthened with sin; for if a man be not wounded in conscience, but whole and sound within when he suffereth any outward affliction; he will flie thither, and there he will find his God; but if there be no peace there, because God will not be where iniquitie aboundeth, what shall a man then doe, and whether shal he flie when he suffereth tribulation, seeing whithersoeuer he goeth, this enemy will pursue & torment him? In which respect hee compareth in the same place an euill conscience to a piece of wood rotten at the heart, which though it may make a faire shew on the outside whilest it is vntouched and vntryed, yet if it be put into the building, it indureth not when it beareth any waight; or if it bee touched with the axe or wedge, it easily flyeth into fitters, and discouereth its inward rottennesse; whereas a good conscience which maketh outwardly no great shew nor flourish, is like a piece of timber, which though it be rotten on the outside in the sappy parts, yet is sound at the heart, and appeareth better the more it is tried, and strongly beareth the greatest waight that lieth vpon it. Let this therefore bee our care, that hauing our consciences cleere we doe not suffer as euill doers, but let vs either retaine our innocency whilest wee haue it, or regaine it, when we haue lost it, by true repentance; for a good conscience bringeth comfort, and comfort patience in afflictions; whereas there can be no consolation where there is guiltines of ill deseruing, and without comfort nothing but impatiency, shame and horror of mind, as the Apostle implyeth, where hee exhorteth that none of the Vacare culpa in calamitatibus maximum est solatium, Crantor apud Plutarch. de consol. ad Apollonium.

Chrysost. ad pop. Antioch. Homil. 25.

2. Pet. 1. 6.

Hosea 12. 6.

Iob 31.

Psal. 34.

the faithfull ſuffer as a murtherer, or as a thiefe, or an euill doer, or as a buſie bodie in other mens matters; but that if any ſuffered as a Chriſtian, hee ſhould not be aſhamed but glorifie God in this behalfe. Or though men could ſhew patience in their ſufferings for their faults, it were not worthy commendations, neither is it much to be reſpected what is ſuffered, but who it is, and for what hee ſuffereth. And this the Apoſtle elſe-where ſheweth This (ſaith he) is thankworthy if a man for conſcience towards God, indure griefe, ſuffering wrongfully: For what prayſe is it, if when yee be buffeted for your faults ye take it patiently? but if when you doe well, you ſuffer wrong, and take it patiently, this is acceptable vnto God, as appeareth in the example of Chriſt, who being moſt innocent, was alſo moſt patient, not reuiling when hee was reuiled, nor threatning when he ſuffered, but committing all to him who iudgeth righteouſly. And with the Apoſtle accordeth a worthy Father, ſaying: that the patience of theſe men who ſuffer in a bad cauſe, and for their demerits, is rather to be admired than commended; yea, in truth neither to be admired nor commended, becauſe it is no true patience at all; rather their ſtupid ſenſleſnes is to be admired; but that they haue any true patience, it is vtterly to be denied: neither is there heere any thing which deſerueth to be commended, nor profitably to bee imitated and inforced; yea, much more juſtly may we judge ſuch a minde worthy greater puniſhment, being vicious and wicked, by how much the more it hateth the inſtrument and meanes of reclayming it to vertue. And againe he affirmeth, that patience is the companion of true wiſdome, and not the ſlaue of luſt and concupiſcence, the friend of a good conſcience, and not the enemy of innocency. And therefore when you ſee a man ſuffer any thing with courage and quietneſſe, doe not forth with commend his patience, which nothing ſheweth and approueth, but onely the cauſe of ſuffering; for then onely our patience is true when our cauſe is good, and diſcerned from that which is falſe and counterfait, when it is not defiled with the corruption of concupiſcence, &c.

CHAP. V.

Of the rules and cautions, which are to be obſerued in our preparation vnto the conflict with afflictions.

HItherto much concerning the ſpirituall armour of Gods graces: Now we are to ſpeake of the rules and cautions which are to bee learned and obſerued, for the well managing of our ſpirituall weapons, and the better demeaning of our ſelues in this conflict of tentations, that thereby our patience may bee confirmed, and we inabled to endure the encounter of afflictions with aſſured hope of a triumphant victory. And firſt wee muſt before the day of battel, carefully and diligently vſe all good meanes ordained by God, for the furniſhing of our ſoules with all thoſe ſauing graces before ſpoken of, which are that ſpirituall armour of proofe, whereby we are defended againſt the aſſaults of afflictions. And chiefly and principally wee muſt heare, meditate, and ſtudy in the Word of God with all diligence, as being an eſpecial means to comfort and vphold vs in all our troubles and trials, without the helpe whereof, it is not poſſible for vs to ſtand in the day of tentation. And this Dauid found by his owne experience, expreſly concluding, that except Gods Law had beene his delight, hee ſhould haue periſhed in his affliction: for the Word of God is the Sword of the Spirit, whereby we defend our ſelues, repell all the fury of our ſpirituall enemies, and obtaine victory ouer them in the day of battaile; it is our ſoules armorie, wherein are ſtored all our weapons and munition, which we muſt vſe in this ſpirituall conflict; it is our light to guide vs in this hard paſſage; our ſtaffe to lead vs out of this labyrinth of troubles; our Card and Compaſſe to direct in this Sea of miſeries vnto the happy Hauen of our eternall reſt. In it alone is contained the Art of our Chriſtian Warfare, and the ſumme of our Military Diſcipline, which inſtructeth vs how wee muſt order our forces, and how wee muſt march, when wee muſt aſſault the enemy, and when we muſt decline & auoid his force and fury. It is our Captaine, both to conduct and aſſiſt vs in this fight of tentations, and our chiefe encourager in bearing the brunt of the battell, whileſt it offereth vnto vs the wages of our Warfare, and holdeth out the Crowne of victory to thoſe, who valiantly outcome: it is the food by which wee are nouriſhed, ſtrengthened and made hearty to indure the encounter, and whereby we are refreſhed and cheared when wee are faint and weary; it is our Second and ſuccour, which rayſeth vs when wee are falne and foyled, yea, and (as Dauid ſaith of it) our quickener and reuiuer, when wee are wounded to death; it is our ioy in all ſorrowes, and our delight not only when wee liue in all wordly proſperity, but (as he alſo ſpeaketh) when trouble and anguiſh are come vpon vs; and that refreſhing ſhoure, which if we call by a liuely faith, wee ſhall thereby be inabled to beare all aſſaults, and haue our ſtrength renewed not onely to withſtand, but alſo to purſue the enemies of our ſaluation. Finally, it is our chiefe Comforter in all our miſeries and afflictions, as Dauid found by good experience, whileſt it teacheth vs,

Pſal.119.92.

Pſal.119.81,50. Verſ.143.

that all our crosses and calamities doe come from God, as the chastizements of a gracious Father, and are so ordered and disposed by his wise and powerfull prouidence, that they shall all tend to our spirituall good: the inriching of our soules in this life with all saiuing graces, and the furthering and increasing of our heauenly happinesse in the life to come.

9. Sect. 2. The second rule is, that we be frequent and feruent in prayer.

A second and most especiall meanes, which wee must diligently vse, that wee may bee strengthened against the day of affliction, is frequent and feruent prayer, euen an humble confession of sin, and an acknowledgment, that all Gods fearefull plagues and punishments are deseruedly due vnto vs, a desire of pardon in and for Iesus Christ, and deprecation of those punishments, which by our sinnes wee haue deserued; or finally, if it please the Lord either for our triall, or chastizement, to lay affliction and the crosse vpon vs, that then it will also please him so to arme vs with faith, patience, and all other sanctifying and saiuing graces, that wee may with meeknesse and comfort, beare whatsoeuer he shall lay vpon vs, come more pure and approued out of this fiery furnace, haue our selues bettered and amended, more strengthened in grace and all goodnes, & brought neerer vnto God, both in respect of the illumination of our minds, and the reformation of all our courses in our liues and conuersations. For if wee thus humbly and penitently acknowledge and confesse our sinnes, and earnestly endeuour to leaue & forsake them, we shall haue mercy, & find the Lord faithfull to forgiue them. If we thus lay them open, the Lord is ready to couer them, if wee condemne and adiudge our selues to punishment, he will be ready to absolue and acquit vs, if with the Prodigall wee prostrate our selues at his feet, as not worthy to behold his face, hee will imbrace vs with the armes of pitty and compassion, & if we confesse in regard of our demerits, that the place of a seruant is too good for vs, he will receiue vs into the place of Sonnes, pardon all that is past, and not thinke the best things hee hath too good for vs. And as vpon our humble confession, hee will bee ready to take away the guilt of sinne, so also he will free vs from the punishment: and if at all hee afflict vs, our crosses shall bee chastizements, and fatherly corrections, which he will inable vs to beare, and turne to our good, vnto whom being afflicted, he will be mooued by our seruent prayers, to giue and deliuer vs from our calamities, to wipe all teares from our eyes, and to restore vs to our wonted ioyes of his gracious benefits, as in many places of the holy Scriptures, hee hath promised vs to doe. The which also we see verified in the example of Dauid, who by his faithfull and feruent Prayers was deliuered from apparent dangers, so as they did not touch him; and was often by the same meanes deliuered out of his afflictions, when for his sins he was ouertaken by them; as also in the people of Israel, who confessing their sins, and craiuing pardon and deliuerance out of their affliction, were heard of God, and had their suites granted. And the like might be said of Iob, Ionas, Daniel, Esdra, Nehemiah, Manasses, and many others. If therefore we would be prepared against the day of afflictions, so as we may either escape and auoid them, or withstand and ouercome them, we must exercise our selues in effectuall Prayer. For this is the Horsemen, and Chariots of Israel, which calleth more and stronger forces to our aide, than all our enemies that stand against vs; this is the pillar of our strength, whereby we, who are so weake and ruinous, that we are ready to sinke and fall, when the least storme of aduersitie bloweth against vs, or the lightest waight of affliction lyeth vpon vs, are vpheld and stand fast in faith and patience in the greatest tempests of troubles, and vnder the mountainous waight of the greatest calamities. This is the hand of our soules, to reach out and receiue grace and strength from God, whereby we are supported and kept from fainting in our most grieuous afflictions; and finally, our Hammer, by which knocking at the gates of Gods mercy in our miseries and extremities, wee haue legions of Angels sent to comfort vs in all our crosses, and to deliuer vs out of all our troubles.

Prou. 28. 13. 1. Iohn 1. 9.

Luke 15.

Matth. 7. 7. Psal. 50. 15.

Iudg. 11.

9. Sect. The third rule is, that in the time of our prosperity, we labour diligently in the moderating and mortifying of our inordinate affections and vnruly passions, that wee may bring them into subiection vnto the good will of God, and make them seruiceable vnto holy reason. For whilest they thus hold their place, and yeeld obedience to them, vnto whom God and Nature hath made them inferiour and subordinate, there will bee in all states peace, quietnesse, and good order: whereas if their slauish seruants ride on horsebacke, and make reason and religion, which are their lawfull Soueraignes to goe on foot; if they sit on the Throne, and these on the footstoole; if they (like common people) usurpe gouernment ouer the other, which should be their Princes and Commanders; and like tyrannicall Vsurpers, rule when they should obey, then will this Anarchie yeeld nothing but rude disorder & tumultuous confusion; making men in the time of prosperity to commit Rapes and Riots, Insolences and Outrages, Injustice, Violence and Oppression, and in the time of aduersity and affliction, to fall into impatiency and clamorous complayning, murmuring and repining, rebellion, and so to become ready instruments of committing any wicwickednesse, which passion (like popular rage) doth prompe and suggest, if it offer the least hope of helping them out of miserie. More particularly, if wee would haue strength and patience in the time of affliction, we must before the time of tryall subdue and moderate the passion of feare, which doth much aggrauate the waight of misery, and is often times more burthensome and intolerable than the euill suffered, both because it doth disarme and weaken the minde of resolution, and doth anticipate and seaze vpon griefes before they come; yea oftentimes on those which are onely fained in the imagination, and neuer in truth happen vnto vs. So also we must in the time of our prosperity limit and confine our vnlimited hopes, for the further they are extended and inlarged, the more are wee dejected when they faile vs; the higher they lift vs vp the more grieuously are wee crushed, when they forsake and cast vs off; and commonly where there hath beene no bounds for our expectations, there will be no measure in impatiency and griefe, when things much desired and expected answere not our hopes, seeing men vsually take it as heauily to haue the contract of hope betweene their hearts and the things they loue, made frustrate and disanulled, as to be diuorced and separated from them after their fruition. The like also may be said of our concupiscence and desires, which if they bee not moderated according to the necessity of nature, but left at libertie to their owne inordinate lusting after superfluities and things vnnecessary, they will set vpon the racke of discontent, when they are not satisfied, making lesser crosses great crosses, & the lightest afflictions intolerable burthens. And thus he who immoderatly desireth great riches, is not only impatient of the least losse, but also of small gaines, because they doe not answere his greedy desires; he who excessiuely affecteth vaine glory and popular applause, is as much distempered in his minde for receiuing too small commendations, as another would be in the greatest disgrace. And thus he who setteth his minde too much vpon worldly delights, discouereth his tender and effeminate heart, when he sustaineth the lightest crosse; yea if euen his pleasures faile him altogether, or succeed not in that manner, measure and degree, which hee inordinatly fancieth and desireth. Thus also must we in the time of our prosperity, exercise our selues in moderating and mortifying of our vnbridled and rash desires; for if a man be froward and discontented, when he is in all his desires crossed and displeased, what is to be expected but that he will be starke mad with fury, when he is crossed and thwarted? If he be peeuish and fretfull when he is made prosperous wanton, and the worlds darling; what patience is to looked for, when he lyes groning vnder the crosse, forsaken of his friends, and scorned by his enemies? So we must labour to mortifie discontent, and in all things to submit our wills to Gods good pleasure. For he who out of melancholicke wantonnesse is discontented with plentie; how can hee with patience indure want and penury? He who is not well pleased in the fruition of those great benefits of health and strength, pleasures and liberty; how vnsauourie and ill relishing will sicknesse and weaknesse, paine and imprisonment, be to his dainty palate? He who cannot be contented, when he enjoyeth all that he can almost wish and desire; how impatient is he like to shew himselfe, when he hath plenty of nothing but wants and grieuances, and how sensible will he be of smart and miserie? So likewise wee must subdue our pride, haughtinesse of Spirit, and the fruit thereof swelling emulation, wherby men study and labour to match their superiours, and excell their equals. For pride is the very nurse of impatiency, making men to fret and rage, murmure and repine, when they suffer those things, which in their proud conceit they think vnworthy of them; to grind their teeth with disdaine, when they are forced to stoope vnder the crosse, and to gaule their neckes, whilest they are constrained to beare the yoke of affliction, more with their impatiencie and struggling, than with the waight of the burthen which lyeth vpon them. So also it maketh the shame of their aduersity more intolerable than the smart; and whilest they could with some patience beare their miseries, if they were onely miserable to themselues, they are altogether impatient, because they are knowne to beare them. So also emulation in prosperity doth much aggrauate mens sorrowes in the time of affliction, when as those triumph ouer them, whom they haue emulated; and they disdaine them, whom formerly they haue disdained. Neither doth it more trouble men to haue gone backward in the iourney of their desires, than that they haue beene out-stripped by them, with whom they haue contended; nor to be miserable in their owne sense and feeling, than to be so in the sight of the others prosperity and happinesse. Finally we must labour in our prosperity, to moderate and keepe vnder those contrary passions of sorrow and joy; for he who will weepe, when (as it were) he but looketh vpon the whippe, will howle and cry out when he feeleth it; he who will mourne when he hath no cause, will be mad with griefe, when the waight of affliction lyeth heauy vpon him. And so hee, who immoderatly reioyceth in his prosperity commonly immoderatly sorroweth in the time of aduersity; hee who exulteth with joy, because the World smileth on him, is vsually as much dejected with griefe when it lowreth and frowneth. Whereas those who with the Apostle vse the things of this life, as though they vsed them not, they can also with him abound and want, beare with patience euill report, rejoyce in their sorrowes, liue in dying, and hauing nothing, possesse all things. Those who doe not swell with prosperity, are not broken with aduersitie; and the minde which is so solid and constant, that it is not much raised aboue its ordinary pitch with worldly felicity, cannot be much depressed and abased with the waight of worldly misery and affliction.

1. Cor. 7. 31.

2. Cor. 6. 8. 9.

Q. Sect. 4. The fourth rule is, that we must not faine vnto our selues afflictions in our conceit and imagination.

The fourth rule is, that we doe not faine afflictions vnto our selues, in our conceit and imagination, nor lay crosses vpon our owne shoulders by a false opinion, when as God layeth none vpon vs, giuing vnto accidents that befall vs by our impatient apprehension a poysonous sting to torment vs, whereas in themselues they would bee so voyde of ill, that wee might put them into our bosomes without receiuing harme; but that then alone we take vpon vs the burthen of sorrow for our miseries and affliction, when as necessity, and not will, layeth it vpon vs. For how many are there who through conceit become wretched before their time, and are onely miserable, because they are so in their owne apprehension; vnto whom the saying of Menander may bee well fitted; Thou hast borne nothing burthensome, but that which thou hast laide vpon thine owne shoulders? For as it is the nature of opinion, to make things worthlesse, esteemed, bad things indifferent, and indifferent excellent; so also it hath the contrary power of making good things seeme euill, and such as are of an indifferent nature to become odious and intolerable; whereby it giueth life and being vnto afflictions, which otherwise would not haue any existence to hurt vs, if wee did not make them malignant by our owne fancie. Thus some torment themselues with anger and discontent, because they haue not the chiefe place, and vpper hand at meetings, resalutations from those whom they haue saluted, respect and obseruance from their inferiours, and commendation and applause for their good parts and well deseruing, not because the want of these much harteth them in truth, but onely in their owne opinion, by which they ouervalued these trifles, and made them things of great worth; not that they might not be happy without them, but because their conceit hath made them necessary to their wel-being. And thus some grieuously afflict themselues with sorrow, because they haue lost some part of their abundant wealth, which if they had still possessed, they would neuer haue injoyed; and where as they haue no other hurt in truth, but that they are purged of superfluity, and and eased of a burthen, yet they are as much vexed for the losse of these transitory trifles, as for the losse of their liues and saluation of their soules, because their opinion hath ouerprised their wealth, shrined it in their hearts as their most adored idoll, and giuen vnto it that honour and respect which is due onely to God. Whereas if superfluous abundance were thought a burthen, it would also bee thought an ease to be freed from it; if riches according to their true value were but lightly esteemed, then their losse would bee as light, and so borne without paine or difficultie. And the like may be truely said of all worldly things, which in their absence or presence become the matter and occasion of the most afflictions according to the value and estimation which opinion setteth on them. Yea so powerfull is opinion in producing these effects, that not onely a false apprension causeth a true affliction, but it is able also to turne comforts into crosses, benefits into miseries, and that which this mans opinion doth make his hell, another mans opposite conceite, would make his heauen and happinesse. And so vehemently doth this opinion fasten vpon vs these imaginary afflictions, that they become much more intolerable, and wee more impatient in bearing them, than those which haue their being and waight from their owne nature and true existence. Yea and oftentimes they are more hardly remoued, and they comforted, who haue cast themselues vnder them, than in other calamities; because the roote of the disease is internall through the errour of our judgement, and so oftentimes wilfull and of choyce, rather than imposed by any necessity & constraint, which wee naturally auoyde. Neither is there any other meanes to cure this sickenesse, and to ease the minde of the burthen of this affliction, but to remoue or rectifie the cause, which is a false and ill grounded opinion, by spirituall wisdome and a sound judgement, informed and instructed by the Word of God; whereby our minds being illightned, and the mists of errour dispelled, which are cast before the eyes of our vnderstanding, by either sense, passion or carnall reason, wee shall be inabled to judge of all things according to truth, and as they are in their owne nature, whether they are to bee desired as good, or auoyded as euill; or betweene both, neither much to bee affected, or much to be shunned, as being of a meane and indifferent quality. And so shall not imaginary afflictions afflict vs, neither shall wee make those crosses to vs, which are no crosses in themselues; nor those heauie and intolerable, which in their owne nature are light and easie. Whereas if wee bee misled by blind and deceiuing opinion, wee wee shall not onely make those crosses, which wisdome would make benefites, but so aggrauate the least afflictions which lye vpon vs, that they will become intolerable. For as it is the nature of opinion to put shadowes and shewes, for reall existences, so also it doth (as it were) bombase our afflictions, which are truely so called, and like spectacles makes small ones to seeme great, whilest it doth aggrauate them as though they were new, vnheard of, and neuer suffered by any other, although in truth they are common and ordinary. And therefore if we would haue patience in the day of tryall, and indure the assaults of affliction with vndaunted courage, let vs pull off these false vizards, which opinion putting on, doth make them thereby to appeare more terrible, and let vs looke vpon their owne naturall visage with a wise and iudicious eye, esteeming them onely afflictions which haue their strength from themselues, and not from our fancie, and apprehending those alone to bee euill, and to bee grieued at, which through their owne malignant qualities doe indeed hurt vs, either in our bodies, states or friends, hindring our sensible or spirituall good, and making vs to be truely worse, either in respect of this life or the life to come; and so shewes of afflictions will not craze our patience, neither will our sorrow exceed our smart.

Solum vbi necessitas coegit infortunati agamus autem plura propter imperitiam infortunia tibi adfingimus. Diphil. in Adelph. apud Stob.

Nihil admodum atrox passus es nisi id tu tibi fingis. Menand. apud Plutarch de tranquill. animi.

Hoss. 5. 13.

The fifth rule to be obserued is, that wee do not by feare anticipate our griefe, making our selues miserable before our time, and presently pulling crosses vpon vs through timerous expectation and conceit, which would either neuer befall vs, or not of a long season. In which respect the greatest part of men faile against themselues, being more tormented with the feare of euils, than with the euils which they feare, and suffering longer and greater sorrowes with the expectation of their miseries before they happen, than after they are come and lye vpon them. And as though they could not be wretched enough with the sense of present crosses, they ingrosse all causes of griefe, and wilfully seaze vpon needlesse sorrowes: and besides the present afflictions which they suffer, they recall those which are past, making their remembrance to torment their hearts, when as long agoe they were freed from the sense of them; and presently apprehend those which are not yet so much as imminent, meeting them in the mid way by a fearefull expectation, as though they made too slow haste, and would not come soone enough of their owne accord, valesse they shut posted towards them. And thus giue vex themselues with feare and griefe, when they heare but vncertaine rumours of great calamities, as though already they were ouertaken by them, whereas it may bee they will neuer happen, or if they doe, yet not of a long time, or not so grieuous as those which by feare were presented to their conceit. Thus in time of pestilence many are as much afflicted with feare of infection, as they whose houses are already visited with the euils which they suffer. Thus in time of warre men as much torment themselues with feare of sacking, spoyling and killing, though oftentimes they escape all these dangers, as if already these miseries did lye vpon and ouerwhelme them. And finally, thus many when they can not comprehend future meanes of maintayning their estate, within the compasse of their owne prouidence, vexe themselues more with care and griefe for feare of pouerty, though now they enjoy sufficient plenty, than there is just cause they should, when they are pinched with want and penury. In which respect men indued with reason, are through their abuse of it, worse than the brutish creatures, for whereas by benefit of their reason, they might foresee euils, that they might either preuent them, or arme themselues with patience to beare those which are vnauoidable; they abuse their light of vnderstanding to foresee euils to come, that by a fearefull apprehension they may lye groning vnder them, as if they were present; yea to surmise & prognosticate those miseries to themselues that neuer befall them; and to amplifie and aggrauate them before they happen by all circumstances which feare (onely witty in such inuention) can offer to their conceit, making them much more grieuous and intolerable in the apprehension, than they afterwards proue to the sense and feeling. Whereas the brutish creatures are onely afflicted with present euils, neither grieuing for those which are past, nor fearing those which are to come, but haue in their whole life full security in the fruition of their pleasures, except onely that time wherein they are pinched and vexed with sense of paine. If therefore religion, and the light of Gods Word can not make vs thus wise to put off our miseries, till God call vs to suffer them, and layeth the load vpon vs; yet shaming to come behinde brute beastes, let vs learne this wisdome by their example, not to make our selues miserable before our time; but if reason helpe to discouer euils before they come, let it also helpe vs to vse all good meanes that wee may preuent them; and whilest wee are doubtfull of the euent, let vs temper our feare with hope; and (as one counsaileth vs) whilest there is vncertainty, let vs fauour our selues by beleeuing that which wee had rather should happen; and so though we doe not gaine freedome, and be fully acquitted of our miseries, yet shall wee bee releeued from them, and receiue no hurt vntill they touch vs; though wee

Quoties incertus es sit euentus, bibi faue: crede quod malis, beneuet. epist. 23.

ere

erre in hoping, yet it is more safe and profitable than to erre in fearing, seeing that brings comfort, but this torment and vexation. And though at last the euils foreseene doe fall vpon vs yet wee shall gaine the comforts of all the time vntill they happen, and bee the better able to beare them when they come; seeing they shall find our strength intire, and not wasted with forerunning sorrowes and cares, which feare bringeth alwayes to those who giue way vnto it. And if there bee no meanes to preuent these miseries, let vs not spend the time before they come in fearing, grieuing and complayning, whereby our strength will be spent, and wee made vnable to indure their weakest assault, when they set vpon vs; but let vs imploy our reason in finding out such arguments, as may confirme our patience in the day of triall; let vs, assisted by it, pull off those vizards from our afflictions, wherewith feare hath masked them; and so taking away (from the things to be suffered) the tumult of passion, and looking vpon them as they are in truth, and in their owne nature, wee shall (as one saith) finde that nothing was terrible in them, but feare and terrour which accompanied their expectation. If therefore we would be the better armed and prepared, to indure afflictions when they are inflicted, two things are to bee obserued, when they are but threatned or feared; the first is, that wee doe not suffer our selues to be dejected with feare and sorrow, when there is any suspicion of future euils, and so giue the first part to be acted by passion, which will blind the minde, disturbe the heart, and so bring all out of frame and order; but that in the first place, wee imploy our reason, and judgement to discerne, whether the euils which feare is ready to apprehend, will indeede certainely befall vs, or onely stand vpon likelyhood and probability. For naturally wee are apt to vexe our selues with causelesse iealousies, and needlesse suspicions, to loose our present comforts, and to marre all our mirth, when we heare but a rumour of approaching euils, fearing and trembling, but neuer examining the causes of our feare; and running away and fleeing from those enemies, which onely our imagination hath fained. Like (as one speaketh) to such dasterdly souldiers, as are ready to leaue their standing vpon euery false alarme, and to forsake their fortifications, when they see dust raysed by an heard of cattell, thinking that a mighty Army approacheth to assault them. Which cowardly folly that we may not fall into, let vs judge of approaching euils before we feare them, and examine, whether they are likely to come, before we vexe our minds with their apprehension, as if already they had befallen vs. And to this end let vs consider, that as we fall into many afflictions which wee neuer foresaw; so we foresee many in conceipt, which in truth neuer happen. And as there are many occurrents and vnexpected accidents, which crosse our hopes, and snatch from vs the good things we desire, when we are ready to receiue, and to haue the fruition of them: so there are no fewer vnlooked-for helps, which preuent our miseries when they are ready to light vpon vs, or presently pull vs from them, when they doe but touch vs. And not seldome doth the Lord, to shew his infinite power and wisedome, grant deliuerance when all hopes faile, and all meanes forsake vs, pulling our heads euen from the blocke, and making vs to suruiue those who were appointed to bee our executioners. So that (as one saith) there is nothing so certaine of those things which are feared, but that it is more certaine that things feared are often stayed and stinted; and things hoped doe faile and deceiue vs, when those are feared, and these expected. Let vs know that many more things fright vs, than pinch vs, and that wee are more often pained with a false opinion, than with any reall hurt; that it is folly to make our selues miserable before the approach of miserie, seeing euils feared often happen not, or at least, are not already happened. Let vs consider that false feares doe beget true griefe, for by a strong apprehension they presse euils vpon vs, as if they were already present, and so whilest wee feare lest wee should hereafter suffer them, wee euen now, suffer them by fearing, and as men astonished know not what they doe; so we by feare are so amated, that whilest ouerearnestly we desire to escape afflictions, we in flying fall into them. That hee who is giuen ouer to the passion of feare, can neuer be at quiet, for in time of affliction he is vexed with that which he suffereth, and euen whilest hee liueth in prosperity he hath no comfort, seeing by expecting of future crosses, he forgoeth the fruition of present blessings, and loseth them for feare of losing them. That vaine feares which haue no ground but rumor and suspition, doe commonly more torment vs, than those which haue a true cause, and some reall existence; for (as one saith) true things are confined in some measure; but those which are vaine and vncertaine haue no bounds, but are left onely to exorbiant coniecture, and to the vnlimited liberty of a fearing mind: that the feare of loosing the comforts wee injoy, is as grieuous and intolerable as the griefe which accompanieth their losse, yea in this respect worse, in that we know what wee grieue for, and so how to find remedy by armeing our patience against a knowne euill with approued arguments, whereas feare is alwayes vncertaine, changing and varying into Nulla vitæ causa est, nullus miseriarum modus, si timetur quantum potest. Sen. ibid.

Demte rebus tumultum & vide quid in quaq; re sit: sciet nihil esse in iis terribile præter timorem Senec. Epist. 24.

Senec. epist. 13

Senec. lib.

In æquos animos ea res timorem admittit. Senec. epist. 98.

into a thousand shapes, not according to the truth of things, but the opinion and conceipt of him that feareth. That wee shall easily suffer those afflictions which being layd upon vs by God are vnquestionable, if we doe not with fruitlesse remembrance recall those which haue past, and with needlesse feare anticipate and apprehend those which are to come; seeing they are few and short that presently torment the body and vexe the mind, in comparison of that innumerable multitude which either are not come as yet, or already past. Whereas those who grieue before they need, grieue also more than needs, and beare their burthen with a more heauie weight, whilest they through feare haue all their afflictions at once, which would be light and easie if they would beare one of them after another, in that order and time which God hath placed them.

The second thing to be obserued is, that after due examination it appeare that the afflictions, which feare is ready to apprehend, will hereafter certainely befall vs, we doe not by and by lay hold of them through feare, care and griefe, and so make our selues priuely miserable, because wee must be so in the time to come. And this lesson wee are taught by our heauenly Schoole-master, who willeth vs, not to care for the morrow, but let the morrow care for it selfe, seeing the day hath enough with his owne griefe: for why should wee hasten the speed of our crosses and calamities, seeing they will come soone enough, if we stay their owne leasure? why should we loose our present comforts, by a timerous expectation of future euill, and so fill our whole liues with griefe and mourning? whereas if wee would take things as they are offered, there would be but a short course of ioy and sorrow, and a time of breathing, wherein we might recouer strength, and make vp the breaches which were formerly made by the battery of afflictions: why should wounds rather by all lawfull meanes flee from euill, then preuent and catch vs; than procure and seeke them when yet they are farre off, and to pull them vnto vs, when as yet they doe not touch vs? why should wenot delay or shift those miseries which wee cannot wholly escape; seeing if it bee best in our owne conceipt, to bee freed from them altogether, it is good also to auoid them as long as may bee? and why should we quite cast our comforts as though wee could neuer haue enough, come at sorrow, and not rather endeuour, in their fruition whilest wee may haue them, and leaue that time alone to griefe and discontent, wherein wee are vrged with sense of euill, and can find no ease of ioy? yea (will some say) but how should I prevent this feare, seeing I am naturally inclined to it? I answer, that seeing wee are reasonable creatures, wee must not like brute beasts, giue our selues ouer to be ruled by sense and passion, but in all things submit our selues to the gouernment of reason, whom God hath made Vicegerent in this little world of man, not giuing way to our turbulent affections, but onely when they haue warrantise from this their soueraigne. And so shall wee not feare future euills, which are vncertaine, because reason will tell vs that wee may escape them, and therefore it is folly to take certaine sorrow for such crosses as are vncertaine; neither will it suffer vs to grieue for such afflictions as are certaine, because such griefe is needlesse, and to no purpose, or if it haue at all any vse, it is to ease our selues when we feele the smart, and not when being yet vntouched, wee onely see it. A second meanes to auoid these causelesse and needlesse feares, is to auoide melancholike idlenesse, whereby they are bred and nourished, and to exercise our selues with all diligence in the honest workes of our callings; for if our minds be taken vp with these employments, they will haue no leisure to fancie these feares, nor to giue them strength (after they are conceiued) by reuoluing them in our imaginations: neither indeed shall we, being thus imployed, haue cause to feare any approaching euills; seeing the Lord will giue his Angels charge ouer vs, to keepe vs whilest we are vnder our wayes, and to beare vs in their hands, that we hurt not our foote against a stone. Finally, if wee would be freed from all these feares, we must not rest vpon our owne care and prouidence, for the preuenting of all future euils, for then we shall neuer be at quiet, because our foresight is dimme in foreseeing parts, and our powers impotent and vnable to preuent them; but we must fear not, as the Apostle teacheth vs, but cast all our care vpon God, seeing he carefor vs. And for as much as he is omniscient, foreseeing all whatsoeuer may befall vs, and omnipotent, able to deliuer vs out of all our afflictions, or to giue vs sufficient strength to beare them, and finally, our most louing and gracious Father who will turne all that befalls vs, to our good, therefore let vs wholly resigne our selues vnto his good will and pleasure, and submit our selues in all affaires to be ruled and disposed of by his most wise and powerfull prouidence; and so shall we be secure in all dangers, and be freed from all those fruitlesse feares, when we are vnder his protection, and rest vnder the shadow of his wings, then shall we not feare the assaults of our enemies, when as we haue God for our castle and defence, vpon whom if we rely, we shall be in safety, then shall we not be terrified with the weight of misfortunes, but shall stand fast, assured of Gods assistance, and trust in the

Lord

1 Pet. 5. 7.

Psal. 91. 11. 12.

Psalm. 91. 4.

Psalm. 112. 8.

Lord is our strong rocke, vpon whom we may rest secure, when the boysterous billowes of afflictions doe beate vpon vs.

5. Sect. 7. The fifth rule is, that with Christian prouidence we foresee afflictions before they befall vs.

The fifth rule is, that with wise and Christian prouidence we foresee crosses, and in the time of peace and prosperity continually expect, when by our great commander we shall bee called out to combat with afflictions; that so we may be the better armed and prepared for the conflict, and more easily obtaine the victory. For howsoeuer we are not, by a cowardly and timerous apprehension, to torment our selues with crosses before they come; yet must we wisely foresee them, that wee may preuent those which may lawfully be auoided, and confirme our patience against them, which we know will necessarily befall vs. Though wee may not discouer our enemies before they approach, that we may cowardly feare them, and idlely sit still and bewaile our future ouerthrow before the fight, or else amazedly betake our selues to flight, when as yet we are not assaulted nor pursued: so must we not retchlesly and securely presume, that we are in safety, till we fall into their ambushments; but like good souldiers we must keepe as vigilant watch in the time of peace or truce, as in the time of warre; discouer the number and strength of our enemies, and furnish our selues with sufficient forces, that we may manfully indure their assaults, and victoriously ouercome. Though whilest we sayle in this sea of miseries, we should not foresee tempests, that we may sit still, and idely lament them; yet like good pilots, we ought in the faire weather of prosperity, to foresee the stormes of aduersitie, that hauing all things in readinesse, we may be better able to beare and brooke them when they approach, and finally though we may not like lazie and foolish trauellers lie in our beds, and timerously forecast all the difficulties and dangers of our iourney towards the heauenly Canaan, and afflict our selues with the apprehension of them all, before we be come to any of thē; yet like wise pilgrimes we must foresee all hinderances and incumbrances, as the foulnesse of the way and weather, the straightnesse and roughnesse of the passage, the stumbling blockes of offences, and the thornes and bryars of afflictions and tribulations which we must passe through; the dangers of Theeues and Murtherers, and the hard intertainment that we are like to finde in our Inne, that so we may furnish our selues with all things necessary for this iourney, and be the better inabled to indure the labour, and to continue vnto the end. And thus our Sauiour Christ requireth, that as he who purposeth to build a towre, sitteth downe before, and counteth the cost, whether he haue sufficient to performe it; lest hauing laide the foundation, and not being able to finish it, all that behold it, begin to mocke him; and as a King being to make warre against another, sitteth downe first, and taketh counsell, whether he be able to meete and incounter his enemy when he inuadeth him; or otherwise is ready to send his ambassadors to treat on conditions of peace: so we, before we are assaulted by afflictions; must foresee and consider of the power of these enemies, and what strength we haue, either in respect of our own spirituall graces, or the aides and succours, which we assuredly expect from God, whereby we may be ascertained that we shall be inabled to withstand their fury, and obtaine the victory, that if we finde our forces sufficient, we may be comforted and incouraged, or if they bee weake and feeble, we may labour to haue them supplied and relieued against the day of battell. And this counsell the Sonne of Syrach giueth vs; in thy good estate (saith he) remember aduersitie, and in aduersity forget not prosperity; and againe, when thou hast enough remember the time of hunger, and when thou art rich, thinke vpon pouerty and neede. So the heathen man prescribeth this way to be rid of care and feare, and to attaine vnto full security, that whatsoeuer euill we may feare to be comming, we doe suppose that it will certainely come; and so exercise our selues to beare it willingly, before we be constrained to beare it vpon necessity. So (elsewhere) he aduiseth vs that in our greatest security, we prepare our minds to indure those things which in themselues are hard to be indured, and that in the fruition of the benefits of prosperity, we arme our selues against the grieuances of affliction. Like vnto a Souldier, who in time of peace, inureth himselfe to painfull labour, and when there is no enemy, lyeth in armour, fareth hardly, deuiseth stratagems, buildeth fortifications, and so wearieth himselfe with voluntary labour, that he may be inabled by vse and custome, to beare and indure it, when it becommeth necessary. Howsoeuer therefore we may for our comfort enjoy the benefits of prosperity whilest we haue them, and frame our hopes according to our desires in regard of those wants which we would haue supplied; yet must we withall prepare our selues for the time of aduersity, and considering that those things which haue happened vnto others, may also befal vs, let vs at all times be ready to beare those afflictions, which at any time may be laid vpon vs. And for this cause hath our Sauiour in the Gospell forewarned vs of afflictions, that we may expect them, and be forearmed against they come: so hee saith, that if a man will be his disciple, he must take vp his crosse, and follow him: that his faithfull seruants shall weepe and lament, whilest the the world rejoyceth; and that whilest they abide in the world they shall haue affliction. And his holy Apostle teacheth vs, that the Lord doth chastize euery sonne that hee receiueth, that we are Bastards and no sonnes, if we be not thus corrected; and that through many tribulations, wee must enter into the Kingdome of God. And therefore seeing Truth it selfe hath forewarned vs of these afflictions, let vs not, because wee haue now the world at will, be negligent and secure, nor conclude with Dauid in the time of our prosperity, that we shall neuer be moued; let vs not dream of immunity from these crosses, and put the euill day farre from vs; let vs not say with Babylon, I sit as Queene, and shall see no euill; nor thinke to find a Paradise of delight in the place of our pilgrimage: but knowing that the Lord hath foretold vs, that we must suffer afflictions, let vs expect them before they come, and arme our selues with faith and patience to beare them, euen long before they are inflicted on vs.

More especially, let vs not fixe our hearts vpon any thing in the world, but vse the benefits of this life, as though we vsed them not, and enjoy them so, as those who are presently to forgoe them. For those things which wee possesse with immoderate loue, we lose with immoderate griefe; and if we looke vpon our temporall blessings, as vpon perpetuities, we shall subject our selues to much sorrow, and find small patience, when their losse proueth vnto vs that they were but moueables. For example; when wee are honoured in the world, and haue euery mans tongue as a Trumpet for our prayse: let vs consider that the time may come, when wee shall be as much disgraced and defamed, and that those who cry Hosanna, will soone after cry as loude Crucifige; for this hath befalne to many before vs, and will happen to many after vs; and why then not vnto vs also among the rest? And vpon this meditation let vs examine our selues, how we should beare it, if we should be thus cast downe out of the high Throne of Honour, into the lowest bottome of shame and disgrace; and with what zealous and arguments wee might confirme our patience, and mitigate and moderate our griefe and heauinesse. So when wee abound with riches, and haue such plenty of earthly things, that we haue not onely for our selues a sufficiency of all we can desire, but are also able to giue vnto others, and make all about vs beholding for our benefits, let vs thinke that (as it hath beene the case of many) our plenty may bee turned into pouertie and penury; and how we may then retaine our patience, when we are constrained by want to begge of those whom wee haue relieued; when in stead of our beds of doulne, we must lie vpon the straw or hard boords, when our soft and shining silkes shall be changed into rags or home spun-russet and our costly cates and delicate Wines, shall bee turned into course and scant fare, browne bread and cold water. When we haue our health & strength, let vs not conceiue that they are durable or permanent, but that the time wil come, when being tormented with grieuous sickneſse we shal tosse and tumble vpon our restlesse beds, drinke loathsome potions, no lesse distastfull than the sickneſse which they should cure, haue no appetite to our meate and drinke, or to such onely from which by rules of Phyſicke we are restrained; and be so enfeebled, that we must be faine to repeat our first learned lesson of standing and going; and then examine our hearts how we could beare these afflictions; that finding our weakneſse, wee may before they come arme our selues with patience against the time of triall. So when we are at liberty, let vs prepare our selues to suffer imprisonment, where wee shall haue light dyet and heauy boults, indure the absence of our friends, and the insolencies of our jaylours. When we are in our Country, let vs consider that the time may come, when being exiled, wee shall heare nothing but a strange language which we vnderstand not, and find as strange entertainment and small comfort, when wee stand most in need of it, in respect of our misery. And finally, when we take our greatest delight in our friends & acquaintance, let vs call to minde that they are not onely mortall, and may bee taken from vs; but also so mutable, that of our neerest friends they may become our greatest enemies; that our louing parents, vnder the shadow of whose prouidence wee are shielded and sustained, and by whose wisdome we are gouerned, may euen the next day be taken from vs, and leaue vs Orphanes; that our beloued children, which are the comforts of our youth, and the props of our old age, may by their death depriue vs of our present joy and future hopes; that our deere wiues, in whose loue & sweet society we now rejoyce, are subject to mortality, and that the time may shortly come, when as by death (as it were by a dead Palsie) wee shall loose the comfortable vse of these halues of our selues; and haue them plucked from vs with no lesse griefe, than if the members of our bodies were reuulsed in sunder. That our friends and acquaintance, who now smile vpon vs in our prosperity, may with our estate change their countenance, not onely forsaking vs in our affliction, but vexing vs also with the burthen of their vnkindnesses, and trying and tyring our patience with their wrongs, more than all the injuries and outrages offered by our enemies. In a word, whatsoeuer wee may lose of that which we most loue, let vs thinke that it is now in losing, or suppose it already lost; that wee may bee the better armed and prepared to beare these losses, when in truth they shall befall vs, and haue weapons ready in our hands, to defend vs from being wounded with impatiency and immoderate griefe in our conflict with these afflictions. And if we thus possesse our worldly comforts, two great benefits wil follow hereupon: the first, that we shall not be made drunke with prosperity, nor be puffed vp with pride in the confluence of earthly blessings, and become insolent; but vse them with all sobrietie and good conscience, when as our expectation, like a continuall Monitor, doth put vs in minde of our losse; for who can swell in the fruition of such benefits which are so momentany and mutable? And the other is, that this daily expectation will make these afflictions, which in themselues are grisly and terrible, so well knowne and familiar, that when they appeare they will not much skare and affright vs. A notable example whereof we haue in the heathen man, who being certified of the death of his deare and worthy sonne, heard it with patience without any disturbance of passion, because (as hee said) hee knew when hee begot him, that hee was mortall, and had brought him vp in expectation of this mortalitie. Whereas these losses when they are vnexpected and vnthought of, doe the more astonish vs when they happen, and doe more torment vs with their feare than vvish their shaine. As the same Author sheweth in the example of Vlisses, who at his comming home (after his twenty yeers peregrination) vnto his most louing and beloued wife, wept not when she wept, because before his comming hee was armed against passion, by the expectation of this joyfull mourning at their meeting, but yet could not refraine teares at the suddaine death of his dogge which he loued, because this accident comming vnlooked for, tooke him vnprouided. And vnto these benefits wee may adde that this expectancie will make vs to enjoy with more true comfort whatsoeuer we loue, when as our joy in the fruition of it, is not appalled & abated without feare, we being armed already against these losses, and will make them whilst we haue them more sweet and delightfull. For whereas the first possession of earthly things, whilest they are yet new, is most pleasing, this continuall expectation of their losse doth make them to seeme euery day (which wee enjoy them afterwards) as new gotten and gained, and much more welcome, because they come as an euer-plus aboue our hopes.

in

Anaxagoras apud Plutarch. de tranquil. animi.

2. Sect. 9. That wee must not be secure in prosperity, but forecast what euils may befall vs.

If therefore wee would haue patience and comfort in the time of afflictions, let vs not passe the time of our prosperity in deepe securitie, promising vnto our selues immunity from future trouble, and the continuance of our delights; let vs not foolishly imagine that this world, which is nothing else of Gods seruants, a pilgrimage and valley of teares, will bee vnto vs a Paradise or Garden of pleasure; and that when wee see many others ouertaken with afflictions, that wee onely (like Iobs messengers) shall escape: for if our enemies come suddenly vpon vs, and takes vs vnprouided, we shall easily be ouerthrowne; if expecting nothing but joy, wee meet with bitter griefes, and if looking for wealth and honour, we be at vnawares ouertaken with pouerty and disgrace; then when these afflictions come, there will be no place for patience; and an open passage for immoderate sorrow and desperate mourning, and then shall wee haue for all our violence of passion in these our miseries, onely the fooles excuse, that these are euils which wee neuer thought of, and that we well hoped neuer to haue had such causes of mourning. But respecting the worlds fauours, as false and deceitfull; and considering that there are no miseries which befall one, but they may likewise happen to another, let vs prepare and arme our selues against the time of their approaching, seeing on the one side we are assured that they may happen, and haue no assurance that we shall escape them. Which that we may the rather doe, let vs further consider that our prouidence and fore-sight of afflictions will preuent many of them, and lessen all; neither doth it at all hasten their speed (as many imagine who dare not entertaine into their thoughts any conceit of euils to come, nor can with patience haue any warning giuen of them by others, as though the very naming of them were ominous, and did presage some mischiefe towards them) but onely make eth our crosses lighter and easier when they come, and vs stronger to beare and suffer them. For euils fore-seene doe loose the greatest part of their poyson and strength, and if we catch these darts of aduersity in the hand of prouidence before they hit vs, they will not wound vs at all, or not so mortally, as when with their full strength they pierce vs at vnawares. And as afflictions foreseene, become much weaker, so wee also much the stronger to beare and ouercome them; partly because before the incounter we haue time to arme our selues with resolution, and to gather together the forces of our minds, which being vnited, are of great strength to ouercome all difficulties, and to beare the greatest weight of calamitie and misery; whereas if we be assaulted at vnawares, and fall into the ambush of affliction, when neuer thinking of an enemy, we haue these our theeuish forces scattered and disordered through deepe security, then shall small and weake forces of aduersity discomfit and put vs to flight, euen at the first assault, and we shall receiue a final ouerthrow before wee haue time to make an head, or so much as to aduise of any meanes to make resistance. And partly because by exercising our selues against expected euils, as though they were present, wee receiue much much strength and abilitie to beare them when they come; euen as a man by vsing to fight at foyles, is made both more skilfull and bold to fight at sharpe; and by skirmishing among his friends & fellow souldiers, becommeth more cunning, hardy & valiant in encountring of his enemies; whereas if we spend our time of prosperity in deep security, wee will neither prouide armour against the assaults of affliction, or if we had it in store, we shall not be able to beare it; and for want of exercise we shall grow so weake and pursie, that wee shall not be able to hold out in the first encounter. And therefore, if wee would beare the burthen of afflictions when it is inflicted, let vs often in our meditations, voluntarily (as it were) poize it before it bee imposed; seeing (as one saith) the greatest part of the euils which improuident men sustaine, is caused through their noueltie and vnexpected suddainnesse; as it may hereby plainly appeare, in that those miseries, which at their first comming, they bewaile as intolerable, they doe afterwards being inured to them, beare them with patience; the which may moue Wise men, to make themselues acquainted with future euils, by thinking on them before they happen, and to make those afflictions light by meditating on them, which are made light vnto others, by their customable bearing them.

The sixth rule is, that hauing in our meditations discouered these enemies approching, and plainly discerned by manifest reasons, or great probability, that wee are likely to be encountred with afflictions and calamities; we doe neither securely contemne the forces of these enemies: nor faintly yeeld vnto them before we are assaulted. The former of these two euils is to bee auoided, because there is scarce any force so weake, which is not sufficient to vanquish a secure enemie, seeing hee keepeth no watch, nor maketh any prouision whereby hee might be armed and strengthened against the assault; but being drunke with long prosperitie, lyeth snorting in the dead sleepe of carelesnesse and supine negligence, wherby being depriued of al strength, he is easily vanquished, as being rather a pray, lying open to the spoyle, than an enemy, which by fight must be ouercome. And therefore that wee may not bee thus indangered with this security, let vs when we see afflictions approaching, be content to entertaine a vehement feare, which may moue vs to arme our selues against the assault, though not a feare of cowardise, which would make vs to faint and flee away; and labour to be as farre from presumptuous securitie, as from the other extreame of dastardly amazednesse, seeing it is no vnusuall thing, for them who neglect the meane, to runne of one extreame into another, and to become timerous cowards when they are encountred, who were quite without prouident feare, and desperately secure in the time of preparation. And to this end let vs not onely looke vpon afflictions, as vpon euils which must be borne, or enemies to bee resisted, but as they are the iudgements of God, where with he punisheth our sinnes, or at least fatherly chastizements, which hee would haue vs to feare moderately for our amendement; like sonnes, that we may sue for pardon, though not like slaues, that we may flie away. For hee who contemneth his correction, is neuer like to be reformed by it. And this the Apostle requireth, My sonne (saith he) despise not the chastening of the Lord: and Dauid practized, where hee cryeth out, My flesh trembleth for feare of thee, and I am afraid of thy iudgements. As also Iosias, whose heart did melt when he did but heare the threatnings of the Law. Againe, wee shall haue but little cause to contemne afflictions, if wee consider our owne weaknesse, and want of patience, whereby wee are ready to sinke vnder the highest burthen, and to faint and yeeld in the least assault, if we be not assisted and strengthened with the power of Gods might; but rather wee haue just cause to feare lest being foyled and oppressed with their waight, we be moued in impaciency to murmure and repine against Gods prouidence, and euen to blaspheme him to his face.

Heb. 12. 6.

Pſal. 119. 120.

But on the other side, as wee are not to contemne afflictions, when we see them approaching; so wee must not cowardly flie away, nor basely yeeld vnto them, as despairing of victory: as we must not be possessed with presumptuous security, in confidence of our owne strength, and our enemies weakenesse; so we must be bold and couragious in the power of Gods might, and assurance of his assistance, when we most need his helpe; and as wee must not despise the chastening of the Lord, so we must not faint when wee are rebuked of him: but resting by a liuely faith and assured confidence, vpon the Almighty power, al-ruling prouidence, and infallible promises of our gracious Father, let vs be prepared for the fiery triall, and arme our selues against the day of conflict, as with other of Gods spirituall graces, so also with a couragious and constant resolution, that when we are encountred by afflictions, wee will neuer flee from them, by vsing vnlawful meanes to escape their force and fury, nor cowardly yeeld vnto them by casting away our spirituall armes, disclayming the seruice of God, and submitting our selues as captiues vnto sinne and Satan; but in our greatest distresse let vs cleane vnto our Lord and Master, and protest with Iob, that though he kill vs, yet we will trust in him. And this magnanimous and Christian resolution, we may obserue to haue beene in many of the faithfull, who haue resolued to vndergoe any af-

Heb. 12. 6.

Iob 13. 15.

flictions, rather than they would leaue the Lord by breaking of his Commandements. So the three children rather than they would worship Nebuchadnezzars Image, constantly resolued to indure those tortures in the fiery furnace. And Peter and Iohn, rather than they would surcease to preach the Gospell, resolued couragiously to passe through all dangers, neglected the threatnings of the High Priest, and the rest of the Councell, and feared not to hazard their innocent bodies to the whip, chusing to obey God, though they were tormented for it, rather than to obey men in their vnlawfull commands, and so to enjoy their liberty and immunity from dangers. Thus also the Apostle Paul armed himselfe with a constant and Christian resolution to preach Christ, though hereby he indangered himselfe both to bands and death: yea, so strong was hee in faith and patience, that he triumpheth ouer all afflictions, and couragiously resolueth that no extremities should diuide Christ and him: Who (saith he) shall separate vs from the loue of Christ? Shal tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or famine, or nakednesse, or perill, or sword? I am perswaded that neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor Principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall bee able to separate vs from the loue of God, which is in Christ Iesu our Lord. Vnto which Christian resolution if wee would attaine, we must remember Gods promises, that hee will be with vs in all our afflictions, which we suffer for his sake, and for the preseruing of our consciences pure and vndefiled from the spots of sinne; that hee is faithfull and will not suffer vs to be tempted aboue our power, but will giue a good issue with the temptation, that we may be able to beare it; that he will turne them all to our good, & finally that he wil crown our patient suffering these light and momentany afflictions, with a far most excellent and an eternall waight of glory.

Dan. 3 18.

Acts 5.29.

Acts 21.13.

Rom. 8. 35, 38.

1. Cor. 10. 13.

2. Cor. 4. 17.

9. Sect. 11. The eighth rule, that wee must not wilfully run into afflictions.

The last rule to be obserued and practised in the time of our preparation, is, that wee doe not wilfully run into afflictions, nor put the crosse vpon our own sholders: but that we diligently vse all good means, either to escape the before they come, or to be freed from the, when they are inflicted vpon vs. Concerning the former, as we ought not to flee those enemies through cowardly fear in the vse of vnlawful meanes: so must we not prouoke them to assault vs when we might liue in peace; as wee must not hide our selues from them vnder the couert of sinful shifts, when they are sent of God to find vs: so we must not voluntarily seeke them, and dare them to encounter vs, when they would be quiet and meane vs no harme; and finally, as we must not shamefully retire when God soundeth the alarme to battell, nor pull backe our shoulder when he enjoyneth vs to beare the crosse; so must wee not disorderly march on when hee soundeth the retrait, nor thrust our selues vnder a load of our owne making which he neuer laid vpon vs; for as the Sonne of Syrach telleth vs, hee that loueth danger shall perish therein. Neither is it required that we should fill this bitter cup of afflictions vnto our selues, but onely that we drinke of it when God putteth it into our hands; nor that wee should make crosses, but onely beare them, according to the example of our Sauiour Christ, who did not carry his crosse, till it was laid vpon him. For otherwise wee doe not take vpon vs the crosse, but wring it (as it were) out of Gods hand; wee doe not submit our selues vnto his will, but rather doe our owne; the which is not fortitude but madnesse, which will not bring any comfort in our sufferings; seeing we cannot incourage our selues with the saying of our Sauiour, shall I not drinke of the cup which my Father hath giuen me? it being a mixture of our owne making, and a potion of our owne prouiding. Now if wee would know how to discerne Gods crosses from our owne, wee may easily distinguish them by this one rule, namely, that God calleth vs then onely to suffer, when we haue no lawfull meanes to auoid the affliction; and contrariwise we thrust our selues vnder the burthen; when without sinne, and with a good conscience, we might escape the danger, but chuse rather wilfully to run into it. An example whereof we haue in the Papists, who impouerish their estates by voluntary pouerty, and torment their bodies with pilgrimages, penance of their own deuising, whipping and scourging, resembling herein the ancient Lacedæmonians, who inured their children in a stockish valour, to contend one with another, who should with patience indure most stripes; or the Baalitish Priests, who lanced and cut themselues before their Idols: whose practice let vs auoid, not going as voluntaries into the skirmish of afflictions, but staying our time till wee are pressed and called out by our great Commander; not pulling crosses vpon vs, in which we can haue no comfort, seeing therein we yeeld no obedience vnto God but serue our own wils, and follow our owne fantasies; but patiently bearing those onely which wee are assured that God hath laid vpon vs, because we haue no lawfull meanes to shun and auoid them. And to this end let vs consider, that this voluntary thrusting of our selues into needlesse afflictions, is expresly contrary to Gods Commandements; as if they concerne our bodies, we sinne against the sixth Commandement, which as it requireth that wee doe not any way hurt our Neighbours body, but vse all good meanes to doe them good; so also first & principally that we do no harme to our owne bodies, but vse all good meanes to preserue them in their health; or if it concerne our our goods & estate, against the eighth Commandement, which requireth no lesse the preseruation of our owne estate, than of another mans; and forbiddeth the wilfull wasting of our owne substance, to our vndoing and impouerishing, as well as the robbing and spoyling of our Neighbour. So our Sauiour Christ hath commanded vs to vse lawfull meanes for the auoyding of afflictions, and that when they persecute vs in one Citie, we should flye vnto another, and foretelling the miseries which should befall Ierusalem, he counselleth those who would escape them, to flee into the mountaines. And with his counsell well agreeth the saying of Austine; It is folly (saith he) to admit those miseries which may be auoyded; and therefore euery wise man will seeke to shun death and griefe, as much as he can, and as much as is conuenient; least if he doe not shun them, he be not in this regard wretched, because they befall him; but because when hee might, he would not auoid them, the which is a manifest signe of folly; and therefore in not auoyding euils, hee is not miserable in suffering them, but because he is marked for a foole. To the same purpose another perswadeth vs after this manner. Let vs not (saith hee) cast our selues head-long into dangers voluntarily because this is foolish rashnesse; neither let vs faint and flee being turmoyled with afflictions, when wee are called to suffer them, for this is fearefull cowardize. If we are called by the preaching of the Word hereunto let vs not refuse; but let vs not rush into them vnaduisedly and without cause, wee not being moued by any profit or necessity which respecteth godlinesse; for this were ostentation and ambitious aspiring vnto superfluous honour. Yet if any thing happen which oppugneth religion and holinesse, we ought not to shrinke although it were to suffer a thousand deaths. Let vs not dare and prouoke tentations when all things which concerne godlinesse succeed according to our hearts desire, for why should we inuite superfluous dangers which haue no profit? &c. Let vs be prepared as becommeth valiant souldiers, alwayes armed, sober and watching as those who continually expect an enemy: But let vs not of our owne accord raise Warres, and make a combustion against our owne peace, for this is not the part of a good Souldier, but of a mutinous and seditious person. If the trumpe of holinesse sound the alarme to battell, then march on valiantly without delay, contemne thy life, and entring the conflict with much cheerefulnes, rush into the maine army of thine enemies, put the Deuill to flight, and set vp a trophy of victory; but if godlinesse sustaine no damage, the principles of religion be not vndermined which concerne our saluation, nor any man doe enforce vs to doe any thing displeasing to God, let vs not be superfluous in our sufferings.

Eccles. 3.27.

Iohn 18.11.

Furthermore let vs know; that as it is vnlawfull to take vpon vs voluntarily crosses and afflictions when vvee may lawfully escape them; so is it also as vnlawfull to lye vnder them still, vvhen vvee may by good and honest meanes be freed from them; because this is to tempt the Lord, vvhen as needlesly wee desire to make experience of his power, prouidence, and promised assistance, either for our deliuery, or for strength and patience to indure these vvilfull trials. For herein vvee resemble stubborne and foolish children, who wilfully fall that their parents may catch hold of them, and being downe, lie still and cry, but neuer offer to rise, because they expect to be helped vp by others. And this is the sinne vnto which our Sauiour Christ was tempted by the Deuill, but resisted the tentation, alleadging that it is vvritten, that we must not tempt the Lord our God. Wee our selues continually pray that we may not be led into tentation, but that wee may be deliuered from euill; and therefore seeing afflictions are strong tentations, whereby the Deuill and the World labour to drawv vs to the committing of sinne, as impatiency, murmuring and repining against God, doubting of his prouidence and such like, and seeing they are euils of punishment, vvhich are threatned against sin, therefore vvee must not vvilfully cast our selues into these tentations, into vvhich vvee pray that we may not be led; not of our own accord runne into those euills, from which we intreat at Gods hands that vve may be deliuered. For whatsoeuer wee lawfully desire by prayer, that vve are to labour after in the vse of all good meanes that vve may obtaine it; and that vvhich vvee pray against vve are bound to vse the like meanes to shun and auoid it, desiring God to giue vs grace, that we may carefully and prosperously vse them, either for the gaining of the one, or escaping of the other, vvhich if vve doe not, vvee doe but play the Hypocrites, praying with our lips for that which our hearts desire not. So that as vvee must not vvilfully plunge our selues into tentations; so must vvee contrariwise vse all good meanes to shun afflictions before they happen, and to be deliuered from them if already vve be ouer-taken by them; as namely vvee must vse the lavvfull meanes of Physicke, to prevent or cure our sicknesses; industrious labour in our calling, to preserue vs from pouerty, or to be freed from it, if vvee be falne into it; the authoritie and assistance of Magistrates, to defend vs from injuries and oppression, or to recouer our right of vvhich vvee are deprived by force and violence; and flight in the time of persecution, vnlesse the glory of God, and good of the Church doe require our martyrdome and suffering. The vvhich is vvarranted vnto vs, not onely by these testimonies of

d. Sect. 12. That wee must carefully vse all good meanes whereby wee may bee freed and deliuered from our afflictions.

Matth. 4. 7.

Scripture before alleaged, but also by the example of the Saints of God from time to time. For thus Iacob vsed all good policie, & neglected no means which he thought available for the appeasing of his brothers fury, and auoyding those mischiefes which would haue accompanied his rage. Thus Moses fled from Pharaoh, Dauid from Saul and Absalon, Ioseph and Mary from Herods cruell persecution; Paul from the Iewes at Damascus; and those who hauing vowed his death, did lie in waite to murder him. And thus hee escaped bonds by pleading the priuiledge of a Citizen of Rome; and made a great party on his side to defend him from raging violence, by professing himselfe to be a Pharisie. Yea, our Sauiour Christ himselfe, who came into the World to suffer for vs, did flee persecution vntill the appointed time came; and euen then being affrighted with that heauy burthen which he was to beare, and abhorring to drinke of that bitter potion prepared for him, he did instantly desire (though with submission of his will to his heauenly Father's) that this Cup might passe from him. The which examples are sufficient warrant for vs to auoid afflictions by all lawfull meanes, taking them as sent by God for our preseruation or deliuerance, and praysing his name in the vse of them. Neither is it fit that wee should sit still, and effeminately complaine when wee are in any misery and calamitie; but as it beseemeth a manly disposition, wee must aduise with our selues, & counsaile of others, and labour and endeauour in the vse of all lawfull meanes to escape afflictions, or to ouercome them, if we cannot auoid them. Nor is it enough that we desire deliuerance, or implore by prayer Gods assistance to free vs from trouble; but as the wise Pilot doth prouide all things necessary against the tempest, and vseth them with all care and diligence when the storme commeth, and so craueth Gods blessing vpon his endeauours, because without this, his paines & prouidence become vain and fruitles; so must we take the same course in all dangers and troubles (hauing holy Iacob for our example, who though hee had wrestled with God all the night, by prayers and strong cryes, and had preuailed, yet he seeketh Gods prouidence by his owne endeuours, and vseth all good meanes to pacifie or auoid his brothers rage) and not after a childish manner lye still and cry, beating (as it were) the ground vpon which wee are falne, and complayning of our afflictions which haue hurt and grieued vs, but neuer endeuouring to rise againe, nor vsing any meanes of ease or comfort. But yet in the vse of all meanes to free vs from afflictions, wee must carefully obserue these rules: first, that they be lawfull and warrantable, not wicked and sinfull, least that reproofe of Elihu, intended against Iob, be iustly applyed vnto vs

Gen. 32. 11, 13. Exod. 2. 1. Sam. 19. 2. Sam. 15. Matth. 2. Act. 9. & chap. 22, & 23.

Matth. 26.

Gen. 32. Hos. 12. 4.

Iob 36. 22.

that we chuse iniquitie rather than affliction; for he ill prouideth for his owne good, who falleth into the euill of sin, to escape the euill of punishment, & that indangereth his soule to most grieuous & euerlasting torments, that hee may bee freed from those bodily afflictions, which are light & momentany. For besides that he hazardeth himselfe to the suffering of those endlesse torments for the time to come, that he may be eased of present smart; he doth through the just judgement of God faile oftentimes of his purpose, and lieth still vnder the crosse which hee thought to haue auoided. And not seldome whilest he thus escapeth one misery, hee falleth at vnawares into a farre greater, finding no more ease and comfort, by all his vnlawfull shifts than the silly fish which leapeth out of the frying pan into the fire. And whereas hee might haue borne the hand of God in the former afflictions with greater patience, because he had inwardly the testimony of a good conscience to comfort him; and outwardly the sweet odour of a good name, hee is by his wicked shifts robbed of both, and is forced to beare his more heauy crosses with the terrours of an euill conscience, and deserued infamy and reproach. The second caution is, that in vsing these meanes wee doe referre the issue to the good pleasure of God, and submit our wils to his will, saying with our Sauiour, Father let this cup passe from mee, howbeit not my will, but thine be done; forasmuch as he knoweth better than our selues what is fit for vs, & will according to his promise in time conuenient, giue a good issue out of the tentation. And lastly, wee must take heed lest in vsing the meanes wee trust in them, and leauing the Lord, who is the supreame cause of our deliuerance, doe rest vpon our owne prouidence, and vpon inferiour causes, which are but his instruments; like vnto Asa, who trusted in the Physicians for the recouery of his health; for then we shal rob God of his glory, and in stead of returning the prayse of our deliuerance vnto him, wee will, with those whom the Prophet Habacknck reproueth, Sacrifice vnto our Nets, and burne incense to our Dragge. And these are the cautions, which being obserued, we may lawfully, yea, wee ought to vse all good meanes to escape afflictions, or be deliuered out of them; seeing otherwise we shal tempt God, offer wrong against our own persons, & not be accepted of God in our sufferings, seeing herein we yeeld no obedience vnto him, these not being crosses of his imposing; but follow our own wilful phantasies, in making choice of vnnecessary afflictions; nor fight his battels against the World, seeing hee hath not called vs out, nor sounded the alarme; but (as it were) pick priuate quarrels against our owne peace, seeking out, & prouoking an enemy, with who the Lord hath not commanded vs to fight.

Matth. 26.

Hab. 1. 16.

THE

THE CHRISTIAN WARFARE.

The third Part.

CONTAINING OVR CONFILCT WITH AFFLICTIONS, WHEREIN IS intreated of Patience in bearing the Crosse, and the meanes whereby wee may attaine vnto it.

The second Booke.

CHAP. I.

Of patience in afflictions, what it is, and the causes and properties thereof.

IN the former Booke I haue shewed what preparation is required of vs, before wee enter into this spirituall conflict of afflictions. Now we are to speake of the right demeaning of our selues when we are entered into the battell, and of the holy and Christian disposition and behauiour, which wee must exercise and shew, both in the bearing of those crosses, whilest it shall please God to let them lye vpon vs, and also in returning thankes and prayse vnto God, after we are through his gracious assistance deliuered from them, and haue obtained full victory in this spirituall conflict: vnto the well bearing of the crosse, is required patience, in all our afflictions, the highest degree whereof is, when we beare them with thankesgiuing, spirituall ioy, and rejoycing in the holy Ghost. And first I will intreate of this grace it selfe, and then of the meanes whereby we may attaine vnto it. Concerning the former Patience is our passiue obedience, or the obedience of the crosse, which is a fruite and grace of Gods holy spirit, arising from the true knowledge of God, and of our selues, as also from a liuely faith, assiance, hope and vnfained loue of God, whereby we beare our crosse imposed vpon vs by God, quietly, constantly, and willingly. Where first I shew the roote, whereof this patience is a branch, namely our obedience vnto God, whereby wee in all things submit our wills vnto his good pleasure, both for the doing and suffering of all which he requireth; saying with Eli, It is the Lord, let him doe what seemeth good vnto him. And with Dauid, Heere I am, let him doe vnto me as it seemeth good in his eyes. And with our Sauiour Christ himselfe, Not as I will, but as thou wilt: and againe, O my Father, if this cup cannot passe away from me, but that I must drinke of it, thy will be done. And this is that which wee continually begge in that petition of the Lords prayer, Thy will be done, in Earth as it is in Heauen. And therefore if we pray with vpright hearts, and not like hypocrites, we will submit our selues to this good will of God, when by the euent it is reuealed vnto vs; whether it be for the doing of that which he requireth, or the suffering of that which he imposeth vpon vs. And thus it appeareth, that our patience is a branch of that obedience which wee owe vnto God; I adde further, that it is a fruit of the Spirit; for Gods Holy Spirit is the chiefe and principall cause both of this, and of all other Gods sanctifying and sauing graces, as the Apostle sheweth in the Epistle to the Galathians, The fruite (saith he) of the Spirit is loue, ioy, peace, long suffering, gentlenesse, goodnesse, faith, meeknesse, temperance, &c. But because the Spirit of God, as the chiefe and supreame

1. Sam. 3. 18.

2. Sam. 15. 26.

Matth. 26. 39. 42.

Gal. 5. 22.

Scripture before alleaged, but also by the example of the Saints of God from time to time. For thus Iacob vsed all good policie, & neglected no means which he thought auailable for the appeasing of his brothers fury, and auoyding those mischiefes which would haue accompanied his rage. Thus Moses fled from Pharaoh, Dauid from Saul and Absalon, Ioseph and Mary from Herods cruell persecution; Paul from the Iewes at Damascus; and those who hauing vowed his death, did lie in waite to murder him. And thus hee escaped bonds by pleading the priuiledge of a Citizen of Rome; and made a great party on his side to defend him from raging violence, by professing himselfe to be a Pharisie. Yea, our Sauiour Christ himselfe, who came into the World to suffer for vs, did flee persecution vntill the appointed time came; and euen then being affrighted with that heauy burthen which he was to beare, and abhorring to drinke of that bitter potion prepared for him, he did instantly desire (though with submission of his will to his heauenly Father's) that this Cup might passe from him. The which examples are sufficient warrant for vs to auoid afflictions by all lawfull meanes, taking them as sent by God for our preseruation or deliuerance, and praysing his name in the vse of them. Neither is it fit that wee should sit still, and effeminately complaine when wee are in any misery and calamitie; but as it beseemeth a manly disposition, wee must aduise with our selues, take counsaile of others, and labour and endeauour in the vse of all lawfull meanes to escape afflictions, or to ouercome them, if we cannot auoid them. Nor is it enough that we desire deliuerance, or implore by prayer Gods assistance to free vs from trouble; but as the wise Pilot doth prouide all things necessary against the tempest, and vseth them with all care and diligence when the storme commeth, and so craueth Gods blessing vpon his endeauours, because without this, his paines & prouidence become vain and fruitles; so must we take the same course in all dangers and troubles (hauing holy Iacob for our example, who though hee had wrestled with God all the night, by prayers and strong cryes, and had preuailed, yet he seeketh Gods prouidence by his owne endeuours, and vseth all good meanes to pacifie or auoid his brothers rage) and not after a childish manner lye still and cry, beating (as it were) the ground vpon which wee are falne, and complayning of our afflictions which haue hurt and grieued vs, but neuer endeuouring to rise againe, nor vsing any meanes of ease or comfort. But yet in the vse of all meanes to free vs from afflictions, wee must carefully obserue these rules: first, that they be lawfull and warrantable, not wicked and sinfull, least that reproofe of Elihu, intended against Iob, be iustly applyed vnto vs

Gen. 32. 11, 13. Exod. 3. 1. Sam. 19. 2. Sam. 15. Matth. 2. Act. 9. & chap. 22, & 23.

Matth. 26.

Gen. 32. Hos. 12. 4.

Iob 36. 22.

that we chuse iniquitie rather than affliction; for he ill prouideth for his owne good, who falleth into the euill of sin, to escape the euill of punishment, & that indangereth his soule to most grieuous & euerlasting torments, that hee may bee freed from those bodily afflictions, which are light & momentany. For besides that he hazardeth himselfe to the suffering of those endlesse torments for the time to come, that he may be eased of present smart; he doth through the just judgement of God faile oftentimes of his purpose, and lieth still vnder the crosse which hee thought to haue auoided. And not seldome whilest he thus escapeth one misery, hee falleth at vnawares into a farre greater, finding no more ease and comfort, by all his vnlawfull shifts than the silly fish which leapeth out of the frying pan into the fire. And whereas hee might haue borne the hand of God in the former afflictions with greater patience, because he had inwardly the testimony of a good conscience to comfort him; and outwardly the sweet odour of a good name, hee is by his wicked shifts robbed of both, and is forced to beare his more heauy crosses with the terrours of an euill conscience, and deserued infamy and reproach. The second caution is, that in vsing these meanes wee doe referre the issue to the good pleasure of God, and submit our wils to his will, saying with our Sauiour, Father let this cup passe from mee, howbeit not my will, but thine be done; forasmuch as he knoweth better than our selues what is fit for vs, & will according to his promise in time conuenient, giue a good issue out of the tentation. And lastly, wee must take heed lest in vsing the meanes wee trust in them, and leaving the Lord, who is the supreame cause of our deliuerance, doe rest vpon our owne prouidence, and vpon inferiour causes, which are but his instruments; like vnto Asa, who trusted in the Physicians for the recouery of his health; for then we shal rob God of his glory, and in stead of returning the prayse of our deliuerance vnto him, wee will, with those whom the Prophet Habacknucke reproueth, Sacrifice vnto our Nets, and burne incense to our Dragge. And these are the cautions, which being obserued, we may lawfully, yea, wee ought to vse all good meanes to escape afflictions, or be deliuered out of them; seeing otherwise we shal tempt God, offer wrong against our own persons, & not be accepted of God in our sufferings, seeing herein we yeeld no obedience vnto him, these not being crosses of his imposing; but follow our own wilful phantasies, in making choice of vnnecessary afflictions; nor fight his battels against the World, seeing hee hath not called vs out, nor sounded the alarme; but (as it were) pick priuate quarrels against our owne peace, seeking out, & prouoking an enemy, with who the Lord hath not commanded vs to fight.

Matth. 26.

Hab. 1. 16.

THE

THE CHRISTIAN WARFARE.

The third Part.

CONTAINING OVR CONFILCT WITH AFFLICTIONS, WHEREIN IS intreated of Patience in bearing the Crosse, and the meanes whereby wee may attaine vnto it.

The second Booke.

CHAP. I.

Of patience in afflictions, what it is, and the causes and properties thereof.

IN the former Booke I haue shewed what preparation is required of vs, before wee enter into this spirituall conflict of afflictions. Now we are to speake of the right demeaning of our selues when we are entered into the battell, and of the holy and Christian disposition and behauiour, which wee must exercise and shew, both in the bearing of those crosses, whilest it shall please God to let them lye vpon vs, and also in returning thankes and prayse vnto God, after we are through his gracious assistance deliuered from them, and haue obtained full victory in this spirituall conflict: vnto the well bearing of the crosse, is required patience, in all our afflictions, the highest degree whereof is, when we beare them with thankesgiuing, spirituall ioy, and rejoycing in the holy Ghost. And first I will intreate of this grace it selfe, and then of the meanes whereby we may attaine vnto it. Concerning the former Patience is our passiue obedience, or the obedience of the crosse, which is a fruite and grace of Gods holy spirit, arising from the true knowledge of God, and of our selues, as also from a liuely faith, assiance, hope and vnfained loue of God, whereby we beare our crosse imposed vpon vs by God, quietly, constantly, and willingly. Where first I shew the roote, whereof this patience is a branch, namely our obedience vnto God, whereby wee in all things submit our wills vnto his good pleasure, both for the doing and suffering of all which he requireth; saying with Eli, It is the Lord, let him doe what seemeth good vnto him. And with Dauid, Heere I am, let him doe vnto me as it seemeth good in his eyes. And with our Sauiour Christ himselfe, Not as I will, but as thou wilt: and againe, O my Father, if this cup cannot passe away from me, but that I must drinke of it, thy will be done. And this is that which wee continually begge in that petition of the Lords prayer, Thy will be done, in Earth as it is in Heauen. And therefore if we pray with vpright hearts, and not like hypocrites, we will submit our selues to this good will of God, when by the euent it is reuealed vnto vs; whether it be for the doing of that which he requireth, or the suffering of that which he imposeth vpon vs. And thus it appeareth, that our patience is a branch of that obedience which wee owe vnto God; I adde further, that it is a fruit of the Spirit; for Gods Holy Spirit is the chiefe and principall cause both of this, and of all other Gods sanctifying and sauing graces, as the Apostle sheweth in the Epistle to the Galathians, The fruite (saith he) of the Spirit is loue, ioy, peace, long suffering, gentlenesse, goodnesse, faith, meekenesse, temperance, &c. But because the Spirit of God, as the chiefe and supreame

1. Sam. 3. 18.

2. Sam. 15. 26.

Matth. 26. 39. 42.

Gal. 5. 22.

supreame cause, doth for the effecting of this grace of patience in vs, vse certaine other graces as meanes and subordinate causes thereof; euen as the maine roote doth deriue life and sappe, first to the chiefe boughes, and by them to the lesser braunches; therefore I expresse in this description of patience, these subordinate, next and immediate causes from which it ariseth and springeth. And first the knowledge of God, as of his infinite wisedome, whereby hee knoweth what is best for vs; his al-ruling prouidence, whereby hee disposeth all things for those ends, which in his wisdome he seeth to be best; his will which is the rule of all iustice, and therefore to be obeyed by all his creatures; and finally, his mercy, goodnesse and loue towards vs, whereby he turneth all things to our good; as being our most gracious and deare Father in Iesus Christ. And also the knowledge of our selues, that wee are most wicked and damnable sinners, who by our manifold and haynous transgressions, haue deserued to haue the full vials of Gods wrath to be powred vpon vs; and therefore great reason we haue to beare these lesser afflictions with patience and thanksgiuing, seeing wee haue iustly deserued the greatest, euen the eternall condemnation both of our bodies and soules. Vnto this knowledge I adde faith, by which we beleeue and apply vnto our selues all we know for our owne vse and benefit; for beleeuing that God is our gracious Father in Christ, and apprehending all Gods gracious promises of the Gospell as due vnto vs; and particularly those which assure vs of Gods assistance, and our deliuerance out of all afflictions, we beare with patience these crosses that are laid vpon vs. The other graces named, as they are the fruites of this faith, so are they the causes of our patience, as namely affiance in God, whereby beleeuing his promises, we rest vpon him in all troubles and dangers; and Hope, whereby wee expect and waite for with patience the accomplishment of them; and finally, Loue of God which proceedeth from the assurance of his loue towards vs; the which especially doth worke in vs, confirme, and increase our patience, according to the saying of the Apostle; Loue suffereth all things, it beleeueth all things, is hopeth all things, it indureth all things, and doth neuer fall away. And that because wee are assured that nothing shall bee able to separate vs from the loue of God in Iesus Christ our Lord, and that all things whatsoeuer, euen our crosses and afflictions shall worke together for the best vnto them that loue God; for he who is mercifull and gracious to his enemies, will bee infinite in mercy and goodnesse to his friends, who loue and feare him, and also because nothing seemeth hard and difficult to him that loueth.

1. Cor. 13. 7.

Rom. 8 38. 39. & vers. 28.

By which it appeareth that all true patience is a fruite of the Spirit, and ariseth immediately from the sanctifying and sauing graces: whereof it followeth that it was neuer to be found among the Ethnicks and Pagan Philosophers, because they were destitute of these sauing graces. It is true that they gaue many precepts of patience, which make a faire shew at the first sight; as prouerbially it was said among them, that we must beare and forebeare; so some haue taught that felicity consisteth not in worldly prosperity, but in the exercise and practice of vertue, and consequently that a vertuous man may be happy though afflicted; yea that by aduersity we haue occasion so to exercise vertue, that it will appeare more beautifull and glorious. The Stoicks taught that there is no euill in affliction, but onely that it is euill to abandon vertue and follow vice; and to the same purpose the Oratour saith, that besides vice and dishonesty, nothing can befall a man whereat he should bee danted and appalled. And the practice also of many of them was according to these precepts; for so we read of Horatius Pulvillus being dedicating of a Temple, and hearing of the death of his Sonne; that he seemed not moued with the newes, but without interruption finished that which hee had in hand: and Paulus Æmilius, hearing of the death of his Children, said with vndaunted courage, that the gods had heard his prayer, which was that calamities should rather befall his familie, than the common weale. And the like magnanimous patience they shewed in suffering personall afflictions: as Aristides in his banishment: Scipio in those indignities which his vngratefull countrimen offered vnto him; Regulus in his exquisite torments. But yet this was no true patience, because it flowed not from those sauing graces of the knowledge of God, faith, affiance and hope; neither was done in obedience to Gods will, and ioyned with humility; but did arise rather from pride, whereby they desired to eternize their fame, or at best from a ciuill loue of their country, or some other worldly respects. To which purpose one saith that the Philosophers professed that they sought after patience; but their patience was as false and counterfaite as their wisedome. For how can he be wise or patient, who hath not knowne the wisedome and patience of God? And againe, if their wisedome was not true, then neither could their patience: for if he alone be patient, who is humble and meeke, and we see that these Philosophers were neither meeke nor humble; but such as pleased themselues much in their owne eyes, and that in those things wherein they displeased God; it plainely appeareth that there was no true patience there, where there

2. Sect. That the was neue true patie among the Heathens.

Arist. in eth.

Cyprian. bono pa lib.

Ibid. Sen

there was an insolent audaciousnesse of affected liberty, and a manifest appearance of immodest boasting. Finally they did not looke to the hand of God exercising them with these afflictions, nor yeelded obedience to his will in their sufferings; but they ascribed all to fate, chance, and fortune, professing that these afflictions were to be borne with patience, because they could not bee auoided; or if at all they acknowledged Gods hand in them, they yeelded vnto it, because it was in vaine to striue; now he that submitteth himselfe vpon meere necessity, and because he cannot chuse, would resist if he were able, and detract his obedience in his sufferings, if by any meanes hee could escape them. Whereas he who is truly patient obeyeth willingly the good pleasure God, and meekely submitteth himselfe to beare the crosse, not because being necessary hee must beare it, whether he will or no; but because it is sinfull to detract his obedience, and to resist the will of God which hee knoweth to be just in its selfe, and in respect of him full of mercy and goodnesse.

And thus I haue shewed the causes of patience, & the difference, chiefly arising out of them, betweene the patience of Christians and of the heathens and infidels: I further set downe the object of patience, namely the crosse, which is that measure and proportion of afflictions, that God hath allotted and shared out to euery one of the faithfull, the which is necessarily to be borne of euery one who will be Christs Disciple, according the saying of our Sauiour, if any man will come after me, let him deny himselfe and take vp his crosse daily and follow mee; of which necessity the Apostle rendreth this reason, because afflictions are in Gods eternall decree joyned with our election as a meanes whereby our saluation is furthered: for hauing before spoken of afflictions, that if we suffer with Christ, we shall also raigne with him; that they are not worthy the glory which shall be reuealed, and that they shall worke together for the best vnto them that loue God; hee addeth this as another consolation, that these afflictions are signes of our election; for those which he knew before, he also predestinated to bee made like to the image of his sonne, that he might be the first borne among many brethren.

In the last place I set downe the manner of sufferings necessarily required to true patience, the which consisteth in three things; the first is that we beare the crosse meekly and mildly, peaceably, quietly, and with moderate griefe and sorrow; and that not outwardly alone, but especially in the mind and heart. So the Lord saith by his Prophet vnto his afflicted people; In rest and quietnesse shall yee be saued, in quietnesse and confidence shall be your strength; And what kind of quietnesse and peace this is, Dauid expresseth, where he biddeth vs to examine our owne hearts vpon our owne bed and bee still. Shewing, that our quietnesse and peace should bee as well priuate, as before company, and as well in the heart and mind, as in the speech and countenance. An example of this quiet peacefulnesse, and meeke silence, wee haue in Dauid, who was dumb, and opened not his mouth because it was God that did afflict him; and in Iob, who in his great extremities checketh himselfe for hauing beene too talkatiue in his complaints; and professeth for the time to come, that hee would lay his hand vpon his mouth, keepe silence and speake no more. But aboue all examples is that of our Sauiour Christ, who in his manifold and grieuous afflictions is said not to haue opened his mouth, but was brought out as a sheepe to the slaughter, and as a sheepe before her shearer is dumbe; so he opened not his mouth. Vnto which quiet meekenesse is opposed clamorous complainning, crying, howling, and wringing of the hands; murmuring and repining against the prouidence and justice of God; as though hee were an accepter of persons, punishing vs more grieuously than greater offenders, or aboue the quality of our fault, or our strength to indure, as we may see in the example of Caine, who complaineth that his punishment was greater than hee could beare.

Psalm. 4.4.

Psalm. 39.9.

Iob. 39.37.

Esa. 53.7.

Gen. 4.13.

But howsoeuer this vnruely vnquietnesse and vehemencie of passion is to be auoided of all those, who would possesse their soules with patience; yet it is lawfull, yea expedient and needfull, that we should in the time of affliction be affected with moderate griefe; yet not so much for the affliction it selfe, and the smart and sense of paine (in which regard we are not to mourne out of our judgement, choyce, and will, but onely so much as nature and necessity compelleth vs vnto) as for our sin which is thus chastized and corrected: and that not in respect of the punishment which it deserueth; but because thereby we haue offended and displeased our gracious God and mercifull Father. Because all sorrow which is for any thing, hauing no reference or respect to sinne, is vaine and vnprofitable, yea oftentimes hurtfull and pernicious; or if it doe any good at all; it is not by lessening of the affliction, but onely as it easeth the heart by venting of that griefe, which being retained, would suffocate or breake it. In which regard sorrow is onely to be intertained in respect of the outward expressing thereof, as a meanes to vnburthen the mind, not to loade it, vpon necessity to ease nature by giuing some issue to those flouds of griefe, which if they were dammed in, would ouerflow

Chrysost. serm. ad populum. 5. Tom. 4.

and

and drowne the heart, and not willingly to continue in it, or to aggrauate it by our conceite, which inuenteth wittily such arguments as will robbe our soules of all peace and quietnesse. For whereas there are seuerall medicines which are proper and peculiar for euery disease, which being rightly applied doe effect the cure; but if contrariwise that which is fit for one be applied vnto another, in stead of helping, it much hurteth and increaseth the malignity of the disease: so the medicines that helpe the diseases of the hand, are vnprofitable or pernitious, being applied to the heart; and that which helps the hearing, would, being misapplied, put out the eyes; sorrow and griefe is appointed by God to be a medicine proper and peculiar for the curing of sinne; and being rightly applyed vnto it, and in fit proportion, it doth cure and heale it; but if it be misapplyed vnto our crosses and calamities as vnto sickneſſe, pouerty, death of friends and worldly losses, it doth not lessen or take them away, but rather much aggrauates and increaseth them, like the worme in the nut, eating the heart in which it is bred; and doing vs more true hurt and damage, than all other miseries which wee lament and sorrow for.

Q. Sect. 5. That we must not with the Stoicks affect senslesse stupidity in our afflictions.

But as there is an excesse and disorder of our sorrow, when as either we mourne too much, or not for that which wee ought cheefly to bewaile; so there is a defect thereof, when we grieue not at all, but like stocks haue no sense either of our fault, or of our punishment and correction. The which senslesnesse in bearing afflictions was so much commended by the Stoicks, who thought him alone magnanimous and wise, who putting off all passion and affection (and with it humanity it selfe) carried himselfe at all times alike, both in prosperity, and aduersitie, not affected with joy in any delights, nor with sorrow and griefe in any misery and affliction. But this is to turne a man into a stone or stocke, and to dreame of such a patience as neuer was or shall bee found among men; or if it could, yet hath not init any magnanimity or Christian fortitude; but dull blockishnesse and senselesse stupidity. Yea in truth it is not onely an vnreasonable, but also a senslesse dreame and dotage, contrary to the law of nature, which hath ordered that all liuing creatures should feare affliction and miserie before it come, and bewaile it when it is inflicted: and so farre from true wisdome, that it is void of sense, and full of ridiculous folly, when with some idle rhetoricke, and friuolous speculation a man shall be perswaded to smile when hee smarteth, and to giue his sense and feeling the lye, when as it telleth him that hee is vexed and tormented. And therefore I would passe it ouer, thinking it more fit to bee confuted with a whip, than with waight of argument; were there not many among vs, professing Christianity, that in their practice come neere these stoicall precepts, who not out of speculation and discourse of Philosophy, but out of their carnall-security, and senseleſſe stupidity, and hardneſſe of heart, are not at all affected, either with Gods mercies, or with his judgements; but when Gods hand is heauy vpon them, put off the feeling thereof with desperate contempt, labouring to outface their griefes, or quite to blot them out of memory, by going into merry company, gaming, sporting, drinking and such other worldly and carnall delights. In all which they please themselues and would blind others with an opinion of their patience, and contentednesse to beare with all willingnesse whatsoeuer it pleaseth God to inflict vpon them. But let them know that this is not patience, but senseleſſe security, and hardneſſe of heart; not a vertue, but a disease of the minde, euen the dead palsie or sleepy lethargie of sinne; and (as one saith) it is not the strength of health, but senslesse stupidity proceeding from the desperateneſſe of their sickneſſe; and their boasting of it, is not the fruit of patience, but franticke rauing. And so farre off are such from being either wise or patient, that they are rather like those drunkards, described by Salomon, who sleepe securely in the middest of the Sea, and on the top of the mast; and when they are smitten feele no smart, and being beaten doe not know of it; and therefore resolue to continue in their sinne; or those demoniacks, who plucked their chaines and fetters asunder, and could not be tamed by any man, nor kept from offering violence against their owne senslesse bodies. And therefore such stupidity is no fruit of wisdome, but rather of madneſſe or drunkenneſſe in sinne, and ariseth not from knowledge, but from the ignorance or forgetfulneſſe of the causes of afflictions. For if they knew or considered that they all came from God, they would tremble vnder his corrections, because it is a fearefull thing to fall into the hands of the liuing God; if they vnderstood or remembred that the deseruing cause is sin, which hath justly merited not onely these lighter chastisements, but euen the most fearefull wrath of God, and most grieuous and intolerable punishments, temporall and eternall; they would lay them more to heart, and grone in the sight and sense of them. If they did call to minde that the end of these corrections is to bring them vnto sorrow for their sinne, that so they might amend and turne from it, they would not passe them ouer with careleſſe neglect, and secure stupiditie, lest not being touched and affected with these lighter chastichastisements, they make themselues lyable to Gods more terrible vengeance and fearefull plagues.

Which senslesse blockishnesse that wee may auoide in the time of our afflictions, let vs know that the Lord in his Word doth condemne this secure indolencie, and stupid hardnesse of heart, when we are corrected by him; for so he taxeth the Israelites by his Prophet; Thou hast stricken them (saith he) but they haue not sorrowed; thou hast consumed them, but they haue refused to receiue correction, they haue made their faces harder than a stone, and haue refused to returne. So the Prophet Esay condemneth their off-putting from them their sorrow by feasting and reuelling: In that day (saith hee) did the Lord of hosts call vnto weeping and mourning, and to baldnesse and girding with sackcloth. And behold, ioy and gladnesse, slaying of Oxen, and killing of Sheepe, eating flesh, and drinking wine, &c. Secondly, let vs consider that the Scriptures doe not describe vnto vs such a patience, as is without sense of the euils wee suffer, and not at all assaulted with griefe and sorrow; but such an one, as in the feeling of smart doth keepe vs from bursting out into murmuring and repining, or from sinking into desperate sorrow and deepe despaire. Not such an one as is exempted from all dolour and anguish; but onely that it moderate this griefe with spirituall ioy, and meeke submission of our will to the pleasure of God. Neither doth God require that we should haue a patience, not at all pressed with any anxietie or sorrow of minde; but that being tyred with bearing the burthen, we be somewhat refreshed, and eased with the consolations of his Word and Holy Spirit. He would not haue vs vanquished in the combate of afflictions; but yet hee would haue vs fight vnto wearinesse, and not obtaine such a victorie, as hath had no conflict going before it. In a word, that conquest ouer the Crosse best pleaseth him, when as our naturall sight and sense, seeth, feeleth and abhorreth the afflictions which wee suffer, causing vs to grieue and grone vnder our burthen; and in the meane time, our obedience and filiall affection to our heauenly Father, so farre preuaileth, as that in the middest of all difficulties & distresses, wee can bee content to submit our selues to his holy will, and beare the Crosse with patience, which he hath laide vpon vs, vntill hee vouchsafe vs by lawfull meanes, freedome and deliuerie. And this the Apostle Paul affirmeth to bee the estate of all the faithfull, namely that in their afflictions they are touched with some sorrow in the sense and feeling of them, but not so ouerwhelmed with griefe and heauinesse, but that being humbled, they rise againe, and get the victory ouer the violence of their passions. We are (saith he) afflicted on euery side, yet are we not in distresse; in powertie, but not ouercome of powertie; we are persecuted, but not forsaken; cast downe, but we perish not, &c. An example whereof we haue in Peter, vnto whom our Sauiour saith, When thou wast young, thou girdest thy selfe, and walkedst whether thou wouldest: but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch out thine hands, and another shall gird thee, and lead thee whether thou wouldest not. By which speach we are not to vnderstand, that Peter would bee simply vnwilling to suffer for Christ, for then his martyrdome had deserued no prayse; but that howsoeuer hee was willing with all readines to lay downe his life for the glory of God; that naturall feare which hee had of death and torment drew him another way; so as he was hereby distracted betweene a twofold will of grace and nature; the one shunning death, the other yeelding obedience to the will of God; that before a sore conflict he could not put feare to flight, nor get victorie ouer his naturall affection. So Paul professed that he was ready not onely to suffer bonds, but death it selfe, for the name of the Lord Iesus: but yet that naturall desire of preseruing his life, and auoiding torments, so far preuailed, that he vseth all good meanes to escape affliction and persecution, professing that he was a Pharisie, and a citizen of Rome, reprouing the high Priest, who caused him to bee vnjustly smitten; and auoiding the laying in waite of those who sought his life. But most notably doth this appeare in our Sauiour Christ himselfe, who was exceedingly distracted with this double will, the one naturall, whereby hee earnestly desired to preserue his precious life, and to escape those fearefull punishments which he was to suffer, both in his soule and body: the other diuine and spirituall whereby he desired to glorifie his Father, by submitting himselfe in all things to his holy will; and to perfect the worke of mans redemption whom he so dearely loued. Whereof it was that he could not without a great conflict submit himselfe to those grieuous sufferings, but first desireth; Father if it be thy will, let this cup passe from me: and after yeeldeth obedience to his Fathers pleasure; Neuertheless, not mine, but thy will be done. And thus it appeareth, that moderate sorrow in the time of affliction, may well stand and agree with that patience which the Scriptures describe vnto vs. In the third place I adde, that this moderate griefe which is eased and refreshed with diuine consolation is warranted, yea commanded in the Scriptures. The former is implyed, where the Apostle requireth that we should not mourne for them that are departed in the faith of Christ, as men without hope;

2. Cor. 4. 8.

Iob. 21. 18.

Act. 21. 13.

Matth. 26. 39.

where

where hee taxeth and forbiddeth onely heathenish mourning, which was excessiue and immoderate, and alloweth such a proportion as is fit for a temporarie departure. So also where he saith, that we must not despise the chastening of the Lord; as one the other side, wee must not faint when wee are rebuked of him; where hee speaketh of enduring chastening, which argueth sorrow and vexation, and telleth vs, that no chastizing for the present seemeth to bee ioyous, but grieuous, causing the hands to hang downe, and weakning the knees. The other is manifestly expressed in the Prophecie of Ioel, where the Lord cryeth out to his afflicted people: Turne you vnto mee with all your heart, and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning; and rent your hearts and not your clothes, &c. But most plainely by the Apostle Iames, Suffer (saith he) afflictions and sorrow yee, and weepe, let your laughter be turned into mourning, and your ioy into heauinesse. Yea in truth this is the maine end which the Lord propoundeth of our afflictions, that they may serue as his chastizements, to bring vs to a sight and feeling of sinne, true humiliation and vnfained repentance, by smart and sense of paine; euen as the louing and wise Father doth correct his sonne, that by the sense and smart of the roode, he may be brought to a sight of his fault and sorrow for it, and so may amend it for the time to come. And as it is a signe of an vngracious Childe not to be grieued with his Fathers corrections, and a great presumption that they will not amend him, if they doe not moue him: so doth this make it moue than probable, that such are destitute of grace and filiall affection, and farre from reformation and amendement, who haue no sense and feeling of Gods correction, nor are brought by their smart to vnfained sorrow for their fall. Yea such haue just cause to feare, that they are not at all the children of God, seeing they are not affected with his Fatherly chastizements; that they are in the lethargie of securitie, seeing these sharpe stripes will not moue or awake them; that their hearts are brawned and of a flinty hardnesse, when the hammer of Gods judgements will not bruse them, nor the sharpe arrowes of his indignation pearce them, or make any entrance for griefe and sorrow; yea that they are starke dead in their sinnes seeing like senslesse blockes they are not moued at all, when God whippeth & scourgeth them with these stinging whippes of miserie and affliction. Or if they belong vnto Gods election, and haue the life of grace begun in them; if the Lord hath adopted them for his Sonnes, and intendeth to bestow vpon them that heauenly inheritance of his glorious Kingdome; then let them assure themselues, that hee will not leaue them till hee haue humbled them for their faults, and brought them to a sight of their sinne that they may bewaile it. And if his more gentle chastizements will not effect it, because the thicke skinne of security keepeth them from feeling the smart of his rods, he will take in hand the three stringed whippe of his more grieuous judgements, and more seuerely correct them, not leauing to redouble his blowes till their sense of paine hath brought them to a sight of sinne, to true humility and acknowledgment of their faults; and to an hearty sorrow, both naturall for the affliction, and spirituall for their sinne. And this the Lord threatneth against his people of Israell, That if they did walke stubbornly against him, and would not bee humbled by his more mild corrections, hee would walke stubbornly against them in his anger, and chasten them seauen times more according to their sinnes. And at this our Sauiour aimeth when he admonished the man whom he had cured, to sinne no more, lest a worse thing did happen vnto him. And this is just with God to double his punishments, when as men redouble their sinnes, adding to their other transgressions, stubbornesse, impenitencie, hardnesse of heart, and neglect of Gods more gentle chastizements, which he hath appointed to be the meanes of their humiliation and repentance. To which purpose one saith, that hee is rightly judged worthy so much the greater punishment, by how much being vicious, he abhorreth the instruments of vertue and goodnesse.

Moreouer, our Saujour Christ foretold not onely the afflictions of his Disciples, but also that they should sorrow and mourne when they were afflicted. Yee (saith he) shall weepe and lament, and the world shall reioyce: and yee shall sorrow, but your sorrow shall be turned into ioy. Neither did he impute this griefe vnto them as an infirmity, or fruit of pusillanimitie or dejection of minde, but as an action so pleasing and acceptable vnto God, that he vouchafeth to reward it with eternall happinesse. Blessed (saith hee) are they that mourne, for they shall bee comforted: and blessed are yee that weepe now, for yee shall laugh. Finally, it hath beene the continuall practice of all Gods Saints, to sorrow and mourne in their afflictions; for thus Abraham, the Father of the faithfull, mourned for the death of Sara, Isaac for Abraham, Iacob for Isaac, and the supposed death of Ioseph, and Ioseph and his brethren for their father Iacob. Thus was patient Iob affected with moderate griefe when hee heard of the losse of his riches and children, although he meekly submitted himselfe to the will of God, and blessed his holy Name in his greatest extremity; for so it is said, that hee arose and rent his garment, and shaued his head, and

1. Thess. 4. 13.

Heb. 12. 5. 11. 12.

Ioel 2. 12. 13.

Iam. 4. 9.

Leuit. 26. 28.

Iob 1. 20.

Matth. 5. Luk. 6. 21.

Iob. 1. 20.

and fell downe vpon the ground and worshipped. And thus holy Dauid professeth that in his afflictions he was so much affected with sorrow, that he fainted in his mourning, and caused his bed euery night to swim, and watred his Couch with his teares; that hee was bowed and crooked very sore vnder the waight of his afflictions, and went mourning all the day. Thus hee was weakened and sore broken, and roared for the very griefe of his heart. So it is said of good Hezekiah, that being in danger of death, hee turned his face to the wall, prayed vnto the Lord, and wept sore: that he did chatter like a Crane or a Swallow, and did mourne like a Doue. And euen of the whole Church of the Iewes in her captiuity, that together with her affliction remembred her mourning, the wormewood and the gall, and that in remembrance of them, her soule was humbled in her. But aboue all exceptions is the example of our Sauiour, who was so much affected with the feare of his passion, that his soule was heauy vnto the death; in so much as there was need that an Angell should be sent to comfort him; and so much oppressed with the sense of Gods wrath, that hee was brought into a great agony, in so much as his sweat was like drops of bloud trickling downe to the ground, and forced him to cry out in his great distresse, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Neither was hee thus affected with his owne griefes alone, but did sympathize in his friends sorrowes, yea, in the miseries of those who persecuted him; for so it is said, that when he saw Mary weepe, he groned in the spirit, and was troubled in himselfe; that he wept when hee was brought to the graue of Lazarus; and that drawing neere vnto Ierusalem, and beholding the Citie, he wept ouer it, as fore-seeing the miseries which should come vpon it. And in regard of these manifold griefes which his soule sustained, for his owne and others afflictions, the Prophet calleth him a man full of sorrow and heauinesse. And therefore, if not onely all the faithfull, but also our Sauiour Christ himselfe, the mirrour of all true patience, was in his afflictions affected with grief & sorrow; let no man who is not at all touched when the hand of God lyeth heauy vpon him, nor hath so much as any conflict with heauinesse and griefe, when hee is pursued with Gods heauy iudgements, say and boast, that hee doth all this by vertue of his patience and magnanimous fortitude; but rather confesse, as the truth is, that it is his carnall security, and hardnesse of heart, his blockish stupidity, and obdurate senselesnesse, which is the true cause of his indolency, and want of grief; vnlesse he would preferre himselfe in his patience and fortitude before the Patriarchs, Prophets, and Apostles, yea, our Lord and Sauiour Iesus Christ.

Lastly, whereas men glory in their patience as being free from all griefe and sorrow, their words imply a contradiction, for there is no place for patience, where there is no passion, seeing the very object of our patience is griefe and misery, about the bearing and moderating whereof our patience is exercised; so that as there is no occasion of griefe where there are no crosses and afflictions, so there is no occasion to shew our patience, where the heart is not assaulted with griefe and heauinesse; and as there can be no occasion to manifest valour and fortitude, if there be no enemy, nor any victory or triumph, vnlesse a fight goe before: so vnlesse there be, not onely miseries and afflictions, as pouerty, infamy, sickenesse, death and such like calamities; but also a sense and apprehension of them, as great enemies to our peace and comfort, there can be no occasion of vsing patience, which is only exercised in moderating our griefes, and bearing our miseries; nor any prayse of fortitude, vertue or victory, when as there is no enemy to assault vs. But when wee are pinched with sharpe afflictions, and doe exceedingly abhorre them in our naturall disposition, and are much vexed and turmoyled with griefe because wee cannot shake them off, nor be freed from them; then to shew fortitude and magnanimity in bearing those bitter and abhorred miseries, valiantly resisting the tentation of murmuring and repining against Gods prouidence, of sorrowing without meane or measure, or vsing vnlawfull meanes to be deliuered from these euils; to drinke willingly this bitter potion which God hath tempered for vs, to be restrained by the feare and loue of God, from bursting out into any intemperancy: and finally to submit our wils with all meeknesse and humility to the good pleasure of God trying vs with these afflictions, which in our sense and feeling are so irkesome and grieuous; these are the fruits of true patience which commend our victory, and increase our triumph, and herein our Christian prowesse and courage will appeare, when being assaulted with sorrow and heauinesse, it is confirmed and made inuincible by the sweet consolations of Gods holy Spirit, assuring vs of victory, and of the Crowne of glory prepared for them which ouercome. Whereas contrariwise that is stupidity and senselesnes, and not vertue and Christian fortitude, to beare afflictions, when wee doe not feele or apprehend them; neither (as one saith) doe they deserue the prayse of patience who indure (without complayning) the wounds of aduersity, when being benummed they haue no sense of paine.

Q. Sect. 8. That there can be no true patience where there is no passion.

Nulla virtus est quæ non sentiat perpeti. Senec. in Sap. non Cad. iniur. cap. 16.

Non habent fortitudinis laudem qui stupore magis vulnerum tulerint quam dolorem. Amb. in Luc. 22

Q. Sect. 9. That our patience must bee ioyned with constancy.

And so much concerning the first thing required in our patience, or manner of bearing the crosse, which is, that we beare afflictions quietly and meekly, with moderate griefe griefe and sorrow: the next thing is that we beare them constantly, neither seeking to shift them off by vnlawfull meanes, nor murmuring and repining against the prouidence of God, whilest wee lye vnder this burthen of misery. For as it is not sufficient for a good Pilot to take paines in breaking one dãgerous billow, or in passing one storme; but he must shew the like care and diligence in well gouerning the ship, till hee safely arriue at the wished Hauen; and as it is not enough for a good Captaine or Souldier to shew great valour in the first brunt of the battaile, if afterwards he shamefully flee, or fight faindly & cowardly; but hee must couragiously continue fighting, till hee haue vanquished the enemy and obtained victory: so it is not sufficient to the being of Christian patience, that we beare and brooke well one storme of misery, and through our slacknesse and negligence sinke or be wrackt in the next, but after one billow of affliction, and tempest of trouble is past and escaped, wee must expect and prepare our selues to indure an other, vntill we safely arriue in the hauen of happines. It is not enough for a Christian Souldier, that he demeane himselfe wel in the first conflict with afflictions, if hee afterwards grow weary of fighting, and flee out of the field by vsing vnlawfull meanes to escape; or fight faintly and not without grudging and murmuring against his Commander, for bringing him into the troubles and dangers; but he must constantly continue his courage and resolution, after one encounter expecting and preparing himselfe to sustaine another, and neuer cease shewing his fortitude and vnwearied magnanimity, till he haue obtained a full and finall victory. And this duty of continuing constant in bearing our afflictions with patience, our Sauiour intimateth and implicitely requireth, whereas he saith, that if a man will be his Disciple, hee must take vp his crosse daily, and follow him: & the Apostle exhorteth vs not only to begin well, but that we will let patience haue her perfect worke, that we may be perfect and entire, lacking nothing; & the Psalmist, that we should waite patiently vpon the Lord, and hope in him; the which the afflicted Church doth commend as a good thing in those who performe it: It is good (saith shee) both to trust, and to wait for the saluation of the Lord. An example of which duty we haue in Iob, who after one affliction, patiently endured another, vntill they were exceedingly multiplied in number, and increased in waight: as also Dauid who after hee had receiued Gods promise of being King, indured manifold afflictions with much patience, & with great constancy waited Gods leisure for the accomplishment of them. And so likewise in Paul, who armeth himselfe to beare all afflictions without faltring, both present, and to come;

Patientia est honestatis aut vtilitatis causa rerum arduarum & terribilium voluntaria & diuturna perpessio, Cic. in 2. Rhetoric.

Acts 20.23.

Luke 9.23.

Iam. 1.4.

Psal. 37.7.

Lam. 3.26.

for so he professeth, that he was ready, not onely to be bound, but euen to die for the name of the Lord Iesus: And elsewhere hee saith, that therfore we faint not, but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed daily, because our light affliction, which is but for a moment, causeth vnto vs a farre most excellent, and an eternall waight of glory. But of this point I shall haue occasion to intreat more largely, when I come to speak of our perseuerance in faith and patience, when God deferreth to helpe and deliuer vs out of trouble.

Acts 21.13.

2. Cor. 4.16.

The last thing required in our patience is, that we doe not onely meekly and constantly beare our afflictions, but also willingly and cheerefully submit our selues herein to Gods good pleasure; not because wee cannot chuse, and must whether we will or not, but with alacrity and readinesse, as being a thing not onely not hurtfull and pernicious, but through the wisedome and goodnesse of God ruling and disposing them, good and profitable. And this our Sauiour implyeth, where he enjoyneth vs to take vp our crosse; whereby as it is not meant, that we must voluntarily draw crosses vpon our selues of our owne making, but our receiuing of those which it pleaseth God to lay vpon vs; so it signifieth that wee must not vndergoe and beare them as a burthen forced vpon vs whether we will or no, with grudging and repining: but willingly, cheerefully, thankfully and with joy in the Holy Ghost. And these are the highest degrees of patience, which though few attaine vnto in full measure, yet all the faithfull desire and labour after them, vsing all good meanes to attaine vnto this perfection. Yea, will some say, but before you required, that wee should bee affected with sorrow in our sufferings, and moderately mourne in our crosses and afflictions, and how then can wee at the same time rejoyce, seeing joy and mourning are opposite the one to the other? To which I answere that Christian sorrow and rejoycing may well stand together, seeing the one maketh way for the other; for therefore we bewaile our sins, that we may rejoyce in the assurance of the pardon of them, of our reconciliation with God, and of our interest in all the gracious promises of the Gospell. So that though wee giue the first part to be acted by sorrow, yet we would not haue it to continue alwayes in the heart of a Christian, for so it would grow immoderate and excessiue: but after this our vnfained repentance for sinne, and assurance of pardon and our peace with God, followeth spirituall rejoycing, not onely in the confluence of worldly benefits, but also in tribulation and affliction, as the Apostle speaketh. Againe, opposites may agree in the same subject, at the same time in a diuers respect, for so we may mourne because by our

Rom. 5.3.

sinnes

sinnes we haue crucified the Lord of Life, but rejoyce in that by his death hee hath wrought the worke of our redemption; wee may at the same time mourne in the sight of our sinnes, because we haue dishonoured by them our gracious Father; and yet rejoyce, in that our sorrow assureth vs that they are forgiuen, and we receiued into Gods fauour; we may mourne in the sense of our paine and smart, but yet rejoyce in it, as it is a signe of our adoption, when God correcteth vs as his sonnes, that we may not be condemned with the World; wee may mourne in the sight of our miseries, as being the fruits of sinne, but rejoyce in them as they are meanes to mortifie the flesh and our naturall corruptions. Finally, as wee haue just cause of sorrowing, in that we haue deserued that the Lord should deprive vs of all those worldly comforts; so to be filled with joy, when we consider that these light and momentany afflictions shall cause vnto vs a farre most excellent and an eternall waight of glory. In which regard it may truly be said, that the Christian spendeth his dayes in joyfull mourning, or mournfull joy, and that by these two Actors the Comedy of his life is plaid, the one no sooner entring the Stage, but the other followeth; and interchangeably acting their parts, the one beginning as soone as the other endeth, and this beginning againe, when the other hath done. Lastly, opposites may bee in the same subject in respect of diuers parts; now wee are partly flesh, and partly spirit; and as in the one wee doe in time of affliction, grieue and sorrow, groane and complaine, in the sense and feeling of our smart & pain; so in the other we reioyce in the assurance of the pardon of our sins, and that the sting of afflictions is plucked out; of our reconciliation with God, and that heauenly inheritance which is prouided for vs. And thus by sense of paine the Lord maketh the flesh to mourne that it may be mortified, restrained from sinne for feare of punishment, and subdued vnto the spirit; and by this spirituall joy apprehended by faith he refresheth the spirituall part that it may not faint and yeild when the flesh tempteth it to murmuring or despaire. And therefore if we speake properly, as we cannot say that the flesh reioyceth in tribulation with this spirituall joy, so neither that the spirit mourneth with worldly and sensuall sorrow. For as the Apostle tells vs, the fruits of the spirit are not this worldly sorrow, griefe and mourning, but loue, ioy, and peace.; only it sorroweth with godly griefe, in that by our sinnes wee haue offended God our gracious Father, and moued him in his just displeasure to inflict vpon vs these chastizements and afflictions.

Although therefore we must lay our afflictions to heart, that we may not only naturally sorrow for our smart, but also spiritually for our sins, yet in the regenerate part we must beare them with cheerefulnesse, considering the causes and ends for which the Lord chastiseth vs, and the notable fruits and benefits which accompany his corrections. And this our cheerfull willingnesse and alacrity must be shewed and expressed, first, by thanksgiuing vnto God, and praysing his holy Name; neither are wee bound onely to performe these duties in the time of our prosperity, and in the confluence of all Gods blessings and benefits, but also in our afflictions and troubles; not for the crosses and calamities themselues, which are to be shunned as the euils of punishment; but for the wise care, and louing prouidence of our heauenly Father, whereby hee ordereth and disposeth them to our good; as the mortifying of our sins and corruptions, the inriching of our hearts with his spirituall graces, and the furthering and increasing of our heauenly happinesse. For if the childe be bound to his Father in all loue and duty, not onely because hee feedeth and clotheth him, but also because hee gouerneth and correcteth him; not for the blowes and smart which he sustaineth, for these his nature abhorreth as sharpe and bitter, but for his care in reclayming him from his faults, which being nourished would in time justly disable him from receiuing his inheritance. And if being grieuously sicke, we are content to requite the Physician and Chyrurgion for their distastfull and loathsome potions, their sharpe corrasiues, cutting, lancing, searing, not onely with thankes and deserued prayse, but also with rewards; not because of the things themselues, which for the present increase our paine and torment; but because out of their skill and care, they vse them as meanes for the recouery of our bodily health; then how much more are wee to be thankfull vnto our heauenly Father chastising vs? seeing in his loue and care he doth hereby reforme vs of our sins, & so maketh vs fit to be heires of that euerlasting patrimony of his glorious Kingdome? How much should wee magnifie this spirituall Physician of our soules? Not for the bitter potions which he maketh vs to drinke; but because he intendeth, and accordingly effecteth our recouery vnto health, and that not the health of our corruptible bodies, which onely reprieueth them to the next Ague fits of sicknesse, but of our precious and immortall soules; not such as is momentany & temporary, but perpetuall and euerlasting. It is not therefore enough that wee take these great benefits, which Gods chastising hand doth reach out vnto vs with patience, and without murmuring; but wee must also receiue them with prayse and thanksgiuing. For so the Apostle requireth, If any man

That wee must shew our cheerfulnes in thanksgiuing and praysing Gods Name.

(ſaith he) ſuffer as a Chriſtian, let him not be aſhamed, but let him glorifie God in this behalfe. And the Apoſtle Paul prayeth, that the Coloſſians might be ſtrengthened with all might through Gods glurious power, not onely vnto patience and long ſuffering, but alſo that it might bee performed with ioyfulneſſe, and with thankeſgiuing vnto God the Father which had hereby made them meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the Saints in light. Of which we haue an example in Iob, who in his grieuous afflictions, ſheweth not onely his patience, but alſo his thankfulneſſe; The Lord (ſaith he) hath giuen, and the Lord hath taken; Bleſſed be the Name of the Lord. So the Church being in great tribulation, acknowledgeth Gods great mercy, in that they were not vtterly conſumed. And the Apoſtles Paul and Silas, being caſt into the dungeon, and hauing their feet faſt in the ſtockes, doe not onely patiently beare theſe afflictions, but alſo ſing prayſes vnto God.

1. Pet. 4. 16.

Col. 1. 11, 12.

Iob 1. 21.

Lament. 3. 22.

Acts 16. 25.

9. Sect. 12. That our patience muſt be ioyned with ioy and ſpirituall reioycing.

Yea, we muſt labour to goe yet further, & not onely with our cheerefull patience ioyne thankeſgiuing, but with them both ſpirituall rejoycing and joy in the Holy Ghoſt; the which our joy muſt not ariſe from the afflictions themſelues, which were vnnaturall ſenſleſneſſe, and more than brutiſh inhumanity; (for who can laugh when hee feeleth ſmart, and rejoyce in his torments and tedious troubles?) but from thoſe notable ſignes of Gods loue, which appeare in his fatherly chaſtizements, and thoſe ſingular fruits, both reſpecting grace and glory, which doe not onely accompany, but alſo follow after them. And in this regard our Sauiour willed his Diſciples, and with them all the faithfull, to rejoyce and be glad in their bitter afflictions and cruel proſecutions, becauſe their reward was great in Heauen. So the Apoſtle Peter willeth thoſe who are exerciſed in this fiery triall, not to thinke it ſtrange, but to reioyce, in as much as they are herein partakers of Chriſts ſufferings, that when his glory ſhall appeare, they may be glad and reioyce. And this Saint Paul prayeth in the behalfe of the Coloſſians, that with their patience and long ſuffering, there might be joyned joyfulneſſe. An example whereof we haue in the holy Apoſtles, who being afflicted and perſecuted for the profeſſion of Chriſt, departed from the Councell, rejoycing that they were counted worthy to ſuffer rebuke for his Name. So the Apoſtle Paul ſaith of himſelfe, that hee rejoyced in his ſufferings for the Church of the Coloſſians; and giueth teſtimony to the Theſſalonians, that they receiued the Goſpell with much affliction, and with ioy of the Holy Ghoſt. So of the faithfull Hebrewes it is ſaid, that though they ſorrowed with the Apoſtle for his bonds, yet they ſuffered with ioy the ſpoyling of their own goods, knowing that they had in Heauen a better and more enduring ſubſtance. Neither did he onely thus rejoyce in his ſuffering perſecution for Chriſt and the profeſſion of the Goſpell, but in thoſe ſpirituall afflictions which hee indured, in the ſight and ſenſe of his infirmities, when hee knew that in them Gods power and grace was aduanced and magnified: for hauing receiued anſwere, when hee deſired to be freed from them, that Gods grace was ſufficient for him, and that his diuine power was made manifeſt in his humane frailty and weakneſs; hee profeſſeth that very gladly hee would reioyce in his infirmities, that the power of Chriſt might dwell in him; yea, that hee did take pleaſure as well in theſe infirmities, as in reproaches, neceſſities, perſecution and anguiſh for Chriſts ſake, becauſe when he was weake in himſelfe, he was ſtrong in Chriſt. Finally, if wee deſire to conforme our ſelues to the doctrine and example of the holy Apoſtles, we muſt not onely be patient, chearfull, ready to giue thankes, or yet reioyce in our afflictions in ſome ſmall meaſure, and (as it were) with ordinary ioy and gladneſſe; but with ioy very great, and as it were, in the higheſt degree; not onely reioycing, but euen triumphing, glorying and exulting in our ioy. And as it is ſaid of the Oſtrich, that ſhee doth not only eate iron, but alſo diſgeſteth and turneth it into her nouriſhment; ſo muſt wee not only be content (as it were) to ſwallow in ſilence and patience the difficulties of afflictions, which the carnall man can by no meanes diſgeſt, without being ſicke vnto the death with ſorrow and heauineſſe; but wee muſt labour alſo to ſucke out of them ſuch wholeſome nouriſhment, as may exceedingly refreſh and comfort vs. And Salamander like we are not onely to liue, but alſo chiefly to rejoyce in the fire of affliction and tribulation. For ſo the Apoſtle Iames requireth, that we counte it exceeding ioy, when wee fall into diuers tentations, not in the ſight of the afflictions themſelues, but becauſe we know that they ſerue to increaſe in vs Gods ſpirituall graces, and that the trying of our faith bringeth forth patience, which in the end will attaine to ſuch perfection, that it will lacke nothing. And thus the Apoſtle maketh a fruit of that fulneſſe of faith which wee muſt labour after; for after that it hath aſſured vs of the pardon of our ſins, and of our peace with God, we rejoyce, yea, glory and triumph, not onely in our hope of heauenly happines, but alſo in affliction & tribulation. An example whereof we haue in the faithful Corinthians, who as they abounded in the great triall of affliction, ſo their joy alſo abounded; & in the Apoſtle himſelf, who profeſſeth that hee was filled with comfort, and was exceeding ioyous in all his tribulations; inſomuch as when he would chiefly glory & ſhew ſuch excellency, wherein hee was to be matched with the reſt of the Apoſtles; he ſet-

Matth. 5. 11, 12.

1. Pet. 4. 13.

Col. 1. 11.

Acts 5. 41.

Col. 1. 24.

1. Theſſ. 1. 6.

Heb. 10. 34.

Iames 1. 2.

2. Cor. 7. 4.

2. Cor. 8. 2.

2. Cor. 7. 4.

2. Cor. 12. 10. 11.

teeth

teth downe a large Bed-roll of his many and grieuous afflictions, and concludeth, that if he must needs boast himselfe and rejoyce, hee would rejoyce and glory in his infirmities.

And this is the patience of the Saints, which euery faithfull man must labour to attaine vnto, and neuer to bee at rest vntill in some measure he be endued with it. It is true, that none can attaine vnto this perfection of patience, but those who are come to fulnesse of faith; and euen among Gods greatest Worthies, who had this fulnesse of perswasion, we may obserue, that when their faith was shaken with grieuous tentations, their patience also was crazed and much blemished with murmuring and complaining. As we may see in iust Iob, the paterne of true patience, who by the weight of his affliction, is moued to curse the day of his Natiuity; to complaine that God deale against him by strong hand, and laid punishments vpon him which hee could hardly iustifie; if hee might vpon equall tearmes dispute with him, or had some vmpire betweene them, who would indifferently heare and iudge his cause. Yea, as desperately impatient of enduring long misery he prouoketh God to increase his afflictions, to hunt him as a Lion, and to shew himselfe maruellous vpon him. And this was the case of holy Dauid, who vpon the occasion of his grieuous afflictions penned many Psalmes, full of dolefull complaints, which sauour of much impatiencie. And also of the good Prophet Ieremy, who in the bitternesse of his griefe cursseth the day wherein he was borne; and repineth against his creation, because hee came out of the wombe to see labour and sorrow. And so the Prophet Ionas maketh his light affliction burthensome, through his owne impatiency in bearing it, and then murmureth, and euen chideth with God for his ouer-much mercy in sparing Niniueh, and his too much seuerity towards him in spoyling the Gourd, and causing him to bee suspected for a false Prophet. And therefore seeing Gods chiefest Champions haue thus shewed their infirmities, let vs who come so farre short of them, not dreame of hauing such a patience, as is at all times perfect and free from all imperfection; much lesse be cast downe and vtterly discouraged, when in the time of tryall we bewray our weaknesse, growing into rage and impatiency, because wee faile in the degree of our patience: but let vs onely desire earnestly, & diligently labour after this heigth of perfection, and when we come short of it, bewaile our imperfection. And forasmuch, as we haue not this patience of our selues, but it is the gift of God, the fountain of all goodnesse, let vs often haue our recourse vnto him by feruent and effectuall prayers, laying open our miseries and afflictions, with our inability to beare and suffer them; and craving that hee will strengthen and increase our patience, whereby we may be inabled to indure all those crosses that he is pleased to lay vpon vs, grounding our faith vpon that gracious promise, that if we aske his holy Spirit in the Name of Iesus Christ, he will giue him vnto vs. And this the Apostle admonisheth vs to put in practice, If any of you (saith he) lack wisdome, let him aske it of God, which giueth to men liberally; reproaching none, and it shall be giuen him. Which words are properly to be vnderstood of that speciall wisdome, which teacheth vs to beare our afflictions patiently, as the coherence of the words doth plainly shew. Which duty if we conscionably and diligently performe, it will both increase our patience, the Lord being as ready to giue his spirituall graces, as wee to aske them; and much lessen the load of our afflictions. For if we receiue much ease and comfort, when wee vnburthen our hearts of our griefes, by laying them open before a deare friend, if he will with patience, though with some wearinesse heare them, and but pitty vs, though hee cannot helpe vs; then how much more ease and comfort must wee needs feele, if in our afflictions wee often powre out our soules before the Lord by feruent prayer, and vnfold vnto him all our griefes, seeing hee is neuer weary in hearing our complaints, and hath not onely more pity and compassion on vs in our distresses, than the most tender father or mother ouer their beloued childe; but also power sufficient to deliuer vs out of all our afflictions, and either to lessen our burthen, or to giue vs more strength and patience to beare it with comfort, yea, with thankfulnesse, chearefulnesse, and joy in the Holy Ghost? And hauing thus commended our cause vnto God, let vs by a firme affiance rely our selues wholy vpon his prouidence and promised assistance, neither must we for the well bearing of our afflictions rest vpon our owne naturall strength and magnanimity, but labour to furnish our hearts with that true patience, which is the gift of Gods holy Spirit. Vnto which when we haue attained in some good measure, let vs not think that we can now stand, fight and ouercome, by sole vertue of his grace receiued, without any further helpe from God; but considering that these graces are in this life imperfect, and mingled with much infirmity and corruption, let vs not make too bold in resting vpon our owne strength, but relye our selues wholy vpon Gods assistance, presuming vpon his promised ayde, that wee can thereby ouercome all difficulties and dangers, according to the example of the Apostle, who saith that hee could doe all things through the helpe of Christ which strengthened him.

Luke 11.13.

Iames 1.5.

Phil. 4.13.

CHAP. II.

Of the excellencie, vtilitie and neceſſitie of patience.

Sect. 1. Of the excellencie of patience.

HAuing ſpoken of patience it ſelfe, and ſhewed what it is, together with the cauſes and properties thereof; it followeth, that according to our order propounded, wee come to intreat of the meanes whereby it may eyther be wrought in vs, or being begun, may be increaſed and confirmed. And theſe are of two ſorts; the firſt are certaine reaſons and arguments, by which this vertue being commended vnto vs, we may be inflamed with a true and vnfained loue thereof, and anſwerably with all feruency of deſire may vſe all diligence, and bend all our ſtrength for the obtayning of it. For as it is in vaine to preſcribe the meanes of thriuing in eſtate, to him that contemneth riches; or to prouide the daintieſt meate for him, who hauing quite loſt his ſtomacke, will not feed vpon it; ſo is it to little purpoſe to preſcribe meanes for the attaining vnto this rich treaſure, or to prouide this reſtoratiue nouriſhment of patience, which being fed vpon, would ſtreng then vs for the bearing of the greateſt afflictions; if wee haue no deſire to be thus ſpiritually inriched, nor any appetite to feed on this dainty food for our ſoules; ſeeing wee will make no vſe of this meanes when wee haue them, but careleſly contemne and caſt them behind our backes. The ſecond ſort of meanes are thoſe arguments of comfort and conſolation, which are the food and nouriſhment of our patience, whereby it is ſtrengthened and preſerued from languiſhing and fainting. The former ſort may bee referred to theſe three heads, namely, the excellency, vtility, and neceſſity of this vertue; for if it be in its owne nature moſt excellent, vnto vs moſt profitable, and of ſuch neceſſary vſe, and great and vrgent conſequence, that wee cannot poſſibly bee without it; but that a mortall mayme will follow this defect; then haue we great cauſe to loue it, and out of our affection to a jewell ſo precious, to vſe all good meanes that wee may attaine vnto it. Now the excellency of patience may diuerſly appear vnto vs; for firſt it is ennobled by the Authour, who is God himſelfe; for he alone engraueth this vertue in vs by the finger of his holy Spirit, as an Image and liuely Picture of that infinite patience which is in his owne moſt perfect nature, and a ſmall ſparke of that moſt glorious and mighty flame; for he is oftentimes preſſed with the waight and haynouſneſſe of our ſinnes, as a Cart is preſſed which is full of ſheaues, as the Prophet ſpeaketh, and yet he beareth with vs; hee is conteſt through his infinite patience to ſuffer all thoſe wrongs and injuries which we offer againſt him, till there be no remedie; yea, he not onely beareth with his owne ſeruants which loue him, but alſo with the wicked which are his enemies, ſuffering with long patience the veſſels of wrath, prepared to deſtruction, not preſently puniſhing their outragious ſinnes and high treaſons againſt his Majeſty, but deferring it to the end of the World, and therefore needs muſt this grace be excellent which wee not only haue from God, but alſo communicate with him. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that this vertue of patience is common vnto vs with God, for it taketh its beginning from him; and from him alone as from the fountaine of all goodneſſe, it hath its excellency and dignity; and therfore great cauſe there is, that man ſhould loue that, which is ſo glorious in Gods ſight. Secondly, the perfection of patience is the perfection of Chriſtianity, and they who haue attayned vnto it, haue nothing wanting; for ſo the Apoſtle teacheth vs; Let patience (ſaith he) haue her perfect worke, that yee may be perfect and entire, lacking nothing. And hereof it is, that the act of ſuffering for the Name of Chriſt, is made by the Apoſtle an higher degree of Chriſtian excellency vouchſafed vnto vs by God, than the act of beleeving: Vnto you (ſaith hee) is giuen for Chriſt, that not onely yee ſhould beleeue in him, but alſo ſuffer for his ſake; which is not to bee vnderſtood ſimply of all ſuffering for Chriſt, for we may ſuffer whether we will or no, or with much murmuring and repining; but of ſuffering with patience, when as by bearing wee doe ouercome, and get the vpper hand of all our afflictions. In it conſiſteth the chiefe part of our Chriſtian valour and fortitude, which is not ſo much ſeene in doing, as in ſuffering; nor in reſiſting, as in yeelding and patient induring. Neither in truth is it any great matter to ſtruggle, ſtriue and make reſiſtance, when the burthen of affliction doth lye vpon vs. For euen the baſeſt creatures in their greateſt impotency and weakneſſe, are ready in their kind to repell harme; to reuenge themſelues vpon them who hurt them; and to ſtriue and reſiſt when they can neither ſcape by flight, nor defend themſelues by hiding their heads from the danger of the enemy; and according to the prouerbe, a worme troden vpon will turne againe: but this is the true valour of a Chriſtian, when he can beare his croſſe without murmuring; ouerrule his owne nature, drawing him to reuenge, returne benefits for injuries, and ouercome euill with goodneſſe, according to the example of our heauenly Father: then doth he ſhew his fortitude, and moſt gloriouſly triumph ouer his ſpirituall enemies, when as hee vanquiſheth without ſtriking, and though vnarmed of all offenſiue weapons,

2. Chron. 1.

Rom. 9. 22.

Eſt nobis cum Deo communis patientiæ [illegible] pat. inde [illegible] cœpit & fine[illegible] capit ſumit. Cyprian. de bono patient.

Iames 1. 4.

Phil. 1. 29.

Lenit[illegible] ri[illegible] ferre, ſ[illegible] ferre, ſ[illegible] Senec. in Thyeſt.

Amos 2. 13.

Maxima [illegible] trumpha[illegible] pugnat ho[illegible] dormit[illegible] vincere[illegible] rat.

weapons, doth couragiously march into the field, hauing nothing in his hand, but the shield of patience, and by bearing the blowes doth get the victory. Then doth he shew his valour and vnmatchable strength, when like a firme rocke hee standeth in a Sea of miseries, and when the huge billowes of afflictions doe beare against him, is not moued, but breaketh them in peeces with their own violence. Finally, then doth Christian prowesse and magnanimity appeare, when as wee keepe our standing, (as it were) daring afflictions after one assault to encounter vs againe; and with vnwearied and inuincible constancy and courage continue the the fight, till our enemies being ouercome, our great Commander the Lord of hoasts doth sound the retreat, either giuing vs the warrant of his word for our leauing the field, or calling vs by death to receiue that glorious Crowne of victory, and not when according to that heathenish and stoicall fortitude, we are ready to shift off the burthen of afflictions by violent death: the which in deed was nothing but base pusillanimity, which made them chuse to yeeld as conquered, rather than to indure the paines of the fight; and timerous cowardize, which caused them to cut their owne throats, for feare of sustaining some greater euill. Neither is it, as one of themselues confessed, a thing hardy and prayse-worthy, to contemne life in the time of aduersity, but when wee can with patience indure afflictions, and liue in misery, and not be miserable. Moreouer the excellency of patience heerein appeareth, in that it maketh vs according to the degree of our sufferings, liuing Martyrs. For as those, who are truely so called, endured death, that they might giue testimony to the truth of Gods Word, so those who suffer afflictions with patience do giue testimony to the truth, prouidence, power, mercy and goodnesse of God towards them, seeing these onely are the causes which mooue them with all meeknesse and cheerefulnesse to beare those tedious and grieuous afflictions, vnder the least part whereof others murmure, yea blaspheme, who doe not know or beleeue that God is such an one in himselfe, or at least towards them. To this purpose one saith, that patience is a kind of Martyrdome; for as to dye by the hand of a cruell persecutor is Martyrdome in open action, so to beare afflictions with patience, to suffer contumelies in obedience to God, and to loue him that hateth vs, is Martyrdome in the secret intention and cogitation. In which respect wee may (as another saith) bee Martyrs without eyther fire or sword, if being afflicted wee doe inwardly in our minds preserue patience; neither can we presume with any certainty that such an one is good, who hath not beene tryed and approoued by induring of euill. Lastly hereby it may appeare of what excellency patience is, in that by vertue thereof euill is turned into good; and that which naturally hurteth and destroyeth vs, it maketh to serue for our vse and benefit; for of curses it maketh blessings, and of miseries mercies; it turneth seuere punishments into fatherly corrections, whereby our spirituall estate is much bettered and amended; and signes of Gods wrath, into signes of his loue. And whereas afflictions in their owne nature are the beginnings of Hell torments by the help of patience, bearing them aright, they become furtherances to the ioyes of Heauen, and make our crowne of blessednesse much more glorious. To this purpose one saith; perhaps some euill doth lye vpon thee, but if thou wilt, though it be euill in it selfe, it shall not bee euill vnto thee; giue thankes vnto God for it, and thy euill shall bee turned into good. And hereof it is, that if a Christian be armed with patience, misery it selfe cannot make him miserable; seeing it maketh medicines of these poysons; tortures the occasions of triumph; profitable salues of tormenting corrasiues, for the curing of the sores of sinne, and drawing out the core of our corruptions; and whereas afflictions in their owne nature doe make vs to flee from God, as from the face of a terrible judge, by our patient bearing of them we approach neerer vnto him, as vnto a gracious Father, who correcteth vs for our good, and maketh these slight and momentany afflictions to helpe vs forward in the obtaining of that superexcellent and eternall waight of glory.

Chryſoſt. in 1. Theſ. 5. Hom. 10.

Quemuis ſortem vidoria miſerum negat. Senec. in Herc. furente.

The second argument to commend patience vnto vs, is the great vtility and profit which it bringeth to those that haue it, for it serueth for all good vses, and furthereth vs in all our vertuous indeuours; And (as one saith) it both commendeth vs vnto God, and preserueth vs through his prouidence and protection; it tempereth anger, brideleth the tongue, gouerneth the mind, keepeth peace, ruleth and moderateth discipline, and breaketh the violence of lust; it asswageth the swelling of pride, extinguisheth the fire of displeasure, and vnkindnesse, restraineth the power of the rich, and cherisheth the penury of the poore, &c. It maketh men humble in prosperity, courageous in aduersity, meeke towards those who offer injuries and contumelies; it teacheth vs quickly to forgiue others offending vs, but if our selues bee faulty, to be long and instant in crauing pardon; it repelleth temptations, indureth persecutions, and bringeth our sufferings and martyrdome to perfection. It is patience which layeth a firme foundation for our faith, and aduanceth on high the progresse of our hope; it directeth our actions that wee may hold on in way of Christ, whileſt we follow him in his ſufferings, and makes vs to continue the Sonnes of God, whileſt wee imitate the patience of our heauenly Father. More eſpecially this vertue of patience is very profitable vnto vs, both in reſpect of God and of our ſelues. For it tendeth much to the aduancement of Gods glory, as it is a meanes to manifeſt not onely it ſelfe, but alſo the reſt of Gods ſauing graces to the prayſe of him that gaue them, whileſt it inableth vs to beare all manner of afflictions and calamities for his ſake; for as the excellency of the worke or gift doth exceedingly commend the workeman or giuer; ſo theſe graces of patience, faith, hope, loue and the reſt, being the gifts of God and fruits of his holy Spirit, doe magnifie the the power, mercy, and bounty of the Lord, when they are made manifeſt by our ſufferings, and this Chriſtian armour of proofe doth much commend the skill of the workman, when it beats backe theſe fiery bullets of the worlds tentations; as it may appeare in the example of Iob, Dauid, Daniel, the three Children, and the Apoſtles of our Sauiour Chriſt, who were in all things ready to ſubmit themſelues to the good pleaſure of their Lord and Maſter, and to teſtifie their obedience and deſire to glorifie him, euen vnto the death. So alſo it is very profitable vnto vs in reſpect of our ſelues: for firſt this patience doth lighten all our croſſes, and leſſen our paines; and that in a twofold reſpect: firſt as it doth ſtrengthen and inable vs to beare all miſeries and calamities, in which reſpect it may truely be ſaid that there is no burthen of affliction ſo heauy, which may not eaſily and comfortably bee borne vpon the ſhoulders of patience. And in this regard one ſaith, that patience is an impenetrable ſhield and impregnable Tower repelling all manner of euill; and as a ſparke falling into the deep ſea, doth not at all hurt it, but is it ſelfe extinguiſhed; ſo the greateſt euils which can happen, meeting with a patient mind, are themſelues quelled & quenched, and doe not at all amate it, becauſe the ſtrength of patience is able to ouercome all troubles and afflictions. Whereas contrariwiſe when men through impatience do ſtruggle and ſtriue againſt their croſſes and calamities, they are, like the bird in the lime-buſh, or fiſh in the net, the more intangled; and being caught, are the more diſabled to beare them, or to indure the brunt of their ſharpe encounter; for as this faintnes and weaknes of mind doth diſable them, ſo as they cannot imploy their ſtrength to their beſt aduantage, but at the firſt onſet betake themſelues to flight; ſo doth it adde much ſtrength and courage to their enemies, when as they purſue flying and fainting forces, hauing now no need to fight, but onely to follow, kill, and ſeaſe vpon the pray; whereas it would much ſtay the violence, and pull downe the daring pride of theſe ſpirituall enemies, if they would manfully keepe their ſtanding, or being as the firſt ſomewhat diſordered, would with vndaunted courage recollect the ſcattered forces of their minds, and againe make head againſt them. Neither in truth haue theſe afflictions any force and ſtrength to foyle or ouercome vs, but whas through our impatiency, feare, and cowardize wee giue vnto them; for (as one well ſaith) it is with paine, as it is with pretious ſtones, which take either an higher or deeper colour according to the foyle in which they are ſet, ſeeing it holdeth no other place, nor receaueth more ſtrength than that, which in our eſtimate we are content to giue vnto it. Secondly, this patience and meeke bearing of the croſſe doth much leſſen our afflictions in reſpect of God, who like a wiſe and louing Father doth commonly ceaſe further to correct vs, when as he ſeeth vs throughly humbled, and that wee beare his chaſtiſements with patience and meekeneſſe, in all things ſubmitting our ſelues to his good will and pleaſure, without any ſtrugling, murmuring, or repining, whereas contrariwiſe when being corrected for our faults wee ſhew our ſelues impatient, ſtubborne and vnruly, ſtriuing by all meanes lawfull and vnlawfull to eſcape Gods hand, this moueth the Lord to as much diſpleaſure, as the offences themſelues for which wee are chaſtiſed, and cauſeth him to lay on vs more and ſharper ſtripes, till by our ſufferings and ſmart wee haue learned dutifull ſubmiſſion to our heauenly Father, which wee would not practiſe out of our owne obedience. So that by our impatiency wee ſhall get no greater aduantage, than the refractary and vnruly Oxe by his ſtrugling to caſt off the yoke; for the more he ſtriueth, the faſter his Owner maketh it, and whereas his patient bearing of it would make it much lighter and eaſier, by wraſtling and ſtrugling hee doth but gall his necke, tyre himſelfe, and to his other labours getteth ſore blowes and ſtripes for his vnrulineſſe.

2. Sect. 2. Of the vtility and profit of patience. Cyprian de bono patientiæ Serm. 3.

Cedamus; ſunt ſic quoq; bene ſortis onus. Ouid.

Chryſoſt. in 1. Cor. 13. homil. 33.

Moreouer, patience is exceeding profitable vnto vs, as it maketh vs conſtant, and in all eſtates like vnto our ſelues, not varying and changing with the mutability of our outward condition, but in all alterations continuing one and the ſame; neither yet depending vpon external accidents for peace and contentment, but making all conditions to ſerue our mind, and our mind ſubiect to none; and retaining our owne habituall ſweetneſſe of ioy and comfort, though we runne through (as it were) a ſalt Sea of miſery and affliction. And howſoeuer others who are toſſed with the tempeſtuous ſtormes of worldly miſeries are much inindangered, and euery hand-while are ready to make shipwracke of faith and a good conscience; yet hee who is endued with this vertue of patience, is like one who hath passed and escaped all these dangers, and being now entred into the hauen of rest, sitteth there secure from all stormes and tempests, because though they rage neuer so much, yet they cannot reach him; and though these huge billowes of afflictions appearing in his sight, threaten to ouerwhelme him, yet when they approach neere, their proud waues fall downe and abate their fury, and either touch him not at all, or beat vpon him as against an immoueable rocke which breaketh them, it selfe receiuing no damage. And thus doth the Christian man with patience settle his heart, as the Apostle teacheth vs, making it firme and constant against all the stormes of troubles and calamities; and thus doth hee possesse his soule with patience, as our Sauiour speaketh, keeping it safe thereby, as in an impregnable Fort, which may well bee assaulted, but neuer scaled or ouerthrowne; and though, like the bush appearing to Moses, hee seemeth to be burnt with the fire of afflictions; and with the three children, to walke in the middest of this scorching furnace, yet doth hee sustaine heereby no hurt, but by the helpe of patience easily ouercommeth all these difficulties and dangers. So that it fareth with men endued with this vertue, as with those who being of a strong constitution, continue in good plight in all ayres, and enjoy their health as well on Sea as on Land; or as with those who hauing good stomacks, are able to digest all meates, and to sucke wholsome nourishment out of the coursest commons; whereas contrariwise those who are enfeebled with the sicknesse of impatiency, can (like tender and weake bodies) brooke no hardnesse, nor agree either with the heat of prosperity, or with the chilling cold of aduersity and affliction; neither can they well digest the wholsomest foode which this Earth can yeeld them, but through the malignity of their disposition turne that which should nourish them into poyson, and make heauy crosses of those things, which are to others their sweetest comforts. Furthermore, this vertue of patience is most profitable to defend vs against Satans tentations, and strong armour of proofe to preserue vs from being hurt by his malice and fury. For whereas his maine end is by these assaults of affliction, to moue vs to leaue our standing, to murmure and repine against God, and euen to blaspheme him to his face; and when hee can in this kinde gaine ground of vs, hee will double and redouble his blowes; patience crosseth him in all these attempts; for when a man supported thereby, can with meeknesse beare all these burthens, they will bee of no force to make him desist from his good endeauours, nor to digresse out of the right path; yea when he can by vertue of this patience sucke sweetnesse out of the gall of afflictions, and take occasion out of his crosses and troubles the more feruently and heartily to giue God thankes, and to prayse his holy name; then will it weary Satan in this fruitlesse fight, and make him willing to desist from these encounters, which doe but weaken himselfe, and strengthen his enemie. Finally, this patience in bearing the crosse doth much benefit vs, as it is a meanes of receiuing comfort from others; for when wee indure Gods chastizements with meeknesse and humility, it is an effectuall argument to moue pity and compassion in the beholders, to make them to condole with vs, and to afford vs their best meanes of refreshing and consolation; all which helpes are so many hands, supporting vs that wee may not sinke vnder the waight of our afflictions: whereas if wee with impatiency doe murmure and repine, curse, sweare, and shew all manner of distemper and outrage, wee are liable to the just rebukes of all that behold vs; and euery one thinketh that wee are well worthy to continue still in these crosses and calamities, vntill wee haue learned to beare them better. Lastly, as this vertue of patience is very profitable in respect of this life, so much more in respect of the life to come. For as the Saints of old, so wee now doe through faith and patience inherite the promises, as the Apostle speaketh, and that first as it furthereth and assureth vs of our saluation, For he who indureth to the end shall be saued; and it is a righteous thing with God to recompence tribulation to them that trouble his seruants, and to them that are troubled, eternall rest at the appearing of Iesus Christ. And secondly, as it maketh our crowne of glory much more glorious; for the greater our conflict is, the greater shall bee our triumph; and the more wee suffer in loue and obedience to God, the more rich shall our reward bee; it being just with God to crowne his greater gifts and graces, with a proportionable degree of glory and happinesse. But of this I shall haue occasion to speake more hereafter.

Heb. 6. 12.

Matth. 10. 22.

2. Thess. 1. 6.

The last argument to commend patience vnto vs, is the necessitie thereof; for as the Apostle speaketh, We haue needs of patience, that after we haue done the will of God, wee might receiue the promise: In which regard one saith, that as faith is the foundation of Christianity, so patience is the roofe and couering; for as this, that wee are Christians, is to bee attributed to our faith and hope; so that this faith and hope may come to bee fruitfull, it is necessary that wee haue patience. But this necessity of patience will further appeare, if wee consider that God enjoyneth and requireth it of vs, as a part of that seruice which we owe vnto him. So our Sauiour Christ hauing foretolde the afflictions of the faithfull, doth will them to possesse their soules with patience. And the Apostle requireth, that we be patient in tribulation; and that we runne with patience the race that is set before vs; neither is it sufficient that wee haue this vertue in vs in some small measure, but we must let patience haue her perfect worke, that wee our selues also may be perfect and intire, lacking nothing; as the Apostle Iames exhorteth vs. Nor is it enough that wee bee patient by fits, one while meekely bearing the hand of God, and another while storming and raging, but hauing entertained it, wee must constantly continue in it; vntill wee receiue the fruite of our patience, euen the saluation of our soules. For so the same Apostle exhorteth vs; to be patient to the comming of the Lord; and as the husband-man waiteth for the precious Fruite of the Earth, and hath long patience for it, vntill hee receiue the former and the latter raine; so we must be patient and settle our hearts, seeing this comming of the Lord draweth neere. Againe the necessity of patience will appeare if wee consider our present state and condition in this life; for wee are in a continuall Warefare; and patience is a chiefe part of our armour to defend vs from being pearced with the fiery darts of troubles and afflictions, without which wee lye open to their force and violence, and are indangered by their cruell blowes to bee wounded euen vnto death. Our life is a race, wherein wee runne to obtaine the crowne of glory, and patience is a chiefe meanes to make vs well breathed, to keepe vs from fainting and tyring, and to enable vs to hold out vnto the end. It is a tedious pilgrimage, in which wee are often pulled backe with the briars of troubles, and often discouraged by the fowlenesse or roughnesse of the way; the danger of those mighty enemies which lye in waite for vs, and our hard entertainment which wee find in our Innes; all which difficulties and dangers wee can no otherwise helpe, than by possessing our soules with patience, suffering with meekenesse whatsoeuer it shall please the Lord to lay vpon vs. For when this vertue faileth vs, then presently we are vtterly discoursged, faint in our iourney and sit still; or haue our hearts hardned by our afflictions and become desperate; so as we are ready to turne backe againe into the World, that we may mitigate our sorrowes by enioying carnall delights and the pleasures of sinne. Whilest wee continue heere, it is of necessity that wee must suffer many afflictions; for wee were preordained to be made like to the image of our Sauiour Christ, not onely in glory in the life to come, of which the Apostle speaking saith, that [a] when hee shall appeare, we shall be like vnto him, but also in [b] his afflictions and sufferings in this life present, as St. Paul affirmeth. And as we are predestinate, so also are wee called to suffer afflictions, as the Apostle Peter sheweth; where speaking of suffering wrongs patiently, hee saith that [c] wee are hereunto called; for Christ also suffered for vs, leauing vs an ensample that we should follow his steps. Neither is this the lot of some few alone, but of all the faithfull. For the Apostle telleth vs, that [d] all who will liue godly in Christ Iesus, shall suffer persecution: that [e] God correcteth euery Sonne whom he receiueth; and that they are bastards, and no Sonnes who are not thus chastized. And this our Sauiour hath foretolde, [f] And you shall (saith he) bee hated of all men for my name. And againe, [g] the time shall come, that whosoeuer killeth you, will thinke that hee doth God seruice: and a little after, you shall weepe and lament, and the world shall reioyce, &c. So he hath taught vs, that it is [h] a narrow way and straight gate, that leadeth to heauenly happinesse, which is so difficult and vnpleasant to flesh & blood, that few will bee at the paines to find or enter into it. And the Apostle likewise telleth vs, that none shall [i] raigne with Christ in his glory, who doe not participate with him in his sufferings; and that [k] by many tribulations wee must enter into the Kingdome of Heauen. Now from this necessitie of suffering afflictions, wee may also inferre the necessitie of patience; for as this is our chiefe stay to vphold vs in all our troubles and trials; so when we want it, we presently sinke vnder their waight; for as the ship which hath her ballast and burthen equally disposed, is speedy and safe in her passage, though shee bee deeply laden; whereas contrariwise, if either through the vnskilfulnesse of them who fraught it, or the rage and furie of some cruell tempest, the burthen being tossed and tumbled from place to place, doth lye all on one side, it is easily ouerset with euery blast, and sinketh into the Sea: so if the heauiest burthen of afflictions bee quietly caried with meeknesse and patience, they will not hinder our passage to the Hauen of rest; but if through impatiencie, frowardnesse, and murmuring, they be tossed in our hearts to and fro, we shall quickly sinke in the Sea of sorrowes; yea so farre are wee from well bearing of our afflictions, without the helpe of patience, that without it, the best estate which this life yeeldeth, cannot giue vs comfort and contentment. But as weake and sickly bodies agree well with no aire, and are not much bettered by their often remoues and changes of place, because they cary about them their distempered

Of the great necessitie of patience. Heb. 10. 36. Cyprian. de bono patientiæ lib. Idem. f. 25.

Luk.21.19. Rom.12.12. Heb.12.1. Iam.1.4. Iam.5.7.8.

[a] 1.Ioh.3.4. [b] Rom.8.29. [c] 1.Pet.2.21. [d] 2.Tim.3.12. [e] Heb.12.6. [f] Matth.10.22. [g] Ioh.16.2. [h] Matth.7.13. [i] 2.Tim.2.12. [k] Act.14.22.

ſtempered humours, which are the cauſes of their diſeaſe: ſo he who is ſicke of impatiency and peeuiſh diſcontent, agreeth well with no condition, but picketh quarrels as well againſt his proſperity, as affliction, and is well (as we ſay) neither full nor faſting; but (like thoſe who are ſicke of a feauer) bitter and ſweet doe alike diſtaſte him, loathing the very ſight of wholeſome nouriſhment, becauſe his humour maketh every thing to reliſh of his aguiſh diſtemper. Againe, from the neceſſitie of afflictions, wee may conclude the neceſſity of patience; ſeeing it is our wiſeſt way to beare that burthen with meekneſſe, which wee cannot ſhake off, and to follow the Lord without murmuring and complayning, when hee calleth vs to ſuffer thoſe afflictions, vnto which hee hath prcordained vs; for (as one ſaith) hee is a bad Souldier who followeth his Commander with grudging and repining; and (as I adde) a foole too, ſeeing if his paines and dangers, which he muſt vndertake vpon neceſſitie, were voluntary and chearefull, hee might well hope after the conflict for prayſe and reward, whereas his repining ſeruice, is ſufficiently rewarded, if it bee pardoned. And ſo it were not onely faithfulneſſe but wiſdome in vs, to beare with patience and chearefulneſſe the croſſes which God layeth vpon vs; ſeeing though wee grudge and complaine neuer ſo much, wee muſt beare them whether wee will or no, being appointed thereunto; for as one ſaith of fate, I may truely ſay of Gods prouidence, that it leadeth the willing, and the vnwilling it draweth; and therefore we are put to our choice, whether wee will beare the croſſe willingly and joyfully, with prayſe and reward; or elſe whether we will or no, with repining and murmuring; hauing onely our labour for our paines, if at leſt wee eſcape further puniſhment for our impatiency. Finally, this vertue of patience is neceſſary to the well bearing of theſe vnauoydable afflictions, as being a notable meanes to moderate and mitigate all our griefes and ſorrowes; whereas if wee bee deſtitute of this ſingular grace, wee ſhall be as much vexed and turmoyled with our impatiencie, as with all other our afflictions, it being the nature thereof, to make light croſſes heauy and intolerable, whileſt it doth aggrauate them by all circumſtances, and maketh them worſe by a falſe opinion, than they are in our ſenſe and feeling. Now what folly is this to moleſt and diſquiet our ſelues with griefe and impatiencie, when as wee are already too much diſquieted with our ſmart and paine? and wilfully to hurt our ſelues, becauſe againſt our wills we are hurt by others? What is this, but to adde more to our burthen, becauſe it is already too heauie? and in childiſh ſimplicity and peeuiſhneſſe to beate the ſtone vpon which wee are fallen; harming our ſelues more with our impatiencie and fooliſh reuenge, than the hurt it ſelfe would haue done, if wee had borne it patiently? If indeed ſorrow and frowardneſſe would leſſen and lighten our afflictions, though they be vnpleaſant gueſts, there were ſome reaſon why wee ſhould giue them entertainment; but ſeeing contrariwiſe, they much encreaſe the euill which wee ſuſtaine, by adding vnto the torment of the body, the torment of the mind; and doe nothing elſe but vexe our ſelues, offend others and diſpleaſe God from whom we might expect a crowne for our ſuffrings, if wee indured them patiently; what reaſon haue wee to giue way vnto them? neither is it our ſufferings alone that can make vs happy; nor is it the croſſe it ſelfe that will bring vs that glorious crowne, vnleſſe wee carry it meekely and quietly, in loue and obedience to him who hath laide it vpon vs.

Non poteſt accipi dolorum & paſſionum Corona, niſi præcedat in dolore & paſſione patientia. Cyprian. de bono patitiæ.

CHAP. III.

Of the meanes to worke in vs patience in afflictions, and firſt of Prayer.

AND thus haue I ſet downe ſuch reaſons and arguments, as doe ſufficiently commend vnto vs patience in afflictions, that thereby our hearts may bee inflamed with the loue of ſo excellent, profitable and neceſſary a vertue, and to bee moued with all deſire and indeuour to vſe all good meanes to attaine vnto it; now it followeth according to my order propounded, that I alſo ſhew thoſe meanes whereby this ſingular grace of God, may be either begun where it is not, or confirmed and increaſed where it is. And leſt wee ſhould ſeeke for patience where it is not to bee found, and ſo looſe our labour, wee are to know, that it is no naturall faculty, which hath its beginning in our being; no inherent quality, fortitude or conſtancy, which is borne and bredde with vs; for wee are naturally peeuiſh and impatient, froward and fretfull, complayning and crying out in the leaſt ſenſe of paine; and murmuring and repining againſt the diuine prouidence, when wee are neuer ſo little croſſed of our wils. And therefore they who would find this flower of patience, muſt not looke for it in the barren deſert of corrupted nature where it neuer groweth. Neither is it to be attained vnto by the help of natural reaſon and Philoſophy, which propoundeth vnto vs only ſhadows of comforts, that haue a ſeeming ſhew a farre off, but vaniſh away when we ſeeke to catch them; and offereth vnto vs rotten props for the vpholding of our patience; cnee; which being guilded ouer with humane witte, art and eloquence, doe seeme to bee of some strength, so long as our patience being vnburthened, standeth vpright in its owne strength; but when it is tryed and pressed with the least waight of afflictions, then they faile, and (as it were) breake in sitters, bewraying their weakenesse and insufficiency; together with the folly of those who inuented them, and of vs who trusted in them; and like false friends they leaue and forsake vs, when needing their helpe we resort and flye vnto them. For as the heathen Philosophers were for the most part ignorant of the chiefe causes of all afflictions; not ascribing them vnto God, and his wise and just prouidence, but vnto fate and destiny; chance and fortune; not looking vnto the chiefe deseruing causes, which are our sinnes, and principally the whole corruption of our nature, the ignorance of God, and the neglect and contempt of his true worship and seruice; but imagining that all hapned by the guidance and direction of blind fortune, which put no difference betweene the good and bad, just and wicked: so accordingly they applied false remedies, and vsed medicines which were as loathsome as the disease which they sought to cure. As namely that we must beare with patience that which wee cannot auoide; whereas that alone is enough to make a man breake out into all impatience, when as hee considereth that his miseries which are presently intolerable; are also remedilesse, and not to be auoided for the time to come. That it becommeth not a wise man to be passionate; and that it is folly to adde to our other miseries, which are already too heauy, the waight of sorrow and vexation of mind, that wee beare a burthen which is common to many, and that wee haue innumerable companions in our griefes; finally that all mankind are liable and subject to manifold miseries and afflictions, and therefore wee must not take it ill, if we bee not exempted from the common lot. But in the meanetime they make no mention of Gods prouidence disposing all our afflictions, and turning them to our good; they doe not shew that they are proportioned to the measure of our strength, so as they shall neuer ouerwhelme vs; nor that they are the chastisements of a gracious Father, and the fruits of his loue; nor that they are by him made profitable for the aduancing of our spirituall estate, the inriching of vs with heauenly graces, and the furthering of our eternall saluation. Finally they put vs in no hope and assurance that God is present with vs in all our troubles, and in his good time will deliuer vs out of all our afflictions; and therefore they are not to be resorted vnto by those that lye vnder the crosse, as being but miserable comforters, who onely vtter some magnifique and glorious speeches, which haue no sound ground of reason to rest vpon; and require great masters of their Disciples; but doe not with any waight of argument arme their patience and resolution, nor inable them to performe that which is required of them.

Sect. 1. That heathen Philoſophy yeeldeth no ſound comfort in the time of affliction.

But if wee would haue found comfort in all our crosses and afflictions, wee must seeke for it in the Word of God and carefully vse those meanes which are there prescribed for the strengthening and increasing of our patience. And these may be referred to two generall heads, namely prayer, and meditation. The first and chiefe meanes of patience and comfort in all our troubles, is that wee daily haue our recourse vnto God by feruent & effectuall Prayer, wherein we are to craue, that by his Holy Spirit he will worke in vs these gifts and graces, whereby we may be inabled to beare afflictions. For howsoeuer we seeme in the time of prosperity so constant, comfortable and couragious, that nothing can dismay vs, yet no sooner is the Sunne of worldly happinesse set, but presently all our comfort is cooled, and joy quenched; and being nipped and pinched with the frost of affliction, wee breake out into all impatiency, and passe our time in horror and despaire; for naturally we abhorre afflictions, and all chastisement is for the present grieuous, as the Apostle speaketh, so that wee tremble when we doe but heare of their approaching; shrinke and pull backe the shoulder when wee are called to beare the crosse, and impatiently cry out and complaine when we are but touched. Neither is this feare of afflictions a corruption onely of our natures, but a created quality, which may be without sinne, as we may see in the example of our Sauiour Christ, who earnestly desired that hee might not drinke of that bitter cup of affliction, and was brought into such an agony that hee sweat water and blood, so as hee needed to haue an Angell sent to comfort him. And when he was put to drink the dregs of this loathsome potion, he was forced to cry out, my God, my God, why hast thou forsaken mee. The which abhorring and loathing of the crosse in Christs most holy nature was just and lawfull, being joyned with patience, obedience and conformity to Gods will, because wee are euen by the Law of nature bound to seeke our owne preseruation, and to shunne all causes and occasions which may hinder our happinesse: but being joyned with our corruption, it becommeth vnlawfull & wicked, making vs to breake out into all impatiencie, and to murmure and repine against God. So that naturally we haue no patience or comfort in our afflictions, but it is the free gift of God, as the Apostle implyeth whereas hee hee saith, that it was giuen to the Philippians to suffer for Christ, because no man can suffer as he ought vnlesse he receiue it of God. So elsewhere hee maketh this patience a fruit of the spirit; and affirmeth that it is God alone who doth comfort vs in all our tribulation. And hereof it is, that this is made one of his royall titles; The God of patience and consolation; and the Father of mercies and God of all comfort. By whose power assisting vs, and spirit inabling vs, wee who can neither doe nor suffer any thing of our selues, can doe all things, as the Apostle speaketh.

Heb. 12.

Luk. 22. 44.

Matth. 27.

In all our afflictions therefore wee must haue our recourse vnto God by earnest and effectuall prayer, that wee may from him receiue this comfort and patience which wee haue not of our selues; and in his good time haue helpe and deliuerance out of all our troubles. Which duty that we may performe let these reasons perswade vs; First, because as the Lord doth at all times require, that we should performe vnto him this duty of his seruice, so more especially in the time of affliction and tribulation. Call vpon me (saith hee) in the day of trouble, so will I deliuer thee, and thou shalt glorifie me. And againe, is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing Psalmes. So hauing foretold the afflictions of his Church for their iniquities, hee willeth them to returne vnto the Lord their God by true repentance, and to call vpon him; and not onely requireth that they should pray, but also teacheth them a forme of inuocation. Take vnto you words (saith he) and turne to the Lord, and say vnto him, take away all iniquitie, and receiue vs graciously; so will wee render the calues of our lips. And thus our Sauiour Christ at the approaching of his owne passion; and his Disciples affliction and persecution, which was to follow thereupon, doth enjoyne them after a more speciall manner, that they should watch and pray, that they did not enter into tentation. And hauing foretold the great miseries & tribulations which should follow his Ascension, vpon the people of the Iewes, and all the Church before his second comming to judgement, he doth prescribe this as a speciall and most soueraigne antidote & preseruatiue against al these euils, that they should watch and pray continually, that so they might be thought worthy to escape all those things that should come to passe.

Secondly, wee must in our afflictions flye vnto God by Prayer, because it is one especiall end wherefore the Lord correcteth vs; for as the louing and kinde mother causeth strangers to affright her tender and dearely loued childe, when hee neglecteth her, and taketh delight to stray from her, that so shee may hereby preuent the danger of losing him, and may cause him to returne vnto her for safeguard, and to cast himselfe into her armes, hereby inflaming his loue more towards her, and increasing his confidence in her protection: So doth the Lord our gracious Father cause these bug-beares of afflictions to meete and terrifie vs, when we are straying from him, that wee may flee into his armes for helpe and succour; and suffereth vs to bee depriued of other helpes and comforts that wee may with fulnesse of affiance rest wholy vpon him; whereas if either wee were not at all afflicted, or had other succours whereunto we might resort in the time of our distresse, we would not seeke vnto him at all, or at least, after a cold and loose manner. And this end the Lord expresseth, where hee saith vnto his people Israel, that Assur should not bee able to cure the wound of their afflictions; and that he would be vnto Ephraim as a Lion, and as a Lions whelpe to the house of Iuda, rending and tearing them with afflictions and miseries, and that he would spoyle, goe away, and take them with him, as a prey which none should rescue, and that he would goe and returne to his place, clouding from their sight the beames of his loue and fauour, till they acknowledged their fault, and sought him diligently. The which his end hee attaineth vnto in all the faithfull, as appeareth by the words following; In their affliction (saith hee) they will seeke me diligently, saying, come and let vs returne vnto the Lord, for he hath spoyled, and he will heale vs; he hath wounded, and he will bind vs vp. So the Prophet Esay speaking of the faithfull in their afflictions, saith, O Lord, in trouble haue they visited thee, they powred out a prayer when thy chastning was vpon them.

Hos. 5. 14, 15.

Chap. 6. 1.

Esay 26. 16.

Thirdly, Gods gracious promises of hearing our prayers, and granting our requests, may be an effectuall argument to moue vs to the performance of this duty, when we most need his helpe. Thus generally hee willeth vs to aske and it shall bee giuen vs, to seeke and we shall find, to knocke and it shall be opened vnto vs, for whosoeuer asketh receiueth, and he that seeketh findeth, and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened. So our Sauiour hath assured vs that, whatsoeuer wee shall aske the Father in his Name he will giue it vs. And the Apostle Iohn telleth vs, that we haue this assurance in Iesus Christ, that if wee aske any thing according to his will, hee heareth vs. And if we know that hee heareth vs, whatsoeuer we aske, we know that we haue the petition that wee haue desired of him. Yea, so ready is the Lord to harken vnto the suites of those that pray vnto him, that when he seeth this disposition in them, hee promiseth, that before they call, hee will answere; and whilest they speake, he will heare. But as God hath generally bound himselfe by promise to heare and helpe those that call vpon him, so more especially such as flee vnto him by prayer in the time of their affliction; according to that of the Psalmist; call vpon me in

9. Sect. 5. The third reason taken from Gods gracious promises of hearing vs in the time of trouble.

Matth. 7. 7.

1. Ioh. 5. 14, 15.

Esay 65. 24.

in the day of trouble, so will I deliuer thee, and thou shalt glorifie me. And againe, speaking of those that loue God, hee saith, Hee shall call vpon me, and I will heare him, I will be with him in trouble, I will deliuer him, and glorifie him. And else-where; he will fulfill the desire of them that feare him; he also will heare their cry, and will saue them. And this promise the Lord doth specially fit to his Church and chosen people; namely, that if for their sinnes they were led into captiuity by their enemies, & if from the land of their captiuity they would seeke the Lord their God, they should find him, if they did seeke him with all their heart, and with all their soule, &c. And particularly it is applyed to Iob by one of his friends; If (saith he) thou wilt early seeke vnto God, and pray to the Almighty; if thou bee pure and vpright, then surely he will awake vp vnto thee, and he will make the habitation of thy righteousnesse prosperous. And these are the promises which are made vnto those who call vpon God in the time of their trouble; which whoso applyeth vnto himselfe vpon the performance of this duty, shall in the day of his affliction finde singular consolation; and out of the death of sorrow and despaire, shall bee raised to the life of true joy and comfort. And this Dauid found in his own experience, where speaking of these gracious promises, he saith, that they are his comfort in trouble, and that he is by them quickned, and (as it were) restored to life againe.

Pſal. 50.15. and 91.15. Pſal. 145.19. Deut. 4.29,30, 31. Iob 8.5,6. Pſal. 119.50.

Q. Sect. 6. The fourth reason, because the Lord is our sole Sauiour and deliuerer, & from him alone wee haue deliuerance from afflictions, or patience to bear them.

Fourthly, we must in the time of our affliction haue our recourse vnto the Lord by Prayer, because hee is our sole Sauiour and deliuerer; for if euery man out of reason and discretion will resort vnto those, in their troubles and dangers, of whose loue & power they are most assured; yea, if the bruite creatures by instinct of nature will flee thither in their extremities, where their chiefe refuge is; then by the same reason ought wee in all our tribulation and calamities to flee vnto the Lord for helpe and deliuerance, seeing his loue is matchlesse, and his power infinite. For he is our chiefe strength, our rocke, our fortresse, and deliuerer; he is our shield, the horne of our saluation and our refuge, as Dauid calleth him, hee is our hope and strength, and helpe in troubles ready to be found, as else where he speaketh. And he is approued thus to bee by the manifold experience of his Church and chosen people, for in the palaces of Mount Sion God is knowne for a sure refuge. It is he that deliuereth vs out of all our aduersities and tribulations, as holy Samuel affirmeth; he is good, and as a strong hold in the day of trouble, and he knoweth them that trust in him, as the Prophet Nahum teacheth vs. He is our King that protecteth vs, our Father that taketh care for vs, our Husband and Head, who loueth vs as his Spouse and members; and therefore to whom should we his his Subiects, Children and Spouses, resort and flee in the time of our dangers and distresse, but vnto this our powerfull and glorious King; our carefull Father and louing Husband? Especially considering that as the Lord is our chiefe hope and helpe, from whom we may expect deliuerance from afflictions, or patience to beare them; so hee hath appointed prayer as the onely meanes for the obtayning of the benefits. For as the louing and wise parent hath in himselfe a disposition to bestow al things needful vpon his deare child, and somtime to pardon his fault when he hath offended him, and sometime to content himselfe with the taking of lesse correction on him than it deserueth; yet doth he expect that his Sonne in all dutie and humility, should intreat these fauours from him; and will neither bestow his gifts before he sue vnto him for them; nor pardon the offence committed, before hee humble himselfe, acknowledge his fault, and craue pardon; nor yet ceaseth willingly from laying on stripes, when hee hath begun to chastize him, till hee haue promised to amend, and desireth to be spared: Euen so our gracious and louing Father is alwayes most ready to bestow his gifts and blessings, to pardon our sinnes, and to cease correcting of vs, because hee taketh no delight in our smart and paine; but yet vpon this condition, that wee sue vnto him for these fauours, and (as it were) by the hand of prayer take these benefits out of the rich treasury of his bounty and goodnesse. And this the Apostle Paul implyeth, for though hee were perswaded that he should be freed out of his imprisonment, set at liberty; for the further seruice of God and benefit of his Church, yet he requireth the prayers of Philemon and the rest of the Saints, as the meanes of his inlargement. And thus also Peter was freed from his chaines, and (as it were) drawne out of the iawes of death; but it was at the instant sute of the faithfull, as the Holy Ghost noteth. So though the Lord were purposed to adde fifteene yeers to the life of Ezechias, and to acquit him from the sentence of death pronounced against him, yet he doth not assure him of it till he had humbled himselfe, and powred out his soule by feruent and effectual prayer. And therefore if in our wants, miseries and afflictions, we would haue helpe from God, either for deliuerance or patience; let vs vse this meanes which he hath sanctified for this purpose; and seeing God doth require it at our hands, let vs go boldly vnto the throne of grace, that wee may receiue mercy, and finde grace to helpe in time of need. Seeing hee doth not deny helpe vnto any that sue vnto him for it; let vs flee to him for succour in all our wants and dangers, according to that of the Psalmist; Because thou hearest the prayer, vnto thee shall all flesh come. And when wee are assaulted by our enemies, and pursued by them that hate vs, let vs with Dauid cry out vnto him: giue vs helpe against trouble, for vaine is the helpe of man. And say with good Iehosaphat, O our God, wilt thou not iudge them? For there is no strength in vs to stand before this great multitude that commeth against vs, neither doe we know what to doe, but our eyes are towards thee. And as prayer is the meanes of deliuerance out of afflictions, so also of obtayning patience to beare them, so long as it pleaseth the Lord to continue them vpon vs: in which respect patience and prayer are by the Apostle fitly joyned together. Reioycing (saith he) in hope, patient in tribulation, continuing in prayer. Neither in truth can there be a stronger prop to vphold our patience, than feruency in prayer; both because it receiueth hereby vertue & increase from God, and hath the measure thereof doubled by his holy Spirit, according to that of the Apostle, if any of you lacke wisdome, (namely, that speciall wisdome which enableth vs to beare the crosse with comfort and patience) let him aske of God, which giueth to all men liberally, and reproacheth no man, and it shall be giuen vnto him; and also because it much easeth vs of our griefe, and lighteneth our hearts of the burthen of our afflictions, when as wee can lay open our grieuances before God, and powre out our complaints into his bosome. For if it be an ease to an afflicted mind, when as a man hath some speciall and deare friend, to whom he may communicate his griefes, and make knowne his troubles and discontents, that at least he may be pitied and bemoned of him, though hee haue no power or ability to releeue and helpe him: then how much more ease and comfort shall wee finde in laying open the causes of our griefes before God our heauenly Father? Who as he infinitely exceedeth all Mankind in tender loue, pitty and compassion, so hee is able, when as it shall be most for his glory and our comfort, to free and deliuer vs out of all our miseries and afflictions.

Pſal. 18.2. & 46.1. Pſal. 48.3. 1. Sam. 10.19. Nahum 1.7. Philem. 22. Act. 12. Eſay 38. Heb. 4.16. Pſal. 63.3.

Fifthly, we must in all our troubles haue our recourse vnto God by prayer, because it is the most opportune, fit and seasonable time for this holy exercise; and this may appeare, not onely because the Lord, infinite in wisedome, and knowing what actions best sort with all times and occasions, doth more especially enjoyne vs to call vpon him when we are in trouble and affliction: but also because we are then most ready and best disposed to the performance of this religious duty; and that with greater efficacy and feruency than at other times. For if euer we will poure out our soules before God by prayer, we will doe it in our misery and aduersity; & though we haue neglected it in the time of our peace and flourishing prosperity, yet if we haue any sparke of grace in vs, we will resort vnto God, when with the rod of affliction we are whipped vnto him; according to the saying of the Prophet, O Lord, in trouble they haue visited thee, they poured out a prayer when thy chastening was vpon them. And howsoeuer euen Gods deerest seruants are in the time of their health and worldly welfare, loose and slacke, cold and negligent in their suites and supplications, rouing in their Prayers at large, and vttering them weakly and remissely; like riuers in a large current or spacious plaine; yet are they in their afflictions and miseries most zealous and feruent, vehement and almost violent in preferring their suites; and then their Prayers like strong streames in narrow straights, issue from their troubled soules with vnresistable force, and admit of no stop and opposition. An example whereof we haue in the afflicted Church of Iuda, of whom it is said, that their heart cried vnto the Lord, O wall of the daughter of Sion, let teares runne downe like a riuer day and night; take thee no rest, neither let the Apple of thine eie ceasse. Arise, cry in the night, in the beginning of the watches, powre out thine heart like water before the face of the Lord, lift vp thine hands towards him for the life of thy young children, that faint for hunger in the corners of all the streets. And the like wee may see in the practice of Hezechias, who when his soule was afflicted, is said in the feruency of his Spirit, to haue chattered like a Crane or Swallow; and in holy Dauid, who in his greatest calamities and distresses, did make his most feruent and effectuall Prayers, as wee may see in many of his Psalmes.

Lastly, the example of all Gods seruants from time to time, who haue most diligently and zealously performed this duty of Prayer and inuocation in their afflictions and tribulations, may serue as a strong inducement to moue and perswade vs to follow the like practice. Thus Dauid in all his afflictions fleeth vnto God as vnto his rocke, castle and strong hold, by whom alone hee was safeguarded from dangers; and as vnto his deliuerer, and mighty Sauiour, who freed him out of all troubles, and plucked him out of the jawes of death. The Lord (saith hee) is my rocke and my fortresse, and hee that deliuereth me, my God and my strength, in him will I trust, my shield, the horne also of my saluation, and my refuge. I will call vpon the Lord which is worthy to be praysed, so shall I be saued from mine enemies. The sorrowes of death compassed me, and the flouds of wickednesse made me afraid, &c. But in my trouble did I call vpon the Lord, and cried vnto my God. And he heard my voice out of his Temple, and my cry did come before him, euen into his eares. So Hezekiah when hee was to be besieged

Esay 28.16.

Lamen. 2.18, 19.

Esay 38.14.

Sect. 8. The last reason taken from the example of Gods Saints.

Psal. 18.1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6.

2. Kings 1.2, 14, 15. & 20.2, 3.

with the mighty hoſt of Senacherib, and alſo when the ſentence of death was by the Prophet, as Gods Ambaſſadour, pronounced againſt him, reſorteth vnto God by Prayer, as his onely refuge. The Prophet Ionas likewiſe when he was in the Whales belly, prayed vnto the Lord his God, and ſaid, I cryed in mine affliction vnto the Lord, and hee heard me; out of the belly of Hell cryed I, and thou heardeſt my voice. The like duty was performed by Nehemiah and Daniel when they were in captiuity in the behalfe of themſelues and of their people. So the Diſciples being toſſed with a cruell tempeſt; and now ready to ſinke, flee vnto Chriſt by Prayer, crying out Lord ſaue vs, wee periſh. And the Apoſtle Paul in the behalfe of the Coloſſians, prayeth vnto God, as vnto the onely fountaine of all theſe gifts and graces, that hee would ſtrengthen them with all might, through his glorious power, vnto all patience and long ſuffering with ioyfulneſſe. Neither hath this beene the practice of theſe few alone, whom I haue produced for examples, but of all Gods faithfull ſeruants in all their diſtreſſes; and therefore the Pſalmiſt reckoning vp a number of afflictions, wherewith the Church and people of God were toſſed and turmoyled, maketh this the concluſion of all, and (as it were) the foot of his Song; then they cryed vnto the Lord in their troubles, and hee deliuered them out of their diſtreſſe. But aboue all is the example of our Sauiour Chriſt, who being to drinke of this bitter cup of moſt grieuous afflictions, doth powre out his ſoule before his Father in moſt feruent Prayers; and as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh. In the dayes of his fleſh did offer vp prayers and ſupplications with ſtrong crying and teares vnto him, that was able to ſaue him from death, and was alſo heard in that which he feared. And therefore if he who was the deere and onely Sonne of God, had not thoſe things which he deſired in the time of his afflictions, but by the meanes of frequent and hearty Prayer; how ſhall wee thinke that God will of his owne accord, without our intreating, beſtow vpon vs thoſe gifts and graces which we need, or ſend vs deliuerance out of all our troubles? But if theſe examples ſeeme too high for our imitation, as being taken from the practice of ſuch Saints of God, who had attained to a great meaſure of excellency and perfection; let vs ſet before vs the example of Manaſſes, who though in the time of his proſperity, hee fled from God and forſooke him, committing all outragious wickedneſſe both againſt him and the whole Church; yet when hee was in tribulation hee prayed vnto the Lord his God, and humbled himſelfe greatly before the God of his Fathers, and praying vnto him God was intreated of him, and heard his prayer and brought him againe to Ieruſalem vnto his Kingdome. Yea, euen the Heathen Mariners though they were ignorant of God and his true Religion, yet by the very light of nature were guided to the performance of this duty in the time of their extremity and danger, crying euery man to his God for helpe and deliuerance. And the Niniuites likewiſe when they heard deſtruction denounced againſt their City by the Prophet of God, faſted, put on ſackcloth, repented of their ſins, and cryed mightily vnto God. And therefore if wee would bee conformable vnto the practice of all the Saints, and our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe, yea, if wee would not bee worſe than Manaſſes, the moſt outragious ſinner that euer obtained grace and ſaluation; or than the very Heathens themſelues, who being ignorant of the knowledge of the true God, had onely the light of nature to be their guide; let vs in all our troubles and afflictions flee vnto God by feruent and effectuall Prayers, that ſo we may either be deliuered from the burthen of the Croſſe, or haue ſtrength to beare it with patience, comfort and ioy in the Holy Ghoſt.

Ion.2.1,2.
Nehem.9.
Dan.9.
Matth.8.25.
Col.1.11.
Pſal.107.6.
Heb.5.7.
2.Chron.33. 12,13.
Iona 1.4.
Chap.3.2.

CHAP. IV.

Of the things which God requireth in the perſon of him who is to make an acceptable Prayer, in the time of affliction.

AND theſe are the reaſons which may moue vs to performe this duty of Prayer in the time of our afflictions; now that we may pray with aſſurance to haue our ſuites and petitions granted, there are diuers things required; ſome whereof reſpect the perſon of him that prayeth; and ſome the prayer it ſelfe. In reſpect of the perſon, that wee bee regenerate, ſanctified, and the ſonnes of God by adoption and grace; that ſo hauing receiued the Spirit of Adoption, a wee may cry in our hearts Abba, Father; for we know not how to pray as we ought, but this Spirit helpeth our infirmities, and maketh requeſt for vs, with ſighes and groanes which cannot be expreſſed, framing our Prayers (not according to the luſts of our owne fleſh, but) the holy will of God. And if we be thus qualified, wee may be aſſured, that we ſhal haue our ſuites granted; for what requeſt can God deny which his holy Spirit inditeth, and maketh? or how ſhall wee not obtaine that grace and mercy from him, which is conſonant to his holy will? Beſides the Lord hath bound himſelfe by his free promiſes, that he will heare the Prayers of his faithfull and righteous ſonnes and ſeruants, and will grant vnto them that loue and feare him, all their ſuits & requeſts; ſo the Pſalmiſt ſaith, b the righteous cry and the Lord heareth them, and deliuereth them out of all their troubles, and elſewhere; c the Lord will giue grace and glory, and no good thing

a Rom.8.15
b Pſal.34.
c & 84.

thing will he with-hold from them that walke vprightly, so by the same Oracle the Lord deliuereth this gracious answere: d Because he hath loued mee therefore will I deliuer him, I will exalt him because hee hath knowne my Name; hee shall call vpon me and I will heare him; I will be with him in trouble, I will deliuer him and glorifie him. And againe hee saith, that God will e Iustfill the desire of them that feare him, hee also will heare their cry and will saue them. So our Sauiour promiseth, that f if wee abide in him and his words doe abide in vs, then wee may aske what wee will, and it shall be done vnto vs. And his beloued Apostle teacheth vs, that g whatsoeuer we aske, we receiue of him, because wee keepe his Commandements, and doe the things which are pleasing in his sight. Yea, this was a receiued axiome among the Iewes, and therefore the blind man herein appealeth to their owne knowledge, h we know (saith he) that God heareth not sinners, but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doth his will, him heareth he. And therefore howsoeuer the Apostle attributeth much to Prayer, yet all is limited to the Prayer of a man who is just and righteous; the prayer (saith he) of a righteous man auaileth much, if it be fernent. So that if we would pray in assurance of Faith to be heard, and haue our requests granted, wee must be sanctified and purged from our corruptions; and therefore these are well joyned together by the Apostle, i I will (saith he) that men pray euery where, lifting vp pure hands without wrath or doubting. For if wee come vnto God defiled and polluted with our naturall corruptions; and ouer-burthened also with our manifold and haynous transgressions and actuall sinnes; the Lord will not heare vs; neither can wee hope that our prayers and suites can be acceptable vnto him, when our persons are odious in his sight. Manifold testimonies of holy Scripture might be alleaged to this purpose; the Prophet Dauid saith, that k he should regard wickednesse in his heart, the Lord would not heare him. And the Wise man telleth vs, that l the sacrifice of the wicked is abomination to the Lord; but the prayer of the righteous is acceptable vnto him; that the Lord is farre from the wicked, but heareth the prayer of the righteous, and that m hee who turneth away his eare from hearing the Law, euen his prayer shall be abhominable. So the Prophet Esay telleth the Iewes, that there was in God no want of loue to heare their Prayers, nor want of power, to effect their desires: but the onely let and impediment was their sins, which like a wall of separation, or thick and impenetrable cloud, did hinder their prayers from ascending vnto God, and his blessings & benefits from descending vnto them. n Behold (saith hee) the hand of the Lord is not shortned, that it cannot saue, neither his eare heauy, that it cannot heare, but your iniquities haue separated betweene you and your God, and your sinnes haue hid his face from you, that he will not heare. The which heauy judgement the Lord had before threatned against them, for their hainous transgressions; o When you shall stretch out your hands (saith he) I will hide mine eyes from you, and though you make many prayers I will not heare, for your hands are full of bloud. So the Prophet Ezechiel threatneth them from the Lord, that for their grosse Idolatry and bloudy cruelty, hee would not heare their p prayers in the day of their afflictions though they did cry in his eares with a loud voice. And the Prophet q Michah to the same purpose; Then (saith he) shall they cry vnto the Lord, but he will not heare them: he will euen hide his face from them at that time, because they haue done wickedly in their works. And therefore if in our afflictions we would make our prayers with any hope to be heard, let vs not approach vnto God in our sinnes; and according to the exhortation of the Apostle, r Let as many as call vpon the Name of the Lord, depart from iniquity. For as the Psalmist teacheth vs, the Lord imputeth it as great Presumption to the wicked, that they take s his holy Ordinances into their mouthes, and hee hateth the very sacrifices of prayer and thanksgiuing which are offered vnto him by impure hands, and vnhallowed lips. There is no man in his right wits would come as a suiter vnto his Prince, and bring his accuser with him, who is ready to testifie and prooue to his face his treason and rebellion; much lesse would any present himselfe before so great and powerfull a maiesty, to make petition for some benefit after he had killed and murthered his Soueraignes only sonne and heire, hauing still in his hand the weapon wherewith hee committed this wicked act, imbrued and defiled with his bloud: There is no adultereresse so shamelesly impudent, who would desire pardon of her jealous Husband, hauing still her Louer in her armes, with whom she hath often committed filthinesse in times past, and is resolued againe to commit it for the time to come: or if any be so mad to make such suites in this odious manner, they are sure to be repulsed, and to finde wrath and vengeance, where they looke for grace and mercy: but thus doe they behaue themselues towards God, who remayning polluted with their sinnes do offer vp their prayers vnto him: for they bring their accusers, euen their defiled consciences and crying sinnes, which continually accuse and condemne them, and call for that due judgement and punishment which they haue deserued: they bring the weapon into Gods presence, (euen their sinnes) whereby they haue crucified and slaine the onely Sonne of God; and they present themselues into Gods

d Psal. 91. 14.
e Psal. 145. 19.
f Iohn 15. 7.
g 1. Iohn 3. 22.
h Iohn 9. 31.
i 1. Tim. 2. 8.
k Psal. 66. 18.
l Prou. 15. 8. & 29.
m Prou. 28. 9.
n Esay 59. 1, 2.
o Esay 1. 15.
p Ezech. 8. 18.
q Micah 3. 4.
r 2. Tim. 2. 19.
s Psal. 50. 16.

presence to sue for grace; imbracing still with ardent loue and affection the World and worldly vanities, with whom they haue often committed spirituall whoredome, with a purpose to continue still in their former vncleanesse; and therefore let not such fondly imagine that the Lord will heare them, and grant their suites, but rather expect that in his terrible wrath he will take vengeance on them, and turne their temporary afflictions, into hellish torments and euerlasting punishments.

Q. Sect. 2. That being in our selues sinners, wee are made righteous by faith in Christ, & purged from the corruption of sin by repentance, and so are heard of God when wee pray vnto him.

Yea (will some say) but this is but small comfort to those who are in affliction, to heare that God onely regardeth the prayers of the righteous, and that he heareth not the prayers of them who come vnto him in their sinnes; for who is righteous, and sinneth not daily? And what other cause is there of our afflictions, but our sinnes, which God in his iustice correcteth and punisheth? To which I answere, that howsoeuer we are all naturally defiled with originall corruption, & haue the reliques of sinne remayning in vs, euen to the day of our dissolution; and though we continually adde hereunto innumerable actuall transgressions; yet wee may appeare righteous before God, and be as cleane purged from all sinne, as if wee had neuer falne into it. As first when wee lay hold vpon Christ by a true and liuely faith, and doe apply vnto vs his obedience and merits; for then our vnrighteousnes is couered with the rich robe of his perfect righteousnesse, and our corruptions are washed and cleansed away in his most precious bloud, whereby it commeth to passe, that though our sinnes were as crimson, they shall bee made as white as snow; and though they were as red as Scarlet, they shall be white as wooll, as the Lord hath promised. And this is the purging of iustification, whereby God in Christ doth freely forgiue all our sinnes, and reputeth vs as just and righteous. But besides this, there is also a purging away of our sinne and corruption by sanctification, when by vertue of Gods Spirit and a liuely faith, we are made partakers of the power of Christ's death, which mortifieth the flesh and the lusts thereof, and the power of his Resurrection, whereby we are raised to holinesse and newnesse of life. And hereof it commeth to passe, that though sinne dwell in vs, yet it doth not raigne in vs; though some reliques thereof remayne in vs, yet wee are not reputed sinners before God; not onely because we haue receiued the grace of iustification, and so haue all our sinnes forgiuen, and are clothed with the perfect righteousnesse of Christ, applyed vnto vs by a liuely faith; but also the grace of sanctification, whereby the power of sinne is abated in vs, and all our corruptions, partly mortified, and partly deputed to mortification, and shall at last be fully abolished. And therefore seeing our sins haue receiued a mortall wound, and still languish vnto death, wee cannot properly be called sinners, seeing it is dead to vs, and we to it; but just and righteous, because righteousnes and holinesse is begunne in vs by vertue of Gods Spirit, regenerating and sanctifying vs, and shall daily grow and increase, vntill it come to full perfection; neither can sinne be said to liue in vs, being appointed to death and finall abolishment; but rather to bee crucified and destroyed, euen as wee commonly say of a condemned person, that hee is but a dead man, when as hee is condemned and deputed to death, though hee be not as yet brought forth to execution. And in these respects and no other were the Saints of God in the Scriptures, called righteous and just, & had all the gracious promises of the Gospel applyed and made good vnto them; not that that they were free from sinne, for there is no man righteous that doth good and sinneth not, and in many things we sinne all; nor because there was any perfection in their legall righteousnesse, or any full and exact conformity with the Law of God; but because they were justified by Christs righteousnes, applyed by faith, and were sanctified by his holy Spirit: the which their sanctification was (like ours) imperfect, consisting in a sight and sense of their corruptions, and an hearty sorrow for them; and also in a sincere desire and earnest endeauour in the vse of all good meanes appointed by God, to mortifie these corruptions, forsake all their sins and serue the Lord with vpright hearts, in the contrary duties of holinesse and righteousnesse. And therefore if we be indued with this liuely faith, and labour in the practice of sanctification, then shall not we be reputed sinners, but be accepted as just and righteous in Gods sight; and consequently haue full right and interest vnto all Gods gracious promises; and particularly to those which assure vs of deliuerance out of all our afflictions, or of strength and patience to beare them with joy and comfort.

Esay 1.18.

Rom. 3.10. Iames 3.2.

But yet it is not enough that we bee perswaded of our justification by Christs righteousnesse applyed by faith, and of our sanctification by his Holy Spirit, vnlesse wee approue them both to our selues and others, by the fruits of vnfained repentance, whereby (as it were by sense and motion) this spirituall life is made knowne to the glory of God and our owne comfort. And vnto this God requireth that wee should not only in generall bewaile and forsake all our sinnes; but especially and principally, those which we thinke to be the causes and occasions of our present crosses and afflictions; and then when the causes of our calamities and tribulation are taken away, these miserable effects also shall soone cease and be remoued.

Q. Sect. That wee shew our by our ... tance, ... repentance the fruits thereof.

And

And if wee thus draw neere vnto God by vnfained repentance, he will also draw neere vnto vs, heare our prayers and deliuer vs out of all our afflictions; if we will cleanse our hands, and purge our hearts, and sorrow and weepe because of our sinnes, turne our laughter into mourning, and our joy into heauinesse, and humble our selues before the Lord, hee will lift vs vp, as the Apostle speaketh. For the Lord is neere vnto them that are of a contrite heart, and will saue such as bee afflicted in spirit, as the Psalmist telleth vs. And this is his owne gracious promise by the Prophet Esay, that he will looke vnto him, euen vnto him, that is poore and of a contrite spirit, who trembleth at his words. From which mercy, the greatnesse and multitude of our sinnes cannot exclude vs, so that wee turne vnto the Lord by vnfained repentance, as wee may see in the example of the Iewes; whom though the Lord had taxed and accused by his Prophet to be most haynous and notorious offenders, yet hee offereth them mercy vpon the condition of their repentance. Wash you (saith he) and make you cleane, take away the euill of your workes from before mine eyes, cease to do euill, learne to doe well, &c. and then, come and let vs reason together, saith the Lord, though your sinnes were as crimson, they shall be white as snow, though they were red like skarlet, they shall be as wooll.

And this is that repentance which must continually bee renewed when wee present our selues in prayer before God, then as wee daily and hourely renew our sinnes; with which we must ioyne as an inseparable companion, an humble confession of all our transgressions, together with an vnfained acknowledgment, that by reason of them, wee are vtterly vnworthy of Gods least mercy, and most worthy, if he should enter into iudgement with vs, not onely of those light and momentany afflictions which lye vpon vs, but also of the fearefullest of Gods plagues in this life, and of euerlasting destruction, death and condemnation in the life to come; and finally, that it is Gods wonderfull mercy that hee dealeth so fauourably with vs, not punishing vs according to the merit of our sinnes, but like a gracious Father with all loue and tendernesse for our amendement. Concerning the confession of our sinnes, whereby wee lay them open before the Lord, wee are encouraged thereunto by Gods most gracious promises, namely, that if wee confesse and forsake our sinnes, we shall find mercy; and that if wee acknowledge our sinnes, hee is faithfull and iust to forgiue vs our sinnes, and to cleanse vs from all vnrighteousnesse. And contrariwise, we are terrified from the neglect thereof by Gods seuere threatnings, for he that hideth his sinnes, or dissembleth them, shall not prosper; because he maketh God a lyar, who by his Word conuinceth all men of sinne, as it is in the same places. So the Lord threatneth that seeing the Iewes said, that surely Gods wrath should turne from them, because they were guiltlesse, therefore hee would enter into iudgment with them, because they said, wee haue not sinned. In regard whereof Iob professeth, that though he were iust, yet hee would not answere, but would make supplication to his iudge; and that though hee were perfect, yet because he did not know his owne soule, therefore did hee abhorre his life. And of both this displeasure of God threatned against those who hide their sinnes, and of this mercy promised to those that acknowledge and confesse them, Dauid had experience, for he saieth, that being in affliction, and hauing Gods hand heauie vpon him, and holding his tongue, his very bones consumed, though he roared all the day. But then (saith he) I acknowledged my sinne vnto thee, neither hid I mine iniquitie: for I thought I will confesse against my selfe my wickednesse vnto the Lord, and thou forgauest the punishment of my sinne. And of this wee haue innumerable examples in the Scriptures. As in the Israelites, who being afflicted for their sinnes, doe continually after their repentance, make their humble confession of their wickednesse, as an introduction vnto their prayers for helpe and deliuerance, as wee commonly read in the history of the Iudges and the Kings. Thus also in the time of their captiuity, they cry out vnto God; We haue sinned, we haue rebelled, therefore thou hast not spared. So Iob in the time of his affliction, maketh the like confession vnto God; I haue sinned (saith hee) what shall I doe vnto thee, O thou preseruer of men? And Dauid likewise, as appeareth throughout the whole booke of the Psalmes. Yea not onely these and all other the Saints of God, but euen Pharaoh himselfe, who in the time of his prosperitie, asked who was the Lord; yea in his affliction, maketh confession of his sinne, and craueth pardon. How much rather therefore should wee lay open our sinnes before our heauenly Father, who is ready to forget them, when wee remember them; to hide them, when wee discouer them; and to forgiue them, when wee confesse them? For hee is our spirituall Chirurgeon and Physitian of our soules, and therefore to whom should we lay open our festered sores of sinne, but vnto him, who by applying that soueraigne salue of his mercy, and the precious balme of Christs bloud is able to heale them? To whom should wee make known the sicknesses and diseases of our soules, but vnto him who hath both will and skill to cure them?

But as wee must in our afflictions confesse fesse our sinnes before God, so must we in all humility acknowledge, that we are not worthy of the least of those benefits which we still enjoy, and that if the Lord should enter into judgement with vs, he might as well depriue vs of all his blessings that remaine, as of those which for our sinnes hee hath justly taken from vs. We must say with Iacob, that [a] wee are not worthy of the least of Gods mercies, and of all the truth which he hath shewed vnto vs, in fulfilling of his gracious promises; but contrariwise deserue much more heauy plagues and punishments. And this humiliation the Lord requireth of the People, [b] Then shall you (saith he) remember your owne wayes, and your deeds that were not good, and shall judge your selues worthy to haue beene destroyed for your iniquities, and for your abominations. An example whereof wee haue in the afflicted Iewes, who in all their great extremities, humbly confessed it to bee the great [c] mercy of God that they were not vtterly consumed, and adiudged themselues to haue deserued [d] woe because they had sinned. As also in Ezra who humbling himselfe in the sight and sense of his owne and the peoples sinnes, [e] cryeth out, O my God, I am confounded and ashamed, to lift vp mine eyes vnto thee my God: for our iniquities are increased ouer our head, and our trespasse is growne vp vnto the Heauen. And if we thus [f] iudge our selues we shall not be iudged of Lord; if we accuse and condemne our selues, he will excuse and acquit vs; and if [g] wee shew our selues before the Lord, he will lift vs vp. For [h] hee looketh to him that is poore, and of a contrite spirit, who trembleth at his word. Yea [i] hee dwelleth with him that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to reuiue the spirit of the humble, and to giue life to them that are of a contrite heart. An example hereof wee haue in Rehoboam and in the rest of the Princes of Iudah, [k] who humbled themselues and said, the Lord is iust; and when the Lord saw that they humbled themselues, the Word of the Lord came to Shemaiah saying; they haue humbled themselues, therefore I will not destroy them, but I will send them deliuerance shortly, &c. Also in Manasses, who [l] when in his tribulation he prayed to the Lord his God, and humbled himself greatly before him, God was intreated of him, heard his prayer, and restored him to his Kingdome. And thus Daniel praying and humbling himselfe before God, receiued this comfortable message from God; [m] From the first day that thou didst set thine heart to vnderstand, and to humble thy selfe before thy God, thy words were heard, &c. Yea so much doth the Lord esteeme of this humiliation, that he would not let this counterfeit humiliation of Ahab goe vnrewarded; but gaue him in regard thereof, a [n] temporary immunity from those iudgements and punishments, which by his Prophet he had threatned against him. If therefore in our afflictions wee would poure forth vnto God such acceptable prayers, as may obtaine comfort in our crosses, and deliuerance from all our calamities; wee must confesse our sinnes, and humbly acknowledge that wee haue not deserued Gods smallest benefits, but are worthy to haue the wrath of God to burne more hotly against vs, and to bee ouerwhelmed with much more heauy plagues and punishments. And so the Lord will excuse vs, when wee accuse our selues; remit our sinnes when wee remember them; and absolue vs from punishment, when in all humility we acknowledge that wee haue justly deserued the fearefullest of his plagues. For if we, who haue but a little mite of mercy, are moued with compassion, when either our Sonne or Seruant doe humble themselues, acknowledge their faults, and of their owne accord offer themselues to suffer that punishment which they haue deserued; then how can wee doubt that God will bee pittifull and ready to forgiue vs, when hee seeth vs thus humbled, whose loue and mercy towards vs is infinite and incomprehensible? As therefore a man skilfull in the Art of swimming, being through casualty cast into the Sea, and striuing by his skill and labour to recouer the shore, doth not when hee seeth a billow approaching oppose against it, because it would cast him further into the maine, his weaker force being farre too feeble to withstand the violence of the mighty waue; but stoopeth and diueth vnder it, and so suffereth it to passe ouer him without receiuing any hurt: so when we see the huge billowes of troubles and afflictions raised by the stormy blasts of Gods wrath and anger, neere approaching, and comming against vs; it is both vaine and dangerous to oppose against them by pride and impatiency, or to imagine that wee can resist and withstand them with our strugling, murmuring and repining; seeing this will rather hinder vs from arriuing at the hauen of safety, and cast vs backe into the depth of misery; but like those cunning swimmers wee must diue vnder these waues, which it is impossible to withstand; bearing our burthen with patience, meekenesse and humility, and acknowledging that farre greater punishments are due vnto vs. And of both this confession and humiliation wee haue notable presidents in those excellent prayers of [o] Ezra, [p] Nehemiah, and [q] Daniel. As also in the speech of the prodigall Sonne after his conuersion, and returning to his Father; [r] Father (saith hee) I haue sinned against Heauen, and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy Sonne; vpon which humiliation hee was raised a Gen. 32.10.

b Ezech. 36.31.
c Lament. 3.22.
d Cap. 5.16.
e Ezra 9.6.
f 1. Cor. 11.31.
g Iam. 4.10.
h Esay. 66.2.
i and 57.15.
k 2. Chro. 12.7.
l 2. Chro. 33.12. 13.
m Dan. 10. 12.
n 1. King. 21.
o Ezra 9.
p Nehem. 9.
q Dan. 9.
r Luk. 15.21.
Si sermonem videres pronunciari propria confessionem, obtestationem, offerre se pœnæ, in sellam, ad ignominiæ, &c. Ambros. in Psalm.

raised out of his afflicted estate, and receiued both the pardon of his faults, and large testimonies of his Father's fauour.

CHAP. V.

Of the things required in our prayers in respect of their matter, manner, time and continuance.

AND thus much concerning those things which respect the person of him that prayeth; In the next place wee are to speake of those which are required vnto the prayer it selfe; and these either respect the matter of our petitions, the manner, or the time and continuance of this holy exercise. Concerning the matter of our prayers; we are first and principally to desire the pardon and remission of our sinnes; for they are the wall of separation (as I haue said) which hinder all our suites from ascending and entring into Gods eares, and his blessings from descending vnto vs; they are the poysonous sting of all our afflictions, which being pulled out, they become harmelesse, yea beneficiall and profitable for the aduancing of our spirituall good, and the furthering of our saluation. They are the causes of all our crosses and calamities, which being taken away, either our afflictions shall haue an end, or of crosses be turned into comforts; and of noysome euils, become joyfull blessings. Whereas contrariwise if our sinnes remaine vnpardoned, euen our freedome from our afflictions, is but a bondage; Gods sparing of vs, a grieuous punishment; and the greatest misery, to be freed from misery; seeing we are left of God as a desperate cure, because the Physicke of affliction will doe vs no good, and giuen vp vnto the hardnesse of our owne hearts, to run on in our wicked courses which lead to destruction, without check and controlement. And hereof it is that the faithfull being in affliction obserue this vsuall method in their prayers, first to acknowledge their sinnes, and then to craue pardon for them, and deliuerance from their crosses and calamities. So Daniel in that excellent Prayer for Gods afflicted Church and people, maketh first an humble confession of their sinnes, and then prayeth for mercy and the turning away of Gods wrath, and for their deliuerance and returning out of the land of their captiuity. And Dauid joyneth these together, praying first for the appeasing of Gods wrath and anger, and for mercie in regard of his sinnes, and then desireth to be healed, deliuered and saued out of his affliction and tribulation. So elsewhere hee desireth the Lord to look vpon his affliction and misery, but because though hee beheld it, yet hee would not pitty him, so long as his guilt and faultinesse remained, therefore he addeth; and forgiue me all my sinnes. And in the one and fiftieth Psalme hee laboureth earnestly for the pardon of his sinnes, and maketh humble confession of his wickednesse, and then beggeth for the comfort and joy of Gods Spirit. Yea this order was obserued by our heauenly Physitian in the curing of bodily infirmities and diseases, first to take away the cause of their sicknesse, Sonne be of good comfort, thy sinnes are forgiuen thee, and then the sicknesse it selfe, Arise, take vp thy bed, and goe to thine house. Matth. 9. 2. 6.

And thus hauing craued and obtained the pardon and remission of our sinnes, in respect of their guilt: in the next place we may desire to bee freed from the punishment; for that wee may lawfully pray for our deliuerance out of our afflictions, euen common sense and the instinct of nature teacheth vs, mouing vs to flee and auoide whatsoeuer hurteth vs, and to follow and imbrace whatsoeuer is helpefull and profitable. And this naturall appetite of shunning euill, and seeking our owne good, is further warranted by Gods expresse commandement, enjoyning vs in the time of our afflictions to call vpon him for helpe and deliuerance. Vnto which wee may adde the example of the Saints from time to time, who haue prayed against these crosses and calamities when they saw them approaching; and for deliuerance out of them after they were inflicted; which is so common and vsuall in the Scriptures, that it is but lost labour to produce examples; onely that example of our Sauiour Christ aboue all exception is sufficient in it selfe; who as hee vsed all good meanes to preserue himselfe from affliction and persecution; so hee earnestly prayed vnto his Father, that the bitter cup of his passion might passe from him. But howsoeuer wee may lawfully pray against afflictions before they come, or for deliuerance out of them when they are inflicted; yet not absolutely and without any condition or exception; for thus onely wee must pray against sinne which is simply euill, and in its owne nature, without any respect of good; and for spirituall graces and eternall life and happinesse which are simply good, and haue in them no respect of euill. But as temporary and earthly benefits are not simply good, but being mutable and liable to our abuse, become vnto vs through our corruption, not onely vaine and vnprofitable, but hurtfull and pernicious; so these momentanie crosses and afflictions, are not simply and absolutely euill, but through the infinite wisdome, goodnesse and power of God, disposing and ordering them, become come to the faithfull exceeding good and profitable (as wee shall afterwards shew at large) and that both for the manifesting and aduancing of Gods glory, and the furthering and assuring of our saluation. And therefore wee must not simply pray against them, because so we should pray against Gods glory and our owne euerlasting good, but onely so farre forth as they tend to the hurt or hindrance of either of them. Againe the promises of God, which in all our prayers are the onely ground and foundation of our faith, are not in respect either of temporary and worldly benefits, or deliuerance from these momentany crosses and afflictions, absolute and without limitation; but alwayes restrained to the condition of his own glory, and our spirituall good and eternall saluation; and therefore in all our prayers, this condition is either to bee expressed or vnderstood, because wee are no otherwise to aske it than hee hath promised it. Neither were it in truth a benefit to receiue freedome from our misery and tribulation, when as it will not stand with the glory of God and our owne saluation, but rather an exceeding great iudgment and punishment; and consequently it should rather be a terrible threatning, than a comfortable promise; if the Lord should tell vs that he would thus deliuer vs. And therefore he doth not promise vs all things which we desire, nor to deliuer vs from all things which wee abhorre and feare, for this were the part of an dulgent and cockering parent, who desireth to please his Childe in his foolish wantonnesse for the present, rather than to seeke his profit and good for euer after; but rather like a wise, discreet, and truely louing Father hee promiseth, that if wee feare and seeke vnto him, nothing shall be wanting vnto vs which is good; and that either hee will not afflict vs at all, or else that he will by his power and wisdome conuert all our crosses and calamities, to our comfort and benefit. And as the learned and faithfull Physitian, or skilfull Surgeon, doe not promise their patients which are full of corrupt humours, or indangered with old and festered sores, that they will not distaste their appetite, or any way molest and trouble them; but onely that they will effect the cure, and to this purpose vse both the best and easiest meanes and medicines which they can; and as the wise patient is well satisfied with this promise, being contented rather to suffer for the present a little smart and paine, than to hazard his life by neglect of the meanes, or to haue his sore turne to a fistula or incurable cancer: So the Lord doth not promise, that hee will not at all afflict vs, but that our afflictions shall not hurt vs, nor that wee shall feele no smart or paine, but that hee will cure and saue vs by the best meanes which will stand with his owne glory and our good. And therefore like wise patients wee are to desire, not that hee will please our appetites, but that he will effect a perfect cure; not that he will at our pleasure pull off the corrasiue or working salue of affliction and tribulation, but when it hath drawne out the core of our corruptions, and made vs fit for the healing plaisters of his mercies and gracious benefits. For otherwise if wee would enlarge Gods promises according to our owne lusts and foolish fantasies, and desire that which is pleasing to our carnall appetites, and not that which is good and profitable; our carefull Father will not harken vnto vs. And if in the frensie fit of our distempered passion, we either desire things hurtfull for vs (as it were cold water in a burning feauer) or would haue the vnpleasing plaisters of tribulation remoued, or the bitter potion of affliction taken from vs, which our wise Physitian hath appointed for the effecting of the cure; hee will not regard our suits, seeing he desireth rather to cure vs, than to please vs; and regardeth our well grounded request, which out of a setled and sound iudgment we made vnto him, namely, that he would vse the best meanes for the purging of our corruptions, the recouery of our spirituall health, and the euerlasting saluation of our soules; rather than a new motion arising from our present sense; whereby in a raging manner we preferre our bodies, before our soules; and freedome from present and momentanie smart and paine, before deliuerance from neuer ending torments, and our euerlasting saluation in the life to come. And therefore, if we would haue our Prayers heard in our afflictions, wee must pray for that which God hath promised; not absolutely that crosses may not befall vs, or that being inflicted wee may bee deliuered out of them; but conditionally, if this our suite will stand with Gods glory and our saluation; not that they may not happen, but that they may not hurt vs; not that wee may bee quite exempted from sense of paine, for this perhaps would hinder the cure, and cause vs to rot in our corruptions; but that like a wise, faithfull and pitiful Physitian, he will handle vs as gently as possibly hee may, so as in the meane time the medicines vsed may bee effectuall for the purging of our corruptions, and recouery of our health. For thus (as one saith) God deliuereth his from tribulation, not that it may not at all befall vs, but that when it happeneth, it may not harme vs, and that wee may remaine vntouched of guilt. For euen death it selfe, (which in its owne nature is the greatest and last of worldly miseries) will in the end fall vpon vs; but to those whom God loueth, it shall be a sleepe, the gate of life eternall, the beginning ginning of our comfort and refreshing; and the very ladder whereby we ascend into the joyes of Heauen. To the same purpose another saith well, that God heard Pauls Prayer, not according to his will, but so as it stood best with his spirituall welfare. And then inferreth, that it is not a thing much to be esteemed; to be heard according to our appetite and desire; but so as it may further our profit and benefit: for euen the Diuels themselues were heard according to their will, when they desired to enter into the heard of Swine; and the chiefe of them had his suite granted, when as he requested that he might tempt Iob, but it was to this end, that Iob might bee tryed, and the tempter confounded. And so the Israelites were heard when they lusted after flesh; but yee know what followed, whilest the meate was in their mouthes. And therefore doe not much esteeme it to bee heard according to thy will; for sometime God in his anger giueth that which thou desirest; and in his mercy denyeth that which thou askest. But when thou prayest for those things which God commendeth, commandeth and promiseth in the life to come, thou maiest aske securely, and intend thy suit with all earnestnesse, that thou maiest haue it heard and granted, as being bestowed by God in his mercy, and not in his anger and displeasure. But when thou askest temporall benefits, aske them with moderation and feare, and commit the issue of thy suit wholy to him, namely that he will giue them if they be profitable, and deny them if they be hurtfull; for the Physitian knoweth better than the patient what doth hurt him, and what doth helpe him.

Q. Sect. 2. Whether wee may lawfully pray for deliuerance from affliction, and after what manner.

Psal. 50. 15.

Psal. 34. 10. Rom. 8. 28.

The second thing required in our Prayers respecteth the manner how wee are to pray in the time of our afflictions; which is in part touched occasionally in the former section, where I intreated of the matter of our requests, namely, that we must not pray simply and absolutely for deliuerance, but only so farre forth as it will stand with Gods glory and our owne spirituall good; not that the burthen of our afflictions should at our pleasure bee taken from our shoulders; but that either the Lord would ease vs of our load, or giue vs strength and patience to beare whatsoeuer it shall please him to lay vpon vs. And this vertue of patience and spirituall wisdome wee may absolutely and without condition aske of God, both because it is absolutely good and therefore liable to no abuse, but alwayes tendeth to his glory and our saluation; and also because wee haue an expresse promise, that if wanting this grace we pray for it, the Lord will giue it vnto vs liberally; and withall a commandement, that we aske it in faith and wauer not; because the Lord hath absolutely promised it, and therfore will vndoubtedly bestow it. But besides this there are diuers other things required, which I will briefly touch, because it is not my purpose to set downe any full treatise of prayer, but onely so much as is necessary for the doctrine of afflictions. As first, that we present our selues before God with all feare and reuerence; for if we bee thus affected when wee come into the presence of an earthly Prince, though he be but a mortall man like vnto our selues, onely because he is Gods deputy, who hath in him but some small sparks of that infinite majesty, which is in him whom he representeth; then how much more should we be thus affected, when wee come into the presence of God who is King of Kings, and Lord of Lords? And this reuerence and respect of his glorious presence, the Lord at all times requireth of vs, as he is our Father and Master; if (saith he) I bee a Father where is mine honour, if a Master, where is my feare? But especially when we draw neere vnto him in performing the duties of his seruice, in which respect the Psalmist willeth vs, to serue the Lord in feare, and to reioyce in trembling. And the wise man counselleth vs that wee doe not performe these duties of Gods worship rashly and irreuerently, Be not (saith he) rash with thy mouth, nor let thine heart bee hasty, to vtter a thing before God; for God is in the Heauens, and thou art on the Earth, therefore let thy words bee few. The which argument our Sauiour prefixeth before that perfect forme of prayer, to prepare vs thereby to call vpon God with all reuerence; because hee is not onely a Father, but heauenly and full of all glory and Majesty. Let vs therefore in the first place present our selues and our prayers before God with all feare and reuerence; and to this end let vs both consider, what the Lord is before whom wee come, namely, a God infinite in Majesty, glory, greatnesse, power, seeing all things, euen the secret corruptions of our hearts, most pure, just, holy, the creatour and perseruer of all things, &c. And also what wee are, namely, vile, wretched, miserable, dust and ashes, wormes and no men, defiled with sinne, and full of all imperfections, with which considerations being humbled, wee shall bee the better fitted to receiue mercy and helpe from God. For hee giueth his grace to the humble, and dwelleth with those who are of a contrite spirit.

Mal.1.6. Leuit.10.3.

Psal.4.11.

Eccles.5.1.

Esa.57.15.

2. Sect. 4. The second thing required is that we pray in truth.

Secondly, God requireth that we pray in truth, whereby I doe not onely vnderstand, that wee must indeede desire the things wee pray for, which is not necessary to be stood on in this place, because there are few hypocrites in suites of this nature, seeing all desire with all their hearts and soules to be freed out of their afflictions; but more especially that that wee draw neere vnto God in the time of our trouble, not onely with our lips, but alſo with our hearts; that ſo it may bee a Prayer of the heart and ſoule, as well as of tongue and ſpeech, and bee performed not only with the outward geſture of the body, but alſo in ſpirit & truth. For as it is alwaies a thing odious, to bee in our Prayers, diſtracted with wandring thoughts; and to haue our hearts and minds going a roauing after worldly vanities, when our tongues and lips make our ſuits and petitions vnto God; ſo eſpecially when wee fault after this manner in the time of our afflictions, ſeeing the Lord hath purpoſely brought vs into theſe ſtraights, that wee may more ſeriouſly, and with greater attention and intention of our minds call vpon him; and putteth (as it were) theſe pricks in our ſides, that wee may the rather be moued to keepe the right way without any vaine wandring, or wanton digreſſions. And if wee doe not thus call vpon God in truth, with our hearts, as well as with our tongues, we can haue no aſſurance that our petitions ſhall be heard or regarded of God; for (as one ſaith) how can we deſire that the Lord ſhould heare vs, when wee doe not heare our ſelues? Or how can we hope that God will regard our ſuites which wee make vnto him, when wee our ſelues doe not regard them? eſpecially conſidering that the Lord hath reſtrained his promiſe of hearing our Prayers vnto thoſe onely, who doe in truth call vpon him; for as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, the Lord is neere vnto all them that call vpon him; yea to all that call vpon him in truth. As therefore in the time of the Law, when for their ſinnes they were to offer vp vnto God whole burnt offerings, it was not enough, that they offered vp the outward parts alone, but they muſt alſo burne the very [a] intrailes and bowels: ſo when in the time of our tribulation wee offer vp this ſacrifice of Prayer, let vs as well lift vp our [b] hearts and ſoules, as our hands and eyes; and pray as well with the mind [c] and vnderſtanding, as with the tongue and voice; or elſe wee ſhall heare that juſt cenſure, that wee worſhip God in vaine, and haue no aſſurance that he will heare our Prayers.

Eſa.29.13. Iob.4.23.24.

Quomodo te audiri à Deo poſtulas cum te ipſe non audias? vis eſſe deum memorem tui cum rogas, cum tu ipſe memor tui non ſis? Cyprian. de orat. Domin.

Pſalm.145.18.

a Leuit.1.13.

b Pſalm.25.1.

c 1.Cor.14.15.

Q. Sect. 5. The third thing required is that we pray in faith.

Thirdly, wee muſt pray in faith, whereby we are to bee perſwaded not onely that our perſons are accepted of God as juſt and righteous, but alſo, that our Prayers are heard of him, and ſhall moſt certainely bee granted being framed according to Gods will; more eſpecially we are to beleeue that God in his moſt ſeaſonable and due time will deliuer vs out of all our afflictions, and in the meane time will giue vs ſtrength and patience to beare whatſoeuer it ſhall pleaſe him to lay vpon vs. And this our faith muſt be grounded not vpon our owne workes and worthineſſe, but vpon Gods gracious and free promiſes, namely, that if wee aske any thing of him in the name of his ſonne, according to his will; it ſhall be giuen vnto vs; and more eſpecially that if we call vpon him in the time of our trouble, he will deliuer vs, that wee may glorifie him. That he will bee with vs in trouble, heare, deliuer and glorifie vs, and finally that hee will not alwayes chide nor keepe his anger for euer, as the Pſalmiſt telleth vs. And this ſpeciall faith thus grounded on Gods promiſes, is moſt neceſſary vnto our Prayers in the time of affliction, becauſe the Lord by his holy Apoſtle doth require it; for hauing willed vs, that if wee lacke Wiſedome wee aske it of God, who giueth vnto all men liberally; he biddeth vs to aske in faith and wauer not: for hee that wauereth is like a waue of the Sea, toſt of the wind and carried away. Neither let that man thinke that he ſhall receiue any thing of the Lord. And Secondly becauſe all Gods promiſes of hearing our Prayers are reſtrained to the condition of faith applying them to our owne vſe, for the Lord will not ſtretch out his hand of bountie and grace to giue, if we doe not alſo ſtretch out the hand of faith to receiue. And therefore our Sauiour biddeth vs whatſoeuer wee deſire when wee pray, to beleeue that wee ſhall haue it, and it ſhall bee done vnto vs. And the Apoſtle exhorteth vs in this faith and aſſurance to goe boldly vnto the throne of grace, that wee may receiue mercy, and finde grace to helpe in time of need.

1.Iohn 5.14. Pſalm.50. & 91.15. 103.8,9. Iob 5.18,19.

Lam.1.13.

Mark.11.24.

Heb.4.16.

Q. Sect. The fourth thing requi is feruency ſpirit and neſſe. Pſal.62.8. 1.Theſ.3. Rom.12.

The fourth thing required in the manner of our Prayers is, that wee pray feruently, pouring out our hearts and ſoules with great ardency and earneſtneſſe in our ſuites vnto God; and this is required in all our Prayers at all times according to that of the Pſalmiſt, truſt in the Lord all yee people, powre out your hearts before him, for God is our hope; and practiſed by the Apoſtle, who ſaith that he Prayed vnto God exceedingly day & night, and to this end the Lord giues vnto vs the aſſiſtance of his Holy Spirit for the helping of our infirmities; that wee who know not how to pray as we ought, but are ready naturally to pray with great coldneſſe and negligence, may hereby bee inabled to make requeſt vnto God with ſighes and groanes which cannot be expreſſed. But eſpecially wee are to pray thus feruently and earneſtly vnto God in the time of our affliction; as it is required of the Church of Iudah in her captiuity and miſery. Let teares run downe like a riuer day and night: take thee no reſt, neither let the apple of thine eye ceaſe; Ariſe, cry in the night: in the beginning of the watches powre out thine heart like water before the face of the Lord. Whereby is vnderſtood that like as water, whoſe courſe and current hath beene long ſtopped in a ſtraight and

Lam.2.18.

nar-

narrow passage doth swell aboue its bankes or breaketh downe the damme which stoppeth it with vnresistable force and violence: so must our Prayers haue the like force and vigour to ouercome all opposition, when wee are brought into these straights of affliction and can find no issue out of them. A notable example whereof we haue in Iacob, who being in danger of his brothers rage and violence, is said to haue wrastled with God all the night vntill hee had preuailed with him; in which contention hee did not onely vse his bodily strength for the holding fast of the Angell of the couenant, that hee might not depart from him vntill he had obtained his suite, for this would haue beene a small and feeble meanes to haue preuailed with God; but as the Prophet Hosea expoundeth it, by his strength hee had power with God, and ouer the Angell, and preuailed, when as he wept and prayed vnto him. Thus the Church and people of God, are said in their troubles to haue visited God, and to haue powred out a Prayer when his chastening was vpon them; and that not coldly and remissely, but like a woman in trauaile, who being in great sorrow and distresse, cryeth out in her paines, as the Prophet there compareth it. A form of which zealous prayer he setteth downe elsewhere: Looke downe from heauen, and behold from the dwelling place of thine holinesse, and of thy glory, where is thy zeale and strength, the multitude of thy mercies and of thy compassions? they are restrained from me, &c. And so Hannah being afflicted and troubled in minde, because of her barrennesse, and the insulting prouocations of Peninnah her aduersary, is said to haue prayed and wept sore; and as her selfe speaketh vnto Eli in her just excuse, to haue powred out her soule before the Lord, and of the abundance of her complaint to haue made knowne her griefe vnto God. And this earnestnesse in prayer the Prophet Dauid vsed in his afflictions, euen thirsting (as he saith) after Gods mercy for the granting of his suites, like the thirsty land, which being chopt with drought, seemeth to gape continually after raine, neuer shutting the jawes till it bee filled and satisfied. Thus also the Disciples being endangered by a tempest, flee vnto Christ, for helpe, and with great earnestnes cry out vnto him, Master, master, saue vs, we perish; and as Marke recordeth it, in their feruent heate they expostulate the matter with him, saying, Master, carest thou not that we perish? of which kind of expostulations vttered to shew the feruency of spirit, we haue many examples in the bookes of Iob, and of the Psalmes. And thus our Saviour Christ himselfe in the time of his greatest affliction, shewed also his greatest feruency in Prayer, praying more often and instantly than at other times; for he is said to haue prayed thrice, that the bitter Cup of his Passion might passe from him; and being in his agony to haue prayed more earnestly, and to haue vttered his Prayers and Supplications with strong crying and teares vnto him that was able to saue him from death. Yea, not only the faithfull, but euen the Heathenish Ninuites, who in the time of their prosperity were so careless and secure, that they had need to be awakened with that heauy denunciation of their destruction; when they were brought into these narrow straights, are said to haue cryed mightily vnto God for deliuerance out of that danger. So that if we would not be vnlike all Gods Saints and seruants, yea, if we would not come behind the Ninuites themselues, we must in the time of our afflictions, not onely pray vnto God, but performe this duty with great feruency and earnestnesse. For indeed, this is a chiefe end why the Lord afflicteth vs, and why also he differreth to deliuer vs at the first motion, because he would haue vs more vrgent & instant in out prayer; as our Sauiour Christ plainly sheweth vs in the Parable of the two friends, the one awakening and raising vp the other to supply his wants by his importunity; and of the vnrighteous Iudge, who by the poore widowes incessant suing and troubling him, was in the end mooued to doe her justice. An example whereof wee haue in the Canaanitish woman, who receiued from our Sauiour many repulses, not that hee was vnwilling to hearken vnto her, and grant her petition; but because he would giue her occasion to shew her faith and feruency in following her suite. Vnto which feruency, if we do not attaine in the time of our afflictions we cannot hope to haue our requests heard and regarded, for if we be slacke, cold, and negligent in offering our suites vnto God, the Lord will be slack and slow in granting them; and if through our slouthfulnesse wee frustrate Gods end in afflicting vs, he will also frustrate the end of our Prayers, and will not heare nor deliuer vs out of our afflictions. For although hee hath made many gracious promises, that hee will heare and helpe vs, when we call vpon him in the time of our trouble, yet they are restrained vnto this condition, if our Prayers be feruent and effectuall. So he promiseth the Israelites, that if being in tribulation, in the land of their captiuity, they did from thence seeke the Lord, they should surely find him; if they did seeke him with all their heart, and with all their soule. And the Apostle Iames telleth vs, that the prayer of a righteous man auayleth much, if it be feruent or effectuall. And therefore though wee bee neuer so eloquent and ample in our Prayers with our tongues and lips, yea though outwardly we howle and cry with our mouth and voice in our suites vnto God, yet the Lord will not regard them, if in respect of the heart and affection

Heb 5.7.
Ion. 3.8.
Luke 11.7,8.
Luke 18.5.
Matth. 15.
Deut. 4.29.
Iames 5.16.
Hos. 7.14.

fection they be cold and negligent. Whereas contrariwise if we powre forth our hearts before God with feruency of spirit, then though with Moses wee say nothing at all, yet our prayers will bee lowde and strong cryes to moue his attention; though with Hannah we make our suites after such manner, that wee only moue our lips, and haue no voice heard, and in regard hereof seeme vnto men drunke or distract of our wits, yet if wee powre forth our soules vnto God, hee will looke vpon our affliction and heare our Prayers. Though with Hezechiah wee are not able through the violence of our affliction to vtter a perfect sentence, but chatter like a Crane or Swallow, our prayers will bee as effectuall to preuaile with God, if they proceed out of hearts inflamed with zeale and feruency, as though they were vttered in the smoothest stile, and adorned with all the flowers of Rhetoricke. Yea, if wee cannot speake at all, but only sigh and grone; yet this being the language which his owne holy Spirit teacheth vs, wee may be assured that he both vnderstandeth it, and will also regard and hearken vnto it.

Exod. 14. 15.

1. Sam. 1. 16.

Esay 38. 14.

Rom. 8. 26.

6. Sect. 7. The first thing required, is humility, whereby we submit our wills to the will of God.

The first thing required is humility, whereby acknowledging our owne blindnesse and ignorance, by which it commeth to passe, that wee know not what is good for vs, nor what to pray for, but with Zebedees sonnes, aske we know not what; and on the other side the infinite wisdome of God, whereby hee knoweth what is best for vs; and his boundlesse bounty and mercy whereby according to his most gracious and infallible promises, he is alwayes ready to bestow vpon vs all things which are good and profitable; we doe wholy resigne vp our selues vnto his good pleasure, submit our wils which are continually subject to errour and mistaking, vnto his most holy will, which is priuiledged from these infirmities; & wholy refer all our suits & petitions vnto his most wise consideration, to be granted or denied, as will stand best with his glory, and the good and saluation of our owne soules. And this duty our Sauiour Christ hath taught vs in that most perfect forme of prayer, where next after the aduancing of Gods glory and kingdome, he willeth vs to desire, that his will may be done in earth as it is in heauen. Which if we obserue, conforming our will in all things to the will of God, we are sure not onely to haue all our requests granted, but also in such manner and measure, as shall bee most for our spirituall profit, and the furthering of Gods glory, and our owne saluation; seeing God knoweth, when and by what meanes to effect them better, than wee our of our ignorance can prescribe vnto him. Yea, in truth wee can haue no assurance that any of our prayers which we make according to our owne lusts, and not according to the will of God shall bee heard or granted; vnlesse it bee in Gods displeasure, for our iudgement and punishment; seeing these humble Prayers, which wee wholy submit to the will of God, haue the the promise of being heard, made vnto them; according to that of the Psalmist, Commit thy way vnto the Lord, and trust in him, and he shall bring it to passe. So the Apostle Iohn more expresly telleth vs, that in this conformity vnto the will of God, consisteth all our assurance of hauing our petitions heard and granted; This (saith hee) is the assurance that wee haue in him, that if we aske any thing according to his will, hee heareth vs. A notable example whereof we haue in our Sauiour Christ, who though hee did most earnestly desire to haue the bitter Cup of his Passion to passe from him, yet doth hee submit himselfe and his suite to the good pleasure of his heauenly Father. O my father (saith he) if it be possible, let this cup passe from me: neuertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt. And thus we submit our selues and our suites vnto Gods will, first in regard of the substance of them, when hauing prayed for deliuerance out of our afflictions, we can be content whether he will deliuer vs or no, leauing it wholy and freely to his choice and pleasure, whether he will free vs from our crosses, or seeing it good for vs that wee should still lie vnder them, will giue vs strength and patience, so as we may beare them with comfort and contentment. Secondly, when as wee doe not prescribe any meanes vnto him, whereby wee would be freed from all our afflictions, but leaue it wholy to the disposing of his wise prouidence; who with these, or other means; yea aboue, without, and contrary to all meanes, is able through his owne omnipotent power, to effect and bring to passe whatsoeuer it pleaseth him. Thirdly, when we doe not limit or restraine him to either time or place, but leaue it wholy vnto his good pleasure, who knoweth best when it is most seasonable for the effecting of his owne good purposes; onely in generall, pray that he will then and not before free vs out of our troubles and afflictions, when as they haue effected those good ends for which he sent them; that is, enriched vs with his spirituall graces, and brought vs neerer vnto him by vnfained repentance. Fourthly, when wee conforme our wills to the will of God in respect of our ends, not craueing his blessings and benefits for worldly, carnall and sinister respects, but that wee may employ them to those vses and ends, for which he hath bestowed them; and principally that wee may the better be enabled to glorifie God: and be furthered in the way of our owne saluation. And if we doe accustom conforme our wills to Gods will, by propounding these ends to our desires, wee can can haue no assurance to be heard of God, or to haue our petitions granted, vnlesse it be in his wrathfull displeasure. And thus the Apostle Iames telleth those Hypocrites to whom hee writeth that they asked of God, and receiued not, because they asked amisse; that they might consume Gods blessings receiued vpon their owne lusts. Wherein the Lord dealeth graciously with his children and seruants, seeing the abuse of his benefits would much more hurt and endamage them, than the obteyning and hauing them would doe them good. And therefore, as the wise Father doth out of meere loue deny his childe a knife, though he earnestly beggeth it, when he knoweth that he doth desire it to play the wanton with it, to the endangering of himselfe or others: and keepeth him bare of money, when he desireth it that hee may spend it in riot, wantonnesse, drunkennesse, and such other wicked courses; and would not cease to giue him more stripes, if hee should perceiue by his plaine speeches, that hee therefore craued to bee spared, that hee might returne to his olde wayes, and againe incurre his displeasure, by committing wilfully his former faults: so the Lord will in loue and mercy deny to heare vs, crying vnto him for deliuerance out of our troubles, when our suites haue ill ends propounded vnto them, and noe such as are pleasing vnto him, and agreeable to his reuealed will. For example, the end which he propoundeth of our deliuerance out of affliction is, that being set at liberty, wee might thankfully remember so great a benefit, and so bee mooued to glorifie him by our obedience, and by rendering vnto him deserued prayse. Now contrariwise, if wee desire to be freed from our afflictions, that wee may with more pleasure and delight goe forward in our old worldly and wicked courses, & not that wee may bee the fitter for his seruice; as for example, if we desire health and strength, that we may follow our carnall pleasures, and not that we may the better be enabled to serue God in the generall duties of Christianity, and the speciall duties of our callings; if we desire to be eased of our pouerty, and to bee enriched that wee may match or put downe those which are either our equals or superiours; or that we may spend these blessings in gay apparell, surfeeting and drunkennesse; or contrariwise, to fill vp bags onely, that we may be counted rich, without any purpose to vse them when we haue them; and not that we may glorifie God in his own gifts, by our wise disposing of them for the good of our selues and others, in the workes of Christianity, Iustice and Mercy; the Lord will not bestow these blessings vpon vs, though we begge them neuer so earnestly; or if hee should, they would bee curses and not blessings, and signes and pledges, not of his mercy and loue, but of his wrath and heauy displeasure. And therefore if wee would be heard, when wee call vpon God for deliuerance out of our afflictions, let vs propound right ends of our freedome and immunitie; and because we are forgetfull & negligent in performing those good duties, which in the time of our troubles wee propounded as the end of our deliuerance; therefore it were not amisse to binde our selues hereunto by holy and solemne vowes, according to the example of Iacob, Hannah, Dauid, and other of Gods Saints and Seruants.

Matth. 26.

Gen.28.20. 1.Sam.1.10,11. Psal.66.13,14. & 32.1,2.

Q. Sect.6. What is required in our prayers in respect of their time and continuance, namely perseuerance.

The last thing required in our Prayers, respecteth their time or continuance; namely, that wee doe incessantly perseuere in Prayer without discouragement, although our suites bee not presently heard and granted; and though after many Prayers we haue neither deliuerance out of our afflictions, nor any sense of comfort, or patience in bearing them. It is true, that it is a dangerous tentation for a poore Christian to cry and call for helpe in his trouble, and not to haue his suites regarded. For a man would thinke that if God would heare the Prayers of any, then especially of those who are in affliction, seeing they aboue others haue his speciall promise, that if he would heare at any time, then after much crying and calling, and if in any thing, then in this suite for mercy and deliuerance which himselfe hath commanded vs to make, with a promise to heare vs; but for a man to pray, yea, an afflicted man to pray; and for such an one to pray often, & to pray thus with Dauid, out of the depths of misery, and that with all feruency and earnestnesse, and yet not haue his Prayers heard, nor his suites granted; this striketh at the root of faith, and shaketh the very foundation, if it be not built strongly vpon the rock. For then wee are ready to despaire of helpe; and to conclude, that seeing wee haue found our Prayers vaine and boolesse; therefore wee will saue that labour, and not spend our strength to no purpose. But the more strong and dangerous this tentation is, the more carefully ought euery Christian to arme himselfe against it. And to this purpose let vs consider, that the Lord requireth not onely that we should make our suits known vnto him once or twice, or some few or many times, but that we incessantly continue in Prayer, and neuer giue ouer till we haue our petitions heard and granted. So the Apostle willeth vs to a reioyce in hope, to bee patient in tribulation, and to continue in prayer; that b we pray continually; and c alwayes, with all manner of prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watch thereunto with all perseuerance, and finally, that wee d continue in prayer, and watch therein with thanksgiuing. Yea, thus are we bound to pray, when there is after much supplication no helpe appearing,

Psal.55.17. and 91.14,15.

Psal.130.1.

a Rom.12.12.

b 1.Thes.5.17.

c Ephes.6.18.

d Col.4.2. Luke 18.2,8. Chap.11.6,7.

pearing, no sense of comfort for the present, nor any outward ground of hope for the time to come; as our Sauiour teacheth vs in the Parable of the Widow, incessantly suing vnto the vnrighteous Iudge; and of the importunate friend, who would admit of no answere till his suite was granted; for to this very end the Lord purposely differreth to helpe vs, though euen at the first call he yearneth in the bowels of his compassion towards vs, that he may hereby try, and by trying, exercise; and by exercising, increase our faith, hope and affiance in him; as also that wee may be moued more seriously to repent of our sinnes, and with more feruency and earnestnesse to call vpon him. And therefore when the Lord seemeth to slacken his pace in comming to deliuer vs, wee must not slacken ours too in going vnto him, but with more diligence and speed we must runne and meete him, and with the greater importunity desire him to hasten his helpe. An example of which perseuering in prayer wee haue in Dauid, who neuer ceased to cry and call vpon God for mercy and deliuerance, though hee had no sense of comfort, but was much perplexed in his distressed estate. In the day of trouble (saith he) I sought the Lord. My sore ran and ceased not in the night, my soule refused comfort. I did thinke vpon God, and was troubled; I prayed, and my spirit was full of anguish. So in the woman of Canaan, who being patient of all repulses, continued her earnest suite, and would take no deniall. And thus though the afflicted Church complaineth, that the Lord had couered them with wrath, persecuted, slaine, and not spared them; & that when they were in this distresse; he had couered himselfe with a cloude, that their prayers could not passe through; yet she continueth her suits and petitions vnto God, till he looked downe from Heauen, and sent them helpe and deliuerance out of all their miseries and afflictions. Which examples if we likewise will follow, we shall assuredly haue the like issue and successe in our praiers and supplications; for this gracious promise and comfort is common to all the faithfull, that if they cry, the Lord heareth them, and deliuereth them out of all their troubles. And though he hath giuen them no assurance that he will heare them at the first or second call, nor prescribed and limited a time or day when he will helpe and deliuer them; yet he exhorteth vs all to goe boldly vnto the throne of grace, assuring vs that wee shall receiue mercy, and finde grace to helpe in time of need. But of this perseuerance in faith & patience, when the Lord deferreth to heare and helpe vs, I shall haue occasion to speake more fully hereafter, and therefore I doe here with the greater breuity passe it ouer.

Luke 18.

Psal. 77. 3.

Matth. 15.

Lament. 3. 43, 44, 50.

Psal. 34. 17.

Heb. 4. 16.

CHAP. VI.

Of the comforts which arise out of meditation, and first from the consideration of the causes of our afflictions; as namely, that God is the chiefe cause and principall Author of all our afflictions.

AND thus haue I shewed what is required in our Prayers, that they may bring vs comfort and deliuerance in all our troubles and afflictions. Now we will propound such argements of consolation, as doe arise out of meditation and consideration, which being well weighed and pondred, may strengthen our patience, and inable vs to beare all our afflictions with much comfort and inward rejoycing. All which for order sake, I will reduce vnto two heads. The first are such as may serue to comfort vs in our crosses and calamities, though we should continually lie vnder them, euen to the day of our death; the second, such as arise from the assurance which wee haue of Gods gracious and most seasonable deliuerance. The arguments and reasons of the first sort, are either spirituall, arising and springing out of the holy Scriptures; or else ciuill and worldly, grounded vpon some earthly meanes, and meere morall considerations. The arguments of comfort which are spirituall, are either simple or comparatiue. The reasons simply to be considered do arise either from the causes & effects, or the subject and adjuncts of our afflictions. The causes of our afflictions to bee considered of, are either efficient or finall; the efficient causes, are either the inflicting, or moiuing causes. The principall cause inflicting all troubles and afflictions vpon vs is God himselfe, and that in a threefold respect. First, because he hath predestinated and foreordained vs to suffer these afflictions. Secondly, as hee doth according to this his purpose execute his Decree. And thirdly, as he doth by his most wise and powerfull prouidence, order and dispose of all our crosses of calamities, with all circumstances which belong vnto them. That the Lord hath pre-ordained vs to suffer afflictions, the Apostle sheweth in the eighth of the Romanes, where speaking of afflictions hee saith, that whom God knew before, he did also predestinate, to be made like to the image of his Sonne, (namely, in suffering worldly miseries, and bearing the crosse) that he might be the first borne among many brethren; and so by suffering these things, might enter into his glory, as our Sauiour Christ himselfe speaketh. To which purpose Eliphaz also saith, that misery commeth not forth of the dust, neither doth affliction spring out of the earth; namely, as from their first fountaine and originall, But man is borne vnto trauaile, as the sparkes flie vpward. And this consideration the Apostle vseth as a singular consolation in that place, seeing God had not onely appointed vnto them all the afflictions which they did suffer, but also had herein made them conformable to his deare and onely Sonne; prescribing vnto them no other way to glory and happinesse, but that which his best beloued had gone before them. So the holy Apostle vseth the same argument of comfort vnto the afflicted Thessalonians, saying, that no man should bee moued with those afflictions, because themselues did know that they were appointed thereunto. And surely it is a singular consolation when wee consider that the miseries which we suffer, come not of themselues, or by chance or fortune, but by the determinate counsaile and appointment of God; nor are inflicted on vs at the command of some cruel Tyrant who hateth vs, or at the disposing of our arch-enemy the Deuill, who seeketh our destruction; but according to the most wise and just counsaile of our gracious God, from whom we haue our being, and all other blessings and benefits which we enjoy.

Rom. 8. 29.

Luke 24. 26.

Iob 5. 6.

Secondly, God is the principall efficient, and chiefe Authour of all our afflictions, as he doth execute this Decree both for the correction and triall of his seruants, or the just punishment of the wicked and vngodly. For so the Lord himselfe speaketh; I forme the light, and create darknesse; I make peace, and create euill, I the Lord doe all these things. And againe, Shall a Trumpet bee blowne in the City, and the people not be afraid? Or shall there be euill in a Citie, and the Lord hath not done it? And elsewhere; Behold now, for I am he, and there is no Gods with me: I kill and I giue life, I wound and I make whole; neither is there any that can deliuer out of mine hand. And with this agreeth the Song of Hannah: The Lord killeth and maketh aliue; bringeth downe to the graue, and raiseth vp, the Lord maketh poore, and maketh rich, bringeth low and exalteth. And the question of the afflicted Church in her Lamentations: Out of the mouth of the most high, proceedeth not euill and good? And thus the faithfull (whatsoeuer the inferiour causes and instruments haue beene of their afflictions) haue still acknowledged the Lord, to be the chiefe agent and principall cause of them. So Ioseph being betrayed by his brethren, saith that God had sent him into Egypt. And Naomi in her afflictions ascribeth them all to the will and worke of God; The almightie (saith she) hath giuen me much bitternesse, I went out full, and the Lord hath caused mee to returne empty. why call yee me Naomi seeing the Lord hath humbled me, and the Almighty hath brought me into aduersity. Thus Iob being spoyled by the Chaldeans and Sabeans saith, that the Lord had giuen, and the Lord had taken away: And holy Dauid being reuiled and cursed by wicked Shemei, acknowledgeth that God had sent him to curse him. So the afflicted Church saith: Come and let vs returne vnto the Lord, for he hath spoyled and he will heale vs, he hath wounded vs, and he will bind vs vp. And the Apostle Paul giueth it as a generall rule, that whatsoeuer the next causes and meanes of our afflictions be, yet when we are thus iudged, we are chastened of the Lord, because we should not be condemned with the world. The consideration whereof should serue much to confirme in vs patience and contentednesse in all our afflictions and tribulation; first because the Lord from whom they come is infinite in glory, power, and majesty, who hauing created vs of nothing may dispose also of vs according to his pleasure; for why should the clay murmure against the potter; the Seruant against his Master, the Subject against his Prince; or silly Wormes, yea dust and ashes against the glorious King of Heauen and Earth? Wee see that the same man who will not take an hard word from his equall, suffereth with patience a blow giuen vnto him by his King and Soueraigne; and standeth not to dispute with him why hee doth it, being ouer-awed with his power & majesty: But what are all the Princes of the World in glory, power and majesty, being compared with the great Iehouah King of Heauen and Earth? Who made of nothing this glorious frame of the World, the Sunne, Moone, and Starres, calling euery one by his Name; with all the huge hoast of the Creatures which inhabit the Heauens and the Ayre, the Earth and the great Deepes. Who measureth the earth with his span, and poyseth it as in a ballance, who vpholdeth all things by his Word, and ruleth them at his good pleasure. In whom we liue, and moue, and haue our being; so that if hee sustaine vs we continue, but if hee blow vpon vs we are presently destroyed, and returne againe vnto our dust. Who hath in his hand the keyes of Heauen and Hell, of life and death, shutting and no man openeth, and openeth and no man shutteth. Who sendeth out of his treasury the rame, haile and snow, the thunder and lightning, and both raiseth and stilleth the boysterous windes, causing at his pleasure both cruell tempests, & pleasant calmes. Who ruleth the great Behemoth and Leuiathan, and putting his hooke into his nosethrils, turneth him how he will. And this is that argument of power and majesty which Elihu first propoundeth, and God himselfe more fully insisteth vpon, to worke patience in Iob being grieuously afflicted, and to keep him from murmuring & repining. Secondly, we must with patience beare all our afflictions which come from God, not only because be

2. Sam. 16. 10.
Hos. 6. 1.
1. Cor. 11. 32.
Acts 17. 28.
Iob 2. 10. & 42.

is in Majesty glorious, and in power almighty, but also because he is just in all his iudgements, and righteous in all his wayes, as the Psalmist telleth vs. And therefore if he correct vs wee should beare his blowes, because his exact justice assureth vs, that he inflicteth no more than we haue deserued. If he taketh any good thing from vs which wee enjoy, Let vs know that he taketh nothing but what he gaue, and that not absolutely, and for euer, but onely to vse for a time, till he againe did call for it. And therefore seeing God taketh nothing but his owne; wee are not (as one well obserueth) when we are depriued of any benefit to say that wee haue lost it, but onely that wee haue restored it to the right owner. For as the Scriptures teach vs, euery good gift descendeth from the Father of lights; for as for vs, wee brought nothing into the World, and it is certaine that we can carry nothing out. So our Sauiour Christ teacheth vs in the Parable, that all the good things which we enjoy are but talents lent of God, which we must not vse at our owne pleasure, but to our Lord and Masters best aduantage; the which wee are to giue account of when he calleth vs to a reckoning, and patiently to restore them when hee is willing to resume them. And this made Iob when he was spoyled of all his goods to beare it patiently, because the Lord had taken them who before had giuen them. The Lord (saith hee) hath giuen, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the Name of the Lord. Thirdly, we are to beare all our crosses with patience seeing they come from God; not only because hee is powerfull and righteous, and therefore must & ought to be yeelded vnto; but also because he is the chiefe goodnesse, from whom there can come no euill, for whatsoeuer God doth, hee willeth, and whatsoeuer hee willeth is therefore good because he willeth it; & what is good ought also to be taken in good part; especially of those who would themselues be reputed good. For as one saith, hee onely is to be reputed good, who approueth himselfe so to be, by his piety towards God, namely, by bearing patiently whatsoeuer by his prouidence hapneth vnto him; because he knoweth that it is befalne him by the disposing of that diuine Law by which all is gouerned. To which purpose, elsewhere hee affirmeth, that it is the first part of diuine worship to beleeue God, and the next to ascribe vnto him due Majesty and goodnesse, without which there is no Majesty. To know that hee who ruleth the World, and tempereth and ordereth all things as his owne; and especially taketh care of mankind, yea, of euery particular person; neither doth nor hath any euill in him.

Psal. 119. 137.

Ex Epictet. Enchir. cap. 10. apud Stobeum, serm. 108. T. 2. Iames 1. 17.

1. Tim. 6. 7.

Matth. 25. 14. Luke 19. 12.

Iob 1. 21.

Senec. Epist. 76.

Epist. 95.

9. Sect. 3. That this consideration may

Yea, much more may we beare all our afflictions patiently, yea joyfully, if wee further consider that they proceed from God, who is not onely the chiefe goodnesse in his owne nature, but also in respect of vs the root and fountaine, from whom all goodnes doth grow and spring, in which regard one saith, that afflictions are bitter and sharpe arrowes shot from a sweet and mercifull hand. For he is our gracious Creatour, who hath giuen vnto vs our being when we were not, making vs men, when hee might haue made vs Serpents; and our carefull preseruer who sustaineth our liues, and ministreth vnto vs all the good things which we enjoy, & who may better chastize vs, than he who created vs? Who hath more right to correct and nurture vs, than he who feedeth and nurseth vs? Wee see that the most sauage beasts which will not endure the looke of a stranger, take stripes from their owner, who feedeth and tendeth them; and shall wee, more brutish than they, snarle and repine when the Lord, who not onely giueth vs food, but also maketh it nourishment, doth chastize vs for our good? He is our Generall and Commander; and euery good Souldier submitteth himselfe with patience to his Captaines Discipline; and with cheerefulnesse obeyeth all his commands, marching and incamping, watching and labouring, fighting and retiring, according to his appointment; and all for a trifling pay, and in a doubtfull hope of vncertaine victory, and shall not we yeeld the like, and greater obedience and submission to the Discipline of the great Commander of Heauen and Earth, who assureth vs that by following his directions, wee shall obtaine a glorious conquest, and of common Souldiers become crowned Kings. The Lord is our King and Soueraigne, vnto whom we are to yeeld absolute obedience; and therefore if earthly Princes punishing their subjects, judge them insolent if they repine, and rebellious if they resist, not enduring expostulation, or to haue their actions called to account though they be vnjust, and ayme more at their owne pleasure, than their profit: how shall we be acquitted if being corrected by God we impatiently murmure, and by vsing vnlawfull meanes to free our selues, as much as in vs lyeth, resist him in his most righteous judgements which are all disposed to our good, if we submit our selues vnto them; seeing by ruling vs thus on earth, hee fitteth vs to raigne with him in Heauen. He is our most skilfull and faithful Chirurgion and Physicion, who in all he doth, aymeth at the curing of our sicknesse, and the recouery of our health; and therefore when the working of the corrasiue, the fearing & searching of our wounds, the bitter pils and potions, which for the present make vs sick vnto death in our owne sense, would force vs in impatiency to cry out & complaine; let vs beare all with meeknesse and quietnesse, considering that in all this hee intendeth the cure, and that his loue would much com... vs, that all... afflictions come fro... him who i... chiefe fo... taine of a... good. Greg. Mag.

would not suffer him to vse these rougher and more distastfull remedies, if those which are more gentle and easie were as effectuall for our recouery. Finally, hee is our most gracious and louing Father who grieueth at our griefes, and euen earneth in pitty and compassion, when contrary to his owne nature, wee by our sinnes doe moue him to correct vs, and to doe this his strange worke, wherin hee taketh no pleasure, but onely out of his loue and wisedome is forced (in some manner) to take these seuere courses for our amendment, that hee may preserue vs from destruction. And therefore let vs beare with patience that which hee inflicteth, and say with our Sauiour, shall I not drinke of the cuppe which my Father hath giuen me? Hee is our eternall and heauenly Father, vnto whom we daily pray, that his name may bee hallowed; and how can it, according to our Prayers, be better sanctified and glorified, than when with patience and meekenesse wee submit our selues vnto his good pleasure, both in prosperitie and aduersity, and by assured affiance and resolued patience rest vpon his promises and prouidence, attending his pleasure and leasure for help and deliuerance? So we pray vnto him that his kingdome may come and bee aduanced; and how can this be better done, than when by his fatherly chastizements he destroyeth in vs the kingdome of sinne and Satan, and maketh vs tractable and obedient to his Lawes and gouernment? And finally, wee pray that his will may be done; and therefore when wee see it performed, why doe wee not willingly, yea joyfully submit our selues vnto it? Why doe we murmure and repine, struggle and striue against it through our impatiencie, and so proclaime our hypocrisie, increasing that which our judgement approueth not, and vnto which our heart assenteth not? Lastly, the Lord is our husband and Head; by vertue of which communion with him, as wee participate with him in all his graces and goodnesse, so he doth (after a sort) sympathize with vs in our sorrowes; and is more than our selues delighted with our welfare. Now who hauing a most carefull and louing husband would feare to receiue hurt from him? Or what member of the body would doubt of the care and prouidence of the wise Head, whereby it is ruled, or would impatiently complaine of hard vsage, though it should finde and approue of some rough and painfull curies, whereby it might bee cured of some infirmities? And how much lesse should we murmure & repine against God, and his prouidence, who infinitely excelleth in wisedome and loue, all heads and husbands? Or how can wee doubt of receiuing from him helpe, deliuerance, freedome from euill, or fruition of good; whose mercy is so vnmeasurable, and goodnesse vnspeakable; that hee spared not to giue his onely and best beloued Sonne to the death, euen the bitter death of the crosse for vs, when we were strangers, yea enemies vnto him? What will hee deny vnto vs thus neerely allyed, and being now become friends, yea Sonnes, and which is more, spouses, yea members of his glorious body, who gaue his blessed selfe vnto vs and for vs, when we were so much estranged, and so farre at odds? And these and such like were the meditations, which moued the Saints in former times to beare their afflictions with patience and comfort, seeing they looked not so much to their crosses, as to the hand of God by which they were imposed. So Ezechias looking to the Lord from whom his affliction came, cryeth out, What shall I say? for he hath said it to me, and he hath done it. Esa. 38. 15.
And Dauid professeth, that he was dumbe, and opened not his mouth, because he saw that the Lord had done it. So looking rather to Gods righteous iudgement, than to his Sonnes wicked malice, pursuing him; and espying Gods iust displeasure, through proud Absalons vniust and rebellious fury; hee submitteth himselfe with patience to bee afflicted at his good pleasure; But if (saith he) hee thus say, I haue no delight in thee; Behold here am I, let him doe to me, as seemeth good in his eyes. Psal. 39. 9. 2. Sam. 15. 26.

Vnto which measure of patience if wee would attaine, wee must learne to imitate this example; not looking to the inferiour causes and subordinate meanes, by which our crosses are immediatly imposed, but vnto the Lord our God, who is the chiefe and supreame cause of all our afflictions. For if wee haue no eye to God, who is the first mouer and principall agent; but looke onely to the inferiour and next meanes; there will bee no place for patience, seeing the malignitie of the instruments will poyson our sores of impatiencie and repining, and so make them the more to fester and rankle, not suffering the wholesome salues of afflictions, which is soueraigne and profitable, as it commeth purely from Gods hand to be effectuall for our humiliation, and the cure of our corruption: But will cause vs to fret and fume more at the circumstances, which wee are ready wittily to aggrauate for our owne greater torment and vexation, than at the matter and substance of the afflictions themselues. Thus sometime when we could well beare the crosse it selfe, as it is sent from God, wee make it intolerable, and so fall into most impotent impatiencie, when being inflicted vpon vs by the meanes of some worldly enemie, wee looke vpon his malice, cruelty, and proud insolencie in the carriage of the matter, and not vnto the Lord, who therein aymeth at our good, humbling vs

9. Sect. 4. That if wee would haue patience in afflictions, we must not looke only to inferiour causes, but principally vnto God the supreame cause of them.

by his chastizements, and by these trials enriching vs with his spirituall graces. And much more doe wee aggrauate the burthen when it is laide vpon vs by the treacherie, neglect, or vnkind dealing of some friend of whom wee haue deserued well, and therefore least of all suspected to haue receiued from him such hard measure. Or when it befalleth vs through our owne default, negligence, or want of prouidence; in which case wee adde vnto it the waight of many criminations, and oftentimes false accusations against our selues, as though it were not heauie enough in it selfe to presse vs downe, vnlesse wee added thereunto the loade of bitter inuectiues against our owne negligence, and of sharpe censures for our owne faultinesse, as being the cause which hath brought vpon vs these crosses and calamities. All which motiues and enticements vnto impatiencie if we would auoide, wee must not looke to inferiour causes and meanes whereby our crosses are imposed; for this is all one, as if wee should regard onely the staffe which giueth vs the blow, and neglect the smiter who ruleth it; and like the foolish curre to bite at the stone which hit and hurt vs, not regarding him who threw it at vs; but wee must lift vp the eyes of our mind aboue the Earth vnto Heauen, and consider that the Lord is the chiefe cause of all our afflictions, and like a just iudge vseth wicked enemies, false friends, the dumbe creatures, as also our owne improuidence and negligence, as the executioners of his righteous iudgements, and inferiour instruments, whereby hee serueth his most wise prouidence, effecting by these meanes his owne purposes for the aduancing of his glory, and the good and saluation of the elect and faithfull. And thus did Ioseph arme himselfe with patience, when passing by the malice of his brethren, who sold him into Egypt; hee looketh to the supreame cause, and considereth that God for his owne glory, and the good of his Church, had sent him thither. Whereas if he had looked no higher but to their wicked treacherie and cruell spite, hee could neuer haue vsed that meekenesse and moderation; but rather hauing gotten opportunitie would in stead of comforting, haue insulted ouer them, and onely thought of taking sharpe reuenge. So Iob retaineth patience in his grieuous affliction, because he had an eye to the chiefe cause, which was the hand of God correcting him; the Lord (saith he) hath giuen, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed bee the name of the Lord. Whereas if his thoughts had mounted no higer than these inferiour instruments which the Lord vsed, as the malice of his enemies, and the theft and violence of the Chaldeans and Sabeans, hee would wholy haue beene transported with desire of reuenge, and burst out into all impatiencie, if being shorned of meanes, hee could not attaine vnto his will. And Dauid likewise being exceedingly prouoked by wicked Shemei, doth with admirable resolution beare all his outragious injuries meekely and patiently, and when but by speaking the word, hee might haue had all his wrongs reuenged, looking not so much to this wicked instrument, as to the just hand of God, who vsed him for the correcting of his sinne, hee would not yeeld to his owne passion, and his friends prouocations exciting him to giue way to the deserued punishment of his malicious enemie, but rather reproueth them for making the motion: What (saith he) haue I to doe with you, you Sonnes of Zeruiah? for he curseth euen because the Lord hath bidden him to curse Dauid. Who dare then say, wherefore hast thou done so? Whereas if hee had onely regarded the malice, insolencie, and notorious outrage of this lewd person, he would haue beene impatient of these indignities, and the first man that would haue laide hands vpon him for the reuenging of these wrongs. Finally, our Sauiour Christ himselfe doth not in those intolerable injuries which were offered vnto him, looke vnto the treachery of Iudas, the malice of the Priests and Pharisies, nor to the corruption and injustice of Pilate and Herod, but hee considereth of all his afflictions, as of a cup put into his hand to drinke by his heauenly Father, and so forbidding his Apostles to take reuenge, he doth with meekenesse and patience suffer all, and without grudging and repining drinketh vp the very dregs of this bitter potion. Which notable presidents, if wee propound vnto our selues for our imitation, then will we not in distempered passion and vnbridled fury, storme and rage against the meanes and instruments of our crosses and afflictions, not in burning desire thirst after reuenge, seeking to ease our griefes by requitall of those wrongs vpon our enemies, which they haue offered vnto vs; but rather with our Sauiour, wee will pray for them that persecute vs, saying, Father, forgiue them, for they know not what they doe; for whilest they onely aime at their owne designes, and to atcheiue their malicious ends; they vnwittingly and vnwillingly serue the prouidence of God in executing his righteous iudgements, and correcting the faults of his children and seruants, yea in truth they serue also the faithfull themselues, euen whilest they seeme to insult and tyrannize ouer them; being vsed by God as bug-beares, to make his children to flee vnto him, as fires to purifie them from their drosse, as files to scower them from the rust of their corruptions; and as rodds to correct their faults, and to reclaime

Gen. 45. 5. 8. 50. 20. Psal 105. 17.

Iob 1. 21.

2. Sam. 16.

Iob. 18. 11.

claime & amend them for the time to come. To which purpose one saith, that the wicked man, as a foole euen in ruling doth serue the wise and vertuous, and whilest he presseth him downe, aduanceth him to a better state, herein like vnto seruants, who being made ouerseers and teachers to their yong masters in their none-age for their instruction and education, doe keepe them vnder and correct them; and yet notwithstanding all this, they are their seruants still; because they are ordained to this vse, that they may serue their young masters, whilest they profit them by their beating: and therefore, because the tyrannie and ill vsage of the wicked towards the good, doth purge them whilest they afflict them, euen their power doth serue for the profit of the just. In which respect wee haue little cause to be furious in our anger against these instruments of our afflictions, seeing they are so ouerruled by God, that wee haue by them great profit and benefit; all the hurt redounding to themselues; for whilest like rodds they serue our heauenly Father to chastize and amend vs themselues are torne in peeces, worne to stumpes, and being no longer fit for this vse are cast into the fire. In which respect one saith, that when traps are laid for vs by our enemies, and injuries offered; wee doe not suffer injury, but they that do it. For the Lord hath said, that the soule that sinneth, shall die; and he hath sinned, who hath done the euill, and not hee who hath borne and suffered it; and therefore let vs not reuenge these injuries; for then (like them who hurt vs) we shall with the seely Bees, by stinging them, loose our owne liues. And as we must not bee enraged against these instruments of our griefe; so much lesse must wee in our troubles and afflictions sue vnto them for ease and deliuerance; for as the malefactor doth not sue vnto the executioner, but onely vnto the Iudge, who hath sole power to pardon, reprieue or hang him; so must not we put vp our petitions and supplications to these executioners of Gods righteous iudgements; but haue our recourse by humble prayer to the Lord chiefe-Iustice of heauen and earth, who hath power in his hand to restraine their power, and to bridle their malice that they cannot hurt vs.

CHAP. VII.

That all our afflictions are ruled and disposed by Gods most wise, just and gracious prouidence; and of the comfort which ariseth from the consideration.

THus hauing I shewed that the Lord is the principall and chiefe [illegible] of our afflictions, both as hee doth ordaine vs vnto them; and also as he hath the chiefe hand in executing this decree. But besides both these, the Lord is the chiefe authour and agent in all our afflictions, as hee doth by his wise and powerfull prouidence rule and dispose of them, maugre the malice and might of all our enemies, so as they shall all turne to his owne glory, and our spirituall and euerlasting good. Neither are wee fondly to imagine that the Lord created his creatures, and then left them to the ordering and ruling either of themselues, or vnto fate, chance and blind fortune; but he doth by the same wisedome and power gouerne and dispose them according to his owne good pleasure; so that howsoeuer they oftentimes transgresse and violate his will reuealed; yet they neuer crosse or hinder his secret will and counsaile, but in all things, notwithstanding their malice and opposition, he maketh them serue his prouidence, directing them vnto those ends for which they were created. Nor doth the Lord only thus rule his chiefest creatures, or those which are inferiour, at some times, or vpon some waighty occasions; but this all-seeing and all-ruling prouidence of God, doth extend it selfe to the ruling and gouerning of the meanest, euen of the seely sparrowes, yea of a worthlesse haire, so as without his direction and appointment they cannot light or fall vpon the ground, as our Sauiour speaketh. From which consideration ariseth singular comfort vnto all the faithfull; for if nothing befalleth the most contemptible creatures, but by the wise guidance and appointment of their creatour; then how much lesse vnto men (the noblest peece of this worldly workmanship) who are worth many thousands of them, yea vnto his faithfull seruants and children, who exceed in his valuation many thousands of other men? and this is that argument of consolation which our Sauiour vseth to comfort his disciples, and to arme their patience against those persecutions, crosses and calamities, which should afterwards betide them for the profession of his name. Are not two sparrowes (saith hee) sould for a farthing, and one of them shall not fall to the ground without your Father, yea and all the haires of your head are numbred. Feare yee not therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrowes. But as Gods prouidence doth extend it selfe in most especiall manner vnto the faithfull aboue all other men, so aboue all other times, in the time of their afflictions, according to his gracious promise; he shall call vpon mee, and I will heare him, I will be with him in trouble, I will deliuer him and glorifie him. And that the Lord taketh speciall knowledge of the afflictions of his people that hee might deliuer them; I haue surely seene (saith he) the trouble of my people which are in Egypt, and haue heard and especially man, so as nothing happeneth vnto him but by his appointment.

Matth. 10. 29. 30. 31.

Psalm. 91. 15.

Exod. 3. 7.

heard their crie because of their taske-masters; for I know their sorrowes; therefore I am come downe to deliuer them. With which meditation the afflicted Church comforteth her selfe in all her troubles and miseries: O Lord (saith shee) thou hast seene my wrong, iudge thou my cause. Thou hast seene all their vengeance, and all their deuises against me, &c.

§. Sect. 2. That Gods prouidence doth rule all the inferiour causes of our afflictions; and first such as are vnreasonable.

Yea the Lord doth in his wise prouidence, not onely looke vnto, rule and dispose of the afflictions themselues which befall the faithfull, but of all the causes and circumstances, their ends and issues, manner, measure, and time of their continuance. For as for the causes of all afflictions, they are all subordinate vnto him who is the supreame and principall cause, and serue but as inferiour meanes and instruments to effect his will and pleasure. For the better vnderstanding whereof, wee are to know; that there is in nature a concatenation, interlinking and chaining of causes together, whereby inferiour causes are so subordinate one to another, as that they all hold their subordination vnto God, who is the first and principall cause; whereof it commeth to passe, that as one of them cannot worke and moue without the helpe of the next cause vnto which it is subordinate, as for example, fruites cannot nourish vs, vnlesse the Earth nourish them, neither can the Earth bring them forth, vnlesse the Sunne shine and the raine fall vpon them: so none of them can moue or worke, but by that vertue which they receiue from God, the first and chiefe cause, whereby they are inabled to produce all their actions and operations. In regard whereof all the effects and actions of secondary causes (being considered simply in themselues without their poyson and malignity of sin) are not so properly the effects of them, as of that cause which is first and principall. As for example wee cannot so properly say, that our meate doth nourish vs, or clothes keepe vs warme, or that the Sun doth lighten vs, or our friends prouide for vs; as that God doth all these things by them, namely as the chiefe cause working by his instruments. And although these effects be properly and fitly attributed to their next and immediate causes; yet more fitly and properly may wee say, that God doth by them nourish, warme, lighten and prouide for vs, seeing from him alone they haue all their vertue and efficacy, without which they could doe nothing. For as the Scribe is more properly said to write, than the Pen, and he that maketh and keepeth the clocke is more properly said to make it goe and strike, than the wheeles and peyzes that hang vpon it, and euery workman to effect his worke, rather than the tooles which he vseth, as his instruments: So the Lord who is the chiefe agent and first mouer in all actions, may more fitly and properly bee said to effect and to bring to passe all things which are done in the Earth, than any inferiour or subordinate causes, seeing they are all but his tooles and instruments, which cannot moue of themselues, but as they are ruled and guided by the power and prouidence of this heauenly workeman. And thus the Lord vseth all his creatures both vnreasonable and reasonable to serue his prouidence in the afflicting and chastizing of his Children. Of the former sort the examples are innumerable like vnto the huge hoast of the creatures themselues; for thus the Lord vseth the Fire and Water, the infection of the ayre, the barrennes of the Earth, the windes and weather, raine, drought, frosts and mildeawes; the wild and bruite creatures; and that not onely the sauage Beasts which excell in strength, and are armed by nature to doe hurt; but euen the seely flyes, grashoppers, canker-wormes, and caterpillers as the Lord threatneth, and the Prophet Ioel sheweth. In which regard, howsoeuer these crosses inflicted by these vnreasonable creatures are of all others most vncomfortable, because, as it is said of Fire and Water, so may it of the rest, that they haue no mercy, seeing their fury is not mitigated by yeelding, their pitty not moued by complaining, nor their destroying force stayed by our intreating and perswading; yet in this haue the faithfull sufficient consolation, when they consider, that these no lesse than the other are Gods instruments for the effecting of his will, and but as rods in the hand of our heauenly Father, which are content (as it were) to bee sawed and torne in peeces in vexing and tormenting vs, if it bee the pleasure of him that made and ruleth them; yet cannot of themselues giue vs one blow or stripe, but as they are moued by Gods will and power, as wee may see in the preseruation of the Israelites from the plagues of Egypt, and from being ouerwhelmed by the mercilesse Sea; in the preseruing of the three Children in the fiery furnace, Daniel, in the Lyons den, and of Paul from the mortall sting of the cruell Viper.

Dan. 3. Ioel. 1.

§. Sect. 3. That Gods prouidence doth rule the inferiour causes which are reasonable, and so the good or euill Angels

The like also may be said of the reasonable creatures, which howsoeuer they may seeme at their owne will and pleasure to afflict and punish vs; yet is both their will and power so ouerruled, limited and ouermastered, by the al-gouerning power and prouidence of God, that they cannot goe one foot beyond their tether, but when they are come to the vtmost bonds of their permitted liberty, there, will they, nill they, they must make a stand, and howsoeuer they may fling and kicke to shew their spite and malice, yet their power is so curbed and re-restrained, that they cannot beyond their allowed limits doe vs any harme. And thus the Lord ruleth, as his instruments in our afflictions, both Angels and men; and that both good and bad. For howsoeuer the good and holy Angels are Gods willing ministers, to watch ouer and guard the faithfull in all dangers, and his ready messengers to conueigh vnto them his blessings and benefits; yet when the Lord their Master and commander is pleased to vse them as his instruments in afflicting and correcting them, they are prest to doe his will. Howbeit they haue their commission which they must obserue, their time appointed when to begin, and when to make an end, and the very number and measure of their blowes that they are to giue, which they neither can nor will exceed. An example whereof wee haue in the destroying Angell smiting the Israelites with the plague and pestilence; who continued the execution of Gods judgements till the Lord restrained him, but no sooner doth the Lord command him to cease, but presently he sheatheth his sword of vengeance, and desisteth from doing any further harme. So the Lord, intending to plague Ierusalem by the ministery of an Angell, first giueth commission to another Angell that he should set a marke vpon the foreheads of them that did mourne, and cry for all the abhominations that were done in the middest thereof; and then biddeth the destroying Angell to goe through the Citie and smite, neither sparing nor pitying any, olde or young, maids or children, but with all chargeth him not so much as to touch a man, who by his marke was exempted from the common calamity and destruction. And thus the fower Angels who had power giuen them to hurt the Earth and the Sea, are restrained from the execution of their commission, till the seruants of God were marked in their foreheads. Neither doth the Lord thus order and dispose by his wise and powerfull prouidence the good Angels only, who being his Seruants take their chiefe delight in doing his will; but also he doth often vse, and by the same wise prouidence dispose of, the wicked Angels and Diuels, as his instruments for the afflicting of his faithfull Children. And when they thinke of nothing lesse than of doing his will, glorifying his name, or doing good to his Saints and Seruants; but contrariwise wholy ayme at Gods dishonour and their destruction: euen then he ouerruleth them by his powerfull prouidence, and maketh them (maugre their malice) to effect his will, and to serue him vnto those ends for which he imployeth them. In which respect one well saith, that though the will of Sathan bee alwayes wicked, yet his power is neuer vnjust, because hee hath his will from himselfe, but his power from God, and therefore what hee vnlawfully affecteth to doe, that God will not suffer to bee done but justly and lawfully. And this is the cause why the spirit which vexed Saul is called the euill spirit, and the Spirit of the Lord, namely the Spirit of the Lord, in respect of that just power which was granted vnto him by God; and the euill spirit in regard of the desire of his vnjust and malitious will. And thus hee vsed Satan in afflicting Iob for the triall of his patience, that it might bee crowned with the greater glory; when as the Deuill aimed at nothing lesse, but onely sought to cause Iob by these afflictions to blaspheme God vnto his face. And thus hee gaue him from time to time his commission which hee could not passe. And so the Lord telleth the Angell of the Church of the Smyrnians, that the Deuill should cast some of them into prison; but willeth them to be of good comfort because it was not at his owne pleasure, but at Gods appointment, who foretold them of these afflictions; not as long as he list but onely for tenne dayes, which was the time limited by God: not that hee might hereby attaine vnto his owne malitious end; which was, that they might be destroyed, but that he might further and aduance Gods end, namely that being tryed and found faithfull they might obtaine the crowne of life. And therefore howsoeuer there can be nothing more terrible and fearefull than to know that Satan who hath beene a murtherer from the beginning, and an ancient enemy of mankind, exceeding vs so much in power, and hauing his power so much exceeded by his malice, should be the next and immediate cause of our afflictions; yet when we consider with all, that he is but a bare instrument in the hand of God, which by his power and prouidence he turneth and withdeth at his good pleasure; and alwayes forceth him, whether he will or no, to serue for the aduancing of his owne glory, and the spirituall good and euerlasting saluation of his elect, there is in this meditation sufficient cause to expell all feare and horror, and matter enough of patience and consolation.

Apoc. 2. 10.

Finally the Lord thus ruleth and ouerruleth all the intentions and actions of wicked men, when he vseth them as his instruments for the the afflicting of his Seruants; so as they cannot begin to hurt them but by his permission; nor continue to vexe and molest them longer than the appointed time. And when they ayme at nothing else but the disgorging of their spite, the inlarging of their rule and soueraignty, and the inriching of themselues with the spoyle; the Lord aymeth at the good of the faithful, and with these chastisements humbleth them by vnfained repentance, that they may not bee con-

Q. Sect. 4. That Gods prouidence ouerruleth the actions and intentions of wicked men: and of the cõforts which arise from this consideration.

condemned with the World. And thus the Lord vsed the Chaldæans and Sabæans as his instruments for the afflicting of Iob; Saul, Shemei and Absalon, for the chastizing of Dauid; Nebuchadnezzar, the Babilonians and Assyrians for the correcting of his people Israell. In which regard hee calleth him his seruant whom hee had appointed to this worke; and affirmeth that hee was but as a rod in his hand, wherewith hee did visit their sinnes, and execute his righteous judgements. Esa.10 5.6: O Assur (saith hee) the rod of my wrath: and the staffe in their hands is mine indignation; I will send him to a dissembling nation, and I will giue him a charge against the people of my wrath to take the spoile, and to take the pray, and to tread them vnder feete like the mire in the streete. And not to insist vpon more examples; thus he vsed the Scribes, Priests and Pharisies, Iudas, Caiphas and Pilate, for the afflicting and killing of his onely Sonne, that his death might be the price of our redemption. In which respect our Sauiour is called the Lamb slaine from the beginning of the World, namely, in Gods eternall decree and purpose; and the Apostle Peter plainely affirmeth, that he was deliuered into their hands by the determinate counsell and foreknowledge of God to bee crucified and slaine. And howsoeuer these wicked instruments which the Lord vseth for the chastizing of his Seruants, Acts 2.23. ayme at nothing lesse than the effecting of his will and aduancing of their good; yet doth hee by his wise prouidence alwayes so ouerrule them, that they serue for these purposes; and though they intend their ruine and euen thirst for their destruction; yet when they haue, as Gods instruments effected his worke he curbeth and restraineth their power and malice, so as they cannot goe one iot further than hee hath appointed them. Though at all times they are alike set vpon mischiefe, and continually vpon all occasions breath out their malice and reuenge; yet onely then they haue power to touch the children of God, when hee permitteth them for his owne glory and their good. Gen.31. 29. As wee may see in the example of Laban, who implicitely confesseth that hee pursued Iacob to doe him mischiefe, but could not because God by a dreame had forbidden him. Esa.37.29. In Senacherib, who came purposely to destroy Ierusalem, but could not effect his will, because the Lord put his hooke in his nosethrils, and led him backe from whence hee came. In Saul, who oftentimes practised to take away Dauids life, yet was neuer able, not that hee wanted worldly power to effect his will, but because the Lord ouerruled him by his prouidence, so as he could not hurt him. By all which and innumerable other examples it appeareth that wicked men are but the Lords instruments, who correct his Children when he pleaseth, but cannot so much as touch them till he permitteth them. And with this argument the Lord by vision encourageth Paul to the worke of the ministrie. Feare not (saith he) but speake and holde not thy peace; for I am with thee, and no man shall lay hands on thee to hurt thee. Act.18.9.10. The consideration whereof serueth for the singular consolation of the faithfull in their affliction; for when (as it vsually commeth to passe) they are more vexed with the sight of their enemies pride, tyrannie and cruell insolencie, than with the sense of the euils which they suffer from them; and are more troubled and frighted with the apprehension of those dangerous effects, which their malicious rage may produce for the time to come; than with all their miseries either past or present; then they are to remember, that these wicked men can doe nothing by their owne absolute will and power; but that they are wholy at Gods disposition, as being inferiour instruments of this supreame and chiefe cause, by whom hee correcteth them, not according to their malicious lusts, to their ruine and destruction; but according to his owne wise and iudicious pleasure, for their spirituall good, and the eternall saluation of their soules. Then they must call to minde that these impious worldlings are but the slaues and Seruants of our heauenly Father, whom he hath appointed to correct vs for our faults; and although they much maligne and be at enmitie with vs; yet wee shall receiue no hurt hereby; seeing our gracious Father standeth by and will not suffer them to torment vs at their owne wils, but appointeth the number of stripes, and the measure of our correction, which notwithstanding all their malice, they cannot exceed, nor enlarge their crueltie aboue that which is permitted vnto them.

Yet but why doth not the Lord correct his Seruants rather by his owne hand, than by the hand of a stranger, or an enemie? And why doth he not let his chastizements come purely from himselfe, or by the meanes of innocent creatures, or righteous men, executing his just judgements by just instruments, rather than by wicked and vngodly men; who infuse into them the poyson of their maliciousnesse, embitter them with their gaule and spleene, and pollute and defile them with their corruption? To which I answere; that the execution of punishment in it selfe, being a seruile thing, doth not so fully agree with the nature of God, who being the chiefe goodnesse, taketh his chiefe delight in doing good, and in communicating himselfe vnto his creatures; neither doth hee willingly punish vs, but that wee inforce it vpon his justice by our sins; whereof it is, that when the Lord doth execute Lament. 3.

his

his iudgements, he is said by his Prophet, to doe his strange worke, and his strange act. And therefore, because it is not familiar and delightfull vnto his nature, he doth it not by himselfe, but commonly allotteth it to the Deuill and wicked men, who are the fittest to be his executioners, as being naturally disposed to hurt and destroy. Euen as among men it is an vsuall thing for the righteous Iudge to vse wicked and base wretches, for the executing of his just sentence vpon malefactors, who haue deserued punishment; with whom notwithstanding hee doth not at all communicate in their bloudy cruelty and spitefull malice, which they sometimes exercise towards the persons executed. Neither doth it all disparage, or any whit detract from Gods iustice and goodnesse, that the wickednesse of sinfull and vngodly men is intermixed with the execution of his righteous iudgements; but doth rather magnifie his wisdome and power, in that hee can bring good out of euill, and light out of darknesse; effecting his just designes by wicked instruments, contrary to their nature and intention. For as it doth much commend the exquisite skill of the workman, when as hee can worke curiously with bad tooles; and the art of the Physician, who of the flesh of the Viper can make soueraigne Methridate, and change this malignant poyson into an wholsome preseruatiue and counterpoyson; and as the power & wisdome of some great Commander doth gloriously shine; when as hee cannot only vanquish his enemies; but also make them fight on his owne side, and become his instruments of conferring good vpon his owne Souldiers: So what can more magnifie the wisdome, goodnesse and power of God, than that he should be able to perfect the faire and straight works of his righteous iudgments, by these crooked and crabbed instruments? Than to make the vipe-rous generation of wicked men to serue for wholsome preseruatiues, which keepe his seruants from the contagious infection of sinne? And so to conquer these enemies of his glory and our saluation with his diuine power, and ouer-rule them by his wisdome, as that they shall in despite of all their pride and malice, serue his children for their spirituall vse and benefit; and being themselues wicked and euill, helpe to aduance them to a higher degree of grace and goodnesse? And this is one cause why the Lord thinketh it fitter to serue his owne prouidence of wicked men, that hee may bring good out of euill, than not to permit any euill at all.

And vnto this wee may adde, that as the Lord by vsing these wicked instruments for the chastizing of his children, doth manifest his mercy and goodnesse, in making them serue for the aduancement of their good; so doth he make way for the manifestation of his iustice, whilest hee giueth these wicked men vp to the exercising of their owne malicious and cruell lusts in the chastizements of his seruants, whom they vniustly hate and maligne; that so hee may after hee hath punished one sinne with another, make way for deserued vengeance, and take occasion justly to increase their punishments in this life, and their more fearefull condemnation in the life to come. For as the wise and louing Father hauing reformed his childe by correction, and made him respectiue and carefull in the performance of all good duties; doth to giue him contentment, and assurance of his loue and clemencie, vpon the continuance of his good courses, cast the worne rod which is past vse into the middest of the fire: So doth the Lord cast these wicked instruments, which are (as hee calleth them) the rods of his wrath, into the fire of destruction, when hee hath no further vse of them for the chastizement of his children, that so they may the more securely rejoyce in the assurance of the loue of their heauenly Father, and in the ruine and ouerthrow of his & their enemies. So the Lord threatneth that when he had accomplished all his worke vpon Mount Sion and Ierusalem, he would visit the fruit of the proud heart of the King of Ashur, and his glorious and proud lookes, sending among his fat men leannesse, and kindling vnder his glory a burning, like the burning of fire. The like iudgement is denounced against proud Babylon, that because when the Lord being wrath with his people, did pollute his inheritance, and giue them into their hand, shee did shew no mercy vnto them, but did lay her very heauy yoke vpon the ancient, therefore hee would bring vpon her suddenly in one day, the losse of children and widowhood, that is, desolation, and shamefull dishonour. And thus the Lord professeth, that he was greatly angry with the careless Heathen, in that when hee was angry with his people but a little, they helped forward the affliction.

In their destruction, when there is no further vse of them.

Esay 10. 12, 16.

Esay 47. 6, 9. Zach. 1. 15.

Yea, but how can the Lord in iustice so seuerely punish wicked men for afflicting of his children, seeing they are but his instruments, which haue done that onely which he appointed them? I answere, that this serueth nothing for their excuse, nor doth any thing at all extenuate their faultinesse; for howsoeuer they in afflicting Gods seruants doe the secret will of God, which no creature in Heauen or Earth is able to withstand; this maketh nothing for them, seeing this hidden will was neuer propounded as a rule vnto which they should conforme their actions: but the Lord hath giuen vnto vs the knowledge of his will reuealed in his Word, vnto which hee requireth conformity and obedience. And by this they are enjoyned to loue the faithfull aboue all others, and by all good meanes to seeke the aduancing of their good; whereas contrariwise they doe hate them so much much the more, afflicting and persecuting them euen for this thing aboue all others, because they are of the houshold of faith, and of Gods own Family; who make conscience of their wayes, and will not run with them into the same excesse of riot. Neither do they at all ayme at Gods end, or euer thinke of effecting his counsailes and secret wil; but they only labour to effect their owne malicious designes, and to accomplish their owne wils, whereby they desire to glut their cruelty, and to aduance themselues out of the ruine of Gods seruants. So the Lord saith, that whereas in his secret counsaile, he sent the King of Ashur against his people to afflict them for their sins, He thought of nothing lesse; neither did his heart esteeme it so; but he only imagined to destroy and cut off not a few Nations; that he might make all his Princes Kings; and so himselfe a mighty Monarch. Thus it was the will of God to afflict Dauid by wicked instruments, as hee also reuealed it vnto him by his Prophet; but they neuer once dreamed of doing that which God had decreed; for Absalon aymeth at the satisfying his ambition by vsurping the Kingdome; Achitophel at the making of the people more bold and resolute in following of Absalon against his Father, when by his abominable fact all hope of reconciliation betweene them, should be quite cut off; and Shemei ayned at nothing but at the easing of his spleene, and disgorging his malice by his rayling and reuiling. Finally, it was the will of God that his Son should die for the redemption of mankinde; but those wicked instruments which were vsed for that purpose, neuer so much as thought of accomplishing this will of God. But the Priests, Scribes, and Pharisies sought in all their proceedings to establish their owne estates, to maintaine their reputation among the people, and withall to reuenge themselues and satisfie their malice against our Sauiour, who by discouering their hypocrisie blemished their glory, and wrought them out of the fauour of the people. And so Iudas ayned at a little gaine, and to enrich himselfe with the price of bloud. And Pilate feared the losse of his place by offending Cæsar, or to haue in it those inconueniences which might befall him by displeasing the people. In all which respects, as the sinne of these wicked instruments towards God is not at all extenuated, by their executing of his hidden counsell, seeing they doe it not in obedience vnto God, but (being ouer-ruled by his prouidence) whether they will or not: so doth it nothing at all lessen their wrongs and injuries against the faithfull, in that they are but bare instruments, and the Lord the supreame and principall cause of all their afflictions, seeing whereas he ayneth in them at their spirituall good and saluation, these wicked men doe all they doe out of malice and hatred, and that to the end, that they may hereby bring them to ruine.

Q. Sect. 7. How it will stand with Gods iustice to punish wicked men, for hauing beene his instruments in executing his iudgements.

Esay 10.7,8.

2. Sam. 12.

And in this regard as they are not to look wholy vnto them who are but the instruments, nor to respect onely their malicious purposes and designes; but to haue their eyes fixed principally vpon God who is the supreame cause, and vpon those excellent ends at which hee ayneth in these their chastisements and corrections; so neither are they wholy to neglect them; but as in receiuing benefits we doso acknowledge the Lord to be the principall author and fountaine of them; as that we do not forget to render due thanks and respect vnto those, whom he vseth as the instruments of our good: so in all our afflictions which are imposed vpon vs by the meanes of these wicked men; as wee are to looke vnto the Lord, the supreame cause of them, that hereby humility and patience may be wrought in vs; so we are also to looke vnto the wicked men themselues, as instruments and meanes of our crosses and miseries; hating (though not their persons yet) their malice, rage and cruelty; and vsing all good and lawfull meanes, which either the Word of God or spirituall wisdome can suggest vnto vs, whereby wee may crosse them in their wicked purposes, and free our selues from their injuries and oppressions; hauing herein the Word of God for our warrant, which enjoyneth vs to vse all honest courses for our preseruation, the repelling of injuries and the aduancing of our owne good; as also to hate all euill and injustice whersoeuer we find it; whether it be directed against our selues or any other: and the Saints of God for our precedents, as Moses, Dauid, Ezechias, the Apostles, yea, our Sauiour Christ himselfe, as might be shewed by many instances, if it were not in it selfe cleere and euident. So that howsoeuer in diuers afflictions we are to looke only to the hand of God, which doth vse inferiour causes as meanes and instruments to inflict his judgements and chastisements, hauing in themselues no malignity nor will to hurt vs, as when hee causeth the Aire to infect vs, the water to drowne vs, the fire to burne vs; in which cases wee are not to blame the creatures which are priuiledged from malice and sinne, and are but Gods bare instruments for the effecting of his will: yet when hee vseth wicked men for his instruments, as wee are chiefly to looke vnto the hand of God, so we are to haue some respect vnto them in regard of that malignity and sin which is in them, whereby they desire our hurt and destruction. For in all afflictions wee are to consider not onely the action and worke as it is simply naturall, and the disposition of them to the manifestation of Gods glory, and our good, in which respect God is the chiefe Author of them; but also an accidentall con-confusion & malignity of the action; which is wholy to be ascribed to mans corruption by whom it is performed; the former whereof being good and just wee are to like, loue and imbrace; the other wee are to hate and flee as being vnjust, corrupt and wicked.

And thus it appeareth that the Lord who is the chiefe & supreame cause of all our afflictions, doth so gouerne & ouerrule all secondary & inferiour causes & means by his most wise and powerfull prouidence, that when they seeme most to oppose against him, they doe but effect that which hee willeth and hath purposed to be done. Whereupon it also followeth that as he disposeth at his pleasure of the causes themselues, so also of all their ends, making them all serue to the furthering of his ends, which are the supreame & chiefe of all, as namely his owne glory, and saluation of his Elect; and that when they seeme to looke another way,, and to bee not onely opposite to his purposes, but also infinitely contrary one vnto another. And as the Planets haue euery one their owne motion in their proper Orbe differing from all the rest, and most of all from the motion of the primum mobile, or that which is first mooued, but yet contrary to their owne motion are ouer-ruled and daily carried with it; and as a man walking on the top of the hatches a contrary way to the motion of the ship, doth notwithstanding goe that way which it goeth, because he is moued with it: so when the motion of our wils doth exceedingly vary the one from the other, and all seeme to driue to a contrary end than that at which God aymeth; yet are they all so ouer-ruled by his power and prouidence, in whom wee liue, moue and haue our being; that at last wee meete together, and bend that way whether he intendeth. All which is brought to passe after an vnknowne manner and by such hidden courses, that we know not whither wee goe, much lesse are wee acquainted with the motions of others, carrying them to the same mayn end; like vnto many riuers, which by diuers and contrary wayes, run naturally and freely in their owne current vnto the mayne Ocean, and yet neuer thinke whither they goe, and much lesse of their meeting in the same Sea. And thus all the ends of the King of Assur, and all his army were by God directed to that mayne end of chastising his people and punishing the wicked and rebellious; although (as the Lord plainly affirmeth) he neuer so much as thought so, or euer aymed at this end. So the Deuils end in casting the Saints into prison, was, that being tormented they might bee brought to make an Apostasie from the faith; but the Lord maketh Sathans end and action serue to further the end which hee had propounded; namely, that by these afflictions they might be tried, and being approued might be crowned. It was his end in afflicting Iob to bring him vnto destruction, by causing him to curse God vnto his face: but God maketh the Deuils action and end to further his, which was, that hee might be glorified in the triall of his graces, the faithfull edified by his example, and that Iob himselfe might be fitted and prepared to receiue a greater measure of his blessings here, and of glory and happines in the life to come. But this will more plainly appeare in the afflictions of Ioseph, wherein as there were many Agents, so likewise many ends. His brethren being full of enuy, sought to haue him remooued; whom their father (as they supposed) ouer-loued. The Ismaelitish Merchants respected their gaine, his Mistris aymed first at the satisfying of her filthy lust, and after at the reuenge of her scorned loue; his Master in his wrong conceiued jealousie, at the punishment of so great an injury as hee thought hee had receiued; the jaylour at his ease and safetie; the vngratefull Butler thought of nothing but pleasing the King; the King sought to ease his troubled minde by vnderstanding the meaning of his dreame; the Deuil to bring, by the sinne of many, innocent Ioseph vnto destruction. But all these ends so diuers and opposite one to another, the Lord so ouer-ruled by his wise and powerfull prouidence, that hee made them all concurre to the effecting of his owne ends, which were the triall of Iosephs graces to the glory of him that gaue them; which Ioseph in modesty passeth ouer; and the preseruing of his Church in the time of extreame famine, by sending him into Egypt to make prouision for them. The like may also be obserued in the death and passion of our Sauiour Christ; wherein Iudas out of his couetousnesse betrayeth him to gaine the siluer pieces; the Scribes and the Pharisies out of their malice and enuy persecute and accuse him, to vphold their state and honour by remouing their enemy; Pilate condemneth him out of feare and flattery to keepe his grace with Cæsar, and to please the people; the Souldiers crucifie him out of barbarous greedinesse to receiue a reward, and to benefit themselues with the spoyle of his garments; the Deuill vseth them all as his slaues and vassals out of his malice to mankind, that hee might hinder our saluation by destroying our Sauiour. But God ouer-ruleth by his gracious & wise prouidence both him and them; making all their ends and actions to serue for the furthering of his most louing and mercifull end, euen when they most opposed against it, namely, the redemption and saluation of all his Elect, by the precious death, and al-sufficient sacrifice of his innocent Sonne. By all which it appeareth, that whilest the Deuill and wicked men pursue their owne ends, the Lord traineth his, and whilest in afflicting Gods seruants, they wholy ayme at their destruction; the Lord by his prouidence ouer-ruling all their purposes and endeauours, maketh them when they thinke of nothing lesse to serue for, the glorifying of his holy Name in the manifesting of his graces, and the saluation of the soules of his afflicted children. So that they are in his hand in this respect, like the arrow in the hand of a cunning Archer, which fleeth to the marke, and yet knoweth not whether it is going; for though they be well acquainted with their owne malicious ends, and pursue with all greedinesse their owne intentions; yet oftentimes fayling of them, they neuer faile the furthering of those ends which God hath propounded vnto all their actions although they goe blindfold to them, and neuer so much as thinke of them. The consideration whereof may greatly comfort vs in all our afflictions imposed on vs by wicked men; for when we see our selues assaulted by them on euery side, all of them ayming at our hurt and destruction in the generall, but yet carried thereunto by their particular ends; one out of malice to our persons, another out of desire to reuenge misconceiued wrongs and supposed injuries; this man out of couetousnesse hunting after a prey in our spoyle; and another out of pride and ambition seeking our downe fall, that he may lay the foundation of his own glory and honour, in the ruines of our estate; hee out of enuy and hatred, thinking that hee is better, if he make vs worse; and another out of his greedinesse labouring to make vs worse, that hee may make himselfe better; then are we to remember there is a supreame prouidence, wisdome and power, which ouerseeth & ouerlooketh all their actions & ends, & when they are most eager in pursuing their designes, doth make them, when they thinke least of it, to serue him for the effecting of all his counsailes and purposes, and the furthering and aduancing of those his mayne ends, euen his owne glory and the saluation, as of all the faithfull, so also of vs among the rest.

Apoc.2.10.

Gen.45.7.

9. Sect. 10 That Gods prouidence ordereth and disposeth of all our afflictions, both in respect of their manner, measure and continuance.

And thus doth Gods prouidence shew it self in the ends of our afflictions, and of them that do afflict vs, disposing of them all for his own glory & our good: The like also may be said of the manner, measure, & time of our afflictions; all which he so ordereth & ouer-ruleth, that nothing befalleth vs in the manner, measure, or continuance of them, but by the wise guidance of his al-seeing prouidence. For he hath as wel appointed how we shal come into afflictions, as what we shall suffer; & though there be in them a thousand strange circumstances, and ten thousand vnthought of accidents, and vnexpected casualties; much confusion and disorder in respect of secondary meanes, and innumerable errours and mistakings; yet is there nothing in them all vnto him casuall and accidentall, but all foreseene and fore-ordained long before; neither any confusion or errour, but all in a direct order and method, one cause producing and drawing on another, like the diuers linkes of the same chaine, as may plainly appeare if we doe examine the former examples. So doth hee by the same prouidence share out vnto vs the measure of our afflictions, giuing vnto vs a conuenient draught of this bitter potion, according to the proportion of our strength and patience. Neither doth hee let loose the Deuill and wicked men to assault vs all at once, according as their fury would carry them; but like the master of the masteries he sitteth by, and appointeth such aduersaries to contend & wrastle with vs, as may onely exercise our patience, and not wholy vanquish and ouercome it. And as hee appointe[illegible] the manner and measure, so also the time of o[illegible] afflictions, which all the malice and fury of our enemies cannot any jot lengthen or prolong. As we may see in the foure hundred yeares appointed to the Israelites in the Egyptian seruitude, which being expired, they came out, maugre all the malice of their enemies, the same day; in the seuenty yeares of the Babylonish captiuity, at the expiring whereof Daniel prayeth for deliuerance, and hath presently his suite heard and granted; and in the afflictions and persecutions of the Church of Smyrna, raised by Satan, which is restrained to a determinate time of ten dayes. And thus the Lord ordereth our afflictions, both in respect of the causes, manner, measure and end, (as I shall haue occasion to shew more fully hereafter) in regard whereof hee is said to correct vs in judgement for our amendement, and not in wrath to cut vs off. Which argument the Lord vseth to comfort his afflicted Church in her captiuity; Feare not (saith hee) O my seruant Iacob, for I will deliuer thee, &c. I am with thee (saith the Lord) to saue thee, though I vtterly destroy all the nations where I haue scattered thee, yet I will not vtterly destroy thee, but I will correct thee by iudgement, and not vtterly cut thee off. The which consolation let vs apply vnto our selues in all our crosses and afflictions, and considering on the one side, that the Lord is the chiefe cause and authour of them, and also ordereth and disposeth them by his wise and powerfull prouidence; that Satan and wicked men are but his bare instruments whom hee ruleth at his pleasure, and that whatsoeuer they intend and ayme at, he maketh all their purposes and deuices to serue his owne ends; and finally, that he appointeth both the manner, measure, and time of our conflict and triall; and on the other side, that hee who doth all this, is vnto vs no stranger or enemy but our most deare and gracious Father, who hath so loued vs, that hee hath not spared to giue his onely and best beloued Sonne to the death for

Exod. 12. 40.

Dan. 9. 2. 24.

Apoc. 2. 10.

Ier. 30. 11.

for our redemption, who can, because hee is able, and will, because he so much tendereth vs, turne all our crosses into comforts, and make them serue as meanes to further our saluation; let vs not onely with patience and comfort, but euen with thankesgiuing and reioycing hold out in all our trials and suffer with meeknesse and quiet contentednesse whatsoeuer it shall please him to lay vpon vs.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the meritorious and deseruing cause of our afflictions, which is our sinne: and of the comforts which arise from this consideration.

HAue seene what are the efficient causes of all our afflictions; [illegible] also the comforts and consolations which do arise from the consideration of them; now wee are to proceed vnto the causes mouing and inciting the Lord to lay vpon vs these afflictions: and these are of two kindes; the first is in vs, which is the meritorious cause of all our crosses; the other is in God, which is his loue inclining him thus to chastize vs, that we may not be condemned with the World. First, therefore (as order requireth) we will intreat of the meritorious and deseruing cause of all our miseries and calamities, that out of the meditation thereof wee may lighten the burthen of our crosses, and make them more easie to be borne vpon the shoulders of patience. The cause meriting and deseruing affliction is sin, which is that strong cart-rope or cable, whereby wee draw vpon vs all afflictions and miseries, whether wee consider them as the punishments of a righteous Iudge; or the chastizements and corrections of a gracious Father. And this the Lord plainly sheweth vnto vs in the eighe and twentieth Chapter of the Booke of Deuteronomy; where hauing promised all blessings and benefits, and also protection and exemption from all miseries and euils, to those who keepe the Commandements of God; he afterwards annexeth a seuere threatning to the transgressours thereof, namely, that if they did not obey the voice of the Lord their God, to keepe and doe all his commandements, then all his curses, should come vpon and ouertake them; and so expresseth a large catalogue of them, from the fifteenth Verse vnto the end of the Chapter. And thus the Psalmist speaking of those that are in prison and captiuity, saith that they dwell in darknesse and in the shadow of death, being fast bound in misery and iron; because they rebelled against the words of the Lord, and despised the counsell of the most high. And a little after he affirmeth, that foolish (that is wicked sinners) by reason of their transgression, and because of their iniquity are afflicted: and that God turneth a fruitfull Land into desart barrennesse for the wickednesse of them that dwell therein. So the Wise man maketh affliction to be (as it were) the shadow of sinne, which doth alwayes attend vpon it; affliction (saith hee) followeth sinners; but vnto the righteous God will recompence good; and the fruit and harueſt which commeth of the sinners seed time, for as he saith, He that soweth iniquity shall reape affliction, and the rod of his anger shall faile. And most plainly the Church in the Lamentations, affirmeth sinne to be the cause of all our sufferings; man (saith she) suffereth for his sinne. In regard of which neere neighbourhood, and inseparable vnion betweene sinne and punishment, linked together with the bond of Iustice and Gods righteous iudgement, they are confounded in their names, and punishment is signified by the name of sinne, for so the Lord saith vnto Caine; If thou doest not well, sinne lyeth at the doore; that is, due punishment deserued by this sinne, and contrariwise where it is said, that his punishment was greater than he could beare, it may be also rendred, that his sinne was greater than could bee pardoned. And as this truth appeareth directly by the former testimonies, so also both by the examples and confessions of those who haue beene afflicted. Concerning the former the Lord saith vnto the people of Israel, that their sinne was the cause of their diuorcement from him; and that for their iniquities and transgressions they were sold into captiuity, and their mother (that is their Church and nation) was forsaken. So the Prophet Ieremy in the name of the Lord saith thus vnto them; thy wayes and thine inuentions haue procured thee these things, such is thy wickednesse. And againe, I haue stricken thee with the wound of an enemy, and with a sharpe chastisement, for the multitude of thine iniquities; because thy sinnes were increased. Why cryest thou for thine affliction? Thy sorrow is incurable, for the multitude of thine iniquities. Because thy sinnes were increased, I haue done these things vnto thee. And this the Prophet acknowledgeth in his Lamentations, in the name of his Church and people; The Lord hath afflicted her for the multitude of her transgressions, and her children are gone into captiuity before the enemy, Ierusalem hath grieuously sinned, therefore shee is in derision, &c. Finally, our Sauiour implyeth this truth in his speech to the man whom he had cured of his grieuous diseases; Behold (saith he) thou art made whole, sinne no more; least a worse thing come vnto thee. And to the same purpose, one of the Ancients vpon the example of Ionas, speaketh fitly. As soone as Ionas (saith he) entred into the ship, God caused the surging waues so rise and swell, to teach

Verse 27.34.

Prou. 13.21, Prou. 22.8.

Lam. 3.39.

Gen. 4.7.

Verse 13.

Esay 50.1.

Ier. 30.14, 15.

Lam. 1.5, 8.

Ioh. 5.14.

vs hereby, that where there is sinne, there also is a tempest, and after disobedience followeth a storme. But being devoured of a Whale, he notwithstanding liveth; to learne vs hereby, that as to him that liveth in sinne, a ship is no safeguard; so to him who by repentance hath put it off, neither Sea nor beast are hurtfull or pernicious. And hereof it is, that being to cure one sicke of a palsie, he first taketh away his sin, before he taketh away his disease. Sonne (saith hee) be of good comfort, thy sinnes are forgiven thee; and then, arise, and take up thy bed, and go to thine house. And so the afflicted Church having affirmed that man suffereth for sinne, perswadeth to repentance as the onely meanes to remove their crosses and calamities, because thereby sin which is the cause of them is removed, Let us (saith she) search and try our waies, and turne againe to the Lord. By all which it appeareth that sinne is the onely deserving cause which moueth the Lord to send afflictions, the which is most consonant with Gods most infinite Truth and Iustice; and that whether wee consider them as punishments inflicted vpon the wicked, or chastisements whereby hee correcteth his owne servants and children. For what can be more righteous, than that hee should inflict those judgements and punishments vpon wicked men, which he hath denounced in his Law, against the transgressors thereof, whether they concerne this life or the life to come, seeing all both by right of creation and continuall preseruation, are bound to obedience vpon condition of reward and punishment, as being the vassals and subjects of this great King of Heauen and Earth? And what can be more just, yea and full of mercy than for the Lord to chastize the faults of his children and servants, that he may reclaime them from their sinnes, and withholding them from the broad way which leadeth to destruction, may draw them by this afflicted and straight path, vnto that happines which they formerly lost by following the delights of sinne? To which purpose one saith, that it is inst with God to scourge euery sonne whom hee receiueth, that we who were banished out of the joyes of Paradise for our rebellious desiring vnlawfull delights, should againe be restored and receiued, by our meeke suffering of sorrowes and crosses, and being runaways by doing euill, should be brought againe and repossessed of our happinesse by suffering euill; doing there against justice, and suffering here for justice. In which regard wee are to justifie God in all his judgements, and beare with patience that which he sendeth, not onely because it is vnlawfull to repine and striue against them, but because the Lord herein willeth nothing but that which is lawfull and expedient. For which we alsue the Prophet Dauid for our example; who approueth Gods judgements, not onely in generall crying out, righteous art thou, O Lord, and iust are thy iudgements; but also particularly in those which himselfe suffered; I know (O Lord) (saith hee) that thy iudgements are right, and that thou hast afflicted me iustly in truth.

Yea but the Scriptures teach vs, that our sinnes are not alwaies the only causes of our afflictions, and that there are diuers other ends which moue the Lords to lay vpon his children these crosses and calamities: for thus the Lord afflicted Abraham whilest he required obedience to that difficult and grieuous commandement of sacrificing his sonne, not for the punishment of his sinne, but for the triall of his faith; and thus Iob endured many crosses and calamities, not for any sinnes committed by him, but for the tryall and approuing of his loue, faith, patience, obedience, and other of Gods graces against the calamities and wicked slanders of the Deuill. And our Saviour saith directly of the blind man, that he was not punished with that great infirmity, either for his owne sinne or the sinne of his parents; but that the workes of God might be made manifest in him. To which I answere that in truth God doth by afflictions as well make tryall of his graces in vs, as chastize vs for our sinnes, and that besides our iniquities, and transgressions, there are in Gods secret counsels other causes of our crosses and calamities, but seeing the Lord hath in his Word denounced these miseries and afflictions against vs, as punishments and chastisements for our iniquities and transgressions; and doth not reueale vnto vs when he tryeth vs, and when he correcteth vs; therefore leauing Gods secrets vnto himselfe, we are not to looke vnto his hidden counsels, but vnto his will reuealed, and according thereunto wee are alwayes to make this vse of our afflictions, that when wee are iudged we are chastened of the Lord, & iustly corrected and punished for our sins? Neither shall wee need to feare any great errour in this behalfe, seeing besides all our other transgressions we brought enough sinne and corruption into the world with vs, to deserue all the punishments of this life, and the life to come; and euery man hath in him sufficient fuell for the fire of vengeance and punishment, if Gods Iustice and wrath doe once inflame it. Yea, rather let vs know, that this is the best and safest course to ascribe our crosses to our sinnes deseruing them, because (though wee erre in respect of Gods secret purpose, in sending this affliction which wee presently suffer) we shall take occasion thereby the better to humble our selues vnder the hand of God, to approoue and justifie his righteous judgements, and to renew our repentance by sorrowing for our sinnes, as beeing the causes of all our smart, and labouring

Chrysost. serm. 8 ad pop. 5. Tom. 4

Matth. 9. 2, 6.

Lamen. 3. 40.

Aug. de peniten. lib. 4. cap. 4. Tom. 4.

Psal. 119. 137.

Verse 75.

Ioh. 9. 3.

1. Cor. 11.

ring to mortifie and forsake them for the time to come. Whereas contrariwise the errour of not ascribing our afflictions to our sins deserving them, when they are in truth for this onely cause inflicted by God, is most dangerous and pernicious; seeing it continueth vs in our wickednesse, and hindreth our repentance; according to that complaint of the Lord by the Prophet. They gaue themselues to deceit, and would not returne; I hearkened and heard, but none spake aright, no man repented him of his wickednesse, saying, what haue I done? euery one turned to their race, as the horse rusheth into battell. And therefore the Saints of God in all ages, leauing Gods secret counsels to himselfe, haue euermore insisted in their sinnes, as the onely cause of all their afflictions; so holy Dauid complaineth; There is nothing sound in my flesh, because of thine anger; neither is there rest in my bones, because of my sinne; and the Prophet cryeth out in his Prayer for the people, Behold thou art angry, for we haue sinned; and those three famous worthies, Daniel, Ezra and Nehemiah, in those excellent Prayers which they make in the behalfe of themselues and their people, acknowledge their sinnes to be the causes of all their calamities. Yea euen Iob himselfe who was in truth afflicted chiefly for the triall of his spirituall graces; howsoeuer he defendeth his innocencie against his three friends, to maintaine his vprightnesse and sincericie from their false calumniations and aspersions; yet hauing to deale with God, he acknowledgeth his sinne to be the cause of all his calamities. I haue sinned (saith hee) what shall I doe vnto thee, O thou preseruer of men? &c. And why doest thou not pardon and take away mine iniquitie?

Whose example we must imitate, labouring in all our afflictions to bee brought vnto the sight of our sinnes, that wee may bewaile and forsake them. And considering that God doth not onely in generall correct vs for sinne; but visiteth our speciall sinnes with speciall judgements and afflictions; therfore let vs not content our selues to haue in some generall manner ascribed our crosses to our iniquities as the causes of them; but let vs also search out our speciall and particular sinnes, which are the causes and occasions of those miseries which wee presently endure and suffer: that taking more particular notice of them; wee may in more especiall manner repent of them, and more effectually labour in subduing and mortifying them. And for our direction herein, let vs consider of certaine signes, whereby we may know when the Lord correcteth a particular sinne with some speciall punishment or chastizement. Whereof the first is, when being afflicted with some speciall judgment, after examination we find that in the Scriptures such a punishment is denounced against such a sinne; as when affiance in the creature is punished with their insufficiencie and impotency whereby they cannot, or infidelity and treacherie, whereby they will not afford vnto vs that helpe which we expect from them. When pride is punished with dejection and contempt; whoredome with barrennesse or want of posterity; idolatry with adultery, and such like. Secondly, when as our sinnes are punished by Law of requitall like for like; as when hauing dishonoured God by scandalous sinnes, the Lord in the very same doth dishonour vs; when hauing commited spirituall adultery, we or ours are left of God, to commit corporall filthinesse; when hauing neglected our duties to our Parents, our Children doe neglect theirs vnto vs; and when hauing oppressed our inferiours, wee our selues are oppressed by our superiors. And thus did God fit Dauids chastizement to his offence, in the sinne against Vriah; and because hee tooke his neighbours wife to commit adulterie with her, the Lord tooke his and gaue them to one of his owne house, yea vnto his owne Sonne, his deare darling Absalon, to bee abused by him in filthy incest. And because he had slaine Vriah with the sword; therefore the sword did not depart from his house, but the same Absalon doth first slay his Brother Ammon, for that incestuous rape committed with his Sister Tamar, wherein there was a double punishment of Dauids double sin; and afterwards rebelling against him, neuer rested till he had expelled him out of his Kingdome, and seated himselfe in his royall Throne. So when the people of Israell enquired in the land of their captiuitie, wherefore the Lord did bring vpon them those afflictions of bondage and cruell seruitude; the Prophet is commanded by the Lord to giue them this answere; Like as yee haue forsaken me, and serued strange Gods in your land; so shall yee serue strangers in a land that is not yours. Thirdly, when as we are taken in the very act, and our sin presently is attended by out punishment; as Dauids numbring of the people with that fearefull pestilence; Ionas his fleeing from God with that dangerous tempest; and Pauls cruell persecution with suddaine blindnesse and astonishment. Fourthly, when as our owne consciences doe judge and condemne vs, as hauing brought vpon our selues such a punishment by committing such a sinne, for the conscience is Gods deputie to conuince vs, being guilty, as worthy of such judgements; and to put vs in mind that some speciall sinnes committed, haue brought vpon vs such speciall punishments; as wee may see in the example of Iosephs Brethren, who adjudged themselues as worthy of all the miseries which they suffered, because they so little

2. Sam. 12. 10, 11.

2. Sam. 13.

Ier. 5. 19.

regarded the cry and intreaty of their Brother in his afflictions. Lastly, when as our sinne in its owne nature bringeth forth such a punishment as the fruite thereof; as when beggerie followeth idlenesse or wastfulnesse; weaknesse and sicknesse, the sinnes of vncleannesse; and double plagues doe accompanie impetentencie and hardnesse of heart.

Q. Sect. 4. That much comfort ariseth from the consideration of the meritorious cause of afflictions, which is our sins. First, because we haue no iust cause of murmuring, seeing Gods iustice and truth is manifested, and we receiue no wrong.

And thus haue I shewed, not onely that but sinnes in generall are the causes of all our crosses and calamities; but also our speciall sinnes, of our more speciall miseries and afflictions: of which truth when our iudgements are throughly informed; after wee haue made vse of this knowledge for the renuing and increasing of our repentance, both for our sinnes in generall, and those which more especially presse the conscience with their guilt, and the whole person with their punishment; we may in the next place make vse also thereof for the strengthening of our patience: and that in diuers respects. First, because wee haue no just occasion of murmuring and repining; seeing God, as his iustice necessarily requireth, doth justly execute his righteous judgements vpon vs for our sinnes, and according to his reuealed truth inflicteth those punishments which he had in his word formerly threatned; and if hee should not thus doe; punishing sinne wheresoeuer hee findeth it, and shewing his detestation of it in whomsoeuer it is, hee might bee esteemed partiall, and his justice and truth would receiue impeachment. When therefore the Lord acquitteth and cleareth himselfe from such imputations, and manifesteth his justice & truth by correcting and chastizing vs for our transgressions; there is no cause of sorrow and mourning (but onely for our sinnes, whereby we haue vrged God vpon the necessity of shewing his truth, and justice to take these courses with vs) vnlesse we would be found enemies vnto God, and aduersaries to these excellent attributes, whilest we grieue because hee is righteous in his judgements, and true of his word. Neither is there any cause of impatiencie, yea rather in this respect wee haue just cause of joy and comfort; in that Gods justice and truth are magnified in our afflictions; for better it were that Heauen and Earth were vtterly destroyed yea both men and Angels damned vnto Hell, than that the glory of God, who is the chiefe goodnesse and supreame end of all the creatures, should in the least degree bee dimmed and blemished. But especially haue wee cause of reioycing and thanksgiuing, if we consider that in all these our afflictions the Lord doth not so much punish vs for sinne, as sinne in vs, mortifying and subduing it, that by the death and subjection thereof, wee may liue and raigne with him. Euen as the Surgeon in applying of the corrasiue, hath no quarrell to his patient, nor aymeth at his torment; but onely seeketh to abate the swelling tumour, and to draw out of the sore the core of corruption that it may bee cured. Secondly, as this consideration may worke in vs patience in respect of God, so also in regard of vs, seeing wee are not at all wronged in our punishments, nor haue any injustice offered vs by God, but doe onely suffer those miseries and crosses which wee haue justly deserued, and haue pulled vpon vs by our owne sinnes. And therefore when wee are exercised with any affliction, we haue no more reason to complaine of God, nor to repine against his righteous judgements, than the malefactour hath to cry out against the righteous Iudge, or to grudge against the iust sentence pronounced by him; nor haue more cause when wee are in sickenesse, prison, pouertie or banishment, to bend all our anger and malice against Gods ministers and inferiour instruments, exclaiming against the oppressions of our magistrates, the falsity of our accusers, the ilnesse of the aire or vnwholsomenesse of our dyet; than the condemned person hath to maligne the prison walls that inclose him, the fetters and boles that bind and clogge him, the Scherife and officers that lead him to execution, or the hang-man who by authoritie is appointed to execute the sentence which the just Iudge hath worthily pronounced. But if there bee any cause at all of complaining and exclaiming, it is at our sinnes which haue caused the Lord our righteous Iudge to take these seuere courses against vs, for his owne glory, in the manifesting of his iustice, and our euerlasting good, by reforming vs of our sinnes. If there be any reason of grieuing and mourning; it is because we haue deserued these judgements, and not because the Lord hath justly inflicted them. In which regard the afflicted Church demandeth, wherefore the liuing man is sorrowfull, seeing he suffereth for his sinne. Vnlesse wee had rather vnderstand the last words as an answere to the question, namely that there is no other cause of sorrowing but that his sinnes deserued to be thus punished. And in another place shee saith, that shee will beare the wrath of the Lord, because shee had sinned against him. To this purpose one saith, that by a right knowledge of the waight of our sinne, wee doe much lighten the waight of our punishment. And that the griefe of the whip is much tempered and mitigated, when the fault deseruing it is duely acknowledged, euen as euery patient doth more quietly suffer the launcher of the surgeon, by how much more corrupt the sore is which he cutteth.

Yea but it may be that the party afflicted may truely object, that he is innocent of the fault which is made the occasion of his punishment;

nishment; that he is wrongfully slandered, vnjustly oppressed; and hardly intreated for his kind vsage; and what place can there then bee for patience? or how can he make vse of the former comforts, seeing he sufferreth those punishments which hee hath not deserued? I answere with the Apostle, who art thou O man that disputest with God. And with Eliphaz, I demand; shall man be more iust than God? or shal a man be more pure than his maker? Behold hee found no stedfastnesse in his seruants, and laid folly vpon his Angels; how much more in them that dwell in houses of clay, whose foundation is in the dust, which shall be destroyed before the moth? But if thou wilt yet further reason the matter, then know; that howsoeuer thou art innocent in respect of the sinne, which is the occasion of thy crosse, yet the Lord doth not punish thee vnjustly and before thou hast deserued it; for thou wast borne the slaue of sinne and Sathan, the child of wrath, and enemy vnto God; and therefore art deseruedly lyable to punishment; thy body and soule were wholly polluted with originall corruption; and therefore are justly the subjects of crosses and calamities; for where sinne pleadeth full possession, there punishment also may of due, chalenge admission and entertainment. Besides what a numerous of-spring of actuall trangressions, hath sprung out of the wombe of this fruitfull mother? and of how many grieuous sinnes dost thou stand accused and condemned before the tribunall of Gods justice by the verdict and testimony of thine owne conscience; for euery one whereof the Lord may justly inflict vpon thee this and farre greater punishments, although thou be innocent of that fault which being imputed vnto thee is the cause of thy affliction? But thou wilt further object that though being guilty of many sinnes against God thou art deseruedly punished, and therefore hast great reason to beare it with patience; yet thou art innocent in respect of men; and therfore being by them vnjustly punished and vexed; thou hast just cause of impatiency and complaining. To which I answere, that we haue little cause to stand much vpon the secondary causes and inferiour instruments, when as we consider that God the supreme and principall cause of all our afflictions doth punish vs justly; nor so much to insist vpon our righteousnesse towards men, when as our consciences are guilty of many sinnes against God, which haue iustly deserued these and farre greater punishments, especially considering that the former worketh in vs rage and impatiency, wherby weare made vtterly vnfit to beare our burthen; whereas the latter being duly thought on, maketh vs to beare with humility and meekenesse all crosses and miseries which by these inferiour instruments doe happen vnto vs. For (as one saith) he patiently sufferreth wrongs and injuries, who religiously remembreth that hee hath in himselfe sins and corruptions which in respect of God doe neede toleration; and then with meekenesse wee indure railings and reuilings, when in our consciences and secret cogitations we look backe to our euils committed; an example whereof wee haue in Dauid who patiently heard Shemei railing against him, because though he were iunocent in respect of him, yet hee found himselfe guilty of many sinnes against God, which had justly deserued farre greater punishments. And secondly I answere that as it is a meanes of patience to consider that wee suffer justly deserued punishments from the hand of God (seeing it is most vncomfortable once to imagine that the chiefe iudge of Heauen and Earth, should deale vnrighteously, because there is no limits in doing where the power is infinite) so is there great cause of patience and comfort when we suffer vniustly at the hands of men, both because it is a singular mercy of God, in that when we are guilty of so many sins for which we might iustly haue all the afflictions of this life imposed vpon vs, he passeth by them all, and is content that wee should suffer in our innocency and righteousnesse; and also because such sufferings are very beneficiall and fruitfull vnto vs, as hauing the promise of euerlasting happinesse; For blessed are they (as our Saviour hath pronounced them) which suffer persecution for righteousnesse sake, for theirs is the Kingdome of Heauen. And blessed are yee when men reuile you and persecute you, and say all manner of euill against you for my names sake falsely; Reioyce and be glad for great is your reward in heauen. So the Apostle Peter saith, wee are blessed if wee suffer for righteousnesse sake, and in this regard, we haue no cause to feare their feare, neither to bee troubled. And affirmeth it to be much better (if the will of God be so) that we suffer for well doing, than for euill doing; seeing herein wee be like our Master Christ, who suffered for sinners, the iust for the vniust, that hee might bring vs to God. And therefore he exhorteth that none of vs suffer as a murtherer, or as a theefe, or an euill doer, or as a busie body in other mens matters. But if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorifie God in this behalfe. Of which precept, himselfe and the Apostle Iohn are good precedents and examples, who being beaten for a good cause euen for preaching in the name of Christ; depart from the councell reioycing that they were counted worthy to suffer rebuke for his name. Whom wee are to imitate, comforting our selues, when like the Apostles wee may suffer in our innocency for a good cause, rather than when like offenders

Patienter iniuriam illatam tolerat qui pii meminit quod fortasse adhuc habeat in quo debeat ipse tolerari. Tunc illata conuitia bene toleramus cum in secreto mentis ad nos perpetrata recurrimus. Gregor. 2. Sam. 16. 10.

Gen. 18. 25.

Matth. 5. 10, 11

1. Pet. 3. 14. Vers. 17, 18.

1. Pet. 4. 15.

Act. 5. 41.

ders and malefactors, vnto the heauinesse of the punishment is added the waight of faultinesse and the guilt of sinne. For as the Apostle saith, this is thankworthy, if a man for conscience towards God endure griefe, suffering wrongfully. For what prayse is it, if when being buffeted for your faults yee take it patiently? but and if when yee doe well, yee suffer wrong and take it patiently, this is acceptable vnto God.

1. Pet. 2. 19. 20.

4. Sect. 6. That God inflicteth on vs farre lighter punishments than our sins deserue.

And thus may wee strengthen and confirme our patience in the consideration of Gods iustice, punishing and correcting vs for our deserts and demerits; but much more may we comfort our selues in the consideration of his mercy and goodnesse whereby he is moued gratiously to spare vs, inflicting vpon vs farre lighter and lesser punishments than our sinnes haue deserued. For hee doth but lightly touch vs, when he might iustly crush vs in peeces; and (as it is said of the Persian nobles) when we offend against our Prince and soueraigne; in stead of tormenting our bodies hee doth but beate our garments, depriuing vs of the trifles of this life, and correcting vs either by some corporall infirmity, or in our outward estates when our sinnes haue deserued the fearefullest of his plagues. So that in our greatest afflictions, wee haue iust cause to confesse, and thankfully to ackowledge, with the Prophet Danid, that hee hath not dealt with vs after our sinnes, nor rewarded vs according to our iniquities. For hee doth not correct vs in the rigour of his iustice, but (as he saith) in iudgement, not looking what our sinnes haue deserued, but what wee are able to beare; and knowing whereof we be made, and remembring that we are but dust, full of frailty and infirmity, he proportioneth our afflictions, not to our sinnes, but to our strength, which being so feeble that we cannot indure much, hee doth lay vpon vs light chastizements for haynous sinnes, and but seldome correcteth vs for our innumerable offences. Hee doth not punish vs as a iudge according to the quality of our offences, but he spareth vs as a man spareth his owne Sonne that serueth him; and as a Father hath compassion on his Children, so hath the Lord compassion on them that feare him.

Psal. 103. 10.

Ier. 30. 11.

Mal. 3. 17. Psal. 103. 13.

5. Sect. 7. The hainousnesse of sinne in its owne nature, shewed first by the person who is thereby offended.

All which mercy and pitty shewed vnto vs by God in our chastizements, will more euidently appeare, if we consider on the one side, both how hainous and capitall sinne is in its owne nature, and also how detestable, odious, and abhominable it is in his sight, and on the other side in what monstrous manner, and measure, we are defiled with it. The hainousnesse of sinne will appeare if wee consider the person against whom it is committed, or the punishment which by the iustice of God is allotted to it. The person against whom it is committed is the Lord himselfe, the sole King and Monarch of Heauen and Earth, who is in his owne nature infinite in glory, maiesty, power, mercy, goodnesse and all perfection; and in respect of vs most worthy to be serued and obeyed, as being obliged vnto him in that treble band of creation, preseruation, and redemption; whose will and Law is violated and transgressed by euery sinne, and such a contempt and outrage offered by the sinner against his crowne and dignity, that as much as in him lyeth he taketh away his rule and gouernement, defeateth him of his Kingdome and soueraignty, and denying subiection and allegeance vnto him, yeeldeth obedience vnto his arch-enemy the Deuill, & acknowledgeth him as his Prince & King. Now if a fault bee to bee aggrauated either by the dignity of the person against whom it is committed; or by the vngratitude of the party who doth commit it, as offending against such an one as hath well deserued of him; then how infinite is the guilt of our sin, committed against so infinite a Maiesty, the King of Heauen and Earth, in whom, we liue, moue, and haue our being, and from whom wee haue receiued whatsoeuer good thing we doe inioy; and that by vs who are not onely so base and contemptible, but also infinitely indebted and beholding vnto him.

Act. 17. 28.

6. Sect. The hainousnesse of sinne shewed by consideration of the punishments which Gods iustice allotteth to it.

Secondly the hainousnesse of sinne appeareth by the punishments which the iustice of God hath allotted vnto it; the which may be considered either as they are denounced in Gods word, or inflicted in his workes; the one being the sentence of condemnation, the other the execution. In respect of the former wee find that the least sinne, and but once committed, and that in thought onely doth make him who committeth it lyable & subiect to the curse of the Law, according to the sentence pronounced by God, and repeated by the Apostle: Cursed is euery man that continueth not in all things which are written in the Booke of the Law to doe them; vnder which curse is contained and comprised all the fearefull plagues and punishments which are incident vnto this life, as all sicknesses, diseases and sores of the body, which are so many that they would require a great part of our liues to number them; and so grieuous and intolerable, that the very naming of them would appall and terrifie vs: all disastrous accidents which impouerish and ruine our estates; all shame, contempt, disgrace and infamy, wrongs and iniuries, whereby our names are blemished and blotted, and our persons oppressed; scorned and troden vnder foote: all terrors and troubles of mind, horror of conscience, doubting and despaire; with that vnspeakeable griefe which doth accompany them; a large catalogue of which miseries we haue Deut. 27. 26. Gal. 3. 10.

set

fully declared by Gods owne direction in the 28. and 29. and 30. chapters of the Booke of Deuteronomy. All which though they bee incomparably more and greater, than any one man indureth in this life, yet are they without all comparison lesse than those lasting and euerlasting punishments, which the Lord hath threatned against wicked men in the life to come. For as one saith, they shunned suffer in Hell are such which hath no end; a death without death, a continuall consumption without wasting, because their death continueth their end is alwayes in beginning, and their decay neuer decayeth; but they are daily healed that they may be wounded, and repayred a fresh that they may be destroyed, they are euer dying, but neuer dead, euer consuming but neuer consumed, alwayes burning and broyling, but neuer quite wasted and burnt vp. But that we may not thinke these terrible threatnings of indignation and punishment denounced against sinne in the Booke of God, to be but paper-shot, which by the sound thereof onely affrighteth, but hurteth not: let vs looke into the first execution of this dreadfull sentence in this life, where we shall finde how hainous sin is in Gods sight by those fearefull punishments, which he hath inflicted on those who haue committed it. And to passe by the examples of Gods vengeance executed vpon sinners in all ages, recorded in heathenish and humane Histories, and those which euery man hath obserued in his owne experience, let vs onely looke into the holy Scriptures, and set before our eyes some few examples of many, which wee finde there registred for our vse. And there wee shall behold the whole World drowned saving eight persons; and all that goodly beautie of the Earth defaced and neglected, all her gay ornaments stripped off and cast away, because they were stained and blemished with mans sinne. There we shall see Sodome and Gomorrah flaming and smoking with Fire and brimstone, that the Land might bee vnburthened and purged from these filthy inhabitants; and (as it were) aired and freed from the noysome stinke of their sinnes: And Egypt plagued with great variety of grieuous punishments, because vnto the huge multitude of their other sins, they added outragious oppression, and malicious crueltie against the people and Church of God. Yea there wee shall see the Israelites themselues after they were chosen for Gods peculiar, ennobled with so many royall titles, and speciall fauours from God, endowed with so many priuiledges and prerogatiues aboue all the nations of the Earth, and made famous by the destruction of their enemies, and their mercifull and miraculous deliuerance; yet for all this exposed to Gods wrath, and destroied by his fearefull plagues, when they transgressed his commaundements and sinned against him. Among these wee shall finde Corah, Dathan and Abiram, men noble and great in their families and tribes, and much aduanced in speciall fauours from God aboue the common sort, yet when they sinned by their rebellion, swallowed aliue by the Earth, and descending quicke into the pit. Num. 16. 30.

Yea when the Lord had chosen againe out of this choyce, and rejecting the ten tribes of of Israell for their sinnes, receiued in his speciall fauour the people of the Iewes; yet when they likewise sinned against him, wee shall finde them, first grieuously plagued at home, and afterwards by their enemies ouerthrowne, led into captiuitie, and afflicted with much misery; and being restored vpon a second triall, for their sinne in rejecting and crucifying Christ our Sauiour, finally cast off, their Cities sacked and ruined, their Land made desolate, innumerable numbers destroyed by the sword and famine, and the remnant reserued to be scattered among all nations, that they may be vnto them a scorne and hissing, and daily spectacles of Gods wrath, examples of his hatred vnto sinne, and continuall remembrancers to put them in minde what they are to expect for the like sinnes, who being wilde branches, were grafted into the true Oliue tree, when the Lord hath left such a fearefull testimonie of his hatred against all impietie and vnrighteousnesse, in breaking off and destroying the naturall branches for bearing and bringing forth these fruits of wickednesse. But aboue all examples of Gods wrath in the seuere punishing of sinne, are those of the first and second Adam. The former of which for transgressing one onely commaundement, by eating the forbidden fruite, and that but once onely, was cast out of Paradise, and that which was worse, out of Gods fauour dispoiled of all his former happinesse, depriued of all those excellent gifts and graces, and disrobed (as it were) of those rich ornaments wherewith he was endowed and beautified in his creation; and contrariwise was subiected both in his soule and body vnto all afflictions & crosses, torments and tortures, terrours and feares in this life, and to eternall destruction, death and condemnation in the life to come. Neither was hee alone thus fearefully punished for this one onely sinne committed by him, in his owne person alone, or next heires; but in all his posterity from the first beginning, to the end of the world, because they fell with him and sinned in his loynes. In which regard we may truely say, that all the euils of this life, either the euils of sinne, or the euils of punishment, all the Atheisme, Paganisme, idolatrie, blasphemie, murthers, whoredomes, rapes, incest, sodomie, buggery, gery, robbing, oppressing, slandering, and all manner of outragious wickednesse, and also all plagues, warre, famine, sicknesses and diseases, all leprosies, consumptions, agues, gouts, apoplexies, palsies, and the rest; all want, poverty, shame, reproach, with all other miseries of this life; yea all the dreadfull torments of Hell-fire, and the everlasting condemnation of those innumerable millions of reprobate and wicked men, in all of them the deserved punishments but of this only sin. So the second Adam our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, is a notable example of Gods severe justice in punishing of sinne; who though hee were most pure and innocent in his owne nature, and no corruption found in his heart, nor guile in his mouth, yet because as our suretie hee undertooke to make satisfaction for our sinnes, by suffering those punishments which wee had deserved, indured innumerable miseries and afflictions in the whole course of his life, as poverty, hunger, wearisome, slanders, reproaches, the temptations of the Divell and the World, conspiracies and layings in waite of his malicious enemies, treachery and treason, hard censures and forsaking of his nearest friends, false accusations, unjust condemnation, mockings and scornings, buffeting, whipping, and crowning with thornes; and lastly a bitter agony, causing him to sweat blood, the crucifying of his blessed Body, and which was above all the rest, the horrible and intolerable burthen of Gods fearce and fierie wrath, due vnto vs for our sinnes. By all which it appeareth of what inconceiuable guilt sinne is, and what infinite torments and plagues it justly deserueth, seeing God hath thus fearefully punished it from time to time; especially considering that all these punishments were inflicted by him, whose justice is so perfect and exact, that it is impossible hee should do the least injustice, injury, or cruelty above the desert of sinne; yea in whom there also eternally resideth infinite mercy and goodnesse, which vpon all due occasions, are ready (if there were cause) to temper and qualifie this scorching heate of Gods furie, and rigour of his justice.

Q. Sect. 9. That sinne is most odious vnto God, shewed first by the persons whom he hath punished for it.

And thus have I shewed how haynous and capitall sinne is, both by considering it in its owne nature, and in the punishments which by Gods justice are allotted vnto it. Now further wee are to shew that it is also vnto God most odious and abhominable: the which as it doth already in part appeare by that which hath beene said concerning these fearefull punishments which hee inflicteth vpon the offenders; so will it bee more manifest if wee consider the persons vpon whom hee hath inflicted these punishments, and the contrariety which is betweene sinne and his most holy nature. The first vpon whom God inflicted his heauie judgements for sinne, were the Divell and his Angels, who before sinne committed were highly in Gods favour, as being his most glorious and excellent creatures, made vnto vnto a rich and noble dowrie and portion of his singular gifts and graces, as purity and simplicity of nature, wisdome, power, beauty, justice, and such like: yet when by committing sinne they fell from him, they became horribly more odious and loathsome than the vilest of his creatures, and accursed, and that for ever, and pursued by his wrath, and subiect to his most heauie judgements and hellish torments. If therefore sin could make such lovely and excellent creatures, above all others most loathsome and vgly in Gods sight, then how loathsome, monstrous and misshapen is it when it appeareth in its owne nature, and receiueth no grace from the excellency of Gods workemanship in the creatures who commit it? And how hatefull is it in its selfe, when it is quite without any mixture of their sweetnesse? when wee would to the full set forth the vglinesse and euill of any thing, we vsually say, that it is as blacke or bad as the Divell himselfe; but yet as blacke and bad as he is, he is nothing so euill and vgly as any sinne; seeing this onely deformed and corrupted him, who was before glorious and beautifull; and if it were possible for him to wash himselfe cleane from this pollution and filthinesse, hee would againe appeare lovely and gracefull, like the Sunne in his brightnesse, or as an Angell of light, glorious and beautifull. The next whom God punished for sinne, were our first parents, who also were before their transgression most deare vnto God and amiable in his sight, as being the most excellent part of this earthly workmanship, and not much inferiour to the Angels themselues, seeing they were created according to his owne image, in wisdome, righteousnesse and holinesse. But yet when they sinned against God by breaking his Commandement, hee cast them out of favour, banished them his presence, stripped them of all his gifts, and adiudged them to suffer all the plagues and miseries of this life, and hell torments and eternall condemnation in the World to come. From which iust sentence few are acquited, notwithstanding that all-sufficient price of redemption payed by our Saviour, but remaine still (for want of applying Christs merits by faith) reprobated and adiudged to everlasting punishments with the Divell and his Angels. But above all the rest, the hatred of God against sinne, appeareth most fully and clearely in the example of Christ himselfe, who though hee were his onely begotten and most dearely beloued Sonne, of his owne nature and essence,

essence, and therefore of more worth than all men and Angels, with all other creatures of heauen and earth; and though hee were his immaculate Lambe free from the least spot or blemish of sinne and corruption in his owne most pure nature; yet when hee found sin vpon him, though it were not properly his owne, but the sins of the Elect, for which as our Surety hee did vndertake to satisfie his Fathers justice; hee so much abhorred sin assumed by him, that hee spared him no more than if he had beene a meere stranger or vtter enemy, but made him to drinke vp the full Vials of his wrath, vntill by his sufferings he had fully satisfied for sin, and washed it cleane out of Gods sight; both from himselfe and all the faithfull, in the pure streames of his precious bloud.

Secondly, the odiousnesse of sinne vnto God appeareth in that contrariety which is betweene it and his most holy nature; neither are fire and water, light and darknesse, Heauen and Hell, God and the Deuill, so opposite and contrary the one to the other, as the euill of sin is to this chiefe goodnes. In respect whereof, though Gods infinite power can do all things, yet he cannot sin; though Gods essence being incomprehensible be in al things, & all things in it, yet can neither sin be in it, nor it in sin; though his goodnesse and loue in some kind and measure be extended to all his creatures, for he causeth his Sun to shine, and raine to fall vpon the euill and vpon the good, yet doe they not in any respect extend vnto sin, but hee pursueth it wheresoeuer hee seeth it with mortall and implacable hatred; neither can the beauty, excellency or louelinesse of any creature in whom hee findeth it, any whit mitigate or abate it; but as the infusion of Coloquintida doth make all things bitter which are mixed with it, and is it selfe made sweet by nothing; so sinne doth make the most sweet things bitter, the most beautifull things vgly, and the creatures which are amiable and louely, to become most loathsome and odious in Gods sight; it selfe in the meane time being not made by any thing in which it subsisteth more sweete, beautifull, or amiable, or any whit lesse bitter, vgly, or odious. As therefore we would account that a most palpable and miraculous darknesse, which the brightest beames of the Sun could not penetrate and enlighten; that most bitter which nothing can sweeten; and that most hard, which nothing can molifie or make any thing softer: So must we needs confesse sin aboue all things in the world to bee most vgly and deformed, seeing beauty it selfe can in no degree beautifie it; most exorbitant and execrable, which omnipotency cannot doe; most euill, which cannot be bettered by the chiefe goodnesse, and most odious and abominable, seeing God who is loue it selfe, cannot chuse but detest and hate it.

And thus haue I shewed how hainous sin is in it owne nature, and also how it is vnto God most odious and abhominable: now we are further to consider how farre forth wee are guilty of it, and so lyable to that wrath and vengeance, which is due vnto it. Where after vnpartiall examination, wee shall find, that we are euery way most sinfull and wicked; for we are not onely guilty of the sinne of our first parents in whose loynes wee also transgressed; but wee haue deriued from them that contagious Leprosie of originall sin, which hath infected and corrupted; defiled and disabled all the powers and faculties of our soules, and all the members and parts of our bodies. Our vnderstandings are blinded with ignorance, our imaginations onely euill and that continually, our wils peruerse to any good duty, and theareful in imbracing sin; our memories registers of wicked sayings, sights, examples and actions, for our sinfull imaginations and concupiscence to worke and ruminate vpon, till they haue conceiued the like wickednesse, and offered it to the will, to bee borne and brought forth by consent and fact: our consciences seared, senselesse and benummed, not performing their duty in admonishing and accusing vs for our sins; our hearts and affections are the fountaines of all corruption, and the filthy forges wherein all concupiscence and sin is hammered and forged, till it come to its vgly shape and fashion. Our bodies which should be vndefiled Temples for the Holy Ghost to dwell in, are filthy Stewes and brothell Houses, wherein our soules and Sathan commit together spirituall whoredome and vncleannesse, our eyes are full of adultery and open passages, whereat the Deuill at his pleasure sendeth into vs whole troupes of temptations to besiege and surprize our soules; our eares like two wide gates giue free admittance to all filthy and sinfull discourses which defile and corrupt the heart; and all the rest of our senses, what are they but Panders to the pleasures of sinne; continually betraying and exposing our soules to be defiled and abused by them. Vnto which originall corruption of our whole natures wee haue added actuall transgressions, which as they haue beene hainous in their quality, so they haue matched and farre exceeded the haires of our heads, and the starres of Heauen in their number and multitude; the which we haue committed through the whole course of our liues, both in our childhood, youth and riper age, before and after our conuersion, and that not only through ignorance and infirmity, but also against knowledge and conscience, deliberately and wilfully, presumptuously and with an high hand against God.

Q. Sect. 11. That we are guilty of all manner of sin.

By all which it appeareth that as sin is balnous and of infinite guile, and consequently de-

Q. Sect. 12. That the smalnes of our afflictions being compared with the greatnesse of our sins should much increase our patience and comfort.

deserueth infinite punishment, so wee are infinitely guilty of this guilt, and innumerably culpable of all kindes of wickednesse: now further (that we may apply that which hath beene said to our present purpose) we are to consider that the knowledge hereof serueth much for the strengthening of our patience in our greatest crosses and calamities; and that whether wee compare our afflictions with our sins; or with those crosses and miseries which God hath justly inflicted vpon others, who notwithstanding haue not so grieuously offended. In respect of the former we are thus to meditate and reason with our selues; I am indeed grieuously afflicted, but what is my punishment in comparison of my sin? For if the least transgression of the Law deserueth the curse and wrath of God, his mortall hatred, all the plagues of this life, and eternall condemnation, Hell and destruction in the life to come, then to how many curses, to how much wrath and hatred, to how innumerable and fearefull plagues, to what and how great condemnation and hellish torments am I worthily lyable and subject, who haue committed sins innumerable in their number, and in their quality and quantity hainous and grieuous? Seeing therefore the Lord for his Christs sake is content to remit so much of the extremitie of his justice and my deserued punishment, as that he is willing to forgiue and free mee from those euerlasting torments of Hell fire, and contenteth himselfe with inflicting on me temporall chastisements, and that to this end that I should not bee condemned with the World, surely I haue great cause to beare his hand with patience, and meekly and quietly to submit my selfe vnto his will, though it should be his pleasure to inflict vpon mee all the plagues and miseries which are incident vnto all mankind; and not onely with patience, but also with thankfulnesse to acknowledge in my greatest miseries with the afflicted and captiued Church, that it is the great mercy of God that I am not vtterly consumed. For if euery malefactour quietly and patiently suffereth his lesser punishments, when he deserueth farre greater, and thankfully acknowledgeth the mercy of the judge, when by adjudging him to the whip, hee acquitteth him from the gallowes; Then how much more patiently and gratefully should I endure all temporall afflictions? Seeing my Iudge freeth me from those which are euerlasting, although my sins haue justly deserued them; and then how much more, seeing he remitteth the most of these worldly miseries also? And in stead of all inflicteth but some few, and that not those which are the greatest of all, with which neuertheless hee graciously mixeth many benefits and comforts, whereby their smart may be mitigated, and their sowernesse sweetned. I am indeed grieuously sicke, but alasse I haue deserued the death of the soule; I haue many crosses lying vpon me, but if I had my due, I should haue farre more and greater, euen all the miseries of this life and the life to come. I am tortured with sores, aches and paines, but what is all this in comparison of the merit of my sins, which haue justly deserued the terours of conscience & torments of Hell? I am by death deprived for a time of my children & friends, but my sins haue deserued to be depriued of the presence of God, and his Saints & angels, where is fulnes of joy for euermore; my earthly delights are taken from mee, I haue lost my riches, and my worldly honours haue left and forsaken me; but if the Lord should deale with me according to his righteous judgement, I might justly for my sins loose all my interest in the joyes and treasures reserued for me in Heauen, and bee ouer-whelmed with shame and confusion among the damned spirits. I am in prison, but if I had my due I should be in Hell; I am banished my Country, but if the mercy of God were not farre aboue my desert, I should euerlastingly bee exiled from the presence of God and from the heauenly Canaan. I am now subject to the pangs of death, but it is such an one, as endeth all my misery, and beginneth my glory and felicity; whereas my sins so grieuous and innumerable haue justly merited the euerlasting death of body and soule. And therefore seeing the Lord dealeth with me not according to my deserts, but his owne infinite mercies, inflicting vpon mee short and light afflictions, in stead of hellish and euerlasting torments, and (as it were) doth but pricke me with a Pin to awaken me out of the sleepe of sin, whereas I haue deserued to be mortally wounded and stabbed to the heart; I will not only with patience and meeknesse, but also with thanksgiuing and joy, prayse and magnifie his infinite mercies in the middest of those afflictions which hee layeth vpon me.

Lament. 3. 22.

And thus may we strengthen our patience, if we compare the smalnes of our affliction with the greatnesse of our sin: the like helpe we may haue, if wee will compare our light crosses with others more heauy punishments, though (for ought wee can see) their lesser offences are farre exceeded by our more haynous sins: for how many may we behold (if selfe-loue and impatiency blinde vs not) whose afflictions so farre exceed ours, that if they be compared, will make vs confesse that our heauiest crosses are but fatherly fauours, in comparison of their fearefull punishments? Thou hast lost thy riches; yet some friends regard and take care of thee; but how many haue there been, who hauing had farre greater wealth, haue with it lost their friends too, and so haue beene enforced to begge from doore to doore, and yet notwithstanding haue

Iob. 8.8. That the ... d ruine of ... then grea... punishme... who have ... offended, ... pared wi... lighter a... ons should ... make vs p... tient and ... fortable ... troubles.

haue miserably starued for want of relefe? Thou art pinched with pouerty, but thou haſt thine health, or meanes this, thou haſt ſome wealth to procure thy comfort: but how many haue beene depriued of both at once; and being as well Beggars as Lazers and diſeaſed perſons, would haue thought it a great happineſſe if being admitted into a Spittle, they might haue had any hope of helpe, and in the meane time begged by priuiledge? Thou art hated and oppreſſed by thine enemies from whom thou couldeſt expect no better; but how many ſuffer far greater euils from thoſe whom they eſteemed their deareſt friends? Thou art tormented with paine in thy body; but how many feeling no leſſe outward ſmart, are alſo inwardly afflicted with the ſickneſſe of the ſoule, the terrors of conſcience, and ſorrowes of mind? Thou are afflicted in thy conſcience with the burthen of ſin, and the tentations of Sathan, but thou haſt ſome wiſe and faithfull friends vnto whom thou mayeſt boldly vnfold thy doubts and griefes, and ſo receiue ſome comfort for the refreſhing of thy fainting ſoule; but how many are there as deeply perplexed and ſtrongly aſſaulted, ouer whom Satan obtaineth an eaſie victory being vtterly forſaken of God and men, and ſo left deſtitute of all meanes of recouery? Finally, thou art aſſaulted with afflictions, but others are ouercome; thou art ſhaken, but many are ouerthrowne. Thou haſt time and reſpite granted thee by God, not onely to take breath & gather ſtrength, but alſo to make good vſe of thy afflictions for the beginning or renuing of thy repentance and ſtrengthening of thy faith, that ſo they may indeed bee vnto thee chaſtiſements and fatherly corrections, which reforme thee of thy ſins and preſerue thee from condemnation; but how many haſt thou heard of who haue ſuddenly beene cut off with Gods vengeance, and preſently deſtroyed in the very act of ſin, whoſe iudgements might euen in the cenſure of charitie be intitled to the name puniſhments, which are not inflicted for the good of the party who ſuffereth them, but for the example of thoſe who ſee them? Wherein thy ſtate reſembleth Gods faithfull people, and theirs the curſed Nations; of both which God thus ſpeaketh by his Prophet; I am with thee (ſaith the Lord to his people) to ſaue thee, though I vtterly deſtroy all the Nations where I haue ſcattered thee, yet I will not vtterly deſtroy thee, but I will correct thee by iudgement, and not vtterly cut thee off. But though it were imagined, that thou canſt not truly apply vnto thee any of theſe conſolations, becauſe thy afflictions doe exceed all others. And though it were ſuppoſed that thou haſt no comforts to allay thy croſſes, but haſt with thy riches loſt thy friends, and ſeeſt brought to extreame penury; that with thy pouerty is joyned ſickneſſe; and that thou art alike wronged and oppreſſed with thy friends and enemies; that thou art both tormented in body and mind, and haſt no friend vnto whom thou mayeſt impart thy griefes; yet conſider that there are many whoſe ſins haue beene fewer and leſſe haynous, who after all the miſeries of this life, doe now ſuffer the euerlaſting torments of hell fire, in compariſon whereof all theſe worldly puniſhments are no more than ſmoke to the ſcorching flame, and a painted fire, to one which truly burneth. For how many children and fooles are (for ought wee know) in the ſtate of condemnation, and in the place of the damned; whom wee vſually call Innocents, and that not vnfitly if we compare their leſſer ſins with our enormous crimes, many of them hauing neuer committed any actuall ſin, but ſtanding onely guilty of that originall corruption in which they were conceiued and borne. How many Hypocrites haue their portion with the Deuill and his Angels, who haue ſeemed to ſerue God religiouſly in their whole liues, and haue kept themſelues vnblameable to the World, of many haynous faults and great crimes, of which if we were arraigned, we muſt needs plead guilty? How many Pagans and Ethnick Infidels are in the ſame condemnation, who haue beene excellently adorned with morall vertues, and haue carried themſelues iuſtly in all their wayes, ſo as no man could accuſe them of any notorious fault and groſſe crime of which our conſciences tell vs we are not innocents? And finally, how many of them broyle in theſe helliſh torments, who had they ſeene and heard that which we heare and ſee, euen the ſound and light of the Goſpell, ſounding and ſhining in their eares and eyes, would haue truly repented in ſack-cloth and aſhes, and haue brought forth better fruits of this their conuerſion than we, in their liues and converſations? If therefore we who by our more haynous ſins haue better deſerued theſe helliſh tortures and euerlaſting condemnation, are notwithſtanding through the mercies of God, and faith in Chriſt (for vnto beleeuers onely theſe comforts belong) deliuered and freed from them, whereas they periſh in their infidelity for their leſſer ſinnes, then ſurely haue wee great cauſe to beare not onely with patience, but alſo thankſgiuing, all the croſſes and afflictions which are incident vnto this life, ſeeing notwithſtanding our demerits, wee haue obtained ſo great a deliuerance, eſpecially if wee conſider that we receiue this mercy and ſpeciall fauour, of Gods meere grace, and free bountie & goodneſſe, hauing done nothing more to merit Gods loue, nor deſerue better reſpect by any thing which wee haue performed vnto him, than thoſe who are plunged into the deepeſt condemnation. And that the Lord himſelfe professeth, that in bestowing his benefits and with-holding his punishments, hee hath respect to his owne glory, name and covenant, and not to his peoples deserts and merits. Esay 48.9,11. For my Name sake (saith he) will I deferre my wrath, and for my prayse I will refraine it from thee, that I cut thee not off. For mine owne sake, for mine owne sake will I doe it. And although in his justice he might (as he saith) dealewith them as they had done, when Ezech.16.59. they did despise his oath in breaking his covenant; neuerthelesse, he promiseth to remember his covenant, made with them in the dayes of their youth, and to confirme vnto them an euerlasting covenant. So elsewhere he saith, Chap.20.44. Yee shall know that I am the Lord, when I haue respect vnto you for my Names sake, and not after your wicked wayes, nor according to your corrupt works, O yee house of Israel. The which should bee an effectuall argument to arme our patience, and a strong motiue to stirre vs vp to prayse and thanksgiuing in our greatest afflictions. For as when two male-factours are alike guilty of the same crime, if the Iudge should inflict vpon the one the full punishment which his fault deserueth, and mitigate the rigour of his justice to the other, adjudging him to some light chastisement in comparison of those exquisite tortures, which his fellow suffered, and he alike deserued; he who is thus fauoured and spared, would neuer murmure against so gracious a Iudge, nor beare his correction with impatiency and complayning, but rather would thinke himselfe much obliged by so great a fauour, and be alwayes ready to acknowledge it, to his Iudges prayse; so wee haue the like, yea, much greater cause of patience and thankfull acknowledgement of Gods infinite mercy and goodnesse towards vs; in that being alike guilty with many others of innumerable and grieuous sins, and consequently obnoxious vnto equall punishments; the Lord inflicting vpon them those torments and tortures which their sins deserued, doth of his meere grace & loue spare vs, inflicting vpon vs the short and momentany afflictions of this present life, in stead of those paines of Hell and euerlasting condemnation, which our sinnes deserued as well as theirs.

9. Sect. 14. Their obiection answered, who affirme that they are more grieuously afflicted, than others who haue more hainously offended.

But yet one objection may seeme to deserue an answere, whereby some doe justifie their impatiency and complayning; namely, that howsoeuer they cannot deny, but that they haue deserued far greater punishments than God hath inflicted on them; yet they are more grieuously afflicted than many other, who haue more haynously offended, and deserued farre greater crosses, by their far greater sinnes. Of whom I would aske, how many likewise they might obserue, whom in their owne consciences they acknowledge to haue beene lesse Sinners than themselues, and yet haue beene subjected to farre more and greater crosses. For are they as just as Iob, as holy as Dauid, as full of grace, & free from sinne as the Apostles of Iesus Christ; and yet how much did the afflictions of these holy men exceed theirs, if they were compared? But hee hath deserued more punishment than thou, and yet suffereth lesse: Yea, but doest thou suffer more than thou hast deserued? If not, then why is thine eye euill because God is good? or if thou wouldst haue a proportion equally obserued, then what can priuiledge thee from the euerlasting torments of the damned, seeing thou hast no lesse, yea, much more deserued them, than many of those who doe now suffer them. Againe, why doest thou judge another mans seruant, who standeth or falleth to his owne master? It may be thou hast more haynously sinned, did not hellish pride and partiall selfe-loue blind thine eyes, causing thee to put thine owne sins in the hinder part of the wallet, and thy Neighbours in the former; and to looke vpon thine owne faults vnder the cloud and vaile of false excuses, which will scarce suffer them to be discerned, or at least not to appeare in their naturall greatnes and scarlet die; but vpon others offences through the spectacles of hatred, enuy or hard conceit, which maketh them seeme farre greater than they are. Yea, it may be also (though thou thinkest the contrary) that they are much more grieuously afflicted; seeing the heauiest punishments are for the most part vnseene; and that being wicked (as thou judgest them) they doe not escape a measure of punishment according to the proportion of their sinne. For, for ought thou knowest they may be pursued with those hellish furies, the terrours and horrours of an euill conscience, and daily tormented with the scorching flames of Gods fearefull wrath due to their haynous sin. Or, though they be free from all these present euils, yet are they but like the Oxe fatted to the Shambles of destruction, and rocked in the cradle of worldly prosperity, that being brought into the deepe sleepe of carnall security, they may more quietly be carried into Hell. And therefore let vs not judge before the time, but resting assured that, howsoeuer it fareth with the wicked, it shall goe well with those that feare the Lord, let vs beare with patience that portion of affliction which God hath allotted vs, knowing that it is most fitting for vs, if we be in this number, seeing our draught is measured out vnto vs by the hand of justice and direction of wisdome, and qualified and mitigated when it exceedeth our strength, by an infinite mercy and compassion; which will not lay more vpon vs than wee are able to beare.

CHAP.

CHAP. IX.

That our afflictions are not signes of Gods hatred, nor the punishments of a righteous Iudge, but the chastisements of a gracious Father.

AND thus haue I shewed the first cause mouing the Lord to inflict vpon vs these crosses and calamities, namely, our sins which are the meritorious cause of all our afflictions; as also how we may arme our selues with patience by this consideration, seeing our sinne doth exceed our smart, and our punishments are farre lesse than wee haue deserued: Now we are to proceed to the other cause mouing the Lord thus to chastise & correct vs, which is out of our selues in him, namely, his infinite loue and boundlesse mercy, which moueth him to apply these wholesome, though sharpe medicines, for the curing of our desperate diseases; and to vse these profitable, though vnpleasant meanes for the purging of our sins, the enriching of vs with the vnualuable treasures of his spirituall graces, and the furthering of our eternall happines. From whence ariseth our chiefest consolation in all our distresse and misery, and not onely patience in troubles, but also contentednesse, thankfulnesse, and joy in the Holy Ghost. It is true that the former considerations, of Gods prouidence appointing, ruling and disposing all our afflictions, and of his justice mixed and moderated with his loue and mercy, which layeth nothing vpon vs but what our sins haue deserued, yea, farre fewer and lighter punishments than we haue justly merited with our innumerable offences, and most haynous rebellion, may well perswade vs to patience in our greatest calamities; but yet if we stay heere and goe no further, our patience will be but vnpleasant and forced hauing in it no comfort, sweetnesse or spirituall joy; for our flesh being sensible of nothing but of present paine, and being hopelesse either of deliuerance, or of future profit by our sufferings; will make vs easily to forget Gods moderation in punishing, and the haynousnesse of our sins deseruing far greater punishments; and neuer comparing our faules with the euils which we feele, but onely looking vpon the miseries which wee indure, and our owne weaknesse and inability to beare them any longer, will cause vs in all impatiency to murmure and repine against Gods prouidence, which hath inflicted on vs more heauy punishments than others suffer, who (as selfe-loue perswadeth vs) haue more offended. Or if our consciences tell vs that our sins haue justly deserued these and greater punishments; yet (howsoeuer this may justly cause vs to beare with more outward patience that which we haue deserued) it will not much abate our inward griefe, or increase our comfort, vnlesse wee bee assured that God measureth out vnto vs this proportion of affliction by the standard of his loue, and will in the end conuert it to our good, bringing sweetnesse out of bitternesse, and joy out of mourning. Yea, rather the waight of sin being added to the waight of our punishment; our euill of doing, concurring with our euill of suffering, and both joyned with selfe-guiltinesse, and the apprehension of Gods inflamed wrath, will but the more oppresse vs with griefe; when as wee cannot so much as with any shew of reason ease our selues by expostulation, nor vent out any part of our sorrow by just complayning, seeing wee are the onely causes of our owne harmes. And looke how much it addeth to our patience in respect of God, whom wee justifie in his righteous judgements; so much it increaseth our impatiency in respect of our selues, who haue incensed and inflamed so just a wrath, and so mercifull a justice to our ruine and destruction, and whilest it empoysoneth our hearts of grudging and repining, and our mouthes of murmuring and exclayming against Gods wise prouidence, which selfe-guiltines causeth vs to justifie in all the euils which are inflicted on vs: it filleth them with fretting indignation, quarrelsome complaints, and impatient inuectiues both against our selues, who haue beene the chiefe causes; and also against all secondary and inferiour meanes, which the Lord hath vsed as his instruments for the execution of his judgements. Neither is it likely that wee should stay here, but if we doe not labour to see Gods Fatherly affection euen in his frownes, and to discerne the beames of his loue and fauour through the cloud of our miseries and afflictions; we will in short time like malefactours fal out with justice it selfe, because it maketh against vs, hate the impartiall vprightnesse of our judge, as though it were the extreamest cruelty, and flye from his sight and presence as though he were our greatest enemy.

That therefore those who are exercised in this irkesome combat of afflictions may haue not onely quiet patience, but also sweet comfort and contentment in all their crosses and troubles, we will in the next place shew, that the cause mouing the Lord to afflict the faithfull is, not his wrath and displeasure, much lesse any malice or hatred which he beareth them, but his meere mercy, loue and goodnesse, which moueth him thus to chastize and correct them, that they may not run on in the pleasing course of sin, and so be condemned with the World. The which point and passage I hold the more necessary in this Discourse, because both the world and our owne flesh are alwayes ready to judge of Gods loue and fauour, and of his hatred and displeasure, by the outward estate; and therefore as they thinke those most blessed and happy, vpon whom God multiplyeth, and (as it were) showreth, his earthly benefits; so they judge them most miserable and forlorne, who are in aduersity and affliction, as being men rejected and forsaken of God, because (whatsoeuer shew they haue made in the world to the contrary) they haue more grieuously offended him by their sins than any other. An example whereof wee haue in the Iewes, who judged those vpon whom the tower of Siloam fell greater sinners than other men, because they were oppressed with this heauy judgement; and in the Barbarians, who condemned Paul as a murtherer, or some notorious sinner, because they saw him indangered by a Viper; and contrariwise magnified him as a God, because hee had escaped this bodily harme. Yea, so fast doth this corruption cleaue vnto vs, that as long as we carry this flesh about vs, wee are subject to be ouertaken by this false and deceiuing judgement, though wee bee in some measure inlightened and sanctified by the Spirit of God: As we may see in the example of Iobs friends, who being otherwise wise, religious and worthy men, yet when they saw the greatnes of his afflictions, they passed vpon him a most vncharitable censure; and when they could not with any probability judge him a prophane and notorious sinner, because his life had beene vnblameable and vnspotted, they condemned him for a cunning and secret Hypocrite, who had made shew of those vertues which were not in him; yea, euen holy Dauid himselfe was much shaken with this tentation; for as himselfe confesseth his feet slipped, and were almost gone out of the path of godlines & integrity, when on the one side he saw the prosperity of the wicked, & on the other the afflictions vnto which himself, & other of the faithfull were daily subject; yea, so was the eye of holy reason dazeled, and the light of the Scriptures clouded and (as it were) eclypsed from him, with the interposition of worldly and carnall tentations, that following onely the judgement of sense, hee acknowledgeth that hee was become foolish and ignorant like a beast, judging of all things by the outward shew; vntill hauing recourse vnto the Sanctuary, the light of Gods Word againe appeared and dispelled those mists and fogs of earthly and carnall errours which before blinded him. And howsoeuer being inlightned with Gods Word and assisted with his holy spirit, he still got the victory ouer this tentation, yet how often regaining strength by new afflictions doth it returne vpon him, and encounter him afresh as though it had beene neuer foyled. For if we look into the Booke of the Psalmes we shall find, that being exercised with afflictions he complayneth, that God hid his eies, and would not see his miseries, and stopt his eares and would not heare his prayers, that hee was corrected in Gods wrath and anger, and that his iealousie did burne against him like fire: and finally that God had forgotten and forsaken him, that his fauour was cleane gone, that hee would be no more intreated, and that hee had shut vp his tender mercies in displeasure. Thus also Ieremy was so farre transported with the violence of this tentation grounded vpon the prosperity of the wicked, and afflictions of the faithfull, that though hee durst not dispute with God because he knew him just & righteous in all his wayes, yet he dareth to offer a parley and conference about the administration of his judgements. And the Disciples themselues though they were inured to afflictions, yet when they saw an heauier judgement than ordinary inflicted vpon the blind man, were ready to judge that it was either for his owne sins or the sins of his parents. Yea, this is not the errour of some few men alone, but euen of the whole Church in her afflictions; for euen Sion said the Lord hath forsaken me; and my Lord hath forgotten me.

Ps. 119. 2. That the world iudgeth of Gods loue and hatred towards men by their outward estate.

And therefore seeing this tentation is so strong and dangerous, it behoueth vs to arme our selues against it, least in the time of triall we likewise be surprized and ouercome, and that the rather, because it maketh way for another tentation much more pernicious then it selfe, namely, for hopelesse despaire, and hellish prophaneneſse which attends vpon it, for euen Dauid himselfe being pressed and pinched with the waight of his afflictions, was ready to conclude that hee had cleansed his heart and washed his hands in innocency in vaine, because whilest the wicked flourished, hee was daily punished and chastened euery morning. But the violence of this tentation more plainly appeareth when those are tryed with it, who being wholy carnall haue no grace to make resistance, for the flesh being pressed with the burthen of the Crosse, is ready to conceiue, that the afflictions which it beareth are the signes of Gods wrath, and implacable anger, and that there is now no hope of receiuing any good by seruing of God, being so much displeased, nor of freedome from these euils, though there should be a surceasing from the course of sinning; and therefore in this desperate case being tempted by the Deuill or the World, to leave the seruice of God, wherein there is no profit, and to runne on in a headlong course of sinne, wherein for the present there is pleasure and delight, it doth with all readinesse giue way vnto this tentation. An example whereof we haue in the stiff-necked Iewes, who because for their outward and formall seruice of God, they had not for their reward that worldly prosperity which they Luke 13.1,2. Acts 28.4.

Iob 11.6.

Psal.73.2. 87.22.

Psal.13.1. and 22.1. and 79.5. and 77.7,8,9.

Ier.12.1.

Iohn 9.2,3.

Esay 49.14.

§. Sect. 3. That the former conceit is the ground of a most dangerous tentation.

Psal.73.13.

expected, but rather were exercised with troubles and afflictions, they burst out into these desperate speeches; It is in vaine to serue God; and what profit is it that wee keepe his commandements, & that we walke humbly before the Lord of hoasts? therefore we count the proud blessed. Euen they that worke wickednesse are set vp, yea and they that tempt God are deliuered. So elsewhere, when the Lord by the summons of afflictions did call them to weeping and mourning, to baldnesse and girding with sackcloth, they spent their time in ioy and gladnesse, in feasting and drinking, resoluing to take their pleasure whilest they might haue it, because on the morrow they should dye. And in another place they professe that they thought it bootlesse to repent, because being punished in Gods wrath for their sinnes, they had no hope of mercy and deliuerance, though they should forsake their wicked wayes; If (say they) our transgressions and our sinnes be vpon vs, and wee are consumed because of them, how shall we then liue? And therefore being at this desperate point, the Lord is faine to admonish them by his Prophet, that he thus corrected them in his loue and mercie for their conuersion, and not in wrath and anger for their destruction: Say vnto them (saith the Lord God) as I liue, I desire not the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turne from his way and liue. Turne you, turne you, from your euill wayes, for why will yee dye O yee house of Israel?

That therefore these and such like tentations may not foile our faith, and cause vs to make shipwracke in the tempestuous storme of troubles and afflictions; let vs first generally know, that as worldly prosperitie is no certaine signe of Gods fauour, nor of his sinceritie, piety and righteousnesse who hath it, (the which I haue in the former part of this treatise plainly proued) so contrariwise worldly aduersity, crosses and calamities, are no infallable tokens of Gods displeasure; nor of his impiety and wickednesse who is tossed and turmoyled with them. For these things fall out alike to all, and as the Lord doth in mercy and goodnesse giue these temporall benefits vnto his Children, whose godlinesse hath the promises of this life and the life to come; so doth hee giue them oftentimes to the wicked and reprobate as their portion in this life, and that in his wrath and heauie displeasure, onely to encrease the bills of their account and fearefull reckoning at the day of judgement, and to aggrauate the dreadfull waight of their condemnation. And so in like manner as hee doth sometimes lay these temporary crosses and calamities vpon his owne Children and faithfull Seruants, for their triall or chastisement, that hereby hee may further and encrease their eternall happinesse; so doth hee sometimes inflict them vpon carnall worldlings and desperate sinners, that hee may begin their hell in this life, and whilest they remaine on Earth, may enter them into the possession of those neuer ending torments of Hell Fire. To this truth the wise man giueth a plaine testimonie, where speaking of these earthly benefits and crosses, he saith that no man knoweth either loue or hatred by all that is before them. All things come alike to all; and the same condition is to the iust and to the wicked, to the good and to the pure, and to the polluted: and to him that sacrificeth, and to him that sacrificeth not; as is the good, so is the sinner; hee that sweareth, and hee that feareth an oath. This is an euill among all that is done vnder the Sunne, that there is one condition to all, &c. So our Sauiour Christ sheweth in the parable of Dines and Lazarus, that neither worldly prosperitie is a signe of Gods loue, nor aduersitie of his hatred, and correcteth this peruerse judgement, both in his disciples censuring the blinde man, or his parents as enormous sinners, because of this punishment which God inflicted on him; and in the Iewes, who thought, that the eighteene vpon whom the tower of Siloam fell, and the Galileans, whose blood Pilate mingled with their sacrifices, were greater sinners than other men, because they were ouertaken by these great and suddaine judgements; shewing that the former crosse was inflicted, not for the sin of the party or his parents, but that the workes of God might bee manifest in him; and that the other were not thus punished because they were greater sinners than other men, but that they might bee examples vnto others of Gods anger against sinne, that they might bring thē to repentance. But I shal not need to illustrate this truth by examples, seeing they are so ordinary in the Scriptures, that a man shall not lightly read any page in the history of the Bible, where hee shall not find both afflictions and temporall benefits (as it were) in common cast out to the good and bad, sometimes the one, and sometimes the other flourishing in prosperitie, or dejected and cast downe into miserie and aduersitie.

Eccles. 9. 1. 2.

Luk. 16.

Iob. 9. 2. 3.

Luk. 13. 3.

But though this which I haue said generally, may iustly take away all secure presumption from carnall worldlings, whereby they perswade themselues of Gods loue, because they flourish in outward prosperity, and also all cause of horrour and desperation from them who are in misery and affliction, because there is no certaine judgement by this externall estate, all things falling out alike to all: yet seeing no man out of this generality can gather vnto himself any sound comfort, seeing hee may bee as well one of them whom God punisheth in his anger and wrath, as of them whom hee correcteth in

9. Sect. 5.
In what sense God is said to be angry with the faithfull, and to punish their sinnes.

loue and mercie: therefore in the next place I will more specially shew, that euery faithfull man, who feareth God, both in his mercies and iudgements, and desireth to profit by his chastisements and corrections, may to his comfort bee most certainely assured, that the afflictions which hee suffereth are not the fruites and effects of Gods wrath and hatred towards him, but of his fatherly loue and goodnesse; not the deserued punishments of his sinnes, but gentle chastisements and profitable trials, which shall tend to the aduancing of Gods glory, in the further enriching him with his spirituall graces in this life, and in the euerlasting saluation of his body and soule in the life to come. For the clearing of the former point, namely that the afflictions of the faithfull are not the fruits of Gods anger, nor imposed vpon them as punishments for their sinnes, wee are to know that these words, wrath, anger and punishment, are either taken largely, or strictly and properly. In a large signification God is said to be angry with his Seruants and Children, when hee doth afflict them, but not as a seuere Iudge out of the rigour of iustice to punish the person for the sinnes sake, but as a gracious Father out of meere loue that hee may destroy sinne for the persons sake; neither hath hee any quarrell to the party, but onely to the sinne, and therefore in loue to his Childe, and in hatred to his faultinesse, hee doth by affliction mortifie the sinne which he abhorreth, that by the death therof he may preserue his Son whom hee loueth vnto euerlasting life and happinesse. And so hee may bee said to bee angry, not with the person for his hatred to the sinne, but with the sinne, for the loue of the person. Hee is not angry with his Children in truth, because hee alwayes looketh vpon them in his Sonne Christ in whom hee is well pleased, nor correcteth them in wrath after they are in Christ reconciled vnto him, seeing the cause of reconciliation for euer remaineth, euen the merit of Christs death and blood-shed, whereby his iustice is satisfied, and his wrath appeased; but onely in semblance and shew, hee (like a wise Father) frowneth vpon them, that they may bee more watchfull ouer their wayes for the time to come, and not runne on in such a course of sinne as would iustly deserue his wrath and displeasure. Hee is not angry in iustice, because we haue sinned, but in mercy, that wee may sinne no more; not in his owne affection and disposition, but in our feeling and apprehension, because our guilty consciences tell vs what wee haue deserued; and because the corrupt humours of sinne adhere and cleaue so fast vnto vs, that our spirituall Physitian is faine to giue vs these bitter potions of afflictions to purge them away, which for the present making vs sicke, in our sense doth cause vs to conceiue & complaine of him as an enemie who hateth and hurteth vs, if wee looke to our present feeling, and not to his end, which is our spirituall cure and the recouery of our health. The like also may bee said of punishment, for if wee take it in a large signification, it comprehendeth both the afflictions of the godly and the torments of the wicked: first because if wee respect the matter of them, and the euils themselues which are suffered both by the faithfull and the wicked, they are all one. Secondly, because in the law they are threatned as punishments of sinne against euery one who offendeth. And thirdly, because in the sense and feeling of the outward man, they are both alike; euen as there is no difference betweene the smart of the stripes felt by a slaue and by a Sonne, sauing that these are some time inflicted by a more light and gentle hand. But if wee take it in a strict and proper sense, then is punishment so appropriated and peculiar to the wicked, that it is no way incident to the faithfull and righteous. For punishment is inflicted vpon enemies, and not vpon friends; by a iust Iudge and not by a gracious Father; to satisfie iustice by suffering that punishment which the fault hath deserued, though it bee to the vtter destruction of the party offending; and not out of loue to preserue him from greater harme by reclaiming him from his faultines; because hee hath offended already, and not that hee may take heede of offending for the time to come. Finally the cause of punishment is the fault of the party, and not desire of his amendment; and the end of the punisher is to reuenge and hurt the malefactor for the good of others, to whom he serueth for an example of iustice; and not to seeke his profit and benefit by reclaiming him from his fault; for iustice in punishing will haue its course for sinne already committed, though the offender could giue assurance of his amendment for the time to come.

But that the afflictions of the faithfull are not the fruits of Gods anger, nor punishments for their sinnes, it may further appeare by these reasons; first because Christ our Sauiour bore all our sinnes in his body vpon the tree, as the Apostle Peter speaketh, and suffered the punishment which was due vnto them, that wee might be freed from it, according to that of the Prophet: Surely hee hath borne our infirmities, and carried our sorrowes, &c. Hee was wounded for our transgressions, hee was broken for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was vpon him, and with his stripes we are healed. But I demand to what purpose did hee beare our infirmities and sorrowes, if we must still beare them? to what end was he wounded and broken for our sinnes, if they shall wound and and breake vs? or finally how haue we peace by his sufferings, or how are we healed with his stripes, if we are still at warre with Gods iustice, and still receiue stripes and wounds in this conflict? Againe had not Christ freed vs from all the punishment due vnto our sinnes, hee were not a perfect Sauiour, nor did not offer vnto his Father a full and all-sufficient price for our redemption; for if he did perfectly deliuer vs from all enemies, then from lesse sins as well as from greater; if hee did perfectly saue vs, then from temporall punishments, as well as from eternall; if his sacrifice were all-sufficient for the sins of the whole world, then need wee not (as the Papists affirme) to haue the sacrifice of our owne sufferings still offered to make satisfaction for our veniall sinnes. But the Scriptures euery where, and especially in the epistle to the Hebrewes, teach vs, that Christ is a perfect Sauiour that hee hath deliuered vs from all our enemies, and hath offered vnto his Father an all-sufficient sacrifice, and full price for our redemption; and therefore there remaineth vnto the faithfull, who apply Christ and his sufferings vnto themselues, no more punishments, nor satisfaction thereby to bee made vnto God: for Christ hath fully satisfied for vs by his all-sufficient sacrifice of himselfe, and the precious bloud of Iesus Christ hath cleansed vs from all our sins, as the Apostle teacheth vs. Now if it haue cleansed vs from all sinne, then also from veniall sinnes (as the Papists terme them) and consequently from all punishment; for where there is no guilt, there punishment hath no place, and if we be freed from transgression of the Law then also from the curse. It is true indeed that the afflictions which the faithfull suffer, are in their owne nature the punishments of sinne, and as punishments are denounced against the transgressours of the Law; but Christ by his sufferings hath changed their nature, and as by reconciling vs vnto God, he hath made him of a seuere iudge, a mercifull Father; so he hath made our sufferings to become the chastisements of a gracious Father inflicted for our good, and not the punishments of a righteous iudge imposed for the satisfying of his iustice, and the destruction or hurt of him who sufferech them, neither is it materiall, that in matter the sufferings of the faithfull and wicked be the same, that is, the same sicknesse, pouerty, imprisonment and the like; for euen the Sonne and the slaue doe often suffer the same stripes, but yet these are punishments, being inflicted by the hand of an angry Master, for the fault committed; those, the chastisements of a louing Father correcting his Childe for his good and amendment. And so though the afflictions of the faithfull and the punishments of the wicked are of the same nature in respect of themselues, yet their nature being changed by the sufferings of Christ, they doe now much differ both in respect of their agent, and their end, the one comming from a Father, the other from a iudge, they to profit and doe good, and these to hurt and bring to destruction. And though these waters of Meribah bee all alike bitter to the Canaanitish sinner, and the true Israelite in whom there is no guile, in respect of their naturall tast, yet the wood of Christs crosse doth make these bitter waters sweete, and purifying them from the coliquintids and gall of sinne, doth make them wholesome drinke and profitable potions, which will quench our thirsting after the pleasures of sinne, and the poysonous cups of worldly vanities.

§. Sect. 6. The first reason to proue that the afflictions of the faithfull are not punishments but fatherly chastisements. 1. Pet. 2. 24. Esa. 53. 5. 6.

9. Sect. 7. The second reason taken from the full payment of our debt by Christ our surety.

Secondly, Christ taking vpon him to bee our surety hath paid our debt to the vttermost farthing, fully satisfied Gods iustice, and appeased his wrath towards vs by taking away our sinnes which were the cause thereof. For standing in our stead and taking vpon him to discharge our debt, hee was arrested by death at the suit of Gods iustice, and cast into the prison of the graue, till hee had discharged our debt to the vttermost farthing, but now he hath broken the bands of death, and being deliuered out of this prison is risen againe; and gloriously ascended; whereby hee hath certainely assured vs that hee hath satisfied Gods iustice by full paiment of our debt, and therefore hath left nothing vpon the score for vs to satisfie; yea hee hath cancelled the hand-writing of ordinances and the obligation of the Law by nailing them to his crosse, and hath taken away the penalty of the curse, by bearing it himselfe. And therefore seeing Christ hath fully satisfied by his sufferings the iustice of God; hee will not require a new satisfaction by our sufferings and punishments; seeing hee hath fully discharged our debt to the vtmost farthing, he will not vniustly require from vs a second paiment or though it could bee imagined, (as bee it farre from vs that wee should so imagine) that the Iudge of Heauen and Earth could vse this rigorous strictnesse; yet hee hath nothing to shew if he should commence suite against vs, seeing our surety vpon the discharge of our debt, hath cancelled all the writings whereby wee were obliged to his iustice, either to make payment or to suffer punishment. Neither is that of any force which is objected by our aduersaries; namely, that hee suffered to satisfie Gods iustice for our greater sinnes, and so hath freed vs from eternall punishments; but hath left our veniall sinnes to bee satisfied for by our selues, from the which wee are freed, whilest wee satisfie Gods iustice by our temporarie punishments: For the word of God hath

Col. 2. 14. Gal. 3. 13.

taught

taught vs, that hee is a perfect Sauiour, that in him wee haue full redemption, and that his blood purgeth vs from all our sinnes, without any exception or limitation. Againe, as the satisfaction which Christ made for vs was all-sufficient, and the price which hee offered for our redemption of infinite merite and value; so both the iustice and mercy of God, whereby hee accepted them for full payment, are also infinite. Whereas, if (as our aduersaries affirme) we are to satisfie by our temporary punishments for our veniall sinnes, then must it needs follow, that either Christs satisfaction was imperfect, and his sufferings so insufficient, that they needed to bee patched vp with our punishments; or that being perfect and all-sufficient, God should be, not onely vnmercifull but iniust also, in not accepting of this full discharge, but requiring payment of a debt by vs, which our surety hath already discharged: either of which were blasphemous to speake or thinke. For he that suffered for vs was not man onely, but God also, and therefore needs must his sufferings bee all-sufficient and of infinite value and merit; and the mercies of God being infinite, and farre aboue all his workes, doe make him so farre off from punishing, where his iustice being satisfied, willeth him to spare, that when hee doth afflict his Church and people for their sinnes, hee is said to doe his strange worke, vnto which out of his owne nature hee is averse and indisposed; to haue his soule grieued for the misery of Israell; and to make stay of the execution of these iudgements, till by reason of the multitude of their sinnes ioyned with impenitencie, there be no remedie. But as in these respects this assertion sauoureth of impietie; so also of extreame follie, vnlesse they will with like impietie shift it off themselues by imputing it vnto their Creatour: For who can imagine that God infinite in wisedome and bountie should frankly, for the merites of his Son, forgiue our enormous and grieuous sinnes, and punish vs for these which are small and veniall? that his loue should enlarge it selfe to the remitting and releasing vs from the euerlasting torments of Hell fire; and bee straightned in forgiuing vs those sins which are small, and (as they call them) veniall: as if a King should out of his great liberality forgiue his poore and miserable subiect tenne thousand talents; and afterwards miserably exact a base reckoning of some few pence; or as though a Iudge should pardon a malefactour for his horrible treasons or cruell murthers, and should punish him for some petie theft. But it is further obiected, that the iniquity of Ierusalem is pardoned, because she had receiued double of the Lords hands for all her sins. Vnto which I answere that this is not the speech of a Iudge punishing malefactours for their sinnes, and surceasing from punishment after that his iustice is satisfied; but of a most gracious and compassionate Father, who hauing seuerely corrected the faults of his Sonne for his amendement, yearneth in his bowels of loue and tender mercie, when hee knoweth his smart and paine, and seeth him humbling himselfe before him by true repentance. For that it cannot with any probability of truth be vnderstood of the satisfying Gods iustice by their suffering of punishment, it hereby appeareth in that hee saith, that they had suffered double for their sinnes; the which must needs haue relation to the compassion of a tender Father, the greatnesse of whose loue moueth him to thinke that a few stripes inflicted on his humbled Childe, are enough and too much for his great faults; and not to the iustice of a Iudge, proportionating his punishment according to the demerit of the offence; seeing the least of our sinnes being committed against the infinite Majestie of God, deserue the euerlasting torments of Hell fire, and therefore cannot bee truely said to bee punished double, though all the plagues of this life were inflicted vpon vs. Besides, if we should vnderstand these words of punishments inflicted to satisfie for sinnes, how will it stand with Gods iustice, and much lesse with his mercie and goodnesse, to inflict vpon his Seruants twice as much punishment as their faults haue deserued?

Act. 20. 28.

Esa. 28. 21.

Iud. 10. 16.

1. Chron. 36. 16.

Esa. 40. 2.

And thus it appeareth that the afflictions of the faithfull are not punishments for their sinnes to satisfie the iustice of God, seeing our Sauiour hath borne all the punishments due vnto our sinnes, fully satisfied Gods iustice and discharged our debt, by offering himselfe vnto his Father, as a sacrifice for sinne, and by paying a price of infinite value and merit for our redemption. And therefore, wee are not punished as slaues, but chastised as Sonnes, not so much because we haue offended our heauenly Father, as because wee should, being in awe and vnder discipline, offend no more. For if an earthly Parent doth not correct his Sonne, to take reuenge for the fault committed, but to keepe him from running into the like fault for the time to come; and taking no pleasure, but rather griefe and compassion in his smart and torment, would willingly pardon his fault and remit his punishment, if he were fully assured, that he would offend no more, vnlesse it be in regard of the rest of his Children, whom hee would not haue encouraged to commit the like fault through this conniuencie and impunity; then how much lesse will the Lord who is loue, mercy, and goodnesse it selfe, punish his Sonnes to satisfie his iustice in taking reuenge by their paine and torture? especially considering that his iustice is satisfied, and their faults pardoned pardoned by the sufferings and obedience of Iesus Christ. For so one saith, that Christ by taking vpon him our punishment, and not being guilty of our faults, hath quite done away both fault and punishment. And againe, the Sonne of God hath taken vpon him the flesh of sinners, and the punishment without the fault, that in the flesh of sinners both the fault and punishment should bee discharged and remitted. And therefore our afflictions are no punishments for sinne past, but are inflicted by our heauenly Father to prevent sinne for the time to come, either in vs, after we haue felt the smart of it, or in other of our Brethren, who seeing sin corrected in vs, are warned to take heed of it by our example.

Iob. 5. 17. The conclusion of the former reasons.

The third argument, to proue that the afflictions of the faithfull are onely chastisements of a Father, and not punishments of a Iudge may be this; where there is no sinne, there is no place for punishment; but in the faithfull there is no sinne, because it is not imputed vnto them, for first all their sinne is washed and purged away by the blood of Christ; and they being iustified for his righteousnesse and obedience are accepted as righteous in Gods sight. So the Apostle Paul saith, that wee haue redemption through his blood, that is, the forgiuenesse of sinnes; and againe, you which were dead in sinnes, and in the vncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickned together with him, forgiuing you all your trespasses. To the same purpose the Apostle Iohn saith, that, he hath washed vs from our sinnes in his blood: and else where, that the blood of Christ cleanseth vs from all sinne. In which respect hee is called by Iohn the Baptist, the Lambe of God which taketh away the sinne of the World. Secondly, all the faithfull are in the couenant of grace, this being the onely condition which God requireth, that wee doe beleeue; but it is one speciall branch of this couenant, that God will forgiue their iniquity, and will remember their sinnes no more: and therefore if God so remit the sinnes of the faithfull, that he will not so much as remember them, how farre is he from punishing them when they are thus forgiuen? So when the Lord would expresse this couenant of grace by the similitude of mariage, he promiseth to marry the faithfull vnto himselfe in righteousnesse and iudgement; and because on the one side, it was easie to beate and punish his spouse, because of this neere vnion betweene them: and because on the other side, shee was so full of faults and infirmities, that by her sins shee would deserue to bee punished, therefore he addeth, that hee will marry her also in mercy and in compassions, whereby in and for his Sonne Iesus Christ, he would remit and pardon her sinnes, and not inflict those iudgements and punishments, though shee did deserue them. Finally, the places of Scripture where the Lord promiseth forgiuenesse of sinnes, doe plainely euince that God doth so pardon them, that hee doth neuer call them into iudgement, neither in this world to punish them with temporall punishments, nor with euerlasting condemnation in the world to come. So he promiseth the Iewes, that if they would turne from their sinnes by true repentance, though they were as crimson, they should bee made white as snow; though they were red like scarlet, they should be made like vnto woll. So the Lord saith by the Prophet Ieremie that he would so pardon the iniquities of his people, that though one should diligently seeke them, yet he should by no meanes find them. In those dayes, and at that time (saith the Lord) the iniquities of Israel shall bee sought for, and there shall be none; and the sinnes of Iudah, and they shall not be found; for I will bee mercifull vnto them whom I reserue. Now how can they bee thus cleane purged and washed, if some part of the punishment doth still remaine? Or how are they not to be found, if hee who committeth them bee punished for them? Againe, the Lord saith by the Prophet Esay, that hee would put away the transgressions of his people like a cloude, and their sinnes like a mist: and by Micah, that he would cast all their sinnes into the bottome of the Sea. And Dauid, to signifie the forgiuenesse of sinne, vseth the phrase of couering, and not imputing them; but if the Lord looketh vpon our sinnes to punish them, how can he bee said to put them away as a cloud? If in this life he bring them into iudgement, how doth hee cast them into the bottome of the Sea? And if by punishing hee bring them to an account, how can hee bee said to couer, or not impute them? Finally the contrary phrases vsed in the Scriptures being truly expounded, may serue as a comment to shew what these meane, for if he seale vp iniquity in a bagge, to write and register vp the sinne of the people with a pen of iron, and the point of a diamond, to bind vp iniquity, and to keepe it in store, doe signifie that God will bring them to iudgement, by punishing them in the wicked, and correcting them in the faithfull, then contrariwise not to remember sin, to wash it away, to hide it out of sight, and cast it into the bottome of the Sea, must needs signifie, that God will neuer lay it to the charge of the faithfull, nor inflict any of that punishment on them which they haue deserued.

Psal. 103. 12.
Esa. 1. 18.
Ier. 50. 20.
Esa. 44. 22.
Mica. 7. 19.
Psal. 32. 1.
Iob. 14. 17.
Ier. 17. 1.
Hos. 13. 12.

The fourth argument, which proueth that the afflictions of the faithfull are not punishments, is because they doe tend to our good, euen to the mortifying of our sins, the multiplying and encreasing of Gods spirituall graces in vs, and the furthering of our

4. Sect. 10. The fourth reason is, because our afflictions tend to the edifying of our good.

our everlasting happines. And this argument the Apostle purposely vseth to comfort those who are vnder the crosse, not only because our present afflictions shall be ouerweighed with an incomparable waight of future glory, but also because all things whatsoeuer, and they among the rest, worke together for the best vnto them that loue God. So elsewhere he telleth vs, that when wee are thus iudged wee are chastened of the Lord because we should not bee condemned with the world; that he chastneth vs for our profit, that wee might bee partakers of his holinesse; that though for the present is bee grieuous to the sense, yet it bringeth the quiet fruit of righteousnesse vnto them which are thereby exercised, and that these short and light afflictions shall cause vnto vs a farre most excellent and an eternall waight of glory. And this good and singular profit which commeth to the faithfull by their afflictions the Prophet Dauid out of experience confessed that hee had received; It is good (saith hee) for mee that I haue beene afflicted, that I may learne thy statutes; and the Church in the lamentations affirmeth, that it is good for a man that hee beare the yoake in his youth. By all which it plainely appeareth that these afflictions are not punishments vnto the faithful, seeing they are inflicted for the hurt, and not for the good of the party, to satisfie iustice, and not out of any loue, to take vpon them due reuenge for the euill they haue committed, though it be to their vtter destruction, and not to confer and deriue vnto them any temporall benefit, and much lesse that maine benefit of their euerlasting joy and happinesse.

Rom. 8. 28, 18.

1. Cor. 11. 32.

Heb. 12. 10. 11.

2. Cor. 4. 17.

Psal. 119. 71.

Lam. 3. 27.

§. Sect. 11. The fifth reason is, because our afflictions are a meanes of eternall blessednesse.

Lastly that cannot bee a punishment which is either a cause or meanes of eternall blessednesse; but by the testimony of the holy Ghost they are pronounced blessed who are thus afflicted and corrected, the Lord vsing it as a meanes to keepe them in his feare, and to instruct them in the way of his commandements, which leadeth vnto this euerlasting blessednesse and happinesse in his Kingdome, according to that of the Psalmist; Blessed is the man whom thou chastisest O Lord, and teachest him in thy Law: that thou mayest giue him rest from the dayes of euill, whilest the pit is digged for the wicked. And hereof it is, that he receiued comfort; not onely from Gods staffe supporting and defending him, but also from his rod correcting and chastising him, because it was a meanes to containe him in the way of righteousnesse, which is the path of life, bringing vs into Gods presence, where is fulnesse of ioy and pleasures for euermore; and to reduce and bring him back into this way when through frailty and infirmity hee erred and digressed out of it, as hee also confesseth in another place, before I was afflicted (saith he) I went astray, but now I keepe thy word. But what blessednesse, or what comfort and consolation could there be in afflictions, if they were punishments, seeing they are fruits of the curse, and tend not to aduance the happinesse of the party punished, but to his hurt and ruine? neither are they the causes or signes of blessednesse, but the forerunners of his euerlasting destruction; seeing God by them, euen in this life, doth begin to shew his anger, and to satisfie his iustice by inflicting on him those torrures and torments which his sinnes haue deserued.

Psal. 119. 67.

And thus it appeareth that the afflictions of the faithfull are not the punishments of a righteous judge, but the gentle chastisements of a louing Father. Against which too maine obiections are made, not onely by our common aduersaries, but also by some amongst our selues: the first is taken from the example of Dauid, who though his sinne was pardoned, yet hee was not freed thereby from temporall punishments; and though his fault was remitted so far forth as it merited eternall condemnation; yet it was reserued by God to bee punished with such punishments as were corporall and temporary. But vnto this obiection the answere is easie, if wee doe but remember what hath beene deliuered all-ready; for the rule generally holdeth, that where sinne, which is the cause, is taken away, punishment, which is the effect, ceaseth; but presently vpon the confession of Dauids sinne the Prophet assureth him from God, of the forgiuenesse of it, though before hee had denounced those temporall afflictions against him and his house. And therefore seeing the forgiuenesse of sinne is (as hath beene said) the not imputing, couering, hiding, not remembring, casting of it into the bottome of the Sea, and (as it is there said) the putting of it away; it is manifest that Dauids sinne thus before remitted, was not afterwards brought into iudgement, and hee punished for it, but that these afflictions were the chastisements of a gracious Father, inflicted vpon Dauid, not in hatred and reuenge, or for the punishment of the sin committed, but out of meere loue, to bring him hereby to more serious and sound repentance, that he might with more bitter griefe bewaile his sinne past, and bee more watchfull and carefull to preuent it for the time to come. Vnto which end of Dauids good, wee may adde another end respecting the glory of God, which by these afflictions, whereby hee corrected Dauids sinne, was vindicated from the slanderous blasphemies of the heathen; for whereas if Dauid vpon his repentance had not beene thus corrected and afflicted, they would haue beene ready to haue accused the Lord of partiality, seeing howsoeuer he punished such hainous sinnes in others with rigour and §. Sect. 12. Their obiection answered who affirme that Dauids afflictions were punishments for his sinne, arguing ex Ezek. 18. 19.

2. Sam. 12.

1. Sam. 3.

and extremity, yet hee liked them well enough in his owne seruants, and could bee content to winke at their faults, suffering them with impunity to liue in enormous crimes; all this occasion of slander was taken away, when as God did thus beginne iudgement in his owne house, and with such seuerity corrected the faults of his seruant, vpon whom his Name was called. But yet with Gods glory was ioyned Dauids good; neither did God punish him as a Iudge, but chastise him as a Father, not to satisfie iustice, or to reuenge his fault vpon him to his hurt, but out of his meere loue and mercy to bring him hereby to an hearty sorrow for his sin past, and to make him abhorre and flee from the like for the time to come. For (as one saith) when God forgiueth sin, he couereth and forgetteth it; and if he covereth it, hee will not obserue it, and if hee doe not obserue it, hee will not reserue it in memory with a purpose to punish it; Hee will not acknowledge it, but rather pardoneth it. To conclude this point with the words of that excellent and worthy seruant of God; it is strange (saith hee) that they should so cast their eyes vpon this one example of Dauid to prooue thereby that the faithfull are punished for their sins, as that they are nothing mooued with so many other examples, wherein they may cleerely behold the free forgiuenesse of sinne without any temporary punishment; for wee read of the Publicane, that hee departed out of the Temple iustified, and no punishment followed; Peter also obtained the pardon of his sin, and (as Ambrose saith) we read only of his teares, but not of his satisfaction. So Christ saith to the sicke of the Palsie: Thy sins are forgiuen thee, but he doth not withall impose any punishment.

The second obiection is, that the bodily death of the faithfull is a punishment to the body, because though the soule passe after the separation into ioy and happinesse, yet the body is punished for the time; seeing it corrupteth in the graue, and is not actually deliuered from death, vntill the time of the resurrection. The right indeed of holding vs vnder his dominion is taken away from death by Christ, but from the actuall dominion thereof wee are not freed till we rise againe. To which I answere that death is to be considered in it owne nature, or as it hath relation to the faithfull. In it owne nature it is indeed a punishment of sinne; but to the faithful the nature thereof is changed, and of a curse it is turned into a blessing. For Christ hath taken away the sting thereof which is sin, and where there is no sin, there can be no punishment. It was indeed a deadly stinging Serpent which destroyed vs; but since sinne was take away, like a Serpent without a sting it cannot hurt vs. And there cannot be any punishment where there is no hurt or damage. Neither hath now death (as hee affirmeth) actuall dominion ouer vs, seeing in Christ we haue gotten the victory ouer it; so as we need not to crouch vnto it, as captiues to those who haue dominion ouer them, but as Conquerours after victory obtained by Christ, we may triumph ouer it, saying, with the Apostle, O death where is thy sting, O hell where is thy victory. Heretofore it held vs like prisoners vnder his arrest till Gods iustice was satisfied, but this being done, this arrest is turned into a rest, death into a sleep, and the graue is become to the bodies of the faithfull, as a bed of downe, wherein they quietly rest without all sense of euill, vntill the day that they are raised by vertue of Christ their Head to be glorified with him. Neither is there now any hurt in death, (which hurt neuertheless alwayes accompanieth punishment) but much fruit and benefit; and that not onely in respect of the soule, which by this separation is ioyned with God, and enjoyeth fulnesse of ioy and pleasures at his right hand for euermore; but also in regard of the body. For hereby it is freed from all miseries and afflictions wherewith in this life it is turmoyled, as heate, colde, hunger, nakednesse, sickenesse, paine, with many such calamities; it is eased and resteth from those painfull labours, wherewith it was spent and wearied, it is deliuered both from the oppressions and injuries of wicked Worldlings, yea, euen from their society and company which was in this World so irkesome and cumbersome. To which purpose one demandeth, how it commeth to passe, that we see the good and euil perish together? and then answereth, that they perish not, but make an escape out of their miseries, who are freed from the company and persecutions of wicked men: but they truly die and perish, whom the paine and punishment of a more fearefull iudgement doth attend after they depart this life. And lastly (which is a benefit aboue all the rest) it resteth from the workes of wickednesse, being no more subiect to our sinfull soules to bee abused by them, as their instruments for the committing of iniquity. Finally, the Apostle reckoneth death among the chastisements wherewith the Lord corrected the Corinthians for their vnworthy receiuing the Lords Supper; for this cause (saith hee) many are weake and sicke among you, and many sleepe, that is, are dead; and then addeth that when they were thus iudged, they were (not punished but) chastened of the Lord, because they should not be condemned with the world. And therefore if death to them were onely a chastisement of a gracious Father, and that out of meere loue to preserue them from euerlasting condemnation, it was a benefit, and not a punishment, proceeding from so gracious an authour, to so good an end.

Armin.

1. Cor. 15. 55.

Psal. 16. 11.

August. de vita Christian. lib. c. 4

1. Cor. 11. 30, 32.

Yea,

9. Sect. 14. The former obiection further vrged and answered.

Yea, but by death the body is made subiect to corruption, and therefore it is a bodily punishment. I answere, that though this argument holdeth in respect of meere naturall men, yet not in regard of the faithfull, the corruption of whose body is but a preparation to their glorification; for they are sowne in corruption, that they may bee raised in incorruption; they are sowne in dishonour, that they may be raised in glory, they are sowne in weaknesse that they may bee raised in power; in which which respect they haue no more hurt, and consequently no more punishment by this temporary corruption, than the corne hath, which must first die that it may be quickned, as the Apostle likeneth it; or than the gold hath which is melted, that being purified from the drosse, it may be framed into glorious vessels fit for the Kings Table. Neither is it a punishment to be corrupted, when the corruption tendeth to perfection, but onely when it tendeth to destruction; seeing in naturall reason it is necessary that the worser forme must first be lost by corruption before a better and more excellent can be acquired and obtained. Yea, but death is called an enemie, which is to be destroied, and therfore vntill it be brought to this finall destruction, it is a punishment. I answere, that it followeth not; that because death is an enemie, therefore it is a punishment, seeing punishments haue their name and nature, not from the enimity and malignity of the secondarie causes and instruments, but from the chiefe author who inflicteth them, from the end of their imposing, and the effects and fruites which they worke in the partie that suffereth them. As namely, when they proceed from an angry Iudge, and not a gracious father, to satisfie iustice, and not to reforme and benefit the partie; and when accordingly they hurt and profite not, they damnifie & destroy the offender who suffereth them, and doe not by his reformation make way for his saluation. And therefore though death bean enemie, and in its owne nature full of malignitie, yet seeing it is an instrument, and as it were a rodde in the hand of our heauenly father, which he vseth for our benefit, and maketh it to serue as a meanes for the deriuing much good, not only to our soules, but also to our bodies, the enimity and malignity thereof doth no more proue it to be be a punishment vnto the faithfull; then the enimitie and malice of a slaue, who is commanded by a louing father to to chastise his sonne according to his appointment and no otherwise, doth make it cease to be a fatherly correction, and to become a punishment when as the father doth it out of meere loue to his childe, and notwithstanding the malignitie of his instrument or deputie, intendeth and powerfull effecteth the good of his sonne by this his chastisement. Neither doth this proue it to bee a punishment because it is an enemie which is to bee, and therefore is not, yet destroyed; seeing heereby is meant the vtter destruction & full abolishing of it at Christs second comming. For euen now death is destroyed, as hee is, who hath the power of death, the Diuell, and the rest of our spirituall enemies; namely, not that they should not assault vs, but that they should not hurt vs. It is true, that at Christs second comming wee shall haue full redemption and perfect deliuerance from the hands of our spirituall enemies, when as they shall, not only, not ouercome vs, and hold vs in their captiuitie, but not so much as molest vs, or disturbe our peace; but in the meane time their poyson, sting and strength is taken away, so that though they assault and tempt vs, yet they shall neuer be able to hurt vs, seeing the Lord so directeth vs with his wisdome, and assisteth vs with his power, that we still obtaine the victory, and receiue much profit and benefit by their encounters. And as this is true of all the rest, so especially of death, who in it selfe is an enemy, which is wholy to be abolished at Christs appearing; but in the meane time, the poyson, and sting thereof is taken away by the death of Christ, and the nature thereof is quite changed, so as it is no longer a Tyrant, which holdeth vs to our hurt vnder his dominion, but as to the soule it is a passage to glory and happinesse; so to the body it is but a sleepe a little longer than ordinary, whereby it resteth from labour and sinne, that when the day of glory breaketh, and the Sunne of righteousnesse appeareth, wee may lay aside corruption, and put on incorruption, and hauing our mortall swallowed vp of immortality, may rise with full strength, beauty and vigour, to serue and prayse God without paine or wearinesse.

1. Cor. 15. 36.

1. Cor. 15. 26.

Heb. 2. 14.

1. Cor. 15. 43.

And thus haue I shewed, that none of the afflictions of the faithfull, no, not death it selfe, the greatest and last of temporall euils, are vnto the faithfull punishments for sinne, but onely the chastisements of a louing Father, inflicted for his glory and their good; for howsoeuer the punishments of the wicked, and chastisements of the godly bee in matter and in outward appearance, yea euen in respect of bodily sense, and the apprehension of naturall reason all one; yet is there great and manifold difference between them to be obserued by the eye of spirituall iudgement, enlightened by the bright beames of Gods Truth shining in his Word. As first the chastisements of the faithfull and punishments of the wicked doe differ in their efficient causes who inflict and impose them. For they come from the hand of a gracious Father reconciled vnto vs in Christ; these from a iust Iudge, and from a powerfull and incensed enemy. They are inflicted in loue and fatherly compassion, which causeth his bowels to yearne, and his heart to relent, so as he cannot cast off his children like the wicked, but receiueth them againe into his former fauour, after that they are humbled vnder his chastising hand; according to that of the Prophet Hosea, How shall I giue thee vp Ephraim? How shall I deliuer thee Israel? How shall I make thee as Admah? How shall I set thee as Zeboim? Mine heart is turned within me, my repentings are rowled together. As if he had said, though your sins are so many and grieuous, that I might iustly destroy you with fire and brimstone, as I did those Cities adioyning to Sodome and Gomorah; yet in regard of my couenant, and my loue which in Christ I beare you, I cannot deale with you as I did with those cursed Nations; but when your sinnes enforce mee to correct you, I doe compassionate your griefes, and am ready to repent and surcease your afflictions, when you repent of your sinne against me. And with this agreeth Gods promise made to Dauid concerning his sonne Salomon. If he sinne, I will chasten him with the rod of men, and with the plagues of the children of men; but my mercy shall not depart from him, as I took it from Saul, whom I haue put away before thee. So that the Lord in correcting his children, doth (as the Prophet Habakkuc speaketh) In wrath remember mercy, and hee doth chastise them in his iudgement, not in his anger to bring them to nothing, and vtterly cut them off. But contrariwise, the punishments of the wicked are inflicted vpon them in Gods wrath and heauy displeasure; neither doth hee take any compassion on them in their miseries, but rather delighteth himselfe in the exercising his iustice and iudgements vpon them for their vtter ruine and destruction.

9. Sect. Of the manifold difference between the afflictions of the faithfull and the punishments of the wicked.

Secondly, they differ in their impulsiue or moouing cause; for the cause moouing the Lord to chastise the faithfull, is his loue and goodnesse, whereas his wrath and iust displeasure conceiued against the wicked for their sinnes, moueth him to inflict deserued punishments vpon them.

Thirdly, they differ in their end; for the Lord chastiseth the faithfull, that hee may manifest his mercy in their conuersion, but he punisheth the wicked, that he may manifest his iustice in their confusion. He chastiseth them in loue for their amendement, that they may not sin; he punisheth these in wrath to satisfie his iustice, because they haue sinned. Hee chastiseth them that they may like Gold be purified in the fire of affliction from their drosse and corruption, and so be made fit for Gods heauenly measury; he punisheth these that like chaffe or stubble they may bee consumed with the fire of his wrath. He chastiseth them that they may not be condemned with the World; he punisheth these that their earthly miseries may be the beginning of their condemnation, and (as it were) their first step into Hell. He chastiseth them to try them, that in tryall they may bee approued; he punisheth these to vex and torment them, by bringing vpon them that vengeance which their sinnes haue deserued. Iames 1.3.

Fourthly, they differ in their effects; for the afflictions of the faithfull doe much profit them, and further their saluation; but the punishments of the wicked doe much hurt them and further their condemnation. They soften and mollifie their hearts, and make them to humble themselues before their heauenly Father, imploring mercy and forgiuenesse; these doe make them more hard and obdurate, & in fury and desperate madnesse to blaspheme, murmure and repine against their Iudge, because hee doth execute vpon them his righteous iudgements. They not onely helpe to increase in them all spirituall graces, but also manifest them to Gods glory and their owne comfort; these both multiply and manifest the sinnes and corruptions of the wicked to their euerlasting horrour and confusion. They beating, and (as it were punning) the faithfull, doe make them like odoriferous Spices to smell the more sweetly, the more they are bruised; these vexing the wicked doe make them like filthy sinkes and puddles to stinke the more noysomely the more they are troubled. Finally, they serue as an vnpleasant, yet straight and direct way which bringeth the faithfull into the Kingdome of Heauen; but these are (as it were) the porch and first entrance of Hell, and a stormy and tempestuous Sea, which splitteth and sinketh the wicked on the sands of desperation, and maketh them to wrack their soules on the rockes of destruction. To which purpose one saith, that to the damned and reprobate tribulation begetteth pusillanimity, pusillanimity perplexity, perplexity desperation, and desperation confusion and condemnation. Idiota inter orthodoxogr. de patient. vera contemplat. cap 20.

Fiftly, the afflictions of the faithfull, and the punishments of the wicked doe differ, in respect of their seuerall subiects, or the persons vpon whom they are imposed; for they are inflicted on sonnes, these on slaues, they on friends, these on enemies; they on Gods faithfull and couragious Souldiers, whom after the victory he will crowne with glory; these on malefactours and offenders, whom it is his purpose to punish according to their demerits.

Sixtly, they differ in time and continuance; for the afflictions of the faithfull are short and momentany; but the punishments of the wicked are endlesse and euerlasting; for as the happinesse of the Elect and their glorification, is inchoate and begun euen in this life, when they haue attained vnto some measure of sanctification, vnto peace with God, peace of conscience and joy in the Holy Ghost; so contrariwise the torments of the reprobate, are euen begun in this world, when as they suffer for their sins temporall plagues and punishments, seeing they are the earnest of their condemnation, and the very flashing of that infernall fire.

Seuenthly, they differ in their measure and quantity. in which respect the afflictions of the faithful are that gentle rod, whereby like children they are louingly corrected by their heauenly Father; but the punishments of the wicked are that three stringed whip, whereby the wicked are scourged and tormented like slaues and malefactours, at the appointment of their Iudge: they tending to correct in judgement for the good of the party, and these to destroy and vtterly cut off, as the Prophet speaketh. And though there seeme to bee no difference in outward appearance betweene the stripes of the sonne, and the lashes of the slaue; yet is there great difference in their inward feeling, seeing they haue much internall joy, and comfort from the assurance which they haue of the loue & fauour of their heauenly Father, euen whilest he correcteth them, whereby they are ascertained that all their afflictions shall haue a joyfull and happy issue; whereas these conceiuing God to be a seuere Iudge, and an incensed enemy, doe with horrour and feare suffer the euils which lie vpon them, as the deserued punishments of their sins, hauing no better hopes for the time to come, but rather a terrible expectation of hellish condemnation after all their worldly miseries, and calamities. To this purpose one saith, that there is great difference betweene the chastizements of a sonne and the punishments of a slaue. For the sonne is beaten, and so is the seruant, but he like a seruant who hath offended, but the other as free-borne, and as a sonne vnto whom discipline is necessary. Neither doe their like stripes proue them to bee of like honour, nor doth it hereupon follow, that because the wicked and godly suffer the same things, therefore they are of the same condition; but correction is inflicted vpon the sonne, for his humilation or triall; vpon the slaue, for his torment and punishment. And therefore Dauid knowing these differences, saith of the iust, that many were their tribulations, but presently addeth, that the Lord deliuereth them out of all: shewing the cure and remedie as soone as the disease and maladie. But speaking of the wicked, he saith, that many are the torments of the sinner, but addeth no comfort, helpe and deliuerance. Finally, as there are these and many such like differences betweene the chastisements of the faithfull, and the punishments of the wicked, for the present in this world; so farre greater shall the difference be betweene them in that which followeth in the life to come; for the afflictions of the godly in this present life are not (as the Apostle speaketh) worthy the glory which shall be reuealed. Seeing as he saith in another place, These light and momentany afflictions shall cause vnto them a farre most excellent, and an eternall waight of glory. Whereas the temporary punishments of vngodly men, working in them no reformation and amendement, but rather (as hath bin shewed) encreasing and multiplying their haynous sins, are accompanied with euerlasting torments, and hellish condemnation in the World to come.

And thus haue I proued that the afflictions of the faithfull, are not punishments of their sins, inflicted by an offended Iudge, for the satisfying of his justice; but the chastisements of a gracious Father, by which he correcteth his children for their profit and amendement; and haue also shewed the manifold and greater differences betweene the punishments of the wicked and the afflictions of the godly, vpon the which I haue the longer insisted, because the contrary opinion of the aduersaries, opposed against this truth, striketh at the very root of all true and sound comfort. For as it is the chiefe stay, to vphold fainting soules oppressed with the heauy waight of grieuous afflictions, to know, and to be assured that all which they suffer are the chastisements of a gracious Father, whereby he correcteth them out of meere loue, for their owne profit and benefit, and not for any pleasure which hee taketh in their smart and paine, but vpon meere necessity to reclaime them from their sins, and to fit them for his Kingdome: so when this stay is taken away, and the afflicted party is perswaded, that the miseries which he endureth are deserued punishments of an angrie iudge, inflicted for the satisfying of his iustice, being robbed of all consolation, hee fainteth vnder his burthen, and sinketh into the bottomlesse gulfe of deepe despaire. For if he were vnable to beare the burthen of his afflictions when they were alone, what will become of him when the double load of Gods wrath and displeasure is added vnto it? Or whether should he flee for comfort, when he seeth, that he who is onely able to relieue him is an incensed enemy? How should he haue any hope to haue his afflictions lightened or shortned, which are inflicted to satisfie justice, whenas his owne conscience telleth him that his least sinnes are of infinite guilt in respect of that infinite Majesty which is offended? Or what shall stay him from fleeing out of the presence of God, when like a righteous Iudge hee pursueth him in wrath to take due vengeance on him for his wickednesse? Finally, how shall a faithfull man conclude with Dauid, that it is

1. Cor. 11. 32.

Ier. 30. 11.

Chrysost. de fide & lege naturæ, serm. tom. 3.

Psal. 34. 19. Verse 21.

Rom. 8. 18.

2. Cor. 4. 17.

Psal. 119. 50.

is good for him to be afflicted, if his afflictions be the fruits and effects of Gods wrath and the deserued punishments of his sinne, which hurt and profit not? Or how shall hee pronounce them blessed whom God correcteth, if they be still vnder the curse, suffering those punishments which the Law threatneth? Whereas contrariwise if wee bee perswaded that the Lord is still our gracious Father, wee will flee into his bosome for refuge against all euils, and humble our selues vnder his mighty hand whom wee haue offended, hoping to receiue vpon our submission, mercy and forgiuenesse: if we conceiue that hee correcteth vs for our profit, our future hopes wil strengthen our patience to indure present smart. If we be assured that God loueth our persons, and in all his corrections aymeth at nothing but the mortifying of our sins, and our reformation; this will make vs also labour to subdue them, and to amend what is amisse, that so wee may be freed from our paine and smart. Which a malefactour who is punished for his fault neuer aymeth at, seeing he knoweth that the end of his suffering is not to amend him, but satisfie iustice, which will haue its course, and not remit any of the punishment vpon the repentance of the party.

CHAP. X.

That all afflictions are imposed vpon the faithfull out of Gods meere loue. And that this loue plainely appeareth in the measure of their afflictions; and first in regard of themselues, whether we respect their quantity, which is but small, or their time, which is but short.

AND thus haue I shewed the first branch & main ground of the Christians comfort in the time of trouble and affliction, consisting in the knowledge and assurance of this point; that the crosses and calamities which he indureth are not punishments inflicted for the satisfying of Gods iustice: now the other point propounded followeth to be proued, namely, that they are to the faithfull the chastisements of a gracious Father, wherewith out of meere loue he correcteth them as his children, not for any displeasure conceiued against their persons, or for any pleasure which he taketh in their smart and paine, but onely for their profit and benefit, both heere, and in the life to come. For the clearing whereof wee are to know, that there is a two-fold kinde of loue to bee obserued in earthly parents, the first a fond and cockering loue commonly incident to the weaker sexe, whereby in all things they indeauour to please their children by following their foolish appetite and lusts, and let their owne will be the rule of all their actions; and therefore if so it please them, they are content to let them languish in idlenesse, or to run riotous courses, which in all likelihood will bring them to perdition. But this is nothing else but with the Ape to kill their yong with clipping, to play the enemy vnder the vizard of a friend; and to make them drinke the poysonous dregs of all mischiefe because it is sugred with loue, and sweetned with the fond affection of an ouer-tender mother. The other kinde of loue, though it make not so plausible a shew, is not in truth weaker, but much wiser; not lesse intire and hearty, but much more discreet and profitable, as wholy ayming at the good of the party beloued; not caring much whether it please or displease, whether the things which it enjoyneth be easie or difficult, tedious or delightfull, so they be importantly behouefull, and greatly beneficiall to him who is to vndertake them. And this is the profitable loue of a wise and discreet Father, who sometimes with-holdeth necessaries from the sonne whom hee loueth, not because hee grudgeth to giue them, but because hee would inure him to hardnesse, and make him more securely enjoy his plenty, when hee knoweth how to want; sometimes also hee crosseth him of his will, to teach him humility, and inureth him to such painfull labour, as doth often presse forth of him sweat, and sometimes teares. But especially this wise and fatherly loue doth shew it selfe, in keeping his sonne vnder a straight and seuere discipline, in restraynting him of his liberty, in contayning him within the bonds of modesty, temperance and ciuilty, in keeping him from running into licentious courses, and in reclayming him from such vices and faults by due correction which being continued in without amendement, would frustrate the fathers expectation, and make him together with his comfort and joy to lose his sonne; and cause the childe together with his Fathers displeasure to incurre the danger of loosing his inheritance. Now that wilesse and worthlesse loue of a fond Mother, as it deserueth not to bee respected and esteemed, seeing it tendeth to the hurt and destruction of the party beloued; so it is not to bee expected of Gods children, from so wise and worthy a Father, who in all things aymeth at their good, and chuseth rather to profit them than to please them. For hee knowing the corruptions of our nature, how easily wee are puffed vp with pride, when we enjoy worldly prosperity, and made foolishly wanton with a little cockering; how ready wee are to languish in idlenesse, and to become effeminate with earthly delights; how prone wee are to dishonour him in his gifts, and how vsuall it is with vs to abuse these remembrances of his loue, as occasions to make vs both neglect and forget our benefactour; and finally how liberty bringeth vs to licentiousnesse, wantonnesse to wilfulnesse, and want of due correction to all dissolutenesse and disorder; like a wise Father out of meere loue hee keepeth vs vnder seuerer discipline; and though he suffereth wicked Worldlings and damned reprobates to flourish in their impiety, to liue with impunity in all manner of wickednesse, and to reuell and ruffle it out in all pompe and pleasure, because hee intendeth to giue them their portion in this life and to let them fatte themselues against the day of slaughter: yet such is his loue and care ouer his owne sonnes and children, that they no sooner begin to wax proud and wanton, but hee presently humbleth and keepeth them vnder, and no sooner doe they enter into a course of sinning, but hee forthwith reclaymeth them from their wicked wayes by his chastisements and corrections. For (as one saith) he granteth vnto his child worldly felicity to comfort and not to corrupt him; and when he seeth it thus abused, hee doth scourge him in this World for his amendement, and not for his condemnation; and therefore we must suffer him with patience, correcting vs like a Father; least wee should feele him hereafter punishing vs as a Iudge.

Qui dedit tibi sullicitatem huius saeculi, ad consolationem tuam dedit non ad corruptionem &c. August. in Iohan. tract. 12 Tom. 9.

Q. Sect. 2. That God shewethhis fatherly loue in correcting his children.

And this truth is manifest vnto vs in the Scriptures, both by testimonies and examples. So the Lord saith, that hee will begin to plague the Citie where his Name is called vpon. And the Apostle telleth vs, that iudgement must begin at the house of God. So by the Prophet Amos the Lord thus speaketh to the people of Israel: You onely haue I knowne of all the families of the earth; therefore I will visite you for all your iniquities. The Wise man also vseth this argument to perswade vs with patience to beare the chastening of the Lord, and not be grieued with his correction, because hee correcteth him whom hee loueth, euen as the father doth the childe in whom he delighteth. To which place the Apostle alluding saith; My sonne dispise not the chastening of the Lord, neither faint when thou art rebuked of him; for whom the Lord loueth he chasteneth, and hee scourgeth euery sonne that he receiueth. Finally, the Lord himselfe professeth, that hee doth rebuke and chasten as many as he loueth, and vseth it as an argument to perswade vnto repentance and zealous reformation, because whosoeuer escape, yet they shall be sure to be corrected (if they offend) whom he loueth and respecteth; that they may thereby be reclaimed from their wicked courses, and so bee deliuered from the condemnation of the world. And this also appeareth by the examples of the faithfull from time to time, for who more in Gods fauour than Abraham the Father of the Faithfull, and yet how many crosses did hee indure? as the leauing of his friends and countrey, and the leading of his life, as it were, in a voluntarie banishment among a strange people; the offering of his beloued Isaac, and feare of his owne life? Who more deare vnto God than Iacob, of whom hee said, before hee was borne Iacob haue I loued? And yet so many were his afflictions that hee affirmeth, his dayes to haue beene few and euill. Who more respected of God than Iob, whom he pronounced to be the iustest man vpon earth? And yet who more dejected and loaded with afflictions? Who more gracious with the Lord than holy Dauid, whom he affirmeth to haue beene a man according to Gods owne heart? And yet hee complayneth that when his wicked enemies wallowed in worldly delights hee was afflicted daily, and punished euery morning. So it is said of Salomon his sonne that by Gods appointment he was called Iedidiah, because the Lord loued him: and that Dauid receiued this promise from God in his behalfe, that he would be his Father, and he should be his sonne; and yet the Lord addeth, that if hee did sinne hee would chasten him with the rod of men, and with the plagues of the children of men; notwithstanding his mercy should not depart from him as he tooke it from Saul. Yea, of all his Church and people the Lord saith, that if they did breake his statutes, and would not keepe his Commandements hee would visite their transgression with the rod, and their iniquitie with strokes, but yet his louing kindnesse he would not take from them, nor falsifie his truth by breaking his couenant. But of such examples I shall haue occasion to speake more hereafter, and therefore referre them to their place: onely for the present let vs both by these testimonies and examples be perswaded of this truth, that the Lord correcteth those who are his that vnto him, out of meere loue for their profit and benefit; and that Gods loue, and these seeming fruits of his anger in our crosses and afflictions may well stand together; according to that of the Psalmist; Thou heardest them, O Lord, our God: thou wast a fauourable God vnto them, though thou didest take vengeance for their inuentions. And therfore when we are in the middest of our afflictions notwithstanding these crosses and calamities, we may triumphingly cry out with the Apostle, who shall separate vs from the loue of Christ? Shall tribulation or anguish, or persecution, or famine, or nakednesse, or perill, or sword? &c. I am perswaded, that neither death nor life, nor Angels, nor principalities, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate vs from the loue of God which is in Christ Iesus our Lord.

1. Cor. 11. 32.

Gen. 47. 9.

1. Sam. 13. 14.

2. Sam. 7. 14.

Psal. 89. 31, 32, 33.

Psal. 99. 8.

Rom. 8. 35, 38.

But

But let vs not content our selues with the generall knowledge of this truth, that the Lord out of his infinite and endlesse loue doth chastise the faithfull for their good; but let vs further consider how this loue of God is manifested vnto them in their afflictions, by insisting in some particulars. To which purpose wee are to know, that Gods wonderfull loue appeareth vnto his children, both in the measure of their afflictions, and in his ends which moue him to lay vpon them his Fatherly corrections; the which his ends being secret in himselfe, hee maketh knowne vnto vs by these fruites and effects, which by these his chastisements he powerfully produceth and worketh in vs. Concerning the former, Gods loue appeareth in the measure of our afflictions, first generally in that hee is content to afflict vs in some measure; for seeing our sinnes haue beene without measure both in their greatnesse and number; and haue beene also committed against an immense, infinite, and incomprehensible Majestie; therefore if the Lord should deale with vs according to his iustice and righteous iudgements, we haue deserued that our punishments should bee without measure, number or end. But God infinite in mercy and goodnesse doth not deale with vs according to our deserts; but as hee hath graciously turned the punishments of slaues, inflicted by a righteous Iudge, into chastisements of Sons inflicted by a louing Father: so according to this loue and mercy he hath measured out such a certaine stint and proportion of these afflictions vnto euery one of his Children, as in his wisedome he knoweth to bee fittest for them, and that both in respect of their quantitie, what and how much they shall beare, and also in respect of their time and continuance, when and how long they shall endure them. In which respect wee may truely affirme, that as there is no crosse, calamity or affliction, which is not fore-appointed of God, and ordered, ruled and disposed by his most wise and all-ruling prouidence; so the quantitie how much, and the time how long, is also by the same wisedome, and prouidence ordained and appointed, in such an exact and strict manner, that as it is impossible for any man to free himselfe, in whole or in part, from any of that measure which is shared and alloted vnto him; or to prevent it from comming, or to escape from it, being come before the appointed time; so is it alike impossible, that all the power of Diuels or men should adde one dramme to the waight, or one minute to the time of our afflictions, more than that proportion which God by his powerfull wisdome hath measured out vnto them. For as hee hath said to the waters of the Sea, so also to these floods of affliction, Hitherto shall ye come but no further, and here shall yee stay your proud waues. To this purpose the Psalmist saith, that God had fed his people with the bread of teares, & giuen them teares to drinke with great measure. So the Church in her afflictions groundeth her Faith vpon this truth in her Prayers vnto God for helpe and deliuerance. Be not angry, O Lord, aboue measure, neither remember iniquitie for euer: and againe, Wilt thou hold thy peace, & afflict vs aboue measure? As though she should say, I am assured that thou wilt not do it, seeing it is contrarie to thy nature, word and vsuall customs. For the Lord hath expresly promised that hee will correct his people in measure. And with this agreeth the booke of wisdome, where it is said, that the Lord wanted not meanes, to haue corrected his people with much more grieuous afflictions, than those which they indured, but yet hee had not done it, because hee had ordered all things in measure, number and weight. As also the saying of our Sauiour Christ himselfe, who affirmeth, that not onely our greater afflictions, but the least and lightest, euen to the falling of an haire from our heads, are ordered by Gods prouidence, so as they cannot without his appointment happen vnto vs. An example whereof wee haue in Iob, for as Satan at the first could not touch him till he had receiued a commission from God; so neither could he adde any thing vnto his first afflictions, till his commission was renewed. And as the Lord measureth out vnto vs our afflictions, in respect of their quantity, so also in regard of their time; as wee may see in the Egyptian bondage, which was appointed by God to continue 430. yeares, which being expired, the people of Israel were in the very same day deliuered out of it. And also in the captiuitie of Babylon, which was to continue by Gods decree 70. yeares, which being expired according to Gods promise made vnto them by his Prophet, they were deliuered out of their captiuitie. And thus the Lord appointeth a certaine time for the afflictions of the Church of Smyrna, It shall come to passe, that the Diuel shall cast some of you into prison, that yee may be tryed, and yee shall haue tribulation tenne dayes. And also to the whole Church militant, where it is said, That the woman (that is the Church) fled into the wildernesse, where shee had a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand, two hundred, and threescore dayes. By all which it appeareth that the Lord doth not chasten his Children rashly and in his furie, but with great wisedome and discretion, and vpon mature deliberation appointing before hand both the quantitie of their afflictions, and the time of their continuance. And no maruaile, for if (as the authour of the Booke of Wisdome speaketh) the Lord doth punish the enemies of his Children, and the condemned to death with such deliberation, giuing them time and

Psal. 80. 5.
Esa. 64. 9. 12.
Ier. 30. 11. & 46. 28.
Wisd. 11. 17. 20.
Matth. 10. 30. Luk. 21. 18.
Iob. 1. 12. & 2. 6.
Exo. 12. 40. 41. Ier. 25. 11.
Ier. 29. 10. 2. Chr. 36. 21. 22.
Apoc. 2. 10.
Chap. 12. 6.
Wisd. 12. 10. 21.

place, whereby they might be deliuered from their malice; with how great circumspection will he iudge his owne Sonnes? Now the consideration of this truth, that God doth not lay vs open to afflictions, nor leaue vs to Satan and our spirituall enemies to be loaded with miseries at their pleasure, as our sinnes which are without number or end haue iustly deserued; but doth in his fatherly wisedome measure out vnto euery one of vs such a proportion of afflictions as is fitting for vs; as it doth sufficiently shew the greatnesse of Gods mercy and loue, so it may strengthen our patience in the time of our affliction, and replenish our hearts with ioy and consolation. Seeing we stand not to the cruell curtesie of the enemies of our saluation, to endure what pleaseth them to lay vpon vs; but onely haue such a measure allotted vnto vs, as God in his infinite loue and goodnesse knoweth best; and howsoeuer they are executioners the instruments of our calamities, and are vsed by our heauenly Physitian as his Apothecaries to minister vnto vs these vnpleasant potions, for the purging away of our corrupt and sinfull humors, yet doth hee strictly prescribe such an exact bill of the ingredients, and carrieth such a watchfull eye ouer them, whilest they are making these confections, that they are not able to adde one scruple vnto his proportions, nor to giue vs a graine more of these loathsome drugges than is fit for the effecting of the cure, and the recouery of our spirituall health.

9. Sect. 4. That our afflictions are in their quantity small & light.

And thus it generally appeareth that God sheweth great loue and mercy vnto vs in that he doth afflict vs in measure, seeing our innumerable and most haynous sinnes haue deserued, and the enemies of our saluation are willing and ready to inflict on vs all his plagues and punishments: in which respect we haue just cause to thinke that we are well dealt with, if wee escape any of them, and to acknowledge in our greatest afflictions with the distressed Church, that it is the infinite mercy of God that we are not vtterly consumed; seeing it is not to be attributed vnto any of our deserts, whose sinnes haue pulled downe Gods iudgements vpon vs, nor to want of will or power in Sathan and the world who are alwaies able and desirous to doe vs mischiefe, but onely to Gods infinite loue and mercy in Iesus Christ, which pardoneth all our sinnes, and to his almighty power & prouidence, whereby he preserueth and defendeth vs from the malice & might of all these our enemies, so as they cannot punish vs at their owne pleasure, but onely as Gods instruments afflict and correct vs in such a manner and measure as hee prescribeth. Now let vs descend to a more speciall consideration of the measure of our afflictions, and take a more cleare view of Gods loue and mercy brightly shining therein, and that both in respect of the crosse it selfe which wee beare, and also in regard of vs who indure and beare it. The loue and mercy of God appeareth in the measure of our afflictions, both in respect of their quantity which is but small, and in their time which is but short; for either they are light, or they are not long, and if they bee great in quantity, they are but momentany in their continuance; or if they bee tedious in time, they are easie in waight; and therefore may be borne with patience, either in regard of our sense, because they doe not trouble vs much, being themselues light and small, or in respect of our hope, because they will not trouble vs long, seeing they are but short and momentany: yea in truth wee may well ioyne both together, and affirme with the Apostle that they are both light in their load & waight, & also short and momentany in their time and continuance. And therefore well may we beare them not only with patience, but also with ioy and thankfulnesse; especially if we consider, that through the infinite mercies of God and merits of Christ, wee are corrected with these small and short chastisements, that wee may be freed from intolerable torments and euerlasting condemnation, and doe therefore indure these light and momentany afflictions, that through the blessing of God, they may cause vnto vs a farre more excellent and an eternall waight of glory. First then Gods mercy and loue towards vs doth appeare in the measure of our afflictions, in that they are but light and small: for whereas our sinnes haue deserued the vnsupportable waight of Gods wrath and the intolerable torments of the damned in Hell Fire, the Lord hath graciously spared vs, and caused his onely deare Sonne in our stead to beare our iniquities, together with the punishment due vnto them: hee hath withheld it from lighting and lying vpon vs, whom it would haue ouerwhelmed, and pressed downe to the bottome of Hell, and hath laide it vpon the shoulders of our Sauiour who was able to beare it, and in bearing also to abolish and take it away. And now he hath fitted another burthen for vs, not according to the measure of our sinnes but of our strength: not that intolerable burthen of sinne and punishment, which would oppresse vs, and cause vs to sinke into the gulfe of desperation, but a sweet, light and easie burthen of afflictions, as our Sauiour calleth it, to keepe vs who are light vpon the ballance (as the Psalmist speaketh) from being puffed vp and blowne away with the wind of worldly vanities. And this he layeth vpon vs, not to toyle and tyre vs but that it may serue as an easie yoke to keepe vs in obedience, and to inable vs the more fitly to draw and labour in the way of Gods Commandements,

Lament. 3. 22.

1. Cor. 11. 32.

2. Cor. 4. 17.

Matth. 11. 30.

Psal. 62. 9.

manderments, which in the end will bring rest to our soules: not to ouer burthen and sinken us in this Sea of miseries; but rather to ballast vs, that we be not ouerset with the boisterous blasts of Sathans temptations; and to keepe vs in a right course that wee be not wracke vpon the rockes of sin. So the author of the Booke of Wisedome saith; Therefore thou chastnest them by little and little that offend; and warnest them by putting them in remembrance wherein they haue offended, that leauing their wickednesse they may believe on thee O Lord. And this small measure of affliction which the Lord hath prepared for vs, is signified in the Scriptures by the name of a cup, which by our heauenly Father is mingled and prouided for our drinking; for it is not said that wee must drinke a Sea of sorrowes, or an infinite measure of punishment, as our sinnes haue deserued; no not yet a barrell or great vessell, but onely a little cup. The which wee must not drinke alone, for the Lord hath caused his Sonne our Sauiour to drinke the very dregs thereof, euen to the bottome, and hath onely left a little pittance for vs to taste and sip of, which by the death of Christ is so corrected and purified from the poyson of Gods wrath, and so sugred and sweetned with his merits and obedience; that not onely the chiefe loathsomnesse thereof is taken away, but also it is made hereby, of a mortal poyson which would haue killed vs, a wholsome preseruatiue to keepe vs from the contagion of sinne, and a profitable potion to purge vs from our corruptions. In regard whereof our afflictions and griefes are but shadowes and resemblances, rather than substantiall euills, and are rather vizards to fright Children in Christ, than true enemies which intend vs hurt. And therefore the Apostle speaking of them saith, as dying and behold we liue, as chastned, and yet not killed, as sorrowing, and yet alway reioycing, &c. Whence one obserueth that our sorrow hath a quasi, as though, or as it were added to it; but so hath not our reioycing, because in hope it is most assured. And why is it said, not simply that wee sorrow, but as it were sorry? because like a sleepe or dreame it vanisheth away, and the iust shall triumph ouer it in the morning, &c. And howsoeuer these shadowes of euill, which are inflicted vpon vs, doe at their first appearing and approaching, seeme fearefull, and terrible, yet doe they vpon some small acquaintance, grow so familiar with vs, that wee doe not much auoid their company. For as the Child seeing euen his friend and familiar acquaintance approching towards him, disguised with some vgly vizard, is at first sight much affrighted, and ready to cry out, and runne away: but when the vizard is laid aside, returneth to himselfe, and being freed from feare, doth take knowledge of the party, and turne all his feare into iest, and merriment: so our afflictions like a vizarded friend, do at the first appearing much amate vs, but when the vizard is remoued, and wee vpon better acquaintance find, that they are not enemies that hurt vs, but friends, from whom wee receiue much good and benefit, then doe we grow familiar with them, and notwithstanding that their company is vnpleasant to our sense, yet doe wee not with any great earnestnesse desire to bee freed from it, because wee find it so necessary and profitable. And thus it appeareth that our afflictions are both light and small, not that our sinnes haue not deserued more sharpe chastisements; but because a little correction seemeth enough, vnto our most deare and louing Father, who so tenderly affecteth vs, that when hee hath giuen vs scarce the hundreth part of the stripes which our faults haue deserued, hee earneth and relenteth in the bowels of his compassion, and thinking our correction more than enough, yea double to our sinnes, he pardoneth our iniquities, and graciously receiueth vs into his former fauour.

Esay 40.2.

2. Sect. 5. That our afflictions are momentany, and but of short continuance.

But as our afflictions are in their quantity, small and light: so are they in their time short and momentany: for though our sins haue deserued eternall condemnation in Hell Fire, yet God of his infinite mercy and goodnesse, doth for the death and obedience of Iesus Christ, freely remit vnto vs all those euerlasting punishments; and contenteth himselfe to visit our iniquities with some temporary chastisements in this life, and with the rods of the children of men; not for our hurt and punishment, but for the amendment of our liues, and the saluation of our soules. And thus the Lord saith that hee will afflict the seed and posterity of Dauid, but not for euer; and particularly of Salomon, that if he sinned, he would chastise him with the rod of men, and with the plagues of the children of men; yet his mercy should neuer depart from him. Yea this gracious promise hee maketh to his whole Church, that hee would not contend with her for euer, nor be alwayes wroth; because the spirit would faile before him, and all mankind should be destroyed in his displeasure. The which truth the Church by faith layeth fast hold of, for her comfort, in her great afflictions; The Lord (saith she) will not forsake for euer, but though he send affliction, yet he will haue compassion, according to the multitude of his mercies. And that not because our sinnes are few in number, or light in weight, and therefore deserue but gentle chastisements; but because being a gracious Father, he doth not afflict willingly, nor afflict the children of men with pleasure and delight, but rather taketh his chiefe pleasure in exercising his

1. King. 11. 39. 2. Sam. 7. 14.

Esay 57. 16.

Lam. 3. 31, 32.

Vers. 33.

owne

owne nature, and in extending his mercy and goodnesse towards repentant sinners. And in this regard the Church cryeth out: Micha.7.18. Who is a God like vnto thee, that taketh away iniquity, and passeth by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage? he retaineth not his wrath for euer, because mercy pleaseth him. But most notably doth the Psalmist set forth this truth, of Gods moderating and stinting our afflictions, in his loue and mercy without any respect to our deserrings. Psal.103.8.10. The Lord (saith he) is full of compassion and mercy, slow to anger, and of great kindnesse; hee will not alway abide, nor keepe his anger for euer. Hee hath not dealt with vs after our sinnes, nor rewarded vs according to our iniquities. For as high as the Heauens are aboue the Earth, so great is his mercy towards them that feare him. As farre as the East is from the West, so farre hath he removed our sinnes from vs. As a Father hath compassion on his Children, so hath the Lord compassion on them that feare him. For he knoweth whereof we be made, he remembreth that we are but dust. The daies of man are as grasse, as a flower of the field, so flourisheth he, &c. To the same purpose is that of the Prophet Malachi, where the Lord promiseth to spare his Church and people, as a man spareth his owne Son, that feareth him. Mal.3.17. For as the louing Father accepteth of the weake endeauours, and imperfect obedience of his Childe; and when hee offendeth him, doth not long continue in his anger and displeasure, but after that hee hath corrected him for his faults, that hee may not continue in them to his distruction, he receiueth him into his wonted fauour, that hee may not by ouermuch and too long seuerity become hopelesse and desperate: so dealeth the Lord with his Children, neither cockring them in their faults, which would make them wanton and dissolute; nor yet for euer frowning vpon them, and correcting them as their sinnes deserue: but moderating his iustice with mercy, he doth, after that by his chastisements hee hath humbled them, and brought them to an hatred, and acknowledgment of their faults, withdraw his hand, lay his rod aside, and manifest vnto them the wonted signes of his mercy and loue. In which respect one compareth the Lord to a skilfull musition, who in tuning his instrument doth neither too much stretch his strings, least they should breake, nor let them remaine too loose and slacke, because it would quite dull and dead their sound and sweetnesse, and so spoile their musicall harmony: so doth the Lord dealeth with vs; neither suffering vs to languish in continuall securitie, nor to be broken, and worne out with tedious tribulation; least too much ease should make vs sluggish, or too much trouble faint or desperate. Yea Chrysost. ad pop. Antioch. homil. 4. de pœnitent.

Isa.30.11.

in truth so farre off are our afflictions from being irkesomely tedious, and of long continuance, that they are exceeding short and momentany. For so the Psalmist telleth vs, [that God indureth but a while in his anger, but in his fauour is life. Weeping may abide at euening, but ioy commeth in the morning. And with this assurance of hope, the people of God incourage one another to the practise of repentance. Come (say they) and let vs returne vnto the Lord; for he hath spoiled, and hee will heale vs, he hath wounded vs, and hee will bind vs vp. After two dayes will hee reuiue vs, and in the third day hee will raise vs vp, and we shall liue in his sight. Yea so short is the time of these temporary afflictions; that the Lord reputeth it but as a moment; For a moment (saith he to his people) in mine anger I hid my face from thee for a little season, but with euerlasting mercy haue I had compassion on thee. In regard whereof, wee may fitly say with the Psalmist, that God hath shewed vs great troubles and aduersities, but will returne and reuiue vs, seeing the time of their continuance is so short, that they are rather shewed, than truely suffered: euen as the louing Father maketh shew only of his rod, and striketh therewith his childrens coates, when his tender loue will scarce suffer him to touch their skinne.

Psal.30.5. Hos.6.2. Esay 54.8. Psal.71.20.

But here some will say, To what purpose doe wee heare words of the breuity of our afflictions when in our owne sense and experience they are long and tedious? or what comfort is this to tell vs that the afflictions of Gods Children last but for a moment or little space, when as wee may hence conclude that wee are not in this number, seeing wee haue passed a great time in sicknesse, pouerty, and such other miseries? To which I answere, that our short liues will not suffer vs to indure long afflictions; for they are momentany and but a span long, as the Psalmist speaketh, and yet hee who is most afflicted, hath in part of this moment, some comfort and refreshing. If therefore wee complaine with Iacob, that our dayes are euill, in regard of the miseries which wee haue endured, let vs acknowledge with him, that they are few also: and if with the Church wee complaine that all our dayes are past in Gods anger, and wasted away in labour and sorrow, let vs also confesse with her, that our yeeres haue beene spent as a thought that our life is cut off quickly and we flie away. It is true that in the sense and feeling of our fraile flesh these our short afflictions doe seeme long and tedious; but vnto the spirituall man who liueth not by sense but by faith, and in the expectation of euerlasting happinesse, his afflictions, though they should last his whole life, would seeme but short and momentany: seeing he doth not Psal.39.5. Gen.47.9. Psal.90.9.

S. Aug. Tract. in Epist. Ioan. ad Parthos. Their obiection answered who affirme that their afflictions haue beene long and tedious.

compare compare the time of their continuance, with the rest of his life, which he leadeth in this World in ioy and delight; but with that eternall glory, and neuer ending blessednesse which he is to inherit in the World to come. Neither doth he number the dayes of his affliction according to the present sense and apprehension of the flesh, (which expecteth no other ioy or comfort, but what it hath in the pleasures of sinne, and in the fruition of worldly vanities (being it is deputed to mortification, and is to be wholly destroyed and abolished by death; and therefore thinketh all this time lost which is not spent in earthly delights, and euery day a yeere which bringeth with it any crosses and afflictions; (because though it bee short in itselfe, yet in truth it is long being compared with the momentany continuance of our life vpon Earth whereof it is a great share) but the faithfull man numbreth his dayes according to Gods arithmeticke, in whose estimation a thousand yeeres are as yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night; because hee compareth this finite time with that which is infinite and euerlasting. And therefore considering on the one side, that all his whole life is but a moment, and lesse than the twinckling of an eye, in respect of that eternall life and happinesse which is to follow; and on the other side, that in this momentany life, he hath many comforts and refreshings, both in regard of his outward relaxation from troubles, when being freed from his afflictions, hee enjoyeth the comforts of this life, and also in respect of his inward feelings through his future hopes, and the present consolations of Gods Spirit and ioy in the holy Ghost; hee is ready to conclude, that his longest afflictions are but very short, euen a moment of a moment, seeing they last but a part of this life, which altogether is but short and momentany.

CHAP. XI.

That God so measureth our afflictions vnto vs, as that they doe not exceed our strength to beare them.

AND thus doth Gods loue appeare in the measure of our afflictions, being considered in themselues both in respect of their quantitie and time, (but yet this loue and goodnesse of God will shine much more cleerely, if wee further consider how hee measureth them vnto vs) first in that he doth not suffer the measure of our afflictions to exceed the measure of our strength; and secondly, in that he proportioneth them according to the fittest measure of equitie, laying no more vpon vs, than hee is well able to beare and to impose, hauing herein respect to his owne glory and our benefit and saluation. Concerning the former, the Lord doth not measure out our afflictions according to our faults but according to our strength, and looketh not what wee haue deserued, but what wee are able to beare; for as the Prophet saith, in his anger hee doth remember mercy, which maketh him in all our chastisements to intend our profit, and not our punishment. Neither doth he giue vnto all his Seruants a cup of the like size, or a burthen to beare of the same waight; but either fitteth their afflictions to the measure of their strength, or their strength to the measure of their afflictions, abating of the burthen because it is too heauie, or adding to their power who beare it, because they are too weake. Hee doth not obserue in sharing of afflictions an Arithmeticall proportion, giuing to all indifferently the same number and measure; but like a wise Geometrician hee doth proportionate and fit them to the strength of the bearers, alotting a greater burthen to the strongest, and a lesse to the weakest. In which respect hee is said to correct vs, in iudgement, because he wisely discerneth (not only who deserueth most correction, but also) of their strength and ability who are to beare his chastisements; which not being obserued, in stead of loading them, he should ouerwhelme them, and in stead of amending them, he should destroy them. But this truth will more manifestly appeare, both by the Scriptures, and by reason it selfe grounded vpon them. For in the Word of God wee haue an expresse promise, made by him who is faithfull and true, and neither can nor will deceiue vs, that the Lord will not suffer vs to be tempted aboue that wee are able, but will giue the issue with the temptation, that we may be able to beare it. And euen reason it selfe inlightned by the Scriptures will teach vs, that it can bee no otherwise, if we consider who is the author of our afflictions. For first they proceed from God our heauenly Father, whose wisedome is infinite, and whose loue is incomprehensible, and therefore if earthly parents out of their small modell of loue, and little pittance of affection, guided and directed with their shallow iudgement and discretion, doe not giue vnto all their children the like measure of chastisement, though they bee alike guilty of the same fault; but haue respect to their age and bignesse, giuing lesse to the youngest and weakest, and more to those who are older & of greater strength: because if they should receiue these greater stripes, they would (exceeding their strength) make them dull or desperate; and if these should haue their lighter chastisements, they would hereby grow carelesse and negligent; how much more then will the

Hebr. 3.2.

Ier. 16.24. 30. 11.

1. Cor. 10. 13.

Lord

Lord, so farre exceeding them in loue and wisedome, thus proportionate his chastisements to the strength of his Children; not punishing his babes in Christ, and those of riper age in the same measure; but correcting them with such gentlenesse, that they may bee amended and not oppressed, and these with such seuerity that they may lay them to heart, and not for their lightnesse scorne and contemne them; seeing he doth not in his chastisements ayme at the satisfying of his justice by punishing the faule, but doth all out of meere loue for the reformation of the offender? Againe the Lord is our heauenly Physition, who hath vndertaken to cure vs of our corruptions; and afflictions are the potion which hee hath prepared for the effecting of the cure; and therefore if wee so farre trust earthly physitions whom wee thinke faithfull and skilfull, that for the recouery of our bodily health, wee dare aduenture to drinke the potions which they haue appointed, being perswaded that they will haue respect to our constitution and present condition, and not giue vs a medicine aboue our strength; notwithstanding that common experience telleth vs, that they themselues for want of skill are often deceiued, and somtime for want of care or honesty are ready to deceiue: then how much more willingly should wee for the health of our soules, receeiue this potion of afflictions prepared by our heauenly Physition, seeing wee can make no question either of his skill, loue or faithfulnesse; and therefore may bee assured that in making this medicine he will haue respect to our strength and ability, and will so correct this poyson of affliction before hee doe giue it, that it will cure and not kill vs; and though it make vs sicke for the present euen to the death, as we imagine, yet wee shall finde in the euent, that it will not hurt vs, but onely by working thus effectually, will purge away the noysome humors of sinne. Hee is also our King, and Emperour, who hauing pressed vs to the spirituall Warfare, guideth and directeth vs in all our wayes, and allotteth vnto euery of his Souldiers their office, place, imployment and enterprise; and therefore if euen earthly commanders both in their discretion and loue to their souldiers, fit their imployments according to their abilities, appointing the stronger and valianter for attempts of greatest difficulty and danger, and the weaker and fainter to more easie seruices; how much more will the great Commander of Heauen and Earth, out of his infinite wisdome, loue and care, appoint vnto euery of his Souldiers whom hee hath pressed out to fight in this battaile of afflictions, a fit taske for their vndertaking; and allot fit imployments both in respect of labour and danger, for the strength of those which are designed to them? To conclude, if wee see all who are wise and just, to haue this regard, not to oppresse their inferiours with labors, but to fit their imployments according to their abilities, if no good schoolemaster will appoint his scholar longer or harder lessons than they can learne, nor correct them with more or greater stripes than is fit for their age; but obserue a proportion and measure, both in their instructions and corrections, according to their seuerall capacities to conceiue or strength to beare and endure; if no good Master will appoint his Seruants a greater burthen than they can cary, but allot the heauiest to the strongest, and the lightest to the weakest; yea if a good man be mercifull to his beast fitting his load to his strength, and not oppressing him with more than hee can beare; how much more may we be assured that the Lord will be more carefull ouer his owne Children, in proportioning their burthen to their strength, that they may not sinke vnder the waight of their afflictions, especially considering that hee perfectly knoweth their power and ability, and can as easily adde to their strength, as detract from their burthen.

Secondly God the Father hath committed the tempering of our cup vnto Christ our Saviour, who as hee hath manifested his loue vnto vs in giuing his life as the price of our redemption; and in not thinking those precious drinkes too deare for vs, euen his body to bee our meate and his blood our drinke, that by them wee may be nourished to euerlasting life; so hath hee no lesse skill in tempering a cup fit for our strength, and the curing of our spirituall diseases, not only as being our creator who knoweth whereof we bee made, and remembreth that wee are but dust; but also as being our mediator, hee had experience both of the cup which he tempereth for vs, and of our weaknesse and infirmities who are to drinke it. For himselfe hath begun to vs of this cup of afflictions, as it was tempered for him by his heauenly Father, and did not onely taste or sip of it, but drinke it off to the very bottome: and herein alone the difference is betweene his cup and ours, in that his was farre bigger, and the potion much more bitter and distastfull, ours lesser, and lesse vnpleasant and loathsome; his was giuen vnto him in anger for the purging away of our punishments in respect of sinne past, but ours in loue, either to bee a profitable potion to purge and cleanse our bodies and soules from their present corruptions, or to bee a preseruation to preuent the contagious diseases of sinne for the time to come. And as hee hath good experience of our medicine, so also of our weaknesse and frailty: for as he hath drunke of our cup, so likewise also hee hath

1. Pet. 2. 9.

Psal. 103.

That Christ Iesus tempereth our cup and therein we may be assured that he will fit it to our strength.

hath borne our infirmities, and carried our sorrowes, and being sicke of our sinne which as our surety he tooke vpon him, he was also smitten with our plagues, wounded for our transgressions, and broken for our iniquities. Neither haue we an high Priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but hee was in all things tempted in like sort, yet without sinne, as the Apostle speaketh. And therefore as those who are pitifull and mercifull in their owne nature, doe take the greatest compassion, and doe most commiserate them who are afflicted with those griefes and diseases vnto which themselues haue beene formerly subject: so may we assure our selues, that our Sauiour Christ, who hath had the feeling of our sicknesses and infirmities, and hath tasted sufficiently of these loathsome drugs of affliction, which are now ministred vnto vs, doth compassionate our griefes, and hath a fellow-feeling in our miseries: and therefore hauing the mixing of our cup committed vnto him, hee will haue regard to our ability, and not make it so loathsome, but that we may well take it: and hauing all power committed also vnto him, hee will helpe our infirmities, and giue such strength vnto vs in our greatest weakenesse, that wee shall bee able to take so much of this vnpleasant Physicke, as is fit for the recouery of our spirituall health. And hereof it is that the Apostle hauing taught vs that Christ our High Priest was touched with our infirmities, and tempted like vnto vs, maketh this the ground of our faith in all our troubles, and encourageth vs hereby to goe boldly vnto the throne of grace, that we may obtaine mercy, and find grace to helpe in time of need. So elsewhere hee telleth vs, that it behoued our Sauiour to be like vnto his brethren, that hee might be a mercifull and faithfull high Priest, &c. for in that himselfe hath suffered, being tempted, hee is able to succour them that are tempted, and that now hee can haue compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way, because he himselfe also hath beene compassed with infirmity. And therefore we need not now to feare either to bee oppressed with an ouer-heauy waight of troubles and afflictions, or that we should be tempted aboue our power, in regard of our frailty and infirmity, seeing he who maketh the wounds, hath also power to cure them, & he that mixeth our cup, can also giue vs strength to drink it, according to the saying of Eliphaz vnto Iob, Hee maketh the wound, and he bindeth it vp, he smiteth and his hands make whole. Hee shall deliuer thee in fiue troubles, and in the seauenth the euill shall not touch thee, &c. And hee hath also bound himselfe by his most gracious promise, that hee will not breake the bruised reed, nor quench the smoaking flax, till hee bring forth iudgement vnto victory.

Thirdly, God the Holy Ghost is alwayes present with the faithfull in all their afflictions and tribulations, supporting their impotency with his might, and manifesting his greatest strength in their greatest weakenesse; so that though their tentations are grieuous and manifold, yet are they alwayes enabled both to beare and ouercome them. It is true indeed that the Lord suffereth the faithfull to run into desperate dangers, and in the sense and feeling of the flesh, to be almost ouer-whelmed with the vnsupportable waight of their afflictions: as wee see in the example of Dauid, Iob, Elias, the Disciples of our Sauiour, who were almost couered with waues before they were freed out of danger; and in the whole Church grieuously afflicted in Egypt, and in most desperate danger at the Red Sea, the former making them cry out in sense of paine, the other in expectation of greater euils; but most plainly in the example of Christ himselfe, who was so loded with afflictions, that drops of bloud were pressed out of him, and so oppressed with the vnsupportable waight of the euils which he suffered, that speaking according to his present sense and feeling, he complayneth in agony of spirit, that he was left and forsaken of God. And all this may well stand with the truth of Gods Word; for hee hath promised, not that wee shall not be sorely loaden with an heauy waight of affliction; but only that we shall not be oppressed and ouer-whelmed; not that wee shall escape the assaults of terrible enemies, or neuer be foiled in the fight, but that in the end wee shall obtaine the victory; not that wee shall be freed from tentations of any kinde, yea, euen of the highest and most dangerous nature, but that we shall not be tempted aboue our power, but shall haue a good issue with the tentation, so as wee shall be able to beare it. And thus the Lord is as good as his promise, when as loading vs with the greatest waight of afflictions, he giueth vnto vs an answerable measure of strength, whereby wee are enabled to beare and ouercome them; the which he neuer faileth to doe vnto his faithfull children who trust and depend vpon him. So that in their greatest afflictions they may say with Dauid: The Lord hath chastned me sore, but he hath not deliuered me to death; & with the Apostle Paul, we are afflicted on euery side, yet are we not in distresse; in pouerty, but not ouercome of pouerty, we are persecuted but not forsaken, cast downe but we perish not. Not that wee haue any strength in our selues to endure the fiery tryall, or to resist the violence of these cruell enemies, but because in our greatest weakenesse wee are supported with the power of Gods might, and held so fast by the hand of Christ, that the strongest afflictions inforced with all the violence of Sathans temptations, are

9. Sect. 3. That the holy Ghost is present with vs & powerfully assisteth & comforteth vs in al our afflictions.

Matth. 8. 24.

Exod. 2. 23. & 14. 10.

1. Cor. 10. 13.

Psal. 118. 18.

2. Cor. 4. 8, 9.

Iohn 10. 28.

are not able to pull vs from him. So that notwithstanding our greatest calamities, and littlest strength, wee may rest perswaded with the Apostle, that neither tribulation, anguish, persecution, famine, nakednesse, perill, sword, nor any thing else, shall be able to separate vs from the loue of Christ. For first the Spirit of God dwelling in vs doth according to the greathes of our outward afflictions, giue vs an answerable measure of inward consolation; so that where there are great crosses, there also are great comforts: and when God sendeth an extraordinary measure of worldly miseries, which in respect of our owne strength would, in trying, tire vs, he sendeth also an extraordinary measure of spirituall refreshings, and comfortable feelings of his loue, which make our intolerable burthen to become light and easie; of which the Apostle sheweth that he had good experience, where he saith, that as the sufferings of Christ abound in vs, so our consolation abounded through Christ. Whereupon hee professeth his hope that the afflicted Corinthians should bee made partakers of the same comforts. And our hope is stedfast (saith he) concerning you, knowing that as you are partakers of the sufferings; so shall yee be also of the consolation. The like experience of these inward consolations had the Prophet Dauid, In the multitude (saith he) of my thoughts within me, thy comforts delight my soule. All which inward comfort and consolation wee haue from the holy Spirit of God dwelling and raigning in vs, whilest it doth apply vnto vs the mercies of God, and merits of Christ, and so assuring vs that wee haue our part and interest in all the gracious promises of the Gospell, which either concerne this life or the life to come, doth repleniſh our consciences with such peace as passeth all vnderstanding, and with such vnspeakable joy and gladnesse, as none conceiue but they who feele it. For it is the water of the Spirit which like a liuing fountaine euer springeth in vs vnto euerlasting life, and like a cleere riuer floweth with the heauenly streames of sweet consolation, wherein being bathed and washed, in the scorching heat of afflictions and persecutions, we are presently cooled and refreshed, and so filled with joy and delight, according to that of the Psalmist, There is a riuer whose streames shall make glad the Citie of God, the holy place of the Tabernacles of the most high. It is this spirituall anointing and heauenly Oile, which preserueth vs from being consumed in this fiery furnace of affliction, and wherewith being anointed after we are scorched with these flames, our sores are suppled, and the fiery heate of the burning so extracted and drawne out, that wee receiue no more hurt thereby, than Moses bush, which in burning was not consumed; or the three children in the fiery furnace, whose very haires were not touched with the violence of the flames. So that though we were depriued of all worldly comforts, yet haue we no cause to be faint in our afflictions; or to shew impatiency in our greatest griefes, as long as wee haue this inward comforter to refresh and cheere vs: for the consolations of God should not seeme small vnto vs as Eliphaz speaketh, seeing they so farre exceed all earthly delights; neither should wee be dejected in our minds though wee want these earthly shadowes, when as wee are repleniſhed with this heauenly substance.

But as the afflictions of the faithfull, though neuer so vnsupportable, are made tolerable with the consolations of Gods Spirit, so also by that vigour and strength which it ministreth vnto them: for this holy Spirit which is the strong power of God, doth so comfort by strengthening, and so strengthen by comforting them, that though they are in themselues most weake and feeble, yet being supported with this diuine might, the heauiest waight of troubles and calamities shall not oppresse and ouerwhelme them. And this the Prophet Esay plainly teacheth vs. He giueth strength (saith hee) to him that fainteth, and to him that hath no strength he increaseth power: so that though young men who are in their chiefest vigour, being weary doe stumble and fall, yet they who waite on the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount vp with wings as Eagles, they shall run and not be weary, and walke and not be faint. So the Psalmist pronounceth him blessed who considereth the poore, because the Lord will either deliuer him in the time of trouble, or else at least wil strengthen him vpon the bed of languishing, & wil make all his bed in his sicknes. And the Apostle assureth vs, that because the Lord is faithfull in keeping his promises, hee will stablish vs, when wee are ready to stagger, and keepe vs from euill, either that it may not touch vs, or may not hurt vs. According to that of the Psalmist; Thou shalt walke vpon the Lion and Aspe, the young Lion and Dragon shalt thou tread vnder thy feet. Because hee hath loued me therefore will I deliuer him, &c. Hee shall call vpon mee, and I will heare him, I will be with him in trouble, I will deliuer and glorifie him. In regard of which helpe and assistance which wee haue from God, he would haue vs to lay aside all feare and cowardize, and to bee bolde and courageous in all our dangers and distresses. Feare thou not (saith hee) for I am with thee, be not afraid for I am thy God: I will strengthen and helpe thee, and will sustaine thee with the right hand of my righteousnesse. And againe, I the Lord thy God will hold thy right hand, saying vnto thee, feare not, I will helpe thee. Feare not thou worme Iacob, and yee men of Israel, I will helpe saith the Lord and thy Redeemer, the holy one of Israel. And vn-

Rom. 8. 35.

2. Cor. 1. 5.

Verse 7.

Psal. 94. 19.

Iohn 4. 14.
Iohn 7. 38.

Psal. 46. 4.

Iob 33. 12.

Q. Sect. 4. That Gods Spirit giueth vnto vs strength to beare our afflictions.

Esay 40. 29, 30, 31.

Psal. 41. 3.

2. Thes. 3. 3.

Psal. 91. 13.

Esay 41. 10, 13, 14.

to

to this strength of confidence and vndaunted feare, the faithfull doe attaine, as we may see in the example of Dauid, who professeth, that though hee should walke through the valley of the shadow of death, he would feare no euill, because God was with him, and his rod and staffe did comfort him: neither could he be dejected with the rod of his corrections, so long as he was strengthened and vpheld with the staffe of his consolations. And thus the whole Church and people of God professe, that being by faith, and their manifold experience assured, that God was their hope and strength, and helpe in troubles, ready to be found, therefore they would not feare, though the earth were removed, and though the mountaines should fall into the middest of the Sea, though the waters thereof should rage and swell, and the Mountaines shake with the swelling thereof, &c. By all which it appeareth, that God dealeth with his children in their afflictions, as with Iacob in wrastling with him; for as in outward shew hee did seeme to contend and striue with him, as though hee desired to foyle and ouerthrow him, so indeed and truth hee gaue vnto him all that strength whereby hee was enabled to stand, and in the end to ouercome: for so no sooner doth the Lord by sending afflictions seeme to contend with vs, and to desire to ouerthrow and cast vs downe, but presently he inableth vs with the strength and assistance of his holy Spirit to ouercome in this conflict; and as soone as we are ready to stagger he stayeth vs from falling, and when we haue receiued a foyle, he rayleth vs vp again, till at last we preuaile in the conflict and obtayne his blessing. Neither can our weaknes be any hinderance to our victory seeing wee stand not by our owne strength, but by the power of God assisting vs, which is more manifested in our weaknesse, and magnified in our frailty and infirmity. And as the tender mother teaching her yong or sicke child to goe doth oftentimes seeme to leaue him to his owne strength, when as in truth he goeth by her helpe supporting him; and to let him alone to his own care and prouidence, when in the meane time she hath a watchfull eye ouer him, so that hee is no sooner ready to fall, but with nimble speed shee catcheth hold of him, and preuents his danger: so doth the Lord deale with vs his children, whilst in our nonage & greatest weaknes, he teacheth vs to go in this rough path of afflictions, which leadeth to his Kingdom: for when he seemeth to neglect vs, he watcheth ouer vs: & when in our sense & feeling hee leaueth vs to our selues, euen then hee stayeth vs by his strength; & when we are in greatest danger of sinking & falling, he stretcheth out with speed his powerfull hand, & preserueth vs from receiuing any harme. An example whereof we haue in Dauid: who professeth that if the Lord had not holpen him, his soule had almost dwelt in silence, but when (saith he) I said, my foot slideth, thy mercy, O Lord, stayed me vp.

And thus are wee both comforted and strengthened, with Gods holy Spirit, so as our afflictions cannot oppresse and ouerwhelme vs, though they bee neuer so great and manifold, and wee neuer so weake and impotent in our owne strength. Vnto which we may further adde, that the Lord in his infinite loue towards vs, doth not content himselfe to haue giuen vnto his children, this inward strength and comfort in their afflictions; but also in their greatest extremities, he giueth them the fruition of many outward benefits, joyning comforts with his crosses, blessings with miseries, blandishments with chastisements, and good things with euill; so that in our greatest mourning, wee neuer want matter of joy, and thanksgiuing. For as the Lord in his infinite wisedome hath made such a mixture of things in this life, that as there is no man so aboundeth and flourisheth in worldly prosperity, but that he hath some crosses and afflictions in his greatest jollity; so there is no man so dejected and ouer-whelmed with troubles and calamities, but he hath some comforts and refreshing. As no man is so loaded with benefits, as that he is in all respects happy, without any taste of misery; so there is none so oppressed with afflictions, that he is euery way miserable, without any taste of this earthly happinesse. And this mixture the wise Iudge of Heauen and Earth hath made, to keepe vs in a meane, who are too prone to run into extreames; and because wee would bee too much exalted with continual prosperity, and too much dejected if wee should feele nothing but misery, and affliction; the Lord neuer suffereth vs so to abound with worldly happinesse, but that we haue something to humble vs, nor so to bee plunged in misery and affliction, but that wee haue some cause of present comfort, or future hope. And like a wise Father he doth not too much dandle vs, which would make vs wantons; nor alwayes beate vs, which would make vs desperate; but he judiciously mingleth the one with the other, not letting vs haue our wils in all things, least wee should neglect him; nor yet alwayes crossing vs in them, least wee should hate and rebell against him; not alwayes cockering vs, least wee should grow proud and insolent, nor alwayes correcting vs, least wee should become base and seruile; but hee giueth gifts, that wee may loue him, and stripes, that wee may feare him. Yea oftentimes he mixeth frowns with his fauours, when they make vs malepart; and kind speeches with his rebukes and chastisements: to shew in the hatred of our faults, his loue to our persons, when he seeth vs humble and penitent, that so he may make vs in all things to §. Sect. 5. That God mingleth comforts and benefits with our afflictions and crosses.

Nil adeò fortuna grauis, miserabile fecit, vt minuant nulla gaudia parte malum, Ouid. 4 Pont. Eleg. 4.

reuerence him, and no lesse to feare him in his fauours, than to loue him in his chastisements. And as the wise Captaine and Commander doth not alwayes tire and weare out his Seruants, with long marches, wearisome watchings, & fierce skirmishes and assaults; but after their tedious labours bringeth them into Garrisons, that taking their rest and repose, and refreshing themselues with wholsome diet, good lodging, and pleasant recreations, they may renew their strength and courage, and afterwards be more fit for seruice and imployment: so dealeth our great Commaunder with vs, in this spirituall warfare, giuing vnto vs a breathing time after our fight, rest after our labours, recreation after sorrowes, and after troubles and afflictions, comforts and refreshings; that so hauing recouered our strength, and taken new courage vnto vs, wee may the better bee inabled to doe him further seruice. Yea hee doth not onely interchangeably let one of these succeed the other, but like a prudent generall hee intermixeth them together, giuing vnto them in the time of their greatest labours, some rest, and in their sharpest conflicts and encounters with afflictions, some breathing, and refreshing; euen as contrariwise hee doth not, when they are in the garrison of prosperity suffer them to languish in idlenes, and to spend their whole time in eating, drinking, pleasure, & delight, which would effeminate their mindes, and make them vnfit for seruice; but sometimes inureth them to labour, watching, and warlike exercises, for the preseruing of their strength, and manlike courage. To this purpose one saith, that God in gouerning the World, doth now send one thing, and then an other, and doth not at all times grant prosperity, nor alwaies inflict trouble, and aduersity; but as there is in nature a vicissitude, and intercourse of all things, Day following Night, and Night Day; Summer Winter, and Winter Summer: so euen in vs, sorrow, and pleasure, sickneſse, and health, haue their turnes, and changes. And therefore wee should not thinke sickneſse strange, for then by the same reason we should think it strange also when we haue our health; nor bee much moued when sorrow commeth; for then wee should be alike troubled at the approach of joy: because, in course of nature, these doe follow one the other, &c. Neither now say, that this is no comfort vnto thee, who alwayes liuest in misery, and affliction, seeing hereby thou shalt but bewray thy vnthankfulnesse, and forgetfulnes of Gods blessings; for no man can be alwayes in griefe, neither will our nature beare it; but because wee desire to spend all our time in pleasure and delight, therefore we think the shortest griefes, to be (as it were) an age of sorrow. Besides, those things which are good and delightfull, doe when they are past, easily slip out of memory, but that which is euill and grieuous maketh such a deepe impression, that though it be past, yet it is neuer forgotten. Euen the weary hireling, and the idle Gentleman, the King, and Captiue haue both their comforts, and their crosses. For hee oftentimes in his prison, hath his pleasures, laughing, leaping, and playing to expresse his mirth; and the other, vnder his Crowne hath his cares, and many a pang vnder his purple robe, sorrowing, shaking, carking, and dying, for feare of dying. So that there is no mans life, eyther without paine, or pleasure, matter of mirth, or cause of mourning, the which mixture, the Lord hath made for our profit and benefit, if wee had eyes to see it, or grace to acknowledge it; for we could neuer well relish these dishes of prosperity, vnlesse they were seasoned with afflictions, and made pleasing to our palates, with these sharpe sawces; we would take no delight in the day of joy, vnlesse the darke night of sorrow went before it; nor esteeme of health, if we were neuer sicke; nor thinke plenty a benefit, vnlesse we were sometimes pinched with want and penury. Neither is the value of any of Gods benefits knowne in the fruition, but in their want. Delicates would not delight vs, if they were not dainty; neither do we account any thing rare in excellency; vnlesse withall it be rare in vse. Euen continuall pleasure would displease vs, and sweetnesse it selfe without change, or mixture, would become as lothsome as gal or wormewood. Perpetuall ease, is worse than wearisome labour; and according to the Prouerbe; Hee had need to haue strong bones that beareth the waight of continuall prosperity. For it is a kind of misery, neuer to haue tasted misery; and no more delight to abound alwayes in pleasure, and plenty, than it is to haue alwayes a full stomack: seeing we surfet of this saciety, & are more dangerously sicke, being pampered with these worldly dainties, than when wee vse the most spare diet. And therefore it is in mercy, that the Lord mingleth our prosperity with aduersitie; seeing by the want of earthly benefits, he doth but whet our stomackes, and sharpen our appetites, that after when we haue them, we may feed on them with more delight. For our health is sweetned, and endeared by our sickneſse, our plenty with our want, our liberty by our restraint, our rest by our labour, and the hauing our wils, by our sometimes wanting of them.

But here some will say, that howsoeuer there might be some pleasure or profit in an equall mixture of prosperity, and affliction; or when wee haue a little sowre to relish all our sweet; yet there is no great comfort, when the sawce exceeds the meat; neither can I find any place for patience in mine afflictions, Chrysost. in Matth. 16. Homil. 54.

Operet ejus rosula, quam rant lectus

p. Sect. 6. Their obiect on answered, who affirme, that their crosses doe exceed their comforts.

flictions, seeing I haue so many crosses; for so few comforts, and a pound of misery, for a dramme of delight. To whom I answere, that these complaints arise from the corrupt flesh, which is so wholly intent vpon that present smart which it feeleth, that it vtterly forgetteth all Gods blessings, and benefits, which wee either haue formerly enjoyed in time past, or doe enjoy, in and after our afflictions; and through impatience, robbeth vs of those comforts which God hath giuen vs; which if they were duly pondred in the ballance of an vnpartiall judgement, they would not only counterpoyse, but euen much ouer-weigh the causes of our griefes. Wherein we are not vnfitly compared vnto flies, who leaue all the sound flesh, though of farre greater quantity, and seeke out only sores to sucke in; or vnto little children, who if any of their many delights be taken from them, in their peeuishnes and discontent cast away all the rest, and fall a crying: for so in our frowardnesse and impatiency, if we haue not all we can desire, we thinke that we haue nothing; and if God crosse vs in any one benefit, by taking it from vs, wee are ready to crosse our selues in all the rest; casting them away by contempt, or careleſse neglect, when as they should serue as comforts to moderate our griefe. And being resolued to torment our selues with excessiue sorrow, wee voluntarily forget all the good things which wee enjoy, and imploy all our wit to inuent and find out arguments, to justifie our griefe; that so wee may haue some reason for our madnesse; and to aggrauate the causes of our discontent with many circumstances, that according to the greatnesse thereof, we may also inlarge our sorrowes, and haue some pretext for our excessiue mourning. Like vnto those who being foule by nature, do paint their faces, that they may be faire by art, and so may be liked of others, who are deceiued with their false beauty; or (if the deceit being discerned, they appeare hereby more vgly to their judgement, than amiable to their eye) they may at least please themselues, who are willing to be deceiued, with these adulterate, and adulterous colours; that they may increase their loue and liking to their owne persons: for so these passionate mourners, being in loue with their sorrowes, and knowing that they are vgly and monstrous when they are immoderate, they paint and set them out with false colours, that therby they may procure others approbation of them, or else fit them for their owne liking. And removing out of sight all Gods blessings and benefits they still enjoy, which would be so many arguments to conuince them of folly, in their impatient sorrow, and so many blots and aspersions to blemish the counterfeite beauty of their painted griefe, they doe by all meanes amplifie, and aggrauate their crosses, and if they bee not heauy enough of themselues to presse them downe, they will increase their waight by calling to remembrance all their miseries past, and by feare will anticipate all that are to come.

Such fondlings, it is hard to weane from this lothsome loue; because they wilfully stop their eares against all consolations, and therfore must for a time haue leaue to whip themselues, with these rods of their own making; till sense of paine haue brought them out of this fit of frenzie, and made them more capable of reason and perswasion, and till being wearied with their owne wayward nesse they become wiser, & more desirous of their owne good. But if we haue any desire in the time of our afflictions to haue our sorrowfull soules refreshed with true comfort, and to endure Gods fatherly chastisements with patience and thankefulnesse: let vs not fixe our eyes only vpon our present troubles, and turne them away from all causes of comfort, which God offereth vnto vs in the middest of our miseries: neither let our minds be only intent vpon the euils which afflict vs, to aggrauate them in our conceite and apprehension, that with them we may increase our sorrowes; but let vs rather exercise them in meditating vpon the manifold & great blessings which wee haue receiued from God in time past, vpon those also which we presently enjoy, and vpon such as we expect in the time to come. For, there is no faithfull man, though for the present neuer so miserable, who hath not had the fruition of many of Gods fauours in former times; the which he may to his comfort enjoy by a gratefull remembrance, not taking occasion thereby to aggrauate his griefes, by calling to minde what hee hath lost, but rather to renew his joy in himselfe and thankfulnesse towards God, by thinking how long hee did enjoy them. As wee may see in the example of Iob, who in his greatest extreamities armed his patience, with the remem-remembrance of those manifold blessings which hee had receiued from God in former times; Shall we (saith he) receiue good at the hand of God, and not receiue euill? Yea there is no man so ouer-whelmed with miseries, but that if it would please him to number them, hee might find as many of Gods mercies to set against them, which might serue to counterpoyse the weight of his afflictions, and as much raise him with joy and comfort, as hee is dejected with griefe and heauinesse. Thou art troubled with sicknesse; but thou hast sufficient wealth to prouide diet, physicke and other necessaries. Thou art weake and of a tender nature, but thou enjoyest such a competency, as may maintaine thee without any great labour. Thou art poore in estate; but thou hast thine health & strength, whereby thou art inabled to take such paines

Iob 2. 10.

9. Sect. 8. That wee must comfort our selues in afflictions, by considering what benefits we do still enjoy.

as may earne thy liuing. Thou haſt a troubled minde; but thou haſt a ſtrong body, or many friends which refreſh thee with their comforts. Thou haſt a weake body; but thou haſt a couragious heart. Thou haſt no goods nor meanes of getting them; but thou haſt ſome friends which take care of thee. Thou art deſtitute of friends; but thou art able to liue of thy ſelfe without their helpe. Thou haſt ſome bad children which grieue thee; but thou haſt ſome other good which do delight thee: or, thou haſt a vertuous wife which may ſupply the defect of all other comforts. Thou art vexed with miſeries all the day, one griefe purſuing another; but thou haſt reſt in the night, and when ſleepe commeth thy ſorrowes vaniſh. In a word, God vexeth vs not with a continuall feauer of afflictions, but onely with ſome Ague fits, which haue a good day as well as a bad; or at leaſt haue many intermiſſions, if they be quotidian. He doth not ſuffer theſe ſpirituall enemies ſo continually to aſſault vs, but that hee granteth vnto vs many breathing times to recouer our ſtrength; and if hee ſuffer them to giue vs great blowes, he giueth vs alſo ſtrong armour to beare them off. Hee will not depriue vs of all his benefits at once, but if he cauſe the Sunne of our chiefe joy to ſet, hee will make it to riſe againe (as it were) the next day, and in the meane time he will ſupply the abſence of this our great light, with the innumerable ſtarres of leſſer comforts. Yea (as I ſaid) hee ſo intermixeth comforts with our croſſes that wee neuer haue ſuch cauſe of griefe, but that wee haue as much cauſe of gladneſſe. Thus hee taketh away a good mother from Iſaac, but hee comforteth him in his loſſe by giuing him a vertuous wife: thus when Leah was deſpiſed he made her fruitfull; and when Rachel and Hannah were barren, hee comforteth them in their Husbands loue. Thus Dauid, when he ſerued a malicious King who ſought his life, was recompenced in the loue of a gracious Prince, who was as carefull to preſerue him, as his father violent in ſeeking his deſtruction; and when he was vexed with vngracious ſonnes, he was comforted in the loue of moſt faithfull ſeruants. And therefore, when as wee ſtill enjoy from God ſo many benefits with our croſſes, let vs not ſo wholy be taken vp in thinking on our afflictions, as that we neuer meditate vpon Gods bleſſings ioyned with them: for this is but like the Leach, to feed vpon corrupted bloud, and to leaue that which is pure and ſound; or like the fooliſh Merchant of whom Plutarch ſpeaketh, who reſerued all his good Wine for the vſe of others, and drunke himſelfe that which was palled, & no better than vineger: but let vs think vpon that which is left, as wel as vpon that which is loſt, and not vexe our ſelues for that which we haue not, but enjoy with comfort that which we haue. For otherwiſe though wee profeſſe Chriſtianity, wee ſhall come ſhort of the wiſdome which was in the Heathen Philoſopher, who hauing loſt one of his foure goodly Mannours, ſaid vnto one who ſeemed much to condole his loſſe; Doeſt thou not know, that whereas thy ſelfe haſt but one little Farme, I haue three faire Mannors ſtill remayning? Which being acknowledged by the party, he further demanded: why then he ſhould not rather condole with him, for hauing but one, than the other with him, who was Lord of ſo many. Finally, as we haue had, and haue, many good things before and in the time of our afflictions, which may ſerue as comforts to lighten our calamities: So may wee alſo refreſh our fainting minds, in aſſurance of hope, & in the certaine expectation of future bleſſings; when as reſt ſhall follow our labour, and matter of mirth our cauſes of mourning. For, though weeping may abide at the Euening, yet ioy commeth in the Morning: though we haue a dropping ſeed time, yet our harueſt ſhall be faire and dry; for as the Pſalmiſt ſaith: They that ſowe in teares ſhall reape in ioy; and whereas they went weeping carrying precious ſeed, they ſhall returne with ioy and bring their ſheaues. And well this agreeth with the loue of our heauenly Father, to turne his terrible frownes into gracious ſmiles, and to giue ſome comfort to his children, after that by correction, hee hath throughly humbled them; well doth it befit the skill and grace of our wiſe Phyſician, to miniſter the cordials and reſtoratiues of conſolation, after the vomits and purges of affliction, that as by the one we are cleanſed from the groſſe humours of ſinne and corruption, ſo by the other wee may be ſtrengthened and inabled, to leade a new life, and to performe with comfort and incouragement all holy and Chriſtian duties both to God and our neighbours.

But though it were ſuppoſed that our whole life were full of miſeries, and that we had no taſt of earthly comfort, nor had euer ſpent a day in worldly contentment, yet haue all the faithfull ſo many ſpirituall conſolations, both in reſpect of their preſent feelings and future hopes, that they are ſufficient to out-countenance all their croſſes, and to ſweeten all their afflictions in their greateſt bitterneſſe. For hauing the aſſurance of the pardon of their ſinnes, and reconciliation with God, there followeth this peace with him, ſuch peace of conſcience, as paſſeth all vnderſtanding, and ſuch inward conſolation and joy in the holy Ghoſt, as maketh them to rejoyce, not only in their proſperity, but alſo in their greateſt miſeries and afflictions, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh. Neither doe they make any reckoning of all the croſſes and calamities which this World can inflict vpon

Gen. 24. 67. 1. Sam. 1. chap. 29. 31.

Plutarch. de tranquillitate animi.

Plutarch.

Pſal. 30. 5.

Pſal. 126. 5. &c.

Rom. 5. 3.

vpon them: seeing all the miseries and euils which are to be found vpon the whole Earth are but as one little droppe, in comparison of that infinite Ocean of woe and hellish condemnation, from which through Christ they are deliuered. Besides, they haue assurance by a liuely Faith, that in all their troubles and dangers, they haue the guard of Gods holy Angels attending on them, who hauing taken charge ouer them, doe keepe them in all their wayes that they hurt not their foote against a stone; and that though they haue many and great enemies to assault them, yet they haue more and mighty friends who daily stand in their defence, to protect them from all their fury. Yea, they know that Gods owne holy prouidence watcheth ouer them; which as it sendeth, so it ordereth, moderateth, and mitigateth all their afflictions, conuerting and turning all to their good, and the euerlasting saluation of their soules. Finally, by faith they haue assurance that this vnpleasant way of earthly tribulations, doth conduct them to their heauenly country, where they shall haue pleasures at Gods right hand for euermore: and that these short and momentany afflictions shall cause vnto them a farre most excellent and eternall weight of glory: and this maketh them to beare, what soeuer crosses God layeth vpon them, with patience, seeing they know that the afflictions, of this present life, are not worthy the glory which shall be reuealed. For if that Troaine Captaine thought it a sufficient incouragement, to comfort and hearten his souldiers in all their difficulties and dangers when as he could giue them some hope, that after all these cruell tempests and toilesome labours, they should at length arriue in a pleasant country, where they should take their rest and pleasure, and delight themselues in the remembrance of their passed troubles; how much more should wee with patience and courage passe through this Sea of worldly miseries, who haue farre better assurance of farre better hopes; euen that we shall after these our painful labours, safely arriue at the hauen of euerlasting rest, where it shall not be possible for all our enemies, so much as to interrupt our happinesse, or disturbe our ioy. And thus was Elias comforted, when being forsaken of men, he had the Angels of God to minister vnto him: Thus was Eliseus faint-hearted seruant incouraged, when as being be-set with enemies, hee had his eyes opened, and saw more on his side than were against him. Thus was the Martyr Steuen replenished with joy and gladnesse in all his persecutions, by looking into heauen, where he saw his Sauiour, and that vnspeakable joy and happinesse, which was there reserued for him; and this made him when the stones flew about his eares, to forget his owne paine, danger, and death, and in most feruent charity to pray for his enemies, that their sinnes might not bee laid to their charge, and so debarre them of all these ioyes. And finally, this made Moses choose rather to suffer aduersity with the people of God, than to inioy the pleasures of sinne for a season; esteeming the rebuke of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt, because hee had respect to the recompence of reward. To this purpose one saith well, that the minde of man so much the more grieuously apprehendeth the miseries of this life present, by how much it neglecteth to ponder the good that followeth; and because he will not meditate on the rewards which are reserued for him, hee thinketh euery trifle burthensome which he beareth: whereof it is, that his blind cogitation causeth him to murmur and complaine, when he feeleth but the blow of a whip, and thinketh that an intolerable calamity, which is daily ended with the course of sliding time. But if a man once contemplate those ioyes which are eternall, & fixe the eye of his heart vpon those things which do for euer continue without change, he thinketh all that to bee nothing which is still running towards an end, and beareth the afflictions of this present life so lightly, as though he thought all that nothing which slideth so fast away. For the more deeply those inward ioyes are rooted in him, the more slightly he apprehendeth all these outward griefes, &c. In which respect Zophar fitly compareth the miseries of this present life, to waters which runne and passe away; because these sliding calamities doe not with their violence oppresse the minde of a faithfull man, but onely giue him a little touch of sorrow as they passe by; and though hee be moistned with the bloud of his wounds, yet hee is not rent and plucked away from the assurance of his saluation.

Heb. 11. 25. 26.

Mala vitæ præsentis tantò durius animus sentit, quanto pensare bonum quod sequitur negligit. &c. Gregor. Moral. lib. 10. cap. 12.

Iob 11. 16.

Q. Sect. 9. That Paul was not afflicted aboue his strength, as his words seeme to portend.

And thus haue I shewed, that the Lord afflicteth none of his faithfull Children aboue their strength, but when he sendeth any aduersity or tribulation, hee withall sendeth the comforter, his holy Spirit, who refresheth them with inward consolations, and both outwardly and inwardly mingleth many good things with their euils, and his gracious benefits with their afflictions, that by all these helpes hee may support their weaknesse, and inable them to beare all their corrections with patience and comfort. Against which may bee obiected the example of the Apostle Paul, who affirmeth that in his afflictions which he suffered in Asia, hee was pressed out of measure, passing strength so that hee doubted of his life. Vnto which I answere, that the Apostles end is not there to shew the vnmeasurableness of his afflictions, but hee doth onely aggrauate them, that hee may the more amply set Gods mercy in deliuering him from such great euils. To which purpose hee saith, that hee was pressed out of measure and aboue strength, that is, beyond his owne ability and naturall power; which was farre vnable to beare so great afflictions, that so hee might magnifie the greatnes of Gods mercie, who had strengthened him aboue nature, and when all naturall ability fayled, had supported him by his Spirit, and raised him to health and strength when all worldly and naturall helpes and hopes failed and forsooke him, as though he should haue said, I was in respect of my fraile nature so vnmeasurably pressed with grieuous sicknesse, that there was no possible meanes for me to haue continued in this extremity, had not Gods power supported mee, and raised mee to life, who was euen but a dead man in mine owne apprehension. And that this is the meaning of the words, it plainely appeareth, both by that which goeth before, and that which followeth. For before, hee affirmeth that God comforted him in all his tribulations, and that as the sufferings, which hee indured for the name of Christ, abounded, so his consolation did abound through Christ. And the words following also, shew that hee speaketh of the greatnesse of his sicknesse, which was out of measure, not in respect of that power which he had from God, but of his owne naturall strength: for so he saith, that he receiued the sentence of death in himselfe, because hee should not trust in himselfe, but in God which raiseth the dead, and deliuered him from this great death. So afterwards speaking of his afflictions, he saith: Wee are troubled on euery side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despaire, or without hope of helpe, wee are persecuted but not forsaken, cast downe but wee perish not.

2. Cor. 1. 8.

Verse. 4. 5.

Verse. 9. 10.

2. Cor. 4. 8. 9.

Q. Sect. 10. A second Obiection answered taken from the example of diuers of the faithfull.

Yea but the faithfull doe in their afflictions fall into impatiencie, and make grieuous complaints like men forlorne, and forsaken of God, which they would not doe vnlesse their afflictions were aboue their strength. Many such complaints we find in the Booke of Iob. For he crieth out: O that my griefe were well weighed, and my miseries were laide together in the ballance, for it would bee heauier than the sand of the Sea, &c. O that it would please God to destroy me, that he would let loose his hand and cut me off; what is my strength that I should hope, or mine end that I should prolong my life? Is my strength the strength of stones, or my flesh of brasse? Thus also Dauid complaineth, that God had forsaken him, that hee had forgotten to be mercifull, and shut vp his tender mercies in displeasure, that hee fainted in his mourning, that hee was weakned and sore broken, and roared for the very griefe of his heart, that his heart panted, and his strength failed him, and that the light of his eyes was gone away from him. And the whole Church in her lamentations cryeth out with great passion: Haue yee no regard all yee that passe by this way. Behold and see if there be any sorrow like vnto my sorrow, which is done vnto mee, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce wrath? To which I answere, that all these are the complaints of the weake and fraile flesh, out of the present sense and feeling of Gods heauie iudgements, ioyned with a sight of its owne infirmitie and inability to beare and indure them by its owne strength, vnto which the spirituall and regenerate part consenteth not, hauing in the middest of all extreamities some taste of spirituall comfort, and some assurance of Gods presence and power assisting and strengthening it; but resisteth these tentations of the flesh, and neuer ceaseth opposing and labouring against them, vntill it haue ouercome them and confirmed the Christian with patience and comfort. Yea, euen when the flesh most doubteth and despaireth, in regard of its owne strength, fayling, and fainting in the time of trouble, because resting wholly vpon its selfe, it is forsaken of all hope, when it seeth this strength infeebled, and the affliction increasing in waight and violence: then doth the spirituall part labour and indeuour to rest securely vpon God, knowing that we stand not by our owne power, but by the power of his might; that when wee are weakest, then he is strongest, and taketh delight to manifest his great power, in our greatest infirmities: and finally that he hath bound himselfe by his most gracious promises neuer to faile vs nor forsake vs, but will assist and hold vs vp in all tentations vntill at the last wee obtaine the victory. It is true indeed, that the Christian is diuersly affected in this spirituall conflict, in respect of these diuers parts, which like mortall enemies fight one against the other, sometime sighing and groaning, and sometime singing and reioycing; one while complaining as one forsaken of God, and ouerwhelmed with his heauy iudgements, and another while refreshed and comforted in his inward feelings, when as the loue of God breaketh out and appeareth vnto him, through these clouds of trouble and affliction; now murmuring and repining in sense of paine, and vtterly desperate and destitute of all hope and helpe; and soone after reioycing in tribulation, and triumphing ouer all his miseries in assurance of Gods loue, whereby hee resteth perswaded, that God will turne all to his good, and in the meane time neuer cease to assist him in all difficulties and distresses. And all this will well stand, both with the truth of Gods word and promises, and also with this Christian consolation; that

Iob 6. 2. 3. 8. 9. 11. 12.

Psal. 22. 1. Psal. 77. 9. & 6. & 38. 8. 10.

Lam. 1. 12.

that God measureth vnto the faithfull such a proportion of affliction, as beseeteth their strength, laying vpon no man more than hee is able to beare. For the Lord hath not promised that wee shall not be foiled in this conflict, but that we shall not be ouercome, not that wee shall not bee pressed and pinched with the weight of afflictions, but that wee shall not bee oppressed and perish in them; not that we shall not sorrow and sigh, lament and weepe in our miseries, but that our sorrow shall bee turned into ioy, and all teares shall bee wiped from our eyes; that our mourning shall end in mirth, and our impatient murmurings, shall be changed into cheerefull thanksgiuings and songs of deliuerance: hee hath not promised that wee shall alwayes feele power sufficient in our selues to indure all tentations, for where is alwayes feeling, there is no place for faith; but that in our greatest weaknesse his power shall bee sufficient for vs, and that when wee are most feeble in our selues, wee shall bee strong in him. Finally, hee hath not stinted himselfe to any number or waight of afflictions, nor promised that wee should bewray no impatiency and infirmities in the time of our trials, whilest this heauy waight doth lye vpon vs, but that hee will in the end turne all to our good, and not so suffer vs to be tempted, but that at the length he will giue a good issue vnto our tentations, that we may be able to beare and ouercome them.

Yea but we see many, who haue formerly made profession of religion, and seemed to make some conscience of their wayes, who are quite ouerthowne in this combate of afflictions, falling into extreame impatiency, murmuring and repining against Gods prouidence, and vttering fearefull blasphemies against his Majesty; and that which is worst of all, doe continue in these desperate courses vnto the end. To which I answer, that what shew soeuer such haue made, they were at the best but meere hypocrites, vnto whom Gods promises of not tempting aboue power, and afflicting aboue strength are not made, seeing they are appropriated onely to true beleeuers. And therefore it is no maruaile, if this chaffe which before did lye quietly with the wheate, is scattered abroad when the wind and fanne of triall commeth; no maruaile if this drosse bee consumed in the fiery triall, though, before it was put into the furnace, it made some glittering shew. Neither should it seeme strang vnto vs, that these greene blades, which for want of ground neuer tooke roote, doe wither away when the Sunne of tribulation and affliction ariseth, seeing our Sauiour Christ hath long agoe giuen vs warning of it. Neither doth this befall them because God laieth vpon them intolerable affliction; but because through their weaknesse and naturall corruption, they are able to beare nothing, nor is their destruction to bee imputed to the greatnesse and grieuousnes of their miseries, but to their infirmnesse and impotency in enduring any triall. For if a man through the weaknesse of his stomacke doe not receiue or retaine a profitable potion, which would purge him from his corrupt humours and restore him to health, because it is vnpleasant and bitter to his taste, and so dieth for want of helpe, his death and destruction is not to bee ascribed to the physicke, but to his indisposition who would or could not take it: So the ruine and ouerthrow of Hypocrites is not to bee ascribed to their bitter potions of afflictions, which if they were taken according to the prescripe of our wise Physicion, would purge them of their corruptions and recouer their strength; but to their owne impotency and sinfull imbecillity, which cannot beare nor profit by them. And of these we may truly say with that auncient Father; That if they are ouerthrowne with tribulation, they would much more haue come to the like destruction by pleasures and prosperity, rest and idlenesse. For, if being bound, and (as it were) fast tyed vnto God by the cords of tribulation, they notwithstanding fall away from him; how much more would they haue fallen if they had beene loose and left to their owne libertie. And to the same purpose hee saith else where, that if tribulation do ouerthrow and destroy any, it is not to be imputed to the strength of these assaylants, but vnto their owne sloth and cowardise. For if being sober and watchfull wee pray vnto God, that hee will not suffer vs to bee tempted aboue our power, if wee alwayes adhere and cleaue vnto him by faith and affiance, stand to it valiantly, prepare our armour and set our selues to fight, we shall alwayes find him to be our helper and defender; and although tentations come rushing vpon vs like a furious tempest, yet they shall bee vnto vs as light as stubble, and like a leafe that is carried in the ayre.

Chrysost. in Rom. 5. ser. 9. Nulla infelicitas frangit, quem nulla felicitas corrumpit. August in Psalm.

Chrysost. in 2. epist. ad Hebraeos. cap. 12. Homil. 28.

Now this doctrine whereby wee are assured, that God measureth our afflictions according to our strength, and neuer tempteth vs aboue our power (but alwayes giueth a good issue to our troubles and tentations) is so full of christian comfort, that if there were no other argument besides to perswade vs, to beare all our crosses and calamities with patience and comfort, this alone were sufficient. For who would not be content to beare a burthen of Gods owne imposing, when as hee is sure hee shall not bee ouerloaded? who would refuse to bee tried in this furnace of affliction, if hee certainely know that it will not consume, but onely purge and purifie him from the drosse of sin?

1. Cor. 10. 13. That the former consideration is full of comfort.

Who

Who being preſſed into Gods ſeruice would not courageouſly fight againſt ſuch enemies, as being inferiour in ſtrength, hee is ſure to ouercome? and who would refuſe to receiue a portion prepared by this moſt heauenly and wiſe Phyſicion, though it be bitter and vnpleaſant vnto the taſte, if hee bee aſcertained, that the poyſon of affliction is corrected with ſo many preſeruatiues of his loue, and teſtimonies of his fauour, and ſo mingled with innumerable numbers of Gods bleſſings and benefits, and fitted to his conſtitution and ſtrength who is to take it, that howſoeuer whileſt it worketh vpon his groſſe humors, and purgeth away thoſe rough corruptions which naturally adhere vnto him, hee is for the preſent ſicke in his ſenſe and feeling, yet he ſhall thereby be recouered and reſtored to his health? To this purpoſe one ſaith, that it is a ſingular comfort in the time of affliction, to call often to mind Gods bleſſings and benefits; neither will our griefes breake and depreſſe vs, if wee vphold and comfort our fainting and ſinking ſoules, by calling to remembrance the gifts of God beſtowed on vs. And therefore it is well ſaid: In thy good dayes be not vnmindfull of the euill, and in thy euill dayes be not forgetfull of the good: For whoſoeuer daily receiueth giftes, and feareth not correction, through too much joy hee periſheth in his pride; and contrariwiſe hee who is worne out with chaſtiſements, and doth not comfort himſelfe in the gifts which he hath receiued, is deſtroyed through deſpaire. And therefore both theſe are to be joyned together, that one may helpe to ſupport the other; in as much as the remembrance of the gift doth temper and mittigate the griefe and ſmart of the rodde; and the ſuſpition and feare of the rodde, doth temper and moderate the joy of the gift. And to the ſame effect another ſaith, that the faithfull are mindfull of their good things in the day of aduerſitie, leſt they ſhould bee faint hearted and impatient; and in the day of proſperity they are not mindfull of euils and affliction, leaſt being exalted and lifted vp, they ſhould ſay, wee ſhall neuer bee remoued. As therefore when our eyes are dimmed and dazeled by looking vpon hurtfull obiects, or by too much intention of the ſight, wee doe againe refreſh and repaire their ſtrength and vigour, by beholding of greene colour: ſo when our hearts and minds are tyred and vexed by conſidering the good things wee want, or the euils and miſeries which lie vpon vs; wee muſt not ſuffer them to bee wholly inent vpon theſe hurtfull and pernicious obiects, but exerciſe them in meditating vpon thoſe manifolde bleſſings which God ſuffereth vs preſently to enjoy, for the mitigating of our ſmart, and moderating, and (as it were) ſweetning the bitterneſſe of our griefe; and alſo vpon that future happineſſe which wee enjoy in hope, and that euerlaſting and incomprehenſible joy and glorious bleſſedneſſe, which we ſhall receiue in the Kingdome of Heauen, when our courſe is ended, and our conflict finiſhed.

Gregor. moral. lib. 3. cap. 7.

Eccleſ. 11.

Bernard. in rem. palmarum. ſerm. 2.

Pſal. 30. 6.

CHAP. XII.

That God afflicteth vs no more than is neceſſary for his owne glory, and our ſaluation.

3. Sect. 1. That our ſ... of corruption... neceſſarily re... quireth affli... on.

AND thus Gods loue and mercy appeareth in meaſuring our afflictions, according to our ſtrength: the other point propounded is, that God ſheweth the like loue vnto vs, by meaſuring the proportion of afflictions, according to the ſcanteſt meaſure of our neceſſity, laying no more vpon vs than is neceſſary for the magnifying of his owne glory by our ſanctification in this life, and our ſaluation in the life to come. For the Lord is chiefly delighted in exerciſing his loue, mercy, and goodneſſe towards his Saints, and Seruants; & would not willingly afflict and correct vs, if we did not vrge him thereunto by a kind of neceſſity. For ſuch is our naturall corruption, that wee are eaſily cockred, and made wonton, with the fruition of Gods bleſſings, and grow to ſuch pride, and inſolency through his continuall fauours, that wee are ready to forget, and contemne him, who is the authour of all our good; and to runne into all exceſſe, and riot, with the wikced of the world, turning our liberty into looſe licentiouſneſſe, and abuſing our plenty of Gods bleſſings, as a meanes of maintayning vs in our luxurious, and wicked courſes. And therefore the Lord is after a ſort enforced to correct vs, that by ſorrow and ſmart, he may bring vs to know our ſelues, and to remember him, of whom eaſe and proſperity haue made vs ignorant, and forgetfull; and by theſe ſharpe whippes and rods, hee reclaimeth vs from our lewd courſes, wherein if he ſhould let vs alone, we would runne on with headlong haſt vnto our endleſſe perdition and condemnation. And as the wiſe and faithfull Phyſition is conſtrained, vpon the neceſſity of recouering his patients health, to preſcribe vnto him faſting after feaſting, ſabſtinence after ſurfeting and exceſſe, and bitter potions and purges when hee findeth his body diſtempered with corrupt humors, and ouermuch fulneſſe: ſo vpon the like neceſſity of recouering our ſpirituall health, the Lord is faine, when we ſurfet on his bleſſings, to withdraw them from vs, and to appoint vs abſtinence, or a ſhorter diet; and when hee ſeeth our ſoules soules full of sinfull corruptions, to giue vnto vs these bitter potions of afflictions, to purge vs from them. And when we haue pampered our selues by feeding on the forbidden fruits of sinfull pleasures, and haue greedily drunke of the poysonous cuppes of excesse, and rapine, of whoredome, and fornication, and the wine of violence and oppression, wherewith our natures being tainted and infected, the life of our soules is hazarded and indangerd: the Lord out of his loue and care is enforced to prepare another cup for vs, and to make vs drinke of the antidote, and counter poyson of afflictions, that the poyson of sinne may bee purged, and expelled, and we freed from the danger of euerlasting death. And as in these regards there is necessity of sending these afflictions in respect of euery particular faithfull man, so also in regard of the whole Church in generall. For as it is neuer more spiritually poore and leane, than when it is pampered in worldly pompe, and prosperity; so it is neuer richer, or in better liking, than when it is outwardly pinched with misery, and affliction. And as by too much fulnesse it falleth into a consumption, and by being too ranke, is easilier laid, and cast downe with euery storme of tentation, whereby it is indangered to rotting, and perishing: so it groweth fatter by fasting, prospereth better when it is bitten and nipped, nor euer thriueth so well, or groweth so fast, as when it carrieth the crosse on the shoulder. To which purpose one saith, that it is most necessary for the catholicke Church, to bee exercised, and tried with continuall tentations: because in the middest of tentations it liueth, flourisheth, constantly indureth, and commeth to perfection: vnto which, when it hath attained, rest succedeth labour, and the tentations departing, the blessing remaineth.

Neither doth the Lord take any delight in our smart, or maketh any hast to inflict his chastisements, but with great patience, and long suffering, he expecteth our repentance, that he may haue mercy vpon vs; and doth not take his rod of correction into his hand, till hee bee pressed with the waight of our sinnes, as the Cart is pressed which is full of sheaues, as the Prophet speaketh, and till there bee no other remedy. And euen then when wee haue vrged him with a kind of necessity to chastise vs, because otherwise we would goe on in the wayes of wickednesse to our perdition, & euerlasting condemnation, hee doth not punish vs willingly, as one that taketh delight in our smart, and torment; but performeth it as an action, which is rather fit for vs to suffer, than for him to do, it being vnto him, as the Prophet speaketh, his strange worke, and not familiar vnto his nature, which is full of loue, mercy, and goodnesse, and is most delighted and pleased in shewing and extending grace and compassion to those who are in misery. And therefore in all his courses and proceedings, hee auoideth as much as will stand with his glory, and our euerlasting good, all hard, and rigorous courses towards vs. For first like a gracious Father he louingly acquainteth vs with his will, and informeth vs in the duties which wee ought to performe vnto him, alluring vs to obedience, and incouraging vs to serue him, with innumerable benefits in present possession, and with many gracious promises of bestowing much more excellent things vpon vs in time to come. And if wee bee so forgetfull of him, and our selues, that notwithstanding all his fauours, wee neglect our duty, and abuse his mercies, as occasions and meanes of sinne; hee doth in the next place after a fatherly manner admonish vs, in the ministry of the Word, of the neglect of our dutie, and putteth vs in minde of our faultinesse, that wee may amend it, which if wee doe, hee stayeth here, and goeth no further: but if we persist in our euill courses, hee doth by the same his holy Word, sharply rebuke and reproue vs for our sinnes; and threatneth his judgements and chastisements, if by gentler meanes wee will not be reformed. And if he yet preuaile with vs, hee stayeth his hand, and proceedeth no further against vs. But if all this will not reclaime vs from our wicked wayes, and bring vs to repentance; then is hee forced to let vs feele the smart of the rod, and though in his fatherly affection hee much pitieth vs, and tendreth our griefes, yet both in his wisedome and loue, he seeth it necessary that wee should rather presently bee vexed with some momentany affliction, than that we should runne a course through impunity, and want of correction, which in the end would plunge vs into euerlasting condemnation. 1. Cor. 11. 32.

And yet hee doth not presently deale with vs in that straight and just seuerity, which our sinnes haue deserued hee should vse towards vs, but at first, doth correct vs lightly, and gently, with all tenderneſse and compassion; with which small chastisement if wee bee amended, hee stayeth his hand, hauing attained vnto that which hee desired and intended; but if fewer stripes will not reforme vs, hee is necessarily vrged to lay on more; and if wee be so stubborne, as to contemne his rodds, whereby he gently correcteth vs, hee is constrained to scourge and beate vs with the whippe and cudgell of more grieuous afflictions; being reiolued out of mere loue, and fatherly affection, to vse towards vs any present rigour & extremity, than hee will suffer vs by persisting in our sinnes, to fall into euerlasting perdition, or to become so desperate in our wickednesse, as that hee should bee forced to disinherit inherit vs of our heauenly inheritance. So that if wee endure grieuous afflictions, and doe finde that our heauenly Father doth correct vs sharply, and with great seuerity, we are not to impute it vnto any want of loue in him, as though hee tooke any pleasure in our paine, but are to lay the fault wholly vpon our selues, who are so stubborne, and vndutifull, that more gentle corrections would not reclaime vs. For if there bee such loue and tendernesse in earthly parents (which notwithstanding is but a little droppe distilled into them, from this fountaine, or rather Ocean of mercy and compassion) that they desire, and chiefely delight in shewing their kind affection to their Children, and in giuing vnto them all testimonies and signes of loue; and are loth to correct them for their faults, if any admonitions and rebukes will reforme and amend them; neuer thinking stripes seasonable, but when they see them necessarie, in regard that other meanes will not reclaime them from their faults, and bring them to good: yea, if their loue bee such, and so great, that according to the same necessity, it measureth out the number of their stripes, and quantity of their correction, so as they are not willing to giue them one blow more, than they thinke necessary for their amendment: then how much lesse will the Lord exceed this measure of necessity, seeing hee both infinitely excelleth all earthly parents in loue, and goodnesse, as being not onely gracious, but the God of grace, and not onely louing, but loue it selfe, as the Apostle stileth him; and is alike infinite in wisedome, and therefore cannot (like earthly parents) bee deceiued in the proportion of his chastisements, but justly knoweth how much is necessary, and neither too much, nor too little, for the amendement of his children? Yea, if there be such loue, and care in an honest, faithfull, and learned Physician, that according to his skill, hee will take for the ease of his patient the gentlest, and most pleasing courses which he thinketh sufficient for the effecting of the cure; and will neuer vse sharper and more painfull remedies than the necessity of the sore or sickenesse doth require: as for example, hee will not mixe a greater quantity of poyson in the purgation, than by the rules of art he findeth necessary for such a patient, and such a disease; hee will not appoint a Corrasiue, Launcher or burning Iron, where a healing plaister will effect the cure: he will not prescribe violent purgations, when gentle potions are sufficient, nor giue vnto his patient bitter, and loathsome drugges, which he hateth as much as his disease, when as he seeth that he may as well recouer him by pleasant electuaries, and comfortable restoratiues: how much more may we bee assured, that our heauenly Physition, who neuer faileth for want of skill, and is also infinite in loue and goodnesse towards his diseased patients, will neuer for the curing of our spirituall diseases vse sharper meanes than our sicknesse requireth, nor euer giue vs more of the bitter medicines of afflictions and misery, than is fit for the recouery of our spirituall health? And therefore if wee with patience and contentment, resigne our selues ouer to the skill and fidelity of our earthly Physitions, though sometime they faile in both; and doe not limit them, either in respect of the quantity, or quality of their physicke, but refer it wholy to their discretion, and onely desire that they will vse the easiest, speediest, and safest meanes, for the effecting of the cure: then how much more should wee wholy rely vpon the Lord, who is aswell a Father in loue, as a Physition in skill; neither prescribing vnto him what wee must take, or how long wee must bee vnder cure, seeing wee are assured that hee will not vnfaithfully protract it for his owne profit, for hee needeth nothing, and expecteth no reward, but thankes, nor yet put vs to more paine than is profitable, yea necessary for our recouery, seeing hee is not delighted in our torments, but taketh much more pleasure in hearing vs sing Psalmes and songs of deliuerance, than in our sighing, and sorrowing, crying, and complaining?

§. Sect. 3. That the measure of our afflictions exceedeth not necessity.

1. Ioh. 4. 8.

When therefore we see that our heauenly Physition hath prouided diuers kindes of medicines for his diuers patients; for one a greater and more bitter purge, for an other a lesse and more pleasant potion; for this man a corrasiue, and for that an healing plaister; Let vs not wonder at it; for either their diseases are diuers, or they are diuers in their temperature, and constitution; and it beseemeth not the skill of our heauenly Physition, like the ignorant Empericke to apply one salue for all sores, and the same medicine for all kinde of maladies and diseases, but to fit the remedy according to the nature of the infirmity, and condition of the party. And if wee haue a potion of the largest size, and loathsome in tast, appointed for vs, let vs not thinke it too much, and murmur against our Physition, who knoweth better than wee, what medicine is fittest for the curing of our diseases: neither let vs say that others haue worse soares, and more gentle salues; more dangerous sicknesses, and more easie remedies; for if wee are often mistaken in our bodily diseases, and thinke that wee are in no perill, when the Physition seeth that our sickenesse is almost desperate, and in this regard, rest not vpon our owne feeling, but vpon his skill, and willingly take that which hee prescribeth; then how much more may wee bee deceiued in the sicknesses of our soules, thinking our dangerous diseases,

9. Sect. 4. That we are by Gods gracious corrections and medicines reclaimed from the greatnesse of our faults, and grieuousnesse of our diseases.

eases, to be but small infirmities; and deepe consumptions in grace but some litle distemper, and faint languishing; and therefore how much rather should wee referre our selues wholy to the skill and wisdome of God, who cannot erre for want of judgement, because he knoweth all things, nor for want of care, because his loue is infinite, patiently drinking a more bitter potion, than wee see prouided for others, who outwardly seeme more dangerously sicke, because we may be assured, that either our Physician seeth our diseases inwardly to be more perilsome, and therefore need sharper medicines; or that we are of greater strength, and therefore better able to brooke their bitternesse? And when wee finde and feele that our heauenly Father doth diuersly chastise his children, some with fewer and lighter, and others with more and harder stripes; and that wee haue our part among those who haue the greatest measure, let vs know that hee correcteth diuers faults, and that in those who are of a diuers nature. Some faults are lesser, either in themselues, or as they are extenuated with circumstances, and are with little adoe left and amended; some are greater, either in their owne nature, or as they are by circumstances aggrauated, and are not forsaken without great difficulty. Some sinnes are like the cloake or vpper garment, easily shaken off, without any trouble to him who layeth them aside, and some cleaue to our corrupt nature like the skin to the flesh, or the flesh to the bones, and cannot bee parted from vs without great paine in the parting: of those wee may bee reformed with the least word or lightest correction, but of these not without many stripes and bitter paine. Againe, the children of God whom he chastiseth, are of diuers natures and dispositions: one is milde and gentle, and is easily rebuked with an angry word, another is so sturdy and stomackfull, that hee will not be reformed with many blowes; one needeth no more but the shadow or shaking of the rod, and hee is presently humbled, and beggeth pardon with promise of amendment; but vnto another the smart of the rod is not sufficient, but hee needeth also a whip to pull downe his stomacke, and to make his stout heart to yeeld and relent. And therefore seeing there is such great diuersity both in faults committed, and natures who offend, it is no great maruaile if Gods chastisements be also diuers. Neither doth it follow hereupon, that the greatest measure or hardest stripes exceed necessity, or bee more then needs. For our most wise Father, in his corrections resolueth to reforme al his children, and to free them from the greatest, as well as from the least sins, as well from those which they are most in loue with, and loathest to leaue, and from which they part with greatest paine and difficlty, as from them with which being in least league and liking, they are willing to leaue at the first admonition. And when hee taketh vs in hand, hee will master the proudest heart and stoutest stomacke, as well as that which is milde and gentle; and for this end if fewer and lighter stripes will not serue the turne, hee will inflict more and harder, neuer ceasing till hee haue throughly humbled vs, brought vs vpon our knees, and made vs to promise reformation and amendment; because if he giue ouer before hee haue attained vnto his end, wee shall be but hardned in our stubbornnesse, and all the stripes which wee haue formerly suffered shall be in vaine.

9. Sect. 5. That our great afflictions argue our great sins, either in their owne nature, or as they are aggrauated by circumstances.

From whence wee may conclude, that if wee haue great or tedious afflictions lying vpon vs, either we haue great faults or great stomackes; or if wee be not guilty of haynous sinnes in their owne nature, yet wee make them haynous vnto vs by diuers circumstances; as by committing them willingly against knowledge and conscience; by continuing in them after we are admonished of them, and perswaded to leaue them, both by Gods promises and threatnings: and finally, when wee are in such loue and league with them, that no ordinary chastisements will moue vs to forsake them. Neither let any man here say, that he hath humbled himselfe already vnder Gods chastizing hand, and hath long agoe resolued to forsake his sinne, and many times promised amendement; and yet the Lord continueth to correct him, and therefore inflicteth stripes more than necessary: For thus not only the naturall child, but the child of God likewise, when they are vnder the rod, doe seeke to deceiue their Parents, to escape further correction; yea are euen themselues oftentimes deceiued. For though in sense of present smart they resolue to amend, and haue some purpose to bee as good as their word; yet being not throughly setled in their resolutions, they are vnconstant in them; and together with their paine forget their promises. But though we may be deceiued and deceiue others, yet we cannot our heauenly Father, because hee searcheth the heart and reines, and knowing when our resolutions of amendement are flickring and vnsetled, and when they are well grounded, firme and constant, hee doth accordingly continue his chastisements, till he hath fully confirmed them; vnlesse vpon our faire promises he sometimes spareth vs for a time, that we may vpon our owne experience, see how little credit is to be giuen to them; but no sooner doth hee see vs throughly setled in our good resolutions, and stedfastly purposed to forsake our sinnes, but presently hee casteth away his rodde, and not giuing one blow more, doth ease and release vs from all afflictions.

To

inherit vs of our heauenly inheritance. So that if weeendure grieuous afflictions, and doe finde that our heauenly Father doth correct vs sharply, and with great seuerity, we are not to impute it vnto any want of loue in him, as though hee tooke any pleasure in our paine, but are to lay the fault wholly vpon our selues, who are so stubborne, and vndutifull, that more gentle corrections would not reclaime vs. For if there bee such loue and tendernesse in earthly parents (which notwithstanding is but a little droppe distilled into them, from this fountaine, or rather Ocean of mercy and compassion) that they desire, and chiefely delight in shewing their kind affection to their Children, and in giuing vnto them all testimonies and signes of loue; and are loth to correct them for their faults, if any admonitions and rebukes will reforme and amend them; neuer thinking stripes seasonable, but when they see them necessarie, in regard that other meanes will not reclaime them from their faults, and bring them to good: yea, if their loue bee such, and so great, that according to the same necessity, it measureth out the number of their stripes, and quantity of their correction, so as they are not willing to giue them one blow more, than they thinke necessary for their amendment: then how much lesse will the Lord exceed this measure of necessity, seeing hee both infinitely excelleth all earthly parents in loue, and goodnesse, as being not onely gracious, but the God of grace, and not onely louing, but loue it selfe, as the Apostle stileth him; and is alike infinite in wisedome, and therefore cannot (like earthly parents) bee deceiued in the proportion of his chastisements, but justly knoweth how much is necessary, and neither too much, nor too little, for the amendement of his children? Yea, if there be such loue, and care in an honest, faithfull, and learned Physician, that according to his skill, hee will take for the ease of his patient the gentlest, and most pleasing courses which he thinketh sufficient for the effecting of the cure; and will neuer vse sharper and more painfull remedies than the necessity of the sore or sickenesse doth require: as for example, hee will not mixe a greater quantity of poyson in the purgation, than by the rules of art he findeth necessary for such a patient, and such a disease; hee will not appoint a Corrasiue, Launcher or burning Iron, where a healing playster will effect the cure: he will not prescribe violent purgations, when gentle potions are sufficient, not giue vnto his patient bitter and loathsome drugges, which he hateth as much as his disease, when as he seeth that he may as well recouer him by pleasant electuaries, and comfortable restoratiues: how much more may we bee assured, that our heauenly Physition, who neuer faileth for want of skill, and is also infinite in loue and goodnesse towards his diseased patients, will neuer for the curing of our spirituall diseases vse sharper meanes than our sicknesse requireth, nor euer giue vs more of the bitter medicines of afflictions and misery, than is fit for the recouery of our spirituall health? And therefore if wee with patience and contentment, resigne our selues ouer to the skill and fidelity of our earthly Physitions, though sometime they faile in both; and doe not limit them, either in respect of the quantity, or quality of their physicke, but refer it wholy to their discretion, and onely desire that they will vse the easiest, speediest, and safest meanes, for the effecting of the cure: then how much more should wee wholy rely vpon the Lord, who is aswell a Father in loue, as a Physition in skill; neither prescribing vnto him what wee must take, or how long wee must bee vnder cure, seeing wee are assured that hee will not vnfaithfully protract it for his owne profit, for hee needeth nothing, and expecteth no reward, but thankes, nor yet put vs to more paine than is profitable, yea necessary for our recouery, seeing hee is not delighted in our torments, but taketh much more pleasure in hearing vs sing Psalmes and songs of deliuerance, than in our sighing, and sorrowing, crying, and complaining?

1. Iohn 4. 8.

When therefore we see that our heauenly Physition hath prouided diuers kindes of medicines for his diuers patients; for one a greater and more bitter purge, for an other a lesse and more pleasant potion; for this man a corrasiue, and for that an healing plaister; Let vs not wonder at it; for either their diseases are diuers, or they are diuers in their temperature, and constitution; and it beseemeth not the skill of our heauenly Physition, like the ignorant Empericke to apply one salue for all sores, and the same medicine for all kinde of maladies and diseases, but to fit the remedy according to the nature of the infirmity, and condition of the party. And if wee haue a potion of the largest size, and loathsome in tast, appointed for vs, let vs not thinke it too much, and murmur against our Physition, who knoweth better than wee, what medicine is fittest for the curing of our diseases: neither let vs say that others haue worse sores, and more gentle salues; more dangerous sicknesses, and more easie remedies; for if wee are often mistaken in our bodily diseases, and thinke that wee are in no perill, when the Physition seeth that our sickenesse is almost desperate, and in this regard, rest not vpon our owne feeling, but vpon his skill, and willingly take that which hee prescribeth; then how much more may wee bee deceiued in the sicknesses of our soules, thinking our dangerous diseases,

9. Sect. 4.
That we are
by Gods ... rections and medicines ...
gustfull at the greatnesse of our faults, ...
grieuousnesse
of our disease.

eaſes, to be but ſmall infirmities; and deepe conſumptions in grace but ſome litle diſtemper, and faint languiſhing; and therefore how much rather ſhould wee referre our ſelues wholy to the skill and wiſdome of God, who cannot erre for want of judgement, becauſe he knoweth all things, nor for want of care, becauſe his loue is infinite, patiently drinking a more bitter potion, than wee ſee prouided for others, who outwardly ſeeme more dangerouſly ſicke, becauſe we may be aſſured, that either our Phyſician ſeeth our diſeaſes inwardly to be more perilſome, and therefore need ſharper medicines; or that we are of greater ſtrength, and therefore better able to brooke their bitterneſſe? And when wee finde and feele that our heauenly Father doth diuerſly chaſtiſe his children, ſome with fewer and lighter, and others with more and harder ſtripes; and that wee haue our part among thoſe who haue the greateſt meaſure, let vs know that hee correcteth diuers faults, and that in thoſe who are of a diuers nature. Some faults are leſſer, either in themſelues, or as they are extenuated with circumſtances, and are with little adoe left and amended; ſome are greater, either in their owne nature, or as they are by circumſtances aggrauated, and are not forſaken without great difficulty. Some ſinnes are like the cloake or vpper garment, eaſily ſhaken off, without any trouble to him who layeth them aſide, and ſome cleaue to our corrupt nature like the skin to the fleſh, or the fleſh to the bones, and cannot bee parted from vs without great paine in the parting: of thoſe wee may bee reformed with the leaſt word or lighteſt correction, but of theſe not without many ſtripes and bitter paine. Againe, the children of God whom he chaſtiſeth, are of diuers natures and diſpoſitions: one is milde and gentle, and is eaſily rebuked with an angry word, another is ſo ſturdy and ſtomackfull, that hee will not be reformed with many blowes; one needeth no more but the ſhadow or ſhaking of the rod, and hee is preſently humbled, and beggeth pardon with promiſe of amendment; but vnto another the ſmart of the rod is not ſufficient, but hee needeth alſo a whip to pull downe his ſtomacke, and to make his ſtout heart to yeeld and relent. And therefore ſeeing there is ſuch great diuerſity both in faults committed, and natures who offend, it is no great maruaile if Gods chaſtiſements be alſo diuers. Neither doth it follow hereupon, that the greateſt meaſure or hardeſt ſtripes exceed neceſſity, or bee more then needs. For our moſt wiſe Father, in his corrections reſolueth to reforme al his children, and to free them from the greateſt, as well as from the leaſt ſins, as well from thoſe which they are moſt in loue with, and loatheſt to leaue, and from which they part with greateſt paine and difficlty, as from them with which being in leaſt league and liking, they are willing to leaue at the firſt admonition. And when hee taketh vs in hand, hee will maſter the proudeſt heart and ſtouteſt ſtomacke, as well as that which is milde and gentle; and for this end if fewer and lighter ſtripes will not ſerue the turne, hee will inflict more and harder, neuer ceaſing till hee haue throughly humbled vs, brought vs vpon our knees, and made vs to promiſe reformation and amendment; becauſe if he giue ouer before hee haue attained vnto his end, wee ſhall be but hardned in our ſtubbornneſſe, and all the ſtripes which wee haue formerly ſuffered ſhall be in vaine.

2. Sect. 5. That our great afflictions argue our great ſins, either in their owne nature, or as they are aggrauated by circumſtances.

From whence wee may conclude, that if wee haue great or tedious afflictions lying vpon vs, either we haue great faults or great ſtomackes; or if wee be not guilty of haynous ſinnes in their owne nature, yet wee make them haynous vnto vs by diuers circumſtances; as by committing them willingly againſt knowledge and conſcience; by continuing in them after we are admoniſhed of them, and perſwaded to leaue them, both by Gods promiſes and threatnings: and finally, when wee are in ſuch loue and league with them, that no ordinary chaſtiſements will moue vs to forſake them. Neither let any man here ſay, that he hath humbled himſelfe already vnder Gods chaſtizing hand, and hath long agoe reſolued to forſake his ſinne, and many times promiſed amendement; and yet the Lord continueth to correct him, and therefore inflicteth ſtripes more than neceſſary: For thus not only the naturall child, but the child of God likewiſe, when they are vnder the rod, doe ſeeke to deceiue their Parents, to eſcape further correction; yea are euen themſelues oftentimes deceiued. For though in ſenſe of preſent ſmart they reſolue to amend, and haue ſome purpoſe to bee as good as their word; yet being not throughly ſetled in their reſolutions, they are vnconſtant in them; and together with their paine forget their promiſes. But though we may be deceiued and deceiue others, yet we cannot our heauenly Father, becauſe hee ſearcheth the heart and reines, and knowing when our reſolutions of amendement are flickring and vnſetled, and when they are well grounded, firme and conſtant, hee doth accordingly continue his chaſtiſements, till he hath fully confirmed them; valeſſe vpon our faire promiſes he ſometimes ſpareth vs for a time, that we may vpon our owne experience, ſee how little credit is to be giuen to them; but no ſooner doth hee ſee vs throughly ſetled in our good reſolutions, and ſtedfaſtly purpoſed to forſake our ſinnes, but preſently hee caſteth away his rodde, and not giuing one blow more, doth eaſe and releaſe vs from all afflictions.

To

To which purpose one saith, that God could, if hee pleased, euen in the very day that wee first call vpon him, lighten vs of all our load, but hee deferreth to doe it, till hee see vs throughly humbled and amended; and till hee know that our conuersion and repentance bee constant, and without danger of flitting, he will not remoue our tribulation; but as the Gold-smith which draweth not his Gold out of the melting furnace, till hee perceiueth it be throughly purified from the drosse, and when hee seeth it purified to his minde, will by no meanes suffer it to stay there any longer, because it would but waste and loose of its waight: so doth the Lord suffer vs to remayne in the furnace of affliction till we be purged from our drosse of sinne, by renewing our faith and repentance; but no sooner are wee according to his purpose purified, but he pulleth vs out, and will not suffer vs to waste and consume our selues with sorrow, and heauinesse. And therefore let vs with patience indure our tryall; seeing he who puteth vs into the furnace, knoweth when it is fittest time to take vs out; let vs with comfort and thankfulnesse beare all our chastisements, seeing we haue assurance, that wee shall not haue one stripe more than our heauenly Father in his infinite wisdome seeth necessary, for the amendement of our liues and the saning of our soules.

Chrysost. Homil. ad pop. Antioch. 4. de patientia.

Chap. XIII.

That Gods loue appeareth in the ends of our afflictions in that hee vseth vs as instruments in them to set forth his glory.

1. Sect. That God is glorified in vs both as his souldiers fighting his battaile, and as his children corrected for our faults.

AND thus haue I shewed how Gods loue appeareth in the measure of our afflictions: now wee are to intreate of their ends, wherein the like mercy and loue of God cleerely shineth. The ends which God propoundeth to himselfe in our afflictions are his owne glory, and our good. For howsoeuer the Lord is in himselfe so infinite and absolute in glory and Majesty, that nothing can be added thereunto, yet such is his grace and goodnesse, that he is content to vse vs, poore sinfull creatures, for his instruments, to manifest and declare to all the World his glory and prayse by those things which hee worketh by and in vs. The which as hee powerfully effecteth in many other respects, so especially by our troubles and afflictions; for as when a Souldier behaueth himselfe valiantly in the fight against his enemies, with inuincible courage incountring, foyling and putting them to flight, the honour of his fortitude and proweſſe, redoundeth also to his Captaine and Generall, vnder whom he serueth: so when in this Christian Warfare we are assaulted with the enemies of our saluation, and namely with the world fighting against vs, and seeking to ouercome vs, sometimes with the politicke stratagems of prosperity, and sometimes with the downe-right blowes of aduersity and affliction; God the great Generall of our Army is glorified in our Christian valour and courageous magnanimity, when we doe with patience, fortitude and resolution, endure all these encounters and beare the brunt of this battaile, and not only vndauntedly sustaine the assaults of our enemies, but also doe foile and put them to flight, vsing their owne weapons against themselues, and their force and violence for their owne ouerthrow and destruction. And that the rather, because as wee fight vnder his conduct; so the weapons, armor, strength and policy which wee vse in this warfare, and whereby we are inabled to ouercome are not our owne, but such as hee our grand Captaine hath imparted vnto vs. But that this point may be the better cleered, we may more specially consider, that God is glorified in our afflictions, whether we consider them as the chastisements of our sins, or as tentations and tryals of the gifts and graces which we haue receiued from God. Hee is glorified in our chastisements; for as the sins which are committed by vs, who draw neere vnto him, and are of his house and family, doe aboue all other dishonour him: so when he correcteth these sinnes in vs by troubles & afflictions, he vindicateth his honour from the blasphemies of Infidels and carnall Worldlings, in that hee is so just and vnpartiall, that he will not winke at sinne in them who are so neere and deere vnto him, but rather (when he goeth his circuit of visitation and assises) he beginneth first with his owne children and seruants; that by their chastisements, whose sinnes are pardoned in his Son, he may teach his professed enemies, who remayne still in their guilt, what they are to expect, both in this quarter Sessions, on earth, and at the generall Assises at the day of Iudgement. And thus the Psalmist saith, that the Lord is knowne by executing iudgements, and that both in the punishing of the wicked and chastening of his own seruants. So the Prophet Esay hauing denounced Gods plagues against his people of Israel for their sinnes, saith, that the Lord of hoasts shall be exalted in iudgement, and the holy God shall be sanctified in iustice. An example whereof wee haue in the sonnes of Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, who were chastened with that seuere correction of a temporary death, God giuing this reason hereof, by the mouth of Moses; I will be sanctified in them that come neere mee, and before all the people I will be glorified: As also in David, who because he had dishonourd God among the Nations, in causing

1. Pet. 4. 17.

Psal. 9. 16.

Esay 5. 16.

Levit. 10. 3.

causing them to blaspheme his Name, by his hainous sinnes, was therefore chastened by the death of his childe, that the aspersion and staine which his crimes had cast vpon the glory of God, might by his sharpe correction be wiped away. Againe, God is glorified in the chastisements of his children, when as they profit and amend by his gracious corrections, not flying from him as an angry Iudge, or pursuing enemy, or desperately contending against him by multiplying their sinnes; but running vnto him as vnto a mercifull Father, in hope and assurance to receiue pardon and forgiuenesse. For, the more God scourgeth his children, with the greater readinesse they runne vnto him, humbling themselues vnder his chastening hand, by vnfained repentance for their sins, wherby they haue offended him; and craving by feruent praier, mercy & pardon, according to that of the Prophet: O Lord in trouble they haue visited thee, they haue powred out a praier when thy chastening was vpon them.

Moreouer, Gods glory is magnified in the manifestation of his power and goodnesse, when as we who are weake in our selues, are so supported and vpheld by the power of Gods might, that we are able to beare and ouercome the greatest tentations; and when as being in our selues cowardly and fearefull, feeble and impotent, wee are so strengthened and incouraged by his spirit assisting vs, that we are able to stand against all the malice and might of Sathan, the world and wicked men, and notwithstanding all the afflictions which we endure, and persecutions which they raise against vs, doe put them to slight & obtaine the victory. Neither is this power and goodnes of God so manifested or magnified in our prosperity, either by others or by our selues; for then we seeme to stand in our owne strength, & to haue little need of Gods assistance, when as wee haue in outward appearance no enemies to assault vs, but are walled and fenced in on euery side with abundance of wordly benefits, as honors, riches, friends, health, strength, liberty and the rest: but when wee are assauled with these mighty and terrible enemies, and haue an heauie and sensible weight of tentations laide vpon vs; and withall feele and finde in our selues nothing but feeblenesse and faintnesse, terrour, and cowardise; if wee beare this insupportable burthen without fainting, and valiantly resist these our enemies, vntill wee haue put them to slight and obtained victory; then is Gods power manifested in our infirmity; whose treasures of grace, faith, patience, strength and Christian courage, are carried in vs as in earthen vessels, that the excellency of these vertues and power, might be of God and not of vs, as the Apostle speaketh. Finally, when with the same Apostle we can say, that we are afflicted on euery side, yet wee are not in distresse; in penerty but not ouercome of penerty; persecuted but not forsaken, cast downe but perish not, and yet are vnable of our selues to beare the least waight, or to sustaine the assaults of our weakest enemies; then are we necessarily driuen to giue all the glory vnto God, and to cry out, that it is not our owne arme that saueth vs, but Gods right hand and arme and the light of his countenance, because he had a fauour vnto vs. And againe, through thee haue we thrust backe our aduersaries, by thy name haue wee trodden downe them that rose against vs. For I doe not trust in my bow, neither can my sword saue me. But thou hast saued vs from our aduersaries, and hast put them to confusion that hate vs. Therefore will we praise God continually, and will confesse his name for euer. Then will he that glorieth and reioyceth, reioice and glory in the Lord, and say with the people of God, not vnto vs o Lord, not vnto vs, but vnto thy name giue the glory. Yea then will others also acknowledge to Gods glory, that it was his power alone which supported vs in our weaknesse and inabled vs with patience to beare so great tentations. According to that of the Prophet, Therefore shall the mighty people giue glory vnto thee, the city of the strong nations shall feare thee, for thou hast been a strength vnto the poore, euen a strength to the needy in his trouble; a refuge against the tempest, a shadow against the heat, &c. And as Gods mercy and power is magnified by supporting vs in our afflictions; so also when being oppressed with their vnsupportable waight, and brought into desperate dangers, he aboue all hope & strength, granteth deliuerance. For then we acknowledge with Hannah, that the Lord killeth and maketh aliue, bringeth downe to the graue and raiseth vp, and are ready according to the example of Gods saints to sing vnto his praise songs of deliuerance. And this is the end why the Lord doth chastise our sinnes by troubles and afflictions, that we might glorifie him by our prayers and praises, and he might glorifie himselfe in our marueilous deliuerance, according to that of the Psalmist, call vpon me in the day of trouble, so will I deliuer thee, and thou shalt glorifie me. An example wherof we haue in the people of Israell, who being in grieuous bondage cried vnto the Lord for helpe and freedome: and the Lord not onely glorified his loue and mercie in hearing their crie and mone, and deliuering them out of their seruitude and misery, but also his power and iustice in plaguing and ouerthrowing their enemies and oppressors. And so likewise the people glorified God, both in flying vnto him by prayer in their distresse, as vnto their only refuge; and also being freed, by singing vnto him songs of thanksgiuing for their great deliuerance. Thus our Sauiour saith of the blind man in the Gospell, that this iudge-

Psal. 44. 3, 5, 6, 7, 8.

2. Chr. 10. 17.

Psal. 115. 1.

Esay 25. 3, 4.

1. Sam. 2. 6.

Psal. 50. 15.

Exod. 2. 23, 24. & 3. 16, 14. 4. & 15. 1.

ment was laid on him, not for the punishment either of his owne or parents sinne, but that the works of God should be shewed on him, both in his temporall triall or chastisement, and by the miraculous restoring of his sight. And thus he speaketh of Lazarus, that his sickenesse was not vnto death, but for the glory of God and that the sonne of God might be glorified thereby, when as it serued as an occasion to manifest the infinite power of his diuine nature, by raising him from death to life. Finally Gods wisedome, power and goodnesse, are manifested and magnified in our afflictions, when as contrary to their owne nature he turneth them to our good, euen the confirming and increasing in vs of all his spirituall graces and the euerlasting saluation of our soules. For what doth more shew and extoll the infinite wisedome and omnipotency of God, than to be able to bring good out of euil, light out of darknesse sweetnesse out of bitternesse, and blessings out of curses? than to make of a deadly poison a wholesome medicine, to turne the punishments of sinne into meanes of furthering vs vnto the rewards of righteousnesse, and of the path of perdition which led vnto hell, to make a direct and plain way vnto the kingdome of heauen?

Ioh 9.3.

Ioh 11.4.

Acts 14.22.

Q. Sect. 3. That God is glorified in our afflictions as they are tryals of his spirituall graces.

Thus also is the Lord glorified in our afflictions as they are trialls of our graces, and vertues which wee haue receiued of him; for seeing hee is the author of them all, therefore when being tried they appeare and shine in vs, the glory of their excellencie chiefly redoundeth to him that gaue them. And as the excellencie of the worke doth manifest the skill of him that made it: so these vertues and graces being not our owne, but the excellent workmanship of Gods holy spirit, doe much magnifie the author of them when being tried, their worth is discouered. And therefore after the Lord hath made for vs an excellent armour of his spiritual graces, which is high proofe and sufficient to beare and beate backe all the fiery darts of sathans temptations, the piercing bullets of worldly prosperity, and these swords and speares of outward crosses and afflictions; and hath buckled this armor close vnto vs by his holy spirit; then doth he exercise vs in his warfare against the enemies of his glory and our saluation, and suffereth them to bend against vs all their strength, and to assault vs with all their weapons, darts and shot, that so our armour being tried and in triall approued, he may haue the honor that made it, and put it on vs. Againe whilst we enioy worldly prosperity, and haue all things according to our hearts desire, we doe with Iob lie open to the slander of Sathan and wicked men, who are ready to say that we doe not serue the Lord, and yeeld obedience to his commandements, because of any goodnesse and excellency which is in himselfe; or for any conscience of our duty, or any loue which wee beare vnto him for his owne sake, as being our chiefe happines, and the supreame end of vs and all his creatures; but because he hath hedged vs in on all sides, multiplied on vs earthly benefits and (as it were) hired vs, to serue him with the present wages of wordly things, not out of any loue to him, but out of selfe-loue, to attaine vnto some preferment which we ambitiously aspire vnto, or to obtain some temporary profit or pleasure which we desire; therefore doth the Lord strip vs of these worldly blessings, and loadeth vs with troubles and afflictions for the triall of our faith, loue and obedience, to the end that it may appeare that wee serue him freely, for that excellency and goodnesse which we see in himselfe, and not for selfe loue and outward respects, by which our seruice he is chiefly glorified; for when being stripped of all worldly benefits, we can with Iob blesse the Lord; when with him we can say, though he kill me yet will I trust in him; when we can professe with the people of God, that not for our own, but for Gods sake are we killed all the day long; & with the Apostles reioyce, because he thinketh vs worthy to suffer for his name any misery or affliction: then doe wee giue glory vnto God by acknowledging his owne worth and excellency, when wee thinke nothing too much which wee suffer for him; then doe we confesse him to bee the chief goodnesse, when as we are glad, euen by our miseries to manifest and magnifie his glory and maiesty.

Iob 1,22. & 13.15. Psal. 44.22. Acts 5.41.

Now the consideration hereof, that God is glorified in our afflictions, may serue as an effectuall argument to make vs beare them, not only with humility and patience, but also with ioy and thankfulnesse; seeing wee may say with the people and Church of God, that we do suffer not for our sinnes, but principally for Gods sake, that he may be magnified and glorified in our afflictions. An example wherof we haue in the holy Apostles, who reioyced in their afflictions and persecutions, because they were thought worthy to suffer for the name of Christ. And especially in the Apostle Paul who intending somwhat to boast himselfe for the gracing of his Apostleship, doth chiefly glory in his afflictions, because in them God was glorified; euen as elsewhere he reioyceth in his infirmities & afflictions of mind, that the power of Christ might be magnified in his weakenesse; and taketh pleasure in his infirmities, reproches, necessities, persecutions and anguish for Christs sake, because in his greatest weakenesse he was strong in him. Which examples we are bound to imitate for diuers causes: for first the Lord is our creator who gaue vs our being and made vs of nothing, that we might serue as instruments for the setting forth of his

Q. Sect. 4. That it is a great comfort in our afflictions to consider that God is glorified by them.

Psal. 44.22. Acts 5.41.

2. Cor. 12.10.

Chap. 11.9.10.

Iob 1.9.

his glory, according to that of the Prouerbs; The Lord hath made all things for his owne sake, yea, euen the wicked for the day of euill. If therefore we can by any meanes aduance his glory, though it be by our own smart and paine, we haue iust cause of comfort and reioycing, seeing whilst we glorifie our creator we attaine vnto the end of our creation. Secondly he is our redeemer and Sauiour who hath bought vs with the precious price of himself; that not being our owne, but his that bought vs, we might glorifie him both in our soules and bodies, as the Apostle speaketh. And in this respect he also telleth vs, that none of vs liueth to himselfe, neither doth any die to himselfe, for whether we liue we liue vnto the Lord, or whether we die we die vnto the Lord; and that whether we liue or die, we are the Lords. Seeing therefore we are the Lords, by a double right, both because hee hath created vs of nothing, and hath also bought vs, who had sold our selues to sinne and sathan; and that to this end that wee should become his seruants, and in all things seeke the aduancement of his glory, great reason we haue to reioyce when any occasion is offered whereby wee may glorifie him our Lord and redeemer, whether by prosperity or aduersity, honour or dishonor, sicknesse or health, imprisonment or liberty, life or death: and that whether we consider the greatnesse of the price which he gaue for our redemption, namely himselfe for vs; or the euils and miseries from which he hath deliuered vs, to wit, the wrath of God, the curse of the law, and eternall death and condemnation of body and soule in the fire of hell. For well may we with comfort and patience yea with ioy and thanksgiuing suffer afflictions that his holy name may be glorified; seeing he hath been content to suffer much more grieuous punishments in the whole course of his life, as hunger thirst, wearinesse persecution, the wrath of God and death it selfe, that he might by his sufferings procure our glory; well may we reioice and triumph in our momentany & light afflictions which aduance the glory of our redeemer, who hath deliuered vs by his death and obedience from the intolerable and euerlasting torments of hell fire: especially considering, that this was the end of his paying so great a price for vs, that being bought, we might become his seruants, & he our Lord, whom we are to glorifie in all we doe or suffer. For so the Apostle saith, that Christ therefore died and rose again and reuiued, that he might be Lord both of the dead and the quicke, and that we are predestinate vnto eternall happinesse in Christ, that trusting in him we should be to the praise of his glory, and finally that he purchased the possession of heauenly felicity for vs, not only to glorifie vs, but that we also might aduance his praise and glory. To conclude this point, the Lord is our summum bonum, and chiefe happinesse, and his glory is the supreme end of all things. In regard whereof we are to reioice in our afflictions which tend to the manifestation of his glory, seeing thereby we attaine vnto our chiefe end. Yea we should desire rather in this respect to be excluded out of the ioyes of Heauen, and to perish euerlastingly; than that Gods glory vnto which all things are destinated, as vnto their chiefe end, should be blemished or impaired: as we may see in the example of Moses, who rather than he would haue the Name of God dishonoured among the Nations in the destruction of the people of Israel, desired to be raced out of the booke of life. As also in the Apostle Paul, who in penning of the holy Scriptures by the immediate inspiration of Gods holy Spirit, which priuiledged him from erring through blinde and preposterous zeale, did earnestly wish to bee an Anathema, or one separated from Christ, and the euerlasting ioyes of his Kingdome, on this condition that God might be glorified in the saluation of the people of the Iewes. And therefore if we ought to be content, though we should be depriued of euerlasting saluation, and be subiected to euerlasting punishments, that God may be glorified in vs; then how much more should we endure with patience and comfort the losse of wordly ioyes, and the smart of these short and light afflictions when Gods glory is hereby manifested; although wee should neuer haue further benefit of our sufferings nor reward of our patience? But yet much more haue we cause of rejoycing and glorying in these our afflictions, if wee further consider, that if wee thus honour God in suffering for his glory, he will eternally honour vs; if we glorifie him on earth, in the quiet and comfortable bearing of our crosse, he will glorifie vs in his heauenly kingdome and crowne our patience with endlesse happinesse. If wee honor our sauiour in our suffering with him, he will honour vs in our raigning with him. And finally if with comfort and ioy we doe for Gods sake bear our crosse which he laieth vpon vs, then shall these light and momentany afflictions cause vnto vs a far most excellent and an eternall waight of glory, as the Apostle speaketh.

1. Cor. 10, 31.

Exod. 32. 32.

Rom. 9. 3.

1. Sam. 2, 30.

1. Tim. 2. 12.

2. Cor. 4. 17.

CHAP. XIV.

That God by our afflictions doth much aduance the good of our neighbours.

THe other end of our afflictions is our owne good, or the good of the elect; and that whether we consider our neighbors, or our selues. For the Lord our great King and commander respecteth vs, not only as we are priuate

Q. Sect. 1. That our neighbours haue good by our afflictions, as they learne by them to feare God in his iudgments.

uate and particular men, but as we are subiects of the same kingdome, and members of the same body: and therefore as he doth communicate his benefits vnto vs not for priuate vse alone, but for the good of the whole christian common wealth; so also he inflicteth his chastisements vpon the particular members of this body and society, that they may redound to the vse and benefit of all the rest. And this the heathen man could discerne by the light of nature; calamities (saith he) and punishments are very profitable both to those that suffer them, and those that see them; for both by them are made better, they by paine, and these by example. As therefore the skilfull Musitian doth strain his strings not to breake them, but to bring them to their perfect sound, that not only himselfe, but also all the standers by may take delight in their melodious harmony; so the Lord doth, as it were, stretch and straine vs with troubles and afflictions, not to cracke our patience, or to breake vs with their stresse, but to bring vs to our best perfection, that not only he may delight in vs, when we sound out vnto him the harmonious musick of his praises, but also may make all our neighbours the better with the sweetnes of our melodie. But this will better appeare if we insist in some particulars; for first others receiue benefit by the afflictions of the faithfull, in that they learne hereby to feare God, when as they see his righteous iudgements, seeing he winketh not at sinne in those who are dearest vnto him, but whippeth and chastneth them for their amendment; and therefore if he so seuerely correct the slips and infirmities of those whom he so tenderly loueth, how grieuously will he punish the hainous crimes of wicked men who are as yet at enmity with him; vnlesse they preuent their destruction by vnfained repentance? according to that of the Apostle; If iudgement begin at Gods owne house and family, what shall be the end of them that obey not the Gospell? If he deale so sharpely with those whom he iustifieth & acquitteth; what rigour are they to expect who shall appeare before him in their guilt of sinne at the last iudgement? If hee make them thus to smart for their sinnes whom he loueth, and in whom his soule delighteth; what torments hath he prepared, for those whom he hateth and abhorreth? But especially they receiue fruite and benefit by their afflictions, who are of the same society and household of faith; for as in the same familie, when one of the children or seruants are iustly corrected for their faults, it moueth all the rest (if they haue any grace in them) to reuerence the father and master of the family, and to carry themselues so, as they may auoide his displeasure; and as schollers in the same schole, when they see one of their fellowes whipped for their negligence, doe (being warned by his example) become the more diligent in learning their lesson: so the children and seruants of God, and disciples of Iesus Christ, when they see any of their company chastened by the hand of God they are moued hereby to feare and reuerence him, seeing hee is such an one as will not bee dallied with, but expecteth and requireth obseruance and duty of all whom he admitteth into his house, and family.

Plato in Gor.

1. Pet. 4. 17.

Secondly, others take profit by the afflictions of the faithfull, whilest by their example they are restrained from the committing of sinne, especially of those faults which they see corrected in their fellowes, lest they also taste of the same cup: and that the rather, because if they take not warning by their chastisements, they are justly to expect double payment, both because they are culpable of the same faults, and because they are not reformed by their example. For as the wise Commander, finding a great part of his army guilty of such faults, as are by no meanes to go vnpunished, and yet is so gracious, that he will not haue al suffer the same punishment who are guilty of the same offence, as not ayming at their smart and pain, but at their reformation and amendement, doth decimate, or cull out the tenth person of the delinquents, whom hee chasteneth, for the example of all the rest: so our Lord of Hosts, and Captaine Generall, seeing many in the Church Militant guilty of the same faults, and on the one side, knowing that conniuency would embolden his souldiers in sinne, worke neglect of duty, and bring all disorder and confusion in his Royall army; and on the other side, being in his owne nature so gracious, that he will not let his corrections exceed necessity, either in their measure, or extent; doth vsually chasten one, of many that offend, that by his example the rest may be brought to amendement. But if any vntouched, take no warning by others corrections, and continue in his faultinesse, though God hath giuen him this meanes to reforme him, then is he like to haue his punishment doubled, and to suffer both for his sinne, and his secure neglect of Gods seuerity to others, and mercy to himselfe. And thus God chastened seuerely Moses and Aaron for their diffidence and distrust in his prouidence, that others might beware of the like infidelity: thus hee sharply corrected Dauid for his adultery, and murther, that others by his example might flee vncleannes, and the shedding of innocent bloud. So hee turned Lots Wife into a Pillar of Salt, that others by her example might take heed of too much worldlinesse, and loue of earthly things: to which purpose our Sauiour bids vs to remember Lots wife, that being warned by her punishment, wee doe not as wee are trauelling out of this Sodome of sinne, for the

Luke 17. 32.

2. Sect. 3. Secondly, afflictions benefit others, they serue to restraine them from committing the sinne which they see punished in vs.

the safegard of our soule, looke backe to the baits of worldly vanites, which will but allure vs to thinke of returning. For to what end (as one saith) was shee turned into a piller of salt, but that being seasoned with her example, wee might become the wiser? and therefore her ill example becommeth good vnto thee, if thou takest warning by it. But most plainely is this expressed by the Apostle Paul, who hauing spoken of many sins committed by the Israelites in the wildernesse, and withall of those great crosses and calamities which the Lord for these offences inflicted on them; saith, that all these things came vpon them for ensamples, and were written to admonish vs, vpon whom the ends of the world are come, to the intent that wee should not lust after euill things, as they also lusted.

Thirdly, others are much benefited by the afflictions of the faithfull, because in their fiery triall, Gods graces and gifts clearly shining in them; they are made vnto them notable examples and presidents for their imitation. For the Lord pitying our ignorance in the way of vertue, especially when it lieth through the deserts of afflictions, and knowing how vncouth in it selfe it is vnto vs, doth cause others whom hee hath taught this way, to goe before vs (euen as he causeth vs also when we haue learned it, to go before others, who follow after vs) that the path being beaten and made plaine, may more easily bee found of those who are to trauaile it. For example, thus doth the Lord by afflictions make manifest the faith, affiance, hope, loue, patience, obedience, and such like graces, which hee hath bestowed vpon others, that wee admiring and louing them, may seeke and labour after them, and so carry our selues alike vertuously when wee come into the like trials: and as a man hauing lighted a candle, doth not hide it in a hole, or as our Sauiour speaketh, nor put it vnder a bushel; but setteth it in a candlestick, that by the light thereof, they of the family may bee guided and directed; so the Lord hauing put into these chosen lampes, the oile of his graces, which being kindled with the fire of afflictions, doth giue a great and glorious light, he would not haue them to shine to themselues alone, or to the Lord, who delighteth in their brightnesse, but hee placeth them like lights on a hill, which giue direction to all passengers, or like candles on a table for the vse and benefit of the whole family. And thus God tried Abraham when hee willed him to sacrifice his Sonne, that wee by his example might learne faith and obedience, if wee should bee called to the same triall. Thus hee tried Moses, both with the prosperity, & afflictions of Egypt, that we might learne to make his election, chusing rather to suffer aduersity with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sinne for a season: and esteeme the rebuke of Christ, greater riches, than the treasures of this earthly Egypt, because wee haue respect to the recompence of reward. Thus was Dauid afflicted, that wee might learne by his example, when wee are in our greatest distresses, and forsaken of all worldly helpe, to comfort our selues in the Lord our God; and when we are in most desperate dangers, to humble our selues before him, and to submit out wills and states vnto his good pleasure, saying, Behold here I am, let him doe to mee as seemeth good in his eye. Thus God afflicted Iob, that hee might bee vnto vs a patterne of patience, and that wee might learne by his example to praise God in all our losses, and though hee should kill vs, yet to put our trust in him. As also that by so gracious a deliuerance of him out of such great troubles & miseries, we may be assured that God who is euer one, & the same, without change or shadow of change, will also deliuer vs if we waite and depend vpon him. To which purpose the Apostle Iames propoundeth his example vnto vs. Behold (saith hee) wee count them blessed which endure. Yee haue heard of the patience of Iob, and haue knowne what end the Lord made; for the Lord is pitifull and mercifull. Finally, thus was Steuen persecuted to the death, that by his example, wee might learne to giue our liues for the name of Christ; and the Gospell; and to pray for our persecutors and tormentors. And thus Peter, Iohn, and Paul, were persecuted, and euen loaded with miseries and afflictions, that wee might by their example learne to rejoyce in all our tribulations, to triumph ouer all worldly miseries, and in respect of the manifold benefits, which we receiue by our crosses and afflictions to boast and glory in them. And that this vse and benefit is to bee made of the afflictions of these holy Seruants of God, it may appeare in that not onely the Scriptures propound their example to this end; but exhort also vs to imitate & follow them. So the Apostle Iames perswading to patience in afflictions, biddeth to take vp the Prophets for an example of suffering aduersity, and of long patience, which haue spoken in the name of the Lord: and our Sauiour Christ willeth vs to rejoyce in our sufferings for his sake, not onely because our reward is great in heauen, but also because wee haue Gods holy Prophets, who were so dearely beloued of him, copartners with vs in such like persecutions. And thus doth the Apostle propound the manifold examples of Gods Saints, who indured many tryals, afflictions and persecutions of all kinde, that wee who follow in these after ages, being compassed with so great a cloud of witnesses, should cast away euery thing that presseth downe, and the sinne which doth so easily beset

1. Sam. 30. 6.

2. Sam. 15. 26.

Iob 1. 21. and 13. 15.

Iam. 5. 11.

Act. 5. 41.

2. Cor. 11. 16. 7.

Iam. 5. 8. 10.

Matth. 5. 12.

vs, and notwithstanding all worldly hinderances, runne with patience the race that is set before vs. So the Apostle Paul saith, that whether he were afflicted, it was for the Corinthian consolations and saluation, which was wrought in the enduring of the same sufferings which hee suffered, or whether hee was comforted it was for their consolation and saluation. By all which it appeareth, how behouefull the afflictions of some of the faithfull, are for the vse and benefit of all the rest, seeing they become patterns and examples for their imitation, and haue their vertues and graces by these trials discouered, that whereas before they were profitable onely to themselues, and enioying alone the comfort of their owne light, now they shine also vnto others, and incourage them to vse all good meanes that they may attaine vnto the like brightnesse and perfection. To which purpose one saith, that it was necessary, that holy Iob who was onely knowne vnto God and himselfe, how much hee excelled in vertue and pietie, should by his afflictions bee knowne vnto all the faithfull that he might bee a president for their imitation. Neither could hee haue beene an example of vertue vnto others, if hee had continued in his prosperous estate without any trial or tentation. And another affirmeth, that if Sathan had not piereed, and (as it were) bored holes through his body with all those plagues and punishments which hee inflicted on him, the bright beames of his graces would haue beene hidden within him, and would not haue shined vnto vs; if hee had neuer sate downe in the ashes, wee had neuer come to the knowledge of his spirituall riches. And another saith, that the faithfull are afflicted to this end, because they are to bee propounded as examples of patience for the benefit of all the rest: and as other of the faithfull are thus by their afflictions profitable vnto vs, so are we in ours alike profitable vnto others, if in the fiery tryall, Gods graces, and the good vertues which we haue receiued doe shine vnto them. For, if like spices we bee punned in this morter of afflictions, the odoriferous smell of our spirituall graces, which before were scarce discerned, doth now spread a broad, to the comfort and refreshing of all that stand about vs; and whereas if like roses we grow vntouched, we doe but for the present send forth some sweet smell to those who are next vnto vs: contrariwise, if wee bee distilled with the fire of afflictions, wee shall yeeld sweet waters of durable comfort, euen to those who are farre distant, and such as liue in after-ages, when by reports this sweet odour of our fame shall come vnto them. And thus the Apostle saith of himselfe, that his bands of Christ were famous throughout all the iudgement hall, and in all other places, insomuch that many of the brethren in the Lord, were imboldned by his bands, so that they durst more frankly speake the Word.

Heb. 11. 35. 36. & 12. 1. 2. Cor. 1. 6.

Gregor. Moral. lib. 3. cap. 2.

Nisi Satan Iobi corpus plagis perforasset, radij intrinseci non prodijssent &c. Chrisost. serm. ad pop. 5. To. 4 Aug. de Gen. ad literam. lib. 3. cap. 15.

Phil. 1. 13. 14.

Yea, not onely haue the faithfull much benefit by the afflictions of others of the same family; as they are vnto them notable examples for their imitation, when as they see the beames of Gods graces shining in them; but also as they are patterns of humane frailty, whilest in their afflictions they bewray their impatience and infirmities; for what comfort could any man now haue in bearing his crosse with so great weaknesse and imperfection, if he did not discerne that Gods dearely beloued seruants and great Worthies had shewed the like frailty? Whereas when we see in Iob (the patterne of patience) so much weaknesse and impatiency, by fits, when he was most pinched with his waight of affliction oppressing him; when as wee behold Dauid (an example of pietie, and a man according to Gods owne heart,) in his great afflictions as a man forlorne, forsaken of God, and in a desperate condition; Elias desiring by death to be freed from a troublesome life; Ionas fretting, fuming and euen chiding with God, because he thought himselfe impeached in his credit and reputation; and Ieremy a worthy Prophet, cursing the day of his nativity, because he came forth of the wombe to see labour and sorrow, that his dayes should bee consumed with shame; then are wee comforted after we haue in the like crosses bewrayed our infirmities, if with them, when the conflict is ouer, we returne vnto our selues, and bewaile these slips and falls by true repentance. And as wee haue this consolation by others, so haue our poore weake brethren the like by vs, when being adorned and well furnished with Gods gifts and graces, we doe notwithstanding in our afflictions bewray our weaknes and frailty, whereas if they had only experience of their owne infirmities and imperfections, and could not obserue the like in other of Gods Seruants, whom they acknowledge indued richly with his graces, and notable instruments of his glory, they would easily conclude, that they are not in the number of the faithfull, but in the ranke of the damned and reprobate; and so the waight of their sinnes and an euill conscience, being added vnto the already-heauy burthen of affliction, would ouerwhelme and presse them downe into the bottomlesse gulph of desperation and perdition.

Ier. 20. 18.

§. Sect. 4. That we benefit our neighbours in our afflictions, as they are patterns of humane frailty.

Moreouer others of the faithfull haue much profit and benefit by our afflictions as they are occasioned hereby to acknowledge, praise and magnifie Gods power appearing in our weaknesse, his wisedome in our simplicity and seelinesse, and his goodnesse and the vertue of his graces, in our frailty and naturall corruption; for when as they plainely plainely see, that wee who are weake and impotent of our selues, and ready to faint and fall vnder the lightest burthen, do neuertheless stand stoutly and couragiously in the greatest tentations, & vnder the heauiest waight of afflictions, they are forced to ascribe the glory to God, by whose power we are supported; and when they behold vs deliuered out of all our troubles, who in respect of all outward helpes, were in a desperate condition, they are necessarily hereby moued to giue God the prayse, by whose wisedome and might we are deliuered. And as when wee see one of our friends and companions, whom we knew weake, impotent and vnskilfull in all feates of actiuity, wrastling with a mighty and cunning aduersary, wee presently giue him ouer in our thoughts as foyled, shamed and ouerthrowne; but if contrary to our expectation, hee foyle and cast downe his strong and skilfull enemy, we so triumph in his victory, as that wee giue the chiefe prayse vnto the Master of the masteries, from whom he hath had his ability and cunning: so when we behold any of our brethren, whom we know to be naturally weake, impotent and impatient of the least paine, combating and wrastling with our puissant enemie the World, who striueth might and maine to ouerthow them, with those powerfull forces of miseries and afflictions, as we cannot but giue them ouer for vanquished, if we respect their owne skill and strength; so when contrary to expectation wee see them get the victory, and ouerthrow their enemy; as we haue just cause to applaude them and to rejoyce in their conquest; so most of all, to prayse and magnifie the Lord, from whom alone they haue receiued all their strength and skill.

§. Sect. 5. That our afflictions benefit our neighbours when by them they are brought to see God's perfections in our imperfections.

Finally, others haue fruite and benefit by our afflictions, both because our hearts are made tender by them, and apt to pitie those whom wee see subject to the like miseries; and also because after wee are deliuered, we are able out of our owne experience to comfort them with those consolations wherewith wee our selues haue beene comforted. For, in the former respect it may truely bee said of pitie and mercy, as of loue and charity, that they begin at home; neither is euer a man so pitifull and mercifull vnto those whose case is miserable, as when himselfe hath beene pinched with the like miseries; nor is there any place in his heart for compassion of others griefes, till passion and suffering of the same euills haue beene there before. And for the other it may bee affirmed with like truth, that there is no man so fit to comfort others, as hee who speaketh out of his owne experience, raising vp their dejected minds with those consolations, wherewith himselfe hath formerly beene comforted and refreshed. For, as in the body, the same salue serueth for the same sore, and the same medicine for the same disease, though they be applyed to diuers persons, so that respect bee had to fit them to their strength, constitution, and temperature; and therefore no Physition is more able to cure another man, than hee who hath first cured himselfe of the same disease; because vnto his art is joyned experience, whereby it is made perfect: so in the minde, the same consolations are most fit for the same crosses, so that there bee a wise consideration of the disposition and spiritual constitution of the parties to whom they are applyed. And therefore when wee comming to comfort others, can out of our owne experience say, I my selfe haue beene thus afflicted; and thus, and thus did I receiue consolation, and was strengthened in patience to beare my crosses: These and these great things did the Lord for mee in the time of my trouble, thus did hee strengthen mee in my greatest weaknesse, and thus did he support mee with his might, when being feeble in my selfe I was ready to faint and fall; thus was I refreshed with spirituall consolations and the inward feelings of Gods loue and mercy, and thus did he powerfully deliuer mee, when in respect of all outward meanes my case was desperate: these comforts, as they will be in all likelihood more effectuall to cure a diseased mind, because they are approued by experience; so will the sicke patient more willingly take them, when he knoweth that his Physition doth not try new conclusions out his art and theory, but doth practise out of of his owne experience, prescribing the same medicine to his patient, where with himselfe being so affected was lately cured. And thus doth Dauid, being deliuered from his troubles comfort others out of the experience which hee had of Gods mercies. I sought the Lord (saith he) and he heard mee, yea hee deliuered me out of all my feare: and how effectuall this would bee for this vse, hee sheweth in the words following; they shall looke vnto him and runne vnto him, and their faces shall not bee ashamed, saying; this poore man cryed and the Lord heard him, and saued him out of all his troubles. So the Apostle Paul saith plainely, that God comforted him in all his tribulations, that he might be able to comfort them who are in any affliction, by the comforts wherewith himselfe was comforted of God; and that he was afflicted for the consolation and saluation of the Corinthians, which was wrought in the induring of the same sufferings which he also suffered. Yea, thus was the great Physition of our soules, Iesus Christ, the better inabled to raise vs, fainting in our infirmities, with the cordials of comforts, by hauing first in himselfe experience of our griefes and miseries: ries: for as the Apostle saith, in that he suffered and was tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted. And therefore if Christ himselfe, as he was man and our Mediatour, though hee were most exquisite in skill, had need for the full perfecting of it, to haue experience of our trialls and tentations, that so he might be the better inabled to relieue and comfort vs in all our afflictions & distresses; how much more neede haue wee of this experience that we may be fitted to giue consolation vnto others, seeing wee come infinite degrees short of him in skill and wisedome?

Psal. 34. 4. 6.

2. Cor. 1. 4.

Heb. 2. 18.

2. Sect. 7. That the good of our brethren by our afflictions should much comfort vs in suffering them.

And thus it appeareth that our neighbours and brethren who are of the same household of faith, children of the same heauenly Father and fellow members of the same Head Iesus Christ, doe receiue many singular benefits by our troubles and afflictions, & that when we are like fruitfull grapes pressed with the waight of tribulation, they doe drinke from vs the pleasant wine of consolation, whereby their fainting hearts are cheared and refreshed. The consideration whereof should much comfort vs in all our crosses and calamities, because they not onely tend to the aduancement of Gods glory, but also redound to the vse and benefit of those who are so neere and deere vnto vs. For if wee are bound by the law of charity to loue our neighbours, as wee loue our selues; and if wee come into the world that we should not liue for our owne benefit, but for the good of euery one of that Christian society, whereof wee are parts and members; then ought we as much to rejoyce when wee haue any occasion of aduancing the benefit of euery one who liueth in the Church, as if it tended to our owne priuate profit, and did much further vs in our owne particular. We see that euery true member of the body doth suffer much with all cheerefulnesse for the good of a fellow member, and is content to indure any torture and torment, euen to the separation of it selfe from the rest, for the good and preseruation of the whole body; and wee may perceiue that the same affection and loue is in the spirituall members of the mysticall Body of Iesus Christ, as wee haue shewed in the example of Moses and Paul, who as they indured much with patience for particular members, so they wished to be cut off and separated for the welfare and saluation of the whole Church. Wee heare also the same Apostle teaching vs, that it is the nature of true charity not to seeke her owne things, but suffereth all, and indureth all, for their sakes whom it loueth & affecteth. And therefore wee must be ready to seeke others good as well as our owne: and with patience and cheerefulnesse to indure crosses and afflictions, which we see so much to aduance their profit and benefit, or else we must conclude that wee are destitute of charity, and consequently of all sauing grace, and that we are no true members of Iesus Christ. But with much more comfort and spirituall rejoycing may wee beare our crosse, when as we further consider that it doth aduance the good, not of one alone, but that our single sufferings are fruitfull vnto many; and that not in any equality of proportion, seeing our bodily sufferings redound to the good of their soules, our corporall tribulations tend to the inriching of them with spirituall graces, and our temporary, light and momentany afflictions doe further them in attaining vnto that farre most excellent and eternall waight of glory. Wherein we haue our Sauiour Christ an example for our imitation, who with all alacrity and joy suffered for vs all the miseries of a wretched life, and the vnspeakeable torments of a cursed death, that by his miseries hee might aduance our happinesse, and by the torments of his death might procure for vs heauenly joyes and euerlasting life. Or if we thinke him a precedent and patterne aboue our pitch and reach, let vs set before vs the example of his holy Apostle, who joyned in his afflictions which hee endured for the Churches sake. Now I reioyce (saith he) in my sufferings for you and fulfill the rest of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh, for his bodies sake which is the Church. Where by the rest, or that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ, we are not to vnderstand the remainder of Christs sufferings, which hee suffered for the redemption of the Church and the satisfaction of Gods justice for sin: for these sufferings Christ himselfe alone indured and perfectly finished: but whereas there are two kinds of the sufferings of Christ, the one borne by himselfe alone, as our Head for the redemption of his body, which was his owne peculiar part, allotted vnto him by the decree of his Father, for the satisfying of his justice for our sinnes: the other to be borne by his Church and faithfull people, who are his mysticall Body, of which sufferings euery particular member hath his part and share appointed vnto him by the same decree of God; this place is to bee vnderstood of afflictions of this latter kind, and not of the former: in which regard the Apostle calleth them here the afflictions of Christ, and not the sufferings: so that the meaning is, that as Christ himselfe suffered those first and chiefe afflictions for the redeeming his Church, which was his owne part appropriated vnto him: so the Apostle suffered his part in the remainder of these afflictions which were to bee suffered in his body, that it might bee conformable to him the Head in sufferings, vnto whom it was afterwards to bee conformable in glory. The which afflictions are called the afflictions of Christ, because he

1 Cor. 13. 4. 7.

Col. 1. 24

Rom. 8. 17. 29

ὑστερήματα τῶν θλίψεων τοῦ Χριστοῦ.

Act. 9. 4.

he suffereth with euery member, as being the Head of the whole Body, as appeareth by those his owne words Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And the Apostle here saith that he suffereth them for the Churches sake, not to redeeme it in whole or part, or to satisfie Gods justice for sinne (which had beene blasphemous:) but for the Churches vse and profit, namely as his afflictions were the meanes of deriuing vnto all the faithfull all those excellent benefits of which I haue already spoken.

CHAP. XV.

That afflictions doe not hurt the faithfull, nor bring vnto them any great euill.

HAuing already proued that God out of our afflictions aduanceth and manifesteth his owne glory, and also furthereth by them the good of our neighbour: it now followeth that I also shew, that the Lord in our crosses aymeth at, and accordingly powerfully effecteth our owne good. Neither doth the Lord inflict them as punishments of sinne to satisfie his justice by our harmes, but as chastisements of a gracious Father inflicted out of meere loue for our singular vse and great benefit. The former of these two points is first to bee proued, as being a paradox to the world and our corrupt flesh, who feare and fly from afflictions as the greatest euills, and doe in no other respect mislike this life, but because it is obnoxious and subject vnto them. And surely it cannot bee denied but that these afflictions (as before I haue shewed) are in their owne nature euill, and that to wicked men they are exceeding hurtfull, seeing they thrust them into many temptations, and cause them to fall into many sinnes: they much vex and torment them both in their soules and bodies, and are vnto them the beginnings, and (as it were) the first flashes of their hellish tortures: but vnto the Child of God and true beleeuer, their nature is changed, their sting of sinne is taken away, and so though in themselues they bee harmefull they become harmelesse vnto them. For as one saith, aduersity hurteth not, where iniquity raigneth not. And this commeth to passe chiefly and principally through the infinite wisedome and power of God, who taketh away the strength from this poyson, and the hurtfull sting from this Serpent, and also through the vertue of the precious death of his Son Iesus Christ, who is the true brasen Serpent lift vp vpon the crosse, vpon whom whosoeuer looketh with the eye of Faith, after they feele themselues stung with these fiery Serpents of afflictions, they are presently cured and find no harme at all by these wounds. And partly they become harmelesse through the inward vertue of their spirituall graces receiued from God, which as singular preseruatiues dispell the poyson of afflictions; and so alter their nature through that right vse which they make of them, as that they become not only harmelesse but also good and profitable. To which purpose one saith, that as wicked men doe wickedly vse, not onely euill things, but also those which are good: so they who are just doe vse well, not good things alone, but also those which are euill. Whereof it is that they abuse the Law of God, although it be good; and these doe die well, although death it selfe be euill. And this may well be, because (as I haue shewed) no worldly thing is of simple and absolute goodnesse, and therefore is subject to bee abused vnto euill; neither is there any thing in the Earth (sinne onely excepted) simply and absolutely euill, and therefore it may be vsed vnto good. So, one saith, that it is not euill to suffer euill; but to doe euill, that is euill. And therefore the patient enduring of euils assureth vs of the Kingdome of Heauen; but the committing of euils threatneth vs with the torments of Hell Fire.

August. de ciuit. dei lib. 3. cap. 3.

Malum pati malum non est: malum facere malum est &c. Chrysost. de prodit. Iudæ.

There is no hurt therefore in afflictions to them that can make aright and holy vse of them; neither can all the miseries of the world make a faithfull man miserable; both because as his happinesse consisteth not in earthly things, but in spirituall and heauenly; so he cannot be made vnhappy, either with the want of the best things that the world can brag of, or with the presence and feeling of the worst things which it can threaten: and also because that grace and goodnesse which he hath receiued from God as a little sparke of that infinite flame, is (like vnto fire) of such a quality, that it turneth and changeth euery thing which toucheth it into its own nature, and by a predominant vertue, and powerfull working conuerteth euill into good, and curses into blessings. But chiefely and principally this commeth to passe thorough the infinite wisedome, power, and goodnesse of God, who is able to bring good out of the greatest euill, and so to order and dispose of our most grieuous afflictions, as we shall receiue no hurt by them, but like the three Children remaine vntouched, euen when we are in the middest of this fiery furnace.

Q. Sect. 2. Reasons why worldly afflictions cannot hurt the faithfull.

Sapiens potest miser dici, non potest esse. Sen. de prouident. lib. cap. 3.

The which will the better appeare, if wee further consider, that the afflictions of this life, doe neither deprive vs of any of those things which are of cheifest excellency, nor bring vpon vs any of those euills, which are principally to bee auoided. As for example, they do not, nor cannot separate vs from the loue of God, as the Apostle witnesseth, in whose fauour is life in death, and happinesse in

Q. Sect. 3. That afflictions doe not deprive vs of blessings which are of greatest worth, but rather encrease them. Rom. 8. 38. 39.

in the greatest misery: yea rather, to those who vse them well, they are testimonies and pledges of his loue, seeing whom he loueth, hee correcteth, and scourgeth euery sonne whom hee receiueth. They doe not extinguish nor diminish in vs Gods sanctifying and sauing graces; but rather their heate is intended and increased, when as they approach and come neere vnto this fire of afflictions. They doe not make vs more slacke and negligent in the duties of Gods seruice, in hearing the word, prayer, and all holy and religious exercises; yea rather the fire of afflictions is a chiefe helpe for the offering of those sacrifices; and if wee be not sometimes warmed with the heate thereof, we quickly grow cold in our deuotions, performing either no seruice vnto God at all, or else with great carelesnesse, sloth, and negligence. Finally they doe not at all hinder our heauenly happinesse, but further hasten, and increase it. In which respect we may say of all afflictions, as one speaketh of persecution; whatsoeuer rageth against the name of Christ is tolerable, if it may bee ouercome; and if it cannot, it hasteneth the receiuing of our glorious reward; for the faithfull man in the end of his temporall euils, passeth into the fruition of his eternall good.

Heb. 12.6.

Aug. in Iterem.

Corollar. 4.
These afflictions bring not vpon vs the chiefest euils that are to be feared and auoided, but rather the contrary good.

And as they doe not depriue vs of those chiefe blessings and benefits which are to be chiefely desired and esteemed; so they doe not bring vpon vs those greatest and most capitall euils which are principally to be feared and auoided. They doe not impaire our spirituall estate or make vs worse, but contrariwise, bring more good to our soules, than hurt to our bodies; for as by them the outward man decayeth, the inward man is renewed daily; and as they are notable meanes to mortifie the flesh, so also to make the spirituall man more strong and vigorous. They doe not defile the faithfull man with sin, nor make him in himselfe more vitious, & in his life and conuersation more lewd and licencious; but rather serue as fire and files, to purge and scoure him from the drosse and rust of sinne, as profitable corrections to reforme him of his vices, as bridles to restraine him from running into licentious courses; and as hedges of thornes to keepe him from pampring his flesh in the pastures of sinfull pleasures or if he bee fallen into any sinne, they are not incouragements hearting him to liue and continue in it; yea rather they warne him from wickednes, when as hee findes this gall and wormewood mingled with sinfull delights; and serue as strong cords and cables to pull him out of the sinke of sinne, and to draw him vnto God by vnfained repentance. They doe not subiect vs to the curse of the law, the wrath of God, the torments of Hell, and euerlasting condemnation; but rather they helpe to bring vs to a sight of sinne, and to a sense of our owne misery, and so driue vs out of our selues vnto Christ, hungring after his righteousnesse and resting vpon him by a liuely faith for iustification and saluation. The which being the onely condition of the couenant of grace, wee are assured by it, that wee haue our part in Christ his righteousnesse and obedience, and all the gracious promises of the Gospell made in him: and consequently that hee hath freed vs from the curse of the Law, by being made a curse for vs; appeased Gods wrath, by satisfying his iustice; and deliuered vs from Hell and condemnation, by suffering the punishments which wee had deserued. So that our afflictions are not vnto vs (as they are vnto the wicked) the punishments of sinne, and first beginnings of Hell torments: but rather when wee are thus iudged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we might escape this hellish condemnation. They will not hurt vs in the day of death, but by being inured to suffer them, death becommeth much more tolerable, and we bid it welcome with far greater cheerefulnesse; because wee know that it will put an end vnto all these earthly miseries. Neither will they cause any euill vnto vs in the day of iudgement, seeing then we must answere for the euill which wee haue done, and not for the euill which we haue suffered: but contrariwise if wee haue borne these afflictions with patience, and profited in grace by these corrections; then shall wee receiue the crowne of our patience and for our short and momentany afflictions, a farre most excellent and eternall waight of glory. Yea so farre are they from plunging vs into these intolerable and euerlasting euils, that they do not subiect vs to the greatest of those miseries which this life affordeth, for God sendeth them to trie vs, and not to destroy vs, that they may purifie vs, and not bring vs to vtter perdition; for (as hath beene shewed) hee suffereth vs not to be tempted aboue our power, but still giueth a good issue vnto the tentation; and though he cast vs into this fiery furnace of afflictions, yet euen when (like the bush appearing to Moses) wee seeme to burne, we are not consumed: though he bring vs into many miseries, yet he doth not suffer vs to perish in them. For though great bee the troubles of the righteous, yet the Lord deliuereth him out of all; though for a time hee seeme to embondage them to afflictions, yet at last, the Lord redeemeth the soules of his Seruants, and none that trusteth in him shall perish. Though he seemeth to giue them ouer to the cruelty of their enemies, yet he so continually protecteth and watcheth ouer them with his power and prouidence, that they may alwayes say with the Church, They haue oftentimes afflicted me from my youth but they could

1. Cor. 11.32.

Num. 14.

Exod. 3.2.

Psal. 34.19.

Verse 22.

Psal. 129.2.

could not preuaile against mee. The plowers haue plowed vpon my back, and made long furrowes: but the righteous Lord hath cut the cords of the wicked. And with the Apostle Paul; wee are afflicted on every side, yet are we not in distresse; in powertie, but not ouercome of powertie; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast downe, but wee perish not. For though we be weake in our selues, yet are wee strengthened with the power of Gods might; though wee are faint and feeble, and our enemies mighty and many, yet being built vpon Christ the Rocke of our saluation, the gates and power of Hell shall not preuaile against vs.

And thus it appeareth that the afflictions of the faithfull doe not hurt them, especially in those things which are chiefly pernicious: but I may adde further, that it much hurteth them, not to be thus afflicted; that it is a miserable thing neuer to haue beene in misery; and a great vnhappinesse to haue alwayes enjoyed wordly happinesse. For want of correction maketh vs to become, (like cockred children) contemptuous towards our heauenly Father, forgetfull of his mercies, negligent in all duties which we owe vnto him, dissolute and licentious in all our courses, secure in wickednesse, and so wanton in following our owne wils, that wee are ready to be displeased, because nothing displeaseth vs, and to grow foolishly discontented, because wee haue no cause of discontentment. To which purpose one saith well, that Impunity is the Mother of Security, and Negligence; the Step-mother of Vertue, the poyson of Religion, and Moath of Holinesse. For such is the corruption of our nature, that we neuer come to good, if wee haue free leaue to be as bad as we will; neither is the bare commandement of our heauenly Father enough to make vs yeeld simple obedience, vnlesse it be strengthened and made powerfull in our minds, both by rewards and punishments. And although vertue and goodnesse bee in themselues so louely and beautifull, that they are most worthy of entertainment, though they should come alone, hauing no other to solicite for them: yet are we so carnally pore-blind and owle-sighted, and so wholy wedded to the things of this life, that we are not willing to admit them, vnlesse wee haue the hire of some earthly reward. And so contrariwise; though sinne be in it owne nature so vgly and hatefull, that we haue great cause to abhorre it, and flee such loathsome company, though nothing should discommend it, but its owne deformity; yet doth our carnall appetite so transport vs, that like filthy Swine we would take delight to wallow our selues in this loathsome puddle, if wee were not beaten out of it, with these rods of correction, and made to forsake it with sense of paine.

CHAP. XVI.

That God aduanceth the good of the faithfull by their afflictions, and first as they are trials of their spirituall graces.

1. Sect. 1. That God in our afflictions aymeth at our good.

BVt if this be not sufficient to make vs beare our afflictions with patience and comfort, because in them God neither intendeth vs any harme, nor in effect bringeth by these euils any euill vpon vs, either in this life or the life to come: Let vs now further consider that in all our crosses he aymeth at, and accordingly doth by them powerfully effect our good, being of such infinite wisdome, power, and goodnesse, that he can bring sweetnesse out of this gall, blessings out of these curses, and wholsome nourishment out of these deadly poysons. So the Apostle telleth vs, that all things (and namely afflictions of which he there especially intreateth) worke together for the best vnto them that loue God, euen to them that are called of his purpose; Rom. 8. 28. and else-where he saith, that the Lord giueth (not only a harmelesse, but also) a good issue to all our tentations. Thus the Lord himselfe affirmeth, that he brought the Israelites into the Wilderneſse, where they indured much affliction, to humble them, and proue them, that hee might doe them good at their latter end. Deut. 8. 16. And the Church in the middest of her greatest calamities out of her own feeling and experience saith, that it is good for a man that hee beare the yoke from his youth. Lam. 3. 27. And Dauid for his owne particular saith; It is good for me that I haue beene afflicted, that I might learne thy statutes. Psal. 119. 71. Yea, not only doth the Lord alwayes aduance by afflictions the spirituall and euerlasting good of the faithfull, but sometimes also turneth them to their greater benefit euen in the things of this life; as wee may see in the example of Ioseph, who was sold as a slaue that he might be made a great Commander, and lost his patrimony at home, that he might receiue a much more large inheritance in a strange Country; and therefore he professeth that when his Brethren intended euil against him, God disposed it to the good, not of himselfe alone, but of many others. Gen. 50. 20. And thus also Iob by his afflictions was not only assured of heauenly glory; but also got endlesse fame on earth, and was not alone enriched much more with Gods spirituall graces, but also had a two-fold increase in his worldly estate. Neither ought this to seeme strange, that God through his infinite wisdome and power, should bee able to bring happinesse out of misery, comfort out of crosses, and so much good out of these afflictions, which both to the flesh and the world do seeme so euill; seeing it is a familiar course with earthly Physitions, by medicines to make men weaker, that they may recouer strength, strength, and sicker for the present, that they may be more healthy euer after; and with Surgeons to cut, lanch, seare and torment their Patients with torturing corrasiues, that they may cure their wounds, and giue them perfect ease for the time to come.

9. Sect. 2. That our afflictions are sometimes tryals of Gods graces, & not chastisements for our sins, in respect of their maine and chiefe end.

But because the knowing and acknowledging of this point is the chiefe fountaine of all true comfort and consolation, and the want of this assurance is the cause of all impatience, murmuring, and complayning; I will the more largely insist vpon it; and will plainly proue, and by cleere euidence of truth demonstrate, that in all out afflictions and chastisements, the Lord both intendeth our good, and also doth accordingly by his wisdome, power & prouidence, effect and bring it to passe. To which purpose let vs consider, that God by our afflictions intendeth, and powerfully worketh our good, both in respect of this life and the life to come. In this life wee haue much good by our afflictions whether we consider them as tryals, or as fatherly chastisements and corrections. Concerning the former we are to know, that the afflictions which wee suffer are not alwayes chastisements for our sinnes, if wee respect Gods mayne end at which he aymeth in inflicting them, but sometimes gracious tryals wherewith he trieth and tempteth vs for his owne glory and our good. And this may appeare both by testimonies of Scriptures and by examples: For thus the Lord saith, that he led his people forty yeeres in the wildernes, for to humble them and proue them, to know what was in their heart, whether they would keepe his Commandements or no. So speaking of the remaynder of his people, whom hee did not vtterly cut off in iudgement, he saith by the Prophet Zachary: I will bring that third part through the fire, and will fine them as siluer is fined, and will try them as gold is tried. And the Apostle Peter comforting the faithfull in their afflictions, would not haue them astonished and dismayed with them; for though they were hot and fiery, yet they were but tryals to proue, and in prouing to purifie them, that when they came to the touchstone, they might also be approued and allowed. Deerely beloued (saith hee) thinke it not strange concerning the fiery tryall, which is among you to proue you, as though some strange thing were come vnto you: but reioyce, in as much as yee are partakers of Christs sufferings, that when his glory shall appeare, yee may be glad and reioyce. So the Authour of the booke of Wisedome speaking of the afflictions of the faithfull saith, that God proued them, and found them worthy for himselfe, as gold in the furnace hath he tryed them, and receiued them as a burnt offering. And of this wee haue many examples in the Scriptures: For thus the Lord exercising Abraham with that great affliction of offering vp his owne Sonne euen his Isaac, so deerely beloued, and the ioy of his heart, is said herein not to haue corrected Abraham for his sins, but only to haue proued him, that his faith and obedience might be manifested and approued, to the glory of him who gaue them, to his owne comfort who had receiued them, and that he might be a notable example vnto all the faithfull who were to follow him. Thus the Lord tryed Iob that by his afflictions, his faith, affiance and patience might bee manifested, and that it might appeare to bee a slander, which Sathan laid to his charge; namely, that hee serued God for rewards, and not for loue: to which purpose Iob himselfe saith, God knoweth my way and tryeth mee, and I shall come forth like the gold. Thus also sometimes was Dauid tryed, not for the chastisement of his sinne, but that his innocency and righteousnesse, faith and holinesse, might be more manifest. Thou hast proued (saith he) and visited my heart in the night; thou hast tryed me, and foundest nothing; for I was purposed that my mouth should not offend. So the whole Church speaking of her afflictions saith, Thou O God hast proued vs, and hast tryed vs as siluer is tryed. Thou hast brought vs into the snare and laid a straite chaine vpon our loynes. But most plainly doth this appeare in the example of our Sauiour, who being free from sin, was notwithstanding tempted and tryed by Satan and the World, that his heauenly and diuine vertues, and the infinite wisedome, power and goodnesse of his holy nature might appeare.

Now thus the Lord tryeth the faithfull by crosses and afflictions, not because hee himselfe is ignorant of their estate and condition, and needeth these tryals and experiments, that hee may come to a more perfect knowledge of them; for, as the Scriptures teach vs, He knoweth all things, and there is nothing hid from him, hee searcheth our hearts and reines, and vnderstandeth our thoughts long before we thinke them. Yea, as the Apostle saith, there is not any creature which is not manifest in his sight, but all things are naked and open vnto the eyes of him, with whom we haue to doe: But God is said, after the manner of men, by these tryals and afflictions to know vs, when by them hee discouereth and maketh knowne, both vnto our selues and others, either his hidden graces, or our secret infirmities, of which before we were ignorant, or not so well assured. And thus hee sayth vnto Abraham, now I know that thou fearest God, seeing for my sake thou hast not spared thine only Sonne; that is, by this tryall I haue made known and discouered thy faith and obedience, that I may haue the glory, thou the comfort, and others the benefit of thine example. For otherwise, God himselfe knoweth all before he tryeth them; & therefore

Deut. 8. 2.
Zach. 13. 9.
1. Pet. 4. 12, 13.
Wisd. 3. 5, 6.
Gen. 22. 12.
Iob 1. 9, 10.
Chap. 23. 10.
Psal. 17. 3.
Psal. 139. 1, 5.
Matth. 4. 1.
9. Sect. That God tryeth vs not to better his knowledge but to make knowne to our selues and others.
Iob 1. 21.
Ier. 17. 10.
Heb. 4. 13.
Gen. 22. 12.

fore Iob placeth knowledge first, and tryall after: Hee knoweth my way, and tryeth mee, and I shall come forth like the Gold. And this tryall of the faithfull by afflictions is most necessary, for the rectifying, both of their owne and others judgements in the true vnderstanding of their estate and condition. For either wee are so blinded with naturall pride and selfe-loue, that wee ouer-weene our graces and good parts, thinking that we are strong, when wee are weake and feeble, constant and couragious, when as wee are cowardly and faint-hearted; inuincible and fully assured in our faith & affiance, and that our patience is come to such perfection, that we can with ioy and contendnesse beare all, which God sendeth; when as we are full of doubting and infidelity, diffidence and distrust, impatience, murmuring and repining: like the Angell of the Church of Laodicea, who thought himselfe, rich and increased in goods, and needed nothing, when as hee was wretched and miserable, poore, blind and naked; or like the Apostle Peter, who imagined that he was so furnished with faith, courage and loue towards Christ, that though all the World should deny and forsake him, yet hee would not; whereas he was so feeble, infirme and faint-hearted, that he was ready before any tohet to make this Apostasie in his outward profession: or contrariwise, when we are dejected with the sight of our naturall infirmities, wee are ready to make our estate desperate, to thinke that wee are destitute of all grace and vnable to stand in the least tentation. And therefore the Lord bringeth vs into these tryals, that we may come to a true estimate of that which is in vs, and neither ouer-weene and magnifie our gifts and good parts, to be therby puffed vp in pride, through a conceit of our owne excellency; nor too much vilifie and vnder-value the gifts and graces which we haue receiued of him, and so rob him of that glory and prayse which is due vnto him. So that as one saith of Christs righteous judgements, so may I say of his tryals, that hee doth by them search and examine vs, not so much that hee may know how to judge iustly, as that man himselfe may know that he is iustly iudged, his owne heart and conscience approuing his righteous sentence, according to that which is written: Their consciences also bearing witnesse, and their thoughts accusing one another or excusing: for so in like manner God tryeth vs, not that he may know vs, but that wee may know our selues, and may rightly conceiue both of his graces and our owne infirmities; that our own weaknesse may humble vs, and his strength shining therein so much the more, when we are tryed, may moue vs with greater ardency of affection to prayse and magnifie him. And this knowledge of our selues, arising from our afflictions is so profitable, that euen the Heathen Philosopher pronounceth him miserable who had neuer beene in misery, because passing his life without an aduersary, no man could know, no not he himselfe, what was in him: for that we may attaine vnto this knowledge, it is needfull that we haue some experience what wee are able to doe, and this experience is not learned, vnlesse we haue been tryed; In which respect magnanimous spirits rejoyce no lesse in their afflictions, than valiant Souldiers do in the warres.

Miserum te iudico quod nunquam fuisti miser, transisti sine aduersario vitam. Nemo scit quid potuerit; ne tu quidem ipse, &c. Senec. de prouid. cap. 4.

So also the Lord by these tryals doth make vs knowne vnto others, either discouering by them our graces or infirmities: For nothing is more common than to erre grosly in our judgements, whilest wee censure others vertues and good parts, wee being easily deceiued, either by their outward shewes, because our weake and dull sight cannot pierce their secrets and inward parts; or by our owne affections, according as we ouer-much like, or dislike the parties of whom wee judge. And thus doe we judge some to haue little or none of Gods sauing graces, because they make no glorious shew in their outward profession, that in truth doe much exceed others, who by externall flourishes and formalities, haue not only drawn from vs excessiue prayses, but brought vs into a kind of admiration of their vertue and excellency. Thus wee judge some who are in their nature and disposition mild and gentle, to haue little or no zeale of Gods glory, or of the good of his Church; whereas herein they farre exceed others, whom, being naturally hot and violent in their passions and affections, wee admire as most feruent and zealous; though when they are brought to the tryall, their naturall affections and passions which gaue so faire a blaze quickly going out (as not induring long the heate of this fiery furnace because they are but blazing straw, or crackling thornes, which are no sooner kindled than extinguished) doe leaue them scarce luke-warme in their chiefest heate. So we vnder-valew some as cowardly, faint-hearted, and vnable to beare any thing for the name of Christ, because they are of a still and quiet disposition, yea it may be timorous, in respect of that sense which they haue of their owne naturall frailty and weaknesse, who when they come to the fiery tryall, doe proue more constant and couragious than others, who by their great brags and confident speeches, haue possessed vs with an opinion of their vndaunted magnanimity, and immoueable constancy. Finally, we are apt to judge some destitute of all patience, because in their naturall disposition they are inclined to anger and choller; when as comming to this touch-stone of tryall, they beare with much more meeknesse and contentednesse all their crosses and calamities, than others whose vntryed patience we haue prayſed and extolled, whereas indeed they had neuer the true grace of patience, but ſome naturall mildneſſe and quietneſſe, which though it made a glittering and golden ſhew, yet (like droſſie braſſe) it flieth all into fitters, when it is brought to be tryed vpon this anuile of afflictions. And therefore, that falſe ſhewes and naturall ſhadowes, may not rob his ſubſtantiall vertues and ſauing graces of their due eſteeme and deſerued commendation, God bringeth all to the touch-ſtone, and by putting all into the fiery furnace of tribulation, hee maketh vs eaſily to diſcerne, his true golden gifts, from the counterfeit Copper, and impure droſſe of our naturall faculties & abilities, which through our ignorance wee could neuer diſtinguiſh the one from the other.

9. Sect. 4. That God by our afflictions maketh vs better knowne vnto others.

Q. Seſſ. 5. That God tryeth vs by afflictions, whether wee are true Chriſtians indued with ſauing graces, or no.

Now the Lord thus tryeth vs with afflictions, firſt, to make it knowne, whether wee are true and ſound Chriſtians or no, indued with his ſanctifying and ſauing graces; or whether wee deceiue both our ſelues and others with ſhewes and ſhadowes only: and ſecondly, if we be ſincere Profeſſors of Religion, he tryeth hereby, how much we haue profited, what progreſſe we haue made, and how rich wee are growne in theſe ſpirituall treaſures. Concerning the former, our Sauiour hath taught vs in the Parable, that there are ſome hearers like vnto the ſtony ground, who receiue the ſeed of the Word with joy, and bring forth a faire green blade of an outward profeſſion, but yet hauing no root in themſelues they endure but for a ſeaſon, and when the hot Sunne of affliction and perſecution ariſeth and ſhineth vpon them, they wither and fall away. And therefore that theſe time-ſeruing Hypocrites may be knowne and diſcerned from true Profeſſors and ſincere Chriſtians, hee cauſeth this Sunne of tribulation to ariſe, that theſe may be tryed and approued, and they diſcouered and rejected. Wee all make profeſſion that we are the children of God, though many in truth remayne ſtill the ſeruants of ſinne and ſlaues of Sathan; and therefore the Lord, like the Eagle, taketh all his yong Eagles, after that hee hath for a time fed and nouriſhed them in the neſt of the Church, and maketh them to looke vpon the piercing beames of this Sunne of affliction; that he may diſcouer and ſeuer the baſtard brood whoſe weak ſight indureth not this blazing brightneſſe, from thoſe who being true bred are able to behold it with vndazeled eyes. We profeſſe our ſelues to be Gold fit for Gods treaſury, and pure Corne meete for the Graners of eternall Bleſſednes: and yet there is among vs more Droſſe than Gold, and more Chaffe than Wheat: and therefore the Lord caſteth vs into the fiery furnace of affliction, that the pure Metall may be tryed, and in tryall purified, and the droſſie ſubſtance may be ſeuered, and in the ſeparation burned and conſumed: and fanneth and winnoweth vs with the ſtrong winde of tribulation, that the Chaffe may be blowne away, and the pure Corne remayne for his owne vſe. We profeſſe our ſelues trees well planted by Gods owne hand in his Garden of grace, and that we are houſes fit for his owne dwelling, which haue a good ground and ſure foundation, euen the Rocke Ieſus Chriſt: whereas in truth there are many plants of the Deuils ſetting, which haue no other hold, but the weake and ſhort roots of carnall ends and worldly reſpects: which are there planted by Sathan, to hinder the growth, to ſucke away the nouriſhment, and to ſhade and annoy, diſorder and diſgrace thoſe fruitful and choice trees of Gods owne graſting; and many houſes which are not built vpon the Rocke Chriſt, but vpon the ſands of humane inuentions and traditions, vpon the examples of their Superiours, or their owne good meaning and vngrounded ſuperſtition: and therefore the Lord cauſeth the winds to blow, and the tempeſtuous ſtormes of tryals and troubles to ariſe; that his owne trees may be approued, and take the more deepe rooting, by how much the more they are toſſed and ſhaken; and that thoſe plants of Sathans ſetting may be ouerturned and rooted vp; and maketh theſe boyſterous blaſts of trouble to blow, and theſe billowes of tentations to beate vpon theſe buildings, that the Temples of his owne erecting, for the habitation of his holy Spirit, may by their ſtanding in all theſe ſtormes, approue the skill of the workmaſter and the excellency of the work, and that theſe chappels of the Deuill, which being gilt with hypocriſie, make no leſſe glorious a ſhew; may be ouer-turned and vtterly ruinated, hauing no other foundation but the ſandy reſpects of worldly vanities, which faile and ſinke when theſe waues of affliction doe beat vpon them. Finally, wee profeſſe our ſelues to be ſouldiers in the Church Militant fighting vnder the Standard of the Lord of Hoſts, and we haue in our Baptiſme (as it were) taken our oath, receiued the preſſe-money, and taken vpon vs the colours and cogniſance of our great Commander and chiefe Captaine Ieſus Chriſt: And therefore the Lord ſuffereth Sathan and the World to aſſault vs with afflictions and perſecution, to try vs whether we be Traytours, who vpon the firſt encounter will joyne with the enemy, or true-hearted Souldiers, who will liue and die in our Lords quarrell, whether we be ſuch cowards and daſtards as will preſently yeeld at the firſt on-ſet, though before wee haue made many brags of our ſtrength and valour: or of ſuch courageous and magnanimous ſpirits, as will not flie back one foote to ſaue our liues. And thus our Sauiour tryed the yong man in the Goſpell, who though hee ſeemed

Mark 10.

at

at the first sight, a great worthy, of vndanted courage, yet when our Sauiour did but speak of those two enemies, pouerty and the crosse, at the very naming of them he was discomfited and did run away.

And as we are thus tried with afflictions whether we be true christians and indued with any grace or no; so also thereby hee sheweth what progresse wee haue made in christianity, and vnto what measure of grace we haue attained. For as when wee are winnowed with the wind of afflictions euery small blast is sufficient to separate and driue away the chaffe from the Wheat; so when a stronger gale bloweth, there is a second diuision made; for howsoeuer the weaker and stronger Christians remayne together in the same Church and communion, (as it were) in the same floore and heape, yet when any strong blast of tentation bloweth, those that are weaker in grace like the lighter Corne, shake, stagger and flie somewhat backe, whereas the stronger are not moued, but keepe their place, like the purer Wheate and waightier Graine, with great constancy and vndaunted courage. And thus doth the Lord try our faith, and by these afflictions shew vs vnto what degree and measure of assurance we haue attained; for when it is weake and but of small growth, though wee imagine with Peter, that wee can walke vnto Christ vpon the deep waters, yet if but a small waue of affliction arise and come against vs, wee are through infidelity ready to sinke and perish, if Christ did not catch hold of vs; howsoeuer in selfe confidence and conceit wee are ready to boast with him, that though all the World should forsake Christ, wee will not: yet when we come to the tryall, the voice of a poore Damsell is enough to quell all our courage, and to make vs shamefully flie backe and forsake our Master. But when wee are come vnto fulnesse of perswasion, then are we ready to say with Paul, vnto those who dissuade vs from bearing the crosse which God layeth vpon vs; what doe you weeping and breaking my heart, for I am ready not only to be bound, but also to suffer death for the Name of Christ; and to professe with him in another place, that neither tribulation, nor anguish, nor persecution, nor famine, nor nakednesse, nor perill, nor sword, nor death, nor Deuill, shall be able to separate vs from the loue of God which is in Christ Iesus our Lord. So by this fiery tryall appeareth the measure of our affiance, for when it is weake, then if God withdraw from vs visible and outward meanes, and thrust vs into some danger not shewing vs an euasion, nor putting a thred into our hands which may guide vs out of this labyrinth, wee are presently dismayde, and without courage or comfort; and be ready to thinke of vnlawfull meanes for our safety or deliuerance; but when wee haue attained vnto some high degree of confidence and affiance, then can we firmely relie our selues vpon the power and prouidence of God, with comfort and assurance, as well when we are weake in secundary helpes, as when we are strong; yea, when in outward appearance we are destitute and abandoned of them, as when they guard and compasse vs about, offering vpon all occasions their aide and assistance: neither do we only confesse our confidence in God when as wee are hedged in on all sides with Gods blessings and benefits, but in our greatest miseries and extremities, in assured affiance, we are ready to cry out, with holy Iob, though hee kill mee yet will I trust in him. Iob 13.15.

Thus also doth the Lord by these afflictions make tryall of our loue. And as the tender mother sometimes withdraweth and hideth her selfe from her childe, to try how he will brooke her absence, taketh againe the things which shee had giuen him to try his loue and obedience; and vpon fit occasion correcteth him, not only to mend him of his faults, but to make an experiment of his nature, how louing he is vnto her: & if in all these tryals he approueth himselfe, bewayling her absence, patiently parting with his delights for the loue he beareth her, and increasing in loue and fondnesse after his chastisement; it doth notably inlarge her affection towards her sonne; whom she now loueth, not only out of motherly duty, but with much comfort & delight: euen so doth the Lord make tryall of our loue by withdrawing himselfe and his gifts; and by inflicting vpon vs his fatherly corrections; that our loue and obedience being approued by experience, hee may increase his fauours towards vs, and entirely loue vs with more pleasure. For to shew our affection towards him, when being in prosperity wee abound with his blessings, is no great matter; seeing we are hyred thereunto with the wages of worldly benefits, and doe therefore loue God because wee first loue our selues, not for his owne sake, but because of his gifts and rewards: but if our loue continue in its wonted heat, when as God withdraweth this fuell of earthly plenty, and we imbrace him with ardent affection, when (as it were) he stoppeth our wages, or resumeth into his hands that which formerly hee bestowed on vs: then will it plainly appeare, that we loue the giuer, better than his gifts, and that wee find cause enough in God himselfe to vnite our hearts vnto him, though all these bands of earthly blessings be broken or taken away. Yea, if the fire of affliction doe not lessen, but much intend and increase the heat of this our loue, and no danger seeme difficult into which God thrusteth vs, no burthen heauy which hee layeth vpon vs; if (as it fared with Iacob, being in loue with Rachel) many yeeres miseries doe seeme but a few dayes, because wee suffer them for his sake; yea, if we are glad being assaulted with these enemies, to indure many wounds, to receiue many foyles, and sustain much griefe and labour, that by these tryals wee may shew our affection, and that loues triumph may be more glorious, after it hath obtained victory ouer so great forces; then are our hearts throughly warmed with this heauenly flame, and our loue is strong, yea, (as the Wise man speaketh) stronger than death, seeing these waters of worldly miseries cannot quench it, nor these floods of afflictions coole or drowne it. And as the Lord by these afflictions sheweth how great the measure of our loue is towards him, so because the loue of him and the World are quite contrary, he doth by the same means discouer, how much wee haue profited in the contempt of the World, and are weaned in our affections from doting vpon it. For as the graine of Corne which is full and ripe, is no sooner touched with the flayle, but it presently flieth from the straw and empty eare; and if it bee small and light is not beaten out, vnlesse it be with much more difficulty; but if it be altogether empty and vnripe, it cannot with much threshing be seuered, but remayneth still in the straw, and is cast out or burnt with it: so those who adhere vnto worldly delights like the Corne to the chaffe and eare, if they be full of grace and ripe in godlinesse, are with the least touch of this flayle of afflictions seuered from the loue of the World; and being vnited in their heart and affection vnto God, they flie vnto him; whereas if hauing begun to imbrace vertue and holinesse, they haue made as yet but small progresse, they are not weaned from these worldly vanities except they be much beaten with many crosses and calamities; but if they bee quite empty of all grace and goodnesse, then doe they in their heart and affections sticke so inseparably fast vnto the things of this life, that though they be neuer so much beaten with afflictions and tribulations, yet they cannot be disioyned and parted, and so are cast out and rejected of God, perishing together with their transitory vanities, because they will not be diuided from them. Finally, God by these afflictions doth try the measure of our patience, obedience and humility; for where there is no passion and suffering, there is no place for patience; where there is no difficulty, danger or burthen to be vndergone, there is no tryall of obedience; and when Gods will doth not crosse ours, euery man can shew humility and submission; but then our patience is manifested and magnified, when being vnder heauy crosses and calamities, we beare them with meeknesse and cheerefulnesse, without any murmuring and repining; then are wee truly obedient, when with the Apostle, wee can serue the Lord with all modestie, and with many teares and tentations, in respect of the miseries which accompany our seruice, and the dangers which attend vpon it; and (as else-where he saith) when wee can hold on a constant course in godlinesse and righteousnesse, and in all things approue our selues as the seruants of God. In much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in prisons, in tumults, in labours, by watchings, by fastings, &c. by honour and dishonour, by euill report and good report, &c. then is our humility shewed and approued, when in our greatest distresse and danger, wee can say with Dauid, Behold, here am I, let him doe to mee as seemeth good in his eyes, and with our Sauiour Christ, not my will but thine be done. In a word, all sanctifying and sauing graces, both in their truth and measure, are then much better tryed and knowne, in the time of trouble and affliction, when they are enfolded and wrapped vp in the rich furniture of plenty and abundance. For as the starres doe not appeare in the day time; but shine most brightly in the darkest night; so these glorious stars of Gods sauing graces, which were hardly discerned in the day of prosperity and worldly happinesse, doe shine cleerely, and (as it were) in their full strength, in the darke night of troubles and afflictions. And as in Masteries, men healthfull, strong, and of good habitude and proportion of limbs, doe not plainly appeare so to be, when hauing their garments on, they come marching in all their brauery: but when they haue stript themselues, and appeare naked on the Theater, then are the beholders most rapt with admiration, when nothing shadoweth or hideth the excellent proportion and strong making of all their parts and limbs: euen so the inward graces and good parts of a Christian, are not so well discerned, when the ornaments of prosperity, the riches, honours and delights of this life doe shade and couer them, but when they are stript of all, and are with Iob brought to the Theater to contend and striue with the Aduersaries of our saluation, that they obtayning the victory, may be crowned with the Garland of glory and happinesse; then all veiles and shadowes being taken away, the gifts and graces receiued from God doe appeare in their naked beauty, and then are the beholders rauished, when they view their worth and excellency; which were neither discerned nor regarded whilest they were hid and couered.

9. Sect. 7. That God by our afflictions maketh tryall of the measure of our loue, patience, humility, and obedience.

And thus the Lord tryeth, and by tryall discouereth, both his gifts and the measure of them; chiefly and principally for his owne glory from whom wee haue receiued them: for as the art of the Ship-wright appeareth when the ship brooketh all weathers, continueth firme and stroog in all stormes and tem-

Cant. 8. 6, 7.

Chrysost. Matth. cap. 3. Homil. 8.

Acts 20. 19.

2. Cor. 6. 4.

2. Sam. 15. 26.

Mark 14. 36.

1. Sect. 8. That God tryeth vs principally for his own glory and in the next place for the aduancing tempests, and sayleth well with all windes and in euery Sea; and as the cutlers and armorours skill is made manifest, not whilest the sword hangeth by the side in a velvet scabberd; or whilest the armour is cleane kept and well oiled in the armorie; but when the one is tryed in fight, or by smiting the anuile or barre of iron; and the other in the field with the caliuer or musket shot: so these workes of Gods Spirit, these sanctifying and saluing graces, doe then most commend their workemaster, when they come to be tryed in the sea of miseries, and with these bullets of tentation; for if they then hould out, and neither leake nor sinke, and being neither peirced, nor much battered, doe preserue vs from all outward violence in this combate against our spirituall enemies, then the wisedome and skill, power and bountie of God, who both made and gaue them, doth clearely shine and manifestly appeare. And as the Lord the donor of these gifts and graces is glorified in the tryall of them, so wee the owners, comming by these meanes to the knowledge and sight of them, haue in our selues much more joy and comfort, and are more highly valued and esteemed in others iudgements, when these rich treasures and vnualuable Iewels of Gods saving graces are discouered vnto them: which if they were not thus tryed would be obscured, and lye hid both to them and vs. To this purpose one saith, that to be alwayes in a prosperous estate: and to passe all a mans time without any vexation of mind, is to remaine ignorant of the one halfe of nature and humane affaires: thou mayest be a man of magnanimous Spirit, but how shall I know it, if thou neuer haue occasion to shew thy vertue? thou commest into the Theater to striue for masteries: but there commeth no aduersarie to contend with thee, thou maist well haue the prize, but not the victorie. And againe; how shall I know with what patience thou canst beare pouertie, if thou doest alwayes abound in riches? how shall I discerne what heart and courage thou hast to indure shame, infamie, and popular hatred, if thou wax old in vulgar applauses, and the streame of their fauours flow vnto thy graue? how shall I know with what constancie and contentednesse thou couldest sustaine the losse of thy Children, if all, which haue beene borne vnto thee, are still in thy sight? well may I heare thee whilest thou art comforting others: but then onely I truely see and discerne thee, when thou giuest comfort vnto thy selfe, and commandest thy griefes to auoide thy presence. He that would know the skill of the Pilote must not looke on him lying quietly on his bed in a safe port: nor saying in a faire Sea, with a prosperous wind: but when he is in the middest of syrts and sands, tossed and indangered with boysterous stormes and cruell tempests, then to quit his ship and selfe out of these perils, and to bring it safe into the wished hauen, argueth the greatnesse of his skill, and gaineth him the reputation of a cunning mariner. The prowesse, fortitude, and vndaunted courage of a Souldier is not discerned whilest hee securely resteth in the garrison without feare of foe: but in the fight and skirmish, when as he is in the throng of enemies, beset with dangers; and (as one saith) his strength is more approued, who fighting is not vanquished; than his, who is not at all assaulted: and whereas vntried valour is very doubtfull and questionable, that fortitude is most assured which ouercommeth in all incounters. So the sweet odour of the precious oyntment, whilest it is kept in the glasse, safe and close, is scarcely sented: but being stirred and powred out, it perfumeth all the roome, and is highly commended of all that haue the benefit of this fragrant smell. The gold is accounted (of those who judge by outward appearance) base and of small worth, whilest it lyeth in the oare, but when it is purified in the fierie furnace, and tried by the touchstone, then is it valued and esteemed. And therefore the Lord bringeth vs into a Sea of miseries, and tosseth vs with the tempest of tentations, that by well acquitting our selues in these perils, our skill, wherewith he hath indued vs, may be manifest and approued. Hee suffereth vs not in this Christian Warfare to lye at ease in garrison, but bringeth vs into the field, and suffereth many and strong enemies to incounter vs; that demeaning our selues manfully in this fight, hee our graund captaine may haue the chiefe glory, and we that due approbation and prayse, which of right belongeth to our courage and fortitude. He will not let the sweete ointment of his spirituall graces to bee kept close, and so to become vnprofitable both to our selues and others, but rather battereth and breaketh these glasse, and earthen vessels of our bodies, that they may send out a sweet perfume to the great comfort of others and ioy of our owne hearts. Finally, hee will not suffer vs to lye in the oare of our earthly corruptions, but casteth vs into the fierie furnace, that being purified from our drosse, we may bee approued in the touch, and bee esteemed and prized, as well beseemeth our worth and value; according to that of the Prouerbs 1. As the fining pot for siluer, and the fornace of gold: so the Lord trieth the hearts.

Senec. in sap. non cad. iniur. lib. cap. 3.

Prou. 17. 3.

Yea the Lord thus trieth vs, not onely for the discouery of his graces to his glory and our comfort; but also of our infirmities and corruptions, for our humiliation, and others instruction. For naturally we haue an ouerweening opinion of our owne worth, an high high conceit of our owne gifts; and presume too much vpon our owne strength, and like fresh-water Souldiers wee thinke our selues, before wee come into the field, so strong and valorous, that no enemie is able to withstand vs: whereas contrariwise there oftentimes lyeth hid in vs much infirmitie and weakenesse, many imperfections, and such a huge masse of grosse corruptions, that no sooner are wee assaulted, but we presently yeeld or runne away; or if wee stand to it, we are either foiled by our enemies, or taken captiue, and led away in the fetters of sinne; shewing our impatiencie and murmuring against our graund-captaine who by his prouidence hath brought vs into this fight. Now to bee thus conceited of our abilities, is exceeding dangerous and pernicious; for it puffeth vs vp with pride, it maketh vs to rest and rely vpon the broken staffe of our owne strength, and not vpon the Lords assistance; it maketh vs negligent and cold in prayer for helpe and succour from God, and in prayses and thanksgiuing, when he hath supported vs. And therefore the Lord, to preuent these great mischiefes, bringeth vs into the field to bee incountred by our spirituall enemies; and as he sometimes strengtheneth vs with the power of his might, that hee may haue glory, and wee comfort, and incouragement by the victory: so sometimes hee leaueth vs to our weake abilities, and suffereth vs to receiue many foiles and wounds; that wee may be truely humbled in the sight of our infirmities, flee out of our selues, as wholy distrusting in our owne strength, craue his aide and assistance, and that, hauing obtained it, and with it victorie ouer our spiritual enemies, we may not rob him of his glorie by attributing any part of the prayse vnto our selues, but ascribe all the honour vnto him onely; by whose power alone wee know that we haue ouercome, seeing we finde by experience that we are in our selues so weake and impotent, that when we are left vnto our owne strength, we are in euery small tentation easily ouercome. An example whereof wee haue in Iob, who was no sooner left of God in that grieuous conflict of affliction, but he curseth the day of his birth, repineth against Gods prouidence, and is ready to vtter blasphemies against his iustice; and no sooner againe is he supported by Gods assisting Spirit, but hee is humbled in the sight of his infirmities, giueth glory to God, and easily ouercommeth all those tentations, which formerly finding him in his naturall weakenesse, did with greater ease giue him the foile. And thus also the Lord tried the people of Israel at the waters of Meribah, when as leauing them to the frowardnesse of their own disposition, they presently forgate what great things hee had done for them, and began to murmure and repine against his prouidence. And the Apostle Peter likewise was thus tried by God, that being foiled after all his bragges, with the voice of a silly Damosell, he might bee humbled in the sense of his infirmitie, boast no more of his owne strength, and that ouercomming afterward, in farre more dangerous conflicts, he might ascribe nothing to himselfe, but giue the whole glory vnto God, by whose might alone hee obtained victorie.

9. Sect. 9. That God also discouereth by afflictions our corruptions & infirmities for our humiliation.

Psal. 81. 12.

Matth. 26. 70. 71.

CHAP. XVII.

That the former consideration, to wit, that our crosses are trials of Gods graces in vs, may much comfort vs in all our afflictions.

AND thus haue I shewed that our afflictions are not alwayes chastisements for our sinnes, but sometimes gracious trials, whereby God trieth vs as Children, what and how much wee haue profited in his sauing graces, that hereby hee may be glorified, and we comforted in the manifestation of them; as also with what infirmities and corruptions wee are still stained, that wee may bee humbled in the sight thereof, and labour after more grace, and the mercifull assistance of Gods holy spirit. Now this consideration may justly moue vs to beare all our crosses and afflictions, not onely with patience and humilitie, but also with thanksgiuing and spirituall rejoycing: first, because God is glorified in the manifestation of his graces bestowed vpon vs by these trials of affliction; and nothing ought to seeme too difficult and dangerous to be attempted, nothing too grieuous and heauie to be borne or suffered, if it tend to the furthering and aduancing of his glory, which is the supreame end of all things, & the chiefe marke at which wee must aime in all that we doe or suffer. Secondly, because hereby wee may gather assurance, that we are Gods Children and of the household of faith; for the Lord tryeth and in trying purifieth vs, that wee may be vessels of glory, chosen for his owne vse, according to his word by the Prophet; Behold I haue fined thee, but not as siluer, I haue chosen thee in the furnace of affliction. So the Psalmist saith, that God will trie the righteous; but the wicked man, and he that loueth iniquitie, doth his soule hate. And therefore as they with Ahaz refuse to make triall of his mercie, goodnesse and truth of his promises, that they may rest and relie vpon him, so he will not trie them, but giueth them ouer to bee tempted and carried headlong by Satan into all euill, that when the measure of their sinne and iniquitie is full, hee

Esa. 48. 10.

Psal. 11. 5.

Esa. 7. 12.

hee may powre out vpon them the full viols of his wrath, and (as it followeth in the Psalme) may raine vpon these wicked ones snares, fire and brimstone, and stormie tempest; that this may bee the portion of their cup. And hence it is that the sonne of Syrach willeth vs, to beare with alacritie all afflictions which God layeth vpon vs, because it is a signe when wee are thus tried that wee are accepted. Whatsoeuer is brought vpon thee (saith hee) take cheerefully, and be patient when thou art changed to a low estate: For gold is tried in the fire, and acceptable men in the furnace of aduersitie. And the Apostle Iames perswadeth vs to count it exceeding ioy when wee fall into diuers tentations; because they are but the trials of our faith, which worke patience, and after it is begun, doe bring it to perfection.

Yea but how shall wee know that our afflictions are trials, and not either punishments or chastisements for our sinnes? I answere, that wee may bee assured that they are not punishments, when by them we are purified from our drosse, and shine gloriously in the sight of God and men, through the brightnesse of those sanctifying and saving graces which are manifested by them; and when wee are not ouerthrowne in the conflict, and moued by these sharpe encounters to repine and murmure against God, who hath pressed vs to this warfare, but doe shew our Christian courage, valour and magnanimous fortitude, in withstanding and ouercomming all these assaults. And further wee may know them to be trials and not chastisements, when we haue effectually profited by them, truely humbled our selues, vnfainedly repented of our sinnes, and earnestly by prayer haue sought reconciliation from God, and freedome from those afflictions, and yet notwithstanding, after all this, wee still remaine vnder the burthen without finding any ease: for howsoeuer our sinnes are the meritorious causes of all afflictions and chastisements yet wee may be assured that God doth not still correct faults already amended, but rather vseth these crosses as trials for the manifestation of his graces, to his owne glory, and our spirituall good, as hath beene shewed. But whether they bee trials of Gods gifts, or chastisements for sins, we haue no cause of impatience or excessiue sorrow, yea, rather in both respects there is great cause of joy and gladnesse. To which purpose one saith: let the righteous man rejoyce in his troubles and afflictions, because he is either proued if hee be just; or amended if hee be a sinner: But let them breake their hearts with griefe, whom the stripes of this diuine hand doe torment, but not correct and make better; let them justly feare future punishments, who haue condemned, and not profited by these present remedies of our gracious Father.

Thirdly, wee haue just cause to rejoyce in these trials, because they haue alwaies a good issue, and tend to our great profit and benefit, both in this life and the life to come: For howsoeuer, it is the end of wicked men, who are the instruments and inferiour meanes, to bring these crosses vpon vs that they may satisfie their malice and cruelty in doing vs hurt and mischiefe; and though Sathans end in setting them on, be to bring vs into these euils, that wee may sinne in ill-bearing them, or in ridding our selues out of them by wicked meanes; and so bee brought into the estate of condemnation, and passe out of these temporarie miseries into euerlasting torments: yet God doth not propound these ends vnto his trials: for hee tempteth no man with euil, as the Apostle speaketh: but hee thus trieth vs, that hee may doe vs good in the latter end (as himselfe speaketh) and that the triall of our faith being much more pretious than gold that perisheth (though it be tryed by the fire) may bee found vnto our prayse, honour and glory, at the appearing of Iesus Christ. Hee tryeth vs, that being in this tryall approued, we may receiue after our conflict and victorie the crowne of blessednesse and eternall glory. In regard whereof the Lord exhorteth the angell of the Church of Smyrna to feare none of those things which hee should suffer, because hee was but tryed with these tribulations, that continuing faithfull vnto the death, hee might bestow vpon him the crowne of life. So the authour of the Booke of Wisedome saith, that the faithfull hauing beene a little chastised shall bee greatly rewarded; for God proueth them and findeth them worthy for himselfe; as the gold in the furnace hath he tryed them, and receiued them as a burnt offering. And Iob out of his owne experience saith: Hee knoweth my way and tryeth mee, and I shall come forth like the gold. In respect of which happy issue giuen by the Lord vnto all our trials, wee haue just cause to beare them all with patience and comfort; yea with joy and thanksgiuing. For if we be not counterfeit mettall, but good gold, why should wee feare the furnace of affliction, seeing it will not consume vs like strawe or chaffe, but onely trie vs, and in trying purifie vs; that comming to the touchstone we may be approued, and so be reserued for euer in Gods treasurie of blessednesse? If we bee good grapes, why doe wee feare the presse of tribulation, which will not destroy vs, but bring vs to perfection, making vs fit wine for Gods owne vse? If wee be good wheate, why should we be grieued to come vnder the flayle or fanne, seeing it will not hurts vs, but onely seperate and cleanse vs from the straw and chaffe, that we may bee layed

Q. Sect. 3. We may bee comforted in our tryals in that they haue alwaies a good issue, and tend to our great profit.

Iam. 1. 13.

Deut. 8. 16.

1. Pet. 1. 6, 7.

Apoc. 2. 10.

Wisd. 3. 5, 6.

Iob. 23. 10.

layed vp for Gods owne store in the graners of heauenly happinesse? Finally, if wee be Gods souldiers in the Church militant, why should wee not with ioy and Christian courage skirmish with the world assaulting vs daily with troubles and afflictions, seeing by this conflict our valour is tryed, that being approued it may be crowned; and we assured of Gods continuall assistance, which will defend vs in the fight, and in the end giue vs victory? Let vs therefore leaue feare and horror, murmuring and repining, to false dissemblers and faithlesse men, to whom alone these miseries are hurtfull and dangerous. Let counterfeit and drossie Christians feare the fierie tryall, seeing in it they are sure to be consumed. Let hypocrites, which like faire greene leaues make a goodly shew, but yeeld no sweete iuyce of holinesse, feare the winepresse and vintage, because their pressing will bring no profit, but they shall bee cast away or trodden vnder foote: let the chaffe and straw feare the flayle and fanne, because being thereby separated from the good wheate, they shall bee either burnt with fire, or cast vpon the dung-hill. Let dastards and cowards, traytors and enemies, tremble and greiue, when they are incountred by afflictions, seeing in this fight they are led captiue of sinne, and afterwards for euer embondaged in the prison of Hell and destruction. As for Gods faithful ones, let them indure all these trials with patience, comfort and rejoycing; seeing they doe by exercising, manifest Gods graces, that hee may bee glorified in his gifts, and his gifts crowned in them.

Q. Sect. 4. They answered who obiect the greatnesse of their tryals, and smalnes of their strength.

Yea wilt thou say, but my afflictions are great, and my strength small: so that in my tryals I shew so many infirmities and corruptions, that hee who tryeth me will neuer approue mee. Fond man, dost thou thinke that the Gold-smith hath skill enough so to proportion the heate of the fire to the mettall, that it may bee purified and not consumed; and canst thou imagine that the Lord knoweth not how to fit his tryals to thy strength? Or if hee haue knowledge and wisedome enough, canst thou doube of his will, seeing hee hath bound himselfe by a most gracious promise, that hee will not suffer vs to bee tempted or tryed aboue our power and strength, but will giue a good issue with the tentation? Yea, but in the meane time thou art pressed with such an heauy waight, that thou bewrayest thine infirmities and corruptions. And happily it is necessary and profitable for thee so to doe, that by this tryall thou mightest come to the sight and sense of these corruptions and imperfections which before were in thee, though hidden and vnknowne; to the end, that now beholding them, thou maist be truely humbled, brought to vnfained repentance, and to an hearty indeuour in vsing all good means to be cleansed and freed from them. And thus it is necessary that the drosse of our corruptions should bee discerned, that it may bee purged away, and we purified; and that our secret diseases should bee discouered, that wee might be cured and freed from them. It may be also, that the Lord letteth thee bewray in these tryals of afflictions, thy lesser corruptions of immoderate griefe and impatiencie, to free thee from such sinnes as are much more hainous and enormous; as from pride, selfe-loue, and carnall confidence, whereby we robbe God of his glory to magnifie our selues, and our soules of all sound comfort, seeing our greatest strength being weaknes and impotencie, must needs faile vs when wee most rely vpon it. In wonderfull mercy and loue therefore doth the Lord deale with thee, if by these tryals he causeth thee to bewray thy smaller infirmities, that hee may free thee from grosser sinnes, mortifie thy hellish pride, and decke thee with that excellent ornament of humility; and taking away all selfe confidence in thine owne strength, doe cause thee with full affiance to rest vpon him, who will neuer fayle those who trust in him.

1. Cor. 10. 13.

Q. Sect. 5. That our greatest tryals should bring greatest comfort, because they are signes of greatest grace bestowed vpon vs.

Finally, wee haue just cause to beare our greatest afflictions with patience, comfort and rejoycing, if wee consider that God doth proportionate our tryals according to our strength, and the measure of grace which he hath bestowed vpon vs; for hereupon it will follow, that if our crosses bee exceeding great, then also wee abound in vertue, grace and spirituall strength; if the huge water-flouds of affliction doe arise and swell so high, that they drowne and ouerflow the high towers, and lofty turrets of humane strength; then shall our spirituall graces (like those in the Arke) arise and mount vp with them, triumphing ouer these seas of miserie with comfort and rejoycing, which ouerwhelme and drowne others, who sticke fast vnto earthly helps, with sorrow and heauinesse. Neither is it to bee imagined, that the Lord who best knoweth our strength, because hee made vs, and hath approued his infinite loue towards vs, because hee hath with so inestimable a price redeemed vs, will in trying destroy vs, or lay vpon vs a burthen which will ouerwhelme vs; yea rather wee may assure our selues, that where he hath laid the heauiest loade, there hee hath giuen the greatest strength, and where there is abundance of afflictions, there hee bestoweth abundance of patience, faith and other graces, whereby they may be inabled to beare and ouercome them. Wee see that the wise commander imployeth his souldiers, according to that opinion which hee hath of their worth and valour; and when he hath some dangerous and and hie exploit to be atchieued, he doth not make choise of fresh-water and white-liuerd souldiers, but of such as are of most magnanimous spirits and fullest of courage, valour and approued fortitude. The discreet Schoolemaster doth giue the longest and hardest lessons to bee learned, not vnto those who are of smallest capacity and dullest conceipt; but vnto his best schollars, who are of ripest wit and readiest apprehension. The skilfull armourer doth not trie common armour with musket-shot, for so he should by tryall spoile it, and with his paines loose the reputation of his cunning; but first he is assured that he hath made it high proofe, and then he tryeth it with these piercing bullets. And finally, the wise lapidary bringeth not his tender christall, or softer stones, to bee tryed by the stithy and hammer, but the hard Adamant which will rather bruise the iron and steele, than bee broken by their blowes. And therefore, if there be this wisedome and care to bee found in men, let vs certainly conclude that the Lord, infinite in wisedome and loue, doth much more fit his tryals to the strength of his Children, whose good and wel-fare hee so much tendereth, choosing out his most valarous souldiers, for the strongest incounters, his best schollars, for the hardest lessons, his choisest armours for the highest proofe, and hammering none vpon the Anuile of afflictions, but such as hee hath made of adamantine hardnesse, to beare without breaking all these blowes. Thus Abraham, the father of the faithfull, hauing attained vnto fulnesse of perswasion and assurance, was exercised with the strongest tentation euen the sacrificing of his deare Isaac with his owne hands. And Iob, the justest man vpon the Earth, and indued with greatest patience, was accordingly tryed with the greatest afflictions, and (as it were) cast into the fiery furnace by the Tyrant Sathan, being heat seauen times hotter, than for other ordinary men. Thus Dauid, a man according to Gods own heart excelling all others in piety and religion, had answerably an exceeding masse and multitude of afflictions, laide vpon him for the tryall of his graces. And the Apostle Paul, abounding in the riches of Gods spirituall gifts, and going beyond all the rest of his ranke, in care and labours for the glory of God, and good of his Church did as farre exceed them all in crosses and tryals. And as those are assaulted with the strongest forces, who haue greatest valour and fortitude bestowed vpon them; so those who are weake in Gods sauing graces, doe answerably sustaine weake incounters, as we may see in the example of the Iewes, whom God saith he had fired, but not as siluer; because hauing in them more dresse of corruption, than pure mettall of grace and vertue, they would haue beene consumed in this fiery tryall. And finally where is no grace or goodnesse, there may well bee inflicted deserued punishments of sinne, but no tryall in this conflict of afflictions. Neither may we thinke that those who are not exercised with these crosses, are more highly in Gods fauour than other men, seeing the Apostle telleth vs, that God scourgeth euery sonne whom he receiueth, and they who are exempted from these corrections, of which all are partakers, are bastards and not sonnes. Nor may we imagine that our wise Commaunder in loue spareth these men whom he neuer calleth out to the fight; but rather rejecteth & excludeth them out of his campe, the Church militant; either because hee knoweth them to be such dastardly cowards, as will flee from, or yeeld to the weakest enemies; or such rebels and traytors, as either professedly or in their hearts joyne with Sathan, and the world, against him and his holy army. And this the heathen man discerned by the light of nature; When (saith he) thou shalt see men which are good and acceptable vnto God, take paines, sweate and labour against the hill with great difficulty; and contrariwise, wicked men playing the wantons and wallowing in delights: thinke with thy selfe that euen wee are delighted in the modesty of sonnes, and in the licentiousnesse of slaues; and that they by a stricter discipline are kept in good order, whilest the audacious boldnesse of these is nourished, and then know that God taketh the same course, for hee doth not cocker him that is good, but by trying and hardning he fitteth him for himselfe.

Hebr. 12. 6.

Senec. de prouid. cap. 1.

When therefore wee are exercised with great and grieuous afflictions, let vs not murmure and repine against him that inflicted them; as though some great euill had befallen vs; but let vs beare all with patience and comfort, yea with joy and thankfulnesse: For so we may assure our selues, that as we much glorifie God by our sufferings, so by these tryals he vouchsafeth vnto vs treble honour; for first hee honoureth vs by enriching vs with his graces, and then by trying of them, whilest thereby their worth and excellency is manifested vnto all that behold vs in these conflicts. And lastly, he will honour vs by crowning his graces in vs, when as by tryall they are approued: Euen as the skilfull Armourer, first graceth his armour by good workmanship; then by bringing it to the proofe; and lastly by causing it to be employed in the Princes seruice; or as the Generall honoureth the souldier, first, by trayning him to the wars, and making him expert in all feates of chiualry, then by giuing him a place of imployment fit for his giftes and good parts; and finally by rewarding and crowning his victories, causing him to sit with himselfe in his chariot of triumph.

2. Sect. 6. That God much honoureth vs in these fiery tryals.

triumph. As therefore the valiant souldier murmureth not against his Captaine, when hauing an high opinion of his worth and magnanimous fortitude, he appointeth him to high attempts and seruices full of danger and difficulty, but accounteth himselfe much honoured, in that hee thinketh him worthy of such imployments: and contrariwise, thinking his valour and abilities vnderualued, is full of discontent, if hee should be appointed vnto base and easie seruices, which any coward or fresh-water souldier could atchieue without difficulty or danger: So, much lesse haue wee any cause of repining, when our great Commander, who best knoweth our abilities, doth imploy vs in seruices of an high nature; yea rather wee haue cause of thanksgiuing and rejoycing, seeing hee hath first honoured vs with gifts fit for these attempts, and now honoureth vs by giuing vs opportunity of employing them, and approuing them in the tryall, and will hereafter crowne vs with victorie; neither doth any of his souldiers perish in their magnanimous attempts, seeing hee protecteth them in all dangers, and neuer matcheth them with any enemy, but such as hee inableth them to ouercome. Thus also the courageous Champion, or expert and strong wrastler, thinke themselues much graced, when as fit aduersaries are matched with them, and being thus fitted prouoke them, with whom they contend, to doe their best, and vse all their skill; that so they likewise may haue the better opportunity to shew all their courage and cunning, and obtaine the greater glory and prayse, after they haue got the victory: and contrariwise, hold themselues much disparaged in their honour and esteeme, when they are called to contend with such an aduersary, as is contemptible through weaknes & want of skill; or else with such an one, as being of some abilitie, doth but dally with them; because it is a disgracefull combate and contention, where there is no grace or honour accruing vnto him who obtaineth the victory. Thus the learned scholler taketh great delight when he is posed in high and difficult questions, according to the measure of his knowledge and gifts, that hee may approue his sufficiency both to his master and fellowes: and contrariwise, thinketh himselfe wronged and disreputed, if hauing read the best Authours, hee bee examined in the first rudiments of Grammer, or in the A.b.c. And finally, thus the hardest Adamant is most commended, when it is tryed with the hammer and Anuile; but much disgraced in the esteeme of all, if hee who oweth it, will try it no otherwise than with the blow of a cudgell: And so in like manner we are much honoured by God, when hauing receiued from him many & great vertues, he doth also bring vs into great and many tryals; seeing as our vertue and strength are fitted, according to the power of our enemies which doe encounter vs; so shall our crowne bee fitted to our graces, and the glory of our crowne to the greatnesse of the victorie. But on the other side, we haue just cause of mourning and discontent, if we bee neuer exercised with any tryals, seeing it is a signe that the Lord esteemeth vs, to be at the best, such weakelings as are fit to beare nothing; or men vtterly destitute of all grace and goodnesse, and therefore cassiereth vs out of his campe the Church militant, as being vtterly vnworthy to fight his battailes, or to doe him any seruice. So one saith, that a Souldier is in all his brauery, when being in his armour hee marcheth valiantly; but is contemptible, when he idlely sitteth still, hauing no exercise for his vertue, whereby hee might bee knowne vnto himselfe or others, then hee wanteth prayses, hee wanteth rewards, and therefore those dangers are not to bee shunned as hurtfull which bring rewards with them. Yea rather, he is miserable in his felicity, who neuer was thought worthy to wrastle with miseries, by which contention honour is obtained. Yea euen the heathen man could say, that whom God loueth and approueth, them he hardneth, tryeth and exerciseth; but whom he seemeth to cocker and spare, hee reserueth them as effeminate cowards for the euils to come.

Ignominiosa indicat gladiator cum inferiore compari; & fit cum sine gloria vincat, qui sine periculo vincitur. Senec. de prouiden. lib. cap. 3.

CHAP. XVIII.

That God vseth our afflictions as an effectuall meanes to further our conuersion.

BY that which hath beene said it may plainly appeare, that God sheweth in the afflictions of the faithfull his great mercy and loue towards them, as they are tryals: Now according to my order propounded, wee are to shew, that the Lord manifesteth the like mercy and loue in these crosses, as they are fatherly chastisements and corrections; for the cleering whereof wee are to know, that in all our afflictions thus considered, the Lord intendeth and accordingly powerfully effecteth the good and benefit of his Children, and that both spirituall and also earthly. The Lord by these crosses and calamities which he sendeth, much aduanceth our spirituall good, in that hee ordinarily vseth them as powerfull helpes and meanes, for the furthering of both our effectuall calling, and sound conuersion, and also our sanctification and regeneration. For, whereas naturally Gods elect doe in their hearts and affections adhere vnto the world and the things of this life, like the good graine to the chaffe and straw; straw; and, if they were not seuered, would perish with them; the Lord by these crosses doth weane them from these earthly vanities, and with the flayle and fanne of afflictions doth make a separation betweene them, chooſing, culling, and setting apart his Elect for his owne seruice, that they may be saued, and leauing the rest like light & refuse Corn, to adhere still vnto their carnall delights, till they perish in them. Whereas (like young Prodigals) whilest wee haue the World at will, we runne away from our heauenly Father, and abuse the portion of his gifts in wanton and riotous courses, to his dishonour, and our owne vtter ruine and destruction: When wee are brought into misery and affliction, and desire, at least, to comfort and relieue our selues with the huskes and swill of worldly and carnall pleasures, but cannot haue them, then are wee brought to make a stand in our former loose courses, & begin to think of returning to our Father. And this purpose of God, in afflicting his loose and dissolute children, that hee may conuert and turne them from their wicked wayes vnto himselfe, hee doth notably set forth vnto vs in the Prophecy of Hosea: I will goe (saith hee) and returne to my place, (that is, I will withdraw all the signes and testimonies of my loue & fauour from them) till they acknowledge their fault and seeke me: In their affliction they will seeke mee diligently, the which was accordingly verified in the euent, as hee sheweth in the next wordes, where hee bringeth them in, speaking thus in their afflictions. Come and let vs returne to the Lord, for hee hath spoyled, and hee will heale vs; he hath wounded vs, and he will bind vs vp; after two dayes will he reuiue vs, and in the third day hee will rayse vs vp, and wee shall liue in his sight. So the Lord saith by the Prophet Esay, that when he had brought vpon his people Israel a common destruction for their sinnes, and had reserued and pulled out of those miseries, some few of many, like the remaynder of the Grapes after the Vintage, and of the Olives after the tree is shaken, then should a man looke to his Maker, and his eyes should haue respect to the holy one of Israel. And in this regard the Psalmist out of a spirituall Charitie towards his enemies, preferring their eternall saluation before their worldly estate, prayeth thus in their behalfe: Fill their faces with shame, that they may seeke thy Name, O Lord. For it fareth with vs as it doth with foolish children; for if our heauenly Father should continually cocker vs, and neuer crosse vs of our wils and earthly desires, wee would in wantonnesse and insolency forget and neglect him, casting his Commandements with proude contempt behind our backes; whereas when hee interminseth seuerity with loue, frownes with smiles, and chastisements with his benefits, then no sooner doth he estrange himselfe from vs abusing our liberty to licentiousnes, & his gifts to his dishonour, but we presently returne, labour to amend our former errours, and seeke his face and fauour, with the continuance or renuing of his blessings and benefits. To this purpose one saith, that God Almighty doth two wayes wound those whom hee purposeth to saue and cure; for sometimes he smiteth the flesh, and mollifieth the heart with his feare, he woundeth vs that hee may recall vs, (when wee goe astray) into the way of saluation, and outwardly afflicteth our bodies, that our soules may inwardly liue, &c. He killeth that hee may quicken them, and hurteth that he may heale them: for therefore hee inflicteth externall stripes, that hee may inwardly cure their wounds of wickednesse. And sometimes ceasing to scourge vs outwardly, he doth inwardly afflict vs in soule and spirit, correcting and crossing the hardnesse of our hearts with it owne desires, and vnruly passions; but by wounding hee healeth them, whilest piercing them with the dart of his feare, hee inlighteneth them with the vnderstanding and knowledge of the right way, &c.

Greg. Moral. lib. 6. cap. 18.

An example hereof wee haue in the Israelites of whom the Psalmist saith, that when the Lord slue them, they sought him, and they returned and enquired early after God, &c. And the Prophet Esay saith thus of them, O Lord, in trouble they haue visited thee, they haue powred out a prayer when thy chastning was vpon them. And this is vsuall to be obserued in the History of the Iudges & Kings, that when this people abounded in worldly prosperity, they forsooke the Lord and serued Idols; but when he afflicted them sharply for such Apostasie, then they were brought to a sight of their sins, they turned vnto the Lord, and repented and humbled themselues before him. Thus the Ninevites, who by their sinnes, committed in their prosperity, deserued an vniuersall destruction, when God threatned his judgements against them, turned vnto the Lord with fasting, weeping, and prayer. So Manasses, who in his flourishing estate had forsaken the Lord, when he was in tribulation prayed to the Lord his God, and humbled himselfe greatly before the God of his Fathers. And Saul, who raged against Gods Saints, when he was throwne downe to the earth and deprined of his sight, he doth in the time of his blindnes, seeke and finde the Lord, who ran away from him whilest hee had the vse of his eyes, when blinded inwardly with an ignorant zeale, he thought to approach neerest vnto him. To this purpose one saith, that God hath chosen them whom the World despiseth, because commonly when men are contemned of the World they come hereby to the sight and knowledge of themselues. Hee that left his

2. Sect. 2. The former point illustrated by examples, out of the Scriptures. Psal 78. 34, 35. Esay 26. 16.

2. Chron. 33. 12.

Acts 9. 8.

Gregor. Homil. 38. in Luc. 14.

Father,

Father, and spent his portion in riotous courses, returned vnto him when he was pinched with hunger, and if he had not hungred he had not returned, for when hee felt the want of earthly things, then he began to thinke of his spirituall losses. So when those who had Oxen, Farmes, and Wiues, refused being inuited to come to the Supper; the poore, weake, blinde, and lame became willing guests at the first call, because those who are impotent and despised in the World doe so much the more cheerefully heare the Word of God; because they haue no earthly delights to distract and hinder them. Besides, the flesh which as a notable pul-backe hindreth our conuersion and turning vnto God, whileſt weeenjoy the World at will, and prosper in our euill courses, doth giue way vnto the part regenerate, when it is pinched with crosses and afflictions, that it may by this meanes be freed from present smart, and as the restie Horse, or the refractory and sturdy Oxe, doe not only, not draw themselues, but also pull backe and hinder their yokefellow, gauling and hurting them with their struggling and striuing; but when they feele the smart of the whip, or the pricke of the goade, they goe on forward, and helpein the draught: so our flesh and vnregenerate part, doth hinder the spirituall man in all religious courses, gauling and vexing it, when it would goe forward in the wayes of godlinesse; but when it is whipped and pricked for this reluctation and backwardnesse, to bee freed from paine, it is content to yeeld to an outward reformation, to turne vnto God, and to performe that seruice vnto him, in formality and hypocrisie, which the regenerate part performeth in sincerity and truth. Yea, it selfe alone is ready to make a fained conuersion, to auoid smart and punishment, euen when there is no dram of Gods Spirit to help it forward, meerly out of selfe-loue, and not the true loue of God: as wee may see in the fained humiliation of Ahab, when he heard Gods iudgements denounced against him: how much rather therefore will these afflictions driue a man vnto God, when besides these prickes and goades in the sides of the flesh, the spirituall part doth drag him forward.

Matth. 22.

1. Kings 21. 27, 29.

Q. Self. 3. That God by afflictions seeketh and prepareth vs for the hearing of his Word.

But this will better appeare if we consider the meanes of our conuersion. The first and chiefe whereof is the sauing hearing of Gods Word, of which as the Spirit of God is the principall cause, facing hee heareth the eare, and openeth the heart, that wee may attend vnto it and receiue it; so an especiall meanes which hee vseth for the fitting and preparing of our hearts hereunto, is affliction and tribulation: for when our former Husband the world hath dealt churlishly with vs, rejected and diuorced vs from him; then are we more ready to hearken vnto the motion of Iesus Christ, when by his Ambassadours in the preaching of the Gospell, hee sueth for our loue; and the match and vnion betweene vs and him, is in a good forwardnesse, when by rough and vnkind vsage, wee are in our hearts and affections alienated from the World. And therefore the Lord, when wee doate vpon these earthly Idols, and will not be estranged from them, doth set betweene vs and them the thorny hedge of afflictions, (as he speaketh by the Prophet) that being by this forcible meanes separated from them, and prickt with tribulations, when we seek after them to renew our loue, we may at last returne vnto him our true and first Husband, because, when we serue him, our condition will be much better, than whileſt wee adhered to the World, when we heare from it nothing but threatnings, and terrours; and wee are more willing to harken vnto Gods sweet and gracious promises. And when with Elias we haue heard and seene, yea, also haue felt and had our share, in the stormy tempest of troubles, and haue beene shaken with the earthquakes of dangers, and euen scorched with the fire of affliction and tribulation, then are wee well prepared to heare the still and soft voice of the Lord, speaking comfortably vnto vs in the Ministery of the Gospell. And thus Elihu saith, that God openeth the eares of men euen by their correction; which hee had sealed: that hee might cause man to turne away from his enterprise, and that hee might hide the pride of man; and keepe backe his soule from the pit, and that his life should not passe by the sword. And againe, hee deliuereth the poore in his affliction, and openeth their eare in trouble. To which purpose one saith, that tribulation openeth the eare of the heart, which the prosperity of this World vsually shutteth, making it deafe vnto all good admonitions. Yea, not only doe afflictions further our conuersion, as they prepare and fit our eares for the hearing of the Word, but also as themselues are a reall Sermon, whereby God inuiteth vs vnto repentance; for as we heare him speaking to vs by his Ambassadours in the publike Ministery; so we may see his will in his works and iudgements, namely, how vgly and lothsome sin is vnto him, and how much hee is displeased with those that commit it.

Hos. 2. 6, 7.

1. King. 19. 11, 12.

Iob 33. 16, 17. & 36. 15.

Aurea catena Prouidentiæ operis quæ ipse huius mundi præsepia ciuitate, Gregor. Moral. lib. 18. cap. 23.

The other meanes of our conuersion is our contrition and humiliation, of which, as the chiefe cause is Gods holy Spirit, applying vnto vs the threatnings of the Law, so another principall meanes which hee vseth are crosses and afflictions. For when the Oyle of spirituall grace will not mollifie our iron and brasse hearts, then doth hee melt them and make them soft and liquid in the fiery furnace of tribulation; when as they are such stiffe and stubborne grounds, that they are not fit for the seed of the Word, then doth he breake breake vp, plough, and harrow them with crosses and afflictions, that so they may become fruitfull. And whereas naturally wee are so blinded with selfe-loue, that wee doe not see our sins, and so puffed vp with pride, that we will not cast downe our selues before God, and acknowledge and confesse them; when our eyes are anointed with this sharpe eye-salue of afflictions, we easily discerne all our former wicked courses; and when our lofty hearts are pressed downe with the waight of tribulation, then doe wee humble our selues before God, and acknowledge our sins, saying with Dauid, Behold, here I am, let him doe vnto mee as it seemeth good in his eyes. And is it not I that haue commanded to number the people? It is euen I that haue sinned, and done wickedly, &c. and with the Church in the Lamentations, It is the Lords mercies that we are not consumed. To this purpose one saith, that it is the highest degree of vertue, not to commit, but to flie sin; and the next vnto that is to repent of it, when it is committed. But vsually wee neither auoid sin when wee are tempted vnto it, nor willingly acknowledge it when we haue done amisse. And so much the more desperately is the mind of sinfull man blinded, by how much the lesse he discerneth the damage of his blindnesse. Whereof it commeth to passe through the bounteous mercy of Almighty God, that punishment attending vpon the fault, doth open the eyes of the offender, which security made blinde; so as hee could not discerne his manifold sins. For the slothfull and sluggish mind is awakened and rowsed vp with the smart of stripes; and whereas being carnally secure it lost its state of innocencie and integrity; being afflicted it considereth whither it is declining and falling.

Q. Self. 4. That God by afflictions worketh in vs contrition and humiliation.

By all which it appeareth, that afflictions sanctified by Gods holy Spirit for this end, are a most powerfull and effectuall meanes for the furthering of our conuersion; for when neither the Oyle of Gods gracious bounty will soften and supple our stony hearts; nor his Word, which is the Sword of the Spirit, pierce them; and when neither the sweet sound of his gracious promises will allure vs to obedience, nor the terrible thunder of his fearefull threatnings will restraine vs from sin: then in the last place he visiteth our iniquities with the rod, and our sinne with scourges; knowing that if our case be not vtterly desperate, wee who haue neglected his Word, will at least be reclaymed and reformed with his chastisements and corrections. And this the Lord implyeth where hee saith that Ierusalem, after that hee had dealt with her not only by his Word but by afflictions and chastisements, did notwithstanding continue in a perpetuall rebellion, and would not returne. I hearkned (saith he) and heard, but none spake aright, no man repented of his wickednesse, saying, what haue I done? euery one turned to their race, as the horse rusheth into the battell. So by the Prophet Amos he intimateth, that they were in a desperate condition, seeing they would not be reclaymed from their euill wayes, neither by his Word, nor by afflictions; for though hee had grieuously punished them with Famine, Pestilence and the Sword, yea, had ouerthrowne them as hee ouerthrew Sodome and Gomorrha, and had only reserued a remnant from the common destruction, as it were a fire-brand pluckt out of the burning; yet for all this, they had not returned vnto the Lord. The consideration whereof serueth first for the exceeding terrour of those, who doe not in their afflictions draw neerer vnto God, forsake their wicked wayes, nor any whit profit by their corrections; for this discouereth the desperatnesse of their estate, seeing if any thing would conuert and turne them vnto God, then would these afflictions and corrections; which because they doe not, therefore are they daily in danger to be giuen ouer of God as a hopelesse cure, and to haue these fatherly chastisements turned into vtter destruction and hellish punishments. The former the Lord threatneth against the people of the Iewes. Wherefore (saith hee) should you be smitten any more, seeing you fall away more and more, and the latter likewise elsewhere. The people (saith he) turneth not vnto him that smiteth them, neither doe they seeke the Lord of hosts. Therefore will the Lord cut off from Israel head and taile, branch and rush in one day. To which purpose one saith, that our present punishment, if it turn and conuert the heart of the afflicted, is the end of foregoing faultinesse, but if it doe not worke in vs the true feare of God, it is the beginning of following punishments. And therefore wee are carefully to take heed that in our afflictions we rent our hearts and turne vnto the Lord, with weeping and mourning, lest we change from bad to worse, and passe out of earthly punishments into hellish torments.

Amos 4.6.12.

Esai.1.4.9.13

Secondly, it serueth notably for the comfort and refreshing of all, who make profitable vse of their afflictions, and are moued by them to forsake their former euill courses, and to draw neere vnto God by repentance and amendment of life. For how happy may they thinke themselues in their crosses and calamities, when as God thereby doth but clip their wings, that they may not flie from him; and cast these thornes, briars and blockes in their way, that they may not goe forward in that plaine and easie passage which leadeth to destruction, but may leaue this course and returne vnto him? How much may they thinke themselues bound to their heauenly Father, if when they are going like foolish foolish children towards the pit of destruction, and ready to fall into a gulfe of dangers, he setteth these Bug-bears in the way to deterre and hinder them from going on, and to cause them to returne vnto him, in whose presence and protection they haue all their safety? And if when they are snorting in the spirituall lethargie of carnall security, which if they were let alone and left to their ease, would bring them to death and destruction, they be nipped and pinched with troubles and vexations, that so being awakened, the life of their soules may be preserued, and their health recouered. What cause is there of murmuring and complayning? yea, what cause haue wee of thanksgiuing and reioycing, if being (with Lot) loath to leaue this Sodome of sinne, we be pulled out of it with some violence, and be pricked in our sides with these goades of affliction, to hasten our speed towards Gods heauenly mountaine, where we shall be safe from the common destruction? How happy may wee thinke our selues, if the pricks of tribulation doe further our conuersion; if the thornes of affliction pricking our bodies, doe worke true compunction in our soules, and pricke our hearts and consciences with a sight and sense of sin, that so we may seeke to haue our wounds cured with the precious Balsome of our Sauiours bloud, and by feeling this temporary punishment, may amend our faults and be freed from that guiltinesse which is accompanied with euerlasting death? And how are we bound to blesse that necessitie which driueth vs vnto God, not suffering vs to goe on in such licentious courses as would in the end bring vs vnto destruction?

Bene sentibus tribulationis confusio, qui conuersis exiude est, bene pungeris si compungeris. Multi eum sentiunt pœnam, corrigunt culpam, Bern. Serm. 3.

CHAP. XIX.

That God vseth our afflictions as an effectuall meanes to preuent vs from falling into sinne, as also to mortifie and subdue our corruptions.

¶. Sect. 1. Their iourney is very euil who the Lord by afflictions doth not preuent from falling into sins which we are naturally inclined to commit them. Heb. 12. 13.

AND thus Gods loue appeareth in our afflictions, as hee vseth them for meanes of our vocation and effectuall conuersion. The like loue and mercy hee sheweth vnto vs by them, in that hee vseth them as his powerfull instruments for the furthering of our sanctification: for at this end God also aymeth in his corrections, as the Apostle witnesseth, where hee saith, that he chasteneth vs for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holinesse. And this the Lord effecteth by our afflictions, whilest he vseth them as meanes to free vs from sinne, and also to furnish vs with all sanctifying and sauing graces, whereby wee are inabled to bring forth the fruites of obedience, and to walke before him in newnesse of life. He doth by our afflictions free vs both from the outward and inward corruption of our sins, not only by preuenting them, that wee doe not entertaine or fall into them, but also by mortifying them, when wee are already tainted and infected with them. Concerning the former, wee are (through our naturall corruption) so prone vnto sinne, that if we be left vnto our owne courses, we are apt to abuse our liberty vnto licentiousnesse, to turne aside out of the path of holinesse and righteousnesse, and like vnbridled Horses to run in the wayes of wickednesse (as it were) with a full careere: and therefore the Lord in great mercy by sending afflictions, doth put a bridle into our mouthes, wherewith he raineth and pulleth vs backe, that we may not stumble and fall into sinne, and so mastereth and ruleth vs, that wee are faine to trauell in the right way, which will bring vs vnto happinesse, and cannot satisfie our carnall desires by running into the by-wayes of sinne, which would leade vs to destruction. Weare ready like wanton Oxen to leape into the forbidden pastures of carnall pleasures, because they are delightfull to our fleshly appetite; but the Lord setteth these thorny hedges of troubles and afflictions in our way to restraine vs from entring into them, and that out of meere mercy & loue, seeing howsoeuer these pastures are for the present, pleasing to corrupted nature; yet, euen now they lye open to the thunder and lightning of Gods fearefull vengeance, and for the time to come, will but fatten and fit vs for the shambles of destruction. And as they are an Hedge of Thornes to keepe vs from companying and feeding with the Buls of Basban, euen wicked Worldlings in the fields of iniquity; so also are they Hedges and Wals of defence, to preserue vs from the assaults of our spirituall enemies, and to keep them aloofe, when as otherwise they would encounter vs with their tentations. For, whereas wicked Worldlings would haunt vs with their company, and corrupt vs with their euill example, and filthy communication, if wee enioyed Worldly prosperity, and had such fulnesse of earthly things, that they might sucke from vs any profit and aduantage: these troubles and afflictions doe make them to loath our company, (as Moths doe leaue the garments that are imbittered with gall) and to flee our fellowship, seeing neither our selues, nor any thing about vs is pleasing and delightfull to their carnall appetite. And surely this is a mayne end why God afflicteth vs, not because wee haue formerly sinned, but that we may not sinne for the time to come; not to punish vs because we haue committed it, but to preuent vs, that we be not againe ouertaken by it. So Elihu Iob 33. 16, 17 faith, that God openeth the eares of men by their corrections, which he had sealed, that he might might cause man to turne away from his enterprise, and that he might hide the pride of man, and keepe backe his soule from the pit, and that his life should not passe by the sword. And thus the Lord himselfe saith, that hee would stop his peoples way with Thornes, that they might not goe on in their Idolatry, but returne vnto him. To this purpose one saith, that God fore-seeing, that some of his seruants would (if they were let alone) fall into grieuous sinnes, doth for their soules health afflict their bodies to preserue them from it; because it is more profitable for them to be weakned with diseases, that they may be saued, than to remayne still in health and be condemned: For that is pernicious health, which leadeth vs to disobedience; and that is wholsome sickneſſe, which being inflicted by God as the chastisement of our sinnes, doth bruise our stony hearts, and make them to become meeke and humble. An example whereof we haue in Ionas, who when hee intended to flye from Gods presence, with full purpose to neglect the seruice which hee had in charge to performe, was swallowed by a Whale, that so he might flie vnto God, when hee could goe no whither else, and execute his Commission with boldnesse (hauing learned that God was able to deliuer him out of the very jawes of death) the neglect whereof had beene a grieuous sinne. And thus the Lord taketh away from his children Worldly Honours, vvhen hee seeth that they would by them bee puft vp with pride, and become insolent and vainglorious: thus hee depriueth them of riches, when they would be vnto them Thornes, to choake and hinder the growth of his heauenly graces, or prouocations, and incitements vnto sinne, or the meanes and instruments to further them in wicked actions, or like Camels bunches hinder them from entring into the strait gate, which leadeth vnto happinesse. Thus he taketh from vs parents, children, and deare friends, when as (if wee should still enjoy them) wee would make them our Idols, setting our hearts vpon, louing, or trusting in them, more than in God himselfe. So he depriueth vs of our earthly pleasures, vvhen he seeth that we would preferre them before heauenly joyes; and causeth vs to find many troubles, crosses and afflictions in the World, because he knoweth, that if it should smile and fawne vpon vs, we would make a Paradise of the place of our pilgrimage, set our hearts and affections vpon these transitory trifles, and neuer care to trauell in the way of holinesse and righteousnes which leadeth to our heauenly Country. As therefore the vvise and skilfull Physician, doth not only apply medicines for the curing of diseases, when men are falne into them, and restoratiues to repaire their decayed strength, and to recouer their health; but also in time of infection, and when they see some distemper in them through the abounding of humours, do giue wholesome preseruatiues, and preuenting purges, to maintaine health, and to driue away the approaching disease: so doth our heauenly Physician vse these poysons of afflictions, not only to recouer and cure vs of the diseases of sinne, when vvee are falne into them; but also to purge away our inward corruptions, and so to preuent these deadly sicknesses of the soule, before they haue seased vpon vs, and to free vs from all causes and occasions which would otherwise bring vs into this dangerous condition. For, as if vvee be left vnto our selues, and be neither terrified from sinne by sense of our owne chastisements, nor the terrour of others punishments, the vnregenerate part vvill grow so carnally secure, and proudly insolent, that it vvill tempt, yea, pull and drag vs into much vvickednesse (to which purpose the Wise man saith of professed Worldlings; that because sentence against an euill worke is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the children of men is fully set in them to doe euill.) So when wee feele the smart of our former sinnes, and vvhen our flesh loseth all the pleasure it hath taken in these sweet meates, by the after-taste of these sharpe and bitter sawces of afflictions, which it is forced to feed vpon, vvhether it vvill or no, then it is lesse licorous for the time to come, or at least doth not vvith that boldnesse giue way to its carnal appetite, in swallowing these sinfull delicates, when it knoweth that they will vpbraide it, with such a loathsome after-relish of smart and punishment. For as the spirituall man feareth only spirituall punishments, and contemneth carnall; as namely, the curse of the Law, the wrath of God, the last Iudgment, and Hell torments; but not Famine, Sword, the Rack or Gibbet; So the flesh and part vnregenerate feareth only these corporall punishments, and neglecteth those which are spirituall and eternall: whereof it is that they who are wholly carnall, doe vtterly despise all threatnings of spirituall judgements, and run on in a head-long course of sinne, vnlesse they be bridled and restrained with bodily punishments. And therefore the Lord knowing this, inflicteth vpon his seruants these outward crosses, that thereby hee may curbe in their carnall concupiscence from lusting after euill, from which if the vnregenerate part were throughly secured, it would be so importunate, and audacious in assaulting & tempting them vnto sinne, that if it did not wholly vanquish them, yet it would often foile them with these encounters, or at least continually trouble them and disturbe their peace.

Eccles. 8. 11.

Chryſo. in Matth. 3. Homil. 3.

The consideration whereof (should moone vs to beare all our afflictions with much patience

9. Sect. 2. That the former consideration should worke in vs patience in afflictions.

tience and comfort. For if a valiant Souldier is willing with all cheerefulnesse to runne through a World of miseries, rather than he would be vanquished, and led captiue by his enemies; if with patience he beare his heauy Armour, indure hunger and thirst, heate and cold, spend the night in watching, and the day in fighting, not reckoning of his rest, nor regarding wounds, that heemay in the end put his enemies to flight: and if the wise patient is content not onely to suffer, but to reward his Physician, when he goeth about by bitter pils and loathsome potions, by long abstinence and strict diet to preuent diseases when they are approching: then how much more cheerefully and willingly should wee vndergoe all the miseries and troubles of this spirituall Warfare against Sin, Sathan, and the enemies of our saluation, when as they serue as meanes and helpes, whereby we are inabled to vanquish these deadly foes, and to obtaine a glorious victory? With how much more patience and comfort should wee at the appointment of our heauenly Physician take these bitter pils and potions of crosses and afflictions, seeing he vseth them as soueraigne preseruatiues to keepe vs safe and sound from the contagion and poysonous infection of sinne, and from falling into these dangerous diseases, which would bring body and soule vnto euerlasting death.

2. Sect. 3. That God first vseth meanes for the preuention of sin; and then for the mortifying and subduing it.

And thus it appeareth that the Lord in our afflictions, aymeth at the preuenting of those things, which otherwise if we were left vnto our selues, we would readily fall into: it followeth now further to shew, that he vsually by the same meanes mortifieth our corruptions, wherewith wee are already defiled, and euen separateth and diuorceth vs from those sinnes vnto which our carnall affections are wedded and vnited. For as the wise and faithfull Physician sheweth his first care in preuenting the sicknesse of his patient, and in preseruing him from falling into dangerous diseases; but if through the abundance of corrupt humours, externall accidents, and especially his owne ill diet and disorder, hee be already falne into them, then his second care is to apply fit medicines to cure him, and recouer his health: so the Lord our spirituall Physician in the first place giueth vs wholesome preseruations, to keepe vs in health, and to repell these diseases of the soule, that they doe not seize vpon vs, but if through the inward corruption of our nature, the outward temptations of the World, or through our own disorder and mis-diet, neglecting our spirituall food, which would nourish vs vnto life eternall, and surfeiting vpon carnall pleasures, and worldly delights, wee be already falne into the sicknesse of sinne; then doth he by his (though not toothsoome medicines) seeke to heale vs, and to recouer againe our spirituall health, wherein like a most wise and louing Physician hee doth not labour to please our appetite, and delight our taste, but to cure our diseases which in their owne nature are most deadly, and to preserue our soules from euerlasting death. To which purpose he prescribeth vs a long fast, after fulnesse, and appointeth vs a strict diet, causing vs to vse sparingly, or totally to abstaine from worldly delicates, whereon formerly we haue surfeited; or because we cannot rule our appetite, he doth out of his loue and care take them from vs, and (as it were) locketh them out of our sight. Yea, if this be not sufficient for our recouery, hee doth vnto these priuatiue remedies, adde positiue Medicines, purging away our corrupt humours of wickednesse, which haue beene bred in vs by our greedy feeding vpon delicious pleasures and sweet delights with the bitter pils and loathsome potions of troubles and afflictions, and lanching our soares & impostumes of sin and corruption, with these sharpe Razours and keene Kniues of outward calamities and tribulations, which haue beene bred and gathered in vs through idlenesse and excesse. And thus the Prophet saith, that the Lord shall wash the filthinesse of the daughter of Sion, and purge the blood of Ierusalem out of the middest thereof, by the spirit of iudgement, and by the spirit of burning. And that by the fire of afflictions he will melt, and so by melting purifie the filthinesse, and consume the scumme of the people of Israel. So the Authour of the Booke of Wisdome saith, that therefore the Lord chastened them by little and little, that offend; and warned them by putting them in remembrance wherein they had offended; that leaning their wickednesse, they might beleeue on him.

Esay 4.

Ezek. 24. 11.

Wisd. 12.

And surely these afflictions and calamities are a most powerfull and profitable meanes to pull vs with violence out of our sinnes, and to purge and cleanse vs from our spirituall filthinesse. According to that in the Prouerbes: The blewnes of the wound serueth to purge away euils; and so doe stripes the inward parts of the belly. For in the time of our prosperity wee hearten our selues in our wicked courses, supposing that God liketh and approueth, or at least is not much offended with our euill conuersation, because all things goe well with vs, and no inconuenience accompanieth our sinnes, (the which conceits bring vs to carnall security, and to such hardnesse of heart, that we shut our eares against all admonitions and reproofes, and neglect Gods terrible threatnings, as though they were a vaine sound, and, as it were, but paper shot) but when wee are brought into afflictions, and not onely see our sinnes accompanied with sense of present smart, but also expect the continuance and increase of our calamities; then doe wee begin to examine our wayes, and to call

2. Sect. 4. That afflictions effectually moue vs to forsake sin, and to leaue our former wicked course, Prou. 20. 30.

call our selues to a reckoning: and when our consciences tell vs, that it is our sinnes which haue brought vpon vs all these miseries, and that there is no meanes to bee eased of our smart, vnlesse wee leaue and forsake our former wickednesse, and betake our selues to a new course of life; then doe wee begin to loath these sweete meates of sinfull delights, when they are thus distasted with the sowre sawce of trouble and affliction; and though heretofore there hath beene a league and friendship betweene our sinnes and vs; yet now (like malefactours when they are apprehended) we beginne to accuse and exclaime against them, as the authors of all our miseries; and are content to bring them out before our judge to bee condemned, mortified, and crucified, that wee by their ruine may escape punishment. In our prosperity we doe not only grow cold and negligent in holy duties, but also lie open to the temptations of Sathan and the world, alluring vs vnto sinne, by casting before vs the baite of earthly vanities; and though the pure gold of Gods graces remaine in vs, yet it is much darkned, if not quite couered with the drosse of our corruptions: and therefore the Lord is faine to cast vs into this fiery furnace of afflictions, that hereby hee may trie vs, and by trying purifie vs, burning and consuming away the drosse of our sins, that wee may shine againe in our wonted beauty. So hee saith by the Prophet to his sinfull people, I will turne my hand vpon thee, and purely purge away thy drosse, and take away all thy tinne. With which consideration one comforteth himselfe, because his tribulation was but his purgation, whereby he was freed from the drosse of sinne. For which purpose the Lord like a skilfull gold-smith vseth the world for his furnace, the diuell and wicked men as straw and fewell to maintaine this fire of affliction, which doe but consume themselues whilest they purifie Gods elect (like good gold) from the drosse of their corruptions. In the time of our prosperity, though wee be Gods good graine, yet is our spirituall part mixed and joyned with the chaffe and straw of our corruptions, and therefore our heauenly Husbandman doth (as it were) thresh vs with the flaile of affliction, and fanneth and winnoweth vs with cryals and tribulations, that being purged and made cleane, wee may be fit for his owne store. Whilest wee lie at ease and are not moued, we become, like standing waters, corrupt and noysome, and are fit to breed and bring forth nothing, but those ougly toades and venemous Serpents of sinne and wickednesse which viper-like kill and destroy them, from whom they haue their essence and being, but when we are stirred and troubled, or haue a passage and current ouer the sands and stones of affliction and misery, then are we purified from the slime of corruption, and doe attaine vnto christalline purity. Wee are ready in our prosperity like iron vnused, to rust in our corruption; and therefore the Lord vseth these files of affliction to scoure away this rust and canker of sinne, that we may become bright and smooth in our integrity and holinesse; and when like clothes wee are soiled, and become sowle with the filth of iniquity, then doth hee wash and rinse, beate and wring vs in those waters of tribulation, that so we may bee made cleane from this spirituall pollution. By all which, Gods loue appeareth in our afflictions, seeing they tend not at all to our hurt and destruction, but onely to purifie and cleanse vs from the loathsome filth of sin, and from those foule corruptions which make both our bodies and soules ougly in Gods sight; and fit for no place, but that darke blacke dungeon of Hell and destruction. So that as one saith, he doth by wounding vs outwardly cure vs inwardly, he is angry for the present, that he may bee mild and mercifull for euer after, hee afflicteth vs that he may spare vs, and casteth vs downe that hee may more highly aduance vs. Neither doe wee in our part regenerate receiue hereby any hurt and damage, but rather much profit and benefit; for whilest the outward man decayeth, the inward man is renewed daily, whilest the drosse of our corruption is consumed, the golden graces of Gods holy Spirit are purified, and shine more gloriously in the sight of all men: whilest the flesh with the lusts thereof are mortified and subdued, the spirit is reuiued, ruleth and reigneth, and the more fiercely our old man is encountred with crosses and afflictions, the more weake assaults it giueth to the new man and part regenerate. Nor needs wee, whilest we are thus purified, to feare that the small scruples and few graines of Gods graces in vs will be lost, and perish in the huge heape of our drosse and chaffe; for (as one saith) in another case, the least graine of this spirituall gold cannot miscarie vnder the hand of such an excellent artizan: and so skilfull and carefull is this heauenly workeman, that in our purging wee can neuer perish.

Exteriori vulnere sanatur plaga interior. Sic enim irascitur vt misereatur, affligit vt parcat: proterruit vt erigat. Idiota inter orthodoxogr. de patien. veræ contempl. cap. 18.

Sub manu tanti artificis aurifici nihil in massa potest perire non potest. Quantasuis pœnas? quam medicum auream? sed noli timere; tantum ut artifex vt purgare possit, perdere non possit. Aug. serm. 254. Tom. 10.

And vnto this efficacy and vertue of afflictions freeing vs from our sinnes and corruptions, when they are inflicted on vs, wee may further adde, that they are of necessary vse, as they worke in vs a care and desire of applying vnto vs both these and all other good meanes, that we may be freed from them; for though wee be in our soules sicke in sinne to the very death, yet naturally wee are so in loue with our diseases, that we neuer seeke to be cured of them, but rather this sickenesse seemeth health, and our spirituall health is shunned as a disease. And

Q. Self. 5. That afflictions cause vs carefully to vse all good meanes for the mortifying our of sin.

Chrysost. in Iob. Hom.

therefore (as one saith) seeing when our soules are grieuously sicke, we haue no sense of paine, nor desire of remedie, but with great diligence seeke to ease the body of the least infirmitie: therefore God for the sinne of the soule doth afflict the body, that by the punishment and paine of the worser part, the better and more noble may bee moued to seeke after the curing of its spirituall diseases. Though wee are much indangered by our inward impostumes of sin and corruption, so long as we are at ease, and in our outward estate in good plight and liking, we neuer looke for helpe and remedy; but when rankling and festring in our terrified consciences and afflicted Spirits, they put vs to grieuous paine and intolerable torments, then doe wee sue and seeke vnto our heauenly Surgeon, and are content that he should not onely apply vnto vs, the healing plaisters of his mercies, but also the sharpe corrasiues of crosses and afflictions; yea, that hee should cut and launch, binde and leare vs, that by this present paine, wee may bee freed from euerlasting torment. Finally, though our sinnes and corruptions, like filthy Sodomites, do vexe our righteous soule and regenerate part dwelling with them, through their impiety; yet so are wee made drunken with their sweete delights, and alluted with the bewitching pleasures which doe accompany them, that wee are loath, euen when God commandeth vs, to leaue their society, if wee were not pulled from them with a diuine violence, and (as it were) forced to flee from them, by this fire of afflictions.

But as our crosses and calamities serue notably for the mortifying of all sinnes, so more especially these sinnes of pride, carnall concupiscence, selfe-loue, and loue of the World; for whereas in the time of our prosperity, we are apt not onely to magnifie our selues, and to haue a great opinion of our worth and excellencie, but haue also the applause of others to puffe vs vp, which maketh pride to goe with full sayles, hauing got so faire a gale of vulgar breath and the wind of vaine glory to blow it forward: when wee are in aduersity and affliction, wee are as much humbled and cast downe in our owne conceit, as in the opinion of others, who now as much neglect and contemne vs, as they did before extoll and magnifie vs, and when these tempests of troubles blow, wee strike all the sayles of pride, comming then to a true sight and impartiall valuation of our selues, when as being stripped of worldly ornaments we appeare in our selfe-nakednes. And this Elihu saith, that God openeth the eares of men by their corrections, that hee might withdraw them from their euill purpose, and hide the pride of man. So also our carnall concupiscence and lusts of the flesh, are exceedingly mortified with troubles and afflictions; for whereas ease and prosperity is the fuell of this fire, affliction and misery is the water wherewith it is extinguished and quenched; whereas that is the dainty foode and plentifull nourishment, wherewith the flesh with the lusts thereof are fed, and the old man made strong and vigorous, this bread of affliction and water of tribulation, doth pine and weaken it, so as it is easily mastered and subdued by the spirituall part: whereas that affordeth plentiful matter of tentations, and ministreth in this spirituall warfare weapons and munition vnto this enemy of our saluation; this disarmeth him of all his strength, pulleth out of his hand his preuailing weapons, and so maketh him easie to bee ouercome. And therefore, if when our houses bee a fire, wee are much much comforted, if store of water be brought whereby it may be quenched; how much more should we bee filled with comfort and consolation, when our soules inflamed with the fire of concupiscence, haue this fire extinguished with the water of afflictions? And if, when a pernicious and bloody enemy maketh warre against vs, we exceedingly reioyce, if wee can by any meanes weaken him, famishing him for want of victuals, and intercepting his prouision of armour, weapons and munition: then surely we haue no cause of excessiue sorrow in our afflictions, but rather in this regard may iustly tryumph with ioy; seeing by this meanes those mortall enemies, the lusts of our flesh, which continually fight against our soules, are weakned of their chiefe strength, famished for want of foode, and spoiled and disarmed of their most preuailing weapons. The like also may bee said of selfe-loue, the heate whereof is exceedingly cooled and abated with troubles and afflictions; for howsoeuer, when wee are adorned with worldly ornaments, and curiously painted with the false colours of prosperity, like vaine women we admire our counterfait beauty, and like the young fondling, wee dote vpon the deceiuing shadow of a lying complexion, as though it were naturall and affixed vnto vs by God, and not accidentall and aduentitious, acquired and gotten by our deceiuing art and industry: yet when by outward calamities we are dis-robed of all our glittering brauery, and haue our false colours washed away with the waters of affliction; when we are weather-beaten with the tempests of tribulation, and appeare no better than we are, in our owne fauour and complexion, then as the loue of others is weaned from vs, who affected vs onely for our counterfait beauty and outward brauery, so doe wee begin to loath our selues, when looking in the glasse of the law, wee see that all outward helpes haue failed and forsaken vs, and that that wee are left in our owne fowlenesse and deformity. An example whereof wee haue in Iob, who though hee were but too much in loue with his owne worth and excellency in his prosperity, as may appeare by his discourses in the time of his afflictions, wherin hee complaineth that his smart exceeded his sin, and justifieth himselfe with some impeachment to Gods infinite righteousnesse; yet when at length hee was throughly humbled, his selfe-loue is turned into loathing, and abhorring himselfe, he repenteth in dust and ashes.

§. Sect. 6. That afflictions mortifie our pride, carnall concupiscence and selfe-loue.

Iob 33. 17.

But aboue all other sinnes these afflictions are most powerfull and profitable, for the mortifying of the loue of the world and worldly vanities, vnto which naturally we are so much addicted. For howsoeuer these earthly things are most vaine and momentany, and the loue of them not onely foolish and fruitlesse, but also dangerous and pernitious; yet is there such an inseparable league and liking betweene them and our corrupt flesh, that the child doth not with greater fondnes cling to the mothers breast, than our affections doe naturally adhere vnto these transitory trifles. Yea so are we fixed and fastned, and (as it were) glued, nailed and riuetted vnto them, that whilest we securely enjoy our carnall loue, and haue the full fruition of our worldly desires, wee might as easily be perswaded, to pull the skin from our flesh, or the flesh from out bones, as to weane our affections from this bewitching strumper. Now this worldly loue is such a dangerous sicknesse, that if wee were not cured of it, it would bring vs at last to a desperate consumption in all grace and goodnesse, and to euerlasting death both of body and soule; for faith in God, and confidence in earthly things, will not stand together, wee cannot serue God and Mammon, wee cannot loue the Lord and loue the world: for, (as the Apostle saith) the amity of the world, is the enmity of God, and whosoeuer maketh himselfe a friend to the one, hee thereby maketh himselfe an enemy to the other. For though our heart bee a vessell which is capable of the liquor of loue, yet that which is heauenly and spirituall will not be mixed in it with that which is worldly and carnall; and the more full it is of the one, the more destitute and empty it is of the other. And therefore if we would be replenished with the diuine loue of God, wee must powre and cast out our vnprofitable loue of earthly things. To which purpose one saith; Thou art a vessell, but such an one as is already full; empty out that which thou containest, that thou mayest receiue that which thou desirest, cast out the loue of the world, that thou mayest be filled with the loue of God. Againe, it is the nature of loue to make louers like, and to transforme the party louing, as much as may be, into the party beloued; and therefore whosoeuer loueth the World, and in his heart and appetite adhereth vnto it, he becommeth carnall and worldly, if by some crosses and afflictions hee bee not weaned from it. And as the milke or meate, if it be not moued and stirred, adhereth and sticketh to the vessell in which it is boyled, and loosing its owne sweetnesse and sauour, receiueth from it a loathsome sent; so if wee be not often tossed and troubled with crosses and afflictions, wee will easily in our affections sticke fast vnto the world, and loosing the sweet relish of vertue and piety, wee will sauour of this stinking vessell, and so become noisome in the nostrils of God. Yea, if wee alwayes enioyed the world at will, and had continually our fill of earthly delights, then would wee neuer care for the joyes of Heauen, nor vse any meanes to come vnto them; if our earthly house were safe and pleasant, and neither tottering and ruinous, nor haunted with these Spirits and bugbeares of misery and affliction, wee would neuer bee willing to flit and change our habitation, but after one lease of life were expired, we would desire aboue all things to haue another renued, and neuer care to come into those heauenly mansions which our Sauiour Christ hath prepared for vs. If this our pilgrimage in the world were full of pleasures and delights, and had in it no crosses or dangers; if wee had alwayes faire way and easie iourneies, still passed through sweete fields & flowrie meddowes, if we had merry company and faithfull friends in all our trauailes, and had not onely dainty fare, soft lodging, and kinde entertainment at our Innes, but also had wealth at will to defray all charges; then surely would weemake a paradise of out pilgrimage, and neuer thinke of going forwards towards our heauenly country. As wee may see by plentifull experience in the world, where it is hard to finde any which are noble, rich, and abounding in earthly pleasures, who would not bee content to see vp here their rest, if so they might; and neuer desire heauenly happinesse and eternall glory. Yea contrariwise, they abhorre death which separateth them from their earthly delight, as the greatest euill, and therefore are neuer so grieuously sicke, but that they would still bee content to endure their paine, that they may still enjoy the world, and are patient of all things but of parting with their loue.

Sic ut cibus adhæret vasi in quo coquitur nisi moueatur, & perdit saporem debitum, debitumque colorem: sic cor hominis adhæret isti mundo nisi moueatur per afflictiones. Idiota in orthodox. de patien. vera contempl. cap. 3.

9. Sect. 8. That the Lord in great mercy sendeth afflictions to weane vs from the loue of the World.

And therefore the Lord in infinite mercy and goodnesse towards vs, doth cause vs to meete with many crosses and calamities, that they may weane vs from this fond loue, and make vs more ardently affect the joyes of his kingdome. Hee causeth vs in our pilgrimage grimage to passe through the thorns and briars of troubles and afflictions, to bee assaulted with enemies, and endangered by theeues, to find in our trauels fowle weather and filthy wayes, to be pinched with wants, and tyred with labours, to haue rude entertainment, hard lodging, and course fare in these our Innes; and in a word, hee afflicteth vs with sickneſſe and pouerty, with toyle and trauell, hunger and thirſt, cares, feares and troubles of minde, oppreſſions of ſuperiours, and iniuries of our equals, that ſo we may loath the world where wee haue ſuch hard meaſure offered vs, and long to arriue ſafely in our heauenly country, where we ſhall be freed from all theſe miſeries, and enjoy perfect happineſſe. For, though with Iacob we were ſpent with cares, and worne with labours, yet wee could be content to dwell ſtill with this worldly Laban for the baſe hire of earthly vanities; and though he often deceiue vs of our wages, and promiſe that which hee neuer mindeth to pay, yet ſo long as hee ſpeaketh vs faire and fawneth vpon vs, wee neuer thinke of leauing his companie; and therefore the Lord cauſeth this Churle to change his countenance, to turne his ſmiles into frownes, his flattery into ſurly menaces, and vniuſt oppreſſion, that ſo we may bee moued to loath his baſe ſeruitude, and haue a deſire wrought in vs of returning into our country. We are farre in loue with this earthly Egypt, and take ſuch pleaſure in the garlike and onions of worldly profits, and ſo glut our ſelues with the fleſh-pots of carnall delights, that if with ſome peace and eaſe wee might ſtill enjoy them, and haue Ioſephs honour and eſteeme joyned with our plenty, wee would neuer deſire to come out of this ſeruitude, nor make any haſt towards our heauenly Canaan. And therefore the Lord ſuffereth the ſpirituall Pharaoh and theſe worldly Egyptians to rage againſt vs, to ſpoile vs of our goods, rob vs of our children, and to oppreſſe and weare vs out with vnrewarded labours, that we may groane and cry vnto the Lord for deliuerance, earneſtly deſire that glorious liberty of the ſonnes of God, and trauell more cheerefully towards the holy Land. We adhere to the world with our hearts and affections, like the wheate in the eare, to the chaffe and ſtraw, and if wee were let alone, would neuer part with it, till we were both conſumed in the furnace of Gods wrath; and therefore the Lord in loue and mercy towards vs thraſheth vs with afflictions, that hee may ſeparate vs from it, and preſerue it from periſhing. And as the nurſing mother, being with childe, deſireth to weane her ſucking infant from her hurtfull and vnholſome milke; and for the effecting of it, thinketh it in vaine, in reſpect of the childs fondneſſe and ſmall vnderſtanding, to vſe onely reaſons to diſſwade it from the breaſt, or to tell it, that her milke is vnholſome and will breed diſeaſes, but rather layeth muſtard or worme-wood vpon the teate, the bitternеſſe whereof hee no ſooner taſteth, but hee beginneth to loath his former loue, and though he wanteth the vſe of reaſon, yet is taught by ſenſe to leaue that which is ſo diſtaſtfull: ſo the Lord intending to weane vs fondlings from worldly delights, and ſeeing it is not enough (in regard of our childiſh dotage, fond affection and ſmall wit) to tell vs by his word what manifold miſchiefes accompany our fooliſh loue; hee doth therefore embitter theſe pappes of pleaſure with the wormewood of afflictions, and ſo intermixeth with miſeries our carnall delights, that though reaſon will not rule vs, yet at leaſt by our ſenſe and taſt, wee may be moued to loath theſe earthly vanities. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that our afflictions in the world befal vs through the diſpenſation of Gods moſt wiſe and gracious prouidence, that whileſt God by his word and truth, out of meere loue, calleth vs out of the world; the world alſo at the ſame time ſhould by the tribulations which it inflicteth, alienate our hearts, and euen thruſt vs from it: for the mind doth ſo much the more eaſily eſcape and come out of the labyrinth of worldly loue, by how much the more forcibly it is thruſt forward when God calleth it. For, then doe wee moſt earneſtly deſire to leaue the world, & to goe into our heauenly country, when with Eliau we are perſecuted by it and flee for our liues. Then do we with Paul deſire to be diſſolued & to be with Chriſt, when the world eſteems vs the off-ſcouring of all things & inflicteth on vs moſt grieuous afflictions; then doe we long after the glorious crowne of victory, when we are toyled and tyred, foyled and wounded in the ſpirituall war-fare; then doe wee heartily wiſh to arriue in the hauen of eternall reſt, when as we are indangered with boyſterous tempeſts, and toſſed and turmoiled with the waues of miſery: then doe wee deſire the end of our iourney when we are tired with weary trauaile, paſſe many dangers, and finde hard entertainment in this ſtrange country. And in a word, then doe wee onely with ardency of affection, ſeeke after the fruition of God and the joyes of his kingdome, when being in ſickneſſe and pouerty, contempt and diſgrace, forſaken by friends and oppreſſed by enemies, wee cannot enjoy any worldly comforts.

Gregor. apud, ex regiſt. in lib. 4. ep. 30.

1 King. 19. 4. Phil. 1. 23.

And ſurely happy is our eſtate, if at leaſt, afflictions can moue vs to loath the World, and to long after true happineſſe, vſing all good meanes to attaine vnto it; for though in themſelues they bee a moſt powerfull meanes to weane vs from the loue of earthly vanities; yet ſo doe our hearts naturally cleaue

Q. Sen. 9. That we doat on the world though it be miſerable, and therefore much more fondly would we affect it, if we cleaue to the World, and so are they not only glewed, but euen pinned and nailed vnto it, that the Water of afflictions cannot dissolue and seuer them, but like the Israelites, after we haue long been oppressed in this grieuous seruitude with innumerable miseries, and through Gods mercy being deliuered out of it, haue set our faces towards the heauenly Canaan, with a purpose to trauell towards the place of our rest, wee are ready to forget all our oppressions and calamities, our toylsome labours, and tormenting stripes inflicted vpon vs by the vnjust world our former master, and onely remembring the fleshpots of carnall pleasures, and the transitorie benefits which wee enjoyed in the land of our captiuity, we are weary of our journey, and thinke of returning into our former bondage, that so wee may re-gaine our sinfull delights. The which wee would accordingly put in practice, if the Lord should leaue vs vnto our selues, and should not onely draw vs forward by his Word and holy Spirit, and allure vs to goe on by his gracious promises, and by setting before vs, as in a mappe, the pleasantnesse and excellency of our heauenly country: but also cause the World to renew daily our troubles and afflictions, to pursue and persecute vs with fresh rage and malice, and (as it were) to follow vs at the heeles, and whippe vs forward with new calamities. By all which it may appeare that the Lord in great mercy and loue doth send vpon vs these crosses & calamities, that he may hereby weane vs from the loue of the world, which is so dangerous and pernicious, vpon which wee would vnmeasurably dote to our destruction, if our affections were not somewhat cooled; yea, euen pulled from it by these violent meanes. For if the world being bitter to our tast, is not for all this loathsome and distastfull to our carnall appetite, how vnmeasurably would wee affect it, if it were sweet and toothsome? If these earthly habitations being tottering, ruinous, and ready euery day to ouerwhelme vs with their fall, wee nevertheless desire to dwell in them, how loath would wee bee to leaue them if they were strong and stately, durable and permanent? If vve delight still to sayle in this sea of worldly miseries, being obnoxious to stormes and tempests, vvrackes and piracies, and neuer care to come into the hauen of happinesse; what would wee doe, if we had at pleasure quiet calmes, and prosperous windes; a faire passage and safe from all dangers? If we take contentment in our pilgrimage, and make no hast vnto our heauenly country, when as our way is so fovvle and full of thornes, our iourney so painefull and dangerous, and our intertainment among these worldly Cannibals so bad and barbarous; what a paradise would wee esteeme it, and what little account would wee make of our euerlasting mansions, if wee had a pleasant passage, an easie iourney, and kinde vsage in this strange country? If wee bee fond on this worldly harlot being so vgly and deformed, how would wee dote on it, if it were faire and beautifull? This false World deceiueth vs, and yet vve trust it, how then vvould wee rest and rely vpon it, if it were faithfull & neuer failed vs? It frowneth vpon vs and yet wee affect it, how fond therefore would we be on it, if it smiled and fawned? It crosseth and afflicteth vs, and yet we hugge and imbrace it, O then! how would our hearts cling and cleaue vnto it, if it made vs his darlings, and did cocket vs with fauors? The Lord hath filled it with miseries, and yet vve are loath to exchange them for icy and blessednesse: what cart-ropes then or cables could pull vs from it, if it were full of comforts without crosses, and had no gall mingled with its sweetnesse? It is full of troubles, wars, and contentions, secret traitors, open enemies, and false friends, and yet we grieue when we thinke of leauing it: how vvould wee therefore surfeit of sorrow, if injoying quiet peace, svveet concord, and faithfull friendship, we should bee forced to forgoe it? vvee are still, vvhilest vve continue in it, tormented with cares and feares, subject to innumerable dangers, and haue still in sight terrible tragedies, expecting daily when we shall be called out to act our part, and yet we cannot with patience thinke of our departure; O! what a death then would departing be, if we were quiet and secure, hauing all that we could desire, and not fearing to be robbed of any of our delights? wee are, whilest wee remaine in this vale of teares, subject to sickneſse and pouerty, contempt and disgrace, and yet wee doe not sigh and groane after our full redemption, when as we shall bee freed from all these miseries: how farre therefore would wee be from the least desire of exchanging our estate, if wee were healthy and wealthy, highly honoured, and in all vvee doe applauded with mens prayses? In a vvord, the world persecuteth and killeth vs and yet wee loue it as our liues, vvhat an idoll then vvould wee make of it, and hovv farre would wee preferre it before the saluation of our soules if it did like and loue vs, cherish and defend vs? Most gratiously therfore doth our good God deale with vs when seeing vs besotted with this pernicious loue, he causeth the World to deale roughly with vs, that so by smart and sense of paine, our minds may bee somewhat alienated and weaned from it. And thrice happy are wee in our greatest afflictions, if Gods Spirit working with them, they become meanes to make vs contemne the World, as being in it selfe vile and of no worth, and vnto vs a dangerous dangerous and mortall enemie; or at least doe so moderate and qualifie the heate of our loue, that it doe not exceede the loue of God and ioyes of his kingdome, nor hinder vs from vsing any good meanes vvhereby wee may attaine vnto the fruition of them.

Quamuis intolerabilis sit cœlestis patriæ dulcedo quæ trahat, multi tamen in hac vita dolores sit qui ad amorem cœlestium quotidie impellunt; qui mihi in hoc ipso solum vehementer placent, quia placere in hoc mundo aliquid non permittunt. Gregr. epist. ex Register. lib 4 Indict. 13. cap.

9. Sect. 10. That the loue of the world if it were not mortified in vs would betray vs to the temptations of the diuell.

And thus doe afflictions not onely mortifie our carnall lusts, but also our worldly loue, preserving vs from lusting and longing immoderately after these earthly vanities, and consequently from many snares of the Deuill with which we should easily bee intangled, if wee were in loue with these allaring baits. For if wee were left to our owne liberty, wee would lie open to innumerable dangers, and like silly birds hungring after our worldly prey, wee would bee ready to stoope to euery baite which Sathan, like a cunning fowler, layeth before vs, and so bee catched in his nets of perdition. From which dangers the Lord preserueth vs whilest hee vseth afflictions as a cage to keepe vs from our hurtfull liberty, and to restraine vs from the seeing, desiring, or preying vpon these baites of destruction. To which purpose one saith, that God in his infinite wisdome doth threaten, correct and keepe vnder with painefull labours his most faithfull and best deseruing seruants, because he seeth that if they injoyed ease and liberty, they would lye open to the wounds of their spirituall enemies. And therefore hee exerciseth them outwardly with stripes and labours, that they may not bee pearced inwardly with the fierie darts of the Deuils tentations. Whilest wee injoy the prosperity of the World, wee are easily lulled sleepe in carnall security; and then as wee may be easily wounded with Sathans tentations, when we doe not stand vpon our owne defence; so are wee easily robbed by this subtill theefe of the riches of Gods graces; for then they are pulled from vs at vnawares with the least strength of tentations, yea (as it fareth with them who sleepe soundly and securely) forgetting what iewels wee hold in our hands, we let them fall of our selues, though no outward violence should plucke them from vs: But when we are kept waking with troubles and afflictions, then wee watch ouer these spirituall treasures, and neither suffer Sathan to spoile vs of them by his theeuish sleights, nor to pull them away by force and violence, but the harder the Diuel draweth, the faster wee hold; the more earnestly hee indeuoureth to disrobe and strip vs of these rich ornaments of spirituall gifts, the more carefully wee wrap them about vs, and the more feruently we implore the Lords aide, when wee finde our selues vnable to withstand his might.

Greg. moral. lib. 33 cap. 17.

8. Sect. 11. That we are

By all which it appeareth, that the afflictions of the faithfull are vsed by God as a notable meanes, to strengthen and defend vs from the spirituall enemies of our saluation, and to heale those grieuous wounds of sinne which wee get in this spirituall conflict. The consideration whereof should make vs beare all our crosses and calamities with patience and comfort, yea with ioy and thanksgiuing, seeing by suffering these smaller euils of present smart, we are freed from those greater euils of sin and corruption, which if they still continued and liued in vs, would make vs obnoxious, not onely to Gods temporary plagues and punishments, but to euerlasting condemnation of body and soule. For are wee vexed with sicknesse, and pained with outward griefs? let vs beare them with patience, seeing God by the sicknesse of the body, doth cure the soule of more desperate diseases: and much better it is to burne with the heate of a feauer, than with the heate of sinfull concupiscence, which will inflame against vs Gods fearefull wrath, and euerlastingly burne vs in the fire of Hell. Are wee in painefull seruitude and subjection, and misused and oppressed by those who rule ouer vs? let vs beare all with comfort, seeing God hereby doth free vs from the seruitude of sinne; and much better it is to bee seruants vnto men, than to bee slaues to our owne vices; for that is temporary and will soone haue an end; but the slauery of sinne, maketh vs to become also Sathans bond-men, out of whose thraldome if we escape not in this life, by true repentance, we shall by this tyrant be for euer embondaged in the prison of Hell. Are wee spoiled and dispossessed of our worldly riches, and are wee pinched with poucrty, and want earthly necessaries? let vs be well contented with Gods good pleasure, seeing by these worldly wants he preserueth vs from spirituall penury, and taketh away from vs these momentany trifles, that Satan may not rob vs of our heauenly treasures. When wee haue in out bodies wounds or deepe festered sores, wee voluntarily send for the Chirurgeon, and yeeld our selues into his hands to be vsed at his discretion, for the effecting of the cure; we are content that hee should not only apply healing playsters, but tormenting corrasiues. And that hee should search our sores to the bottome, launch and seare, yea cut off a member for the preseruation of the whole body: And fearing lest we should not haue courage & strength enough to endure these tortures, wee are willing to be bound, that we may not by our struggling & striuing hinder him in his courses: So when wee are diseased wee craue the helpe of the learned Physician, and are content for the curing of our sicknesse, to follow his direction, to swallow bitter pils and loathsome potions, to vse strict diet or totall abstinence, and to eate, drinke, sleepe and labour, not ac-much to mo- ioyce in af- flictions, sith God vseth them as meanes to mortifie our sinnes.

according to our appetite and naturall disposition, but according to his direction and prescription; yea, all this wee not only patiently endure, but are ready to gratifie their paines with thankfulnesse and reward. And therefore if in vncertaine hope to recouer the health of our body, which can last but for a moment, and is ready presently after the cure to languish againe, falling into a relapse of the olde griefe, or into other diseases more dangerous than they, wee are content to endure all these miseries at the appointment of mortall men, who often are vnfaithfull, seeking more their owne gaine than our health, and often vnskilfull; neither truely knowing the nature of our disease, nor the meanes how to cure it: How much more should wee with all alacrity and cheerefulnesse, endure any crosses and afflictions, when they are vsed as medicines and salues by our heauenly Physician and Chirurgeon, for the curing and healing our soules of the dangerous diseases and sores of sin, which would bring vs in the end vnto euerlasting death; seeing we are certainly assured that hee will by this meanes recouer vs vnto perfect and neuer-decaying health; as being most faithfull and carefull ouer vs, and in his wisdome and skill infinite and all-sufficient for the effecting of the cure. Let vs not therefore looke so much to our present smart as to our future health; not to the paine wee feele, but to the ease and comfort which wee assuredly hope for, and considering that the Lord woundeth to the end hee may heale vs, and killeth our bodies with a temporary death, to preserue body and soule from death euerlasting: Let vs joyfully submit our selues vnto his will, crying out with one: O Lord, here launce and seare me, so that thou wilt be pleased hereafter to heale mee. Our Physician doth make these outward blisters in our bodies, to draw out the poysonous corruption that is in our soules, and doth trouble vs a little (as it were) with some small itch or bleach in the skin, that hee may free vs from the inward putrefaction of sin, and allay the heat of our inflamed concupiscence: And therefore let vs endure that which he imposeth with patience, and neuer murmur against him for effecting his cure; knowing that it is but childish folly to abhorre the medicine more than the disease, and that we count them mad men which rage against the Physician, who intendeth their recouery. Let vs rather rejoyce that the Lord is contented to minister vnto vs, because, seeing he vndertakes to cure vs by these medicines, it is a signe that wee are not past recouery; for when in our diseases our estate is desperate, he leaueth vs to our owne appetite, to haue what our hearts can desire, and to take our fill of the pleasures of sinne: whereas hee giueth bitter potions, and prescribeth a strict diet, launceth and searcheth, cauterizeth and cutteth those who are curable and likely to recouer. And better it is (as one saith) to sustaine vnder the hands of our Physician a transitory torment, than forsaking him and refusing the meanes of our recouery, to incurre such a punishment as will euerlastingly vex vs with hellish tortures. For these medicines of afflictions put those to paine whom our Physician in loue intendeth to cure, who by grieuing vs freeth vs from our griefes, &c. and by hurting cureth vs, that our health may be endeared by our former heauinesse.

Hieron. in Epist. ad agrotum amicum. Tom. 4.

But thou wilt say that thy affliction is so grieuous and intolerable, that there can bee no place for patience in the bearing of it. To which I answere, that if thy affliction bee grieuous, so likewise is thy sin; for the Lord our heauenly Physician & Chirurgeon, fitteth his medicines and meanes of curing, according to the nature and quality of our diseases and sores. And as earthly Physicians vary their remedies, according to the state of their patients and nature of their sicknesses, giuing vnto one gentle potions, and to another strong purgations; and as Surgeons out of their skill and discretion apply vnto small cuts healing playsters, but when they meete with an impostume or deepe festered wound, they cauterize and launch, seare and burne: so the Lord for the curing of lesser corruptions inflicteth lesser crosses, and for those sins which are hainous and enormous, more grieuous miseries and more heauy calamities. An example whereof wee haue in the people of Iuda, who for their outragious sinnes had heauy punishments inflicted on them. I haue stricken thee (saith the Lord) with the wound of an enemy, and with a sharpe chastisement for the multitude of thine iniquities, because thy sinnes were increased: Why cryest thou for thine affliction? thy sorrow is incurable for the multitude of thine iniquities, because thy sins were increased, I haue done these things vnto thee. Looke not therefore so much to the greatnesse of thy smart, as to the hainousnes of thy sin; not to the bitternesse of the medicine, or the torture of the cornasiue, but to the desperateneesse of thy disease, and to the deepnesse of thy festered wounds; for (as one saith) the griefe of affliction is much qualified, when as wee see and acknowledge the greatnesse of our sin; euen as euery one doth more patiently endure the Launcher of the Surgeon, the more rotten and festered he seeth the sore to be, which is cut & searched; and the heauier wee feele the burthen of sin, the more light wee shall find the burthen of affliction. Yea, (wilt thou say) but my sins are not so great, nor my sores so incurable, that I should need such sharpe remedies and grieuous afflictions to be freed from them. I answere, that thy Iudge is able to discerne of

Ier. 30. 14, 15.

Dolor flagelli temperatur, tam culpa cognoscitur, quas tanto quisq; fortunatum se dici patientius tolerat, quanto magis putridum conspicit esse quod secat, &c. quia per hoc quod culpa perdidit egenditur, afflictionis pena remittitur Greg. Moral. lib. 10. cap. 5.

δ. Sect. 12. That our grieuous afflictions argue our grieuous sins.

of the greatnesse of thy faults, and thy Physician of the disease, better than thy selfe who being a party and Patient; art blinded with selfe-loue and partiall in thy judgement. Either then thy sinnes are in their owne nature hainous, or aggrauated by circumstances, being committed against knowledge and conscience, or exemplary to the scandall of others; they are great in themselues, or through the hardnesse of thy heart, hard to be cured, or being small alone, they are not small to thee; seeing thou wilt by no meanes part with them, but resolueſt still to continue in them. For, as a man holdeth fast in his hand a small staffe, when as a great post is easily pulled from him: So do we oftentimes retaine our lesser sins with greater pertinacy, than our more hainous offences, and so make them grieuous by our persisting in them, which were more light in their owne nature. Neither is there any thing that doth more aggrauate our sins in the sight of God, than when they are joyned with impenitency, and answerably nothing doth more incense him vnto wrath, or draw downe vpon vs more heauy judgements; according to that sentence, so often in the same Chapter repeated: If yee walke stubbornly against me, and will not obey me, I will then bring seuen times more plagues vpon you, according to your sinnes. Yea, (will some say) but mine afflictions are not only grieuous, but also in their continuance long and tedious. I answer, that as thou makeſt them heauy through thine impatiency, so thou makeſt them long by continuing in thy sin; for, our afflictions are light, or they are not long, either they may be borne with some ease, or else they are soon taken from vs. Howsoeuer it is, assure thy selfe that whether they are light or heauy, they continue vpon thee, not for want of mercy in God to ease thee, but for want of grace in thee which might make thee fit to find ease: For, if thy sores of sin were healed, there would be no need further to apply these salues of afflictions; If thy wounds were open and the core of corruption drawne out, thine heauenly Surgeon would not lay vpon them still these corrasiues of calamities. If thou were throughly cleansed from these corrupt humours of sinne which ouerthrow thy spirituall health, thy Physician would not vexe thee with any more strong and loathsome medicines. But though these salues haue beene often applyed, yet thy sores are still festered in the bottome; though thou hast already drunke many potions of trouble and afflictions, yet the melancholicke humours of sinne, are so tough, and sticke so fast in the inward parts, that they are not yet purged away. And therefore though thou calleſt and cryeſt to haue the corrasiues remoued, and to haue no more of these loathsome purges of tribulation and misery ministred vnto thee: yet thy heauenly Surgeon and Physician hauing vndertaken to cure thee, and not to please thee; continueth still the vse of these meanes till thy sicknesses and sores of sin be sufficiently healed, and therefore though thou cryeſt and calleſt for ease, yet hee heareth thee not, according to thy will, but so as it will agree with the recouery of thy health.

Leuit. 26. 21.

Tuis medicaminibus potius curatis, securis etiam, non amicis medicinis ad voluntatem sed ad sanitatem. Aug. in Psal. 21. enarr.

Whatsoeuer then our afflictions be, and how long soeuer they continue vpon vs, let vs labour to beare them with patience and comfort, seeing we are naturally sicke in sin, and he that made vs, best knoweth how to cure vs. Hee vnderstanderth our secret infirmities and inward diseases, and well knoweth how to apply fit meanes for our recouery, and when it is best for vs to haue them taken away. We trust earthly Physicians, though they commit many errours: for (as one saith) they that goe about to cure vs, did not make vs: How much more then should wee commit our selues into the hands of God who hath made our soules and bodies; and therefore well knoweth how to re-create that which he hath created, and to re-forme that which he hath formed? We suffer vnder the hands of men certaine torment for vncertaine health, and many, whilest they are drawne on with false hopes, die vnder the hands of their Surgeons and Physicians; or if they recouer, their liues are but reprieued for a few dayes longer: what therefore should we be content to suffer at the appointment of our heauenly Physician, for the euerlasting health and saluation of body and soule. Seeing he is so infinitely wise, that he can neuer be deceiued, and so al-sufficiently skilfull, that he neuer mistaketh our diseases, or his medicines, nor euer faileth in effecting his cure? Though wee much esteeme our Gold yet we willingly commit it to the Finer, that he may cast it into his Furnace and purifie it from its drosse; and yet his skill may faile either in not throughly purifying the mettall, that it may abide the touch, or else in refining it more than enough, & so wasting it in stead of purifying it: much more then let vs commit these treasures of our soules and bodies into the hands of this heauenly workman; for though hee cast vs into his Furnace of afflictions, it is not to hurt vs, but to purifie vs from the drosse of our corruptions. And hee that is not purged in this fire, but burnt and consumed with the heat of impatiency, hee is to be esteemed Chaffe and not Gold, and hath just cause to feare, least after hee is consumed in this temporary blaze of tribulation, hee shall with the Chaffe, that the Baptist speaketh of, be cast into that vnquenchable fire of Hell. The Lord now iudgeth vs for our sinnes in this life, and his iudgements are heauy and distastfull to flesh and bloud; but let vs not be discouraged, for the

Q. Bell. That if we dure such with pain to be eas temporall much more should wee beare to be freed from those which are euerlas Aug. in Psal. 101. Enarr.

Vbi non pu artifex ind inter ea ne rare, nonn purgare, d in Psal. 61. Enarr.

Math. 3. 11.

the end of them is, that being chastised for our sins of the Lord, we may vnfainedly repent of them, and so may receiue pardon and forgiuenesse, and not come into condemnation with the world. In regard whereof wee haue just cause to account it the heauiest judgement, not to bee at all thus judged of the Lord; for our heauenly Physician ministreth this Physicke of afflictions to all his patients sicke in sinne, sauing to those whose diseases are desperate. Our gracious Father chasteneth euery sonne whom he receiueth, and seaueth none to prosper in their wickednesse, but those bastards whom he purposeth to disinherit of that heauenly patrimony, reserued in store for his owne children. Our Lord and Master correcteth in the Family the faults and hainous crimes which are committed by his Seruants, or else his purpose is to turne them away, and to reserue their sins to be punished at his great Assises. And therfore God threatneth it as an heauy judgement against the Israelites, that hee would not correct them for their sinnes. I will not (saith he) visit your daughters when they are harlots, nor your spouses when they are whores; namely, to reclayme them by fatherly chastisements, that they might not run on in a head-long course which would lead to destruction. In regard whereof, the estate of sinfull man is then most wretched, when continuing in his sin hee is exempted from punishment. For as those who are sicke of the Gout and Dropsie; are then in the most miserable condition, when they vse excessiue diet & haue plenty of delicate wines, and pleasant drinkes to please their vnsatiable appetite, because by all these dainties their diseases become more desperate; whereas contrariwise, they are mitigated and cured by hunger and thirst, strict diet and vnpleasant Physicke: So, if being infected and tainted with sin and corruption, we notwithstanding prosper in our wickednesse, & ruffle it out in worldly pleasures, our case is so much the more dangerous and desperate, because these worldly allurements doe but increase our sins, and so settle and harden vs in our euill courses, that we can hardly by any meanes be cured and recouered. But if God admitteth vs into his Hospitall, and ministreth vnto vs the Physicke of afflictions, restraining our gluttonous appetite, and withholding from vs these earthly vanities which doe but feed and increase the diseases of our soules; then haue wee great cause of thanksgiuing, seeing we are hereby put into assured hope of recouering our spirituall health, and of continuing still in the life of grace, vntill we be admitted into the life of glory.

Chap. XX.

That God by afflictions increaseth in vs all his spirituall graces, and first those which are seated in the vnderstanding.

1. Sect. 1. That afflictions exercise & by exercising preserue in vs Gods sauing graces.

WE haue shewed how the Lord vseth afflictions as a notable meanes to free vs from our sins: It now followeth that I also shew, that hee doth by them exercise and strengthen, multiply and increase in vs all Christian vertues, and the sanctifying and sauing graces of his holy Spirit. To which purpose wee are to know, that as the Master of the Masteries will not suffer his Scholars to spend their time in idlenesse, but keepeth them in continuall exercise; as running, wrastling, leaping, fencing, and accustometh their bodies to painfull labours, to keepe them in breath, & not only to preserue their strength and agility, but also to increase it: so doth the Lord exercise the faithfull in this World, as in a Schoole of Masteries, making them to wrastle and striue with troubles and afflictions, that he may hereby both confirme and preserue the strength of his sanctifying graces in them, and also increase and multiply them by this spirituall exercise; whereas they would languish and grow faint with sloth and idlenesse. For as it fareth with the strength of the body, so also with the vertues and powers of the mind; the more they are disused from labour, and rest at their ease without an enemy, the more weak & impotent they daily grow, but the more they are exercised and assaulted, the more they are strengthened and confirmed. And as the trees which are tossed in the Winter with tempestuous stormes, doe thereby take the deeper rooting, so Gods graces are not ouerturnd with these boysterous blasts of trouble & affliction, but are the more firmely rooted in vs; and the more that the flesh is weakned by them, the more strong we grow in the spirituall part; and though hereby our outward man perisheth, yet the inward man is renewed daily. It is true that whilest wee are in this combat of afflictions, wearied with labours, and tyred with resisting; this spirituall strength doth not so sensibly appeare, but rather seemeth to be abated and weakned (euen as it also befalleth vs in the exercises and contentions of the body) but yet after the conflict is ended, our strength vpon a little rest is presently renued, and becommeth much more able and actiue than it was before. Yea, sometimes it commeth to passe, that afflictions like a cloude do hide out of our sight the bright beames of these spirituall graces, and these miseries and calamities, like ashes, couer these shining and burning coales of Gods sauing gifts, so as neither their heat nor light is discerned by the outward sense, but whilest they Torpescit virtus ubi certamen defuerit, & facilè hostis malitia coalescit, & pigrescat animus repugnantu, Chrysost. de interdict. arboris sterm.

2. Cor. 4. 16.

Nauigium vitæ nostræ agitationibus gaudet; sola tranquillitate turbatur. Stupet enim oursus cessantibus ventis, peritatur & peritalium probatur, Hieronym. ad agroicum amicum Epist. Tom. 4.

they hide them, they also preserue them; which otherwise would be more subject to wasting and going out, if they did lie open to the outward ayre of worldly prosperity.

Q. Sect. 2. That afflictions doe not only preserue and confirme, but also increase & multiply in vs Gods sauing graces.

Yea, these troubles and calamities doe not only confirme and preserue in vs Gods spirituall graces, but also doe (as I said) increase and multiply them. For these holy seeds of Gods sauing gifts doe become most fruitfull when as they are pinched with the frosts of afflictions, and this heauenly fire of sanctifying grace doth much increase both in heat and brightnesse, when the winde of tribulation doth blow vpon it. And this commeth to passe, both because the Lord is then most willing to bestow vpon vs these rich treasures of grace and sanctification, when by these crosses and calamities wee are fitted to receiue them, and also because we then aboue all times, most earnestly desire to bee thus spiritually inriched, when as we are impouerished in worldly comforts, and vtterly spoyled of all earthly delights. For the Lord will not cast the seed of his graces into the ground of our hearts, before they are prepared to receiue them. And as the wise Husbandman will not hazard his wheat by sowing it in all kindes of Land, but maketh choise of that which is fittest, and then ploweth, falloweth, and harroweth it, that it may bee the better prepared to receiue the seed: so much lesse will the Lord sow that much more precious graine of his sauing graces, in the stony and thorny hearts of wicked worldlings, but maketh choice only of his elect, which being made good grounds by his alone goodnes, and the sole Sun-shine of his grace and fauour; hee first prepareth them for this holy seed by plowing, breaking vp and harrowing of their hearts full of naturall hardnesse, with troubles and afflictions, and then casteth it into them with a liberall hand. Hee will not giue his graces to the proud and lofty, who would contemne and despise them, but to the humble and lowly; and because our hearts are naturally haughty and exalted aboue measure, therfore the Lord first humbleth and presseth them downe with the waight of affliction, before hee will giue vnto them this spirituall aduancement. Hee vouchsafeth these precious gifts vnto none, but them whose hearts are inlarged to receiue them, because such alone wil esteeme them when they haue them; and whereas they are naturally streight, and haue this narrow roome, filled with carnall, and worldly loue, therefore he first emptieth them of this earthly trash by taking it from them, and then stretcheth and inlargeth the heart in holy desires with troubles and afflictions, and so satisfieth and filleth them with his heauenly treasures. He will not giue these spirituall dainties to be fed vpon by full stomackes, seeing they would loath this diuine sweetnesse and be cloyed with it: but he filleth the hungry with these good things; and because we naturally want this appetite, hee vsually getteth vs a stomacke and sharpneth our hunger, by with-holding from vs all worldly delicates, and by appointing vs to feed on the bread of affliction and water of sorrow. And as the Lord most willingly giueth his spirituall graces to those, who are by afflictions and tribulations fitted to receiue them: so doe they who are in this afflicted estate, aboue all others, esteeme these precious gifts, and accordingly desire, and with all diligence vse the meanes to attaine vnto them: for when by our afflictions wee are so humbled that wee become nothing in our selues, then doe wee most earnestly desire, that God by his grace and holy Spirit may be in vs all in all; when by calamities we are emptied of all earthly consolations, then doe we most eagerly hunger after these spirituall comforts: when we are dispoyled of worldly riches, honours, pleasures, health, strength and the rest; then doe we most couet to be inriched with that chiefe riches of Gods sauing graces which can neuer be taken from vs, and with great diligence seek them from God by Prayer, hearing the word, and vsing all other good meanes for the satisfying of our holy desires with vnwearied cheerefulnesse. And thus doe the faithfull, like painfull Bees, gather the greatest store of this sweet hony of Gods graces, out of the bitter Thyme of trouble and affliction; and grow most rich in God when they are most impouerished in the World. In regard whereof one calleth affliction the Mother of Christian vertues, because as in a fruitfull wombe, she breedeth, nourisheth and increaseth them to their perfect growth and full strength. The which is not to bee vnderstood of it, being considered in its owne nature, but as it is sanctified by God for this vse and purpose; for in her selfe this mother hath a barren wombe and dry breasts, or is only fruitfull in bringing forth sinne, vnlesse the Spirit of God, the Father of all Grace and goodnesse, doe make it fruitfull by infusing vitall power and strength into it; and these waters of affliction in themselues are ready to drowne vs, if they were not scattered with the breath of Gods Spirit, whereby they become like fruitfull showers fit to water vs, that these fruits of Gods sauing graces, may spring and grow in vs.

Tribulatio est virtutum omnium mater, Chrysost. Matth. 3. Homil. 9.

Q. Sect. 3. That God by afflictions increaseth in vs sauing knowledge and spirituall wisdome

But let vs descend to some particulars, and for orders sake, consider these graces as they respect God, or else our Neighbours and our selues: The graces which respect God, are either seated in the vnderstanding, mind and intellectuall part, or in the heart, will and affections, or in both together; or else the fruits of them all, appearing in our vnfeined repentance and new obedience; all which are either either confirmed and preserued, or else increased and multiplyed by our troubles and afflictions. The graces which are seated in our mind and vnderstanding, are knowledge and remembrance of God and his wil, which in his Word is reuealed vnto vs. The first grace is sauing knowledge and spirituall wisdome, the which is notably preserued, and exceedingly increased by crosses and calamities: for this fire of afflictions doth giue great light to the vnderstanding; and this sharpe eye-salue, though it doth for the present dazle the sight, yet afterwards it doth singularly cleere the eyes of the mind, so as they are much fitter to see spirituall things, and to discerne the wayes of God. And whereas prosperity, vsually making men drunke with worldly pleasures, doth so take away the heart, intoxicate the braine, and infatuate the vnderstanding, that it is not capable of the knowledge of God and spirituall things: when by a fast of afflictions wee are freed from this surfet, and by long abstinence haue these intoxicating fumes of worldly vanities taken away, then doe wee come vnto our selues, and recouer our vnderstanding, whereby wee are inabled to judge and discerne of spirituall things, and to conceiue of God and his will, as they are reuealed vnto vs in his Word: So the Wiseman saith, that the rod and correction giue wisdome. And the Prophet telleth the people, who were growne desperate in their wickednesse, that seeing they did not regard Gods Word and terrible threatnings, to be reclaymed by them from their sins; and nothing but feare, proceeding from sense of Gods judgements, would work vpon their hard hearts; therefore the Lord would inflict vpon them plagues and calamities, that these punishments might cause them to feare him, and this feare might make them so attentiue to his Word, that they might vnderstand it and profit by it; and there shall be only feare (saith he) to make you vnderstand the hearing; that is, the Word of the Lord, sounding in your eares by the ministery of his Prophets, which in your security caused by prosperity, you would not vnderstand, but scorned and contemned. Thus the people of Israel being in great afflictions, are brought in by the Prophet saying, one to another: Come and let vs return to the Lord: for he hath spoyled and hee will heale vs, &c. then shall we haue knowledge, and indeauour our selues to know the Lord. So afterwards hee saith, that being in great straights, by reason of their mighty enemies preuailing against them, they should cry vnto the Lord; My God we know thee. That therefore which Solomon speaketh of naturall children, may be truly said of the children of God; foolishnesse is bound in their heart, but the rod of correction shall driue it away from them. And as experience teacheth vs, that cockered children are seldome wise, because the Parents indulgence and fondnesse maketh the Childe wanton, and wantonnes is the cause of much foolishnesse; and contrariwise, that those, who are kept vnder a seuere discipline, doe most excell in knowledge, discretion & vnderstanding, because they are made hereby more watchful ouer their words and wayes, powdring them with wisdome, before they dare offer them to be tasted by their Gouernours: So likewise, when our heauenly Father suffereth vs to abound in earthly delights, and to haue the world at will, we become wanton through prosperity, and foolish through our wantonnesse: but when he nurtereth vs in the schoole of afflictions, we labour to informe our selues in those things which please or displease him, and so accordingly we frame our words and actions. An example whereof we haue in Nebuchadnezzar, who being in prosperity, was blind in his vnderstanding, and ignorant of the true God, from whence proceeded his foolish boasting and vain-glorious bragging: Is not this great Babell, which I haue built for the house of the Kingdome, by the might of my power, and for the glory of my Maiesty? Dan. 4. 27. 31. But when he was humbled by a grieuous affliction, then his vnderstanding was restored vnto him; and hee doth not foolishly magnifie himselfe, but giueth thankes vnto the most high, and prayseth and honoureth him that liueth for euer. Whereby it appeareth, that as the Sun-shine of prosperity doth so dazle our spirituall sight, and so dimme the eyes of our vnderstanding, that wee are not capable of the knowledge of God and heauenly things, so the darknesse of afflictions doth notably recouer and cleare them, inabling them to discerne the will of God, when the light of the Word appeareth to them. And this commeth to passe first, because in our afflictions we are made more diligent in harkning vnto those admonitions & instructions, which wee haue contemned in the time of prosperity, and are more industrious and laborious in learning those spirituall lessons of wisdome, when as wee feare the rod of correction, and doe feele the smart of our negligence and ignorance. So Elihu saith, that God openeth the eares of men by their corrections, and causeth them to hearken vnto his word in the time of trouble. Iob 33. 16. & chap. 33. 15. An example whereof we haue in Dauid, who professeth that it was good for him to haue been afflicted, that hee might learne Gods Statutes. Psal. 119. 71. So the Iewes when they were troubled in conscience, and afflicted in mind, through the sense which they had of their sins, doe exceedingly hunger after this sauing knowledge, crying out, Men and brethren what shall wee doe? Acts 2. 37. And the Iaylour, being in great feare and astonishment, and throughly humbled in the sight of sinne, came trembling, and fell

Chap. 16. 29. downe before Paul and Silas, saying: Sirs, what must I doe to bee saued? Secondly, these afflictions doe notably increase spirituall wisdome and sauing knowledge, as they doe season our naturall wit, and that knowledge which wee haue attained vnto by the light of Gods Word, making them which are vnsauoury and fruitlesse in themselues, to become sauoury and profitable. For, by our afflictions we haue experience, and by experience wisdome; in which respect it is truly said, that afflictions doe make fooles wise; for whereas almost none can make any vse of that knowledge which they haue by their owne wit and naturall vnderstanding (in regard whereof it is truly said, that wit is nothing worth, vntill it be dearely brought) no nor yet by the experience, which they haue by others euils: when their knowledge is seasoned and approoued by their owne experience, then they make vse of that they know, and euery notion in their vnderstanding thus confirmed, becommeth a principle to informe their iudgements, and a rule to reforme and direct their liues. And thus in our afflictions wee haue experience of Gods wrath and anger against sin, seeing he doth chastise and correct it euen in his owne children; and so hauing felt the smart of our former folly in committing it, we become wiser for the time to come, and will not easily bee allured to swallow this hooke againe, after we haue beene once pricked with it, though it bee couered with the inticing baits of worldly vanities; or to feed on the dainty meats of sinfull pleasures, when wee by experience finde what a bitter and loathsome after-taste they haue left behind them. Thus also we haue experience in our afflictions of Gods infinite wisdome, whereby he bringeth good out of euill, light out of darkenesse, blessings out of curses, and maketh the fruits of sin the meanes of saluation, causing vs to find a ready way into the ioyes of Heauen, by the gates of Hell, and the first flashes of hellish fire. And also of his omnipotent power, whereby he mightily effecteth all this which hee hath in his wisdome purposed, supporting vs in our greatest weakenesse, and defending vs when wee are most vnable to helpe our selues, against all the furious assaults of our malicious enemies. Thus we haue experience of his wise and powerfull prouidence, when as wee perceiue that all our afflictions, with whatsoeuer circumstances belong vnto them, are ruled by it; and though in themselues they are euill and hurtfull, yet that they are so wisely disposed, that in the end they turne to our good, and doe much further the saluation of our soules; of his infinite mercy and loue, whereby hee moderateth and mitigateth all our afflictions, so as they may not exceed our strength, and sweeteth them by the inward comforts of his Spirit, and the taste and feeling of his grace and fauour, that we haue more true ioy in them, than Worldlings in the fruition of all their pleasures: And finally of his truth, both in inflicting those chastisements which he hath threatned, and in performing of all his promises; both in strengthening and supporting vs whilest we are vnder the burthen of the Crosse, and in deliuering vs from all our afflictions, in such time as is most conuenient and seasonable, both for his owne glory, and the aduancing of our spirituall good. Yea, not onely doe we by afflictions attaine to the knowledge of Gods excellencies and perfections, but also of the Worlds mutability and vanity. For howsoeuer looking vpon men in their flourishing prosperity we thinke their estate so excellent that it cannot be matched, and so permanent that it cannot be changed; when wee see our health turned into sicknesse, and strength into weakenesse, our riches into pouerty, and our honours into disgrace and contempt, our mirth into mourning, and our liberty into imprisonment, then do we plainly discerne that worldly felicity is but a smoake or dreame which sodainly vanisheth and leaueth nothing behind it; and therefore we will not, when we enjoy it, put our confidence in it, nor set our hearts vpon it, and as wee will not much rejoyce when it befalleth vs, so will we not vnmeasurably mourne when it departeth.

And therefore, seeing these worldly afflictions doe so much increase sauing knowledge and heauenly wisdome, this consideration should mooue vs to beare them with patience and comfort, and in as much as our earthly losses, are farre exceeded by our spirituall gaine; and our outward grieuances are abundantly recompenced with inward benefits. For this wisdome is better than precious stones, and all pleasures are not to bee compared vnto her, her fruit is better than gold, euen than fine gold, and her reuenewes better than fine siluer. It is more precious than pearles, and all things that thou canst desire, are not to be compared vnto her. It is that by which we haue our very essence, and being in Christianity; for as by naturall reason and vnderstanding we are men, so by sanctified reason, spirituall wisdome, and sauing knowledge wee are Christian men; and (as our Sauiour saith) this is that life, whereby wee must liue for euer, to know the only true God, and whom he hath sent Iesus Christ. It is the fountaine and foundation of all true Religion, and the only sure ground of all other sauing graces: for as they all arise from faith, so faith it selfe from this sauing knowledge. In all which respects holy Dauid is so farre from thinking a man miserable that is afflicted with worldly crosses that hee accounteth him happy, when as he profiteth by it

Psal. 34. 4. That the benefit of spirituall wisdome much exceedeth our hurt by afflictions.

Prou. 3. 11, 13 & 8. 11.

Iohn 17. 3.

it in wisdome and knowledge. Blessed is the man (saith he) O Lord whom thou chastisest, and teachest him in thy Law.

The other grace seated in the intellectual part of the soule, is the remembrance of God and his will, which is also much increased and renewed by afflictions. For whereas plenty and prosperity make vs to looke vnto, and rest in our owne prouision, in secondary causes and inferiour meanes, forgetting in the meane time God, who is the author of all our good, because wee are so supported with outward helpes, that we doe not sensibly feele any neede of his assistance: when wee are forsaken of these worldly succours, and are left of these false friends in our greatest neede, then doe wee begin to remember him, who neuer forsaketh those that trust in him, and is alwayes willing, able, and ready to comfort vs, when we flee vnto him in our distresse. An example whereof we haue in the prodigall child, who whilest hee had goods in his owne hands, spent all his time in reuelling and riot, in banqueting and whoring, and neuer thought of his gracious Father, from whom hee had receiued these guifts, which hee thus abused, till (all being consumed) hee was brought into extreame pouerty and misery; and then hee remembred him, and thinketh of returning. And as in our afflictions wee are put in remembrance of God himselfe by standing in need of helpe and comfort from him; so also of his word and commandements, and those profitable admonitions, instructions, and consolations, which wee haue formerly heard out of them. And whereas in the time of our prosperity, wee carelesly forget them, and negligently cast them behinde our backs; when wee are pinched with miseries and crosses, wee doe not onely diligently hearken vnto those profitable lessons which are presently deliuered vnto vs, but also for our comfort, recall that which we haue formerly heard; and is now through sloth and neglect careleslly cast (as it were) into some by-corner of the memory. And as the seede in time of drought, lyeth long after it is sowen buried vnder the clods, and seemeth lost and perished because it appeareth not; so the seed of Gods Word being sowen in the furrowes of our hearts doth lie buried oftentimes vnder the heauy clods of worldly incumbrances, appearing neither to our selues nor others: but when it is soaked and steeped in these waters of tribulation, then it sprouteth, springeth vp, and bringeth forth abundant fruits to the ioy of others, and comfort of our selues. And as slothfull truants, whilest their play dayes last, cast their bookes careleslly vnder the cupboord, and for want of care and attention quickly forget that which they haue beene long in learning; but when they are constrained to come to the schoole, and doe feele the smart of their former negligence, then they labour to recall to minde their lost lessons, and recouer that which was slipt out of memory: so it vsually fareth with vs; for whilest the world affoordeth vnto vs the play dayes of prosperity, wee reuell and play the wantons, securely casting all those instructions, which wee haue learned in the schoole of Christ, behind our backs, as though we should neuer haue further vse of them; but when our heauenly Schoolemaster putteth an end to our play, and with the rodde of affliction whippeth vs for our former sloath, then doe wee take paines to regaine our lost learning, and to recall to minde those fruitfull lessons which haue beene taught vs in this spirituall Schoole. In which respect afflictions are of singular profit; in that by an vrgent necessity they make vs to esteeme and treasure vp in the closet of our memories these treasures of knowledge, which we would otherwise vilifie and cast out of doores: for so are wee ruled by the senses, which onely apprehend present objects, that we value euery thing according to present and carnall vse, and doe not care for the glad tidings of the Gospell, and the sweete consolations of Gods Spirit before we be brought into miserie and distresse. And as he who is in perfect health contemneth the Physitian, and is ready to cast his drugs and medicines out of doores; but being visited with some grieuous sicknesse, doth honour and reward him, and thinketh the best roome in his house not to good for his potions and cordials; and as in the time of secure peace, we let the sword rust in the scabberd, and our armour vpon the wall; but in time of warre doe highly value them, and doe rub, scoure, and gird them to vs: so whilest in the time of prosperity wee haue no sense and feeling of our spirituall diseases, wee careleslly cast at our heeles the physicke of our soules, and neuer gratefully remember our spirituall Physitians, because wee doe not finde any neede of them; wee let the sword of the spirit rust in the scabberd, and the booke of God to lye moulding vnder our cup-bords, and neuer thinke of preparing and fitting our spirituall armour, that wee may haue it in readinesse, because, though wee bee in the greatest danger, yet we can discouer no enemy which is ready to assault vs: but when wee are diseased in our worldly estates, and feele the smart and paine of miseries and calamities; when afflictions like mighty enemies doe assault and vexe vs, and wee finde our selues so weake, that wee cannot in our owne strength, make resistance; then doe we highly esteeme, and accordingly thinke vpon both our spirituall Physitians, and their physicke of our soules, which they prouide for the procuring of our ease, and the recouery of our health; then doe wee thinke of drawing the sword of the spirit, and buckling vnto vs the armour of Gods graces, that wee may bee inabled to withstand the violence of our enemies, and obtaine the victory in this dangerous conflict.

CHAP. XXI.

That God by our afflictions doth much confirme, strengthen and increase our faith.

¶ Sect. 1. That afflictions strengthen our faith by making vs more carefull in the vse of the meanes; and by exercising it with these tryals.

THE next grace is faith, which is seated both in our head and heart, in our vnderstanding and also in our wil & affections, for it is not only a perswasion which is an act of the vnderstanding arising from knowledge, but also a willing assent and application of that we beleeue vnto our selues for our owne vse; vpon which followeth our voluntary cleauing vnto the Lord, and our reposing and sole resting vpon his power, prouidence and gracious promises in Iesus Christ. And this faith is exceedingly strengthned and increased through our troubles and afflictions; first because we are then most carefull in the vse of the meanes for the increasing and confirming of it, as hauing in our sense and feeling much more vse of it, than in the time of our prosperity. For whilst we liue in secure peace, and doe not find our selues molested with any enemy, wee cast the shield of faith aside, and count it but a burthen, if wee should beare it: but when Sathan and the world daily cast against vs the fiery darts of trouble and affliction, which as soone as they hit vs do in a sensible manner burne and torment vs, then doe wee make precious account of this impenetrable shield, and are neuer at rest, but whilst we find it fast buckled vnto vs. Secondly our faith is strengthned and increased by afflictions, as they are vnto it a spirituall exercise, wherein all the vertue and powers thereof are tryed and imployed. For as when our bodies are inured to sloth and idlenesse, their strength doth languish and decay; but when they are in daily exercise, they increase much in vigour and ability; so when our faith hath no spirituall exercise, it is in short time enfeebled and groweth faint and weake; but when wee are, in aduersity and affliction, vexed with sickenesse, pinched with pouerty, forsaken of friends, blemished and defamed for our loue to goodnesse, and subiect to innumerable dangers; then our faith hauing enemies to resist and aduersaries to striue and wrastle with, doth stirre vp its owne vigour, gather all its strength and powers together, and finding it selfe too weake to make resistance, doth earnestly seeke to haue its strength encreased and renued. And to this end it first wrestleth with God by prayer, instantly imploring and beseeching him to perfect the good worke which he hath begun, and so to strengthen and confirme it, that it may not be destroyed and troden vnder foot in this spirituall conflict; and also meditateth in Gods gracious promises, whereby he hath assured all those that beleeue in him, that hee will neuer leaue and forsake them, but will heare them in the day of trouble, deliuer them out of all their dangers and giue a good issue to all their tentations. And thus our faith is exercised and by exercise increased in our afflictions; the which is one of the most speciall ends, why the Lord doth bring vs into these troubles and calamities. For whilst wee haue the world at will, and are on all sides hedged in with the blessings of prosperity, our faith may seeme both to our selues and others a meere speculatiue vertue, whereof there is little vse, and like an vntryed armour which doth not assure vs of defence in the day of danger; but when we are in the middest of afflictions, it is tryed with the bullets of tentations, and the more it is tryed the more it is approued, and the more it is approued, the more it is strengthned against the next incounter. And in this manner was Abrahams faith exercised: for after that the Lord had made his gracious promise vnto him of multiplying his posterity, and that in his seed all the nations of the earth should bee blessed, hee long exercised his faith with that great affliction of his wiues barrennesse, which seemed directly to crosse Gods promise and ouerthrow all his hopes; and gaue him no child till he and his wife were growne so old, that in naturall reason the promise seemed impossible to bee performed. With which exercise his faith was so strengthened and increased, that after hee had his promised sonne, and was commanded for his further tryall to sacrifice him with his owne hands, he became also victor ouer this tentation, because by the former tryall hee had learned that God was able to raise him to life againe, seeing in respect of the deadnesse of Sarahs wombe, he had before after a sort (as the Apostle saith) receiued him from the dead. Thus also after he had promised to giue vnto the posterity of Abraham the land of Canaan, he long exercised their faith, first by bringing them into a cruell bondage in the land of Egypt, and after their deliuerance by afflicting them with so many calamities in the wildernesse, that they seemed, not to haue escaped, but onely to haue exchanged their misery and tribulation. And so the Lord after hee had promised Dauid the crowne and kingdome, did exercise his faith with innumerable afflictions, and by this exercise did wonderfully fully confirme and increaſe it, as appeareth by the hiſtory of Samuel, and that ſingular booke of the Pſalmes, the moſt part whereof was penned in the time of his trouble and perſecution.

Heb. 11. 19.

Thirdly our faith receiueth much ſtrength and power in our afflictions, becauſe in them wee haue experience of Gods truth, both in his threatnings, in that for our ſinnes he hath inflicted thoſe chaſtiſements and iudgements which in his word he hath denounced; and alſo in his promiſes; ſeeing he performeth all which hee hath vndertaken, not onely in aſſiſting vs in our afflictions, but alſo in deliuering vs in due time; in both ſhewing his infinite wiſedome, omnipotent power, and all-gouerning prouidence, whereby he hath diſpoſed of all things to the beſt. For when by experience wee find, that the Lord hath ſhewed vs great mercy in croſſing of our moſt earneſt deſires, hath brought vnto vs much comfort out of our greateſt calamities, turned our feares and dangers into ſafe ſecurity and joyfull tryumph, and hath made the Whale, which in ſwallowing ſeemed to deuour vs, to bee a meanes of our ſafety and deliuerance: then is our faith by this experience maruellouſly ſtrengthned and increaſed, and wee thereby are inabled to indure the next afflictions with much more patience and contentment. And as the Pilot hauing eſcaped out of many ſtormes, and the ſouldier out of many dangerous conflicts, are ſo heartned hereby that they are maruellous confident and courragious when they are toſſed with tempeſts, and aſſaulted with their enemies; whileſt vnexperienced paſſengers and freſh-water ſouldiers tremble and feare in the leaſt danger: ſo thoſe who haue beene exerciſed in afflictions, and haue had manifold experience of Gods mercy, power and loue, both in aſſiſting them in their troubles, and in deliuering them out of their greateſt dangers, haue their faith in God hereby ſo ſtrengthned and increaſed, that they are much more patient in afflictions, and more courragious in perils, than thoſe who were neuer exerciſed with theſe tryals; becauſe they know that God is immutable in his goodneſſe, and is now as ready and willing to helpe and deliuer them as hee was before. So Dauid concludeth that becauſe he had found God merciful and powerfull in deliuering him from the Lyon and the Beare; therefore he would aſſuredly deliuer him in like manner from the vncircumciſed Philiſtine, and make him to become as one of them. And Paul being raiſed by God, when the ſentence of death by the verdict of nature, had paſſed againſt him, by this experience confirmeth his faith for the time to come in this aſſurance, that the Lord would againe deliuer him, if ſo bee he were ouertaken by the like danger.

Fourthly, afflictions confirme and increaſe our faith as they are notable meanes of working or renuing our repentance; for as ſinne doth wound and weaken our faith, making vs to doubt of Gods fauour by reaſon of ſelfe guiltineſſe; ſo repentance doth cure and ſtrengthen it, becauſe by it (through Gods mercy and free promiſes made in Chriſt) ſinne is done away, as though it had neuer beene committed, and ſo wee are aſſured that wee are reconciled vnto God and receiued againe into his former fauour. And fiftly our faith is ſtrengthned by our afflictions, as they giue aſſurance vnto thoſe who are exerciſed with them and profit by them, vnto amendment and newneſſe of life; that their ſinnes which are here in this world thus corrected, ſhall neuer appeare to their condemnation in the world to come. For as they who proſper and flouriſh in their wicked courſes, haue juſt cauſe to feare, that they are in Dines his eſtate, who had all his good in this life, and was reſerued to torment in that life which is endleſſe and euerlaſting: ſo they who haue no ſooner ſinned but they are preſently corrected for it, and by their chaſtiſement reclaimed and amended, may aſſure themſelues, that as now they are like vnto Lazarus in his paines, ſo they ſhall hereafter be made like vnto him in his ioyes and comforts, and not ſuffer both now and then too, ſeeing (as the Apoſtle plainly telleth vs) wee are purpoſely chaſtened with theſe afflictions, that we may eſcape the condemnation of the world.

But moſt notably is our faith ſtrengthned and increaſed by our afflictions, as they are vnto thoſe who profit by them in newneſſe of life, infallible ſignes and notes of their election, vocation and adoption. They are ſignes of our election, for as the Apoſtle teacheth vs, thoſe whom God hath predeſtinate to be made like vnto his Sonne in glory, hee hath alſo predeſtinate to be made like vnto him in afflictions; and as by this holy decree his naturall Sonne was firſt to ſuffer, and then to enter into his glory; ſo wee, who are adopted in him, muſt follow him in the ſame way to our heauenly home, firſt ſuffering, and then raigning with him as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh. This alſo appeareth in the Lords owne ſpeech to the people of Iſrael, you onely (ſaith he) haue I knowne (or choſen) of all the families of the Earth, therefore I will viſit you for all your iniquities. And to Ananias concerning Paul: Go thy way, for he is a choſen veſſell vnto me, &c. and I will ſhew him how many things he muſt ſuffer for my names ſake. The conſideration whereof ſhould much eſtabliſh vs in all our afflictions and perſecutions which though to thoſe who are the inſtruments of our euil, they are tokens of perdition, yet vn-

5. Sect. 3. That afflictions do ſtrengthen our faith by cauſing vs to renew our repentance: and aſſuring vs that our ſins thus corrected ſhal not come into condemnation.

Luk. 16. 25.

1. Cor. 11. 32.

5. Sect. 4. That afflictions ſtrengthen our faith as they are ſignes of our election. Rom. 8. 29.

Luk. 24. 26.

2 Tim. 2. 12.

Amos. 3. 2.

Act. 9. 15, 16.

Phil. 1 28.

to vs who patiently suffer them they are signes of our saluation through the grace of God, as the Apostle telleth vs. In regard whereof the same holy Apostle doth not only beare with patience and comfort his troubles and grieuous afflictions, but being to maintaine his credit against the false Apostles, he maketh choise of his sufferings to glory and rejoyce in them, rather than of those excellent graces of Gods holy Spirit wherewith he was so richly adorned.

2. Cor. 11. 23. to 31. & 12. 6. 4.

5. Sect. 5. That afflictions strengthen our faith as they are signes of our effectuall calling:

Thus also our afflictions are notable signes of our effectuall calling, whereby wee are seuered from the world, and admitted into Gods Church and family. For they are Gods liuery and cognisance which he giueth all to weare who will bee his seruants; for, as many as will liue godly in Christ Iesus shall suffer persecution, and our Sauiour telleth vs, that if any man will come after him, and waite vpon him as his seruant and disciple, he must deny himselfe, and take vp his crosse daily and follow him. Neither may we liue like libertines when wee are intertained into his family, and runne on in wicked courses without correction: but wee must make account that our wise Lord and master will keepe vs vnder a seuere discipline, chastising vs for our sinnes, that we may bee reclaimed from them, and not suffering vs to goe on in euill wayes without checke and controulement, to his dishonour and our destruction: and howsoeuer hee suffereth others that are without to prosper in their wickednesse, and without any punishment to adde sin vnto sin, yet he will be honoured of those who draw neere vnto him, and as the Prophet and Apostle speake, he will cause iudgement to begin at his owne house, and first plague the Citie where his name is called vpon. As therefore when the Mason and and Carpenter polish their stones, and square their timber with their tooles and axes; it is a signe that they haue chosen them for the vse of building, whereas that which is vntouched is left as refuse, fit for nothing but to bee cast into the high-way, and to bee burned in the fire: So when the Lord doth polish, square and plaine vs with troubles and afflictions from the knots and knobs of sinne and corruption, it appeareth hereby, that hee hath made choise of vs to be stones in the building of his spirituall Temple; whereas those which are let alone, and not hammered and squared by this heauenly workman, are rejected as refuse stuffe, which is altogether vnfit for this holy building. Against the world onely loueth its owne, and therefore when our Sauiour Christ by the preaching of the Gospell hath chosen and called vs out of the world, then presently it beginneth to maligne and hate vs, and to vse all meanes whereby it may bring vpon vs misery and affliction. In regard whereof we may conclude, that when we are hated of the world we are beloued of God; when it basely esteemeth vs and cruelly vseth vs, as though wee were the very outcasts and off-scouring of all things, then may we bee assured (if we make good vse of these afflictions, by contemning the world which contemneth vs, & drawing neerer vnto God by repentance and hearty prayer) that the Lord highly valueth vs, and hath chosen and seuered vs like pure gold and good graine, out of this masse and heape of drosse and chaffe.

1. Pet. 4. 17. Ier. 25. 29.

Ioh. 15. 19.

6. Sect. 6. That afflictions strengthen our faith as they are signes of our adoption.

Finally as our afflictions are notable signes of our calling & admission into Gods family, so also of our adoption whereby wee become sonnes of God and heires of his promises. For (as the Apostle speaketh to another purpose) the heire as long as he is a child differeth herein nothing from a seruant, though he be Lord of all, but is vnder tutours and gouernours vntill the time appointed of the father; and is subject to the like chastisement and correction: yea oftentimes our heauenly Father (according to the custome of men) when his sonne and slaue doe both offend, correcteth his child, but letteth the other escape vnpunished, because he is purposed to thrust him out of doores, and to take no further care of him; whereas he intendeth to make his sonne his heire, and therefore keepeth him vnder discipline, that he may be found worthy to receiue the inheritance. And this the Apostle plainly expresseth, saying, whom God loueth hee chasteneth, and hee scourgeth euery sonne whom he receiueth: If then yee indure chastening, God offereth himselfe vnto you as vnto sonnes; for what sonne is it whom the father chasteneth not? If therefore yee bee without correction, whereof all are partakers, then are yee bastards and not sonnes. Thus also God promiseth Dauid, that he would choose Salomon for his Son, and approue himselfe to bee a Father vnto him, by correcting him for his sinnes, and continuing his loue vnto him. I will bee (saith he) his father and he shall be my sonne: and if he sinne I will chasten him with the rod of men, and with the plagues of the children of men, but my mercy shall not depart from him, &c. And therefore we must not doubt of our adoption, and imagine that wee are not the children of God, because wee indure such grieuous and tedious afflictions; for though Salomon was Gods chosen child, and was called Iedidiah, because hee was beloued of him; yet hee saith, that if hee sinned hee would correct him, but in the meane time, would not take his mercy from him. So though Israel were chosen for Gods first borne sonne, and were as much more precious in his eyes than all other nations in the Earth, as the purest gold than the baseest drosse, or the wheat than chaffe; yet were this

Gal. 4. 1.

Heb. 12. 8.

2. Sam. 7. 14.

1. Sam. 2. 25.

this beloued people grieuously afflicted in a miserable bondage and captiuity, whilest Pharaoh and the Egyptians their cruell enemies, insulted ouer them as their lords and masters, in all prosperity; and whilest the cursed Cananites liued in voluptuous pleasures, hauing all those delights and comforts, which the land of promise could yeeld vnto them. And thus also before the flood, the wicked Caynites, and after the flood, the filthy Sodomites, had all the pleasure and glory of the world, whilest the posterity of Shem, and the worthy Patriarches, passed their time like pilgrimes and strangers, and were turmoyled with innumerable afflictions. Yea the Lord not only spareth the bondman and slaue, when hee scourgeth his beloued sonne; but oftentimes correcteth his child by the hand of his seruant: according to that of the Apostle. He that was borne of the flesh, persecuted him that was borne after the spirit: the which is so euident by the innumerable examples of all ages, that it were but lost labour to stand vpon it. The consideration whereof as it may keepe vs from enuying the impunity and felicity of worldly wicked men, and from grudging and repining against Gods prouidence, because they who sinne more, suffer so little, and we who sinne lesse suffer so much; they who rebell against God and despite him with their abominations, haue plenty of worldly blessings, and all things at their hearts desire, and we who serue and feare him suffer miseries and want necessaries; so may it much confirme our patience and increase our comfort when we are vexed with afflictions, and feele the bitter smart of Gods chastising hand: seeing it is a signe that they are rejected as slaues, and are therefore left to their owne liberty; and wee adopted as sonnes who are kept vnder seuere discipline that wee may bee reclaimed from our sinnes, incited to the performance of all good duties, and so bee prepared and fitted to receiue our patrimony. Neither haue they herein any more priuiledge than the Oxe, who being appointed to the shambles, is freed from the yoke, and suffered to runne at liberty and take his pleasure in faire greene pastures; or wee more hurt than the Oxe inured to labour, who indureth the yoke, suffereth more paines and feedeth vpon bare fields, because his master louing him, is purposed to reserue him for his owne vse. In regard whereof as wicked men haue no just cause of glorying and rejoycing in their worldly prosperity, whereby they are but fatted against the day of slaughter; so the faithful haue little cause of sorrow and impatiencie in their afflictions, seeing their present smart increaseth their future hopes, and these corrections which they suffer and profit by, are vnto them vndoubted signes of their adoption, and that God is their louing father in that he taketh such care for their amendment? For as when a man, taking two children as they are committing the same fault, doth correct the one and let the other goe vntouched, wee seeing it, are ready to conclude, that he is a father or gouernor to him that is chastened, and but a stranger to him that escapeth, seeing hee taketh no care for his reformation: so when wee see and feele that God correcteth sharply those sinnes in vs which others commit & escape vnpunished, let vs not grieue so much in our smart and paine, as rejoyce to haue this assurance of our adoption. And this an holy father illustrateth and inforceth by this similitude. A man (saith he) hath two sonnes; the one he chasteneth, the other hee leaueth to his owne courses. This faulteth haynously and is not corrected by his father; the other can scarce looke awry but hee is rebuked or scourged. But why is hee let alone, and this beaten? surely because he intendeth to make this his heire and to put the other from the patrimony, seeing he conceiueth no possible hope of his amendment. Now he that is kept vnder this seuere discipline, out of his childish folly judging all things according to present sense, thinketh his brother happy because he is not beaten, and lamenting his owne estate is ready to say: My brother hath done such and so great euils, and at his pleasure transgresseth the commandements of my Father, and for all his faults hath not so much as a hard word giuen him; but I am beaten if I but step awry. Wherein hee bewrayeth his folly and want of wisdome, seeing hee onely looketh to that which hee suffereth, and not vnto the inheritance reserued for him &c. And therefore (as hee saith in another place) patiently beare the hand of thy heauenly father vpon thee, and though thou bee a good sonne doe not refuse his discipline; for hee correcteth vs that hee may not take his mercy from vs. If thou be contumacious let him beate thee, that hee may not in just displeasure disinherit thee &c. for why should the adopted sinfull son grudge to be corrected when he seeth Gods onely and innocent Sonne to bee whipped and so seuerely handled? Let him in rage flie vpon thee, yet hee is thy father: Let him whip, afflict and breake thee (as it were) in pieces; yet he is thy father. If therefore thou cryest, cry as vnder the hand of a father with humility and meekenesse and not with pride and indignation. Thy sufferings which thou bewailest are a medicine and not a punishment, correction and not damnation: doe not put backe the rod, if thou wouldest not be put backe from the inheritance. Doe not regard what smart thou hast by thy stripes but what place thou houldest in thy fathers testament.

August. enarrat. in Psal. 93.

August. in Psal. 88. Concione 2.

Noli repellere flagellum si non vis repelli ab hereditate. Noli attendere quam pœnam habeat in flagello, sed quem locum in testamento. August. in psa. 102. enarrat.

testament, For if (as the Apostle reasoneth) wee haue had the fathers of our bodies which corrected vs and haue giuen them reuerence: should we not much rather be in subiection to the father of spirits that wee may liue? For they verily for a few dayes chastened vs after their owne pleasure: but he chasteneth vs for our profit that wee may bee partakers of his holinesse.

Heb.12.9.10.

CHAP. XXII.

That God by our afflictions confirmeth and increaseth in vs our affiance, hope, loue, feare, and humility.

1. Sect. 1. That by afflictions our affiance in God is confirmed and increased.

AND thus it appeareth that our faith is much confirmed by afflictions, as in other respects so especially as they are to those who profit by them, notable signes of their election, vocation, and adoption. The like also may bee said of other graces, which are chiefely seated in the heart, as affiance, hope, loue, feare of God, humility, and the rest. For first our affiance and confidence in God is notably strengthned and increased by our afflictions, when as being forsaken of all humane helpe and inferiour meanes, he by his owne wisedome and power saueth and deliuereth vs. And this is one speciall end why the Lord in mercy and loue, bringeth vs into tribulation and distresse, that wee may not trust in secundary causes and worldly helpes, when wee haue experience of their weakenesse and insufficiency, but may put our whole affiance in him, hauing made tryall of his all-sufficiency, and omnipotent power, whereby he helpeth and deliuereth vs, when as they forsake and faile vs. For naturally wee put our affiance in outward and inferiour meanes, because they are subject to our senses, and trust in any thing neere at hand, rather than in God, who alone is able to releeue and succour vs, because hee seemeth farre off to carnall reason, and is onely beheld and apprehended by the eye and hand of Faith. And as those who are ready to fall into some deepe pit, being astonished with suddaine feare, doe not consider what is sufficient to stay them; but catch hold of that which is next vnto them, and so oftentimes pull that vpon them which they hoped would haue held them vp: so we no sooner fall into any danger, but we presently lay hold vpon worldly helps, and trust to bee deliuered by earthly meanes, as by our owne wisedome, strength, and riches, or by the aide and support of our friends, and the arme of flesh; and therefore the Lord in mercy doth often times withdraw them from vs, because they are but weake reeds and broken staues, which would faile and deceiue vs, when we most rested on them; to the end that being forsaken of these vaine succours and supports, wee might with full affiance rely vpon him, who is alone able to helpe and saue vs. And thus when the people of Israel being ouertaken with dangers, did not put their trust in God for their deliuery, but did flee for helpe to the Assyrians and Egyptians; the Lord caused them not onely to forsake them in their greatest need, but also to bee vnto them the meanes of their great misery and calamity, by inuading their country ouercomming and leading them captiue, and miserably vexing and afflicting them, in the land of their captiuity. By which experience, comming to a sight of their vaine and sinfull confidence, they presently leaue and forsake it, and putting their whole affiance in God, cry out vnto him; There is none like vnto thee O Lord: thou art great, and thy name is great in power. And after the same manner wee, herein no better than they, trust in worldly helpes rather than in God, thinking that our wisedome and power shall deliuer vs from dangers, our friends from pouerty and want, and that our Physitions, shall preserue vs in health, or recouer vs out of sickenesse; and therefore the Lord bringeth these things wherein we trust vnto the touch-stone of tryall, causing vs to fall into perils, pouerty, and diseases, that wee may haue experience of the weakenesse and vanity of these earthly succours, and then finding our wisedome to be so infatuated, that in steede of freeing, it doth the more intangle and insnare vs in the net of dangers; that our friends do not only forsake vs in our neede, but also further oppresse vs with fraud and violence; and that our Physitions doe rather increase our paines, than ease vs of them; wee leaue these vaine helps, and flee vnto the Lord, resting vpon his sole power and promises for comfort and deliuerance. And being releeued by him in our greatest distresse, by this experience our confidence and affiance in him is exceedingly strengthened and increased for the time to come; for as wee are confident in the assistance of such a friend, who hath often helped vs in our greatest dangers; as wee trust much vnto such a Physition, who hath in former times recouered vs out of many desperate diseases; and boldly rely in the storme vpon the approued skill of such a pilot, as hath formerly brought vs safe out of many dangerous tempests into the desired hauen: so when the Lord hath deliuered vs out of many tribulations, and hath beene our helpe and comfort in our grieuous miseries, when as being forsaken of all worldly succour, our estate seemed vtterly desperate; then is our trust and affiance in God so strengthned and increased, that wee are ready to say with Dauid, that though wee should should walke through the valley of the shadow of death, wee will feare no euill, because God is with vs, and his rod and staffe doe comfort vs; and with the Church to sing that Song of Thanksgiuing; God is our hope and strength, and helpe in troubles ready to be found. Therefore will we not feare though the earth be moued, and though the Mountaines fall into the middest of the Sea. An example whereof wee haue in the Apostle, who hauing receiued the sentence of death in himselfe, because hee should not trust in himselfe, but in God, which rayseth the dead, and being deliuered through the power and goodnesse of God from this deadly danger, doth hereby confirme his affiance in him for the time to come, concluding, that because he already had experience of Gods might and mercy in deliuering him, therefore hee would trust in him, that yet hereafter hee would deliuer him. As also in holy Iob, who hauing had manifold experience of Gods loue and assistance in his miseries and afflictions, groweth hereby so confident and courageous that hee professeth; though God should kill him, yet he would still trust in him.

Iere.10.6.

And thus also doth the Lord by our afflictions exercise, strengthen, and increase our hope; for then is our spirituall hope in the full tide, when our worldly hopes are at their greatest ebbe; then doe we with all feruency and patience waite vpon God for the accomplishing of his promises, when wee are frustrated of all earthly expectation: and then we fixe this sure anchor vpon Gods neuer decaying Truth, looking for comfort & stay from him alone; when our worldly hopes appeare false and deceiuable, leauing vs desperately forlorne in our greatest miseries, when as they promised vnto vs greatest security. Vnto which our spirituall hopes when God answereth according to his Word and Truth, and hath often giuen vnto vs that helpe and deliuerance which wee expected from him, then doth this experience worke hope (as the Apostle speaketh) strengthening and assuring vs in our expectation, that the Lord will helpe and deliuer vs, as in former times. And this hope maketh vs not ashamed, in our greatest miseries; because though we wait long, yet are we sure at length to be satisfied in our expectation. And though helpe and deliuerance out of afflictions seeme as impossible to naturall reason, as for olde Sara to haue a sonne, yet if by manifold experience wee haue found, that our hope in God did neuer faile vs, then will wee learne with Abraham, as to beleeue aboue beliefe, so also to hope aboue hope, being fully assured that hee who hath promised, is able to effect it.

So our loue of God is exercised, confirmed, and increased by our crosses; for this loue towards God (as the Spouse in the Canticles speaketh) is such a vehement flame, and (like wild-fire) so vnquenchable, that much waters of affliction cannot extinguish it, nor whole flouds drowne it. Yea rather these waters of tribulation, being cast vpon it, doe (like the water in the forge) adde much heat to this holy affection, when withal, the Lord with the breath of his Spirit doth blow vpon it. And this will manifestly appeare, whether wee respect the instruments of our corrections, the world, and wicked men, or the chiefe and principall cause, which is our gracious God, and mercifull Father. For the more the world maligneth and persecuteth vs, the more our loue is weaned from the world, and the lesse that we loue the world, the more is our affection inflamed towards God. And therefore the Lord being jealous of our loue, and desiring to haue our whole hearts without corriuall, or copartner; doth suffer the World to vse vs roughly and vnkindly, that our loue being withdrawne from it, may be fixed wholy vpon him. And as the louing mother when shee seeth her childe fond on her seruant, and so neglect her who so much affecteth him, doth cause the seruant when the sonne offendeth to correct him, and to vse him hardly, that being estranged in his affection from him, of whom he receiueth such hard measure, his whole loue may be set on her: so when we dote vpon the World with excessiue fondnesse, and neglect our heauenly Father, who deserueth all our loue; he maketh it, as being his slaue, to correct all our faults, and to vse vs harshly and vnkindly, not only to bring vs vnto amendment, but also to weane our hearts from this pernicious lone, to the end that hee may haue the whole interest in our affection. Yea, our loue towards God is increased, not only in regard of these inferiour causes & instruments of our afflictions; but also, if lifting the eyes of our mindes higher, wee doe take knowledge of the chiefe and supreame cause of our chastisements, and discerne that it is the hand of our heauenly Father, who vseth these rods and scourges to correct vs for our sinnes. For as we find by worldly experience, that cockering in the parent, breedeth contempt in the childe; and that contempt and loue doe neuer match together; whereas seuerer discipline worketh in his heart awfull reuerence, which is a true mixture of feare and loue, and maketh him to shew all affectionate duty to his parent, that he may obtaine his fauour; and so by continuall inuring of him in these duties of loue, it is at last made hearty and habituall, though happily feare and formality did first begin it: so if our heauenly Father should cocker vs with pleasure and prosperity, his kindnesse would cause contempt, and contempt would like a a fretting Canker eate out the heart of loue, and make vs neglect all filiall respect: but by creaseth and confirmeth our loue towards him. Cant. 8.6,7.

kee-

keeping vs vnder strict gouernment, correcting vs when wee doe amisse, hee worketh in our hearts an awfull reuerence, whereby wee are incited to the performance of all filiall duties, and to shew all loue towards him, that so wee may gaine some assurance of his loue and fauour towards vs, of which we make highest accompt, when as it is endeared by the difficulty of obtayning it. Besides our loue towards God is much increased in our afflictions, when as in his sharpest chastisements, wee plainly discerne his fatherly loue and goodnesse towards vs, and that not only in regard of their end, which is the amendement of our liues, and saluation of our soules, but also in respect of his whole course and carriage in the inflicting of them. For looking into our afflictions with a spirituall eye, we shall plainly discern Gods wise prouidence, both in the inflicting and disposing of them. Wee shall perceiue how hee bridleth and curbeth in the rage of our enemies, so that though their malice be neuer so great, yet they are not suffered to goe beyond their tether. We shall see his fatherly loue and care whereby he moderateth and measureth our afflictions according to our ability to beare them, making our crosse lighter when it is ready to oppresse vs, or vs stronger to sustaine the waight. Wee shall sensibly find, how he supporteth vs with his might, when we are ready to faint, and lifteth vs vp againe, when wee are foiled or falne. We shall in our outward crosses feele the inward comforts of his Spirit, the which are so pleasant and delightfull, that they are sufficient to sweeten a world of miseries, and as the Apostle saith, The more our sufferings abound in vs, the more our consolations shall abound through Christ; the more he restraineth vs from feeding vpon worldly delicates, which would glut and cloy, but neuer satisfie vs; the more liberall Banquet hee maketh vs of spirituall blessings, giuing vs to drinke full flagons of his loue, filling vs with inward feeling of his fauour, and with those precious Cates of his sauing graces. Finally, seeing our loue towards our benefactour is proportioned according to our valuation of his gifts, and seeing wee are brought to esteeme of Gods benefits rather by wanting, than by enjoying them; Hereby it commeth to passe, that we loue the Lord much better when hee taketh his gifts from vs, than when wee doe securely possesse them. For by the want of them finding their value, we then know and acknowledge how much we are bound vnto God for suffering vs graciously so long to enjoy them; wee come also by this consideration to a sight of the excellency of those benefits, which still God is content to continue vnto vs; and so are more louing and thankfull for the remaynder of Gods blessings, than when wee had all without any partition; thinking our selues (with the afflicted Church) more beholding vnto God, that wee are not vtterly consumed, than wee did when wee abounded in worldly prosperity, and wanted nothing that our hearts desired. Lament. 3. 22.

2. Cor. 1. 5.

Thus also our feare of God receiueth much growth and strength by our afflictions, which vsually is weakned and impaired with that wretchlesnesse and security which ariseth from long prosperity. For howsoeuer our feare of God being a filiall affection, should chiefly spring from faith and assurance of his loue towards vs, and from that loue which is inflamed in our hearts towards him, by the apprehension of this his vndeserued fauour, and the consideration of those innumerable benefits which as fruits of this fatherly affection, haue been communicated vnto vs; chiefly fearing to offend and displease such a gracious God whom wee so loue, because hee so loueth vs: yet so is our Spirituall part hampered with the flesh, and our filiall affection assaulted with carnall negligence and security, that (herein like vnto earthly children) wee feare our heauenly father most, when he holdeth in his hand the rods of correction, & when we see that by offending him, we make our selues obnoxious vnto his heauy judgements, the which wee cannot possibly escape, either by resisting his power or auoyding his presence. And so wretchlesse we are in all good duties, and so much delighted with the pleasures of sinne, that if we had a priuiledge of impunity, doing what wee list without controlement, and did not feare the smart of correction which followeth sinne, as well as the displeasure of our louing Father, wee would grow dissolute in our courses, and be hardly kept either in awe or order. And therefore the Lord, out of his mercy and loue towards vs, maketh vs to feare him for his judgements, seeing wee will not, as wee ought, feare him for his mercies, and to stand in awe of him to auoid our owne paine, when wee take no care to auoid his fatherly displeasure: as we may see in the example of holy Dauid himselfe, who hauing often felt the smart of Gods chastizing hand, cryeth out: My flesh trembleth for feare of thee, and I am afraid of thy iudgements. For the burnt child dreadeth the fire, and hee who hath once beene scorched with the heat of Gods wrath, and felt the smart of his displeasure, will hardly euer after be allured with the sweetnesse of sinne to incurre the danger thereof againe, knowing that it is a fearefull thing to fall into the hands of the liuing God. Whereas they who neuer tasted the bitternesse and sowernesse of these heauy judgements, and neuer felt the smart of these whips, are ready to nibble at euery worldly baite, and to hazard the committing of any sinne, out of wanton

Psal. 119. 120.

Heb. 10. 31.

con-

contempt and hope of impunity. For as the Wise man speaketh, because sentence against an euill worke is not executed speedily therefore the heart of the children of men is fully set in them to doe euill. To which purpose the Lord thus reasoneth with his owne Church and people; Whom diddest thou reuerence or feare seeing thou hast lied vnto me, and hast not remembred me, nor laid it to thy heart? Is it not because I held my peace, and that of long time, therefore thou feareſt mee not? And therefore seeing afflictions worke in vs the feare of God, whereby we are incited to all good duties, and restrained from sinne, which would in this life fill our consciences with horrour and terrour of Gods wrath, and cast vs into eternall condemnation in the life to come; great cause haue we to kisse our earthly crosses with comfort and contentment; seeing they doe not so much crucifie vs as our sins, by the death of the flesh preserue vs from death euerlasting, and by pricking vs in the sides hasten our speed in the way of righteousnesse and holines, which at last will bring vs to endles joy, & heauenly happines.

Finally, the Lord vseth these afflictions, as a notable meanes to worke and increase in vs that excellent grace of humility, bringing vs thereby to a sight and sense of our own vilenesse and vnworthinesse to a true acknowledgement of our infirmities, weaknesse, and great insufficiency, and to a voluntary subjection and submission of our wils in all things to the good will and pleasure of God. For whereas in the time of prosperity we are so blinded with naturall pride and selfe-loue, that we neuer come to a cleere knowledge of our selues, nor to a true valuation of our own gifts and good parts; but are puffed vp with selfe-conceit, hauing a great opinion of our owne excellency, strength and abilities; imagining that though God should leaue vs to our selues, we could stand in our own might, resist any tentation, and encounter and ouercome any enemy: when God bringeth vs into trouble and affliction, and exerciseth vs with those vsuall trials of sickneſſe, pouerty, disgrace or losse of our neerest and deerest friends; then are we by them brought to a sight of our own frailty and infirmity, and by this experience find, how vnable we are by our owne strength to indure the weakest triall, or to get the vpper hand ouer the least tentation. And then casting from vs our vain selfe-confidence, we implore the Lords assistance, and trust wholly in the power of his might, through which obtaining victorie, we disclaim all praise as not due vnto vs, and returne it vnto God to whom of right it appertaineth, saying with the Church, not vnto vs O Lord, not vnto vs, but vnto thy name giue the glory. And whereas in the time of our prosperity, we would haue all the glory our selues, and will scarce admit the Lord to be a sharer with vs; In our afflictions we see and acknowledge that nothing belongeth vnto vs but shame and confusion of face, and whatsoeuer is praiseworthy in vs, we ascribe it wholly vnto the Lord, as vnto the sole author and fountaine of all our good. Finally whereas in our prosperity we grow so wilful and stubborne, that wee cannot with meeknesse and patience, submit our will to the wil of God, but rather wish that ours, than his, should be fulfilled; and wax through pride and insolency so impatient, that we storme and rage, when we are but touched with any sleight affliction; as though we thought that some wrong and iniury were offered vs by God, when we, who haue in our owne conceit deserued so well, are thus put to suffer this smart and misery: this fire of affliction melteth and softneth our hard and stubborne hearts, making them tender and plyable vnto the good will & pleasure of Almighty God, and these chastisements and corrections, bringing vs to a sight and sense of our manifold and grieuous sins, doe cause vs to judge and condemne our selues as worthy of farre greater punishments, and then doe wee not only with meeknes and patience suffer these fatherly corrections, but are ready to acknowledge, that it is the wonderfull mercy of the Lord that wee are not vtterly consumed. And as cockered children doe struggle and striue with their parents, when they goe about to chastise them for their faults, and with great impatiency roare and cry out, when they feele the smart of the first stripes; but when they see them resolued to continue and redouble their blowes, til they haue broken them of their stubbornesse, they at last become as milde as Lambes, and with all meeknesse and humility submit themselues to their Parents pleasure: so when our heauenly Father first taketh vs in hand after wee haue beene long cockered in plenty and prosperity, and beginneth to correct vs for our sins; wee murmur and repine, struggle and striue with great impatiency and rebellion against his Will and Prouidence, but when he still beateth vs with these rods, and either continueth or increaseth our afflictions, & addeth one crosse vnto another, then our proud and sturdy stomacks being mastered, wee humble our selues vnder his holy hand, and indure whatsoeuer correction he is pleased to inflict with all meeknesse and patience. And this is a principall end why the Lord afflicteth vs, that he may abate our pride, tame our vnrulinesse, and worke in vs that excellent vertue of humility. For so himselfe saith, that hee afflicted his people for the space of forty yeeres in the Wildernes, that he might humble and proue them; And the Apostle Paul affirmeth of himselfe, that God gaue him that pricke in his flesh, and the messenger of Satan to buffet him, that hee might not be

Deut. 8. 2.

2. Cor. 12. 7.

exalted aboue measure with the multitude of reuelations. The which his end he powerfully effecteth, as we may see by many examples. Thus Dauid in his greatest afflictions
2. Sam. 15. 26. humbleth himselfe before God, saying, Here am I, let him doe to me as seemeth good in his eyes. So Roboboam, who, whilest he enjoyed peace and prosperity, was so proud and insolent; when he was brought into the straits of affliction by reason that the King of Egypt
2. Chro. 12. 6. made Warre against him, humbled himselfe before the Lord, acknowledging that the Lord was iust. And Nebuchadnezzar who in pride
Dan. 4. 27. 31. of heart had so gloriously boasted of his might and majesty, being grieuously afflicted humbleth himselfe and giueth vnto God all prayse and glory. Yea, wicked Manasses himselfe, who had raged against God and his Saints, with wonderfull insolency, when hee was led captiue by his enemies in fetters and chaines, then was this wild Colt and sauage Lion broken and tamed, and hee
2. Chro. 33. 12. humbled himselfe greatly before the Lord his God. Yea, euen where there hath beene no place for true humility in the reprobate hearts of wicked men; afflictions haue wrought so powerfully in them, that they haue beene brought hereby to an outward and hypocriticall humiliation, as we may see Exod. 10. 16. in the example of Pharaoh and Ahab, who
1. Kin. 21. 27. in their afflictions confessed their sinne and humbled themselues before the Lord. And thus it appeareth that the Lord by affliction doth powerfully pull downe our pride, and worketh and increaseth in our hearts that excellent grace of humility, which being the foundation and ground of other vertues, doth, the deeper it is laid in our hearts, make the building of spirituall grace so much the more firme and strong, that the tempests of tentation cannot ouerthrow it. Of which the afflicted Church hauing good experience, professeth it to be good for a man to beare the Lamen. 3. 28, 29. 30. yoke of affliction euen in his youth. Seeing hee sitteth meekly alone and keepeth silence, because he hath borne it vpon him. He putteth his mouth in the dust if there may be hope. He giueth his cheeke to him that smiteth him, and is filled full with reproach. The consideration whereof should moue vs to beare all our afflictions with patience and comfort, seeing we receiue this singular fruit by them, and haue this excellent grace of humility, which is the ornament that graceth all our other graces in the sight of God and men, both begun and also continued and increased in vs; and that damnable sinne of pride mortified and subdued, which is so odious and abominable in the sight of God, that hee loatheth his owne gifts which are tainted and stained with it; and chooseth rather to suffer his dearest children to fall into other grieuous sinnes, that in the sight of them they may be humbled, than indure that pride should harbour in them; because their other sinnes doe not so much dishonour God, nor hinder the saluation of their soules, as this sinne of pride, if it were suffered to raigne in them in its full strength. In which respect one saith; I dare be bold to affirme, that it is profitable for the proud to fall into some open and manifest sinne, that hereby they may displease themselues, who formerly sinned by too much pleasing: So Peters displeasure, was more wholesome to his soule when hee wept and wayled, than his pleasing of himselfe when he presumed.

August. de ciuit. dei lib. 14.

CHAP. XXIII.

That God by our afflictions worketh and increaseth in vs repentance and new obedience.

AND thus haue I shewed that afflictions are vsed by God as a notable meanes to worke in our minds and hearts all sanctifying and saluing graces: It now followeth to declare how the fruits of these graces, repentance and new obedience, are by these fatherly corrections furthered and increased. For as afflictions doe notably helpe forward our effectuall calling and first conuersion vnto God, so do they much further our repentance, & prouoke vs continually to renew the act therof after our many relapses and daily slips into sin. And when hauing resolued to walke in the way of holinesse and righteousnesse towards our heauenly home, wee are in our passage allured to turne out of the right path into the by-wayes of sin and wickednesse, by hauing the baites of worldly vanities set before vs; the Lord casteth into our way these Thornes and Bryars of affliction and tribulation, making thereby our wandring and digressing so distastfull and vnpleasant, that we are neuer at rest vntill we be returned by repentance into the right way againe. So one saith that God striketh into the heart of man terrour and feare, that hee may weane and with-draw it from the loue of the World, and pricketh him with tribulations, that hee may not loue his way better than the end of his journy, nor his pilgrimage better than his Country. For his fatherly chastisements produce sorrow and compunction, bring into vs feare and contrition, draw out of vs infirmity and infection, and cause vnto vs strength and recobery of our health. But this will better appeare if wee particularly shew how affliction furthereth vs in all the duties and actions which are performed by vs in the practice of repentance; for first, when God correcteth vs, wee looke backe vnto our former courses, and consider and examine our selues what sins wee haue committed,

Q. Sect. 1. That by afflictions we are to examine our waies, to see our sinnes, and to bewaile them with bitter griefe.

Tantum poterat tribulatio, produxit moerorem & compunctionem, induxit timorem & contritionem, eduxit languorem & infirmitatem, adduxit vigorem & curationem. Idiota incert. orthodoxus. de patient. vera contempl. c.

mitted, which haue moued the Lord to inflict vpon vs these iudgements and chastisements; and by this examination we come to a sight and sense of sin, and to an humble acknowledgement, that we suffer nothing from God, but that which our sin hath justly deserued. An example whereof we haue in Iacobs sonnes, who by their troubles and affliction were brought to a sight and feeling of that grieuous crime, of betraying and selling their brother Ioseph. Wee haue verily sinned (say they) against our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soule, when he besought vs, and we would not heare him: therefore is this trouble come vpon vs. And because, pride, selfe-loue, and liking of our most esteemed sinnes, doth commonly dazle our sight and make vs euen starke blinde in this search and disquisition; therefore doth the Lord oftentimes obserue (as hath beene shewed) an analogy, proportion and similitude, betweene the quality of the sinne and the correction which he inflicteth for it; and so leadeth vs, (as it were) by the hand, that we may come to find and feele it by his guidance and direction. An example whereof we haue in Dauid, whose sinne of murther and adultery, was corrected with the Rape of his Daughter and Concubines, and the murther of his children and subiects by one another. Secondly, when by affliction we are wakened out of our security, brought to looke backe and to say, What haue I done; and when by searching and examining our owne consciences we see and acknowledge, how haynously we haue offended God, and feele the burthen and smart of our sin pinching & oppressing vs both at once, then are wee hereby moued to bitter griefe and hearty sorrow, because wee haue offended our gracious Father, and forced him by our wickednesse to proceed in these seuere courses for our correction and reformation. For when our hearts are so hard that sinne alone will not worke in them sorrow and remorse, afflictions and sense of smart being added to them as a double weight, doe bruise and presse out of them sighes and groanes: and this rod of correction beating vpon these hard Rockes, doth cause them to yeeld streames of teares, and (as it were) to wash and bath our sinfull soules in the waters of true repentance. For howsoeuer in Gods deerest children griefe for the afflictions themselues which they suffer, hath commonly the first place, yet this sorrow for smart, doth alwayes end in sorrow for sinne, and when correction with sense of paine hath made the heart soft and tender, and hath filled (as it were) the cysternes of the eyes with plenty of water, then grace commeth and altereth the vse, and whereas it was prouided by nature for the deploring of our affliction, it is now imployed and powred out by Grace for the bewayling of our sinnes, which are the deseruing cause of all our smart and misery.

Thus also doth the Lord by our afflictions worke in vs a true hatred of sin; and whereas it is so sweet to corrupted nature, that we are ready (as licorous children doe sugar) to keepe it vnder our tongue; yet when it is imbittered with this gall of afflictions, wee spit it out like a loathsome medicine, and begin to abhorre that before-liked meat, when such vnpleasant sawce is mingled with it. By them likewise are wee brought to an humble confession of sinne vnto God whom wee haue offended, and to an earnest desire of pardon and forgiuenesse, that so being freed of our sinnes, we may also be eased of our smart. And thus Dauid, when the hand of God was heauy vpon him day and night, and his moysture thereby turned into the droughts of Summer; layd open his sins before the Lord by humble confession, and spread in his sight all his bonds of debt, that hauing his sins pardoned and bonds cancelled, he might be deliuered from that affliction and correction which did accompany them. Then (saith he) I acknowledged my sin vnto thee, neither hid I mine iniquity: for I thought I will confesse against my selfe my wickednes, and thou forgauest the punishment of my sinne. And furthermore hauing tasted and felt the bitternes & smart of these loathsome sawces and sharpe whips, we flee sinne with all watchfull care for the time to come, which (as we haue found by experience) hath made vs obnoxious to them, and heedfully auoyd the committing of any wickednesse least we thereby displeasing againe our heauenly Father, doe moue him to returne into his hands these rods of chastizement and to correct our new sinnes with new afflictions, which in all likelihood will be more sharpe and seuere, than those which wee suffered in time past, because we haue no better profited by our former corrections. And this benefit of afflictions mouing vs to flee and forsake sinne, is implyed in that excellent prayer made by Salomon: When Heauen (saith he) shall be shut vp, and there shall be no raine, because they haue sinned against thee; and shall pray in this place and confesse thy Name, and turne from their sinne when thou doest afflict them; then heare thou in Heauen and pardon the sinne of thy seruants, &c. Neither doe afflictions serue onely as a meanes to make vs see, bewayle, confesse, hate and forsake our sins, but also doe incite and prouoke vs to serue the Lord in all holy and Christian duties which respect Him, our Neighbours, or our selues; nor are they behoefull alone for the mortifying of our sins, but also for the quickning and inabling vs to performe all the workes of holinesse and righteousnesse which God in his Law requireth of vs. For though our hearts (through the gift and

9. Sect. 2. That by afflictions wee are moued to hate our sinnes, to confesse them vnto God, to flee & forsake them, and to serue the Lord in the duties of holinesse & righteousnesse.

Psal. 32. 4, 5.

1. King. 8. 35, 36

grace of God) are become good ground, and fit to receiue and retaine the seed of Gods Word, yet are they made much more fruitfull by the Winter of affliction, and by hauing the cold Snow of trouble and misery lying vpon them. Though wee are already inflamed with a true zeale of Gods glory, yet doth this heauenly fire burne much more feruently when the wind of tribulation doth blow vpon it: though for the present it seemeth to bee kept downe and hindred from burning by these tempestuous blasts. And this the Apostle plainly expresseth: No chastising (saith he) for the present seemeth to be ioyous but grieuous; yet afterward it bringeth the quiet fruit of righteousnesse vnto them which are thereby exercised. To which purpose another saith, that the sweetest showers doe not so cause the seed to bud and grow; as this shower of teares doth make the seed of godlinesse to sprout and spring. For when the soule is washed and the minde watered with these teares of repentance, the bud and branch of wholsome Doctrine within a while springeth and shooteth vp. The consideration whereof should much comfort vs in all our afflictions, seeing this profitable fruit of repentance ariseth from them; for thrice happy are those blowes and stripes which by making the body to smart for the present, doe inflict mortall wounds into our killing sinnes, and preserue both body and soule from these deadly stings, which otherwise would wound them vnto death euerlasting. Most blessed vnto vs are these rods and whips which by causing the skin to smart, doe cure those deadly wounds in our hearts and soules; and by vexing vs with their stripes, doe keepe vs from vexing God with our sinnes. And most happy may wee thinke our selues when the Lord vseth these afflictions, as spurs and goades in our sides to pricke vs forward in the way of holinesse and righteousnesse, when in our selues we are drowsie, dull and dead, vnto all good actions; and as cords to draw vs on in holy and Christian duties, when in our owne disposition we are backward and sluggish.

Heb. 12. 11.

Nam sic semina detectum imber germinare & crescere facit, vt pietatis semen excitat & vernare facit ex lacrymali rueus imber. &c. Chrysost. ad pop. Antioch. Homil. 4. Tom. 5.

Q. Sect. 3. That God by afflictions worketh and increaseth in vs obedience to his will. Heb. 12. 11.

And thus it appeareth that by afflictions our repentance is daily renewed and increased: The like may be said of our new obedience, and that whether wee vnderstand that actiue obedience, whereby we striue and indeuour to doe the will of God; or that passiue obedience, by which we are content with meeknesse and patience, that Gods Will may be done in vs. Both which the holy Apostle propoundeth vnto vs in our onely patterne and precedent Iesus Christ, whose example he exhorteth vs to follow, both in willing and meeke suffering that which our heauenly Father inflicteth on vs, in ceasing from sinne, and in liuing for the time to come, not after the lusts of men, but after the Will of God. Concerning the former wee are to know, that whereas wee like pampered or restie Horses, are ready either to goe out of the way of righteousnesse, or else to stand still, or goe slowly forward; the Lord vseth afflictions as a staffe to beat vs into the way, and to make vs to returne into our right course, from which we haue digressed; and and also as a spur or goade to pricke vs on when we make a stand, or but small haste in going on in this spirituall journey. And whereas like children we cast the Commandements of our heauenly Father behind our backes, when wee are too much cockered: and grow careless and negligent in all good duties which wee owe vnto him, being left to our owne liberty; when he strictly calleth vs to account, and finding vs idle and slothfull, doth sharply chastise vs for our neglect of that duty which hee hath required; then doe wee with all care and diligence informe our selues in his holy Will, treasure vp his Commandements in our hearts and memory, and with all readinesse put in practice, as occasion serueth, whatsoeuer duty is enjoyned vnto vs. So that this sweet incense of our new obedience doth then send forth the most delightfull odour, when as it is offered vnto God by the fire of affliction: And as the sweetest Rose doth spring out from among the sharpest prickles, so the duties of obedience which wee owe vnto God, doe then appeare in their chiefe beauty and brauery; and yeeld the most sweet and pleasing sent, when they grow and sprout vp from among these prickles and bryars of affliction and tribulation. And this the Apostle plainly testifieth, namely that though afflictions in themselues are vnpleasant and grieuous, yet being watered with the dew of Gods grace, they bring forth the quiet fruit of righteousnesse vnto them that are thereby exercised. So the Prophet telleth vs, that seeing Gods iudgements are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world shall learne righteousnesse. Yea, so necessary are these afflictions for the keeping of vs in the right way, and the furthering of our fruitfulnesse in holy duties, that when wee are freed and secured from them, wee are ready to erre out of the path of Gods precepts, (as we may see in the example of Dauid, who out of his owne experience saith; before I was afflicted I went astray; but now I keepe thy Word) yea, and to become barren and vnprofitable, not yeelding any store of these fruits of obedience; whereas when wee are continually vnder the rod, and feele the smart of our sloath and negligence; then doe wee heedfully remember what God requireth, and dare not falter and faile in the performance of our duty, as we may see in the example of the afflicted Church, who saith; All this is is come vpon vs, yet doe wee not forget thee, mei-

Heb. 12. 11. Esay 26. Psal. 119. 67. Minus pij vnius ad omnem perfectionem pertinet. Greg. epist. lib. 6. cap. 37.

Psa. 44. 17. 18. Vt terra nisi cultas fœcunditer, sterilis est, tamen non sic humanus dominium denegat, sed è contrario gemat spinas.

neither deale wee falsly concerning thy couenant: Our heart is not turned backe neither our steps gone out of thy path, &c. In which respect we are fitly compared vnto Walnut-trees, which are so much the more fruitfull, by how much they are the more beaten; or vnto arable grounds, which bring forth no good graine but weeds and thistles, briars and thornes, vnlesse they bee broken and torne in sunder with the plow and Harrow.

Wee are indeed a fruitfull vineyard of Gods owne planting, and wee who were wild branches barren of all good fruit of holinesse and righteousnesse, are through Gods infinite mercy and loue ingrafted into the true Vine Iesus Christ, from whome receiuing all our life and sappe, wee are inabled to bring forth the pleasant grapes of new obedience: but yet if wee were let alone, and suffered to runne out with vncontrouled liberty wee would like the fruitfull Vine, which is neuer pruned, returne to our old naturall wildnesse, and bring forth no other fruit, than those sowre grapes of iniquity and sinne. And therefore our heauenly vintager for his owne glory and our good cutteth away the superfluities of our licencious liberty, and pruneth vs with this pruning knife of trouble and afflictions, that being kept short in our worldly and carnall desires, wee may become more fruitfull in all holy duties. So our Sauiour saith; I am the true vine, and my father is an husbandman. Euery branch that beareth not fruit in mee, he taketh away: and euery one that beareth fruit he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. Wee are fruitfull trees of righteousnesse planted by God himselfe; but yet that wee may continue in this good estate, wee had great neede to bee washed with the boysterous stormes of tribulation, and to be nipped with the pinching frosts of trouble and affliction, that so those cankers and caterpillers of pride, forgetfulnesse of God, and carnall security which the summer of prosperity and wretchlesse ease doe breed in vs may be killed and destroyed; as also that wee may be hindred from sending forth the vnprofitable shutes of will-worship and superstition, through the vnseasonable warmth of preposterous zeale; which, if they were not nipped in with the feare of God arising from his correction, and making vs carefull that wee offer nothing vnto him, but that pleasing seruice which hee hath required; wee should spend our whole strength in bringing forth these fruits of our owne inuentions, and be vtterly barren and bare of those timely ripe fruits of new obedience. Wee are through the election of grace Gods faithfull seruants, but yet not thorowly purged from our seruile disposition; for the more bountifull our master is, the sooner we forget him; the more richly hee rewardeth vs, the more negligent wee are in performing of our duty; and the more liberally wee are vsed, the more licentious we wax, growing vnto such pride and insolence, that whatsoeuer wee lust after, wee thinke to bee lawfull, and make our will the rule of all our actions: and therefore we force our Lord and master to alter his course, to with-draw his wages of worldly blessings, to handle vs roughly, and to keepe vs vnder seuere discipline, correcting our negligence, and forcing vs to the performance of our duties with chastisements and afflictions. Which meanes if they be not powerfull enough to worke in vs this reformation, then doth he oftentimes turne vs out of his outward gouernment and protection, and suffereth our enemies to preuaile against vs, and to bring vs into their slauery, that finding the difference of these two seruices, and growing weary of this present bondage; wee may more earnestly desire to bee re-entertayned by our old master, and being admitted may be more carefull and diligent in the performance of our duty. And thus the Lord dealt with the Israelites; for though they had neglected his seruice, and sinned against him, yet he saith because they had humbled themselues hee would not destroy them, but would send them shortly helpe and deliuerance; Neuerthelesse they should for a time become the seruants of Shishak that they might know the difference betweene the seruice of the Lord and the seruice of the kingdomes of the Earth. 2. Chro. 12. 8.

2. Sect. 5. That these fruits of new obedience springing from afflictions, should moue vs to beare them with patience and comfort.

Seeing therefore the Lord by our afflictions doth not intend our hurt, but out of his meere loue, and mercy vseth them as a notable meanes to make vs more fruitfull in all holy and Christian duties, which shall hereafter be crowned with all glory and felicity; let the expectation of this rich harueft of holinesse and happinesse replenish our hearts with patience, comfort and spirituall rejoycing in the winter of afflictions, seeing there is no proportion betweene our paine and the profit which it bringeth. Wee are trees of righteousnesse which Gods right hand hath planted, let vs not therefore feare to bee cut and pruned with troubles and afflictions, seeing God thus purgeth and pareth away our superfluous branches that we may bring forth more fruit, as our Sauiour teacheth vs. Yea rather wee had great cause of feare, if wee were exempted from these calamities, for as that is a fruitlesse tree which is suffered to grow wild and vntouched, and is neuer beaten with poles nor shaken with mens hands, nor hit nor hurt with any stones or cudgels; which is therefore daily in danger to be cut downe and cast into the fire, because it doth no good by standing and growing: so it is a signe that wee are fruit- Esa. 61. 3. Ioh. 15. 2.

lesse trees still growing in the wild wood of the world, which must one day be cut downe and cast into euerlasting fire; if our heauenly husbandman taketh no care to purge and prune vs with crosses and afflictions, and if no blowes or strokes of aduersity and tribulation doe light vpon vs, who haue farre greater cause of sorrowing in our expectation of our future burning, than of rejoycing in our present flourishing. Wee are vines of Gods owne setting, whose glory and excellency consisteth not in the broadnesse and beauty of our leaues, nor in the handsomnesse and straightnesse of our body and branches; but onely in our fruitfulnesse, whereby wee bring forth great plenty of the ripe and sweete grapes of holinesse and righteousnesse; and therefore when we haue the beauty and brauery of our outward estate taken from vs, and haue these leaues of earthly vanities blowne away with the winds of aduersity, and our superfluous stemmes of worldly substance pruned and plucked from vs in this winter of affliction, there is no cause of griefe and mourning, seeing our chiefest excellency is not hereby impaired, yea rather because it is much aduanced, in that wee are made more fruitfull, by how much the more we are by these afflictions pruned from our superfluities, this may justly increase our ioy and comfort.

§. Sect. 6. That God by afflictions maketh vs more deuout and zealous in the duties of his seruice.

But for the better clearing of the former point, let vs descend vnto some particulars, and insist in some speciall fruits of this new obedience. And to this end let vs consider, that by these our afflictions weeare made much more deuout; diligent and zealous in performing of all holy and Christian duties of Gods seruice, than when wee flourish in prosperity; the which is so euident that it needeth no other proofe or witnesse than common experience in others, and the testimony which euery mans conscience is ready to giue vnto this truth by that which he findeth in himselfe. For who seeth not that when we abound with earthly blessings wee grow forgetfull of God, and negligent in his seruice, either not performing it at all, or but with great coldnesse and drowsinesse, in meere formality and hypocrisie, because wee seeme then to stand in our owne strength, and to bee so well stored with our owne prouision, that wee neede not his helpe for our preseruation and defence? whereas when wee are brought into the streights of afflictions, and are dispoiled of all our worldly succour; when we feele the smart of pouerty, sickenesse, imprisonment, infamy; and haue no meanes of our owne whereby wee may bee deliuered; when wee are not only sensible of present paine, but apprehend future dangers; and vnto our priuate euills, expect, that God will for our sinnes adde those publicke miseries of plague, famine, warre and desolation: then are wee awakened out of our drowsie lethargie of security, shake off our sloth and negligence, and finding that all our helpe is in the Lord both for deliuerance from present smart, and preseruation from approaching calamities, we thinke how we may appease his anger, and make him propitious, that together with his wrath the iudgements which wee feele or feare may bee remoued from vs. And then with all diligence and deuotion wee worship and serue the Lord not for forme & fashion, but with all intention of mind and feruency of zeale, that so our seruice may bee pleasing and acceptable in his sight. The which great difference in mens cariage and behauiour will euidently appeare, if wee will but compare flourishing courtiers with poore cotagers; the mariners which are in a dangerous storme, with those which are arriued in the safe hauen; those which are sicke, weake and in expectation of death, with those who are lusty, healthy and in their full strength; prisons, with theaters; burialls with banquets; and those who are inuaded by their enemies and in danger of vtter desolation, with those who inuade them and haue got the victory. For as among the one sort a man shall seldome obserue any example of religion, piety and the true feare of God, but contrariwise contempt and neglect of all the duties of Gods seruice, blasphemous swearing, impious cursing, prophanation of Gods sabbaths, wantonnesse, ribaldry and vnchast dalliance, lying, dissembling, treachery and supplanting one another, gaming, reuelling, drinking, gormandising and such like fruits of darkenesse: so among the other wee shall finde, that the fire of affliction hath inflamed the heat of their deuotion, making them to breake off their sinnes by vnfained repentence, and to turne vnto the Lord with an earnest desire and indeauour to performe all the duties of his worship and seruice, in that manner and measure which he requireth; then they humble themselues before God in fasting and prayer, acknowledging their impotency and insufficiency to defend or deliuer themselues, and vnworthinesse to receiue any helpe and comfort from God. And yet being incouraged by his gracious promises, and the experience of his loue and mercy; they flee vnto him as their onely refuge, protector and defender, and place all their hope and affiance in his alone helpe and almighty assistance. Then they receiue his word with feare and trembling, and withall reuerence and attention harken vnto it, that their sinnes which haue brought them into all their miseries, may bee mortified and slaughtered by the sword of the spirit: that they may bee informed in the knowledge of Gods will, and also by efeffectuall reasons and powerfull exhortations, may be perswaded and pricked forward to the performance and practice of that which they learne and know, to the end that by this meanes they may be deliuered from their present afflictions vpon their reformation and amendment, and may not be indangered to suffer the like or greater miseries for the time to come; that they may haue their patience confirmed and encreased with such arguments and reasons as the Word of God plentifully yeeldeth, which will much lessen their miseries and make the waight of all their afflictions much more light and easie to bee borne. Finally being forsaken of worldly comforts, they doe with so much the more diligence harken vnto the word of God, that thereby they may replenish their soules with spirituall consolations arising from the feeling of Gods loue, and fauour towards them in this their afflicted estate, and the assurance of future happinesse in the life to come. For as those who flourish in worldly prosperity, doe with Ahab refuse to heare the word of the Lord, because it prophecieth no good vnto them, but telleth them that they haue their portion in this life: and that after the fruition of their worldly ioyes, they must come into iudgement, and render a reckoning of their abused blessings and mispent talents; so they who are in affliction doe with hungring appetite feed vpon this foode of their soules, and with reuerent and chearefull attention listen vnto this heauenly ambassage, because it assureth them, that if they make an holy vse of these fatherly corrections, they shall haue heauenly mirth, after their earthly mourning, laughter and reioycing, after their wailing and weeping, a most delightfull country and glorious kingdome, after their painefull pilgrimage and weary iorney; and that these light and momentany afflictions, shall cause vnto them a far most excellent and eternall waight of glory.

But aboue all other parts of Gods worship and seruice, afflictions and miseries doe make vs most frequent and feruent, diligent and zealous in powring forth our prayers and supplications vnto God. For whereas in our prosperity we either vtterly neglect this duty, or performe it carelesly and slothfully, more for custome than conscience sake, and for forme and fashion, rather than out of any respect of duty which wee owe vnto God, or of any neede which wee thinke we haue of his helpe: when we are brought into miseries and calamities, and haue a sense and feeling of our owne wants, and of the great need which wee haue of Gods assistance, then doe we flee vnto him by earnest prayer, crauing his aide and helpe for the supplying of our wants, ease of our griefes, or protection from dangers. And as the Child, fearing nothing, is so fond of his play that he strayeth and wandreth from his mother, not so much as thinking of her; but if he bee scared or frighted with the sight or apprehension of some apparant or approaching danger, doth presently runne vnto her, cast himselfe into her armes and cry out to bee saued and shielded by her: so we securely enjoying the childish sports of worldly prosperity, doe so fondly dote on them that wee scarce thinke of our heauenly Father, but when perils and dangers approach, and are ready to seise vpon vs, then doe we flee vnto him, and cast our selues into the armes of his prouidence, and protection, crying and calling vnto him by earnest prayer, for helpe and deliuerance in this our extremity and distresse. The truth whereof will more manifestly appeare, if wee consider the examples of the faithfull in former times, who being in affliction haue shewed themselues forward in performance of this duty; thus Hezechias being besieged by the hoast of Senacherib flieth vnto God as his only aide by effectuall prayer, whereas being deliuered in the time of his prosperity, he was ready to glory in his owne prouision of riches, and to rely too much vpon his treasures. So what excellent prayers and Psalmes did holy Dauid make in the time of his afflictions, flying vnto the Lord, as vnto his onely rocke and refuge, shield and strength; but being possessed of his kingdome, and become famous through many victories, glorying in his power, and relying too much vpon his owne forces, he giueth commandement to number the people. Yea euen Manasses himselfe whose heart was full of idolatry, his mouth with blasphemies, and hands with blood, whilest hee flourished in his kingdome; when he was led captiue by his enemies, and fast bound in fetters and chaines, powred forth effectuall prayers vnto the Lord his God. Neither was this the practice of some priuate men onely, but euen of the whole people and Church of God; for though in their prosperity (as the Lord himselfe obserueth) they turned their backs vnto him and not their face, yet in the time of their trouble they say; arise and helpe vs. So the Prophet Esay saith; Lord in trouble they haue visited thee, they haue powred out a prayer when thy chastning was vpon them. And the Psalmist speaketh to the same purpose, when hee slew them (saith hee) they sought him, and they returned and sought God earely. Yea speaking of the manifold kinds of miserie wherewith the faithfull are exercised, hee maketh this the foote of his song: then they cryed vnto the Lord in their trouble, and he deliuered them out of their distresse. And this euery man may find verified in his owne experience, for such is is our corruption, that whilest we abound

Esa.37.1.2.3.

2.Sam.24.
2.Chro.33.12.

Iere.2.27.

Esa.26.16.

Psal.78.34.

Psal.81.7.&
107.6.&c.

with

with worldly blessings, as we set our hearts vpon them by louing them aboue measure, so also in trusting and relying vpon them without reason; and howsoeuer they are but vaine hopes and helpes to saue and deliuer vs, yet when we may haue free recourse vnto them, wee seldome and slackly flie vnto the Lord for aide and succour. But when he taketh from vs these earthly idols, and emptieth our hearts of all worldly confidence, bringing vs into desperate dangers, and hiding from vs all inferiour helpes; then hauing no other place of safety vnto which we may resort, wee flie vnto the Lord for succour and relieſe, crying out with the Psalmist, O Lord giue vs helpe in trouble, for vaine is the helpe of man. And with good Iehoshaphat, O God wilt not thou iudge them? for there is no strength in vs to stand before this great multitude that commeth against vs, neither doe wee know what to doe, but our eyes are towards thee.

Psal. 108. 12.

2. Chro. 20. 12.

9. Sect. 8. That in our afflictions we incite our selues to call vpon God with many reasons.

Yea being in this difficulty and distresse, we are not onely content to be pricked on to the performance of this duty with the spurre of afflictions, but wee also incite and stirre vp our selues, to call vpon the Lord for helpe and deliuerance, by many other arguments and reasons. As first by the consideration of Gods expresse commandement, vnto which hee hath encouraged vs to performe obedience by his most gracious promises. So our Sauiour willeth vs to aske and wee shall receiue, seeke and wee shall find, knocke and it shall bee opened vnto vs. More especially by his holy Apostle hee hath required vs to performe this duty in the time of our afflictions, Is any among you (saith he) afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry let him sing. And againe, Let vs goe boldly vnto the throne of grace, that we may receiue mercy, and find grace to helpe in time of need. So the Lord himselfe hath enjoyned vs after a more especiall manner to make our supplications vnto him in the time of our afflictions. Call vpon me (saith he) in the time of trouble, and I will deliuer thee, and thou shalt glorifie mee. The which duty if wee at this time doe neglect wee shall double his displeasure against vs, for he is not more offended with our sinne which hath deserued this chastisement and affliction, than at our negligence or stubbornesse whereby wee refuse, or slothfully neglect to begge at his hands, pardon and deliuerance. Secondly, by calling to mind, that he alone is of omnipotent power, and therefore able to shield vs from all dangers, and to deliuer vs out of all our afflictions; and infinite in his loue and mercy towards vs, and therefore willing to extend his power for our preseruation and freedome from all our troubles. Both which are strong motiues to make vs flee vnto the Lord by earnest prayer: for as when the storme bloweth and the Sea rageth, the poore passenger can see no place of safety, till hee be ariued in the quiet port: so when wee are tossed and turmoiled in this Sea of miseries, and can see in all the world no safety or security, then doe wee by feruent prayer flee vnto the Lord, as being the only hauen and harborough which can keepe vs safe in these tempests of affliction. Thirdly, by considering that whatsoeuer the instruments of our troubles be, the Lord is the sole authour and chiefe cause of them; And therefore as the offender sueth not to the executioner for pardon, because he knoweth that hee hath no power to punish or spare him, sauing that which hee hath receiued from the judge, but beggeth and intreateth that hee will forgiue and release him, who alone had authority to condemne and deliuer him vp, to suffer deserued punishment for his offences; so wee will not so much sue vnto the inferiour meanes of our afflictions, when wee are in trouble and misery, because of themselues they can neither hurt nor helpe vs; but with Iob wee will make supplication vnto our Iudge, and by hearty prayer craue of him pardon and deliuerance, who hath absolute power in his hand to grant or deny it. Finally by calling to mind that hee is (as the Apostle stileth him) the God of consolation, who comforteth vs in all our troubles, causing our consolations to abound and exceed our sufferings, as himselfe professeth; I euen I am he that comforteth you. And therefore when being in afflictions all worldly comforts faile vs, it will be an effectuall reason, to moue vs by daily prayer to flee vnto him who is the God of all consolations, that wee may receiue from him some comfort and refreshing, in the time of our heauinesse.

Iob 9. 15.

Rom. 15. 5.

2 Cor. 1. 4, 5. Esa 51. 12.

9. Sect. 9. That God by afflictions maketh vs more frequent and feruent in prayer.

And thus by our afflictions and by these considerations arising from them, wee are moued to performe this duty of prayer, and that not onely after an ordinary manner, but with great earnestnesse, heate of zeale, and feruencie of spirit; for though wee bee slacke and loose in this holy exercise, whilst wee are at ease and rest, and not so much as touched with any trouble, yet when the waight of affliction lyeth heauy vpon vs, it presseth out of vs strong cryes, and salt teares; bitter sighes and deepe grones; and as waters running at their full liberty in an open plaine haue little force and strength, but when they passe through a streight and narrow current, are of such might that nothing is able to withstand their violence; so when our prayers proceed from hearts inlarged with worldly liberty, and not straightned or bounded with any trouble, they are very weake and wandring, and of no force to preuaile with God; but when they issue out of the straits and narrow passages passages of trouble and affliction, they offer an holy violence euen to God himselfe, holding (as it were) his hands when he is ready to strike, so as he is faine when wee cry vnto him to cry vnto vs againe, as hee did vnto Moses let mee alone, that I may proceed in the execution of my judgements. And this feruency and zeale was in the prayers of holy Iacob, when he was in danger of being destroyed by his enraged brother; for as he outwardly with his body wrastled with God, not leauing his hold till hee had the blessing; so much more powerfully did hee contend and preuaile with him, when as inwardly he powred forth his soule in feruent prayer, weeping and crying vnto God for helpe & deliuerance as the Prophet sheweth. The like wee see verified in his posterity Israel, who in their trouble sought the Lord, and powred out a prayer when his chastning was vpon them, and that not in a cold and formall fashion, but with great feruency and and earnestnesse, crying like a woman in her paines of child bearing, as Esay witnesseth. And this heat of zeale and feruency of spirit they shewed, when being in danger to bee destroyed by the great army of the Philistins comming against them, they humbled themselues by fasting and prayer before the Lord, weeping so abundantly, that by a strange, yet excellent metaphor, they are are said to haue drawne out water from their eyes, as with buckets out of a well, and not only to haue bee sprinkled the ground with distilling teares, but to haue powred them out in full streames. So the Church and people of God being grieuously afflicted in the time of their captiuity doe in a most pathetical manner shew this feruency of spirit and importunate earnestnesse in their prayers vnto God for helpe and deliuerance. For their heart cryed vnto the Lord, O wall of the daughter of Sion, let teares runne downe like a riuer day and night, giue thy selfe no rest, let not the apple of thine eye cease. Arise, cry out in the night, in the beginning of the watches powre out thine heart like water before the face of the Lord: lift vp thy hands towards him for the life of thy young children that faint for hunger in the corners of euery streete. And this was vsuall with them, as wee may see in the history of the Iudges and Kings (as also Nehemiah obserueth) namely, that when for their sinnes they were deliuered into the hands of their enemies, then they would cry vnto the Lord in prayer, till he heard them from Heauen and sent them sauiours. Yea so feruent were they at such times in their supplications, that they could not content themselues with their owne importunity, but earnestly intreated Gods Prophets to become suiters and soliciters for them. For in that wonderfull humiliation before spoken of, they say vnto Samuel, Cease not to cry vnto the Lord our God for vs, that hee may saue vs out of the hand of the Philistims. And being terrified with an extraordinary thunder and raine in the time of harueſt, they earnestly desire him, to pray for them vnto the Lord his God that they might not die and perish. Thus also the Niniuites being in danger of destruction, are commanded by their King, to humble themselues by fasting and putting on sackcloth, and to cry mightily vnto God. And the disciples who left Christ quietly asleepe; when they were secure, being in danger of drowning run vnto him with great earnestnesse, and cry aloud, master, master, saue vs we perish. Yea our Sauiour Christ himselfe, though hee was continually conuersant in offering vp the sacrifice of prayer vnto his Father, yet was he most frequent and feruent in performing this duty in the time of his greatest afflictions; for being in his agony, he is said to haue prayed more earnestly, and in feruency of spirit, to haue vttered thrice the same words; and to haue offered vp his prayers and supplications, with strong crying and teares, vnto him that was able to saue him from death, as the Apostle witnesseth. By all which it appeareth that afflictions doe make vs more frequent, instant and earnest, in this holy exercise of prayer; whereof it is, that the Lord taking speciall delight in this zeale and feruency, doth after a more especiall manner command vs to offer vp vnto him our prayers and petitions in the time of affliction, and incourageth vs thereunto by a speciall promise of helpe and deliuerance. Call vpon me (saith he) in the day of trouble, so will I deliuer thee and thou shalt glorifie mee. So by the Prophet Ioel, he commandeth them in their grieuous famine, to sanctifie a fast, to call a solemne assembly, to gather the Elders and all the inhabitants of the land into the house of their God, and to cry vnto the Lord. Yea in truth this is one especiall end why the Lord bringeth the faithfull into troubles and afflictions, that whereas they in the time of their prosperity neglect this duty of his seruice, or performe it formally and coldly, they may bee moued with the sense and smart of these euils to call vpon him with all zeale, earnestnesse and feruency of spirit, as appeareth by the scope and drift, at which our Sauiour aymed in the parable of the distressed widdow and vnrighteous judge, who by her often crying and calling vpon him, was moued to doe her justice; and of the two friends the one whereof borroweth of the other three loaues, through his importunity, though he had a deniall at the first motion. And thus our Sauiour Christ gaue vnto the woman of Canaan diuers repulses, not because he was vnwilling to grant her suit, but to make her more instant and earnest in praying for helpe and deliuerance from her grieuous affliction. And

Odit dum offenditur, irascitur dum non vogatur offensus. Hieronym. ad Ægrotum. amicum. epist.

1.Sam.7.8.

Chap.12.19.

Matth.8.24.

Matth.26.44. Luk.22.44.

Heb.5.7.

Psal.50.15.

Ioel.2.12.

Luk.18.2.7.

Luk.11.8.

Matth.15.28.

9. Sect. 10. That by afflictions we are made more sincere in our confession of sin and more earnest in our petitions.

And thus haue I generally shewed, that troubles and calamities make vs more diligent and feruent in performing this duty of holy prayer, the which is a sacrifice most acceptable vnto God and most profitable for vs. Now further this will also appeare, if we consider the seuerall parts of prayer; for first howsoeuer in the time of our prosperity wee disguise and so cunningly hide our sins, that euen our selues haue no sight or sense of them, yet when we are brought into misery and affliction, wee straitly examine our wayes and workes; yea and narrowly search into the secret corners our of hearts, that so wee may find out those sinnes whereby wee haue prouoked Gods displeasure; and hauing found them, we (as it were) hale them into Gods presence, and with all sincerity lay them open in his sight by humble confession, being incouraged by Gods gracious promises, that if we confesse and forsake our sinnes wee shall find mercy; and that if we acknowledge our sinnes wee shall find him faithfull and iust in forgiuing them and in cleansing vs from all iniquities; and not onely so, but in deliuering vs from those euils of punishment which doe accompany them. An example whereof wee haue in the people of Israel, who being stung with the fiery Serpents confesse their sinnes and pray vnto the Lord. So being sore vexed and tormented by their enemies, they cry vnto the Lord saying, wee haue sinned against thee, because wee haue forsaken our owne God, and haue serued Baalim. And thus the prodigall Sonne being pinched with hunger and grieuously afflicted returneth vnto his Father, and with an humbled soule and prostrate body, cryeth out, Father I haue sinned against Heauen and against thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy Sonne. So Daniel in the time of the captiuity humbleth himselfe before God, and confesseth his owne and the peoples sinnes. Yea Pharaoh himselfe though hee had no grace or goodnesse in him, yet by the weight of affliction had the confession of his sinnes pressed from him. Thus also by afflictions are wee made diligent and earnest in making our petitions vnto God, and that both deprecations whereby wee feruently desire to be freed and defended from the dangers which hang ouer our heads, and from the afflictions and miseries which doe presently vex vs (neither are wee euer more zealous, earnest and importunate with God, than when wee are forced hereunto with smart and sense of paine;) and also our suits and requests, especially that God will giue vs grace so to profit by our afflictions; and in such sort direct and guide vs with his holy Spirit for the time to come, that wee may amend our sinfull liues, and so walke in the wayes of his commandements, that we may nechereafter prouoke the Lord to anger by our sinnes, and moue him in his just displeasure to inflict againe vpon vs the like or more heauy iudgements.

Pro. 28. 13. 1. Ioh. 1. 9.

Num. 21. 6, 7.

Iudg. 10. 9. 10.

Luk. 15. 21.

Dan. 9.

Exo. 11. 16. 17.

Finally by our afflictions we are prouoked to render thankes vnto God, and to magnifie and prayse his holy name, first because (as I haue shewed) wee haue then the truest valuation and estimate of Gods rich mercies when wee are for a time depriued of them, the which is one end why the Lord taketh them from vs, that by wanting them wee may learne their worth, and accordingly shew our selues thankfull vnto God, either because hee vouchsafed vnto vs the vse of them so long, though now for our sinnes they bee taken from vs, or is pleased againe to restore them vnto vs. For because (as one saith) wee doe not render thankes vnto God for his present benefits, it is necessary that wee should bee depriued of them that by wanting them wee may know what we did once enjoy. For as the eyes cannot discerne glorious obiects when they are held close vnto them, but when they are remoued in some proportionable distance: so our vnthankfull minds cannot judge of the greatnesse and excellency of present benefits; but when they are taken a little from vs, then in their departing wee clearely discerne the riches of Gods bounty. Secondly because Gods infinite wisedome, powerfull prouidence, justice, mercy and truth, doe most clearely shine, like glorious stars, in the night of our afflictions; namely as he doth inflict them, and also order and dispose them, appointing their manner, measure, and all circumstances, and so moderating them, that not exceeding our strength, we plainely discerne mercy in his greatest iudgements. And also his loue and compassion do plainely appeare vnto vs, in that he doth not deale with vs according to our iniquities, nor punish vs according to the greatnesse of our offences, but contenteth himselfe to haue inflicted small corrections for great faults, and light & momentany afflictions for such hainous & grieuous sins, as haue justly deserued euerlasting condemnation. In consideration whereof we haue great cause to magnifie and prayse the Lord, acknowledging with his afflicted Church, that it is his wonderfull mercy that wee are not vtterly consumed. So also his mercy, goodnesse and truth doe clearely shine in our afflictions, as he doth bring light out of darknesse, and good out of euill, making these punishments of sinne to serue as effectuall meanes to further vs in attaining vnto both grace and glory: and finally his loue appeareth both by his supporting vs with strength to beare whatsoeuer he is pleased to inflict, by refreshing vs with inward consolations, and by sauing and deliuering vs out of all our troubles, when in

9. Sect. 11. That by our afflictions we are incited more frequently and heartily to giue thanks vnto God.

Quamuis ob bona præsentis gratiæ dei non agimus, necessaria tamen est priuatio, vt quid habuerimus sentiamus. Basil. Tom. 1. p. 361.

Psal. 103. 8.

Lamen. 3. 22.

in respect of outward meanes our estate seemeth desperate. All which and much more being obserued by the faithfull, doe moone them to breake out in admiration of Gods Wisdome, Power, Mercy and Goodnesse into Prayses and Thanksgiuing, as we may see in the example of the Israelites deliuered out of the Egyptian seruitude, in the Song of Deborah and Barak for their freedome from Iabin, & victory ouer Sisera; In the Psalmes of Dauid, many of which were penned vpon this occasion, that this holy Prophet and other of the faithfull might shew their thankfulnesse vnto God for his powerfull protection in the time of danger, and his gracious deliuerance of them out of all their troubles. Thou hast turned (saith hee) my mourning into ioy, thou hast loosed my sacke and girded me with gladnesse, therefore shall my tongue prayse thee and not cease: O Lord my God I will giue thankes vnto thee for euer. And againe, I will sing of thy power and will prayse thy mercy in the morning, for thou hast beene my defence and refuge in the day of my trouble; vnto thee O my strength will I sing, for God is my defence and my mercifull God. Neither doe the inferiour meanes of their deliuerance so dazle and blunt their sight, but that they are still able to ouer-looke them, and to behold the Lord as the principall cause of all their good, working by these inferiour instruments, as we may see in the example of Paul, who being deliuered by the chiefe Captaine, when the Iewes went about to kill him, doth in reporting this story vnto Agrippa, attribute the prayse of his deliuerance only vnto God. For this cause (saith he) the Iewes caught mee in the Temple, and went about to kill me, neuertheless I obtained helpe of God, and continue vnto this day. And this is one speciall end which God propoundeth vnto our afflictions and his gracious deliuerances, that being afflicted we may pray, praying we may be heard and deliuered, and being deliuered we may take occasion thereby to glorifie and prayse him who is the chiefe authour of our deliuerance; according to that of the Psalmist; Call vpon mee in the day of trouble, and I will deliuer thee, and thou shalt glorifie me. And hereof it is, that when our Sauiour had helped one possessed with a Deuill, hee willeth him to goe home to his friends, and to shew what great things the Lord had done vnto him. Yea this end the faithfull themselues do also propound of their helpe and deliuerance which they haue from God, according to that of the Psalmist, Haue mercy vpon me, O Lord, consider my trouble, which I suffer of them that hate me, thou that liftest me vp from the gates of death; that I may shew all thy prayses within the gates of the daughter of Sion, and reioyce in thy saluation.

And thus it appeareth, that the Lord vseth our afflictions as notable meanes, to further and helpe vs in this excellent duty of Prayer, and all the parts thereof, Confession, Petition and Thanksgiuing. The consideration whereof may exceedingly comfort vs in all our crosses and calamities; seeing all our griefes and losses are sufficiently counterualled and abundantly recompenced by this alone benefit which wee haue by them. For Prayer is a most especiall part of Gods worship and seruice whereby he is glorified, and becommeth gracious and propitious vnto vs; it is a most notable fruit of the Spirit whereby wee are vndoubtedly assured that wee are the adopted sonnes of God, seeing wee cry in our hearts Abba Father. It is the meanes to inrich vs with all spirituall graces, for as euery euery good and perfect gift descendeth from God the Father of Lights; so Prayer is the hand wherby we receiue them, and which we thrust into the rich treasury of his graces, taking vnto vs whatsoeuer wee need. It is a chiefe part of our spirituall armour whereby wee are not only enabled to resist all the spirituall enemies of our saluation, but also to ouercome and put them to flight. Finally, it is our chiefe comfort, our strength and stay; for as all our consolation, abilities and support is from the Lord alone, who made Heauen and Earth; so the meanes which he hath appointed vnto vs, to receiue helpe, assistance and inward refreshing from him is Prayer and Supplication. And therefore let vs patiently and thankfully indure the small smart of our short troubles, which deriue vnto vs so much spirituall good; let vs be content to be pricked with these thornes of afflictions, seeing they keepe vs from falling into the sleepe of carnall security, which would make vs a prey to our rauenous enemies; and giue vs occasion to sing these most melodious notes of Prayer and Thanksgiuing, which is the most sweet and delightfull Musicke in the eares of God.

That the former consideration may much comfort vs in our afflictions.

Rom. 8 15.

Iam. 1. 17.

Matth. 7. 7.

Eph. 6. 18.

Psal. 121. 2.

And thus haue I shewed that our afflictions are vsed by God as notable meanes to further vs in our new obedience, as it is actiue and exercised in doing his will. The like may bee said of our passiue obedience, whereby wee are content that his will may be done in vs; suffering with meeknesse and patience whatsoeuer crosses and afflictions it shall please him to inflict vpon vs. For whereas by prosperity our minds are made weake and effeminate, by reason that our too much hauing our wils doth make vs wanton, and wantonnesse doth make vs wayward and peeuish, which causeth vs to shew great impatience in our smallest crosses; and to murmur and complaine when but the sight or shadow of any affliction doth appeare, and approach towards vs; when we are daily exercised in carrying the crosse, and inured to beare heauy burthens, & to indure smart and paine,

Q. Sect. 13. That God by afflictions worketh and increaseth our patience.

paine, then are wee freed from our peeuish wantonnesse, and nice tendernesse, and taking vnto selues manlike hearts and Christian courage, and by daily vse growing better acquainted with our afflictions wee now esteeme them small and light, which before seemed grieuous and intolerable. In which respect one saith, that a man may well call them miserable, who by too much prosperity doe grow sluggish and weake, and whom slothfull ease hath (as it were) becalmed in an vnmoued Sea: seeing whatsoeuer befalleth them will seeme strange. Crosses seeme heauiest to those who neuer vsed to carry them; and the yoke is grieuous to a tender necke: the fresh-water-souldier waxeth pale, when he but suspecteth himselfe wounded, whereas the olde Souldier beholdeth his owne bloud with vndaunted courage, because after the effusion of blood he hath oftentimes obtained victory. Againe by our manifold afflictions we haue experience of Gods power and loue, mercy and truth both in strengthning vs to beare whatsoeuer crosse hee layeth vpon vs, in turning them all to our profit and benefit, and also in deliuering vs out of them in due time, when his good worke which he intended is effected by them; from which experience as we grow stronger in faith and assurance towards God, perswading our selues, that as he hath in former times, so he will now also vphold vs in all tentations and saue and deliuer vs out of all our afflictions: so also thereby is our patience confirmed and increased, whilest with quiet meeknes & contentednes we wait Gods leasure for our deliuerance, and in the meane time submit our selues willingly to indure his good pleasure; being assured by our manifold experience, that as hee hath, so hee will helpe and free vs from all our calamities, and in the meane time giue vs strength to beare them. And this is manifest by plaine testimonies of the scriptures; for so the Apostle Paul saith, that tribulation bringeth forth patience; And the Apostle Iames saith, that the triall of our faith, by afflictions and tribulations, bringeth forth patience. And the examples of the Saints doe clearely shew, that by their much suffering they were inabled to suffer, and grew stronger in patience the more they were inured to beare the crosse. Thus Iob as he exceeded all in afflictions, so also in patience; and holy Dauid by suffering innumerable crosses and calamities, came at last to that meeke submission of himselfe in all things vnto the will of God; Behold here am I, let him doe vnto me, as it seemeth good in his eyes: yea, our Sauiour Christ himselfe the patterne of all true patience, and the quiet Lambe that opened not his mouth, though hee were the Sonne (as the Apostle speaketh) yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered. And this euery man may finde true by his owne experience: for how bitter is sickenesse vnto vs when we haue from our Child-hood enjoyed health? How irkesome is hunger, to those who haue beene accustomed to full diet? How grieuous is want and misery, shame and disgrace, to those who haue had alwayes, plenty, prosperity, and the prayse and applause of all about them; whereas when men are a while inured to suffer these crosses, and are growne into better acquaintance with these afflictions, they grow so ordinary and familiar, that they doe not much trouble them, nor yet moue them to shew any impaciency. The consideration whereof should greatly comfort vs in all our crosses and troubles, seeing this excellent grace of patience is much strengthened and increased by the̅, which is a salue that easeth all sores, a shield of proofe which defendeth the vitall parts from being peareed with any fiery darts of the worlds tentations, and a faithfull helper which inableth vs to beare the greatest burthen, making those things which are heauy in themselues light vnto vs, and those easie to be indured, which to a naturall man seeme intolerable. In regard wherof the Apostle Iames willeth vs, to count it exceeding ioy when we fall into diuers tentations, because this trying of our faith bringeth forth patience; and the Apostle Paul making himselfe with the rest of the faithfull examples of this rule and precept, saith, that because patience was increased by tribulation therefore they reioyced and euen gloried in it.

Illos meritò quis dixerit miseros qui nimia felicitate torpescunt, quos velut in mari lento tranquillitas iners detinet &c. Senec de prouid. lib. c. 4.

2. Cor. 2. 10.

Rom. 5. 3.

Iam. 1. 3.

2. Sam. 15. 26.

Heb. 5. 8.

Iam. 1. 2.

Rom. 5. 3.

CHAP. XXIV.

That God by afflictions worketh and increaseth in vs, all those vertues, which concerne either our neighbours, or our selues.

2. Sect. 1. That by afflictions we are moued to doe iustice vnto men.

AND thus haue I shewed that our crosses and afflictions are vsed by God, as effectuall meanes, to worke in vs all sauing graces, and to stirre vs vp to performe new obedience, and all holy duties which respect himselfe and his seruice: now wee are to shew that they haue the like efficacy in mouing vs to imbrace all those Christian vertues, which respect either our Neighbours, or our selues. For first, we are moued by them to doe iustice vnto all men, giuing euery man his due, and doing vnto others, as we would haue them to doe vnto vs. And this cōmeth to passe, not only because the afflicted estate is more vnable to offer iniustice, wrongs, iniuries, cruelty, and oppression; and more vnwilling and fearefull to attempt, and runne into such vniust courses, because it commonly wanteth both power in it selfe, and assistance from friends to maintaine these oppressions and inand iniuries, and to defend men, when they haue done them, from deserued reuenge: but also, because it maketh the conscience more tender, the iudgement more ready to examine, and more quick-sighted and vnpartial in iudging of right and wrong, and the heart more fearefull and vnwilling to giue assent or approbation vnto any iniurious actions; because being vnder the hand of God, and already feeling the smart of his corrections, we feare least by committing these wrongs, wee shall prouoke the Lords anger, & moue him eyther to continue our afflictions, or to double and multiply them in number and waight, because our sinnes by this new addition, become more numerous and grieuous in his sight. It is true indeed, that some kinde of afflictions, as namely, losses, want, and pouerty, doe thrust many into vniust actions, and doe moue them to vse fraud and deceit, theft and robbery, to patch & peece vp their broken estate, and to make a supplie of the things which they want, by these vnlawfull courses: but I doe not speake of those effects which afflictions in their owne nature produce, when they fall vpon wicked men; but as they are vsed by God, for the bettering and amending of his owne children, by causing them in feare of his fatherly displeasure, with all care & good conscience, to auoid all sins whatsoeuer. In which respect it may bee truly said, that the same rods & whips, which make the slaue to run away frō his master, & to become more desperate in his wicked courses, do make the son & true seruant of God to draw neerer vnto him by repentance, and to promise, & accordingly to endeuour amendement of al his faults, that together with the enioying of his fathers fauor, he may also be secured from suffring the smart of his corrections.

b. Sect. 2. That by afflictions we are made more mercifull and compassionate towards others in misery

Secondly, by these afflictions wee are made more mercifull, pitifull, and compassionate vnto others who indure the like crosses, and miseries; and our hearts which are hard in themselues, are softned and made more tender, and in fellow-feeling of their griefes, more ready and willing to yeeld vnto them any comfort and refreshing. And thus those who haue been sicke, are apt to pitty those most, whom they see pained with the like diseases; those who haue been imprisoned, doe more readily compassionate, and accordingly helpe and releeue those who are restrained; they who haue been pinched with penury, and pined with hunger, doe aboue others pitty them, who being poore do want foode to feede them, and clothes to couer them. And this was one end, why God layed vpon our sauiour Christ himselfe, so many crosses and afflictions, that hee might bee able sufficiently to haue compassion of them that are ignorant, because hee was compassed with infirmitie, as the Apostle speaketh. For as hee saith in an other place, in that he suffered, and was tempted, hee is able to succour them that are tempted. In which regard, wee may with more confidence and assurance go vnto him for helpe and succour in all our miseries, because himselfe hath tasted of them. So the Apostle saith, that we haue not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all things tempted in like sort, yet without sin. And from hence he raiseth this exhortatiō, that therfore we must go boldly vnto the thron of grace, that we may receiue mercy & grace to help in time of need. And therfore if the Lord thought it fit that our Sauiour Christ (which was so ful of loue, mercy, & compassion, that in commiseration of our wretched estate, hee was content to lay downe his precious life for our sakes, that he might free vs from our wo & misery) should be partaker of our infirmities & afflictions, that his tender hart might be the more entendred, & made more sensible of our sorrows by his own sufferings; how much more need haue we to haue our hard harts thus suppled & softned, who haue little compassion in vs but that which ariseth from our owne sense & feeling?

Heb. 4. 15, 16.

c. Sect. 3. That God by afflictions maketh vs more meeke, humble and courteous towards our Neighbours.

Finally, by our afflictions wee learne to carry our selues humbly and meekely, curteously and gently, towards all men; for whereas wee are by prosperity puffed vp with pride, and become harsh, skornefull and insolent, in all our behauiour towards our neighbours; when our proude hearts are humbled with crosses and miseries, and wee being stripped of our outward brauery, doe come to haue a true sight of our infirmities and deformities, then doe wee thinke better of others than of our selues, and accordingly vse them, with all ciuility and humanitie, being ready with a sweete mildenesse to departe from our owne right, rather than to encroach vpon any thing which is due vnto them. And as the wild colt which runneth at liberty in fruitfull pastures, is ready to break all bounds, and to run ouer any that stands in his way; but being well bridled and broken, submitteth himselfe to be backed with his rider, and to beare his blowes without any resistance: so wee being fatted and pampered in the pastures of prosperity, breake all the bounds of humanity and ciuility, and are ready in our pride and insolency to beate downe all that stand in our way, & to trāple vnder our feet those who are neere vnto vs; but when God hath put into our mouthes this bit and bridle of trouble and afflictions, and with many blowes hath broken our proude stomackes; then are we more readie to suffer than to offer iniuries, and quietly to hold on in the courses of our callings with all lowlinesse to our betters, and withal curtesie and humanitie to our equals and inferiours. So the wise man saith, that the poore speaketh with praiers, but the rich answereth roughly. An example whereof wee haue in

Prou. 18, 23.

Dan. 3. 13, 24, 15. 16. & 4. 34.

Nebuchadnezzar, who being in his prosperity vttered nothing but thundering threats and proude menaces; but being humbled first by Gods miracle, and afterwards by his owne miserie, he becommeth meeke and full of curtesie. Thus Saul when the world fawned on him, breathed out threatnings and slaughters against the disciples of the Lord, and like a raging lion pursued them to the death; but being beaten downe to the ground and humbled vnder the hand of God he waxeth milde and gentle as a lambe. And euen wicked

Act. 9.

1. Kings 20. 10, 18, 30, 31.

Benhadad himself, who being in his strength and presuming of victorie was so vnmeasurably proude and insolent, that he became vaine and foolish in his boasting, and with marueilous disdaine skorned all that resisted his furie; when his forces were foiled, and he ouerthrowne in battaile by the people of Israel, with what base abiection doth hee humble himselfe to Ahab in his miserie? sending his seruants with sack-cloth vpon their loines, and ropes about their necks, and putting a message in their mouthes sutable to their habit; Thy seruant Benhadad saith, I pray thee, let me liue. But this point shall not neede further proofe either by testimonie or example, seeing common experience teacheth vs, that as when men flourish in wealth and worldly preferments, they presently become churlishly surly, & proudly disdainfull, their chests being no fuller filled with riches, than their hearts with pride, nor they higher aduanced in their preferments, than they are exalted in conceit of their owne worth and excellencie: so being brought into misery and affliction, they presently strike saile, and carry themselues with all lowlinesse and humility, as to all others, so especially to those from whom they expect comfort and reliefe in this their affliction.

Q. Sect. 4. That by afflictions wee attaine vnto the knowledge of our selues.

And thus it appeareth, that afflictions are vsed by God as notable meanes to furnish vs with those morall and ciuill vertues which concerne our neighbours: The like also may be said of those vertues and graces which directly respect our selues: Neither doe our crosses and chastisements only enrich vs with those spirituall and sauing graces, which tending chiefely to Gods seruice, do also further and assure our owne saluation, and those morall vertues which principally respect our neighbours benefite; but also with those gifts and abilities, which do more properly and peculiarly respect our owne vse and profit. For first, by these afflictions we attaine vnto the knowledge of our selues, and whereas in our prosperitie, pride and selfe-loue doe so hudwinke our eies, that wee can neither see our sinne nor miserie, and doe cause vs to put all our gifts and good parts into that end of the wallet which hangeth before vs, and all our vices, faults and imperfections into that end which is cast behinde vs; affliction pulleth this vaile from our sight, and causing vs to looke backward, doth make vs to behold our filthinesse and spirituall blemishes and deformities, through the corruption & pollution of our nature; and those manifold sinnes and actuall transgressions, whereby wee haue brought these crosses vpon vs; and also our guiltinesse in respect of them both, whereby we stand obnoxious to the anger of God, and to temporall and euerlasting punishments; all which our miserie and spirituall nakednesse doth plainely appeare, when the fig leaues of wordly prosperitie are taken from vs. So whereas in our prosperitie, looking through the falsespectacles of pride and selfe-loue, wee are ready to ouerweene our gifts, to mistake shadowes for substances, worldly policie which is meere foolishnesse, for sound wisedome; proude presumption and carnal securitie, for true faith, constant hope, and firme affiance in God; couetousnesse for frugalitie; and prodigalitie for bountie and liberalitie: as also to imagine that the smallest mites of grace and vertue, are the richest talents; and the least and first degrees to bee the highest and greatest perfection of them: when these deceiuing glasses are taken from our eies, we see our graces and spirituall abilities in their owne nature and proportion; and then counterfeit vertues which like guilded papers or postes, make in the time of our prosperitie a glorious shew, seeming pure gold in outward appearance, do consume and vanish in the fierie triall, as not induring the heate of this furnace of affliction: and then the weakenesse and imperfection of our newborne graces will easily be discerned, when as they are put to struggle and wrestle with miserie and calamitie. Then our faith, which in our prosperitie seemed so strong, that in the greatest tentation it could not receiue the least foile, will appeare so weake and feeble, that the slightest triall would ouerturne it, if it were not supported by Gods assistance: and though before trial we haue an opinion with Peter, that in the strength of our faith wee can walke vpon the waters, and presume so much vpon our owne strength and vndaunted courage, that albeit the whole world in the time of persecution should denie Christ, yet we will not; when the waues of trouble and miserie do approach towards vs, we are readie to sinke in doubting, and to cry out for feare: and being but examined by a poore Damosell, we are ready to denie and forsake Christ and the Gospell, least by sticking to our profession wee should bee exposed to the danger of persecution. Then our affiance in God which whilest wee flourished in the World seemed so bold and confident, so strong & steady in Gods promised assistance, will shew it selfe to be weake, tottering and ruinous, when these outward proppes of worldly helpe are pulled from it. Then our hope, which before it was tried appeared so constant and assured, that no delay could euer daunt it, when wee are in affliction, and finde the promises of Gods helpe and our deliuerance for a while deferred, is ready to faint and to be presently turned into doubting and despaire. Then our wisedome which we thought to be of so great a reach, that we could easily finde meanes either to preuent, or to escape out of all difficulties and dangers; when wee are brought into these straits and snares, doth appeare slight and shallow, being altogether insufficient to deliuer vs from these miseries and troubles: and finally then our patience which we imagined to bee so firme, well-grounded, and of such Sampson-like strength, that it was able to stand vpright vnder the heauie weight of the greatest crosses; when it commeth to the triall, and hath but a small burthen of misery lying vpon it, it is ready to crack and break into murmuring and impatiencie, and to bee pressed downe flat when the least & lightest affliction doth lye vpon it. To which purpose one saith, that euery man is vnknowne to himselfe before he be examined and tryed by tentation; euen as Peter was, in presuming, ignorant of himselfe, but by denying his Master learned with what strength he was indued. For in his stumbling and falling hee saw how vainely he had presumed, hee wept, and by weeping came fruitfully to know what he was, and to bee that which before he was not. So whereas in our prosperity, wee through our ignorance are much deceiued in our outward estate, thinking it in respect of our owne wisdome, riches, power and externall helps, to be so firme and strong, that it cannot be weakned, and much lesse ouerthrowne by any violence, as wee may see in the example of Dauid, who in his prosperitie concluded, that hee should neuer be remoued: no sooner doth the Lord hide his face in the time of trouble and affliction, and withdrawe from vs his helping hand, but we presently see our exceeding frailtie and imbecilitie, that our strength is weakenesse and our wisedome foolishnesse, and that we, with all wee haue are mortall, momentany, mutable, and but of short and that vncertaine continuance, so that if God take our breath from vs we are gone and returne to our dust; and if with his breath hee doe but blow vpon our wealth and strength, they are presently wasted and enfeebled. Finally, whereas when wee abound with worldly blessings, wee are ready falsely to flatter our selues with an opinion of our happinesse; and to conclude vpon this weake ground, that wee are in the estate of grace, and highly aduanced in Gods loue and fauour: when affliction commeth, these fond and pernitious conceits, which are not the fruits of faith, but the cursed broode and off-spring of presumption and security, doe together with our outward prosperitie vanish away; and then wee seeke to gather better assurance, and to ground our faith vpon a more firme foundation, not iudging of our state by external things, which happen alike to all, both iust and vniust, elect and reprobate; but by the sanctifying gifts and graces of Gods holy spirit, wherewith wee are indued, and by the notable fruits of righteousnesse & holinesse, which springing from them, doe plainely appeare in our liues and conuersation. And thus doe wee by our afflictions attaine vnto that excellent benefit of knowing our selues; which, next vnto the true sauing knowledge of God, exceedeth all other kinds of knowledge in vse and profit: for as he who ruleth his owne minde, is better than he that winneth a Citie; so he that knoweth this little world of himselfe, and his own heart with all the secret turnings and windings of it, is in farre better state therby, than he who knoweth the great vniuerse and frame of Heauen and Earth, the secrets of nature, the deep and mysticall policies of common wealthes, yea all the liberall Arts and sciences, and whatsoeuer other skill or wisedome in the world, which is attained vnto by painfull instruction, or deerly purchased by long experience. For being well acquainted with our selues, wee plainly discern our owne vilenesse, filthinesse and guiltinesse, and so are brought to seeke righteousnesse and perfection out of our selues in Iesus Christ; and our owne weakenes, impotency, and insufficiencie, that we may not rest vpon the reed of our owne strength, which would most deceiue vs when wee most leaned vpon it; but vpon the power of Gods might and the promised assistance of his holy spirit, which neuer faileth or forsaketh any that rely vpon him. And also hereby wee come to the knowledge of those rich gifts & graces, wherewith God hath indued vs, & perceiue what excellency is in these peereles pearles, and spirituall armour and munition, that so wee may giue God the glory of his owne gifts, and reioyce our selues in the fruition of them.

hope,

Prou. 16. 31.

Q. Sect. 3. That the exercise of afflictions increaseth our strength to beare them.

But as the Lord vseth afflictions as a notable meanes to discouer vnto vs our wants and weakenesse: so also for the confirming and increasing of our spirituall strength; for louing vs (as I haue shewed) not like a fond mother, who by her cockering and tender vsing of her children maketh them so weake, neash and effeminate, that they are not able to indure any hardnesse; but like a wise father, seeking our good rather than our delight, he putteth vs to toile and labour, and exerciseth vs in this conflict of afflictions not only vnto sweat and teares, but sometimes also vnto blood; that hereby hee may both preserue the strength wee haue from languishing with idlenesse; and also may by this exercise increase it, and make vs more able for further seruice. For (as one saith) when wee are fatted and pampred with ease and sloth, we grow faint and feeble, and are soon tired not only with labour, but also with bearing our owne waight; neither is vnhurt happinesse able to sustaine the weakest blow of aduerse fortune. But when we daily contend with new calamities, continuall vse and exercise in these euils, so thickneth and hardneth the skin, that being vnsensible of smart, we doe not faint or yeeld in any aduersity; or if we be ouerthrowne through the violence of our afflictions, yet (as it were) vpon our knees wee will fight and striue against them. But this will better appeare if wee further consider more distinctly, that our afflictions confirme & increase in vs both our strength and power whereby we are inabled to beare the burthen of any calamitie without sinking vnder the waight, and also our courage, fortitude, and christian valour, whereby wee are hartned to indure the brunt of any incounter without shrinking or base yeelding in this spirituall warfare. Concerning the former point experience teacheth vs, that as other creatures, so also men, are made more weake and tender by soft and gentle vsage, & much disabled to beare the brunt of any outward violence or aduerse casualtie, when (according to their kindes) they flourish in ease and prosperitie; and contrariwise that they are much strengthened to indure any hardnesse or aduersitie when they are vsed and inured vnto it by continuall custome. Thus wee see that oxen which are bred & brought vp in hard countries and common pastures, are stronger to indure labour, than they which are fed and fatted in sweet and pleasant meddowes; and that by their labouring they are inabled to take much more fruitfull paines, than others that are pampred with ease and plentie. Thus the trees which grow in the soft and sun-shine valley are neither strong, solid, nor firmely rooted; but those which standing on the top of the mountaines are exposed to all kinds of wind and weather, to boystrous blasts and stormy tempests. So wee find by experience that their bodies are most able and actiue, who are inured to pains and labour; and that part of the body to bee most strong and fit for imployment, which is most vsed and continually exercised; and contrariwise, that those are most vveake and vvearish, faint and feeble who languish in idlenesse, and spend their time in ease and plenty; and that hand which is not accustomed to labour, to be so soft and tender, that it cannot indure the smallest paines; that hard and poore education maketh the best Souldiers, and by continuall custome causeth want and watching, paines and toylesome labour, scant diet and hard lodging to become familiar and easie to be indured: whereas plenty and prosperity, soft cloathing and dainty fare, doth so weaken and disable the body, that it can indure no hardnesse, but is more indangered with winde and weather, cold and hunger, than with the force and violence of the most warlike Enemies: that Mariners who haue beene accustomed to stormes and tempests, find small alteration in their bodies in the roughest Seas and fowlest weather; whereas fresh-water Souldiers, and tender Passengers cannot brooke the smell of the ship, nor sight of the vvater, and are extremely Sea-sicke when they are but a little tossed with some ordinary winds. Finally, thus vvee see that by much running men become more nimble and better breathed, whereas sloth and ease maketh them slow and pursie; that the daily Traueller goeth long journies with little vvearines, whereas they that keepe home are soone tyred and surbayted vvith going a fevv miles: and that the tender Gentleman taketh cold being in a vvarme house and vvell cloathed, vvhereas the poore Husbandman dareth the cold winds and nipping frosts with his bare head and naked breast; and is strong to indure the whole day any toylesome labour, when as the other panteth and fainteth vvith vvearinesse, if he vvorke but one houre. And as it thus fareth vvith the body inured vnto paines and labour, so vvith the minde exercised vvith troubles, and accustomed to beare the burthen of the Crosse; neither is the one more strengthened vvith continuall vse and practice to indure any outward toile; than the other inabled with patience and comfort to beare by the same meanes any crosses and calamities. And therefore how weake and waspish soeuer wee be in bearing afflictions, after wee haue long liued in ease and prosperity, yet if after much trouble and many tryals wee remayne weake and wayward, peeuish and impatient, it is a dangerous signe that we haue little or no spirituall vertue and ability in vs, according to the Wise mans saying, If thou be faint in the day of aduersity, thy strength is small: seeing if any thing would make vs strong, then would this exercise of bearing the crosse. In regard wher eof the afflicted Church out of her own experience saith, that it is good for a man to beare the yoke from his youth, because as it is said of Milo, that by accustoming himselfe to beare a Calfe at the first, he came after to beare him when he was a Bull; so shall wee find our spirituall strength increase with our burthen, sustaining with patience and comfort the most intolerable weight of calamity and misery, though at the first wee were ready to murmure, repine and shew great impatiency, when we were but touched with the least trouble.

Languent per inertiam segnata, nec labore tantum, sed molle & ipso sui onere deficiunt. Non fert vllum illum illæsa fœlicitas, Senec. de Provid. cap. 2.

Prou. 24. 10.

Lament. 3. 27.

And as our afflictions doe much increase our strength and abilitie, so also our Christian stian courage and vndaunted fortitude; and whereas prosperitie maketh vs cowardly and fearefull, not daring to indure any danger, or to stand to it when we are incountred with any calamitie; our often conflicts with crosses doe make vs valiant and couragious in bearing the greatest brunt of these spirituall battayles, and so bold and hardy, that wee indure with patience the sharpest assaults, and giue not one foote backe in the most desperate dangers. The souldier when he first entreth into the field, feareth when he heareth but a false alarum, and is ready to ducke at euery shot; whereas after he hath passed desperate dangers, and hath beene long exercised in many conflicts and skirmishes, hee becommeth so valorous and couragious, that hee dareth to venter vpon the push of the pike, and to fight at the cannons mouth: now lesse fearing the cruell enemie, and killing bullet in a doubtfull and dangerous battaile, than, when he was first trained, the paper shot, and the seeming encounters of his friends and fellowes. There is no wrastler, fencer, or combatant, that contendeth against his aduersarie with that spirit and courage, when he first commeth into the Theater; as he doth who hath beene accustomed to these exercises; and is not only heartened with easie victories but also after many foiles and falls, dangerous wounds and much blood-shed, hath in the end preuailed, and by many perils hath made his way to a glorious triumph. There is no Mariner is so bold and cheerefully confident in the least shew of a Sea-faring danger, when hee first entreth the ship, and in his mouing house becommeth an inhabitant of this new appearing world of dreadfull waters; as hee who after innumerable stormes and dangerous tempests hath oftentimes arriued safely at the wished hauen. And thus it also fareth with vs in these spirituall combats with troubles and calamities; for howsoeuer in the first conflict wee are maruellously cowardly and impatient in suffering the least paine; yet when as wee haue been long exercised in these skirmishes, and after many foiles and fals, haue in the end through Gods gracious assistance obtained a ioyfull victorie, we exceedingly increase in a Christian valour; both because this common familiaritie with dangers and distresses breedeth in vs a careless contempt, and neglect of them; and also because it is the nature of true fortitude and Christian courage (like the graine of mustard seed) the more it is bruised the more to shew its strength and vertue, and (like the palme-tree or sweete camomile) to thriue the better and spring the faster, when it is pressed and kept downe with the waight of afflictions. And therefore seeing by sustaining the burthen of the crosse we become stronger and more able to beare; and by often encountring these spirituall enemies, we are made much more valorous and couragious, let vs not feare that waight which will not crush vs, but increase our strength; nor be daunted with the approaching of those forces, which the more and stronger they are, the more they increase our fortitude & magnanimity; & by their sharper assaulting do but make our victorie to become more glorious. It may be at the first this combate with afflictions will seeme irkesome in present sence, and terrible in respect of future expectation; but a little experience in this warfare will bring vs into better acquaintance and familiarity with these troubles and miseries, and make vs neither feele their blowes when our skin is hardned, nor to feare their greatest violence, when as wee finde that they doe not hurt vs. Now wee seeme weake and our burthen heauie; feeble in strength and our enemies mighty and vnresistable; but let vs possesse our soules with patience, seeing time and custome will make vs equall, by lightning our loade and increasing our strength; by quelling their courage, and causing vs to become more valiant and magnanimous. There is in truth a seeming miserie in crosses and calamities, because they are strong at their first appearing, and terrible to flesh and blood, because they come masked in an vgly vizard, and doe presse vpon vs with a kind of necessity; but being accustomed a while to beare them company, wee become familiar and well acquainted with them; and then all feare vanisheth when we finde them harmelesse, and wee would not (when they are gon) but that wee had injoyed their society. Then necessity is turned into a vertue, and the yoake, which being taken vpon vs by compulsion, was so painefull & grieuous, doth by our patient bearing it become light and easie.

Verberat nos & lacerat fortuna: patiamur. Non est sanitia, certamen est; quo sapiens adierimus fortiores erimus. Senec. de Prouid. cap. 4.

Nihil miserum est quod in naturam consuetudo perduxit. Paulatim enim voluptati sunt quæ necessitate coperunt. Senec. de prouid cap. 4.

Finally, the Lord by our afflictions doth vsually worke in vs those excellent gifts and graces of temperance, sobriety, modesty, chastity and purity: the which he effecteth both by an outward necessity, and by an inward care and watchfulnesse. For whilest in the time of our prosperity we abound with worldly blessings wee vsually abuse them as prouocations vnto our owne lusts, and fuell vnto our sinfull pleasures; as abundance of riches to maintaine vs in light wanton and garish apparell; delicate meates & drinkes, as the meanes and occasions of surfeting and drunkennesse, chambring and wantonnesse, lust and vncleanesse, riot and all manner of of excesse. And therefore the Lord seeing vs thus to surfet of this fulnesse and plenty, and thereby to fall into most dangerous and desperate diseases of the soule; like a good Physition preserueth or restoreth our spirituall health, by keeping or taking from vs these his benefits which wee peruert to our owne destruction. And when like mad men wee would abuse these blessings as instruments and weapons, to wound our selues with worldly and wicked lusts, hee taketh them away, and turneth our riches and plenty into pouerty and penury, our health into sickneſſe, our strength into weakneſſe, our pleasures into paine and misery, and our liberty into restraint, that hee may make vs to bee such as hee would haue vs, by vrgent necessity, when wee will not bee so out of our owne choise; causing vs (as it were) to fast for want of meate, when wee will not doe it out of deuotion; to become chast for want of strength and health', temperate in our meates and drinkes, and modest in our apparell, because we want meanes to maintaine vs in excesse of diet, and variety of strange and vaine attires. Neither doth the Lord by our afflictions make vs thus temperate and sober onely by this necessity; but by our owne care and watchfulneſſe. For thereby being brought vnto a sight of our sinnes in abusing Gods blessings, and benefits as incentatiues and prouocations to our own lusts, whereby wee haue justly deserued that hee should thus straiten his hand, and shorten our allowance; wee will euer after take better heed vnto our selues, that we doe not by the like sinne incur the like or greater punishments: and bee euen ready to binde our selues by an holy vow, that wee will for the time to come liue temperatly & soberly, modestly and chastly, and neuer more so abuse Gods blessings to his dishonour and our destruction, if once againe he repossesse vs of them.

9. Sect. 7. That God by afflictions doth worke and increase in vs temperance, sobriety, modesty and chastitie.

CHAP. XXV.

That the Lord vseth our afflictions as meanes to conuey vnto vs diuers worldly benefits.

1. Sect. 1. That by afflictions we profit much in ciuill wisdome and policy.

NOw hauing spoken of the spirituall blessings which the Lord by afflictions deriueth vnto vs, respecting either God, our neighbours or our selues; wee are in the next place according to our order propounded to shew, that hee vseth them as meanes and instruments to conuey vnto vs also diuers worldly benefits. As first, by these crosses and calamities wee profit notably in wisedome, sound policie, and vse-full knowledge; for as prosperity maketh men wanton, and wantonneſſe causeth them to become foolish and childish; in regard whereof it is truly said, that the more the land exceedeth in fruitfulneſſe, the more the people exceede in foolishneſſe: so aduersity and affliction doth quicken the vnderstanding, and maketh vs to pull and gather all our wits together for our owne necessary vse and benefit; and whereas whilest wee flourish in the world, and abound in outward helps, wee wholy rest vpon them, and giue our selues to sloth and ease; when these outward props are taken from vs, and wee put to stand by our owne strength; then wee doe beate our braines and seriously study, how we may by our wisdome and policy, supply that which is wanting in these worldly helpes. In which respect affliction is fitly called the perfectour of wit, and the refiner of inuention, because it forceth men by a kinde of vrgent necessity to looke about them, to search into the secrets of nature, to obserue the times and dispositions of all with whom they are to deale, and to try a thousand conclusions, that they may finde out the best and fittest meanes for the remouing their crosses, and the supporting or repayring of their estates. Whereas if they should haue authority and friends, health and wealth at will, their wits would mould and rust for want of vse, seeing they neede not their helpe for the supplying of any wants: but are able to maintaine their estate by the present meanes which they haue about them. Neither doe our troubles and afflictions increase our wisdome and knowledge only, as they sharpen our inuention and quicken our wit, but also as they better our judgement and discretion, by that experience which we gaine in the time of our tribulation, without which the other were to small vse; for wit is best when it is bought at the highest rates, and then onely is profitable when it is seasoned and (as it were) sealed vnto vs by deare experience; neither is it of any value whilest it swimmeth in the braine, and only fitteth men for discourse; but when it is brought into vse and practice, and confirmed by experience, then it attayneth to higher perfection, and of wit becommeth prudence and wisedome. As for example euery one can discourse of the euils which accompany vnthriftinesse; but hee onely wisely vnderstandeth them, who hath felt and tasted of them. So many can talke of the dangers of suretiship, and yet vpon the next occasion run into it, thinking that though others haue beene vndone by the fayling of their friends, yet they shall not; but when this is confirmed vnto them by their owne experience, and their goods are sold to pay others mens debts, and their bodies imprisoned because all they haue will not satisfie the creditor; then, when they are once quit of these troubles they will bee wiser for euer after, and (like the bird) warily auoid this snare wherein they were formerly catched and insnared. So who knoweth not that innumerable mischiefes follow sudden rashneſſe, and inconsiderate headineſſe; and yet so are men transported with the heate and violence of Nam quasi inter se contraria sint bona fortuna & mens: ita medium in malis sapimus, secunda rectius aduersus. Seneca epist. 94.

of their passions and affections, that they are ready to rush into sudden courses; till being beaten with their owne rod and feeling the smart of their vnaduisednesse they learne to vse deliberation in their actions, and (as wee say) to looke before they leape. And finally, who vnderstandeth not that surfetting and drunkennesse are the common causes of almost all diseases; and yet men are ready to follow their appetite rather than their reason; and through immoderation to abuse such meates and drinkes as please their pallet; but when they haue once learned it by their owne experience, hauing by their intemperance fallen into some dangerous, and painefull sicknesse, then no more doth the burnt child dread the fire, than they doe carefully shun the causes of their griefe and smart.

2. Sect. 2. That by afflictions we are enabled to discerne our friends from flatterers.

Secondly our afflictions are notable meanes to make vs plainely to discerne our hearty and faithfull friends who loue our persons, from parasites and flatterers who only loue our prosperity and flourishing estate. For when wee abound with earthly blessings euery one is ready to fawne vpon vs, and to performe all good offices with an vsurious intent of deriuing hereby vnto themselues some greater benefit, as it were, lending out good turnes that they may bee returned vnto them with fruitfull encrease. Whereby it commeth to passe that we cannot easily discerne who truely loue vs, and who only seeke their own good, or ours for their owne sake; for oftentimes the flatterer in shew and outward seruices excelleth the faithfull friend, being more diligent to please and more ready at euery command: because the true friend performeth all duties for his sake whom hee loueth, the flatterer for his owne sake that hee may aduance hereby his owne profit. And therefore seeing no man loueth an other so much as himselfe, hereof it commeth to passe that as selfe-loue doth in heate, zeale and feruency much excell that loue which one friend vsually beareth vnto another; so the duties and seruices which arise and spring from it must needs according to the nature of the cause from which they grow, so much exceed all those duties which proceed from friendly loue in outward diligence and seeming zeale, as selfe-loue excelleth the loue of a friend; and the desire of our owne good, the desire of aduancing the good of another. In regard whereof hee greatly erreth who chooseth a friend among suiters who throng about his gate, and afterwards proueth him at a feast or banquet; because euery one will bee a friend for his owne benefit, yet hee who is tied with no other bond than profit and aduantage, will when greater gaine is offered become a traytour. But affliction like the winde or fanne seuereth the chaffe of flattery, from the solid graine of faithfull friendship, making parasites to flee from vs (as smoke driueth away Bees) when they can raise from vs no further aduantage. And as the only true touchstone it discerneth a louer of a mans selfe from him who is a louer of vs; for according to the prouerbe, he who is a friend in need, is a friend indeed; and hee who sticketh vnto vs in the time of aduersity, and forsaketh vs not when wee are forsaken of the World, doth euidently shew that our person, and not our prosperity, was the object of his loue. In this respect therefore our afflictions are profitable, as they plucke from vs false hearted parasites, which like the Iuy cling about vs to sucke our sap, and to make themselues fat with our spoile: and discouer vnto vs our true friends, who are hardly discerned from the other till this time of tryall; for as the sonne of Syrach saith, a friend cannot bee knowne in prosperity, and an enemy cannot be hiden in aduersitie. Eccluſ.12.8.

Verè qui amicum in atrio quærit, in cœnaculo perdet.

3. Sect. 3. That afflictions do crowne vs with a good name: whilst they discouer our spirituall graces. Pro.22.1. Eccleſ.7.3.

Thirdly afflictions are notable meanes to crowne vs, euen in this life, with a good name, which is better than gold and all riches, and sweeter than the most odoriferous perfume or most costly oyntment. For whereas whilest wee liue in ease and prosperity, the spirituall gifts and graces, which God hath bestowed vpon vs, doe lie hid and vndiscerned; when they come to the tryall of tribulation, they are plainely discouered and made knowne vnto all men. And as the starres cannot be seene in the sunshine day, but when the darkest night commeth they appeare in all their beauty and bravery: so these shining vertues and graces of God, haue their light much obscured in the day of prosperity, but when the darke night of affliction commeth, then they shine gloriously in their chiefest brightnesse. Then doe these precious ointments send forth their most odoriferous smell, when our earthen vessels and these brittle glasses of our bodies wherein they are contained, are cracked and broken, by being smitten with crosses and calamities. Then doth this sweete incense of grace & vertue yeeld the most fragrant sent, when as it is cast into this fire of afflictions. Then doth this spirituall gold appeare true and good, when it is tryed in this hot burning furnace. Then is the strength of our faith manifested to Gods glory & our praise, not when wee idly sit still, but when wee wrastle and contend with strong tentations. Then doth our Christian valour and fortitude most plainely appeare, not whilest wee lye at ease in the safe garrison, but when wee are assaulted with these mighty enemies, and after many conflicts get the victory. Finally then doth that precious diamond of true patience come to be approued & highly valued not whilst it lieth vntouched in the rich cabinet, but when it is tryed vpon the Anuile uile of afflictions. For example; who had euer knowne, or knowing commended, the faith and obedience of Abraham, if at Gods commandement hee had not firſt willingly gone into voluntary baniſhment, and left his owne country and kindred; and afterwards beene ready to offer vp in ſacrifice his deareſt ſonne? Who had knowne of Iacobs faith and piety if he had not, being indangered by his Brother, wraſtled with God in prayers and ſtrong cryes, and ſo by an holy violence obtained the bleſſing? Who had diſcerned thoſe excellent graces of piety, fidelity, the feare of God, wiſedome and patience, which were in Ioſeph, if he had not been ſold into Egypt, accuſed by his miſtreſſe, and cruelly intreated both by his owne kindred and ſtrangers? Who had euer heard of thoſe glorious deliuerances of the Iſraelits, or vnderſtood how deare they were vnto God, had they not beene firſt vexed in the captiuity of Egypt? Finally who had knowne, or knowing magnified the patience of Iob, the piety and humility of Dauid, the vndanted courage and conſtancy of the holy Apoſtles, if they had not beene manifeſted by their troubles and afflictions? And this is one chiefe cauſe which mooueth the Lord to bring his Children into theſe tryals of tribulation, that the riches and excellency of his graces and vertues beſtowed vpon them, may clearely appeare, both to the aduancement of his glory that gaue them; and the fame and eſtimation of thoſe that haue them. For ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, that God afflicted the faithfull of thoſe times, that the tryall of their faith being much more precious than gold that periſheth (though it bee tryed with fire) might be found to their prayſe and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Ieſus Chriſt. And therefore if men are ready to take any paines, to hazard themſelues vnto any danger, and to ſuffer innumerable miſeries and extremities, that they may attaine vnto the vaine honour and glory of the world, though oftentimes they long outliue it, or if it laſt ſo long, doth but accompany them to the graue, and then rotteth as faſt as their carkeſſe: how ready and willing, yea how chearefull and ioyfull ſhould we be in ſuffering theſe croſſes and calamities, which doe ſo much aduance our ſpirituall fame and reputation, and ſet forth the prayſe of Gods rich graces and vertues in vs; and that not among the inconſtant vulgar who are ready to extoll and diſgrace with the ſame breath, but among Gods faithfull ſaints and ſeruants, who being truly iudicious are alſo conſtant in their prayſes?

Gen.12.1.4.& 22.1-3.

Gen.32.24.

Exod.14.

Iob.13.15.
2.Sam.15.26.
Act.5.41.

1.Pet.1.7.

9. Sect. 4.
That by afflictions we come to reliſh better Gods bleſſings and benefits.

Laſtly by our afflictions our enſuing proſperity is made more delightfull and gratefull; and theſe bitter croſſes make vs to reliſh much better the ſweetneſſe of Gods bleſſings. For there is no worldly thing ſo good and excellent, that hath not in the continuall vſe of it ſome glutting ſatiety, which would in ſhort time make it to become loathſome, vnleſſe our appetite were ſometime ſharpned, by the forbearing or wanting of it. There is a fulneſſe euen of honie it ſelfe, though it bee neuer ſo ſweet and delightfull, and this fulneſſe is accompanied with neglect and loathing; whereas the ſparing vſe of the courſeſt fare maketh it to haue a good reliſh, and to become pleaſant to the taſt and appetite. So the wiſe man ſaith; that the perſon that is full, deſpiſeth an hony combe, but vnto the hungry ſoule euery bitter thing is ſweet. The dantieſt fare, if it be ordinary, bringeth no delight, and wee find no daintineſſe in the taſt of it, vnleſſe it be rarely fed vpon, and ſo made dainty in the vſe; whereas the homelieſt meate hath an excellent reliſh, if it bee eaten after long faſting; and hereof it is, that men after full tables, doe voluntarily vſe ſome ſpare diet, and ſharken their ſtomacke and appetite by long abſtinence. The daies brightneſſe if it were continuall would become tedious; and the glorious light of the ſunne would bring wearineſſe, vnleſſe it were made gratefull by the nights darkneſſe. In a word pleaſure it ſelfe would not long pleaſe vs, if the glutting ſatiety of theſe ſweete meates were not taken away by abſtinence, or ſauced (as it were) with the ſowre ſauce of intermingled miſeries. And as common vſe of worldly benefits doth dull the appetite, and maketh it to loth them; ſo it taketh away from them their excellency and worth in our opinion, and and cauſeth the iudgement to vilifie and contemne them; whereas if wee enjoy them ſparingly, and ſometime be vtterly depriued of them, then their worth is increaſed by their want, and they haue much better welcome at their comming againe, than they formerly had before they departed from vs. Thus that excellent iewell of health when it is continually enjoyed is ſcarce thought on, but then it is ſweet and moſt highly prized, when we haue long wanted it through ſome tedious and grieuous ſickneſſe. So liberty, though it be as precious as life, is but little regarded of thoſe who neuer felt the miſery of reſtraint; but after long impriſonment it becommeth moſt gratefull and delightfull. And thus riches are moſt eſteemed by them who haue formerly beene pinched with pouerty, and meate is moſt ſauory, when it is ſauced with hunger. Thus that victory is fulleſt of joy which is hardly obtained after a long, doubtfull and dangerous fight; and the ſafe harbor is then deſcried with moſt comfort and contentment of the paſſengers, after they haue eſcaped the perils of tempeſtuous ſtormes. Thus the delights of the ſpring are much more delightfull becauſe they follow the nipping froſts and fowle

Pro.27.7.

weather

weather of lowring winter; and in a word thus all pleasures which satiate and glut without mixture, doe become much more pleasing, when they succed, and are often interchanged with crosses and miseries. To which purpose one saith, that in all humane affaires there can scarce be any true joy, vnlesse dolefull sorrow haue gone before, and the bitternesse of fore-passed griefes doth the more commend the sweetnesse of ensuing gladnesse. So the husbandman is moued by his painefull seed time, to rejoyce so much the more in his plentifull harvest, &c. And therefore seeing by these afflictions the Lord doth but sauce his benefits, that wee may enioy them with the more delight; and taketh away for a while his earthly blessings that after they are restored they may bring with them the greater pleasure; let vs by this consideration be moued to beare these crosses with patience and comfort. And as the vsurer, though he make an idoll of his gold, yet is content to want it for a time, because when the terme is expired, hee expecteth to haue it returned with some increase: so though our hearts too much adhere to earthly things, yet let vs bee content to forbeare their company for a while, seeing vpon their returne the joy and comfort which wee take in them shall bee much increased. Euen the veriest Epicure (as we see) vseth sharpe and sowre sauces to make his pleasant meates to become more sauory, and is sometime content to prescribe vnto himselfe a voluntary fast to sharpen his stomacke, and set an edge on his appetite; that so afterwards hee may feed vpon his dainty cates with more delight: and why then should wee not bee willing to vse this temporary abstinence when God prescribeth it, who being infinite in wisedome and loue towards vs, knowes best how to delight his children for their greatest benefit, and so to sauce those earthly comforts, as that they may bring vnto vs the greatest pleasure and content? Finally seeing that is sweete in remembring, which was sowre in suffering, and seeing when wee are in the middest of our delights, it is not the least pleasure to thinke that wee were once miserable, and casting our eye backward, to looke vnto the snares out of which wee are escaped, let this addition vnto our future ioyes giue some ease to our present smart; and let vs for a time indure these miseries with patience, the remembrance whereof will make vs the more happy for euer after.

Chap. XXVI.

That the Lord vseth afflictions as a notable meanes to preserue vs from condemnation, and to further our eternall glory and happinesse.

1. Sect. 1. That the Lord by afflictions preserueth vs from condemnation.

By that which hath beene said it appeareth, that the Lord by our afflictions communicateth vnto vs many temporary benefits, making vs thereby partakers both of his spirituall and sauing graces, and also of earthly and worldly blessings. Now according to our order propounded wee are to shew, that he also vseth them as meanes to conueigh vnto vs such benefits as are euerlasting, and doe respect the life to come. And these are of two sorts; for by these chastisements and fatherly corrections the Lord both preserueth vs from euerlasting condemnation, and also furthereth and aduanceth our eternall glory and endlesse happinesse. Concerning the former wee are to know, that whereas wee in our own nature and disposition are ready to take such wayes, and to runne such courses, as would, if we continued in them, bring vs in the end to endlesse woe and misery; the Lord in his infinite loue and mercy, stoppeth and stayeth vs from going on, by casting these blockes and bushes before vs, that by an holy violence and profitable necessitie we may be forced to turne backe againe vnto him, and so bee saued from this desperate danger. And as the carefull husband-man setteth a hedge of sharpe thornes about his wels and deepe pits to keepe his cattell from falling into them: so our gracious God, out of his speciall loue and care ouer vs, doth with these thornie hedges of trouble and affliction, preserue vs (as wee are ranging and rouing in the fields of this world) from falling into, and perishing in the pit of perdition. In our selues wee are ready like silly sheep, to wander out of the right way which leadeth vnto happinesse, into the bypaths of sinne and wickednesse; and so to become a prey vnto Sathan, who like a greedy wolfe rangeth about, that getting vs within his reach, he may seaze vpon and vtterly destroy vs: and therefore our carefull shepheard watcheth ouer vs with his prouidence, and when he seeth vs thus to goe astray, he vseth these afflictions, as it were, the dog of the flocke, to fetch vs backe againe, and therewith as with the shepheards crooke and rod, hee pulleth vs vnto him, and driueth vs forward in the paths of holinesse and righteousnesse, which will safely bring vs into those heauenly folds of endlesse happinesse. If wee were let vnto our owne libertie, wee would like the foolish bird flee from our Lord and master, and so become a prey to hellish fiends, who like ruenous kites, would would seaze vpon vs; and therefore with these sharpe knives of affliction hee clippeth our wings to hinder vs from taking this pernitious flight, and restraineth our licentious liberty, by putting vs into these cages of restraint, that so wee may bee preserued safe from perishing in these dangers. Finally if wee might haue our owne wils, we would, like wanton and vntamed heifers, feede and take our pastime in the pleasant pastures of sinne, and would gladly keepe companie with wicked worldlings ordained to destruction; but howsoeuer the Lord sustereth these fat buls of Basan to feede and pamper themselues with these delights, to liue at ease, leape and friske about and take their pleasure, because hee hath appointed them to bee slaughtered in the shambles of perdition; yet hee restraineth vs from this wicked fellowship, by putting vpon vs this yoke of chastisement; and causeth vs to feede in bare fields, because hee is purposed to vse our seruice, that wee may injoy life eternall, and not accompany them in a common destruction. So that when we are iudged (we may say with the Apostle that) wee are chastened of the Lord that wee may not for euer be condemned with the world. To which purpose a worthy Father saith, that when God doth correct his children, & vexe them here with the stinging whips of wholsome and holy chastisements, he exerciseth discipline before iudgement, and sheweth his loue in scourging them, in that hee therefore correcteth them that he may not finde them such as are fit to bee condemned. And therefore seeing the Lord vseth our afflictions as notable meanes, to preserue vs from falling into euerlasting condemnation, by seuering vs from wicked worldlings, and keeping vs from accompanying them in the pleasant broad way which leadeth to destruction: as also by restraining vs from sinne when wee are ready to fall into it, or pulling vs out of it by vnfained repentance; when wee are already fallen (as I haue before more largely proued) great reason haue wee to beare these chastisements, not onely with patience and meeknesse, but also with ioy and thankefulnesse; For (as one saith) it is better to bee burned with the flame of a feauer, than with the flame of vices; seeing by this the fier of Hell is kindled against vs, the torment whereof is intolerable and euerlasting. Let vs not then thinke any momentanie afflictions heauie and hard to beeborne, which helpe to free vs from those endlesse tortures, yea rather let vs prayse and magnifie Gods mercy in them, in that being in comparison lesse than the byting of a flye, they by awakening vs out of the sleep of sinne and securitie, do preserue vs from being stung euerlastingly with that deadly stinging serpent of death and destruction; and being lesse to bee esteemed than the pricke of a pin, doe helpe to free vs from the tormenting racke of Gods inraged wrath.

1. Cor. 11. 32.

Diligit quem flagellat, nolens inuenire quem damnet. August. senten. Tom. 3.

Quis nescit quòd multò melius est ardere flammis febrium, quam flammis vitiorum? Gregor.

But let vs consider further, that as the Lord in his infinite loue vseth afflictions as a notable meanes to preserue vs from condemnation: so also for the furthering of our saluation, and increasing of our happinesse. For as one saith, when as these euils of punishment torture vs, and in torturing doe not extort from vs the euill of sinne; not onely the soule is possessed by patience, but also when the body irs selfe doth meekely indure affliction or temporarie destruction, it gaineth hereby secure & immoueable safety, ioyned with euerlasting felicity; and so by sorrow and death, inuiolable health and happy immortality is procured. And this is the chiefe end at which (next vnto his owne glory) God aimeth in all our afflictions; for euery where wee beare about in our body the dying of our Lord Iesus, that the life of Iesus might also bee made manifest in our bodies, as the Apostle speaketh; and as elsewhere he saith, therefore are wee tryed with tribulations, that our patience and faith being approued wee may bee counted worthy of the kingdome of God; yet not through our owne merit, but through Gods gracious acceptance; for there is no comparison betweene the smalnesse of our sufferings and the greatnesse of the reward, though the Lord in his infinite mercy is content to repute vs worthy of this superexcellent weight of glory for these our light and momentany afflictions. So the Authour of the Booke of Wisedome saith, that the righteous hauing beene a little chastized shall bee greatly rewarded, for God proued them and found them worthy for himselfe. To the same purpose an ancient Father speaking of Gods end in chastening his Children saith; Thou giuest them correction, that thou maiest not take thy mercy from them; thou beatest them for their contumacy, that thou mayest bestow vpon them the promised patrimony: Neither is it any wonder if thou correctest those being little, whom being come to ripe age in Christ thou wilt make thy heires. Thou therefore scourgest these, but withall thou instructest and preseruest them in safety; whereas thou sparest the wicked for a time, that thou maiest condemne them for euer. Thou instructest them to know thee, thou exercisest them to feare thee, that thou mayest crowne them with glory. So another asketh the reason why God permitteth the faithfull to be temped? Is it not (saith he) that his vertue may hereby be tryed and exercised, and hee attaine vnto greater happinesse, for it is a more glorious victory not to consent being temped, than if hee could not at all bee subiect to temptation? And this consideration moued Moses not only to beare with patience affliction, when

2. Sect. 3. That God by our afflictions furthereth our euerlasting glory and saluation.

Cum torquent aliqua mala, & non extorquent opera mala, non solum anima per patientiam possidetur &c. August. li. de patien. cap. 8.

2. Cor. 4. 10.

2. Thes. 1. 5.

Patior in terris vt patiar cœlo.

2. Cor. 4. 17.

Wisd. 3. 5.

Das disciplinam vt non auferas misericordiam. Cedis contumaciam vt reddas ei promissam hæreditatem &c. Idiota apud Orthodoxog. de patien. vera contemplat. l. 8 vsque ad finem, exercet adhortationem, vt certet ad tuendum vt coronetur gloriam. Ibidem. cap. 12. August. de ciuit. dei lib. 11. cap. 6.

when through vrgent neceſſity and vnauoidable violence it was forced vpon him; but voluntarily to chooſe tribulation with Gods children, rather than to be diuided from their ſociety, becauſe hee knew that after his tryals being approued, there was a Crowne of happineſſe reſerued for him. For ſo it is ſaid that hee refuſed to bee called the ſonne of Pharaohs daughter, and choſe rather to ſuffer aduerſity with the people of God, than to enioy the pleaſures of ſinne for a ſeaſon; eſteeming the rebuke of Chriſt greater riches than the treaſures of Egypt; becauſe he had reſpect to the recompence of reward. Yea, this was a notable incouragement to our Sauiour Chriſt himſelfe in bearing thoſe great afflictions and calamities which were laid vpon him, whoſe example the Apoſtle propoundeth vnto vs for our imitation. Let vs runne (ſaith he) with patience the race that is ſet before vs; looking vnto Ieſus the authour and finiſher of our faith, who for the ioy that was ſet before him endured the croſſe, and deſpiſed the ſhame, and is ſet at the right hand of the throne of God. And ſurely if we alſo would continually fixe the eyes of our mindes vpon the excellency and eternity of theſe heauenly ioyes, and conſider with our ſelues that our ſhort and light afflictions doe much further vs in attayning vnto them, it would be a notable inducement to make vs beare them not onely with patience and comfort, but euen to triumph ouer them with great reioycing. Eſpecially if we conſider further, that it is not the bare bearing of theſe afflictions that doth intitle vs to this happines, but when with our patience we do ouercom them; for as the Apoſtle ſaith, then are wee to bee accounted bleſſed not when we ſuffer, but when wee patiently indure in theſe ſufferings; then ſhall wee bee copartners with Gods Saints in that glorious Kingdome, when wee are companions with them, not onely in tribulation, but alſo in patience, as the Apoſtle Iohn conioyneth them: then will God giue vs the crowne of life, when hauing tryed vs with afflictions hee hath found vs faithfull vnto the death: Then ſhall we receiue the Garland when wee haue got the victory. And then, and not before, ſhall wee triumph in glory when wee haue fought a good fight, and ouercome and put to flight theſe our ſpirituall enemies.

But let vs ſomewhat more particularly conſider, how and in what reſpects theſe momentany afflictions doe further vs in attayning vnto euerlaſting happineſſe. And firſt we are to know, that our croſſes and calamities doe helpe vs forward towards theſe heauenly ioyes, as they doe fit and prepare vs for the fruition of them. And this they doe in a double reſpect: firſt, as they make vs weary of the World, when wee finde ſuch hard entertainment, and willing and deſirous to arriue in our heauenly Country, where wee expect better welcome. For as by the afflictions of Egypt, the Iſraelites were inflamed in their deſires to leaue that Country, whereas they could haue beene contented to haue liued and died there, if they had enioyed in it eaſe, peace and plenty; and when their oppreſſions were increaſed, then and not before, ſet their hearts on the promiſed Land, their face to ſeeke it, and their feet in the way which led vnto it: So when as wee are ſo addicted to the World, that if without moleſtation wee could enioy the vanities of it, we would be content, yea, earneſtly deſire to continue ſtill in it; the Lord cauſeth this ſpirituall Pharaoh to vexe and oppreſſe vs; with which ſeruitude being throughly wearied, we deſire to forſake the place of our miſerable bondage, that wee may be freed from theſe afflictions, and earneſtly deſiring to be in our heauenly Country, where wee expect to find and enioy ſweet reſt, peace, and fulneſſe of all ſpirituall ioy, we thinke of ſetting our feet toward the holy Land, and of walking in the way of righteouſneſſe and holineſſe which leadeth vnto it. To this purpoſe one ſaith, that if we rightly obſerue the courſe of this life we ſhall find nothing firme or conſtant, but as the Traueller paſſeth ſometimes by pleaſant Plaines, and ſometimes by rough and vneuen wayes; ſo wee, whileſt wee remayne in this life, doe one while meete with proſperity, and another while with aduerſity, which interchangeably ſucceed one another, and change their courſe by turnes. And therefore ſeeing wee are in all eſtates ſubiect to changes and alterations, our minds ſhould neither be exalted with proſperity, nor dejected with aduerſity; but with all our hearts wee are earneſtly to deſire to be in that place, where all things which are good are alſo permanent, and where there is no interchange betweene proſperity and aduerſity. To which end God ſo ordereth it by his diuine Prouidence, that in this life either aduerſity followeth proſperity, or proſperity aduerſity; that one while being humbled we may learne to mourne for our ſins, and another while being exalted we may retaine in our minds the remembrance of aduerſity, as the authour of humility. Again, afflictions doe fit and prepare vs for our heauenly happineſſe, as they ſerue for helps and meanes, to clenſe and purifie vs from the filth of our corruptions and pollution of ſin. For whereas no impure or baſe mettall; can euer come into this treaſury of bleſſedneſſe; afflictions are that fiery furnace wherein we are purged and refined from the droſſe of our corruptions; according to that of the Prouerbs; Take the droſſe from the ſiluer, and there ſhall come forth a veſſell for the finer. Whereas onely the pureſt graine ſhall be ſtored vp in theſe Grainers of happineſſe, afflictions are the winde and fanne which purge and Gregor. Epiſt. ex regiſtr. l. 2. indict. 11. ep. 90.

Prou. 25. 4.

and cleanse vs from the chaffe of sinne, whereas no vncleane thing can enter in thither, these troubles and crosses are the meanes to wash, and purge vs, as they bring vs vnto God by vnfained repentance. Finally, whereas faire and wel-squared stones only shall be placed in that heauenly building of the new Ierusalem, afflictions are those hammers and tooles whereby wee are smoothed from the bunches and knobs of worldly superfluities, carnall cares, and earthly loue. And as the Lord in building his materiall Temple tooke order that the stones should be hewen, cut and polished, in the Quarreyes, because hee would not haue so much as the noyse of a hammer to be heard in his House; so in the building of his spirituall, and triumphant Church his Will is that the liuely stones appointed for this worke should be hewed and hammered, squared and prepared with crosses and troubles in the quarry of this World; because hee is purposed that no touch of tribulation should disquiet and molest vs, when as wee are once placed in his heauenly Temple. For there all teares shall be wiped from our eyes, and there shall bee no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, nor paine, as the holy Ghost speaketh. In which respect one fitly compareth the Christians life to the Palme-tree which in it lower parts is enfolded with dry and rough barke, and therefore vnpleasant to be touched; but in the vpper parts it is greene, beautifull and fruitfull, spreading it selfe abroad with comely largenesse: for so the faithfull mans life is here below on earth despised, vnpleasant, enclosed and compassed about (as it were) with a rough rinde of troubles and afflictions; but aboue in Heauen it shall be delightfull, glorious, and abounding, through our fruition of God, with the fruits of blessednesse.

Apoc. 21.4.

Greg. Moral. lib. 19 cap. 25.

7. Sect. 4. That by our afflictions wee are assured of euerlasting happinesse; first through Gods gracious promises made to the faithfull which are afflicted.

Secondly, afflictions doe further vs in attayning vnto heauenly happinesse, as they doe, whilest we liue here, ascertaine and assure vs, that wee shall enjoy them in the life to come; and so enter vs by the assurance of faith and hope into the present possession of euerlasting glory. The which assurance we attaine vnto, both by meditation in Gods Word, and by the consideration of his workes and administration of his righteous judgement. For in the Scriptures wee shall find, that the Lord hath bound himselfe by manifold gracious promises, that he will giue euerlasting life and happinesse vnto all who being afflicted in this World, doe with faith, patience, and humility beare their crosse. So hee saith to his afflicted Church: For your shame you shall receiue double, and for confusion they shall reioyce in their portion: for in their land they shall possesse them double: euerlasting ioy shall be vnto them. And the holy Apostle assureth vs, that if wee bee dead with Christ, we shall also liue with him; if we suffer with him, we shall also reigne with him, and that the crosses of this life, are not worthy the Crowne and glory which shall bee shewed vs in the life to come; seeing as elsewhere hee saith, These short and momentany afflictions shall cause vnto vs a farre most excellent and an eternall waight of glory. And hereof it is that our Sauiour pronounceth them blessed, who in this life are exercised with afflictions, because, profiting by them, they are so many certaine signes and vndoubted pledges of their future happinesse. Blessed are they that mourne for they shall bee comforted. Blessed are yee poore, for yours is the Kingdome of God. Blessed are yee that hunger now, for yee shall be satisfied; Blessed are yee that weepe now, for yee shall laugh, Blessed are yee when men hate you, and when they separate and reuile you, and cast out your name as euill, for the sonne of mans sake. Reioyce yee in that day and be glad, for behold your reward is great in Heauen. So the Apostle Iames saith that, The man is blessed that endureth tentation, because when hee is tryed hee shall receiue the crowne of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that loue him. By which it appeareth, that if with patience wee beare the crosse, we shall be also partakers of the Crowne; if wee indure the fight and obtaine the victory, then shall we also triumph in glory. With which consideration Eliphaz perswadeth to patience in afflictions; Behold (saith hee) Blessed is the man whom God correcteth: therefore refuse not thou the chastening of the Almighty. And Christ encourageth the Angell of the Church of Smyrna with this consolation to bee constant and faithfull in his sufferings. Feare none of these things (saith he) which you shall suffer, behold it shall come to passe that the Deuill shall cast some of you into prison, that yee may be tryed, and yee shall haue tribulation ten dayes. Bee thou faithfull vnto the death, and I will giue thee the Crowne of life. And the Apostle Paul thus comforteth himselfe after all the miseries which hee had suffered in his spirituall warfare; I haue fought (saith hee) a good fight and haue finished my course; I haue kept the faith, from hence-forth is laid vp for mee the Crowne of righteousnesse, which the Lord the righteous Iudge shall giue me at that day. Neither in truth can there be a more effectuall consolation in our troubles and distresses, than when wee are by them assured out of Gods Word that after these light and momentany afflictions, we shall enjoy vnspeakable and endlesse happinesse. For (as one saith) wee shall not feele the pinching miseries of this life, whilest with the whole intention of our mindes wee fixe our thoughts vpon our future hopes. But wee shall be like a valiant Warriour, who either feeleth not, or contemneth the griefe of his wounds, whilest all the powers of his mind are wholly

Rom. 8.17, 18. 2. Cor. 4.17.

Math. 5.4. Luke 6.20, 22, 23.

Iames 1.12.

Iob 5.17.

Apoc. 2.10.

2. Tim. 4.7.

Esay 61.7.

2. Tim. 2.11, 12.

ly taken vp with thinking vpon his future victory, &c. For so doth assured hope ouercome things instant, that that in a sort beginneth to be which is to come, and that endeth which is present, and maketh vs like to a Woman in the paines of Child-birth, who whilest she hopeth assuredly to haue a sonne, lightly esteemeth of her sorrowes in bearing him.

But as by afflictions wee gather assurance of euerlasting happinesse belonging vnto vs out of Gods Word; so may we be more confirmed in this assurance by Gods works, and the administration of his righteous iudgements. For the Lord to shew the infiniteneſſe and omnipotency of his Wisdome and Power, doth bring visually one contrary out of another, as light out of darkenesse, good out of euill, happinesse out of misery, ioy out of sorrow, and the highest exaltation vnto heauenly glory, out of the lowest abiection and humiliation through earthly afflictions and calamities. And as our Saviour was sent, by his Word to cast downe strong holds, and to leuell and make equall with the ground all that lifteth vp and aduanceth it selfe, and contrariwise to raise him vp that is dejected, to preach good tydings vnto the poore, to bind vp the broken hearted, to preach liberty to captiues, to comfort all that mourne, giuing them beauty for ashes, the oyle of ioy for mourning and the garment of gladnesse for the spirit of heauinesse; so accordingly he doth in act and deed powerfully effect this his good will and pleasure, bringing men out of misery vnto felicity, and out of the depths of Hell into the Kingdome of Heauen. Whereas contrariwise hee visually pulleth downe that which is exalted in the World, and out of the greatest worldly prosperity, bringeth men into euerlasting woe and misery. Both which our Saviour signifieth in that Parable of Dives and Lazarus; for as the rich man who surfetted of worldly delights, and abounded with all earthly blessings, was stript of all, and cast into Hell torments, whereas hee could not obtaine so much as a drop of cold water to coole his tongue; so Lazarus (who wanted both meanes and friends, and had not the priuiledge of the Dogs granted vnto him, which were allowed to eat the crums that fell vnder the rich mans table) was out of this worldly misery, carried by the Angels into Abrahams bosome. And this vicissitude of weale and woe, earthly misery and heauenly happinesse, not only was signified in the deed done, but also in Abrahams speech, which being spoken in a Parable belongeth vnto all who are in the like condition. Remember that thou in thy life time receiuedst thy pleasures, and likewise Lazarus paines; now therefore is hee comforted and thou art tormented. And thus those, whom the Apostle Iohn seeth adorned with the long white Robes of glory and immortality, are said to be such, as came out of great tribulation, although their garments had not their whitenesse by being washed in the teares of their sorrowes and trouble, but in the bloud of the Lambe, as it is there expressed. And this is just with God that the faithfull should (as it were) by the gates of Hell trauell towards Heauen, and through many miseries passe into euerlasting felicity, that (as one saith) that saluation which was willingly lost for the obtayning of momentany pleasure might againe bee recouered by patient sustayning of temporary griefe and misery. And contrariwise that the vngodly and wicked, who flourishing in worldly prosperity, abused Gods good blessings for the dishonour of God, and oppression of his seruants, should come to a day of reckoning, when as being found guilty, they shall be stript of all, and receiue punishment according to their deserts. And with this fitly sorteth the saying of the Apostle, It is a righteous thing with God to recompence tribulation to them that trouble you; And to you which are troubled rest with vs, when the Lord Iesus shall shew himselfe from Heauen with his mighty Angels, &c. Neither haue we only by our afflictions when we profit by them, some assurance from that vicissitude of earthly misery and heauenly glory before spoken of; but also may haue it most strongly confirmed by an Argument taken from iustice, which must needs be in the administration of Gods righteous iudgements. For when we see that our selues and others, who truly and sincerely feare and serue the Lord, are subiect to innumerable troubles, and (as the Prophet speaketh) are afflicted euery morning, one misery (like the waues of the Sea) following in the necke of another, whereas contrariwise the wicked contemners of God and goodnesse, abound with all earthly blessings, and flourish in the prosperity of the World; from hence wee may necessarily and infallibly conclude, that the righteous Iudge of Heauen and Earth, who will render vnto euery man according to his works, hath most certainly appointed a time for the punishing of their sinne, and therewarding according to his gracious and free promises, our vertues and holy endeuours, for the full freedome of his faithfull seruants out of all their miseries, and crowning of their faith, patience and obedience, with glory and happinesse; and also for the condemnation and destruction of wicked reprobates, who like malicious enemies haue all their life prouoked his wrath, and dishonoured his Name by their sin and impiety. Neither will it stand with naturall reason, that God infinite in iustice and goodnesse, should create and ordaine his best creatures who are most carefull of his

Apoc.7.14.

Et iuste salus illa perpetua quæ turpiter amissa est per voluntatem, fortiter recipitur per dolorem. August. de Genes. ad literam lib.3.c.19.

2.Thes.1.6,7.

Psal.73.14.

glory vnto woe and misery in the world; and those who are outragiously wicked to flourish in prosperity and abound in all earthly blessings, if hee had not appointed an after-reckoning, and second judgement, for the rewarding of the godly, who are here afflicted, and the punishment of the wicked, who are in worldly priuiledges and prerogatiues so highly exalted and aduanced. And therefore seeing by our afflictions we haue so many waies assurance of euerlasting life and happinesse, let vs indure them with patience, comfort and rejoycing; for if there were no other fruit or benefit arising from them, this alone were sufficient to counteruaile and infinitely to ouer-weigh all the griefes and miseries which are incident to the momentany and vncertaine life of man; seeing they being light shall haue an end before or with vs; whereas this superexcellent weight of glory, which they seale and confirme vnto vs, is infinite and euerlasting. If then worldly men are content to endure any labour, to hazard themselues to innumerable dangers, and to suffer many and grieuous miseries, that they may be assured of earthly things, their strongest assurances, being but vncertainties, and the best things assured, but trifling vanities; if the husbandman toyle and labour in the seed time, in hope of a plentifull harueſt; notwithstanding that his expectation is often frustrated, by many accidents, as foule and vnseasonable weather, too much drought, or too much raine, Wormes, Cankers, Caterpillers, and such like. If the Souldier suffer all those miseries which are incident to his profession, as watching, cold, hunger, and be ready with patience and courage to run into innumerable desperate dangers, which euery day bring him to the very confines of Deaths kingdome, and all to obtaine either the vaine breath of mens prayses, or some small pay to defray his charges; and if the Marchant compasse Sea and Land, and run vnknown courses, with much pains and great perill, to get some wealth which he is vncertaine whether hee shall obtaine or no; or hauing obtayned it may after a tedious Voyage perish in the long desired Port, or bee stolne or taken from him, by outward violence, when he commeth to land: with what patience and comfort should wee endure all our paines and labour, and beare all the crosses and calamities, which giue vnto vs when we profit by them, most certaine assurance of such riches, honours, and pleasures, as being vnualuable and vnconceiuable, are also out of all danger of comming, by any outward accident, either vnto losse or end.

3. Sect. 6. That afflictions keepe vs in the way of righteousnesse which leadeth to euerlasting happinesse.

Thirdly, wee are furthered by our afflictions in attayning vnto heauenly happinesse, as they are vsed by God as meanes to keepe vs in the right way, or way of righteousnes, which leadeth vnto them. For whereas by our naturall corruption wee are ready to wander into the by-paths of sin, and to goe into the broad way which leadeth to destruction, being allured by the inticing bayts of worldly vanities, the Lord (as hath beene shewed) maketh afflictions to serue as a thorny hedge and strong fence to keepe vs in our right course, and to restraine vs from digressing and going astray. And when being sayling in the Sea of this miserable World, towards the Hauen of euerlasting rest, wee are ready to listen to the sweet Syren tunes of earnall pleasures, and leaping out of our ship of safety the true and inuisible Church, to perish by adhering to them in the gulfe of destruction; God in loue vnto vs vseth our afflictions, as wax, to stop our eares, that we may not harken to these bewitching Songs but may without distraction hold on our course which will bring vs at the last to the Port of Blessednesse. Neither doe our crosses only keepe vs in the right way which bringeth vs to heauenly joy and glory, but also they hasten our speed in trauayling of it; and whereas in our owne disposition we are sluggish and slothfull in our journey, and either ready to turne backe againe, to sit still, or at least to make slow haste in going forward, the Lord vseth afflictions as goads and spurs to quicken our dulnesse, and as rods to driue vs on, and to compell vs to make more hast, that we may more safely and seasonably come vnto the end of our journey, and be better assured of the saluation of our soules.

4. Sect. 7. That all these are the way whereby we must enter into Gods Kingdome.

Finally, our afflictions doe much further vs in attayning vnto glory and immortality, as God appointed them to bee the way that must bring vs vnto this euerlasting rest. For there is no comming into Heauen vnlesse we will bee content to passe through the strait gate and narrow way of trouble and affliction, as our Sauiour teacheth vs; and if wee will euer come thither, we must by many tribulations, enter into the Kingdome of God, as the Apostle Paul affirmeth. Wee cannot enter into the heauenly Canaan vnlesse wee passe through this Wildernesse of sin: wee cannot come into the Port of happinesse, vnlesse we saile through a sea of miseries; wee cannot obtaine the garland of Glory vnlesse we runne and wrestle for it, striuing as wee ought to doe till we haue gotten the victory, which cannot be performed by vs, but with much paine and irkesome labour. Wee must neuer looke to be crowned with happinesse, till we haue ouercome the enemies of our saluation, and there is no notable victory obtained, vnlesse a painfull and perillous fight haue gone before; wee cannot come into heauenly happinesse, but by earthly misery, and here wee must endure wants and watching, wounds and weasinesse, weaknesse, sicknesse, and many infirmities, before we can attaine vnto Matth. 7. 14. Act. 14. 22.

2. Tim. 2. 5. 1. Cor. 9. 25.

Tribulatio nos terrere debet pugnæ, non fugæ vt occasionem præbeat victoriæ, & per consequens coronæ, quia non coronabitur nisi qui legitime certauerit, Idcirc. inter orthodoxa de pat. ver. contempt.

vnto heauenly plenty, reſt, ſecurity and that euerlaſting health which cannot bee impeached with any ſickneſſe. Neither muſt wee looke for a priuiledge of hauing any other way than this narrow and ſtraite path of afflictions to bring vs vnto Heauen, ſeeing (as hereafter I ſhall ſhew) it is the common high way, by which all Gods deare Saints and faithfull Seruants haue trauailed before vs. Yea, not the only Sonne of God himſelfe, had any prerogatiue herein aboue others, but though he were moſt pure and innocent, yet he was faine by the Ladder of the Croſſe to climbe into his Kingdome; for as himſelfe ſayth, hee ought to haue ſuffered theſe things, and ſo to enter into his glory; namely, that the predictions of the Prophets might be fulfilled who declared firſt the ſufferings which ſhould come vnto him, and then the glory which ſhould follow after, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh. And therefore if wee euer meane to come vnto this heauenly happineſſe, wee muſt not thinke to finde out ſome new way which is faire, pleaſant and full of eaſe and carnall delight; but wee muſt tread in the foot-ſteps of Chriſt our Guide who is gone before vs, and keepe in the ſame ſtraight and afflicted way which hee hath trauelled; for none come vnto Heauen but his Diſciples and the Scholars of his Schoole, and euery one who will be his Diſciple muſt make accounts to take vp his croſſe daily, and follow him, as himſelfe hath told vs. Whereof it is, that the Apoſtle ſaith, that we haue need of patience, for the obtayning of our heauenly patrimony which God hath promiſed vs; becauſe there is no way of comming vnto it but through afflictions and tribulations, in which wee would quickly faint if we were not ſtrengthned by faith and patience. And therefore the Apoſtle prayeth, that the God of all grace who hath called the faithfull to eternall glory by Chriſt Ieſus, after they haue ſuffered a little, would make them perfect and conſtant, implying thereby, that firſt wee muſt be caſt downe and humbled by afflictions, before we can be exalted to glory and happineſſe. And this (as one ſaith) is juſt with God, that wee who were caſt out of the joyes of Paradiſe, for our rebellious luſting after the forbidden fruit, that thereby wee might pleaſe and delight our taſte and appetite; ſhould be re-admitted into our loſt happineſſe by patient induring vnpleaſant griefes and diſtaſtfull miſeries; that we who fled from Gods preſence by doing of euill, ſhould be brought backe vnto him by ſuffering of euill; and that as we there did againſt righteouſneſſe, ſo wee ſhould here ſuffer for righteouſneſſe. Whereby it appeareth that they are in a miſerable condition who haue alwayes flouriſhed in proſperity, and neuer taſted of any miſery, becauſe they are quite out of the narrow and afflicted way which bringeth vs to eternall bleſſedneſſe, and walke in that broad and pleaſant way which leadeth to deſtruction. For as one ſaith, he is vnhappy in his happineſſe, who was neuer thought worthy to combate with croſſes, whereby wee attaine vnto the Crowne of euerlaſting glory. And againe; hee is wretched and vnhappy who in his happineſſe is not exerciſed with tentations; for hee hath not the Crowne of victory who hath not firſt ſuſtained the paines and danger of the fight. To which purpoſe another affirmeth, that he who is exempted from ſuffering the ſmart of afflictions, is exempted alſo from the ſociety of Gods Elect Children, becauſe a woe is denounced againſt them who haue heere their conſolation, and contrariwiſe they are pronounced bleſſed who ſorrow and weepe. In which reſpect tribulation and affliction is much more profitable vnto vs than abuſed proſperity, an abject and meane condition, better than an high eſtate and ouer-topping greatneſſe; and pinching neceſſity, than voluptuous plenty; becauſe both being momentany and paſſing away with poſting ſpeed; the one leaueth behinde it helliſh puniſhments, the other cauſeth vnto vs an heauenly Crowne of euerlaſting glory.

Luke 24.26. 1 Pet. 1.11. Luke 9.23. Heb. 10.36. 2 Cor. 5.10. Aug. de pa. lib. cap. 24.

Miſer & infelix eſt qui non fuerit in felicitate tentatus. Caret enim munere qui caret certamine, Hier. ad ægrotum amicum, Tom. 4. Idem. inter orthodox. de patient. vera Contemp. cap. 2. Bernard. in Pſal. qui habitat. Serm. 17.

Seeing therefore the Croſſe of Chriſt is (as it is called) the Ladder to Heauen, his ſufferings being the cauſe, and ours the way that leadeth vs vnto happines, as there is no cauſe of ſhame in bearing of the one, ſo there is no cauſe of ſorrow in bearing of the other; for what matter is it, though the way of our pilgrimage be rough and vnpleaſant, if wee can be aſſured that by trauailing of it, wee ſhall be brought into Heauen? What though it be foule and dirty (like Ieremies Dungeon) ſo that our feet, as we are going, ſticke faſt in the mire? Yet let not this diſcourage vs, for as the way is filthy, ſo it is ſhort, and after we haue indured a little paines in paſſing it, our momentany labour will bring vs to euerlaſting reſt, and this ſhort foule lane being ſoone trauelled will conduct vs vnto a Palace of all pleaſure, and vnto thoſe glorious Manſions of joy and happineſſe which our Sauiour Chriſt hath prepared for vs. What though we muſt paſſe through a Sea of miſeries, where we ſhall be ſubject to the ſtormes and tempeſts of affliction and trouble, and be in danger of the ſpirituall enemies of our ſaluation, which like cruell Pyrats are ready to rob vs? Yet let not this diſmay vs, ſeeing God is our Guide and Maſter Pilot, who is both willing and able to ſafeguard vs from all perils, and it is but a ſhort cut, which being quickly paſſed, will bring vs into the ſafe harbour of heauenly happineſſe. What though we cannot enter into Heauen, but by paſſing through the hot burning furnace of tribulation and affliction? And what if with Elias we muſt be taken vp in a fiery Chariot into the place of our joy and reſt? Let not this discourage vs or abate our comfort, seeing we are assured, that the afflictions of this present time are not worthy the glory which shall be shewed vs, for they are light and momentany but the glory and happinesse which they cause vnto vs is superexcellent and eternall. Finally, what though others find a way much more faire and easie that bringeth them to glory? Let vs not enuy them their greater delight, but trauell with patience in that path which God hath appointed vs. For though theirs is fayrer, yet it may be that ours is shorter and more direct; though theirs is much more pleasant, it may be that ours is much more safe; not so sweet and delightfull in the passage, but withall not so much beset with Theeues, or though ours were behind theirs in all worldly priuiledges, let vs not be sorry because we goe this way, but glad that wee may goe by any way, vnto the place of our joy; and rejoyce in Gods mercy, if wee may through the dung-port, or by a posterne gate, be admitted to enter into the new Ierusalem. Let not these small losses grieue vs which shall be accompanied with such inestimable gaine; let vs not like slothfull Husbandmen impatiently repine at our pains in the Seed time, but comfort our selues in the expectation of our heauenly Harueſt, and let the assurance of our future joyes mitigate our mourning for present miseries. Let vs not like timorous Passengers feare those Windes and Seas which will safely bring vs into the Hauen of rest; let vs not like loytering Trauellers refuse that way for a little foulenesse, which will directly bring vs to our heauenly home; let vs not like idle Workmen murmure at one dayes labour, which will be rewarded with the wages of heauenly happinesse and euerlasting rest. Finally, let vs not like cowardly Souldiers feare to hazard our selues vnto the paines and perils of such a fight, as will assuredly bring with it such a glorious victory. And seeing heauenly joyes shal follow our earthly sorrowes, great and inestimable rewards our small and easie labours, and euerlasting happinesse our momentany afflictions, there is no cause of care and sorrow vnto any, but vnto those alone who haue neither faith nor hope. To which purpose one saith, that he alone truly feeleth the smart of worldly aduersity, as of a painfull punishment, whose joy and glory is all in this life; he mourneth and weepeth if hee be crossed in the World, who expecteth no happinesse after this World, but hath all his comfort continued and concluded with his life, and after his departure looketh for nothing but paine and torment. But there is no cause of griefe when wee are inuaded with present calamities; if by faith we are assured of future comforts: neither is there any reason why wee should vnmeasurably mourne for earthly afflictions, if they any whit further vs in attayning vnto heauenly glory. And therefore let vs not in our afflictions fix our minds on the euils which we suffer, but looke higher to the happinesse which they cause vnto vs; and being to passe (as it were by a narrow bridge) ouer this deepe floud and gulph of worldly miseries, let vs not cast downe our eyes to our feet and behold the dangers which threaten to swallow vs; which wil but intoxicate the braine and hinder our passage; but let vs looke aloft to that heauenly happinesse which as the end of our hopes is set before vs; and so shall wee hold a steady course and vndaunted resolution in passing ouer with patience these depths of difficulties, and safely arriue at the land of Blessednesse.

9. Sect. 2. That we may comfort our ſelues in all our afflictions by remembring that they further vs in attayning vnto happineſſe. Tendimus per viam laboriоſam ad quietem vbi tetrallis omnibus afflictam patriam nobis noſtris non remanebit miſſ Alleluia, Aug. Serm. infeſto Paſchæ de Alleluia. Tom. 10.

But our momentany crosses doe not only further our euerlasting happinesse, but also doe much increase it; for the more painfull our labours are in Gods seruice, the more rich shall be our wages; the more laborious and dangerous our fight is, the more glorious shall be our Crowne of victory; and the more our sufferings exceed in number and measure, the more shall our joyes be multiplyed and our glory augmented. So one sayth, that our life is a Warfare, and this World a place of masteries; wherein the best Garlands are allotted to them who sustaine the greatest labours. And according to the measure of our affliction shall be the measure of our glorious retribution. The reason whereof is cleere and euident; for the more the Lord increaseth our afflictions, the more he increaseth our strength to beare them; for hee is faithfull and will not suffer vs to bee tempted aboue our power, but will giue a good issue with the temptation, that we may be able to beare it. And his corrections are tryals to proue vs, and not intolerable burthens to ouer-whelme vs. And therefore the more hee multiplyeth our griefes and sorrowes, the more he enlargeth and increaseth our spirituall Graces, as Faith, Hope, Patience, Humility and the rest; that wee may be inabled in bearing to ouercome them; and according to the greatnesse of our graces shall be the gloriousnesse of our reward, seeing he crowneth his owne gifts with proportionable blessednesse; and as hee aduanceth vs aboue others in grace in this life, so hee will exalt vs aboue others in glory in the World to come. So that God measureth our graces according to the measure of our crosses: and our glory according to our graces; whereof it followeth that our greater afflictions are signes of our greater grace; and the more wee excell in Gods graces now, the more shall wee excell in glory, in the day of retribution. Thus one sayth, that our patience increaseth with our corrections, and that by the smart of our stripes is augmented the glory of our reward. And this is one prin-

Rom. 8. 18.

2. Cor. 4. 17.

Dura videtur, sed ipsa est tuta via, alias fortè delicias habet sed latronibus plena est, Aug in Psal. 36. enarrat.

Nehem. 2. 13.

Cyprianus contra Demetrianum tract. primo.

Q. Sect. 9. That by our afflictions our heauenly joy and glory shall be much increased.

Gregor. Nissen. de proud. cap. 2.

1. Cor. 10. 13.

Sed & iſtum flagellis crebis virtutationis; atq; ex dolore verberis auctus eſt gloriæ remunerationis. Greg. Moral. lib. 3. cap. 20.

principall end why God afflicteth the faithfull, when hee spareth the wicked, that their conflict may occasion their victory; and their crosses may fit them for the receiuing of their crowne; whereas hee imployeth not the other in any seruice, because he is not purposed to giue them any wages, and will not let them suffer with Christ in this life, because hee will not haue them to raigne with him in the life to come. Yea this moueth him chiefly to afflict those whom hee chiefly loueth, and to subject them to the greatest tryals, who are endued with the greatest graces, because hee would fit them for a richer reward, and aduance them to an higher degree of glory, and happinesse. So one saith, that wee are afflicted by God, that our reward and crowne may hereby be increased; and as much as he addeth to our tribulation, so and much more will hee adde to our retribution. And whereas our great Commander bestoweth lesser rewards for lesser conflicts, when hee commandeth his valianteſt souldiers to attempt and atchieue the most valorous imployments, it is his purpose for their greater worth to giue vnto them a greater reward. And therefore noble champions thinke it to bee a disgrace and great disparagement vnto them, when they are imployed in some ordinany seruice, or matched with a weake and contemptible aduersary; because his glory is greatest, whish getteth the greatest victory, his deuotion & loue towards God is most zealous and entire who for his sake is content to vndergoe the greatest difficulties and dangers, and then doth our vertue and fortitude shine brightest, when as they tryumph ouer the strongest enemies: And he excelleth others in the Kings esteeme, who sustaineth the brunt of the battel, and hath his valour tryed in the hottest conflict, the might of his vanquished enemies adding much to his victory, and the strength and violence of their repelled incounters, greatly increasing the glory of his tryumph.

Seeing then our light and momentany afflictions, doe not onely further our heauenly happinesse, but also augment and increase it, making our state of blessednesse much more blessed, our exeelling ioyes super-excellent; and our crowne of glory far more glorious; let vs in this faith and assurance not thinke it sufficient to beare those crosses which God imposeth with patience and contentednesse, vnlesse we can attaine vnto that pitch which the Apostle appointeth vs, and indure all our tribulations with thanksgiuing and spirituall reioycing. And this perfection of patience in bearing the crosse, our Sauiour requireth in his Disciples: namely, that in the day of their greatest persecutions and afflictions, they should reioyce and bee glad because their reward is great in heauen. So the Apostle Peter exhorteth to this spirituall ioy: Dearely beloued (saith he) thinke it not strange concerning the fiery tryall which is among you to proue you, as though some strange thing were come vnto you, but reioyce, in as much as yee are partakers of Christs sufferings, that when his glory shall appeare yee may bee glad and reioyce. And the Apostle Iames willeth vs, to count it exceeding ioy when wee fall into diuers tentations, because this tryall, by increasing our graces, augmenteth our glory. But yet (as I haue before shewed) wee must take heed that wee doe not at the first step iumpe into this ioy, reioycing in the sight and sense of our afflictions themselues, which were Stoicall and stockish senselesnesse; or in the sight of our sins which haue deserued them, and drawne vpon vs these heauy crosses, which were a testimony of an hard heart and seared conscience, seeing they will not melt and relent in this fiery tryall: But wee must arise vnto this height of perfection by steps and degrees, first lamenting our sinnes with bitter sorrow, because we haue moued our heauenly Father in his just displeasure to chastise and correct vs; and then bewailing our afflictions themselues with moderate griefe, that our hearts may bee eased by breathing out those sorrowes, which if they had no vent would drowne and stifle them. And when by this repentance we are assured of reconciliation with God, and that our sinne which is the sting of our afflictions, is taken away; then from this faith must arise patience first, and then thanksgiuing and spirituall rejoycing, and that not in respect of our crosses themselues, but in regard of our hope and assurance of that heauenly happinesse, which they seale vnto vs. And this order our Sauiour himselfe obserueth and requireth: Verely, verily, I say vnto you, that yee shall weepe and lament, and the world shall reioyce, and yee shall sorrow, but your sorrow shall bee turned into ioy. And the Apostle Peter noteth, that these were conjoyned and intermingled in the faithfull; rejoycing in the assurance of saluation prepared for them, and heauinesse for a season thorough manifold tentations; mourning (if neede require) in the sight and sense of our afflictions, and rejoycing in Christ with joy vnspeakable and glorious, as they further vs in receiuing the end of our faith, euen the saluation of our soules. And this the Psalmist representeth vnto vs in the similitude of the husband-man, who sowes in teares, and reapes in joy; weeping when hee carrieth out his seed, but rejoyceth when he bringeth home his sheaues. And our Sauiour Christ likeneth vs in this behalfe to a woman in trauell, who in her labour hath sorrow because her houre is come, but as soone as shee is deliuered of the childe, shee remembreth

1. Pet. 4. 13.

Iam. 1. 2.

Ioh. 16. 20.

1. Pet. 1. 6. 7. 8. 9.

Psal. 126. 5, 6.

Ioh. 16. 21.

membreth no more the anguish, for ioy that a man is borne into the World. For so though wee waile and weepe whilest wee trauell in paine, through the sharpe pangs of our troubles and afflictions, yet no sooner are wee assured by them of our adoption and saluation, but we presently forget our griefes, and rejoyce in this, that wee are borne vnto God, not onely as sonnes, but heires also to his heauenly Kingdome. And this is that true and seasonable rejoycing in our afflictions which wee must labour to attaine vnto, first sorrowing for our sinne and chastisement, yet not resting in this sorrow; and then rejoycing in the middest of our grieuous afflictions, and not at the first step leaping into this ioy; but considering them not as fruits of sinne, nor as scourges in the hand of our displeased Father, but as signes of our adoption, and seales whereby our heauenly inheritance is assured (yea improued and bettered) vnto vs; let vs from hence take occasion to rejoyce, yea to triumph in ioy and gladnesse. For what is the paine of our seede time, in comparison of the profits of our haruest? what is our present smart, in respect of our future joyes? how small are our griefes being compared with the greatnesse of our glory? what are our earthly sorrowes, to our heauenly comforts? our momentany mourning, vnto our euerlasting rejoycing? these feares to those hopes, these sufferings to those solaces, these paines to those rewards, these light and short afflictions, vnto that farre most excellent and eternall waight of glory, which they cause vnto vs? and what are the tribulations of this present time, in comparison of the glory which shall bee reuealed? Let vs therefore with the wise husband-man, not mourne so much to part with our precious seede, as rejoyce in our expectation of a plentifull haruest; let vs not looke so much to our bodies decaying by afflictions, like the corne which rotteth in the Earth before it springeth, but rather consider that by this meanes wee rise from our corruption, first growing like faire greene blades in grace, and then florishing like ripe eares in glory and felicity. Let vs not respect the present losse of our seede, but thinke of the returning of it with manifold aduantage: yea, let vs rejoyce though wee haue a wet and weeping seed time, and a hard, stormy, and frosty winter, because they are seasonable, and doe the better assure vs of a fruitfull harueſt. And (that I may conclude this point with the diuine meditation of a worthy Father) whilest wee are walking in the way of Christ towards the Kingdome of Heauen, let vs not promise vnto our selues the prosperity of the World. The path was hard which he trauelled, but the happinesse great which he promised; follow him therefore, and thinke not by what way, but whither thou art going; for thou shalt suffer temporall aduersity, but it will bring thee to euerlasting felicity. If then thou wilt endure the labour, thou must bee still mindfull of the reward; for euen the workman would faint in the vineyard, if hee did not remember the receiuing of his wages. But if thou attendest vnto that which thou shalt receiue, thou wilt lightly esteeme whatsoeuer thou sufferest, and not thinke thy present paines worthy thy future profits. Yea thou wilt wonder, that so great and rich a reward should bee giuen vnto thee, for such small and easie labour: For wee should (brethren) for the obtaining of euerlasting rest, haue vndergone endlesse paines, and for the gaining of eternall felicity haue endured and suffered eternall misery: but this could not bee; for if wee should haue sustained endlesse labour, how could there haue beene a beginning for our endlesse rest? and therfore it was necessary that our tribulation should be but temporary, that being ended, wee might come to euerlasting felicity. But yet out of question (brethren) we might haue endured long afflictions, for the attaining vnto this neuer ending happinesse, &c. For if we should haue suffered them the space of a thousand yeeres, what is a thousand yeeres in comparison of eternitie? Yea, what proportion is there betweene the longest finite time, and that which is infinite? ten thousand yeeres, yea an hundred thousand; or if yee will, millions of millions, because they haue an end, cannot be compared with eternity. But Gods loue and free mercy herein shineth, in that he would haue our paines not onely temporary, but also short and momentany: for the whole life of man lasteth but a few dayes, and therefore though no pleasures were intermingled with our crosses (as there are many) though wee should spend all our time in labour and sorrow, in griefe and torment, in prison and tortures, in hunger and thirst; yet because we continew here but a few dayes, our miseries also would be but momentany: and after these short sufferings thus quickly ended: wee shall receiue an eternall Kingdome, endlesse felicity, equall glory with the Angels, and an euerlasting inheritance with Iesus Christ. O how great is our reward for our little labour! wee see old souldiers which liue and labour in the warres, euen from their youth vnto old age, and are still subiect to wounds and in danger of death, that they may enjoy a few quiet dayes, when their life draweth towards an end, and when old age beginneth to burthen them, who were not burthened with the waight of warre; what hardnesse they are content to suffer, what iourneies and labours, what cold and heate, what watchings and wanes, what wounds and dangers they endure

2. Cor. 4. 17.

Rom. 8. 18.

Iam cum sequeris viam Christi, non tibi seculi prosperitatem promittas, per dura ambulauit, sed magna promisit. Sequere. Noli tantum attendere quò iturus es sed quò venturus es, &c. Aug. in Psal. 36. enarr.

endure with patience, not looking vnto the things they suffer, but vnto those few dayes of peace and plenty, which they hope to enjoy in their old age, vnto which they know not whether they shall euer attaine or no. And how much more then should wee endure the troubles and miseries of our momentany warfare, with patience and contentednesse, yea with thanksgiuing and rejoycing; seeing wee are certainly assured, that wee shall haue euerlasting rest, after our few dayes labours, and most excellent and neuer ending ioy and felicity, after our short sorrowes, and temporary miseries?

CHAP. XXVII.

That afflictions in their owne nature being euill and the fruits of sinne, doe not derive vnto vs all the former blessings and benefits; but as they are sanctified vnto vs for these ends by the spirit of God.

BY that which hath beene said it may appeare, that all the afflictions of the faithfull proceed out of Gods meere loue, seeing in these fatherly chastisements, he wholly aymeth at his owne glory, and their good; and accordingly, through his infinite wisedome and power doth effectually atchieue it, causing many excellent fruits to spring from the tree of the crosse, and vsing our corrections as meanes to derive vnto vs many incomparable benefits, both spirituall and worldly, temporall and eternall: But lest any man should misapply vnto himselfe these comforts to whom they doe not belong, imagining that the sole suffering of afflictions, will intitle him to the goods of God, temporary blessings, and the lands and inheritance of the heauenly Canaan; or that the crosse hath some vertue in its selfe for the working in vs, or deriuing vnto vs these precious graces and inestimable benefits: wee are to know that these are not the fruits of afflictions in their owne nature, but of Gods mercy and loue, wisdome and power, who by his all-ruling prouidence doth order and dispose of them that they may bee meanes for the conferring of this good vnto vs. For being considered in themselues, they are (as hath beene shewed) the fruits of sinne, the euils of punishment, the testimonies of Gods wrath, the curses of the Law, and the first flashes of Hell fire; and therefore these trees being so euill, must needs bee in their owne nature barren of those excellent fruits of Gods spirituall graces, and heauenly glory, and fruitfull only in malicious thoughts, wicked words, and euill workes; but God alone to shew the infinitenesse of his wisdome, power and loue towards vs, doth change their nature, turning these stones into bread, and making them fit to nourish in vs all sauing graces, which in themselues are more likely to choake and stifle them; that hereby he may shew vnto vs that as in the life of nature, so in the life of grace wee doe not liue by the sole vertue of ordinary meanes, but by euery word that proceedeth out of his mouth; and causeth this birth and fruit of sinne to kill the mother who brought it forth, this temporary punishment to become a fatherly chastisement, whereby wee are preserued from the euerlasting punishment of Hell Fire; these testimonies of his wrath to become signes of his loue and seales of our adoption, and these curses of the Law and flashes of Hell to become euangelicall blessings, and an ordinary and direct way whereby wee may trauell towards his heauenly Kingdome.

2. Sect. 2. That afflictions tend to the hurt of the wicked, not making them better but much worse.

But this will better appeare if wee further consider what fruits afflictions beare in wicked men, when as they follow their kinde, and haue not their nature by any superiour power changed and altered. For if wee obserue them wee shall finde, that their miseries and calamities doe not at all profit, but exceedingly hurt them; not make them any whit the better, but rather cause them to become worse and worse. Wee shall see that when they first fall into them they storme and rage with great impatiencie, tormenting themselues more with their own vnruly passions, and with their strugling and striuing to shake off their yoke, than they are tormented with any sense or smart of the euils which they suffer; and that (looking only vnto secondarie causes) they are caried with mad fury, and desperate malice against the instruments and meanes of their miseries, and thinke of nothing but of mortall reuenge, which if they bee vnable to execute, they keepe themselues from bursting with rage by bitter railings, wicked reproches, and with damnable curses and execrations. Yea when their calamities still continue, and their hornes are so shortned that they cannot shew their curstnesse, in wrecking their malice vpon the causes of their crosses, they are ready to murmure against the diuine prouidence, and to taxe it of vnjustice, or vnmercifulnesse, because they are punished aboue their strength, or more than any other, yea aboue their deserts, and with greater rigour than others who haue much more bainously offended. Yea they sticke not oftentimes in desperate malice to belch out blasphemies and horrible impieties against the soueraigne Maiestie of God himselfe, and seeke to ease themselues of the smart which they suffer, by bursting out into this railing reuenge, and by casting out of their blacke and hellish mouthes the poyson of aspes, vnjust accusations and false af-

aſperſions, whereby in the depth of their malice they labour to blemiſh the beauty of the chiefeſt goodneſſe. Or if their puniſhments open their eyes to behold their nakedneſſe, and call all their ſinnes to their remembrance; and if with the noiſe or ſenſe of theſe heauy iudgements, their ſleeping conſciences are awakened, and begin to accuſe and teſtifie againſt them, that they haue not onely deſerued the miſeries which they ſuffer, but may juſtly expect the full vials of Gods feirce wrath to be powred vpon them in this life, and euerlaſting tortures and helliſh torments in the life to come; then are they filled with horror and deſperation, crying out with Caine either that their ſmart exceedeth their ſinne, or that their puniſhment is greater than they can beare; and then either with him they labour to bring a callum or thicke skinne ouer their galled conſciences by giuing themſelues ouer to all luxurious pleaſures and carnall delights, and ſtop the cry of their inward accuſations, with the loud clamour of their ſports and merriments, or if their calamities doe ſo hedge them in, that they cannot come at theſe worldly paſtimes, then hauing no helpe in themſelues, nor hope in God, they flee from him as from an incenſed enemy, and either with Saul they reſort vnto witches and wizards, and ſeeke the diuels helpe for the remouall of thoſe puniſhments which God hath impoſed; or being quite forlorne and vtterly deſperate, they doe with Iudas become their owne hang-men. So that the ſame fire of afflictions which purifieth the faithfull, like gold, from the droſſe of their corruptions; doth vtterly conſume the wicked like ſtraw or ſtubble: the ſame winde of trouble which purgeth Gods good wheate, that it may be fit for his owne vſe, doth blow away reprobate men from his preſence vpon the face of the Earth. The ſame anuile and hammer of tribulation, which breake and braiſe in peeces Gods elect veſſels, that being moulten againe they may bee framed a new for his vſe, doe make the adamantine hearts of wicked men to become the harder and much more obdurate. The ſame droſſe of miſery which is a good antidote and preſeruatiue to Gods owne children, to keepe them from falling into the ſpirituall diſeaſes of ſinne, is vnto vngodly men deadly poyſon, bringing them to eternall death and vtter deſtruction. The ſame ſtraight way of affliction and tribulation which leadeth the faithfull to the Kingdome of Heauen, conducteth the faithleſſe to Hell and condemnation; and the ſame bitter potion which keepeth thoſe who haue grace in temperance and ſobriety, doth make the graceleſſe the more intemperately to ſwallow downe the intoxicating cups of worldly vanities. So as wee may ſay of them, as the Prophet Ieremy in another caſe of the afflicted Church, that they are made drunke with worme-wood, whileſt they labour to ſweeten their embittered mouthes by drinking vnſatiably of their carnall pleaſures. In all which the ſaying of Salomon is plainely verified, that though a foole (that is a deſperate ſinner) ſhould be brayed in a morter yet his fooliſhneſſe (that is his wickedneſſe) will not depart from him; and that a reproofe entreth more into him, that hath vnderſtanding, than an hundred ſtrips into a foole.

Gen.4.9. 1.Sam.28.9. Matth.27.5. Lam.3.15. Pro.27.22. & 17.10.

And this I will manifeſtly appeare by manifold examples; for thus wee ſee that the more Pharaoh was puniſhed, the more his heart was hardned in his rebellion againſt God; and though, to be freed from the ſenſe of preſent ſmart, he confeſſed his ſinne and craued pardon, deſiring alſo Moſes and Aaron to pray for him, yet no ſooner was he repriued from Gods iudgements, but hee hardneth his heart, and baniſheth Gods ſeruants out of his preſence, vnto whom he had formerly ſo humbly ſued. So Ieroboam profited nothing by that miraculous iudgement of God whereby his hand was dried vp, but howſoeuer for the inſtant hee implored the Prophets prayers for him, and intreated him kindly when it was reſtored, yet preſently hee forgetteth this memorable worke of God, and returneth as eagerly as before to the practice of his wicked and abominable idolatry. Thus alſo it is ſaid of Abaz, that in the time of his tribulation he did yet treſpaſſe more againſt the Lord: for which hee is branded with the marke of a deſperate ſinner, of whom all are to take knowledge (This is King Abaz:) And of the thiefe vpon the croſſe, that he mocked and railed at the Lord of life, when himſelfe was neere vnto the pangs of death. Finally the holy Ghoſt obſerueth, that the remnant of men in the world, who had hardly eſcaped out of the common deſtruction, like brands pulled out of the fire, for all that repented not of their ſinnes, but continued in their idolatry, murther, ſorcery, fornication, and theft: and that others who were tormented in the fiery furnace of Gods iudgement, whileſt they boiled in this great heat, blaſphemed the name of God, who had power ouer theſe plagues, and repented not to giue him glory. And againe, that others in like caſe, did bite their tongues for ſorrow; but withall blaſphemed the God of Heauen becauſe of their paines and ſorowes, and repented not of their workes. And theſe fruits and effects ſo commonly ſpring from the plagues and puniſhments of wicked men, that the diuell preſumed vpon manifold experience, that if the Lord would but trie Iob with them, he would blaſpheme him to his face. And howſoeuer Gods faithfull ſeruants, through the bleſſing of Gods holy ſpirit, doe

2.Kin.13.4. 2.Chr.28.22. Apoc.9.20. Luk.23.39. Apoc.16.9. Apoc.16.11. Iob.2.5.

Q. Sect.3. The former point illuſtrated by diuers examples. Exod.8.15. Chap.10.16.17. Ver.20.28.

doe reape from their crosses and calamities farre better fruits of grace and glory, (as hath beene shewed) yet those other fruits of sinne and condemnation, doe so much exceed in numerous multitude; as the small handfull of Gods elect are in number exceeded by the wicked and reprobate.

The which commeth to passe because they neuer looke vp vnto the hand of God striking them, nor vnto their sinnes deserving these punishments but rather attribute them vnto any other cause which is next at hand and subject to the senses, than vnto the supreme cause which setteth all the rest a working, and to the defect, disorder or malice of any inferiour meanes, than to their owne wickednesse and ill-deseruing. As for example they vsually ascribe all their calamities (in stead of the supreme and highest cause) to destiny, chance and fortune, as though they might haue lighted vpon any other as well as vpon them, but that it was their hard hap to come in the way when as blind fortune, hauing these afflictions in her hand, did by hap-hazard stumble vpon them. Sometimes also they attribute them wholly to secondary causes and inferiour meanes, which are more subject to their senses; to the casuall concurrence of circumstances, which accidentally meeting together, produced these effects; or to their owne ouersight, rashnesse and want of prouidence, whereby if they had fore-seene they might haue preuented them. Yea sometimes they ascribe all their miseries to Gods ministers and faithfull people who liue amongst them, affirming like wolues, that it is these lambes of Christ which trouble their waters, as wee may see in the example of Pharaoh, who banished Moses and Aaron, out of his presence, as the causes who brought all those plagues vpon Egypt; and in Achab who when the land was grieuously punished with a long famine for want of raine, accused not himselfe and his owne sinnes, but the Prophet Elias, as the troubler of Israel. And thus the heathen persecuters vsually accused the Christians as the only causes which brought vpon them all their calamities. Yea rather than faile, they will not sticke to slander the Gospell, and true religion of Iesus Christ, as the cause of their troubles and miseries, affirming that there was neuer good world, neuer such plagues, warres, wants, and penurious scarcity of all things, as haue befallen them since this new learning and religion (as they terme it) was preached among them. Or if Gods iudgements are so fitted both in time and quality to their sinnes, that they lead them (as it were) by the hand to him that smiteth, yet they profit no whit by these stripes, because they haue not the eye of faith, whereby they might behold God as a gracious father louingly correcting them for their amendment, that they may bee saued; but looke vpon him through the glasse of the Law, with a guilty eye, as vpon a seuere iudge who punisheth them for the satisfying of his iustice in their present torments, which doe but make way for their euerlasting condemnation.

And as wicked men are not bettered by their afflictions in regard of their sinnes; so neither haue they any benefit by them, as they serue to free them from future punishments and euerlasting condemnation. Yea contrariwise, as they harden their hearts, and make them more desperate in wicked courses, so consequently they inrage Gods wrath the more, and bring vpon them more fearefull iudgements. For it is vsuall with with God, when he seeth wicked men contemne his lesser punishments, and not apply them to their hearts for their conuersion and amendment, to proceede like a wise and righteous iudge in the administration of his iudgements, and as they multiply their impieties, adding impenitencie and hardnesse of heart to their other sinnes, so hee also multiplieth their plagues, till he hath vtterly destroyed them, according to that threatning denounced in the Law; If yee will not for these thing obey mee, then will I punish you seauen times more according to your sins. An example whereof wee haue in Pharaoh, who not relenting when Gods hand was vpon him, nor repenting of his sinnes after so many plagues, was at last with his people ouerwhelmed and drowned, in the red Sea. So when Saul profited not by so many admonitions and more gentle punishments, at last he was crushed and quelled vnder that fearefull iudgement of being his owne executioner, and became mercilesse to himselfe in his death who in his life had beene cruell vnto others. Thus when Ieroboam amended not by the death of his sonne, nor drying vp of his hand; and when Achab repented not, neither for Gods threatnings, nor for the plagues of drought and famine, which were in the land; they were both rooted out with all their posterity, and became fearefull examples of Gods terrible vengeance. And thus when Senacherib repented not of his idolatry after the destruction of his army, nor acknowled the true God in this miraculous iudgement, hee was ouertaken with Gods wrath in the very act of his sin, and slaine by his owne sonnes, euen whilst hee was worshipping his idols. Or if the Lord doe not lay vpon the contemners of his afflictions these outward and visible punishments, he doth certainely inflict vpon them inwardly much more fearefull iudgements, giuing them ouer vnto their owne sensuall lusts, vile affections, and vnto a reprobate mind, to commit all manner of sin with

9. Sect. 5. That the present afflictions of wicked men doe not free them from future punishments, but rather much increase them.

Solos panit a supplicio liberat quos immutat: nam quos praesentia mala non corrigunt ad sequentia perducunt, Gregor. moral. lib. 9. cap. 24.

Leuit. 26. 18.

2. King. 19. 37.

with greedineſſe, for the further ſealing and increaſing of their helliſh condemnation. For as ſure as God is juſt, ſo aſſuredly will hee ſeuerely puniſh this outragious wickednesse; & if not in this world yet in the world to come. And their euerlasting torments ſhall be much more fearefully increaſed, becauſe vnto their other ſins they haue added curſed ſecurity and hardnes of heart, & haue contemned Gods righteous iudgements, growing worſe and worſe, and more deſperate in their wickedneſſe, when as they ſhould haue beene reclaimed by the feeling of his puniſhments. In which reſpect one ſaith, that all which a man ſuffers in this life is but a correction if hee amend, and double damnation if hee be not thereby reformed: for here he ſuffereth temporall puniſhments and hereafter he ſhall ſuffer thoſe which are eternall. And another willeth the faithfull to rejoyce in aduerſitie, becauſe if he bee righteous hee is tryed, or amended if he be a ſinner. But (ſaith he) let him mourne in his afflictions who is not bettered and amended with diuine chaſtiſements, and let him feare future puniſhments, who hath contemned Gods preſent correction, which hee appointed to bee the meanes of his reformation.

Quicquidbla paſſus fuerit bonus, ſi corrigatur emendatio eſt, ſi non corrigatur duplex damnatio eſt. &c. Chryſo de patient. Iob Homil. vltima. Gaudeat Chriſtianus in aduerſis; quia aut probatur ſi iuſtus eſt, aut ſpeculator eſt emendatur. Auguſt. Homil. 46. Tom. 10.

¶. Sect. 6. That afflictions ſometime for want of a right vſe of them, bring no preſent benefit to the faithfull themſelues.

Yea ſo far are afflictions from conferring any good vnto the wicked and reprobate; that ſometime they bring no preſent profit to Gods owne Church and choſen people. The which commeth to paſſe either becauſe they doe not righely beare them, or doe not labour after they are taken away to bee bettered by them. For wee receiue no good by theſe croſſes and calamities when they take vs vnprouided and vnprepared, either hauing a ſmall and weake meaſure of thoſe graces which are required to this conflict, or rather letting them lye wretchleſly by vs, not renuing, furbuſhing and putting them on before wee are aſſauled with theſe ſpirituall enemies. Wee profit not by them, when, through our negligence, we doe not looke to the hand that ſmiteth vs, nor conſider that all our afflictions are ſent, ruled and diſpoſed, by Gods wiſe and gracious prouidence, but reſt in ſecondary cauſes, and aſcribe all our troubles to inferiour meanes, which are in truth but Gods bare inſtruments, in bringing vs into theſe miſeries and calamities; wee are not bettered by them, when through our ſloth we doe not examine our ſelues, ſearch out our ſinnes, and acknowledge that they are the onely cauſe of all our ſmart, but ſtill ſecurely ſleepe in them, aſcribing our croſſes vnto outward accidents, our owne negligence, the malice of our enemies, or vnfaithfulneſſe of our friends; and alſo when we are wholly intent vpon our ſmart and ſenſe of paine, and neuer conſider of thoſe gracious ends, which the Lord out of his endleſſe loue propoundeth vnto our chaſtiſements. And finally, wee receiue no good by our afflictions when being deliuered, wee take no paines nor care to be bettered by them; and when wee doe not labour to make a profitable vſe of them, to forſake our ſinnes which were the cauſes of our croſſes, and to draw neerer vnto God by hearty repentance, more zealouſly and conſcionably ſeruing him in the performance of all holy and Chriſtian duties: but either continue in our ſinnes, or after ſome ſlight and ſhort reformation, returne againe into our former courſe of wickednesse. In all which caſes the faithfull are ſo far from receiuing the former benefits and bleſſings by their corrections, that they doe for the preſent but increaſe their ſinne, and make their temporary chaſtiſements much more ſharpe and grieuous. In reſpect of the former the Lord complaineth of his people, that they were not by his chaſtiſements brought vnto vnfained repentance, but rather waxed worſe and worſe vnder his corrections, ſo hee cryeth out by the Prophet Eſay: Wherefore ſhould you bee ſmitten any more, ſeeing you fall away more and more? and againe, The people turneth not vnto him that ſmiteth them, neither doe they ſeeke vnto the Lord of hoaſts. So hee complaineth by the Prophet Ieremy, that hee had ſmitten their children in vaine, becauſe they receiued no correction: namely, in their hearts to make an holy vſe of it, though it was outwardly inflicted vpon their bodies. And though they reaſoned thus: Will the Lord keepe his anger for euer? will hee reſerue it vnto the end? Yet hauing thus ſpoken, they did ſtill euill more and more. And this the Prophet himſelfe obſerued and lamented in his prayer to God: O Lord (ſaith he) are not thine eyes vpon the truth, thou haſt ſtricken them, but they haue not ſorrowed, thou haſt conſumed them, but they haue refuſed to receiue correction, they haue made their faces harder than a ſtone, and haue refuſed to returne. And thus the Lord complaineth by the Prophet Amos, that he had afflicted his people with famine, peſtilence, and the ſword; yea ouerthrowne them as he ouerthrew Sodom and Gomorrah, reſeruing only a remnant, which were as a fire-brand pluckt out of the burning, and yet they returned not vnto him by vnfained and renued repentance. And for the latter it is manifeſt in the adminiſtration of Gods judgements towards his children, that if gentler chaſtiſements will not reforme them, hee will vſe more ſharpe diſcipline, and if they will not be reclaimed with his ſmarting rods, he will correct them with his ſtinging whips, and neuer leaue them vntill he haue brought them to ſome amendment. For ſo the Lord threatneth in the former places, that becauſe they had not profited by his Eſay 1.5. Chap. 9.13. Ier. 2. 30. Chap. 3.5. Ier. 5.3. Amos 4.6, 9.10, 11.

former

former corections, hee would increase their calamities, and deale with them so seuerely, as if they were aduersaries and enemies; that hee would make the fire of their afflictions hot enough to burne out their drosse purely, and take away their Tinne; that hee would bring vpon them a fearefull destruction, cutting off from Israel head and tayle, branch and rush in one day; and that he would cause a Lion out of the Forrest to slay them, and a Wolfe of the Wildernesse to destroy them; that a Leopard should watch ouer their Cities, and that euery one going out thence should be torne in pieces, because (after all their former afflictions) their trespasses were many, and their rebellions were increased. And therefore seeing afflictions in their owne nature, or by any vertue that is in themselues, doe not deriue vnto vs those spirituall graces and heauenly blessings, but contrariwise, through our corruption, are fit meanes to increase both our sinnes and punishments; for the attayning vnto grace and glory, let vs not thinke it enough to be afflicted in the world; but let vs labour withall to make such an holy vse of our troubles, (humbling our selues vnder the mighty hand of God; bewayling our sinnes whereby wee haue deserued them, and drawing neere vnto God by hearty repentance, and an earnest indeuour of seruing and pleasing him in holines and newnes of life) that they may be vnto vs testimonies of his loue, and so assure vs of all the former benefits. And because afflictions in their owne nature deriue them not vnto vs, but as they are sanctified by Gods holy Spirit, and made fit for these purposes by his alone Wisdome, Power, and Loue, therefore let vs continually implore by faithfull and feruent Prayer his gracious assistance, that by his blessing they may be made fit meanes for the working of his graces in vs; and that we may be inabled by his Spirit to make such an holy & profitable vse of them, that we may be fit to receiue them, when as by this meanes he offereth them vnto vs.

Chap. XXVIII.

Consolations taken from the subiect place of our afflictions, and from their adiuncts, namely their necessitie, profit, brenity and lightnesse, as also from the assistance of our associates.

HAue shewed the singular consolations which arise from the consideration of the causes and effects of our afflictions: now wee will proceed vnto other arguments of comfort according to our order propounded, the which arise eyther from the subiect or adiuncts of our crosses and calamities. The subiect place of all our troubles is this world and vale of teares, which is purposely appointed of God to be a place wherein all his Saints and faithfull seruants shall be subiect to many tribulations and miseries; that being by them purged and refined, tryed and approued, they may after this life be admitted into those pure and holy habitations into which no vncleane thing can enter; and receiue that Crowne and Garland of euerlasting happinesse, with which the Lord hath promised to adorne and honour his owne gifts and graces whersoeuer hee findeth them. So our Sauiour telleth vs that howsoeuer in him wee shall haue peace, yet in this world we shall haue affliction; and that whilst we continue here we shall weepe and lament, and the world shall reioyce, that we shall sorrow, but our sorrow shall be turned into ioy: And finally, that here we shall passe our time, like a woman in the paines of child-birth, but in the Kingdome of Heauen our joy shall be so great, because we are acknowledged of God, as his children, and heires of glory and happinesse, that wee shall quite forget our former miseries, as a woman forgetteth her sorrowes in Child-bearing, for joy that a man is borne into the World. Let vs not then expect in this World our glory and gladnes, our pleasures and delights, seeing the Lord hath appointed it to be a place of misery, and mourning; let vs not in this showry seed-time of sorrow and teares, thinke to reape the harueſt of joy and consolation; nor to take our ease and repose in this valley of affliction, which can only be enjoyed in Gods heauenly Mountaine. Here wee must shed those teares which there must be dryed vp: here is the house of mourning, and there is the Pallace of joy and rejoycing; here is the place of Prayer, which is most feruent when it floweth from an afflicted spirit; there is the place of prayses which are most cheerefull when our happinesse is not distasted with any heauinesse. Finally, here must the Christians life bee spent in doing good and suffering euill, and there wee must looke to haue our good workes rewarded, and our sufferings recompenced. And therefore let our worldly sorrow worke in vs spirituall rejoycing, seeing these pangs and throwes of griefe will bring forth the fruit of heauenly pleasure and rejoycing. Let vs not here expect faire weather and the Sun-shine of our comfort; for a dry seed-time, will bring but a barren harueſt; but let these teares of worldly sorrow, cause teares of spirituall joy, because they are now seasonable, and doe but water our hopes, and make our harueſt of happinesse much more plentifull. Finally, let vs now mourne, if there bee vnto vs no cause of mourning; and rejoyce if wee can find in this World no matter of rejoycing; because they which laugh here shall for euer

Apoc. 21. 27.

Iohn 16. 33.

Verse 20 21.

weepe

Iohn 16.20.

weepe, and they that mourne here shall haue their sorrow turned into joy.

Now is the time, and this is the place of our tryall and tentation, and wee must like pure Gold be proued before wee can bee approued, and first passe the fiery furnace, before we can be admitted into Gods treasury: we must like Iewels and precious Diamonds here indure the hammer & anuil, that hereafter we may be reserued in Gods heauenly cabinet: we must here be Probationers in Gods Schoole, that after examination we may be admitted into that happy society of Saints and Angels. And (as one saith) it is a signe, not of an vpright, but of a peruerse mind, to desire glory, before wee haue exercised and shewed our vertue; and to couet the garland, before wee haue ouercome in wrastling: which glory, being vndeserued, where there is no vertue, is preposterously affected, and dangerously attayned. Now is the time of our preparation, when as wee must bee washed, trimmed and dressed, that wee may bee fit to meete our Bridegroome; and after this life shall be the solemnizing of our mariage; and therefore we must not here expect our solace, and delight; but hereafter when we shall haue the fruition of our Husband, and those heauenly habitations which hee hath prepared for vs. Here we must be purged from our chaffe of corruption, that like pure graine wee may bee laid vp in Garners of Blessednesse; and therefore wee must not now looke for rest and faire weather: but to be tossed and turmoyled with the winde and Fan. Now is not the time of feasting and pampering our selues with carnall pleasures, but of fasting and mourning, seeing our Bridegroome is absent from vs; but then are wee to expect these Reuels and Delights, when hee commeth againe to solemnize our Nuptials. And those (as one saith) who here fat themselues with worldly fulnesse, doe but fit themselues for the slaughter, and prepare a more dainty Banquet for the crawling Wormes. This World is the Theater which is appointed for the exercise of masteries; and therefore wee must not here looke for ease and pleasure, seeing none obtayne the prize of Blessednesse, but those who haue so runned, wrestled and contended, that they haue also obtayned the victory: wee must not like lazie Lozels heere expect full Tables, soft Beds, sweet Bathes, and such like effeminate Delights in the place of our exercise; but like valiant Champions, hauing in stead of costly clothing, our naked bodies couered with dust and oyle, we must wrestle in the heat of the Sunne, and with much sweat and labour obtayne the Garland; for as the Apostle telleth vs; If any man striue for a Mastery, he is not crowned, except he striue as hee ought to doe. Here man is ordained to labour, and rest is not to be expected till we keepe an euerlasting Sabbath vnto God in the heauenly Canaan; now we are appointed to take pains in Gods Vineyard, and wee must not looke for our reward, before with our labour wee make an end of our liues, and (as the Apostle telleth vs) wee must like good Husbandmen take paines in this Seed-time and hereafter wayte for the fruits of haruest; and not be dismayed, though we be tyred with troubles and sweat at our labours; seeing they are much sweetned with this consideration, that they are so seasonable. Now is the time of our Exile and Banishment, and what comfort or contentment can be expected till wee bee admitted into the presence of our King? In this World wee are saying as in a Sea of miseries; and therefore wee must not thinke it strange, if one waue of affliction doth follow in the necke of another, if wee be still in danger of cruell Pyrats, Rockes, and wrackes, shelues and sands, stormes and tempests, nor expect ease and rest, safety and security, before wee arriue at the Hauen of happinesse. This World is appointed by God to be the place of our affliction and punishment; and therefore we are not foolishly to imagine that we shall find it a Paradize of delights; not to bee discouraged if wee meete with troubles and miseries, seeing it well sorteth with Gods Ordinance, who hath appointed that wee should bee crossed on Earth, that we may be crowned in Heauen.

Here is not our Country, and the place of our perpetuall abode; and as the Apostle sayth) here we haue no continuing Citie, but we seeke one to come, euen the heauenly Canaan and new Ierusalem, where an inheritance immortall, vndefiled, and that fadeth not away is reserued for vs. Here wee are not Citizens and free Denizns, seeing the Kingdome of our Soueraigne is not of this world; and therefore we must not here look for our Priuiledges and Prerogatiues; but we are in the earth pilgrimes and strangers, and consequently like men of that quality, we must make account to bee daily subject to many miseries and indignities, and expect our happinesse when wee come safely to our home. Our pouerty must not much trouble vs: for who desireth in his pilgrimage and trauels to carry his wealth and riches about him? Onely let it content vs, if wee haue sufficient to defray our charges, and to supply necessaries in our journey, and then expect to enjoy our riches and chiefe treasures, when as wee safely arriue in our heauenly Country. We must not lay it much to heart, if we find hard entertainment in the World, and be not esteemed and accounted of according to our worth and desert; for we are not at home among our friends and kindred, where we might expect such kindnesse, because they know our state and quality; but in our pilgrimage, and at our Inne, among strangers

Q. Sect. 2. That this world is the place of tryall and tentation, preparation & spirituall exercise.

Virtus gradus ad gloriam: virtus mater gloriæ, Bernar. in Natali St. Victoris.

Nunquid enim metuendi sumus quod nos ipsos saginemus? quid tantam vermibus mensam apponis? quid maiorem agis saniem? quid ad omnia temetipsum reddis inutilem? Chrysost. Homil. ad pop. 54. Tom. 4. Aliud est quietis tempus, hoc erumnis deputatum est & sudoribus, nullus vbi ad certamen se exuit vnctusque est, requiem quærit, Chrysost. in 2. Tim. 3 Hom. 8.

2. Tim. 2. 5.

Verse 4.

Q. Sect. 3. That this world is the place of our pilgrimage & therefore we must looke for pilgrimes entertainment, Heb. 13. 14. 1. Pet. 2. 11. Iohn 18. 36.

strangers who are vnacquainted with our persons and conditions; and who examine not our vertues, but our purses and outward pompe; not what we haue in our own Country, but what wee carry about vs, and measure all their respect and seruice vnto vs, by that profit and benefit which they may receiue from vs. And who careth much for hard vsage in his Inne, where hee is to remayne but one night? Who looketh for respect and duty in a farre Country where hee trauelleth, or careth for vnciuill entertainment among those who know him not, although he be a man of great place & esteeme in his owne Country? Our toylesome liues & wearisome labours must not much grieue vs, seeing they are so suitable for the life of a Pilgrime, who prepareth himselfe to take paines in his journey and beareth it with patience, though hee be sometimes tyred in his trauels, then only expecting rest and sweete repose, when hee safely arriueth at his owne home. Yea, wee must not be much vexed, if in this life wee receiue wrongs and injuries, and if wee bee robbed and spoyled through violence and vnjust oppression; for it is not strange with Trauellers to fall into the hands of Theeues and Robbers, especially when they trauell in barbarous Countries, or in the Dominions of professed enemies. But herein is both their and our comfort; that they can only spoyle vs of some small trifles, which we carry about vs, whereby we only sustaine some present want and misery in the short time of our trauels; but cannot take from vs our inheritance, our principall jewels and chiefe treasures, because those are safely reserued for vs in our heauenly Country; and we shall certainly enjoy them when wee haue finished our pilgrimage. And with this argument of consolation Abraham strengthened his faith and patience in all the miseries which he indured in a strange Country, because hee looked, not to his present condition, but for a City hauing a foundation, whose builder and maker is God.

Finally, this World is appointed of God to be the place of our warfare, wherein wee must combate, not onely against Sathan and our owne flesh, but against all other enemies of our saluation; and we are not to expect our crowne, and to triumph in happinesse, till we haue finished our fight and obtayned victory. For (as one saith) Christ Iesus hath built the whole Vniuerse, like an House of three stories, namely Hell, Earth, and Heauen: appointing the Earth for Warriours, Hell for the conquered, and Heauen for those who obtaine the victory. Hee hath not promised peace, but hath denounced war whilest wee continue in this life, reseruing secure peace and quiet rest for his heauenly Kingdome. And therefore (as one saith) if wee ere seeke peace, we seeke a good thing, but we doe not seeke it in the place where it is to be found; for there is no peace in this life; and in vaine doe wee seeke for that vpon Earth, which is only promised in Heauen. Now valiant Souldiers in the time of Warfare doe not set their minds vpon ease and sloth, vpon soft Beds and dainty Fare; they doe not take care for soft and costly rayment, nor to haue about them abundance of riches; but they are wholy transported with a desire of victory, and to this end endure with patience all paines and labour, fare coursly, and lie hardly, and either watch the whole night, or make the earth their Bed, their Helmet a Pillow, and the Skie their Canopy; expose themselues to desperate dangers, and with patience suffer many wounds and foiles, that they may in the end obtaine the victory. Yea euen Kings themselues who in peace abound with plenty and pleasure, in the time of war accustome themselues to hardnesse; because it best fitteth this season; making them more valiant and hardy; and (which is the end of all) much more able to ouercome their enemies. And therefore though our future estate be neuer so great, as being the sonnes of God, and heires apparant of his glorious Kingdome, yet seeing wee are now in the place of our warfare, let vs with patience endure all hardnesse, paines and pouerty, as best sorting with our present condition, and not expect ease and idlenesse, wealth and dainties, worldly pleasures and carnall delights, which would effeminate our minds, & vtterly disable vs to withstand our enemies. We are Gods Souldiers, and it better becommeth his worthies to be in the field, than in the Garrison; in a painfull march, than in a soft Bed; well armed, than gorgeously clothed, and assaulting their enemies with man-like courage, than to spend their time, like Carpet-Knights in feasting and reuelling. Here wee must looke for impregnable Forts and strong Holds, and expect stately Buildings, and rich Furniture in the new Ierusalem; here we must labour, fast and watch that there we may feast, rejoyce, and take our ease; here we must endure many miseries and afflictions that there wee may enjoy all glory and happinesse; here we must fight and obtaine the victory, that there wee may triumph in blessednesse, hauing a crown for our helmet, a Scepter and Palme, for our Sword and speare: glorious garments and gorgeous clothing, for our heauy shield, and steely brestplate. For it is better for the present to be a little pressed with the waight of the armor, than to perish by lying open to the wounds of an enemy; it is better to beare the waight of a shield or brest plate, than to be pierced with the fiery darts of the euil one. And this allegory and argument the Apostle vseth to perswade Timothy to the patient enduring of the crosse. Thou therefore (saith he)

Omnibonus requiem quærit: bonam rem quærit sed non in regione sua. Non est pax in hac vita, in cœlo nobis promissa est quod in terra quærimus. Aug. in Psal. 48. enarrat.

Interim sane prouidi nautæ quamplurimi videntur vtilius, & sustinere pondus clypei & loricæ quam maligni iaculis ignea vulnerari. Bernard. de dedicat. Ecclesiæ Serm. 2.

2. Tim. 2. 3, 4.

suffer affliction as a good Souldier of Iesus Christ. No man that warreth intangleth himselfe with the affaires of this life, because he would please him, who hath chosen him to be a Souldier. And afterwards hee propoundeth himselfe for an example of this precept; in that hee did not couet after the Crowne, till like a valiant Souldier, hee had fought this spirituall battaile and obtained the victory. I haue fought (saith he) a good fight, and haue finished my course, I haue kept the faith, from henceforth is laid vp for me the crowne of righteousnesse. To conclude this point, the Lord hath appointed this World as a Valley of misery and mortality wherein we are to liue a dying life, or liuing death, till being throughly mortified both in body and soule, wee may by mortality attaine vnto immortality, by corruption vnto incorruption, and by a temporary death finde a way vnto life euerlasting. For our liues are in a continuall consumption from the time of our birth, and the faster we grow the faster we decrease, the more is added to our liues, the more they are diminished; and the more the number of our dayes is multiplyed, the more it is abated, because what is annexed to the time past, is substracted and taken away from the time to come. And therefore seeing there is no way to immortality vnlesse here wee be subject to mortality, no way to liue and raigne with Christ, vnlesse in this World wee suffer and be dead with him, let vs not dreame of a flourishing estate, pompe and earthly prosperity whilest we continue here, but prepare our selues by the crosse to attaine vnto the Crowne, by the vale of misery to ascend vnto the mountaine of glory; and by temporary death and destruction to passe vnto saluation and euerlasting happinesse.

2. Tim. 4. 7, 8.

2. Tim. 2. 11, 12.

2. Sect. 5. Consolations taken from the necessity, profit, shortnesse, and lightnes of our afflictions.

And these are the comforts which arise from the subject place of our afflictions; besides which there are other consolations, which may be gathered from their adjuncts and properties, as from the necessity, benefit, brevity and lightnesse of them. For first, our afflictions are necessary in respect of Gods Decree, by which they are inseparably annexed vnto our election, vocation, and saluation; for those which hee knew before hee hath also predestinated to bee made like vnto the Image of his Sonne, whom he appointed first to suffer, and so to enter into his glory. So the Apostle telleth vs, that we are hereunto called; for Christ also suffered for vs, leauing vs an example that we should follow his steps. And our Sauiour teacheth vs, that wee must by this straite gate and narrow way, enter into his glory; with whom his holy Apostle according, saith, that we must by many afflictions enter into the Kingdome of God. Secondly, they are most necessary in this state of corruption in respect of vs, that by these wholesome corrections we may be contained in our duty and restrained from sinne; in which regard that is truly verified of vs, which we vsually say of our little children, namely, that there is a greater necessity of our corrections, than of our meat and drink, seeing the want of the one tendeth but to the temporary destruction of the body, but the want of the other indangereth vs to the euerlasting condemnation and vtter perdition both of body and soule. For if the Lord should continually cocker vs with worldly blessings, and let vs neuer feele the smart of his chastising hand, we would quickly forget and contemne him, neglect his commandements, securely goe on in sinne, and grow wanton in our wickednesse. The vtility also and profit of afflictions is (as hath beene shewed) exceeding great, seeing the Lord vseth them as the ordinary meanes of strengthening and increasing in vs all his sanctifying and saning graces; of conferring vnto vs many temporary and worldly benefits; and of furthering and aduancing our glory and euerlasting happinesse in his heauenly Kingdome. For the attayning of which incomparable blessings respecting both this life and the life to come, we are not bound to beare a proportionable measure of misery and tribulation; for these afflictions which through Gods mercy bring vnto vs these vnualuable graces, and vnmatchable waight of eternall glory, are in respect of their burthen light, and easie to be borne; and for their time, momentany, and but of short continuance; All which points haue in the former part of this Treatise beene so cleerely proued, that I shall not need here any further to insist vpon them.

Heb. 12. 11.

Rom. 8. 29.

Luke 24. 26.

1. Pet. 2. 21.

Yea, such is Gods loue and mercy towards vs, that though the afflictions which he layeth vpon vs be but light, momentany, and in their owne nature easie to bee borne, yet hauing respect to our wonderfull infirmity and great weaknesse, he neuer suffereth vs to beare them alone; but hee alwayes appointeth vnto vs Coparrners and Assistants, who by their helpe keepe vs from fainting, either by taking from vs part of our burthen, when it is too heauy for our little strength; or by encouraging and comforting vs when when we are dismayed, or finally by bearing & sustayning part of the waight, that it may not oppresse and ouer-whelme vs. For first the Lord giueth his holy Angels charge ouer vs; to assist and compasse vs about, to preserue vs in all dangers, and to keepe vs in all our wayes, that no other crosses befall vs than those which hee hath appointed nor yet in any greater measure, than that which in his wise prouidence he hath allotted vnto vs. For as the Angels ministred vnto our Head Iesus Christ at all times, but especially in his greatest trials and afflictions, as namely after that conflict of tentation with Sathan our spirituall

3. Sect. 6. That God appointeth his holy Angels to assist vs in our afflictions.

Mat. 7. 13, 14. Act. 14. 22.

rituall enemy, and in his bitter agony, when an Angell appeared from heauen to comfort him; So doe they by the appointment of our common Lord and Master attend vpon vs who are his members, to preserue, defend, strengthen and comfort vs, that wee may not faint and faile through our naturall weaknesse vnder the burthen of the crosse. Thus the Psalmist saith, that the Angell of the Lord encampeth round about them that feare him, and deliuereth them. And againe, Hee shall giue his Angels charge ouer thee to keepe thee in all thy wayes; they shall beare thee in their hands, that thou hurt not thy foot against a stone: the which as it is principally to bee vnderstood of our Head Iesus Christ, as himselfe applyeth it, so likewise it belongeth to all those who are the true members of his body; as it may appeare by manifold examples. Thus the Angels attended vpon righteous Lot to deliuer him and his, out of the common destruction of Sodome and Gomorrah. And an whole Hoast of them encamped about Iacob when hee feared his Brothers armed rage; which at all times were ready (as he saith elsewhere) to deliuer him from all euill. Thus the Angell of God standeth betweene Israel and the Hoast of the Egyptians, pursuing them, and preserueth them from being ouer-taken by that imminent danger. And afterwards the Lord sendeth him before them to keepe them in their way, and to bring them to the place which he had prepared: casting out all their enemies from before them which opposed against them. Thus an whole Army of these holy Angels encompasse the Prophet Elisha, & his seruant round about to preserue them from being destroyed by the Hoast of the Aramites. So an Angell of God preserueth the three children in the fiery furnace, and Daniel in the Lions Den. And thus by the ministery of Angels Peter is deliuered out of prison; and Lazarus is carried into Abrahams bosome. And howsoeuer the faithfull haue not in these dayes such visible apparitions of these heauenly Spirits nor such miraculous deliuerances from dangers by their ministery; yet Gods loue and care ouer his Church being now as great as in former times; their diligence and watchfulnesse is no lesse to safegard and preserue from all perils, and to comfort and vphold in all afflictions those who are so deere to their Lord and Master. And therefore if in all griefes and miseries it bea great comfort vnto vs to haue the company of some able and louing friends, which haue both some power and will to succour and relieue vs; how sweet and comfortable is this happy society of the holy Angels to those who being afflicted doe by faith apprehend their continuall presence, seeing without all comparison they are more powerfull and willing, than our most potent friends, to comfort and preserue vs in all our extremities.

But it will be much more comfortable vnto vs if we further consider, that we haue in all our afflictions not only the fellowship and assistance of Angels, but also of Iesus Christ the Lord of Angels, who according to his gracious promise is with vs vnto the end of the World; and that both as our King to preserue vs from dangers, protect vs from enemies, and to gouerne, guide and measure out vnto vs a burthen of afflictions proportionable to our strength; and also as our head to condole and compassionate our griefes, and to ease vs of the irksomenesse of our load by bearing the greatest part of the waight thereof with his owne most powerfull strength. For not only hath he learned pity and compassion by suffering the like afflictions in the body of his flesh, and in his state of humiliation as the Apostle teacheth vs; but also now in his state of glory, as our Head hee suffereth in vs who are the members of his Body, accounting our afflictions his afflictions, and our smart his owne paine, as appeareth in that speech to Saul; Saul, why persecutest thou mee? And to the faithfull at the day of judgement: I was an hungred and yee gaue mee meate, I thirsted and yee gaue mee drinke, I was a stranger and yee lodged me, I was naked and yee clothed mee; I was sicke and yee visited mee, I was in prison and yee came vnto me: And when they asked, when they saw him in this afflicted estate, he answereth, Verily, I say vnto you, in as much as yee haue done it vnto one of the least of these my brethren, yee haue done it to mee. And hereof it is that the sufferings of the faithfull are in the Scriptures called the sufferings of Christ, Because as they suffered with him in his Passion as being their head and suretie, and satisfied Gods justice for their redemption and justification; so hee suffereth with them in their affliction as being his members, with his strength & power so assisting them, that they doe not ouer-whelme and consume them, but only tend to their sanctification and the purging and purifying them from their sinne and corruption. Thus the Apostle saith, that euery where we beare about in our body the dying of our Lord Iesus, that the life of Iesus might be made manifest in our bodies. And elsewhere more plainly: Now reioyce I (saith he) in my sufferings for you, and fulfill the rest of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh, for his bodies sake which is the Church: So the Apostle Peter exhorteth the faithfull to rejoyce in the fiery tryall, in as much as they were partakers of Christs sufferings. And hereof it is that our Sauiour Christ calleth that portion of afflictions which he allotteth vnto vs, and exhorteth vs to beare, his yoke (take my yoke on you, and learne of me) not only because he imposeth it, but also as our yoke-fellow doth beare the greatest part of the waight. For as when two Oxen which

9. Sect. 7. That in all our afflictions wee haue Christ an assistant & copartner with vs in our griefes.

Math. 28. 20.

Heb. 2. 18. & 4. 15, 16. & 5. 2.

Act. 9. 4.

Math. 25. 35, 40

2. Cor. 4. 10.

Col. 1. 24.

1. Pet. 4. 13.

are far vnequal in their bignes are yoked together, the heauieſt part of the load is borne by the talleſt and ſtrongeſt, the yoke ſcarce touching the necke of him that is leaſt and loweſt: ſo is it betweene Chriſt and vs, in regard whereof hee encourageth vs to joyne with him in bearing this burthen, becauſe his yoke is eaſie and his burthen light; he who is high & mighty ſuſtaining the chiefe waight, and keeping it with his Omnipotent Power, that it cannot oppreſſe and ouer-whelme vs. The conſideration wherof may miniſter vnto vs ſingular comfort in all our croſſes and calamities; ſeeing wee haue ſuch a copartner and aſſiſtant in bearing all our afflictions, who is able and willing to vphold vs when wee are ready to ſinke, and to comfort vs when we are ready to faint; for as the ſufferings of Chriſt abound in vs, ſo our conſolation aboundeth through Chriſt; and as he addeth to the waight of our burthen, ſo alſo to our ſtrength, in as much as we may ſay with the Apoſtle, that though we be neuer ſo feeble in our ſelues, yet wee are able to doe all things, thorough the helpe of Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth vs. Yea, herein wee may rejoyce, in that though our burthen be neuer ſo great, yet it is impoſſible that wee ſhould ſinke and fall downe flat vnder it; for as the leſſer and weaker Oxe, drawing in the ſame yoke with one which is much bigger and ſtronger, cannot fall becauſe his fellow ſupporteth him, by reaſon of that conjunction which is betweene them, vnleſſe hee ſhould alſo pull him downe together with him; ſo neither can we, being yoked and vnited vnto Chriſt our Head, in a farre neerer and more inſeparable vnion, ſinke vnder our burthen, ſeeing he is al-ſufficient to hold vs vp, and cannot bee pulled downe with the greateſt waight. And as by vertue of this ſpirituall vnion with Chriſt, hee as our Head doth partake with vs in all our afflictions, ſo alſo all his Saints and faithfull ſeruants doe communicate with vs in them, as being fellow members of his myſticall Body: for as when any part of the naturall body is vexed and pained with any infirmity, al the reſt do ſympathize in the ſorrowes, and by mutuall compaſſion and fellow-feeling do partake in theſe griefs; ſo is it in the ſpirituall Body of the Church. By reaſon whereof great comfort redoundeth to euery particular member which is thus afflicted; not onely becauſe the burthen is made much ligheer which is borne vpon ſo many ſhoulders; but alſo becauſe from this compaſſion, doe iſſue moſt feruent and effectuall Prayers of the whole Church, whereby they commend all the afflicted parts of their body to Gods ſpeciall care and prouidēce, to be vpheld & preſerued by him in theſe their diſtreſſes, the which are moſt powerfull to preuayle with God, for the obtayning of helpe and comfort; for if the prayer of one faithfull man auayleth much if it be effectuall and zealous; then how much more the prayers of all the Saints when they are joyned together? Finally, wee haue in all our afflictions God himſelfe preſent with vs to aſſiſt and ſupport vs; for as by his moſt wiſe and gracious Prouidence, he appointeth vnto the faithfull their afflictions for their tryall or chaſtiſement, ſo thereby he is preſent with them and watcheth ouer them, that hee may ſupport and ſtrengthen them when they are ready to faint and fall, according to his gracious promiſe whereby he hath aſſured them, that hee will not ſuffer them to be tempted aboue their power, but will giue a good iſſue with the tentation, that they may bee able to beare it. But of this I ſhall haue occaſion to ſpeake more hereafter.

Matth 11.29,30

1.Cor.1.5.

Phil.4.13.

1.Cor.10.13.

Iames 5.16

CHAP. XXIX.

That wee may receiue much comfort, by comparing our leſſer and lighter afflictions, with thoſe greater and heauier which Gods deareſt Saints haue felt and ſuffered.

§. Sect. 1. That it hath alwayes been the portion of the faithfull to endure in this world miſery and affliction, and firſt that our father Adam endured great afflictions.

HAuing ſhewed what arguments of conſolation do ariſe from our afflictions, being ſimply conſidered in themſelues with relation to their cauſes, effects, ſubject, and adjuncts: now we are, according to our order, to intreate of thoſe comforts, which ariſe from them as they are compared with the afflictions of others, or with thoſe heauenly and euerlaſting joyes, which theſe ſhort and light afflictions doe cauſe vnto vs. Concerning the former, wee may receiue much conſolation, if wee compare our croſſes, either with the greater afflictions which Gods deareſt children haue ſuffered before vs; or with thoſe miſeries and puniſhments which are inflicted vpon the wicked both in this life and in the life to come. And for the firſt, if wee looke into the Booke of God wee ſhall find, that it hath beene the portion of all the faithfull, to indure in this World miſeries and afflictions; and that they haue not only ſipped and taſted of this bitter cup, but as they haue exceeded in grace, ſo they haue drunke a farre deeper draught than wee, in this vnpleaſant potion. For to beginne with our great grand-father Adam, what miſeries did hee indure in his whole life, partly through the remembrance of his loſt happineſſe, and partly through the preſſure and vexation of preſent afflictons? For hee, who formerly paſſed his time in pleaſure and delight, and abounded ſo in Gods bleſſings that he wanted nothing which his heart could deſire, muſt now labour in a new plantation, for the furniſhing whereof all things were to be inuented, and all neceſſaries to bee prouided; now the earth which which formerly brought forth all good fruits of its owne accord, being for his sinne subject to the curse, bringeth forth nothing but bryars and thornes, vnlesse it were tilled and manured with his toilesome labour; now hee who formerly liued at ease, if hee will haue his penury relieued, and obtaine necessaries for the sustaining of his life, must buy them with his sweat, spend part of his bodily substance, that he may nourish the rest, and waste his strength that he may preserue it. Now he who needed nothing, needeth all things, and hath no body to comfort him in his miseries, but shee that caused them; none to helpe him in his wants but shee who helped him to fall into them. He is indeed Emperour of the World, but he hath no subjects to obey him; hee is Lord of all, but hee hath no seruants, no not for the baseſt offices. If he will eate the fruits of the Earth, hee must bee his owne husbandman, his owne purueier. If hee will haue clothes, hee must be his owne taylor, and make them before he can weare them, if he will haue a lodging, to keepe him from the bruit beasts and the violence of the weather, there is no man to build it vnlesse hee will be his owne carpenter and tent-maker, and in a word if hee will haue the pleasure of any earthly necessary, hee must first endure the paines of getting and procuring it. Yea afterwards when hee expected the comfort of society, and hoped to haue all his other miseries sweetned with the pleasure of his posterity, his hony is turned into gall, and there, as he thought to haue found his chiefe contentment, he findeth his greatest crosses and calamities. For his dearest sonne Abel is cruelly murthered, and his other sonne Cain the first borne like a butcher or hangman imbrueth his hands in his innocent blood. And so by the death of the one hee is deprived of his comfort, and by the life of the other hee endured a greater crosse. For hee seeth him a vagabond, a reprobate, an enemy to himselfe, and the whole Church of God, and whilst hee liued, dead in his sinne, obnoxious to Gods wrath, and (as it were) already adjudged to eternall condemnation. Now what a griefe was this to consider that his first fruits should offer himselfe to the Diuell, that the heire of the world, should bee the sonne of perdition, and the first that should hansell the fire of Hell. But aboue all these worldly crosses hee was pressed with the burthen of his owne sinne, which was the cause that brought all the rest vpon him, and the very sting that made all his paines truely painfull, and all his other miseries out of measure miserable. For hee who was holy & righteous according to Gods image, now looking into the glasse of the law of nature, seeth himselfe made by himselfe most vgly and deformed; he seeth himselfe spoiled of the inestimable treasures of Gods gifts and graces, and that himselfe was the theefe who had thus robbed him. Hee seeth nothing in him but the guiltinesse and filthinesse of sin, ignorance in the place of knowledge, peruersenesse in stead of obedience, and hatred of God in stead of loue. And one while hee is filled with griefe whilst he considereth his losse, and another while with anger against himselfe as being the cause of all his misery. Whersoeuer hee looketh hee findeth cause of lamentation; but yet when he is about to complaine on those who haue brought him into these miseries, his owne conscience apprehendeth himselfe as the malefactor, and hee hath nothing to cry out on but his owne sinne. The like afflictions were that part of his posterity, which feared God, subject vnto; for in that short story of righteous Abell, who was his true heire in vertue and godlinesse, there is onely mention of his birth, sacrifice and slaughter, his seruing of God giuing the occasion vnto his wicked brother to resolue vpon and execute that bloody designe. So whilst the posterity of Cain flourished in the world, built cities, inuented musicke, and spent their time in carnall pleasures; Sheth and his progeny were obnoxious to their tyranny, and oppression, being innocent lambes among rauenous and cruell wolues. Thus also Noah the preacher of righteousnesse had his life made bitter vnto him with many and grieuous afflictions; for what great paines did he take in building the arke? vnto what scoffes and skornes, mockes and flouts was he subject, when as the wicked of those times did see him to vndertake (in their opinion) such a fruitlesse taske and vseleſſe labour? with what sorrow was hee oppressed when he saw his ministery contemned and vnprofitable to his hearers, and when afterwards hee beheld Gods goodly workmanship defaced, the creatures destroied, all mankinde, and among the rest his friends, kindred and acquaintance drowned & ouerwhelmed in that vniuersall deluge? what a close and noysome prison was the Arke vnto him, for the space of ten moneths together, when as being constrained to lodge amongst so many bruite and filthy beasts, he could not chuse but be almost choaked and stifled with their filth, excrements, and stinking sauours? And to say nothing of those innumerable miseries which he must needs endure in the new plantation and renouation of the World, what a corrasiue must it needes be vnto his heart, to be scorned by his owne sonne, when as he considered that his sinne gaue occasion vnto it? what a torment was it to his minde to thinke that amongst all men three only besides himselfe, had escaped the flood, and that now one of them was drowned in a flood of wickednesse, which would carry him dead in sinne vnto the sea of endlesse perdition?

Gen. 4.

Q. Sect. 2. Of the afflictions of Abraham the Father of the faithfull

After the flood we see Abraham the Father of the faithfull subject to the like or greater afflictions. For by Gods commandement he is injoyned to leaue his owne country, his friends, kindred and acquaintance; which are as deare vnto a man as his life, and to spend his dayes in a voluntary banishment, in a strange land, among a barbarous nation, who were grosse idolaters, and polluted with all manner of abominable wickednesse, where euery day his soule was vexed with their grosse impieties, the sight wherof was as grieuous as death it selfe. The which country, though it were promised vnto him as the reward of his faith and obedience, yet in respect of fruition, hee was for the present but a titular king onely, without land or subject, hauing not so much as a foot of his inheritance in present possession. Neither doth it giue vnto him any great comfort in the full assurance of future fruition, seeing hee found such scarcity and penury in it, that hee was faine to leaue it for want of bread, and to flee into Egypt to seeke releefe. And being come thither he is constrained (through the wickednesse of the people) for the safeguard of his life to suffer his deare Sara to be taken from him, which could not bee much lesse grieuous vnto him, than the separation of his soule and body, and to redeeme his life from famishment by prostituting his beloued wife to be defiled by a wicked infidel. Out of which dangers he was through Gods gracious prouidence no sooner escaped, and againe returned to his owne home, but there fell out such implacable contentions, betweene his, and Lots seruants, that he hath no meanes to preserue peace & loue betweene them, but by parting with his deare nephew, who was then in the place of a sonne vnto him, and the chiefe stay and comfort of his life, confining himselfe vnto that part of the country which hee refused, though by a donation from God he was Lord of all. Vpon which parting hee presently heareth of the ouerthrow and captiuity of his beloued kinsman, and is constrayned to redeeme his life, and liberty with the hazard of his owne. Afterwards God maketh a gracious promise vnto him of a numerous posterity, and that in his seed both himselfe and all the nations of the earth should be blessed, when as yet he had no child, which promise was so long deferred vntill in naturall reason it seemed impossible to bee performed, by reason of Sarahs barrennesse, and therefore beleeuing the thing promised, but staggering in the manner how it was to be accomplished, he harkeneth vnto his wife, perswading him, that seeing there was no hope of issue by her, he would take vnto him Hagar his maide, that out of her might spring this numerous posterity. By whom he no sooner had a Sonne, but all his comfort is crossed through their bitter contentions, which could no otherwise bee pacified but by granting an ouer-ruling power vnto Sarah, which shee exercised with such rigor, that his late espoused wife and onely Sonne as yet vnborne forsake him and flee away. Vpon her returne he is afflicted with care and feare ouer his nephew Lot, labouring for his preseruation out of the common destruction of Sodome and Gomorrah; and soone after hee is constrayned to leaue his habitation, and to dwell as a stranger in the land of Gerar, where the second time his beloued Sarah is taken from him, and in great danger to bee defiled by Abimelech, the King of the country. At last Isaac is borne vnto him, of which joy, least hee should surfet, it is embittered with an vnexpected accident; for the sonne of the bond-woman scoffeth and scorneth at the child of promise, which being discerned by Sarah, hee is faine to giue her satisfaction by sending Hagar and his yong son Ismael whom he dearely loued, into perpetuall banishment. And now when after this losse hee had no comfort left but his deare Isaac, hee is by Gods commandement injoyned to forgoe him also; and that not by naturall sickneſſe, or through the rage of enemies which had beene grieuous had it beene no more; but which was most intolerable, hee himselfe, the Father of the faithfull and the forwardest professour of Gods true religion, must in the sight of the Gentiles and infidels, doe an act in outward appearance abominable and execrable. For he must take his own Son, his onely Son, his Son Isaac, whom hee loued, in whom all the promises of life and saluation were made, to be fulfilled in that seed which should come of him, and after three dayes deliberation vpon the matter, he must take the life of his life & comfort of his soule, and with his owne hands (like a cruell butcher) cut his throat; and (least there should any relique remaine of him to comfort him with any hope of his restoring) he must offer him in sacrifice, and see him with his owne eyes consumed to ashes? By all which it appeareth that God did set forth this holy Patriarch as a president of humane misery, to teach vs, that seeing hee thus dealt with Abraham the Father of the faithfull whom he so much loued and esteemed, wee, who professe our selues his Children, should not expect any priuiledge whereby we should be exempted from drinking of this cup.

Q. Sect. 3. Of the afflictions of Isaac.

Neither in truth had his posterity, being children of promise, as well as his children after the flesh, any prerogatiue or exemption from bearing the crosse; onely it may bee that as their faith was lesser, so their burthen was

Ver. 10.

Gen. 12.1,2.

Gen. 13.7,8.

Gen. 14.12.14.

Gen. 16.2.

Gen. 12. & 13.

Gen. 20.2.

Gen. 21.

was lighter, being fitted by God according to their ſtrength. For to goe no further; who ſeeth not, that as Iſaac was his heire in reſpect of the promiſes, ſo alſo in reſpect of miſeries and afflictions. In his child-hood he was abuſed, mocked, and (as the Apoſtle ſaith) perſecuted by Iſmael the ſonne of the bond-woman; after his mariage he was like the Father enforced through dearth and famine, to flee for reliefe into the land of the Philiſtins, for the preſeruation of his life; where hee was faine for feare of incurring danger for his wiues ſake, to put in practice his Fathers pollicy, and to call her his ſiſter. And the more that God bleſſed him, the more he was enuied by the Philiſtins, inſomuch as when he had by his great labour digged diuers wells, they for ſpite either filled them vp, or forcibly tooke them from him, not ſuffering him to drinke of that water which he had dearely purchaſed with his paines and ſweate. Hee was alſo like his father long afflicted with the barrenneſſe of his wife, and no ſooner, at his earneſt prayer, had ſhee conceiued two children in her womb, but (after a monſtrous manner) they ſtriue the one with the other in their mothers belly, in which contentions they continued long after they were borne. Hee ſaw his firſt-borne rejected of God, and him caſt off, whom hee had choſen and moſt dearely loued; Hee beholdeth this his reprobation ſealed by his prophane contemning of the birth-right, and in his wicked choiſe of wiues againſt his fathers will from among the curſed nations, who were through their impiety a continuall griefe of minde to Iſaac and Rebbeccah. Finally, God croſſeth his will in making him vnwittingly to giue the bleſſing vnto his leſſe-loued, yet beſt-deſeruing ſonne Iacob; and then heareth that Eſau doth impiouſly thirſt after his blood and threatneth his death, whereby hee and his wife are inforced to ſend him away like a baniſhed man from his fathers houſe for the ſpace of twenty yeares; all which time they had iuſt cauſe to bewaile no leſſe his abſence than his brothers preſence; the one ſpoyling them of their comfort, the other euery day miniſtring new matter of griefe and mourning.

The like and greater miſeries was the Patriarch Iacob ſubject vnto, in the whole courſe of his life. For euen in his mothers womb his brother ſtriueth with him; and no ſooner had he receiued Gods bleſſing by the hands of his father (which alſo hee obtayned with great difficulty and danger) but preſently his brother hateth him and reſolueth on his murther: whoſe cruelty hee could no otherwiſe auoid, than by leauing his father and mother with all the meanes of his maintenance and preferment in their family, and by liuing like an exile a great part of his age in a ſtrang country; where hee indured a long and hard ſeruitude vnder an idolatrous, churliſh and deceitful maſter; by whom hee was deluded in his wife for whom hee ſerued, and defrauded of his deſerued wages. And inſtead of comfort at home to ſuſtaine him in theſe ſorrowes, he is vexed with the diſagreement, æmulations, and chiding of his wiues, whileſt they contended who ſhould haue the greateſt intereſt in his loue. Being to returne to his fathers houſe, he is faine to ſteale away from Laban, & to depart from his father in law, of whom he had ſo well deſerued, like one that fled from an enemy, of which no ſooner is notice taken but preſently he is purſued like a runaway rebuked like a ſlaue, and ranſaked like a thiefe. Being eſcaped the iawes of this greedy Wolfe, hee is ready to fall into the pawes of a raging Lyon: for his brother Eſau who had formerly threatned his death commeth againſt him with foure hundred men, whoſe cruelty hee not knowing how to reſiſt or auoide, is exceedingly perplexed with terrour and feare, and after much care and diſtraction of minde, he is faine in the moſt abject manner to proſtrate and humble himſelfe before him, for the pacifying of his wrath. Afterwards, his moſt deare wife Rachel dieth in her trauell, and Ioſeph the comfort of his old age is taken from him, and as hee ſuppoſed, deuoured with wilde beaſts, which errour and falſe conceipt brought vnto him as true and bitter ſorrow as if indeed hee had beene deſtroyed; for refuſing all comfort hee profeſſeth that hee would go mourning to his graue. Vnto which afflictions we may adde the rauiſhing of his onely daughter, the bloudy and vniuſt reuenge taken by his ſonnes Simeon and Leui vpon Sheehem, Hamor and the whole City, who were innocent of the fault, getting their opportunity of perpetrating this wickedneſſe, by abuſing and prophaning Gods holy Sacrament: the defiling of his Concubine by his firſt-borne Reuben: the inceſt of Iudah; the dearth and famine which pinched him and his whole family, and whilſt he vſed meanes to prouide bread to preſerue them from famiſhment, he was much more vexed with the trouble of his Sonnes, the impriſonment of Simeon, and aboue all the reſt with the conſtrained departure of his dearely loued Beniamin. By all which it appeareth that hee had iuſt cauſe to profeſſe (as he did vnto Pharaoh) that the dayes of his pilgrimage were but few and euill, ſeeing he begunne and continued his life in the ſuffering of ſuch grieuous and innumerable miſeries.

Gen. 37. 35.

Gen. 34.

Gen. 35. 22.

Gen. 47. 9.

Thus Moſes, whom God ſo dearely loued and entertained into the neereſt familiarity, talking with him as one man talketh with another face to face, was notwithſtanding

§. Sect. 3. Of the many and grieuous afflictions of Iacob.

§. Sect. 5. Of the afflictions of Moſes.

con-

continually exercised with grieuous afflictions. For at his very birth he hardly escapeth death according to the cruell decree of wicked Pharaoh. Three moneths together hee was in danger to be butchered, if hee were discouered. And then he is exposed and laid out by his parents, who for feare of their owne liues durst preserue his no longer. And though in his childhood and youth hee were nourished by Pharaohs daughter and so enjoyed for a time the pleasures of Egypt; yet when he came to mature age, he refuseth to be called her sonne, and abandoning all his worldly preferments, he chooseth rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enioy the pleasures of sinne for a season. For hee seeketh to right the wrongs of his oppressed brethren; and slayeth an Egyptian who did him iniury. Which being discouered he is faine for the safegard of his life to flie into the land of Madian, where he liued as a stranger, and for the sustaining of his life was contented to submit himselfe vnto the base condition of an hyred seruant. Afterwards at Gods appointment hee returneth into Egypt, vpon a dangerous and difficult ambassage, and runneth himselfe into many perils, whilst he laboureth for the deliuery of his people out of their captiuity. For not onely Pharaoh and all the Egyptians became his enemies, but euen his owne nation, for whose freedome hee laboured, when contrary to their expectation they were for the present more grieuously oppressed, are much incensed, and in bitternesse of soule murmur and cry out against him. And after their deliuerance with what afflictions and troubles was he continually vexed? For no sooner was he come to the red Sea, but they begin a fresh to murmur and repine against him; and thus vpon all occasions afterwards they fall into the like grudging and vniust complaining, of which his owne brother and sister were not innocent, but togither with the rest they vex him with their murmurings. Hee is continually toiled in judging their causes and in taking vp their suits and contentions; he is vexed with their stiffeneckednesse and froward conuersation; he is exceedingly grieued with their apostasie and odious idolatry; he sorroweth for their slaughters and lamenteth those manifold plagues, which by their grieuous sinnes they brought vpon them; and whereas he had no worldly comfort to cheere him in suffering all these afflictions, but the remembrance of the land of promise, the fruition whereof he long expected, he is at last cut off from this hope, and heareth Gods definitiue sentence passe vpon him, that hee should die in the wildernesse, and neuer enter into the promised land.

Heb.11.25.

Q. Sect.6. Of the afflictions of Iob and Dauid.

So holy Iob, though he were the iustest man that liued vpon Earth, and aboue all others in his time most highly aduanced in Gods fauour, yet did he endure so manifold and grieuous afflictions (as the spoiling of his goods, the death of his sonnes and seruants, the outward torments of boyles and botches, and the inward terrors of an afflicted mind; the scornes of the wicked, the hard censures of the godly, the tentations of his wife, and the vnkind vsage of his friends, who in his chiefest misery and perplexity applyed to his troubled mind corrasiues in stead of comforts) that in these respects he was thought the fittest man to be propounded by the holy Ghost as a patterne of patience. And thus Dauid though he were a man according to Gods owne heart, yet passed all his dayes in trouble and misery; and that not only before hee came to sit on the throne, when as hee was continually persecuted by Saul, and euery day within an inch of death, forsaken of his faithlesse friends, who stood bound vnto him in many benefits, slandered and traduced by his cruell enemies, and robbed and spoiled of his goods and wiues, who were carried away captiue by mercilesse infidels. But also after he was crowned king, hee endured so much more grieuous crosses and calamities, as those were neerer vnto him who were the authours of them. For to say nothing of his warres, both ciuill with the house of Saul, and forraine with the enemies of his people; nor of the conspiracies and treasons of his own subjects, who did rise against him, and the fearefull plague wherein he lost 70000. of his people, how much more grieuously was hee afflicted in his owne posterity? for Ammon his owne son defileth, yea rauisheth Thamar his owne daughter. And wicked Absolon in cruell reuenge becommeth his murtherer: For which bloody crime Dauid taking vpon him to pardon him though hee were by God adjudged to death, he doth afterwards conspire and rebell against him, he driueth him out of his kingdome, hee defileth his concubines and bringeth him into most desperate extreamities. And finally when by his death Dauid was freed out of these dangers and miseries, the meanes of his deliuerance was more grieuous vnto him than all the former euils which hee endured. For with such vnbrideled loue did hee affect this vngracious sonne, that hee layeth his death to heart more than all other his afflictions, so that like a man oppressed with the waight of sorrow, he seeketh ease by venting his griefe in that pittifull lamentation. O my son Absalon, my sonne, my sonne Absalon would God I had died for thee; O Absalon, my sonne, my sonne. Vnto whom I might adde all the Prophets and holy men of God who (as our Sauiour witnesseth) were persecuted of their and Gods enemies, and through their meanes and malice, afflicted in their whole whole liues with innumerable and moſt grieuous croſſes and calamities. For, as the Apoſtle witneſſeth, they were racked and tryed by mockings and ſcourgings, bonds and priſonment; they were ſtoned, hewen aſunder, tempted and ſlaine with the ſword, they wandred vp and downe in ſheepes ſkinnes, and in goates ſkinnes, being deſtitute afflicted and tormented; they wandred in wildernesſes, and mountaines, and dennes and caues of the earth; and that not for any faults or demerits of their owne, for they were ſo excellent in vertue and holineſſe, that as hee there teſtifieth, the world was not worthy of them.

1.Sam.30.

2.Sam.18.33.

Matth.5.12.

The like alſo may bee ſaid of the holy Saints, Apoſtles and Martyrs of Ieſus Chriſt vnder the new Teſtament, who though they were aboue all other aduanced in Gods fauour, yet were they aboue all other vexed and tormented with afflictions and perſecutions. For to begin with Iohn the Baptiſt, the forerunner of Chriſt, the friend of the brindegroome, and the greateſt of all the Prophets; wee find that after an auſtere and afflicted life, hee was for reprouing Herod for his ſinne of inceſt wrongfully impriſoned, and afterwards at the ſuit of a dancing damſell without any courſe of law vnjuſtly beheaded. And of the ſame cup all the Apoſtles and Diſciples of Chriſt taſted after him; for beſides all the miſeries and afflictions which they endured in their liues, as want and penury, trauell and wearineſſe, infamy and reproaches, ſlanders and vnjuſt cenſures, mockings and ſcornings, impriſonment and ſcourgings, all the twelue Apoſtles were put to violent deathes, Iohn onely excepted, who being miraculouſly preſerued in the caldron of boyling oyle, was afterward by the tyrant baniſhed into the ile Pathmos. But moſt grieuous and manifold were the afflictions of the Apoſtle Paul aboue all the reſt, being a veſſell of mercy, purpoſly choſen of God to carry his name before the Gentiles, and the children of Iſrael, and to ſuffer many things for his names ſake. For thus he deſcribeth his owne miſeries and calamities; I thinke (ſaith he) that God hath ſet forth vs the laſt Apoſtles, as men appointed to death: for wee are made a gazing-ſtocke to the world, and to Angels and to men: Wee are fooles for Chriſts ſake, weake and deſpiſed. Vnto this houre we both hunger and thirſt and are naked, and are buffeted, and haue no certaine dwelling place; and labour, working with our hands: we are reuiled, and yet we bleſſe; we are perſecuted, and ſuffer it: Wee are euill ſpoken of, and wee pray: wee are made as the filth of the world, the offſcowring of all things vnto this time. So in another place he ſaith; Wee are afflicted on euery ſide, yet are wee not in diſtreſſe; in pouerty, but not ouercome of pouerty. We are perſecuted but not forſaken, caſt downe, but we periſh not; euery where wee beare about in our body the dying of the Lord Ieſus, that the life of Ieſus might bee made manifeſt in our bodies. And againe, In all things wee approue our ſelues as the Miniſters of God; in much patience, in afflictions, in neceſſities, in diſtreſſes; In ſtripes, in priſons, in tumults, in labours, by watchings, by faſtings, &c. And comparing his ſufferings with thoſe which were borne by the reſt of the Apoſtles, he ſaith, that he was in labours more abundant, in ſtripes aboue meaſure, in priſon more plentifully; in death oft: of the Iewes fiue times receiued I fortie ſtripes ſaue one; I was thrice beaten with rods, I was once ſtoned; I ſuffered thrice ſhip-wracke, night and day haue I beene in the deepe of the Sea. In iorneying I was often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils of mine owne nation, in perils among the Gentiles, in perils in the Citie, in perils in the Wildernesſe, in perils in the Sea, in perils among falſe brethren. In wearineſſe and painefulneſſe; in watching often, in hunger and thirſt, in faſtings often, in cold and in nakednesſe. Beſides the things which were outward, I am cumbred daily and haue the care of all the Churches. Who is weake, and I am not weake? Who is offended, and I burne not? Vnto which outward vexations of his body, and inward cares and diſtractions in his minde, we may adde his ſpirituall afflictions, as the fight betweene the fleſh and the ſpirit, and the buffetings of Sathan, which were incomparably greater than all the reſt; for whereas out of the ſtrength of his faith and patience he reioyced, yea euen boaſted himſelfe in his other tribulations; by theſe he is much humbled and caſt downe in the ſight of his corruptions, forced to cry out in perplexity of ſpirit; Wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliuer me from this body of death; and driuen vnto God in frequent and freuent prayer, that hee might bee freed from theſe tentations.

Neither is this the ſtate and condition onely of ſome few particular men, but euen of the whole Church militant here on Earth, which is continually ſubject to the iniuries and oppreſſions of wicked worldlings, which liue with it and about it, in regard whereof God calleth it a worme (feare not thou worme Iacob) becauſe it is eaſily troden vnder foote, and is not able in its ſelfe to make reſiſtance. And making a diſcription of the Church, wherby it might be deſcerned from all other people, hee ſtileth it with theſe properties: O thou afflicted and toſſed with tempeſt, that haſt no comfort. In which regard the Apoſtle ſaith, that the Theſſalonians became followers of the Churches of God, becauſe they had ſuffered the ſame things. And this manifeſtly appeareth in the

Rom. 8. 35. 36. & 37.

Sect. 7. The afflictions of the Apoſtles, and eſpecially of the Apoſtle Paul.

Mat. 14. 3. & 16. 18.

Cor. 4. 10. 11. & 13.

Cor. 11. 23. 24. & 30.

Chap. 6. 4. 5. 6.

2. Cor. 11. 23. 24.

Rom. 7. 24.

2. Cor. 12. 8.

Sect. 8. That it is the lot of the whole Church militant to ſuffer afflictions.

Iſa. 41. 14.

Iſa. 54. 11.

1. Theſ. 2. 14.

the example of the Church of Israel, which from the first to the last was afflicted aboue all other Nations. For what a miserable captiuity did they indure three or foure hundred yeeres in the land of Egypt, whilest the wicked Egyptians as their Lords and Masters flowrished in the world, & raigned and ruled ouer them? What miseries and afflictions did they suffer in the wildernesse fourty yeares together, as hunger, thirst, stinging and burning Serpents, and grieuous plagues, till all of them that came out of the land of Egypt sauing Caleb and Iosuah were vtterly destroyed? And after that by so great warres and troubles they were setled in the land of Canaan, how often were they in the time of the Iudges vanquished and made tributaries and slaues to their cruell enemies? What a miserable captiuity did they indure in Babilon seuenty yeeres together? And what oppressions and persecutions did they suffer vnder Antiochus, and afterwards vnder the Herods, for many yeares? so that the life of that whole state was but a continuall conflict with troubles and calamities, sauing that the Lord, now and then, gaue vnto them some little breathing time, wherby they renued their strength against the next combate and incounter. The which their lamentable condition, we may see notably described in the booke of the Iudges, and Kings, in the 44. 79. and 139. Psalmes, in the Lamentations of Ieremy and many other places of the old Testament, vnto which for breuity sake I referre the reader. And the like, yea much more miserable and afflicted was the condition of the Church after the ascension of Iesus Christ, not onely by reason of those persecutions raised against it by the malicious Iewes, but also those much more cruell and bloody persecutions vnder the heathenish Emperors, wherein many thousands of the godly Christians were murthered and massacred, and that not by ordinary deathes, but by the most exquisite tortures and torments which wit assisted with malice could inuent.

9. Sect. 9. That the scriptures fortell these afflictions of the faithfull.

By all which it appeareth that afflictions and tribulations in this World are the portion allotted both to the whole Church in generall, and to all the speciall members, euen euery particular faithfull man; and that the more neere and deere they haue beene vnto God, and the more that they were inriched with excellent vertues and sauing graces, the greater share and measure of crosses and miseries hath beene inflicted vpon them. The which needeth not to seeme strange vnto any, seeing these workes of God in the administration of his iudgements are so consonant and agreeable with his word, which sheweth that all Gods Saints and seruants are continually subject to these crosses and afflictions. For so our Sauiour saith, that whosoeuer will bee his Disciples they must take vp their crosse daily and follow him: that all his faithfull ones shall weepe and lament, when as the world shall laugh and rejoyce; and that as many as he loueth he doth rebuke and chasten. And his holy Apostle telleth vs, that all who will liue godly in Christ Iesus shall suffer persecution: That whom God loueth he chasteneth, & scourgeth (not some but) euery son whom he receiueth; and therefore that if wee bee without correction, whereof all are partakers, then are wee bastards and not sonnes. And finally, that afflictions are the Kings roade and high-way, by which wee must trauell vnto the Kingdome of Heauen, if euer we purpose to come thither. And so the Apostle Peter comforting and strenghthening the faithfull vnto whom hee writeth in their tentations, telleth them that their estate was common with them vnto all Gods children, and that the same afflictions which they suffered were also accomplished in the rest of their brethren which are in the world. In which regard the sonne of Syrach, admonisheth vs, that if wee resolue to serue the Lord wee should also prepare our soules to indure tentations. Yea not onely are the Saints of God continually exercised with their owne afflictions, but they also communicate with the rest of the faithfull in their crosses and calamities, as being members of the same body; so as though it could bee imagined that they had no troubles or miseries of their owne, yet is their life much afflicted, by compassionating others in their afflictions, and partaking in their griefes. And both these are comprised together by the Apostle where hee saith, that the Hebrewes endured great afflictions, partly whilst they were made a gazing stock both by reproches and tribulations, and partly while they became companions of them which were so tossed to and fro. For both yee sorrowed with me for my bonds and suffered with ioy the spoiling of your goods, knowing in your selues that you haue in Heauen a better and an enduring substance. Vnto which duety euery Christian is bound not onely by vertue of their vnion with Christ, and of one of them with another as fellow members, but by an expresse commandement from God by his holy Apostle; Remember them that are in bonds, as though yee were bound with them, and them that are in affliction, as if you were afflicted in the body. And againe, Reioyce with them that reioyce, and weepe with them that weepe, be of like affection one towards another.

Luk. 9.23. Ioh. 16.20. Apoc. 3.19. 2. Tim. 3.12. Heb. 12.6,8. Act. 14.22. 1. Pet. 5.9. Eccles. 2.1. Heb. 10.33,34. Heb. 13.3. Rom. 12.15,16.

9. Sect. 10. That we may receiue much comfort by considering the

Seeing therefore crosses and afflictions haue from the very beginning of the world to this day beene the lot and portion of all Gods Saints, let this bee our comfort, that wee haue such and so many copartners of our our griefes, for it is better to hold our communion with them, though wee be fellowes also in their miseries, than being seuered from them to enjoy all manner of worldly prosperity. It is better to accompany them in the foule and afflicted way which leadeth to Gods Kingdome, it being the only knowne passage towards this heauenly City; than to goe alone in an vncouth way which hath not beene beaten and tracted by others of our godly Brethren who haue gone before vs, though it bee neuer so pleasing and delightfull. If trauailing towards a Towne we were assured by some man of credit that wee should goe vnto it by narrow and filthy Lanes, and that by no other meanes wee could come to the end of our journey, than by trauailing through them, wee would not rejoyce, if in our passage wee found only flowry sweet Medowes and a faire & Champion Country, because wee would conclude that because it was so contrary to our friends description, it could not bee the right way which would bring vs to the City: but Christ hath ascertained vs, that it is a narrow, foule and afflicted way that leadeth vs to the new Ierusalem; and by the Scriptures we are assured that Gods deerest Saints and Seruants haue trauelled by this way towards this heauenly City; so that wee haue no cause to bee dismayed if wee finde our passage such as Christ hath described it, and the Saints haue formerly tracted before vs, but rather wee should haue just cause to doubt and feare, if we found it faire and pleasant, lest wee were not in the right way that leadeth to blessednesse. For we are not better, yea, we are many degrees worser than the holy Patriarchs, Prophets and Apostles, and why then should wee expect to haue this priuiledge aboue them, that whereas they by many afflictions entred into the Kingdome of God, wee should hope to come thither by the faire broad way of worldly prosperity? Yea, rather let vs with patience trauaile in that way which they haue beaten before vs; let vs rejoyce & be glad if in our passage we may see the print of their footesteps, though it be in the mire and clay of trouble and affliction; seeing it is the greatest comfort and assurance of attayning vnto happinesse, when we haue such companions in our journey, or rather such precedents to lead vs the way. Let vs not thinke much to put our shoulders vnder that burthen which is borne by all, seeing it is not likely that we should sink vnder it, when as wee haue so many assistants and copartners. Let it be our comfort that in our afflicted estate wee be carried with the motion of the Vniverse, and haue all the whole Church either going before, accompanying, or following after vs. And let vs not take it ill if we sustaine that which is suffered by all: neither let vs falsly complaine that our burthen is heauier than other mens; seeing if wee compare our afflictions with those which haue beene formerly suffered by the Patriarches, Apostles, and Saints of God, their weight will appeare to be but a few ounces, to their many pounds; and if now (according to Socrates conceipt) all the faithfull should agree together to cast all their crosses and miseries into one heape, to the end that there might out of the whole bee an equall part shared to euery one, the most of those who came thither whining and complayning, would rather take againe their owne burthen which they brought, and goe their way, than yeeld to haue a share in that proportionable diuision. Finally, let vs not onely looke to those afflictions which other of Gods Saints haue suffered before vs, but consider with what comfort and patience, yea, with what thanksgiuing and rejoycing they haue sustained and endured them; and so shal wee plainly see that our murmuring and repining proceedeth not from the waight of these crosses, seeing they haue borne far heauier with comfort & contentment, but from our own impotency & impatiency of bearing the lightest burthen. For as all meates and drinkes seeme bitter, clammy and distastfull to him who is sicke of a burning Feuer; but yet when he seeth those who are in health to feed hungerly and with a good stomacke on such things as his appetite loatheth and abhorreth, then in his reason and discretion he imputeth not the vnsauourinesse to the meate and drinke, but to the nature of his disease and his owne distemper: so when we behold other of Gods Saints bearing farre greater afflictions than those which wee suffer with comfort and rejoycing, wee will no more complaine of our intolerable burthen, but of our owne impotency and impatiency which more vexe vs than our load.

Patienter abvno sustinendum est quod multis accidit, Bern. de modo viuendi, cap. 42. Plutarch. de consol. ad Apol.

Q. Sect. 11. A consolation for those who complaine that they are afflicted for their grieuous sins.

But here the afflicted sinner may obiect, that this comparing of the crosses and calamities of the Patriarches and Apostles with those which hee suffereth can bring vnto him no patience or comfort, because they were holy men of God, who suffered in their innocency, for their tryall, and the manifestation of Gods graces in them; and therefore no maruell if they bore their crosses with joy and thanksgiuing; whereas they being grieuous sinners are afflicted for their transgressions, and besides doe shew many corruptions and much wickednesse whilest the hand of God lyeth heauy vpon them. To which I answere, that the fire of affliction serueth not only to try & proue vs, but also to refine and purifie vs; neither are our crosses and calamities onely exercises for those which are strong and in health, but also Physicke to purge those of the corrupt humours of sinne, who are spiritually sicke; and therefore wee may well beare them with patience and comfort the example of the Church of Israel, which from the first to the last was afflicted aboue all other Nations. For what a miserable captiuity did they indure three or foure hundred yeeres in the land of Egypt, whilest the wicked Egyptians as their Lords and Masters flowrished in the world, & raigned and ruled ouer them? What miseries and afflictions did they suffer in the wildernesse fourty yeares together, as hunger, thirst, stinging and burning Serpents, and grieuous plagues, till all of them that came out of the land of Egypt sauing Caleb and Iosuah were vtterly destroyed? And after that by so great warres and troubles they were setled in the land of Canaan, how often were they in the time of the Iudges vanquished and made tributaries and slaues to their cruell enemies? What a miserable captiuity did they indure in Babilon seuenty yeeres together? And what oppressions and persecutions did they suffer vnder Antiochus, and afterwards vnder the Herods, for many yeares? so that the life of that whole state was but a continuall conflict with troubles and calamities, sauing that the Lord, now and then, gaue vnto them some little breathing time, wherby they renued their strength against the next combate and incounter. The which their lamentable condition, we may see notably described in the booke of the Iudges, and Kings, in the 44. 79. and 139. Psalmes, in the Lamentations of Ieremy and many other places of the old Testament, vnto which for breuity sake I referre the reader. And the like, yea much more miserable and afflicted was the condition of the Church after the ascension of Iesus Christ, not onely by reason of those persecutions raised against it by the malicious Iewes, but also those much more cruell and bloody persecutions vnder the heathenish Emperors, wherein many thousands of the godly Christians were murthered and massacred, and that not by ordinary deathes, but by the most exquisite tortures and torments which wit assisted with malice could inuent.

9. Sect. 9. That the scriptures fortell these afflictions of the faithfull.

By all which it appeareth that afflictions and tribulations in this World are the portion allotted both to the whole Church in generall, and to all the speciall members, euen euery particular faithfull man; and that the more neere and deere they haue beene vnto God, and the more that they were inriched with excellent vertues and sauing graces, the greater share and measure of crosses and miseries hath beene inflicted vpon them. The which needeth not to seeme strange vnto any, seeing these workes of God in the administration of his iudgements are so consonant and agreeable with his word, which sheweth that all Gods Saints and seruants are continually subject to these crosses and afflictions. For so our Sauiour saith, that whosoeuer will bee his Disciples, they must take vp their crosse daily and follow him: that all his faithfull ones shall weepe and lament, when as the world shall laugh and rejoyce; and that as many as he loueth he doth rebuke and chasten. And his holy Apostle telleth vs, that all who will liue godly in Christ Iesus shall suffer persecution: That whom God loueth he chasteneth, & scourgeth (not some but) euery son whom he receiueth; and therefore that if wee bee without correction, whereof all are partakers, then are wee bastards and not sonnes. And finally, that afflictions are the Kings roade and high-way, by which wee must trauell vnto the Kingdome of Heauen, if euer we purpose to come thither. And so the Apostle Peter comforting and strenghthening the faithfull vnto whom hee writeth in their tentations, telleth them that their estate was common with them vnto all Gods children, and that the same afflictions which they suffered were also accomplished in the rest of their brethren which are in the world. In which regard the sonne of Syrach, admonisheth vs, that if wee resolue to serue the Lord wee should also prepare our soules to indure tentations. Yea not onely are the Saints of God continually exercised with their owne afflictions, but they also communicate with the rest of the faithfull in their crosses and calamities, as being members of the same body; so as though it could bee imagined that they had no troubles or miseries of their owne, yet is their life much afflicted, by compassionating others in their afflictions, and partaking in their griefes. And both these are comprised together by the Apostle where hee saith, that the Hebrewes endured great afflictions, partly whilst they were made a gazing stock both by reproches and tribulations, and partly while they became companions of them which were so tossed to and fro. For both yee sorrowed with me for my bonds and suffered with ioy the spoiling of your goods, knowing in your selues that you haue in Heauen a better and an enduring substance. Vnto which duety euery Christian is bound not onely by vertue of their vnion with Christ, and of one of them with another as fellow members, but by an expresse commandement from God by his holy Apostle; Remember them that are in bonds, as though yee were bound with them, and them that are in affliction, as if you were afflicted in the body. And againe, Reioyce with them that reioyce, and weepe with them that weepe, be of like affection one towards another.

Luk 9.23. Iob.16.20. Apoc.3.19. 2.Tim.3.12. Heb.12.6,8. Act.14.22. 1.Pet.5.9. Eccles.2.1. Heb.10.33,34. Heb.13.3. Rom.12.15,16.

9. Sect. 10. That we may receiue much comfort by considering the

Seeing therefore crosses and afflictions haue from the very beginning of the world to this day beene the lot and portion of all Gods Saints, let this bee our comfort, that wee haue such and so many copartners of our our griefes, for it is better to hold our communion with them, though wee be followes also in their miseries, than being seuered from them to enjoy all manner of worldly prosperity. It is better to accompany them in the foule and afflicted way which leadeth to Gods Kingdome, it being the only knowne passage towards this heauenly City; than to goe alone in an vncouth way which hath not beene beaten and tracted by others of our godly Brethren who haue gone before vs, though it bee neuer so pleasing and delightfull. If trauailing towards a Towne we were assured by some man of credit that wee should goe vnto it by narrow and filthy Lanes, and that by no other meanes wee could come to the end of our journey, than by trauailing through them, wee would not rejoyce, if in our passage wee found only flowry sweet Medowes and a faire & Champion Country, because wee would conclude that because it was so contrary to our friends description, it could not bee the right way which would bring vs to the City: but Christ hath ascertained vs, that it is a narrow, foule and afflicted way that leadeth vs to the new Ierusalem; and by the Scriptures we are assured that Gods dearest Saints and Seruants haue trauelled by this way towards this heauenly City; so that wee haue no cause to bee dismayed if wee finde our passage such as Christ hath described it, and the Saints haue formerly tracted before vs, but rather wee should haue just cause to doubt and feare, if we found it faire and pleasant, lest wee were not in the right way that leadeth to blessednesse. For we are not better, yea, we are many degrees worser than the holy Patriarchs, Prophets and Apostles, and why then should wee expect to haue this priuiledge aboue them, that whereas they by many afflictions entred into the Kingdome of God, wee should hope to come thither by the faire broad way of worldly prosperity? Yea, rather let vs with patience trauaile in that way which they haue beaten before vs; let vs rejoyce & be glad if in our passage we may see the print of their footesteps, though it be in the mire and clay of trouble and affliction; seeing it is the greatest comfort and assurance of attayning vnto happinesse, when we haue such companions in our journey, or rather such precedents to lead vs the way. Let vs not thinke much to put our shoulders vnder that burthen which is borne by all, seeing it is not likely that we should sink vnder it, when as wee haue so many assistants and copartners. Let it be our comfort that in our afflicted estate wee be carried with the motion of the Vniverse, and haue all the whole Church either going before, accompanying, or following after vs. And let vs not take it ill if we sustaine that which is suffered by all: neither let vs falsly complaine that our burthen is heauier than other mens; seeing if wee compare our afflictions with those which haue beene formerly suffered by the Patriarches, Apostles, and Saints of God, their weight will appeare to be but a few ounces, to their many pounds; and if now (according to Socrates conceipt) all the faithfull should agree together to cast all their crosses and miseries into one heape, to the end that there might out of the whole bee an equall part shared to euery one, the most of those who came thither whining and complayning, would rather take againe their owne burthen which they brought, and goe their way, than yeeld to haue a share in that proportionable diuision. Finally, let vs not onely looke to those afflictions which other of Gods Saints haue suffered before vs, but consider with what comfort and patience, yea, with what thanksgiuing and rejoycing they haue sustained and endured them; and so shal wee plainly see that our murmuring and repining proceedeth not from the waight of these crosses, seeing they haue borne far heauier with comfort & contentment, but from our own impotency & impatiency of bearing the lightest burthen. For as all meates and drinkes seeme bitter, clammy and distastfull to him who is sicke of a burning Feuer; but yet when he seeth those who are in health to feed hungerly and with a good stomacke on such things as his appetite loatheth and abhorreth, then in his reason and discretion he imputeth not the vnsauourinesse to the meate and drinke, but to the nature of his disease and his owne distemper: so when we behold other of Gods Saints bearing farre greater afflictions than those which wee suffer with comfort and rejoycing, wee will no more complaine of our intolerable burthen, but of our owne impotency and impatiency which more vexe vs than our load.

Patienter abvno sustinendum est quod multis accidit, Beroal. de modo viuendi, cap. 42. Plutarch. de consol. ad Apol.

Q. Sect. 11. A consolation for those who complaine that they are afflicted for their grieuous sins.

But here the afflicted sinner may obiect, that this comparing of the crosses and calamities of the Patriarches and Apostles with those which hee suffereth can bring vnto him no patience or comfort, because they were holy men of God, who suffered in their innocency, for their tryall, and the manifestation of Gods graces in them; and therefore no maruell if they bore their crosses with joy and thanksgiuing; whereas they being grieuous sinners are afflicted for their transgressions, and besides doe shew many corruptions and much wickednesse whilest the hand of God lyeth heauy vpon them. To which I answere, that the fire of affliction serueth not only to try & proue vs, but also to refine and purifie vs; neither are our crosses and calamities onely exercises for those which are strong and in health, but also Physicke to purge those of the corrupt humours of sinne, who are spiritually sicke; and therefore wee may well beare them with patience and comfort fort, if they either find vs purified and so only try vs, or make vs more pure by burning away our drosse; if either they exercise our graces, that they may be increased and wee preserved in our spirituall health; or purge away the corruptions of sinne that our soules may be recouered out of their dangerous diseases: If either they finde vs in the way of righteousnesse and keepe vs in it, or going astray in the by-wayes of sinne, doe reduce vs into a right course, making vs more carefull in the vse of all good meanes for the mortifying of our corruptions, and the renewing of vs vnto holinesse and newnesse of life. Besides wee are to know that howsoeuer those Saints and Seruants of God were holy and righteous, yet had they the reliques of sinne and the corruption of nature remayning in them, as well as we, although not in so great a measure and degree; and that they also shewed many infirmities and corruptions in their afflictions both by impatiency in bearing them, and in vsing vnlawfull meanes to be freed from them, as it may easily appeare to those who are but a little conuersant in the holy Scriptures. And therefore if being like vnto them in afflictions, we be also like, yea, superiour vnto them in sinne, frailty and humane weaknesse; this should not dismay and discourage vs, if with them wee see our corruptions; and dislike, bewayle and labour against them, vsing the meanes whereby they may be mortified and subdued. Yea, rather the more wee exceed them in these spirituall diseases, and the more wee abound in the drosse of sinne, the more should be our patience in vsing the medicines which God hath prescribed for the curing of our dangerous sicknesses; and the greater should be our joy and rejoycing when as God purgeth and purifieth vs in this furnace of afflictions, from so much drosse and rust of sinne and corruption, euen as he hath more cause of rejoycing, who is cured of the plague, and healed of griesly wounds and deepe festered sores, than another who is recouered of a gentle Ague, or hath his finger cured of a little cut.

CHAP. XXX.

That wee may receiue much comfort by comparing our light and small afflictions, with those grieuous and intolerable punishments which Christ suffered for vs.

§. Sect. 1. Of the manifold miseries and afflictions which Christ suffered both in his life and death.

AND thus may we comfort our selues by comparing our lesser and lighter crosses and afflictions with those greater and heauier which the deerest Saints and Seruants of God haue formerly suffered: but much more may we strengthen our patience and repleniſh our hearts with consolation, yea with spirituall joy and rejoycing, if we compare our miseries and tribulations, with those greater afflictions and calamities which were sustained by Iesus Christ our Lord and King; in respect of whose sufferings wee may truly say, that our greatest crosses are but small sparkes of that fiery furnace into which he was cast; and but a few after-drops of that cruell tempest and storme of Gods wrath, which with full violence did beate vpon him. For as hee neuer (that we know of) laughed in the World; so neuer did the World so much as smile vpon him; vnlesse it were with some false fauour to make ensuing disgraces and injuries more grieuous and intolerable: yea, contrariwise from the day of his birth to the day of his death, it pursued him with deadly malice, and heaped vpon him miseries and indignities. For though this Rod and Graffe springing from the stocke of Ishai, were glorious in his rest, as the Prophet speaketh, when he was come to the top of his perfection, couering and shadowing all the Gentiles vnder his patronage and protection, as the Apostle expoundeth it; yet (as else-where the same Prophet saith) hee was in his first growth, as a branch springing from a root in a dry and barren ground, hauing in him neither forme nor beauty, so that those who should behold him, would see no forme in him that they should desire him. Yea, he further addeth, that he should be, as one despised and reiected of men, a man full of sorrowes, hauing experience of infirmities, so as they should hide their faces from him, and not esteeme him. So the Apostle saith, that though he were the Prince of our saluation, yet God thought it good to consecrate him to this office by afflictions; and that though he were the Sonne of God, yet learned hee obedience by the things which he suffered. And himselfe affirmeth, that it behoued him to haue suffered all those miseries of his life, and afterwards a cursed death, before hee could enter into his glory. Now what and how great these miseries and afflictions were, it will easily appeare, if we take a view of the whole course of his life. For in his birth hee had a common Inne for his Kingly Palace, a Stable for his Chamber, a Manger for his Cradle, and the Horses and bruit Beasts for his Chamber-fellowes. In his infancy before he could goe he is constrained to flee into Egypt, that his life might bee preserued from cruell Herod, who thirsted after his bloud. In his youth he taketh paines in that poore occupation of his supposed Father Ioseph, as appeareth by the question of the people; Is not this the Carpenter, Maries sonne? In his whole life hee was subject to all humane infirmities and afflictions which are generally incident vnto all men, as heate and cold, Esay 11.1,10. Rom. 15.12. Esay 53.2,3. Heb. 2.10,5.8. Luke 24.26. Marke 6.3.

cold, hunger and thirst, wearinesse and pouerty. Yea so poore he was, that he liued by Almes, and had not the priuiledge of poore Foxes, and silly Birds, For the Foxes haue their holes, and the Birds their nests, but the Sonne of man had not whereon to lay his head. But especially was our Sauiour pinched and pressed with miseries and afflictions, when he began to execute his office, and to worke the worke of our redemption. For he fasted forty dayes, and hungred for want of necessary food; he is grieuously assaulted with Sathans powerfull and subtill tentations, and getteth not the victory without a painfull conflict. Hee spendeth his life in doing well and hearing euill; he doth workes of mercy, and is maliciously censured; hee teacheth the truth, and hardly escapeth outward violence: his friends enuiously back-bite him, his enemies maliciously slander him; and he who being the power of God, did admirable miracles by his onely Word, is accused to worke them by Belzebub the Prince of Deuils. He cannot speake, but they are ready to intrap him, and out of the words of life and saluation, they are ready to gather matter of his death and destruction. Hee is reprochfully called a Wine-bibber, a Glutton, an Impostor, a Deceiuer, a Samaritan, a Sinner, and being the onely true and naturall Sonne of God, he is said to be possessed with a Deuill. Hee is betrayed of his owne Apostle, and apprehended with swords and staues, as if he were an hainous malefactour. Hee is bound who came to set vs at liberty, and to redeeme vs out of the cruell bondage of Sinne and Sathan; and arraigned before a mortall, yea wicked man, being the Lord Chiefe Iustice of Heauen and Earth. Hee who is Truth it selfe is falsly accused, comming to be our Aduocate to pleade our cause and excuse vs to Gods justice; and is vnjustly condemned being innocent and full of all vertue and goodnesse. Hee is mocked and scorned, rated and reuiled, blind-folded and buffetted; he is shamefully spit vpon, who with his spittle had healed and recouered the eyes of the blind; and a bloudy Murtherer preferred before the holy and righteous. Hee is cruelly whipped, as though he were some Rogue or Runnagate, and his blessed Head is crowned with sharpe pricking thornes, vnto whom of right belonged the Crowne of glory. Hee hath a Purple Robe in derision put vpon him, and a reed in his hand instead of a Scepter, and so he is scornfully saluted as a King in a May-game, who is the soueraigne Monarch of Heauen and Earth: The Lord of life is adjudged to death, yea, the shamefull and cursed death of the Crosse, and hee who is most innocent and righteous is crucified betweene two theeues as though he were the greatest Malefactour. The which kinde of death as it is exceeding painfull to all that suffer it, because the hands and the feet being aboue all other parts most sensible of torment, by reason that they abound with nerues and sinnewes the instruments of sense and feeling, were pierced and nailed to the Crosse; and because the tortures though sharp and bitter, are yet also long and lingering; so especially (as some probably judge) to our Sauiour; (for whereas all the powers and faculties of our bodies and soules are by reason of sinne, and the corruption of our nature dulled and deaded, and our senses among the rest; the body of our Sauiour Christ as it was most pure and free from sinne, so was it most quicke and perfect in all these faculties, and consequently most sensible of smart and paine. And thus also instead of drinke to quench his thirst, they giue him Vineger mingled with Gall; and in stead of sweet comforts in the terrours of death, they wag their heads, flout and deride him, saying; Thou that destroyest the Temple, and buildest it in three dayes, saue thy selfe, if thou be the Sonne of God, come downe from the crosse. He saued others, but hee cannot saue himselfe, if hee bee the King of Israel, let him now come downe from the crosse, and wee will beleeue in him. He trusted in God, let him deliuer him now, if he will haue him, for he said I am the Sonne of God. But among all the torments which he suffered, not any one nor all together are to bee compared with those tortures of his soule, when as he bore the vnsupportable waight of Gods anger due to our sinnes, which brought him into a grieuous agony, and pressed out of him in the Garden, those clots of bloud in stead of sweat, and vpon the Crosse that rufull cry; my God, my God, why hast thou forsaken mee. By all which it manifestly appeareth, that there is an incompasable difference between Christs and our greatest sufferings, and that our afflictions being compared vnto his, are but a drop to the Ocean, a flea-bite to the sting of Scorpions, and a little fillip to the torturing Racke. It is true indeed, that wee and hee drinke of the like cup, and the like ingredients, but like in quality, not in quantitie; for his cup was large and deepe, like that cup of which Ezechiel speaketh; ours small and shallow. His cup was bitter through the terrours of Gods wrath which hee apprehended, ours is sweetned through the mixture of spirituall comforts. Hee drunke a deepe draught, and (as it were) the lower most dregs of Gods fierce wrath, we (as it were) drinke of the vppermost part of the potion, and doe onely but sip and taste of it; to him this draught was like a deadly poyson which caused death, to vs it is but a Physicall medicine, which by purging away the corrupt humours of sinne, preserueth our spirituall life, and furthereth vs in attayning vnto life euerlasting.

Matth.27.38, 39,40.

Matth.27.46.

Ezech.23.32.

Sect. 2. That Chriſt ſuffered all theſe miſeries and afflictions being iuſt and innocent. Eſay 53.9. 1.*Pet.*2.22. 1.Iohn 3.5.

Cur ita aſperum creditur vt à Deo homo toleret flagella pro malis; ſi tanta Deus ab hominibus pertulit mala pro bonis, Greg. paſtoral. part.1.cap.13.

Auguſt. in Pſal. 40. enarr.

And theſe with many other miſeries and afflictions Chriſt our Head ſuffered in the World, being moſt innocent, juſt and holy; for as the Prophet ſpeaketh, hee made his graue with the wicked, though he had done no wickednesse, neither was any deceit in his mouth. So the Apoſtle Peter ſaith, that in him was no ſinne, and in his mouth there was found no guile. And the Apoſtle Iohn affirmeth, that he appeared, that he might take away our ſinnes, and that in him was no ſinne. And therefore as one ſaith, if he departed not out of the World without correction, who came into it without corruption, how much more are wee to expect ſtripes, who by our ſinnes haue ſo often deſerued them? And why ſhould it be thought hard, that man ſhould be afflicted by God for ſo many euils, ſeeing God ſuffered ſo many euils at the hands of men, onely for doing good? Or who in his right wits can vngratefully complaine of his correction, if he eſcaped not the whip, who neuer was tainted with the leaſt corruption? And as another ſaith, if Chriſt were content to bee lanced and ſeared who had in him no putrefaction, and if he who is our medicine, refuſed not the medicinall fire and burning iron, much more ought we to endure patiently the hand of our heauenly Chirurgion lancing, ſearing and ſearching our feſtered ſores of ſin with afflictions and tribulations, that hee may heale and cure vs. And therefore let vs wholy commit our ſelues into the hands of our Phyſicion, for he cannot erre in miſapplying his medicines to the ſound fleſh, in ſtead of rotten and putrified, ſeeing hee who made nature muſt needs know the faults and defects of nature, and what imperfections are come vnto it through our concupiſcence and corruption. He knoweth that he gaue a commandement to man in his perfect health, that he ſhould not run a courſe which would bring him to ſickneſs, ſaying vnto him in Paradiſe; Eat of this, & this forbeare: but whole man harkned not to the preſcript of his Phyſicion, that hee might not fall; and therefore now at leaſt let him hearken vnto him, that hee may riſe againe and recouer health.

Sect. 3. That Chriſt being righteous in himſelfe, ſuffered all theſe afflictions for vs who are ſinners.

But let vs further conſider, that Chriſt in himſelfe juſt and innocent, ſuffered all theſe miſeries for vs, who were dead in our ſinnes, the children of wrath, ſtrangers, yea, enemies vnto God and his grace, that by theſe his ſufferings hee might ſatisfie Gods juſtice in bearing that puniſhment which we had deſerued, juſtifie vs by his righteouſneſſe and obedience, and reconcile vs vnto his Father, and ſo might not only free vs from the euerlaſting torments of Hell fire, which was the merit of our ſinnes; but alſo might by the wood of his Croſſe ſweeten theſe bitter waters, pull out the ſting of our temporary afflictions, and ſo not only make them harmeleſſe, but alſo good and profitable. For by his holy and innocent ſufferings hee hath ſo ſanctified all our afflictions, that our pouerty is made the way to riches, our ſhame to glory, our puniſhments to euerlaſting pleaſures, our curſe to bleſſings, and euen our death it ſelfe to euerlaſting life and happines. So the Prophet Eſay witneſſeth, that hee hath borne our infirmities, and carried our ſorrowes, hee was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, he was broken for our iniquities, the chaſtiſement of our peace was vpō him, & with his ſtripes we are healed. And the Apoſtle Peter affirmeth that his own ſelfe bare our ſins in his body on the tree, that being deliuered from ſin we ſhould liue in righteouſneſſe. If therefore Iacob, ſeeing his ſonne Ioſephs coat imbrued with his bloud, was ſo wholy taken vp with ſorrow, that he had no place left for any other, this greater grief making all the reſt eaſie & inſenſible: how much more when wee ſee our deare Sauiours body imbrued with bloud, torn with nailes & pierced with a ſpeare, yea, crucified & tormented thus with our grieuous ſins, which cauſed & made way for al other tortures, ſhould we be ſo wholy poſſeſſed with this griefe & mourning, that we ſhould be ſcarce ſenſible of any worldly ſorrow, but beare all earthly troubles & afflictions with patience & comfort? Eſpecially conſidering further that hee willingly ſuffered for our ſakes all thoſe afflictions, torments, and death it ſelfe, with all meekneſſe and patience; for though (as the Prophet ſpeaketh) hee were oppreſſed, and afflicted, yet he did not open his mouth, but was brought as a ſheepe to the ſlaughter, and as a ſheepe before her ſhearer is dumbe, ſo opened he not his mouth. And as the Apoſtle ſaith, when he was reuiled, he reuiled not againe, when he ſuffered he threatned not, but committed it to him that iudgeth righteouſly. Yea, ſo meeke was our Sauiour in all his ſufferings, that when hee was ſo horribly abuſed, mocked, buffeted, ſpit on, ſcorned, whipped, and crucified, he did not ſhew the leaſt ſigne of impatiency, he refuſeth not the murthering kiſſe of a knowne Traytour, hee healeth the eare of him who came to apprehend him; hee is falſly accuſed and maketh no apology, yea, hee excuſeth and prayeth vnto his Father for his bloudy perſecutors; father (ſaith hee) forgiue them they know not what they doe. All which he did for our ſakes, not onely to perfect the worke of our Redemption, but alſo to leaue vs an example, that wee might follow his ſteps. For if Chriſt ſuffered patiently ſuch great miſeries and indignities for our ſakes himſelfe being innocent, what troubles and afflictions, what croſſes and miſeries ſhould wee be content with all meekneſſe to beare for his ſake and at his appointment, being guilty ſinners who haue deſerued eternal condemnation? Eſpecially conſidering that by his bleſſed ſufferings hee hath ſo ſeaſoned and ſanctified all our worldly tribulations, that Eſay 53.4.5.

1.*Pet.*2.24.

Eſay 53.7.

1.*Pet.*2.23.

Luke 23.34.

1.*Pet.*2.24.

that they are become harmeleſſe and without ſting, yea, wholſome, happy, and the meanes of bleſſedneſſe. If hee for the loue that he bare vnto vs thought not his precious life to good to giue it vnto his Father as the price of our Redemption, how ready ſhould wee bee in lue of thankfulneſſe to forſake wealth and health, houſe and lands, kindred and friends, yea, life it ſelfe at his appointment? To which purpoſe one hath a ſingular meditation; If (ſaith he) I wholy owe my ſelfe vnto God for my creation, what ſhall I now giue him for my reſtauration, eſpecially being reſtored after this manner? Neither was I ſo eaſily reſtored as I was created. For he did but ſay the word & I was made, but he that made me by ſpeaking the word only, for my reſtoring both ſpake many things, and wrought wonders, & ſuffred hardnes, & not only hardnes, but things vnworthy of him. What therfore ſhal I return vnto the Lord for all the benefits which he hath beſtowed vpon me? In his firſt worke hee gaue me vnto my ſelfe; in his ſecond, hee hath giuen himſelfe vnto mee, and by giuing himſelfe hath reſtored mee vnto my ſelfe. Being therefore giuen and reſtored, I owe my ſelfe for my ſelfe, and ſo owe my ſelfe vnto God by a double right. But what ſhall I render vnto God for giuing himſelfe vnto me? For though I could giue my ſelfe a thouſand times for recompence, what am I in compariſon of him?

And if wee be not thus willing and ready to ſuffer afflictions for Chriſts ſake, and to beare the Croſſe at his appointment, wee are not worthy of him, nor to bee eſteemed among his Seruants and Diſciples: for if hee, being the glorious ſonne of the eternall God, was content for our ſakes to abaſe himſelfe, to refuſe all worldly glory and riches, and to ſuffer moſt grieuous miſeries, pouerty and contempt, ignominy and diſgrace, yea, the cruell, curſed, and ſhamefull death of the Croſſe, and the wrath of his Father, much more fearefull and intolerable than all the reſt; then are we vnworthy to be acknowledged for his, if being poore wormes and ſinfull wretches, wee ſhould be ſo vngratefull for thoſe inеſtimable paines ſuſtained for vs, as not to be willing to ſuffer what it ſhall pleaſe our Sauiour Chriſt to impoſe vpon vs, ſeeing our load is light, in compariſon of his vnſupportable burthen; or to grudge to drink of that cup which hee hath prepared for vs, himſelfe hauing drunke it to the bottome, eſpecially conſidering it was to him a deadly potion; but vnto vs a Phyſicall Medicine, and an wholeſome reſtoratiue, tending to the preſeruing or recouering of our ſpirituall health. So our Sauiour plainly ſaith, He that loueth father or mother more than mee, is not worthy of mee; and hee that loueth ſonne or daughter more than me, is not worthy of me; And he that taketh not his croſſe, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me. And againe, If any man will follow mee, let him forſake himſelfe and take vp his croſſe and follow me: For whoſoeuer will ſaue his life, ſhall looſe it, and whoſoeuer ſhall loſe his life for my ſake, ſhall find it: and what will it profit a man, if he ſhall winne the whole world, and looſe his owne ſoule? Or what ſhall a man giue for recompence of his ſoule? And elſewhere, whoſoeuer hee be of you that forſaketh not all hee hath (that is, hath not a diſpoſition of forſaking all when I require it) he cannot be my Diſciple. Hee that will ſerue a Maſter, muſt make profeſſion thereof by wearing his liuery, but the Croſſe is the liuery and cognizance of Chriſt, which that his followers might not ſcorne nor grudge to put it on, himſelfe firſt bore and wore it. Haman thought it the greateſt honour that could be done vnto a ſubject, that hee ſhould bee worthy to weare the Kings apparell. The Souldier thinkes himſelfe much honoured, when his Generall admitts him to weare his colours, and to goe into the field in his owne armes; and Ionathan when hee would ſhew his greateſt loue towards Dauid, and how much he eſteemed of him, he puts vpon him his owne Roabe and Garments, his Sword, Bow and Girdle: but theſe afflictions are the bloudy colours of our great Commander, this red apparell, and theſe Garments ſprinkled with bloud, were ſuch as himſelfe wore whileſt he dwelled on earth, as the Prophet witneſſeth; In this bloudy armes he fought and vanquiſhed Sathan and ſinne, with all the enemies of our ſaluation: And therefore let vs thinke it no diſgrace, yea, let vs eſteeme it our higheſt honour, and a great teſtimony of our Lord and Sauiours greateſt loue, when he thinketh vs worthy to weare his colours, to be clothed in his owne apparell, and in his owne armes to fight againſt the enemies of our ſaluation.

Finally, let vs conſider that whomſoeuer God hath preordained to bee like vnto his Sonne in glory, hee hath alſo preordained, that he ſhould firſt beare his Image in afflictions, as the Apoſtle tels vs; that before we can be exalted to ſit with Chriſt in his Kingdome, wee muſt firſt drinke with him in his bitter cup, as himſelfe ſpeaketh to his beloued Apoſtles; that before wee are called of God to enter into his joyes, wee are firſt called to ſuffer tribulation, for Chriſt alſo ſuffered for vs leauing vs an example that wee ſhould follow his ſteps, as Peter affirmeth; that if we will be heires with Chriſt, we muſt firſt ſuffer with him, that we may alſo be glorified with him, as Paul joyneth them. And finally, that though Chriſt of his infinite grace, being rich for our ſakes became poore, that through his pouerty wee might bee made rich, yet theſe ſpirituall and heauenly treaſures are beſtowed vpon none, but vpon thoſe, who being humbled with ſorrowes and afflictions

Q. Sect. 3. That God hath preordained thoſe to be like Chriſt in his ſufferings, who ſhal be like vnto him in glory.

Mat. 16.24,25
Luke 14.33.
Heſt. 6.8.
1. Sam. 18.4.
Eſay 63.1,3. Heb. 2.14.
Rom. 8.29. Mat 20.22,23 1. Pet. 2.21.
Rom. 8.17.
2. Cor. 8.9.

are poore in spirit, as himselfe teacheth vs. And therefore the holy Apostle preparing vs for this glory and aduancement, doth exhort vs to let the same minde be in vs which was in Iesus Christ, who being in the forme of God, made himselfe of no reputation, but tooke vpon him the forme of a seruant, and humbled himselfe and became obedient vnto the death, euen the death of the Crosse. So that if wee will feast with Christ in Heauen wee must fast with him on earth; if wee will eat with him at his Table of the Bread of life, and (as hee speaketh) drinke wine with him in his Kingdome, wee must in this worldly prison and pilgrimage, eate with him of the bread of affliction, and drinke of the water of sorrow; and here wee must labour and trauell whilest these working-dayes of life last, if there we would keep an euerlasting Sabbath; and worke in the Vineyard, if we will at the euening, receiue that penny and wages of eternall happinesse. To this purpose one saith, Thou, O Lord Iesu, art vnto me both an example and reward of suffering, and both doe strongly prouoke, and vehemently inflame mee; thou teachest my hands to fight by the example of thy fortitude, and after victory thou crownest my head with the presence of thy Majesty; and therefore whether I see thee fighting, or expect thee to crowne mee, or rather as the crowne of my glory, in both thou dost wonderfully allure me, and both is a chaine vnresistable to draw mee. Pull mee then after thee, and I will gladly follow thee, but more gladly enjoy thee; for if thou beest so good, O Lord, to those that seek and runne after thee, what wilt thou be to those who find and possesse thee? And this is very consonant, and agreeable with reason, that none should raigne with Christ, but those who haue first suffered with him: For the Disciple is not aboue his Master, nor the Seruant aboue his Lord: it is enough for the Disciple to be as his Master is, and the Seruant as his Lord. If they haue called the Master of the house Belzebub, how much more them of the houshold? If they haue done these things to a greene tree, what shall be done to a dry? And our Sauiour telleth all his Disciples, that as the men of the World had persecuted him, so they would also persecute them. The adopted sonnes of God are not to bee preferred before the naturall sonne, who is the chiefe of the Family: it is sufficient, and a wonderfull fauour, if they be admitted to any equality. And therefore if the Prince of our saluation, was consecrated by afflictions, and by his grieuous and manifold sufferings entred into his glory, why should we expect a priuiledge aboue him? It is not sutable and fit that an afflicted head should haue a pampered body and members euen languishing in ease and delicacy. It becommeth not the seruant to liue in idlenesse and pleasure, when as the Master weareth himselfe with paines and labour; nor that the Souldier should be in Garison, faring daintily and lying soft, when as the Captaine is in the field, induring all hardnesse, and exposing himselfe to innumerable dangers. And therefore seeing our Head Christ was crowned with pricking Thornes, let not vs his members expect to be crowned with worldly glory; Seeing our Master hath taken such paines in our worke, and for our sake, and our great Commander hath so couragiously encountred our enemies, fighting vnto bloud, and losing his precious life, that wee might obtaine the victory: let vs his Seruants and Souldiers inure our selues with patience to sustaine any labour, and attempt any seruice, though neuer so dangerous, which hee appointeth, that ouercomming, wee may also triumph with him in glory and happinesse.

But this (alas) is aboue the strength and courage which we haue by nature, whereof it commeth to passe that howsoeuer many would gladly be conformable with Christ in glory, yet few would be like vnto him in afflictions; many would bee partakers of his crowne, but few are content to beare his Crosse; many would follow him to eate of his bread, but few are willing to drinke of his cup; many would triumph in his glory, but few are couragious and constant in fighting his Battailes: Finally, many would gladly goe vnto Heauen; but they are vtterly vnwilling to follow Christ in the same way; they would ascend with Christ gloriously from Mount Oliuet in the presence of their friends, but they will not first accompany him to Mount Caluary ignominiously to suffer with him in the middest of their enemies. But as one saith, if thou wilt be a Disciple, it is thy duty to follow thy master; now if hee went by affliction vnto his kingdome, and thou wilt goe thither by ease and prosperity, thou refusest his way and choosest another, and therefore how wilt thou not following follow him? how wilt thou bee called his Disciple, seeing thou art not content to walke in his steps? If (as the Apostle speaketh) thou wilt know him and the vertue of his resurrection, thou must first haue fellowship with him in his afflictions, and bee made conformable vnto his death, that by any meanes thou mayest attaine vnto the resurrection of the dead. Which that we may doe with patience and comfort, let vs often meditate on those afflictions and miseries which our Lord and Sauiour Iesus Christ (being the eternall son of God, & so dearely beloued, that in him alone he is well pleased) hath suffered for vs. As for example, when we are in pouerty and pinched with worldly wants, let vs remember that the Lord of Heauen and Earth, was for our sakes so de-

Phil.2.5.6.7.

Bernard. super Cantica, Ser.47.

Math.24.25.

Luke 23.37.

Iohn 15.20.

Luke 24.26.

9. Sect. 6. That many would willingly raigne with Christ, but few are content to suffer with him.

Chrysost. in Heb. 12. Homil. 28. in mat.

Phil.3.10.11.

1. Mach.

destitute of earthly comforts, that he had not an house to hide his head in. When we are injuriously traduced and vnjustly slandered, let vs call to minde that our Sauiour, who was the Lamb without spot, most innocent and full of all goodnesse, was called a wine bibber, a friend to publicans and sinners, an impostor, and one who did all his miracles by the helpe of Beelzebub the prince of diuels. When we are ill requited by those of whō we haue wel deserued, forsaken by our friends in the time of our need, & betraied by those who stand obliged vnto vs by many benefits; let vs think with our selues, that our deare Lord was thus vsed before vs; for those sought his destruction whom hee came to saue; his disciples & followers forsake him and flie away in his greatest extremity; and one whom he had dignified with the honour of an Apostle, and among all the men of the world had chosen for one of the twelue, and honoured with his chiefe seruice and choise preferments, doth in lue of all his benefits, plot his ruine, and betrayeth him into the cruell hands of his blood-thirsty enemies. Finally are wee disgracefully apprehended, haled to the judgement seat, falsly accused, vnjustly condemned, buffeted, whipped, mocked, scorned, and adjudged to die a shamefull and painfull death? let vs comfort our selues with this consideration, that the onely Sonne of God, who aboue all others was most deare to his heauenly Father, did suffer these and many other miseries, and hath seasoned and sweetned these bitter waters, by bathing in them his most blessed Body. And to conclude, are we not onely thus afflicted in our bodies and states, but also in our soules much vexed and troubled, with the tentations of Sathan and the world, with the burthen of sinne, and the apprehension of Gods wrath and terrors of death and hell? then let vs strengthen and refresh our fainting hearts with this meditation, that Christ himselfe was thus tempted, that he bore at once the burthen, not of one mans sinne alone, but of all the faithful and elect, and did not onely (like vs) taste and sip of the Wine of Gods wrath, but did drink the very dregs thereof euen to the bottome. As therefore they were accustomed to prouoke Elephants vnto the fight, by shewing them the blood of Grapes or Mulberies: so let vs encourage our selues to fight couragiously against worldly afflictions, that wee may with patience conquer and ouercome them, by looking on the afflictions, miseries and wounds of our Sauiour, and vpon those streames of blood which so abundantly flowed from his head and shoulders, hands and feet, and lastly from that precious fountaine of his pierced heart. For as one saith, Wee will with ease beare our light and little afflictions, if wee would but consider what greater things hee suffered for vs vpon his crosse who inuiteth vs vnto Heauen. From thence as out of a pulpit he powerfully preacheth a sermon of patience, and effectually perswadeth vs to suffer a little for him, who for vs hath suffered so much. For as the Physition cannot vse a stronger reason to moue his patient to take a loathed and suspected potion, than when before him (to shew that there is no hurt or danger in it) he is content not only to taste his medicine, but to drinke a much stronger of the same kinde in a double quantity; so there cannot bee a more effectuall motiue to perswade vs to drinke of Christs bitter cup, than when wee consider, that he himselfe hath not only begun to vs, but hath drunke a farre greater measure, and the very dregs thereof euen to the bottome. And thus the Apostle perswading vs with patience to run in the afflicted race that is set before vs, doth will vs to looke vnto Iesus the author and finisher of our faith, who for the ioy that was set before him, endured the crosse, and despised the shame, and is set at the right hand of the throne of God; & to consider him that indured such speaking against of sinners, least wee should be wearied and faint in our minds. And thus our Sauiour armed his disciples against the hatred of the world, by putting them in minde that it hated him first. And an holy father exhorteth vs, with patience to suffer afflictions, encouraging our selues by Christs example; Drinke (saith hee) O thou sicke man, this bitter potion, that being diseased thou mayst recouer health. Feare not to take it, seeing to free thee from this feare, thy Physition hath begunne vnto thee and drunke a full draught of his bitter passion. Hee drunke vnto thee who hauing no sinne, had nothing in him that needed curing; refuse not then to pledge him who art sicke in sinne, and being full of corrupt humours, needest purging; but bee content to drinke till the bitternesse of this world passing away, that happy time shall come, wherein there shall bee neither feuer nor consumption. Let vs therefore in all our afflictions set before vs the sufferings of our innocent Sauiour which he endured with all meekenesse for our sakes, saying with Thomas when we heare of his death, Let vs also goe that we may die with him. Let vs looke vpon our great Commander fasting, watching, and fighting vnto blood, in the middest of the royall army of his Saints; and say with Vriah, My Lord Iesus, and the seruants of my Lord abide in the open fields; and shall I goe to my house, eate, drinke, and take my pleasure? And when we are stung with these fiery serpents of affliction let vs cast vp our eyes vnto the true brazen serpent Iesus Christ, hanging vpon his crosse, and this will heale vs and mitigate the heat of our impati-

Parua tolerabimus, si recordemur quid biberet ad patibulum, qui nos inuitat ad cœlum. Cassian. super psalmos.

Heb. 12. 1. 2. 3.

Iohn 15. 20.

Bibe, æger calicem amarum vt sanus fis, cui non sunt sana viscera. Noli trepidare quia ne trepidares prior bibit medicus &c. August. in Psalm. 48.

Iohn 11. 16.

2 Sam. 11. 11.

impatiency: Yea this consideration will enable vs, not only to beare all our crosses, with patience and comfort, but also (with Paul) to reioyce in our suffrings in that wee doe fulfill the rest of the afflictions of Christ in our flesh for his bodies sake which is the Church. The which also the Apostle Peter requireth of vs; Reioyce (saith hee) in as much as ye are partakers of Christs sufferings, that when his glory shall appeare yee may bee glad and reioyce. For wee shall bee heires with him in his glory if wee be copartners with him in his afflictions, and if wee suffer with him wee shall also raigne with him, as the Apostle teacheth vs.

Col.1.24.

1.Pet.4.13.

Rom.8.17.

2.Tim.2.12.

CHAP. XXXI.

That we may much comfort our selues by comparing our afflictions with the punishments of the wicked, from which Christ hath freed vs.

1. Sect. 1. Of the manifold and great miseries which worldlings suffer, for the attaining vnto earthly vanities.

AND thus may wee comfort our selues in our crosses and miseries, by comparing them with those much more grieuous afflictions, which the holy Saints of God, yea, our Sauiour Christ himselfe, the onely begotten and dearely beloued of his Father, haue suffered before vs: Now in the second place let vs compare our crosses and calamities which wee find in the straight way that leadeth vnto life eternall, with those troubles and miseries which worldly wicked men meete with, whilest they labour to satisfie their earthly desires, in the fruition of meere trifles and worldly vanities; and that both in respect of this life and the life to come. In this life they purchase the things which they set their hearts vpon at such deare prizes, that none in their right wits would enuy their bargaine, or desire their penny-worth, if they did but know how deare they cost them. For to say nothing of their spirituall punishments, which like furies continually haunt them, as the wrath of God inflamed and inraged against them, for their grosse crimes and grieuous wickednesse committed by them, whilest they seeke by vngodly meanes to compasse their desires, which their guiltinesse maketh them often to apprehend, and must needs bee most terrible when it is apprehended; the affrighting terrours of an euill conscience, which night and day, alone and in company, doe continually pursue them (as it were) with an Hue-an-cry. The dreadfull expectation of Gods terrible judgments, which daily hang ouer their heads in this life, and the day of death, which they know not how soone it will approach, and take them from all their worldly delights and comforts, which they loue more dearely than their owne soules, and hale them, will they, nill they, before Gods fearefull tribunall seate, there to receiue the sentence of condemnation, whereby they shall bee adjudged to those euerlasting torments of Hell fire. To let passe, I say, these spirituall plagues and punishments of wicked worldlings (which notwithstanding are incomparably greater than all the afflictions and miseries which are possibly incident vnto any faithfull man or sound Christian) how great are the corporall and outward miseries which they willingly vndertake and suffer, being hyred with bare hopes of attaining vnto worldly vanities? How doe they spend themselues, weaken their strength, hazard their health, wearie, and euen weare out their bodies with toyle and labour, for the obtaining of earthly trifles? Yea, how doe they tyre themselues in the workes wickednesse, thinking no danger too dangerous, no paines too painfull which they vndergoe and take, for the fruition of their sinfull pleasures; by their worldly and temporary torments, making way and preparing themselues, for those which are endlesse and euerlasting? So the Prophet speaking of the wicked of his times, saith, That they taught their tongues to speake lies, and tooke great paines to doe wickedly. And in the booke of Wisdome they are brought in complaining, that they had wearied themselues in the way of wickednesse and destruction, going through deserts where there lay no way; & so passing through worldly torments into the torments of Hel. The which is noted by the Prophet, as a fearefull judgment of God vpon them. Behold (saith he) is it not of the Lord of hoasts, that the people shall labour in the very fire, and wearie themselues for very vanity? For whereas the faithfull by their many tribulations doe enter into the Kingdome of Heauen; these professed Martyrs of the World, doe by as great troubles and miseries enter into the Kingdome of darknesse, and by their temporarie paines, make purchase of euerlasting punishments.

Ier.9.5.

Wis.5.7.

Habac.2.13.

2. Sect. 2. Examples of heathen men patiently induring great afflictions for the compassing of the earthly desires.

But for the better clearing of this point, let vs consider of the examples both of former ages, and of our owne present times; and wee shall plainely see that the miseries which worldlings haue and doe sustaine, are no lesse grieuous, and incomparably more vncomfortable than those which the faithfull endure in their way to Gods Kingdome, they being depriued of the present consolations of Gods holy Spirit, and the hope of future happinesse, the want whereof maketh the lightest burthen of affliction heauie and intolerable, euen as their presence doth make the heauiest and most bitter, light and sweet. For what afflictions doe the Saints suffer for God and his Kingdome; which euen meere heathen heathen men haue not voluntarily & cheerefully endured for the World and the fruites of worldly vanities? Are they afflicted with pouerty? Fabricius willingly and cheerefully beares it, and after so great command and many victories, hee is content to follow husbandrie to get his liuing, to sup in his chimney corner with rootes and hearbes, and for want of meanes is constrained to accept of portions for his daughters out of the common purse. And Valerius Publicola after his famous consulship dyeth so poore, that hee was buried at the publicke charge. Are they afflicted with the death of their dearest friends, of their Children, yea, of their owne, onely, and most hopefull sonnes? Many of the Heathen haue borne this crosse with great patience and magnanimous courage, as Anaxagoras, Pericles, Xenophon, Demosthenes, Dio, Antigonus, and many other, as Plutarch witnesseth. Are they exiled from their natiue home? Rutilius and Aristides, though vniustly banished out of their dearely loued countries, doe with constant meekenesse beare the waight of this heauie burthen. Are they whipped and cruelly scourged by mercilesse enemies? The Lacedemonian Children made this but a game and mastery, wherein they contended one with another, who should endure with patience most and sharpest stripes, till their bodies were so cruelly torne, that they hardly escaped with their liues. Are they subject to the fierie triall? Mucius Scaeuola voluntarily and vnmoueably endures this torment, vntill his greatest enemie was more wearie in seeing, than he in suffering it. Are they adiudged to death and brought out to execution? Socrates hauing drunke the deadly Hemlocke, dyeth discoursing in his diuine Phylosophie. M. Curtius leapeth voluntarily into the noysome and deuouring gulfe; and the Decij deuote themselues to assured death for the preseruation of their armies. Are they vexed with torments, and see death approaching, with his most vgly visage and vizard, and apparelled in his most terrible habite? Attilius Regulus willingly offers himselfe to suffer these exquisite tortures, and when hee might haue fled from them with some small impeachment and disparagement to his paganish faith, he standeth still, till they catch him, or rather meets them in the midde way. Finally, Demetrius (as Seneca reporteth) professeth himselfe ready and willing to endure the encounters of any afflictions. Herein alone (saith he) O ye immortall Gods, yee giue vnto mee just cause of complaining, in that before yee brought vpon mee these crosses and calamities, yee did not acquaint me with your will, for had I knowne it, I would willingly haue offered my selfe to suffer these things, which I now endure being called by you to vndergoe them. Will you take away my Children from me? I haue bred and brought them vp for you. Wil yee haue any part of my body? Take it vnto you; neither is it much that I offer, seeing shortly I shall leaue the whole. Will yee haue my soule? Why should you not? neither will I bee against it, that you should at pleasure resume that which you haue first giuen. You shall haue whatsoeuer you require from one that is willing to part with it. What then doe I complaine of? I had rather voluntarily offer vnto you what you would haue, than deliuer it vpon demand. What need you to haue taken it by force, seeing you might haue receiued it on free-will. But now you shall plucke nothing from mee, seeing nothing is wrested, but that which is retained. I am in nothing constrained, I suffer nothing against my will. Neither doe I seruilely serue God, but voluntarily assent vnto him. By all which and many other examples, it may appeare that the Paganes and Infidels haue with great patience, constancie and courage, suffered as great and heauie crosses and calamities, as are incident vnto vs; hauing no other end, for the most part, but worldly glory, and to continue and eternize their name and fame vnto all eternitie; and therefore how much more should wee endure and suffer farre greater miseries with all ioy and cheerefulnesse, seeing they tend not onely to the glory of our gracious God, but also to the furthering and assuring of our euerlasting happinesse?

3. Sect. 7. Of the paines, dangers and miseries, which worldlings suffer, for the attaining vnto earthly trifles.

But not onely haue men in times past beene subject to great and innumerable afflictions, for the compassing of their worldly desires, but euen in these dayes, they are, in aymng at the same ends, liable to the like miseries. For what difficulties and dangers, what excessiue paines and toylesome labors, doe ambitious men vndertake that they may aspire vnto worldly honours? How are their heads broken with cares, and their hearts with greefes, in plotting the meanes of their preferments, and in being crossed in their designes? how doe they beate their braines in studying Machiauells pollicies, and in contriuing meanes for the ouerthrowing of their enemies, for the supplanting of their competitours, that themselues may rise by their fall, yea for the cunning betraying of those vnto whom they professe loue and frindship standing in their way, so as they may haue their bane, and yet neuer know who hurt them? With what feares are they racked lest they should be catched in their owne nets? And what sorrowes doe they sustaine, when as they are ouertaken and supplanted by them at whose heeles they tripped? Neither doe men take lesse paines, or vndergoe fewer dangers, or endure smaller or

or lighter miseries for the obtaining of the Mammon of iniquity. The husband-man is vexed with the cold of Winter, and the heate of Summer. Hee toyleth in the myre and dirt, and his body is subiect to the iniuries of stormie tempests, boysterous winds, hayle, snow, and all weathers; he wasteth his body, and consumeth his strength in digging, ditching, hedging, plowing, threshing, sowing, reaping, carting, hauing no other comfort to strengthen him, but the hoped harueſt which seldome answereth vnto his ouer-greedy expectation. The Merchant trauelleth by Sea and land, and is exposed to innumerable dangers, to stormes and leakes, to rocks and wracks, to the robberies of mercilesse Pyrats, and the injuries of lawlesse barbarians, by many whereof he is oftentimes ouertaken, and seldome escapeth them all. And all these paines and dangers he taketh and runneth into, onely in hope of obtaining some riches, of which hee sometimes faileth, running into great losses, whilest hee pursued small gaines; or though hee doe attaine vnto that which hee seeketh, yet is he as much troubled in the possession, as in the pursuite; and after all his paines in getting, and care in keeping, he is most of all tormented, when as loosing that which is endeared vnto him by induring so much for it, his heart lieth open to let in greefe and sorrow. So that (as one saith) by all these excessiue cares, labours & manifold dangers; they seeke to obtaine, obtaine to loose, and loose to greeue. The Souldier to maintaine himselfe in his estate and calling, endures innumerable and greeuous miseries; hee watcheth and wardeth, he lyeth hardly and fareth barely, hee runneth desperatly into any dangers, and endureth the incounters of mighty enemies, hee is subject daily to wounds and maimes, and is continually exposed to perill of death: all which he vndertaketh and sustaineth with courage and comfort, for the gayning of some small pay, which he no sooner receiueth but he presently spendeth it; or for the purchase of some smokie honour, the commendation of his Generall, or the applause of his fellow Souldiers. So what paines and torments doth the sicke man endure, that he may recouer his impaired health? What cutting and lancing, what serching and searing, what corasiues and cauterizing, what distaste and loathsomnesse doth hee endure, whilest he chaweth the pills which hee cannot swallow, and whether hee will or no, casteth vp againe the loathed potion? and yet oftentimes hee is deceiued of his hope, his medicine being his poyson, which killeth, in stead of curing him. Or though hee attaineth vnto that health which he expecteth, it is onely a reprieuall from death and no deliuerance; no full freedome from greefes and paines, but a further enabling of him by recouery of strength, to endure them longer. Finally, wee see what paines are sustained by ignorant idolaters, and what afflictions and miseries are with patience endured by the blind and superstitious in their will-worship and idolatrous seruice. The Baalits cut and lance themselues before their Idoll; the Papists goe bare-foote on pilgrimages to their Images of Saints, and cruelly whip themselues before their crucifix; many of the Iewes would endure any torments, rather than they would eate swines flesh; and the Turkes themselues would rather dye, than blaspheme their false Prophet Mahomet, or lying Alcharon. In a word, worldlings of any sort are content with patience to suffer any miserie for the fruition of their earthly desires, and the pleasing of their carnall appetite; and though they are not assured to attaine vnto them, yet the very bare hope of enjoying doth lighten all their labours, and sweeten vnto them their most distastfull sorrowes. And therefore, if worldly men are content to suffer so many afflictions, that they may obtaine those things which further their destruction, how much more chearefully and patiently should wee suffer farre greater crosses, that wee may attaine vnto saluation. If they suffer so much for Mammon and things of no worth, let vs bee ashamed, to bee vnwilling to suffer so much and more for Christ, and the fruition of heauenly happinesse. If they endure so many miseries for temporarie trifles, which they are not sure to obtaine after all their paines and trauailes, nor to retaine them for one houre, though they should haue them in possession; how much rather should wee with ioy and thankfulnesse endure all crosses and calamities, for the assured fruition and euerlasting possession of God himselfe, and those vnspeakeable ioyes of his heauenly Kingdome? It is the lot of the most to suffer many miseries in this life, and (as one saith) in this world, not to feare, greeue, labour and bee in danger, it is meerely impossible; but seeing farre other is the hope of the godly, than of the wicked, farre other the fruit of their labour, and much richer the reward of their dangers; it is principally to be respected for what cause, with what expectation, and to what end euery one indureth these crosses and miseries. And therefore (as another perswadeth) if thou art a disciple of Christ grudge not, nor take it greeuously to enter into the straight and afflicted way, considering that if thou bee not by this meanes afflicted thou wilt assuredly suffer for some other cause, though fruitlesse and vnprofitable. For the enuious and couetous man, hee that is inflamed with the loue of harlots, and ambitious of vaine-glory, yea euery one whosoeuer runneth wicked courses, Quæris vt acquiras, acquirin vt perdas, perdas vt doleas. Bernard. Serm. de quinque negotiationib.

Si tanta suffert anima mundana vt possideat vana de perea, quanta debet sufferre vt pereat? Augustin. lib. de patientia cap.

Alius est autem finis, alius Labor fructus, alia pericula, alia mortes. &c. Augustin. epist. ad Largum. epist. 82.

Chrysost. in 1. Cor. 12. Homil.

courſes, doth ſuſtaine many moleſtations and afflictions &c. And therefore ſeeing howſoeuer wee carry our ſelues, it is altogether neceſſary that wee ſhould ſuffer tribulations; why ſhould we not make choiſe to ſuffer in the way of righteouſneſſe, which with our afflictions will bring vnto vs innumerable crownes of happineſſe?

And thus may we comfort our ſelues, by comparing our croſſes and afflictions, with thoſe which worldly men ſuffer for the obtaining of momentany vanities: but much more may we be comforted, if wee compare them with thoſe euerlaſting and helliſh torments, which after theſe temporary puniſhments they ſhall endleſly ſuffer with the Deuill and his Angels. For they ſhall eternally bee purſued with the fierce wrath of God, which lying vpon our Sauiour, but for a while for our ſinnes, and that, at the ſame time, with ſome comfortable aſſurance of Gods loue, did force him to cry out, My God my God, why haſt thou forſaken mee; they ſhall for euer boyle, burne and broyle, in thoſe vnquenchable flames without hauing ſo much as a droppe of cold water to coole their heat. Their tortures and paines ſhall bee intolerable, and yet without end. Their miſery ſhall bee comfortleſſe, and yet without hope of future amendment, for the fire ſhall neuer goe out, and the worme dyeth not. And as they are outwardly burned and tormented, ſo inwardly they ſhall bee racked and tortured with the guiltineſſe of ſinne, and the terrours of an euill conſcience, which ſhall accuſe them as ſelfe-murtherers, and the onely cauſes of all their helliſh miſerie. All which poſitiue puniſhments will not bee ſo grieuous vnto them, as their depriuation of glory and happineſſe, and their euerlaſting baniſhment out of the preſence of God, and the ineſtimable joyes of his heauenly Kingdome. For their torments though neuer ſo great, are neuertheleſſe finite in their quantity, whereas their loſſe is infinite, ſeeing they not onely looſe the ioyes of Heauen, but the fruition of God himſelfe. Now vnto theſe puniſhments which they ſuffer directly and properly in their owne perſons, wee may adde thoſe which ſhall lye vpon them in regard of their company; for beſides thoſe helliſh fiends and vncleane and filthy ſpirits, who will bee ready to ſcorne, deride and inſult ouer them in their miſeries, executing Gods fearefull iudgements with all malicious tyranny, they ſhal haue the fellowſhip of damned men like themſelues, among whom they ſhall heare nothing but direfull yelling and hideous crying, ſhrieking and blaſpheming, which will double and redouble their tortures and grieuous paines. All which and much more (which might bee ſpoken of this argument, if it were pertinent to our preſent purpoſe) being conſidered, may ſerue to lighten all our afflictions, and to yeeld vs comfort in all our croſſes, for ſeeing the Lord of his free grace and infinite mercies, hath through his Sonne Chriſt ſaued and deliuered vs from theſe greateſt euils, and thoſe intolerable and euerlaſting puniſhments, though by nature we are no better than they that ſuffer them, and both by our originall corruption and our actuall tranſgreſſions, which we haue innumerable times committed againſt Gods infinite Maieſty, haue deſerued to be partakers of thoſe endleſſe torments; well may wee with patience and comfort, yea with exceeding thankfulneſſe and ioy vnſpeakeable, endure theſe light and momentany afflictions, as thinking our ſelues happy, that wee are not vtterly conſumed, and euerlaſtingly ſwallowed vp of that helliſh condemnation which others ſuffer.

Sect. 4. That we may receiue much comfort, if we compare our afflictions with the helliſh torments of the damned.

Sect. 5. That we may receiue much comfort if wee compare our earthly afflictions with our heauenly ioyes.

Laſtly, wee might receiue much conſolation in all our croſſes and calamities, if we would often compare them in our meditations with thoſe eternall and heauenly ioyes, which wee ſhall attaine vnto at the end of our wearifome pilgrimage, after wee haue beene a while tryed and tyred with theſe light and momentany ſufferings. For there wee ſhall find a moſt happy cataſtrophe and bleſſed change of all our croſſes & miſeries, there not onely ſhall wee haue all teares wiped from our eyes, but our weeping ſhall bee turned into laughter, and our ſorrow into ioy, as our Sauiour hath promiſed vs. Luk. 6. 21. Ioh. 16. 20. There ſhall wee find that truely verified which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, namely, that our preſent afflictions are not worthy the glory which ſhall be reuealed. Rom. 8. 18. For (as elſewhere he ſaith) theſe light and momentany afflictions ſhall cauſe vnto vs a farre moſt excellent and an eternall waight of glory; 2. Cor. 4. 17. and after our ſlight and ſhort paines which wee take in trauelling our iourney, wee ſhall come to an inheritance, immortall and vndefiled, and that fadeth not away, reſerued in Heauen for vs; wherein we haue cauſe to reioyce, though now for a ſeaſon (if neede require) we are in Heauinet, through many tentations; that the tryall of our Faith, being much more pretious than gold that periſheth (though it be tryed with fire) might be found vnto our praiſe, and honour and glory, at the appearing of Ieſus Chriſt. 1. Pet. 1. 4. 6. 7. Finally there wee ſhall not onely be freed both in our ſoules and bodies, from all worldly miſeries, but alſo be made partakers of ſuch ſurpaſſing and ineſtimable ioyes, as neither the eye hath ſeene, the eare hath heard, nor the heart of man conceiued. 1. Cor. 2. 9. There we ſhall haue the ſociety of the bleſſed Saints and Angels to communicate with vs in all our happineſſe, yea wee ſhall haue fellowſhip with our Sauiour Chriſt, who hath ſo deerly loued vs, and is now aduanced aboue all powers and principalities, and all things in

Heauen

Heauen and Earth. Yea wee shall haue the fruition of God himselfe, our summum bonum, and chiefe happinesse, in whose presence there is fulnesse of ioy for euermore, he being infinite in all perfection and containing in himselfe alone all beauty, maiesty, glory, excellency, vertue, goodnesse, and whatsoeuer may bee loued, desired or admired. But of these points I haue largely spoken in the other part of this treatise, and therefore need not heere to insist longer vpon them: onely let vs consider, that if after these short and light afflictions wee shall attaine vnto such vnspeakeable happinesse, and hauing possession of this glorious Kingdome shall neuer bee dispossessed, but after many millions of yeares shall be as farre from the ending of our ioyes, as wee were at our first entrance vnto them, wee haue great cause not onely to bee patient, but also to rejoyce in our greatest miseries and afflictions. For if worldly men do comfort themselues in all their labours, dangers and sorrowes, by remembring that they shall haue an end, and that they are the meanes to helpe them to the attaining of earthly riches, honours and pleasures; which when they enjoy, they thinke all their paines and griefes sufficiently recompenced, although they are both vaine and momentany, so as they may outliue them, or are assured that at their soone-approaching death they shall dye with them, and leaue them comfortlesse in this last and greatest extremity; then how much more should our hearts bee comforted, yea repleniished with joy in all our crosses and afflictions? when as we thinke with our selues that they are but short and momentany, and that when they are passed, wee shall obtaine those euerduring riches, and neuer fading glory, those endlesse pleasures and euerlasting joyes, which the Lord who is a most sure pay-master doth reserue for vs in his heauenly Kingdome.

See contempt of the world. lib. 3. chap. 3. to 11.

CHAP. XXXII.

That we must with our spirituall consolations ioyne worldly comforts, when by lawfull meanes we may enioy them.

§. Sect. 1. That we ought not to neglect any lawfull meanes of comfort or freedome from the crosse.

AND thus haue I handled those spirituall reasons and arguments, which being duly considered, may bring vnto vs much comfort in all our crosses. Vpon which consolations as we are chiefly and principally to rely; so we are not to neglect these outward meanes and helpes, which God out of worldly things shall vouchsafe vnto vs, either for the taking away of our afflictions, or for the easing of our griefes, and confirming our patience in bearing and sustaining them. Concerning the former, there is no lawfull meanes, which is not to bee vsed for the remouall of our crosses; for as then alone wee are called of God to suffer afflictions, when as wee haue no lawfull meanes to auoide or escape them; so can we onely lye vnder the waight of this burthen with comfort and good conscience, whilest wee want these meanes of freedome and deliuerance. For if when the Lord graciously granteth them vnto vs, wee will not vouchsafe to vse them, either because we would not part with our afflictions, as thinking them meritorious and satisfactorie for sinne, or because we would haue the Lord grant vnto vs other meanes, more extraordinarie, and beter fitting our proud humours; wee doe therein but tempt the Lord, and are guilty of all our owne harmes, bearing now no more a crosse sent from God, but a burthen of our owne making and imposing; neither yet seeking God any longer in our obedience to his will, but becomming voluntarie seruants and slaues vnto our afflictions, whereby wee iustly deserue to be vsed like seruants vnder the Law, who refusing their liberty, when as it was lawfully offered vnto them, had in token of perpetuall seruitude their eares bored with an awle vnto the dore, and had neuer againe any offer of their freedome. Howbeit wee must carefully take heed, that the meanes which wee vse for our deliuerance bee just, honest and lawfull; for otherwise we shall be in worse case than wee were before, wounding our soules to cure our bodies, and hazarding our euerlasting happinesse, for our deliuerance out of light and momentanie miseries. But of this I haue before spoken, and therefore will heere thus breefly passe it ouer.

See first booke chap. 5. Sect. 1.

§. Sect. 2. That we must make known our griefes to some wise and faithful friend.

But as we must vse these worldly means of our deliuerance frō affliction when we haue them, so when we want these, wee must not neglect such other means as may lighten our load, & sweeten the bitternesse of this loathsome potion: Of which, among many other, there are two chiefe and principal. The first, to impart and lay open our griefes vnto our discreet and approued friends, that wee may receiue counsaile and comfort from them. For as an heauy burthen (which to one alone is vnsupportable) is made light and easie, when as it is borne vpon many shoulders; and as those wounds are most desperately dangerous, and doe soonest drowne the heart which doe bleed inwardly, and those lesse perillous and sooner cured which haue an outward issue; so the burthen of sorrow which is intolerable to one onely, is made much more easie when it is borne by diuers friends; and these bloudy streames of tribulation, which hauing no externall vent, will drowne the heart with griefe; when they find an outward passage into the bosome of a faithfaithfull friend, are easily cured by those soueraigne salues of diuine and morall consolation, which he through his wisdome is able to apply vnto them. And therefore, as when we haue more labour and businesse than wee can well by our selues dispatch, wee vsually call in others to assist and helpe vs, because labour communicated, becommeth easie to many, which is impossible to one: so when the yoake of affliction doth lie so heauy vpon vs, that in our owne sense we are ready to faint and sinke vnder it, let vs call in to our ayde, our deare and faithfull friends, that by the helpe of their counsailes and comforts, wee may bee refreshed and supported. And of this wee shall find a double benefit, first, as it is an ease vnto our hearts, when as they vnburthen themselues of griefe by complayning; for as when the cloud of sorrow is pent in and dammed vp, it so much the more swelleth and inwardly rageth, so when it hath a vent and free current, it will run much more weakly and with greater stilnesse. In which respect, men to ease themselues are ready to make moane to the bare walls and senslesse trees; because, as they are more irksome when they are smothered, so it is a comfort, if by any meanes they can but vtter them; and secondly, because as sorrow issueth, and the heart emptieth it selfe, so comfort entreth and repleniſheth it, whilest our friend to whom wee make knowne our calamities, doth giue vs ease and refreshing, partly by his compassion, fellow-feeling, condoling and pitying vs in our griefes, and partly by his wise counsailes and sweet consolations both Diuine and Morall.

But yet wee are to know, that not euery friend is fit, vnto whom wee may communicate and lay open our griefes, for there are some that handle sores with so rough an hand, that they rather bruise and hurt them, than cure and heale them; and are so austere and harsh in their disposition, so tart and cynicall in all their cariage and behauiour, that they are more likely to gaule new skinned wounds, and to make the sores of sorrow almost healed to bleed afresh, than by the sweete Balsum of comfort and discreet counsaile to giue vnto their grieued patient any refreshing. There are some also which being in the contrary extreame are too too sorrowfull and ouer passionate, weeping ouer wounds in stead of curing them; vnto whom sorrow and griefe being imparted by pitifull cryes and mournfull complaints, is echoed backe againe, and so redoubled both in the sound and strength, like two fires when they meete together. And finally, there are some both faithfull and willing, who through their want of wisedome and experience, are not able to apply vnto vs fit comforts; vnto whom wee are no more to resort for the refreshing of our soules tired with sorrow, because of their friendship and loue towards vs, than we doe for the curing of bodily diseases, make choice of vnskilfull Empericks because they affect vs; knowing that not loue, but skill and learning doe cure diseases, although they are best when they are joyned together. And therefore wee are to make choice of such a Comforter, as is both compassionate, temperate in his affections, and wise and discreete in his comforts and counsailes; and not so onely wise, that he is withall proud and Cynicall; nor so onely pitifull and passionate, that he is fit for nothing; but with the showres of teares to increase the cloud of griefe, and to make the streame of sorrow to run with double violence. And because Gods faithfull Ministers are for the most part the best able, and most ready to performe this duty, who haue receiued from God the tongue of the Learned, that they should know to minister a word in time to him that is weary; therefore aboue all others, choise is to be made of them for this purpose, especially when as their knowledge is sweetned with loue, meeknesse and humility; for otherwise it is as good to bee without their helpe as haue it when the danger of the disease is much exceeded by the paines which they put vs to, in their rude and rough curing it. Now that wee may find such a friend in the time of our aduersity the readiest way is to be such an one vnto others in their griefs in the time of our prosperity. For if in our plenty we are no niggards of our good counsailes and consolations, but lend them freely vnto all distressed Christians, when they are ready to faint in their afflictions; then shall wee in the time of our need find them returned vnto vs with plentifull vsury and increase, the Lord rewarding our piety and loue into our bosomes, and neuer suffering vs to bee comfortlesse, who haue beene so comfortable vnto others.

Esay 50. 4.

In aduersis habet auxilia quæ in secundis commodat.

The second meanes of refreshing our hearts oppressed with griefe, is by joyning seasonably our honest labours with lawfull recreations. For whereas idlenesse giueth full scope and opportunitie vnto Sathan and our owne corruption, to aggrauate and amplifie our afflictions, and gather arguments against our owne peace, and contentment, tormenting our selues with our owne conceit and apprehension, and (as it were) whipping our soules with rods of our owne making; this serious employment in the businesses of our callings, will put all these conceits out of our minds, and free vs from all other griefe, than that which wee are subject vnto in present sense and feeling. And whereas idlenesse maketh vs fal into deepe melancholy, by giuing vnto vs full leasure and liberty, not onely to meditate on present miseries, but to recall those which are past, and through feare to anticipate those which are not yet come; the

2. Sect. 4. The second meanes of worldly comfort, is lawfull recreations ioyned with our honest labours.

which

which humour is the very Nurse of discontent, and impatiency, and the tindar into which when the least sparke of affliction falleth, it is increased in the apprehension, and within a short time, becomes a great and vnquenchable flame; labour and continuall exercise doth so wholy take vp the minde, that there is no place for this idle humour to settle in, nor any meanes to nourish it, though at the first we haue giuen way vnto it. But yet excessiue and vnremitted labour, doth as much prepare the minde for the admitting of melancholy, as sloth and idlenesse, and doth no lesse possesse it with impatiency and discontent; and therefore as the chiefe part of our time must be spent in taking paines, and in performing the duties of Piety and of our callings, to put out of our minds all false apprehensions and idle conceipts; so must wee allot some share thereof vnto honest and lawfull recreations, as walking in pleasant places, conferences which are delightfull without offence, Poetry, Musique, Shooting, and such other allowable Sports as best fit with mens seuerall dispositions for their comfort and refreshing. And this is alike, though not equally, necessary as the other, because as too much ease breedeth wantonnesse; so too much labour causeth wearinesse, of which the one, as well as the other, is the Mother and Nurse of waywardnesse and impatiency. But yet we must not at the first approching of our afflictions so vse these delights and recreations, that they keepe vs from applying them to our hearts, and making an holy vse of them, for the furthering of our repentance and mortification; as it is the custome of worldly men, who laugh out their sorrowes, discountenance their new approached griefes, drowne their dolour with excessiue drinking, and keepe the noyse of their afflictions from piercing their eares or hearts, with the lowder clamour of their merry company; for so they will be vnto vs as bewitching Syrens, which will rocke vs asleep in carnall securitie, bring vs into a spirituall Lethargie, and make vs to become sensleese both of smart and sinne: but in the first place we must giue way vnto godly sorrow for sin, which is the cause of our afflictions, and vse our crosses, as Hammers to driue repentance more deeply into our hearts; and that being there throughly fixed and fastned, our peace made with God, and the mortall poyson of our miseries (which is sinne) being taken away, then we are by these comforts and recreations to refresh our mindes, when they are tyred with the waight and continuance of our calamities, in the meane while carefully taking heed, that neither at first nor last, our sports and delights doe not lessen our sorrow for sinne, which is alwayes too little and farre short of that it should be; but onely mitigate our grief for our miseries and afflictions, which too too often is excessiue and immoderate. For as the salue being rightly applyed to the sore, doth heale and cure it, but being laid vpon the whole skin, doth draw a blister, and make the patient in worse case than he was before; so if this medicine of delight and lawfull recreation, bee well applyed to that sorrow which ariseth from afflictions it will do vs much good, and helpe to recouer our spirituall health; because this is a disease of the minde which needeth curing; whereas if it bee misapplyed vnto our sorrow for sinne, which is a sauing grace, and one of the soundest parts of a true Christian, it will exulcerate the soule, and make the faithfull patient in farre worse estate than he was before.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Of the Arguments of consolation which arise from the assurance which wee haue of our deliuerance out of all our afflictions.

HItherto wee haue spoken of such Arguments as are fit and sufficient enough, if they bee duely thought vpon, to make vs patient and thankfull in all our afflictions, although wee should continually lye vnder them euen vnto the day of our death. And now, according to our order first generally propounded, wee are come to speake of such consolations as arise from the assurance which wee haue of Gods gracious and most seasonable deliuerance. For though the Lord doth not remoue our afflictions at our pleasure; yet he will doe it in his owne good time, when as it shall be most for his owne glory and our spirituall and euerlasting good; though our troubles be tedious, yet hee will not suffer them to be endlesse; and though (as the Psalmist speaketh) hee chasteneth vs sore, yet hee will not deliuer vs vnto death. And as the louing Father doth not, when he correcteth his sonne, leaue off at his first motion (for then hee would neither care for him nor his correction) but when hee thinketh the chastisement sufficient for the reclaiming of him from his faults and vices: so the Lord our heauenly Father heareth our cryes in the time of affliction, not according to our lusts and childish will, but so as in his infinite Wisdome hee seeth it to stand best with our profit, and the reformation of our former euill courses, which when hee seeth effected, hee will cast his rodde aside, and (like the jaylour) wash and heale the stripes which before himselfe had made. So the Psalmist saith, That the righteous cry and the Lord heareth them and deliuereth them out of all their troubles; and that though they be very great, yet he deliuereth them out of all. That he healeth those which

Q. Sect. 1. That God deliuereth the faithfull in that time which is most fit and seasonable. Lib. 1. cap. 11.

Psal. 118. 18.

Acts 16.

Psal. 34. 17, 18. & 145. 19.

are

are broken in heart, and binderh up their sores; and that he is a refuge for the poore, a refuge in due time, euen in affliction. For the Lord (as the Apostle saith) will not suffer vs to be tempted aboue our strength, but will giue a good issue with the temptation that we may be able to beare it. And as else-where he affirmeth, hee corrects vs (not for any pleasure which he taketh in our paine and smart) but for our profit, that we might make partakers of his holinesse; not to punish vs, but to polish and perfit vs; not to disable vs and weaken our strength, but rather to exercise it and make vs stronger. Now if our burthen of affliction should be intolerable either in respect of the weight or continuance of it, it would not accomplish Gods end, at which hee aymeth in our chastisements; but rather hinder and defeat it; it would not make vs more holy, but rather more wicked and prophane; not more patient, humble, and meek, but more raging, desperate and wilfull, murmuring and repining against Gods wise prouidence, as though thereby some wrong were offered vnto vs. And therefore the Psalmist saith, That the rod of the wicked shall not rest vpon the lot of the righteous, lest the righteous put forth their hand vnto wickednesse. And the Lord himselfe promiseth, that hee will not contend for euer, nor be alwayes wroth, because the spirit should faile before him. And this loue and care we see euen in mortall men: for the wise & discreet Schoolemaster doth so correct his Scholler, that hee may make him more quick in pulling his wits together, and more diligent in labouring his lesson, and not so as his wits should be thereby dulled, and hee made vncapable of Learning. The louing Father chastiseth his sonne in such measure as is fit for the amending of him; and not so much as will dead his Spirits and make him to become sooliish or desperate; yea, hee that breaketh a wilde Colt so moderateth his stripes, that he may thereby bee tamed and made more seruiceable; and will not beat him so vnmeasurably, that he should become lame and vnprofitable for his vse. And therefore wee may bee assured, that the Lord infinite in mercy and goodnes, will shew this loue and care in our corrections, not suffering our afflictions eyther in weight or continuance to exceed the measure of our strength, whereby we should become vnseruiceable and good for nothing, but will moderate our corrections according to our ability, and put an end vnto all our troubles and tryals; when as hee seeth vs sufficiently purged from the drosse of our corruptions in this fiery furnace, or his graces tryed and approoued in this spirituall conflict, which were the ends for which wee were brought into them.

But for the better confirmation of our faith in this assurance of our deliuerance out of all our afflictions in such opportune and seasonable time, as will best stand with Gods glory and our owne good; let vs well weigh and ponder these considerations following. First, that God seeth and taketh notice of all the crosses and calamities which by any meanes whatsoeuer doe happen vnto vs. So the Psalmist saith, That the eyes of the Lord are vpon the righteous, and his eares are open vnto their cry. And how soeuer the wicked flatter themselues with a conceipt, that God regardeth not the oppressions of the faithfull, and lay in their hearts God hath forgotten, he hideth away his face, he will neuer see; yet as he affirmeth, he beholdeth spite and mischiefe, that he might take it into his owne hands. Neither is the Lord only a bare beholder of the troubles and afflictions of his seruants, but hee so seeth and knoweth them, as withall he feeleth and knoweth the meanes of their deliuerance, yea, and also doth indeed saue them in their greatest need; according to that of the Psalmist, Behold, the eye of the Lord is vpon them that feare him, and vpon them that trust in his mercy, to deliuer their soules from death, and to preserue them in famine, with whom the Apostle Peter agreeing, saith, The Lord knoweth to deliuer the godly out of tentation, and to reserue the vniust vnto the day of iudgement to be punished. With which confident trust Dauid conformably himselfe in his distresse. Though I be (saith he) poore and needy, the Lord thinketh vpon me; thou art mine helper and my deliuerer, my God make no tarrying. And certainly it must needs adde much to our consolation in afflictions, and our assurance of deliuerance, when as wee are perswaded that the Lord seeth and knoweth all our miseries. For whereas if he had neuer so much power and will to helpe vs, we might nevertheless be obnoxious to many wrongs, and be ouer-whelmed with many calamities, if hee were ignorant of our afflictions, and did not see and know our state and condition; now when wee are assured, that hee not only dearely loueth vs, and is of power and ability to saue and deliuer vs, but also doth behold and consider all our griefes and crosses, we may be assured also that hee will suffer them no longer to lie vpon vs, then shall be for his owne glory, and the euerlasting good of our soules. For if we put such trust in earthly parents, that they will not see vs want, suffer wrong, or be oppressed with any misery, (they being able to relieue and helpe vs) further than will stand with our good and benefit, as in the case of tryall and chastisement: then how much more should wee put our confidence in God for helpe and deliuerance, seeing hee loueth vs much more entirely, and is able to defend and saue vs much more easily, and continually seeth and taketh notice of all our afflictions to deliuer vs out of them.

Psal. 34. 15.

Psal. 10. 11, 14. & 94. 7, 9.

Psal. 33. 18, 19.

1. Pet. 2. 9.

Psal. 40. 17.

and know that all our wants and miseries do

Secondly, let vs consider, that the Lord doth not only see and behold our tribulation (as it were) afarre off, he being included in Heauen, we we are in the Earth, but that as he filleth all places with his essence, so after a more speciall manner he is present with the faithfull in all their afflictions and afflictions. And as the carefull Physician attendeth vpon and ouerlooketh not his dearely beloued patient, but accordingly apply vnto him fit medicines, which may so purge away the corrupt humours, as that in the meane time nature be not too much weakened: euen as the skilfull Goldsmith, whereas he casteth his Gold into the fiery Furnace, doth not hold it carelessly hence it, but watcheth by it, that whereby the drosse may be refined and consumed, it may be purified from all drosse, and not burned; so the Lord suffereth his children to be tried in the fire of affliction, that they may be refined and purified, but neuer withdraw his diuine protection, whereby they vpon our spirituall parts receiue any hurt or detriment. Neither is the Lord only present with vs as a pitifull friend to take compassion on our griefes, but also as a powerfull and wise helper to stretch vp his hand, that we may be deliuered from them; taking the best course, and vsing the fittest meanes, for the effecting of that which he willeth and intendeth. And according to the saying of Eliphaz, And he shall deliuer the poore from the sword, from the mouth of the mighty, and from the hand of the vile and wicked man; so that whom they expect his helpe they are not frustrated of their hope. He deliuereth the poore in his affliction, and openeth their eares in trouble. So the Psalmist more plainly speaking of this his powerfull and working presence, saith, The eies of the Lord are ouer the righteous, and his eares are open vnto their prayers. And, The Lord is neere vnto them that are of a broken heart, and will saue such as be of a contrite spirit. That he is their keeper, and their shadow vpon their right hand; so that the Sunne shall not smite them by day, nor the Moone by night. And againe, that the Lord keepeth them all that loue him, and all the wicked he will destroy. And, The Lord is nigh vnto all them that call vpon him, yea to all such as call vpon him in truth, he will fulfill the desire of them that feare him, he also will heare their cry and will saue them. The Lord preserueth all them that loue him, etc. And thirdly the Lord himself promiseth, Because (saith he) thou hast cleaued vnto me, therefore will I deliuer thee, I will be with him, because he knoweth my name. He shall call vpon me, and I will heare him, I will be with him in trouble, I will deliuer him and glorifie him.

And our Sauiour ascending into Heauen in his bodily presence, promiseth his Disciples, and, in them, all the faithfull, that he would not leaue them comfortlesse, but would come vnto them, by his holy Spirit, and be present with them vnto the end of the World. The which gracious promise wee see accomplished in the examples of the afflicted Saints; for thus God was present with Iacob in his greatest extremity, holding him vp when he wrestled with him, and defending him when hee seemed to oppose against him. Thus was hee present with Ioseph, to saue and deliuer him in the Land of his Banishment, yea, he was with him in prison, giuing him grace and fauour in the sight of the Iaylour, and afterward an happy deliuerance out of trouble. And thus he was present with the three children in the fiery furnace, in a visible manner, walking with them in the middest of the fire, still preseruing them from sustaining any harme. And thus euen in these dayes hee is present with the faithfull in all their troubles, though not thus sensibly and miraculously, yet spiritually and inuisibly by his wisdome and power, finding out fit meanes for their deliuerance out of all their afflictions, in such a time as is most seasonable.

The which consideration may serue to replenish our hearts with singular comfort, in that hee is alwayes present with vs who is most louing, and best able to giue vs succour and relefe. And therefore the Lord himselfe, when he would cheere his Church drooping in her afflictions, doth much insist and beat vpon this argument of his gracious presence. Feare thou not (saith he) for I am with thee; be not afraid, for I am thy God, I will strengthen thee and helpe thee; and will sustaine thee with the right hand of my iustice: The men which warre against thee shall bee as a thing of nought, for I the Lord thy God will hold thy right hand, saying vnto thee, feare not, I will helpe thee. Feare thou not, thou worme Iacob, and yee men of Israel: I will helpe thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer, the holy one of Israel. And againe, Thus saith the Lord that created thee, O Iacob, and he that formed thee, O Israel, feare not, for I haue redeemed thee, I haue called thee by name, thou art mine. When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee, and through the floods, that they do not ouerflow thee. When thou walkest through the very fire, thou shalt not be burnt, neither shall the flame kindle vpon thee. And thus the Lord encourageth Paul to be constant and courageous in all troubles and afflictions which should happen vnto him, for the preaching of the Gospell. Feare not (saith hee) but speake, and hold not thy peace, for I am with thee, and no man shall lay hand vpon thee to hurt thee. And accordingly thus haue the Saints and Seruants of God com-

Iob 5.15,16. & 36.15.

Psal. 34.18.

Psal. 121.5.

Psal. 145.18,19

Psal. 91.14,15.

Iohn 14.18. Matth. 28.20.

Gen. 32.24.

Gen. 39.2. & Vers. 21.23.

Dan. 3.25.

Esa. 41.10,13.

Esa. 43.1,2.

Act. 18.10.

Of the consolation which ariseth from the assurance of Gods presence with vs comforted themselues in all their afflictions, by calling to minde, that the Lord their God was alwayes present with them, to saue and deliuer them out of all their troubles. For so Dauid professeth, that though hee should walke through the valley of the shadow of death, hee would feare no euill, because God was with him, and his rod and staffe they did comfort him: and elsewhere, The Lord (saith he) is with me, therefore I will not feare what man can doe vnto me. The which his profession he putteth in practice in his greatest extremity. For when the Amalekites had sacked and burnt his City, spoyled him of all his goods, led his wiues captiues, and when his owne people adding sorrow vnto sorow, were ready to stone him, euen then hee comforted himselfe in the Lord his God. Thus also Hezechiah comforted himselfe and his people, when his Countrey was inuaded with the huge Army of the Assyrians. Bee strong (saith he) and courageous; feare not, neither be afraid for the King of Ashur, nor for all the multitude that is with him, seeing there are more with vs than with him. For with him is an arme of flesh, but with vs is the Lord our God to helpe vs, and to fight our battels. And thus the whole Church triumpheth ouer all troubles and dangers, in the assurance which she had of Gods powerfull presence. God is our hope and strength, and helpe in troubles ready to be found. Therefore will we not feare, though the earth bee moued, and though the Mountaines fall into the middest of the Sea. Though the waters thereof rage and be troubled, and the Mountaines shake at the surges of the same. Yea, thus did the Head of the Church, Iesus Christ, comfort himselfe in all his great sufferings by the presence and assistance of the diuine nature. I gaue (saith hee) my backe vnto the smiters, and my cheekes to the nippers; I hid not my face from shame and spitting; for the Lord God will helpe mee, therefore I shall not bee confounded: therefore I haue set my face as a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed. According to which examples, let vs labour to carry our selues with comfort and patience in our greatest afflictions, being assured that God is alike present with vs, as he was with them, to saue and deliuer vs out of all our troubles; for it is better to haue him wrestling with vs like an aduersary, as hee did with Iacob; than to be vpon any tearmes without his company, seeing his gracious presence is al-sufficient to sweeten and lighten the bitternesse and burthen of all our crosses, to turne our groanes and cryes into the heauenly musique of praise & thanksgiuing, and to make Hell it selfe better and more delightfull, than the chiefest Paradise of worldly pleasures. And therefore because Gods presence is so sweet and comfortable, and hee hath promised to vouchsafe it vnto those who are in misery and affliction, some haue desired and beene in loue with their crosses and calamities, though not simply for their owne sakes, yet in this respect, because through Gods gracious promises, they had the better assurance of the enjoying his company. To which purpose one saith, seeing thou hast promised O Lord, to be with me in mine afflictions, therefore let mee euer be afflicted, rather than at any time be without thee. And another, It is better for mee to embrace thee in tribulation, and to haue thee with mee in the fiery furnace of affliction, than enjoying all worldly prosperity, to bee without thy company. And a third making the like profession, saith, It is better for me, O Lord, to be in trouble whilest thou art with mee, than to raigne and reuell, feast and flourish in worldly pompe, and be without thee. It is a farre greater good to embrace thee in tribulation, and to enjoy thy company in the fire of affliction, than to bee in heauen it selfe, being depriued of thy presence.

Da mihi semper tribulationem vt semper possit esse mecum, Gregor. Idiota inter orthodoxogr. de patient. verae contemplat. 12 lib. cap. 10. Bernard. in Psal. qui habitat Vers. vlt.

Thirdly, let vs consider, that the Lord who seeth all our afflictions, and is alwayes present and ready to helpe and deliuer vs, is also Omnipotent and Almighty, and therefore able and al-sufficient to saue vs, and to giue vnto vs an happy issue out of all our troubles. For as the Psalmist speaketh, Who is God besides the Lord? and who is mighty, saue our God? Hee can doe all things (as Iob saith) and there is nothing hard vnto him. He is glorious and walketh in his great strength, he speaketh in righteousnesse, and is mighty to saue, as himselfe affirmeth. And therefore the faithfull when they haue beene forsaken of all their other hopes, haue notwithstanding rested vpon the Lord in all their troubles and dangers for helpe and deliuerance, as being their onely strength and stay, as we may see in the example of the Prophet Dauid, The Lord (saith hee) is my rocke and my fortresse, and he that deliuereth mee, my God and my strength, in him will I trust; my shield, the horne also of my saluation and my refuge. So the Prophet Nahum hauing spoken of the wrath and vengeance that should befall the Assyrians, affirmeth that God would be good to his Church, and as a strong hold in the day of trouble, knowing them that trust in him. Yea, this the whole Church knew and acknowledged, according to that of the Psalmist, In the Palaces thereof (that is, of Mount Sion) God is knowne for a refuge. And vpon this ground of knowledge they exhort one another, to rest vpon the Lord in all troubles for helpe and deliuerance. Trust in the Lord (say they) for euer; for in the Lord God is strength for euer more. Now if nothing can be more comfortable vnto those who are in any danger and distresse, than to be assured that their dearest friends are not onely present with them, and beholders of all their griefes;

Q. Sect. 5. That Gods power is omnipotent and al-sufficient to helpe vs.

Psal. 18. 31.

Iob 42. 2. Esay 63. 1.

Psal. 18. 2.

Nahum 1. 6, 7.

Psal. 48. 3.

Esay 26. 4.

griefs; but also haue ability & power sufficient to free them from the things they feare, & to deliuer them out of al difficulties; then ought our hearts much more to be filled with al ioy & consolation in our greatest afflictions, seeing we are assured, that the Lord who is infinite in power and loue, is continually present with vs, & both able & ready in the fittest & most seasonable time, to grant vnto vs deliuerance, and freedome from all those crosses and miseries which doe vexe and trouble vs.

Q. Sect. 6. That God is most louing towards vs, & therefore willing and ready to helpe vs,

Neither are we onely to comfort our selues in the assurance of Gods presence and power to helpe vs, but also of his infinite loue and goodnesse towards vs; the which now commeth in the fourth place to be considered, as a chiefe and mayne argument of our consolation. For if God knoweth all our afflictions, and is neere at hand and ready to helpe vs; if he be almighty in power, and able to doe for vs whatsoeuer he will, farre aboue all that we can aske or think, & doth also dearely loue vs, and in regard thereof is still willing to defend vs from euill and to doe vs good, then is there no doubt to bee made of Gods helpe, and our deliuerance in his due and most conuenient time. But as the former points appeare plainly by that which hath beene said, so is it easie with the like euidence of truth to demonstrate the infiniteneſse and immutability of Gods loue towards vs. For not onely doth hee as our Creatour, loue vs his creatures and the workes of his owne hands; but also as our God, Lord and Master, who hath made choice of vs aboue all others to be his owne peculiar people, subiects of his Kingdome, members of his Church, and seruants of his Family, vnto whom hee sheweth himselfe, and by whom he is continually worshipped & serued. Yea, in farre neerer bonds hath hee in his infinite loue and mercy vnited vs vnto himselfe, for he is our heauenly Father, and wee his children by grace and adoption; hee is our Husband, and wee his Spouse; yea, hee is in Christ our Head, and wee the members of his Body; whose loue, mercy and goodnesse towards vs, doe as much exceed that which is to be found in earthly Parents, Husbands and Heads, as himselfe doth exceed them, being infinite and incomprehensible. And this the Scriptures doe plainly declare vnto vs; for thus the Lord himselfe saith to his Church, that he had loued them with an euerlasting loue, and in mercy had drawne them vnto him, when being ignorant of his excellency, they made no haste to come. The which his loue, as it is in time endlesse, so it is in quantity matchlesse, howsoeuer in the Scriptures it hath some resemblances that we might the better conceiue of it. For it is compared to the loue of a Father, according to that of the Psalmist. As a father hath compassion on his children, so will the Lord haue compassion on them that fear him. And by the Prophet Malachie the Lord promiseth, that he will spare the faithfull, as a man spareth his owne sonne that serueth him. Yea, the loue of God is by himselfe compared to the loue of a tender Mother, and preferred before it. Can a woman (saith he) forget her childe, and not haue compassion on the sonne of her wombe? though they should forget, yet will I not forget thee. Behold, I haue grauen thee on the palmes of my hands, thy walls are euer in my sight. Yea, hee loueth vs as the Husband loueth the Wife, for hee hath married vs vnto himselfe for euer in righteousnes, iudgement, mercy & compassion: the which his conjugall loue is notably set forth vnto vs in the Booke of the Canticles. And if we would yet haue a loue aboue this, hee loueth vs as the Head the members of the body, pitying & preseruing vs, as those parts, which being of greatest vse, are also most tender & subiect to injury. For so the Prophet saith, that he who toucheth the faithfull, toucheth the apple of Gods eye. And Moses in his song saith, that God taught his people & kept them as the apple of his eie. In assurance of which loue Dauid maketh that prayer. Shew thy marueilous mercies, O thou that sauest by thy right hand them that trust in thee, from such as rise vp against them. Keepe me as the apple of the eye, hide me vnder the shadow of thy wings.

Deut. 7. 6. & 32. 9. Titus 2. 14. 1. Pet. 2. 9.

Ier. 31. 3.

Psal. 103. 13.

Mal. 3. 17.

Esay 49. 15.

Hos. 2. 19.

Zach. 2. 8. Deut. 32. 10.

Psal. 17. 7, 8.

Q. Sect. 7. That God especially sheweth his loue to the faithfull in the time of their afflictions.

And as God sheweth this his infinite loue vnto the faithfull at all times, and vpon all occasions, so especially in time of their troubles and afflictions, and that both by compassionating, and (as it were) condoling with them in their griefes, and also by sauing and deliuering them out of them in due time; for so he saith of the afflictions of his people, that in all their troubles hee was troubled, and the Angell of his presence saued them. That his soule was grieued for the misery of Israel; and that he earned in the bowels of his compassion, according as himselfe speaketh by his Prophet. Is Ephraim my deare sonne or pleasant child? For since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still. Therefore my bowels are troubled for him, I will surely haue mercy vpon him, saith the Lord. For this his loue & compassion cannot be idle; but as it will shew it selfe in pitying the miseries & troubles of his children, so also in giuing vnto them seasonable helpe and deliuerance. For so hee saith of the same people, and in them of all the faithfull. They shall come weeping, and with mercy will I bring them again. I will lead them by the riuers of waters, in a straight way wherein they shall not stumble; for I am a Father vnto Israel, and Ephraim is my first borne. And so the afflicted Church speaketh out of her owne experience. The Lord will not forsake for euer. But though he send affliction, yet will he haue compassion, according to the multitude of his mercies; for he Esay 63. 9. Iudg. 10. 16. Ier. 31. 20.

Verse 9.

Lam. 3. 31, 32, 33.

Q. Sect.

hee doth not punish willingly, nor afflict the children of men. Yea contrariwise, he taketh the greatest delight in shewing his mercy and goodnesse to those who serue and depend vpon him, as being an action most naturall and familiar vnto him; according to that of the Prophet Micah. Who is a God like vnto thee, that taketh away iniquity, and passeth by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage? Hee retaineth not his anger for euer, because mercy pleaseth him. All which his mercy and goodnesse hee is, aboue all other times, most ready to extend towards vs in the time of our afflictions, in regard of our weaknesse to beare these burthens; for he knoweth whereof we be made, and remembreth that we are but dust, and he hath experience of our infirmities, as the Prophet speaketh, knowing what to lay vpon vs, and the fittest time to ease vs of our burthen. The which may serue as a singular consolation vnto vs in all our troubles and afflictions, in that the Lord who is almighty and most able to helpe vs, is also infinite in loue and compassion towards vs, and therefore alwayes ready and willing to giue vnto vs deliuerance in time most conuenient. For if the child so presumeth on his Fathers loue, that hauing also power in his hand to supply his wants, protect him from dangers, and free him from any euill, hee comfortably resteth vpon him in his greatest pouerty and misery; If the beloued wife so trusteth in her husbands loue, that shee careth not to haue much in her owne keeping, so shee be assured that he hath enough for both, nor feareth any enemy in his presence which shee knoweth he is able to resist and ouercome; nor is much troubled with any present paine or sicknesse, if shee be perswaded, that he at pleasure can giue her ease by curing of it; And finally if the members of the same body do securely rest vpon the wise prouidence and direction of the head, and when it so appointeth are content with meeknesse and patience to indure any paine or torture, as binding, lancing, searching, searing, for the helping and healing of their infirmities and sores, because by naturall instinct they know, that it will impose vpon them no more than necessary paines, seeing in all their troubles and vexation it doth condole with them: then how much more should wee in all our afflictions and miseries rest and rely vpon Gods aide and assistance with security, comfort and spirituall ioy, seeing wee can make no question of his power and ability to deliuer vs, and may be assured that he infinitely more loueth vs, than the most louing father his onely sonne, the kindest husband his dearest wife, or the naturall head the true members of his owne body.

Mich.7.18.

Psal.103.14. Esay 53.3.

9. Sect. 8. Consolation

Lastly, let vs consider, that the Lord is not onely powerfull, able and graciously willing to giue vnto vs helpe & deliuerance out of all out afflictions in respect of those relations of loue betweene him and vs; but hath also freely bound himselfe by his most infallible promises, which therefore can no more possibly fall to the ground vnaccomplished, than he and his truth can be seuered and parted, who are of the same infinite essence and being. So he saith, Call vpon me in the time of trouble, so will I deliuer thee, and thou shalt glorifie mee. And elsewhere. Because hee hath loued mee, therefore will I deliuer him, I will exalt him, because he hath knowne my name. He shall call vpon mee, and I will heare him, I will bee with him in trouble, I will deliuer him and glorifie him. And in another place; Cast thy burthen vpon the Lord, and hee shall nourish thee, he will not suffer the righteous to fall for euer. He will fulfill the desire of them that feare him; he also will heare their cry, and will saue them. The Lord preserueth all them that loue him, &c. And againe, Before they call I will answer, and whilst they speake I will heare. And that I may not multiply more places, because they are obuious and easie to find, vnto any that looke into the holy Scriptures, the Apostle assureth vs, that he will not suffer vs to bee tempted aboue our power, but will giue a good issue with the tentation, (both in respect of waight and continuance of it) that we may be able to beare it. The which gracious promises are most infallible, because (as the Apostle there speaketh) he is faithfull and true who hath made them. Yea he is not not onely true but truth it selfe, and therefore no more able to goe from his word than to deny and forsake his very nature and being. And therefore if when wee are in distresse wee are cheered and refreshed, when a faithfull and able friend doth promise his aid and assistance for our helpe and deliuerance, from the euils which gaule and vexe vs, though their power bee often subject to crossing, their will to changing, and their faith to failing: then how much more should our hearts bee repleniſhed with joy and comfort, when as wee haue the promises of God, who is omnipotent and subject to no thwarting, immutable in his loue, and cannot alter, and truth it selfe, who cannot faile in performing of any thing which hee vndertaketh?

Psal.50.15. and 91.15.

Psalm.55.22. and 145.19.

Esa.65.24.

1.Cor.10.13.

2.Thes.3.3. Christum dixit plorabitis & flebitis, sed tristitia vestra vertetur in gaudium. Ergo quia prædicta patimur, restat vt etiam promissa speremus debeamus. Gregor. lib. 7. indict. 1. cap. 3.

In all which respects God is said to be our chiefe and only comforter in all our troubles and afflictions, because all true and substantiall consolations doe issue and flow from him, as the fountaine of ioy and comfort. Thus the Apostle stileth him, the Father of all mercies, and God of all comfort, who comforteth vs in all our tribulation. And the Lord appropriateth it vnto himselfe: I euen I am hee that comforteth you, who art thou that thou shouldst feare mortall man, and the

9. Sect. 9. That God is called the God of comfort and consolation in the former respects. 2.Cor.1.3.4.

Esa.51.12.& 66.13.

Iob.16.7.

Psal.94.19.

and 119.76.77.

In omnibus aduersitatibus Christus quærendus est tanquam vnicum & singulare remedium. Ille optimus medicus, dux non seducens, rex suos erigens &c. Bernard. de passione Domini. cap.22.

sonne of man which shall be made as grasse, and againe, as one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you, and yee shall bee comforted in Ierusalem. In respect whereof our Sauiour Christ calleth his holy spirit, by the name of comforter, because it is a speciall office of his to comfort Gods Saints in all their tribulations. And of this Dauid had experience where he saith in the multitude of my thoughts within mee, thy comforts delight my soule. Whereof it is that in his afflictions hee desireth no other comforter; I pray thee that thy mercy may comfort mee, according to thy promise vnto thy seruant. Let thy tender mercies come vnto me that I may liue for thy Law is my desire. Neither in truth is there any other in comparison of him to bee sought or looked after, for as one saith, he is our onely and singular remedy in all our afflictions and miseries. Hee is the best Physition, a captaine and leader that neuer misleads vs; a King that alwayes comforts and rayseth vs vp being dejected, and a most valiant champion, who onely fighteth in vs and for vs against all enemies, and after our victory crowneth vs with glory, when by his helpe alone wee haue ouercome. And what can wee seeke which wee may not find in him? If wee bee sicke, he is our Physition; If like pilgrimes wee wander in a strange country, hee is our guide; If wee be desolate, he is our King; If we bee assaulted, he is our champion; If wee thirst, hee is our drinke; If wee be cold, hee is our garment; If wee be sorrowfull, hee is our joy; If wee be in darknesse, hee is our light; If wee be Orphans, he is out Father, husband, friend and brother? Hee is the chiefe goodnesse, most mercifull, most mighty, most beautiful, most wise, who euerlastingly gouerneth and disposeth of all by his most wise and powerfull prouidence.

Q. Sect. 10. Examples of those who hauing trusted in God haue bin deliuered in due time.

And these are the reasons wherby we may be assured of our deliuerance out of all our afflictions; which are not grounded vpon out workes, merits, worthinesse, or any thing which is in vs; but vpon God his all-seeing knowledge, gracious presence, power, loue and truth; which being things without vs, cannot bee crossed by our sinnes and vnworthinesse, if wee performe that condition of faith, laying hold on these mercies and gracious promises of God, and bringing forth the fruits of repentance, whereby wee bewayle, hate and forsake all those sinnes, which haue mooued the Lord to inflict vpon vs all these crosses and afflictions. Now vnto these arguments of comfort arising from our assurance of deliuerance, let vs adde breefly some examples of the faithfull from time to time, who hauing trusted in God, haue in his due time beene saued and deliuered out of all their troubles and afflictions. And thus we reade, that God saued Noah and his family from perishing in the vniuersal deluge, and Lot from the common destruction of Sodome and Gomorrah. Thus hee freed Abraham from the danger of loosing either his life or wife, by plaguing the heathenish kings, and also of loosing his sonne, by prouiding in an instant another sacrifice to be offered in his place. And thus he deliuered Iacob from the grieuous seruitude of churlish Laban, as also from the mischiefes which hee intended against him at his departure; from the armed malice of his brother Esau, and out of innumerable other afflictions and dangers, as appeareth in his story. So how graciously did the Lord deliuer Ioseph from the bloudy conspiracy of his brethren, making their malice to serue his prouidence, as a meanes of his preferment; as also out of all those miseries into which hee was deepely plunged through the lustfull rage and false slanders of his dishoneſt mistresse? how miraculously did hee deliuer Moses in his infancy from killing, drowning and staruing; and in his mature age from the malitious intendments of Pharaoh and the Egyptians, as also from the mutinings and often rebellions of the vngratefull Israelites? What an happy issue did he make for Iob out of all his troubles? and how meruailously did he protect Dauid from the Philistins, from the persecutions raised against him by Saul, and the rebellious treason of his owne sonne? how did hee manifest his omnipotent power and watchfull loue, in preseruing Elias from the malicious rage of Ahab and Iesabell, in feeding him by the ministery of his Angell, and afterwards by the Rauens, and the poore Widdow; in safe-guarding Elizeus from the army of the Aramites, and the bloudy designements of his owne vngratefull King? in preseruing the three Children in the fiery furnace; Daniel in the Lyons den, Ionas in the Whales belly; and Ezechias from the mighty hoast of Senacherib, and afterward from the iawes of death when as it was ready to seaze vpon him? yea how wonderfully did he deliuer the whole people and Church of Israell; first out of the bondage of Egypt, and afterwards in the time of the Iudges from the subjection and oppression of their many and mighty enemies, as from the Amorites, Ammonites, Philistims, Zidonians, Amalakites, and Maonites, as the Lord himselfe telleth them? So likewise out of the captiuitie of Babilon; and from the most cruell conspiracie of Haman, whereby he intended at once, to roote them out from being a people. Finally, in the new Testament, when as neuertheleſse hee was purposed to make the bloud of his Martyrs the seed of his Church, yet till the appointed time came, how strangely and powerfully did hee preserue them from the crueltie and malice of the Iudg.10,11,12. Nehem.9.28.

the Scribes, Pharisies, and the rest of the Iewes, deliuering Peter, Paul and Silas out of prison by the ministerie of his Angels; and Paul himselfe from the conspiracie of the Iewes at Damascus, and afterwards at Ierusalem, from their rage and vproares, out of desperate dangers both by sea and land; and lastly, from the persecution of bloody Nero, who like a rauenous Lyon (as himselfe speaketh) gaped vpon him, thirsting for his bloud. In a word, we may see this verified in the examples of all the faithfull, who depending vpon the Lord, haue had experience of his loue, power and truth of his promises, in their meruailous deliuerances out of all their afflictions. So the Psalmist saith, that the Lord will be a refuge for the poore, a refuge in due time, euen in affliction, and that they who know his name will trust in him, because hee hath neuer failed them that seeke him. And else where speaking out of his owne experience, both in himselfe and others, hee saith, that great are the troubles of the righteous, but the Lord deliuereth them out of all. Yet setting downe the manifold miseries and afflictions vnto which Gods people are in this life subject, he still concludeth with this, as the foote of his song. So they cryed vnto the Lord in their troubles, and he deliuered them out of their distresse. The Prophet Esay likewise out of his owne obseruation speaketh to the same purpose; Thou hast (saith he) beene a strength vnto the poore, euen a strength vnto the needy in his trouble, a refuge against the tempest, and a shadow against the heate. The Prophet Asariah also saith, that who so euer returned in his affliction to the Lord God of Israel, and sought vnto him, he was found of him. And the sonne of Syrach maketh a challenge to whomsoeuer should take vpon him to contradict this truth, namely that he should find out one, who hath trusted in God, and beene forsaken of him in his afflictions. Looke (saith he) at the generations of old, and see, did euer any trust in the Lord and was confounded? or did any abide in his feare, and was forsaken? or whom did hee euer dispise that called vpon him? for the Lord is full of compassion and mercy, long suffering and very pittifull, and forgiueth sinnes, and saueth in the time of affliction.

2. Sect. 11. The great consolation which ariseth vnto vs, by remembring the deliuerance of others vs of their afflictions.

The consideration whereof should exceedingly comfort vs in all our crosses and calamities, seeing wee haue not onely Gods gracious promises of helpe and deliuerance out of all our troubles, but such manifold experience of the performance of them, vnto all the faithfull who haue trusted in him, and reposed themselues vnder the shadow of his wings; especially considering that there is in him no mutabilitie or shadow of change; and therefore if wee in like manner rely our selues with firme affiance, vpon his prouidence and promises, we shal find him alike ready to saue and deliuer vs out of all our afflictions. When therefore we seeme to bee forsaken of God in the day of our tribulation, let vs comfort our selues with Dauid and say, Our Fathers trusted in thee, they trusted in thee, and thou diddest deliuer them; they cryed vnto thee, and were deliuered; they trusted in thee, and were not confounded. For this is the right vse of their deliuerances, that our faith and affiance may be confirmed and assured, that the Lord will bee alike gracious vnto vs, if wee rest and rely vpon him. According to that of the Psalmist. The Lord will be a refuge for the oppressed, a refuge in times of trouble: and they that know thy name will put their trust in thee, for thou Lord hast not forsaken them that seeke thee. And this vse he affirmeth the faithfull would make, of his meruailous deliuerances; for hauing said, that vpon his seeking the Lord, he was heard of him, and deliuered out of all his feare; hee inferreth, that others also shal looke vnto him, and runne vnto him, and their faces shal not be ashamed, saying, This poore man cryed, and the Lord heard him and saued him out of all his troubles.

Psal. 22. 4. 5.

Psal. 9. 5. 10.

Psal. 34. 4. 5. 6.

3. Sect. 12. That we may comfort our selues in the remembrance of our owne deliuerances.

Yea, not onely may wee comfort our selues in the remembrance of these examples in former times, and those which wee may daily obserue in our owne dayes; but also in the consideration of those manifold and wonderful deliuerances, which either together with the rest of Gods Church, or particularly by our selues, the Lord hath in mercy vouchsafed vnto vs. As namely our freedome from that most miserable captiuity of sinne and Sathan; our deliuerance from the greiuous yoake and slauish subjection, both in respect of body, soule and state, vnto the Romish Antichrist, by the preaching of the Gospell; when as there was impossibilitie, in regard of his strength, and our weakenesse of euer comming out of his cruell thraldome; our wonderfull deliuerance in the yeare 1588. from the inuasion and bloudy intendments of the Pope and Spaniard; the raising vp of our heads hanging downe with sorrow, and refreshing our hearts dejected with feare, at the death of our late worthy and renowned Queene, by reparing our losse in our gracious Soueraigne, by whose meanes the sincere preaching of the Gospell and the flourishing estate of the Church and Kingdome is continued and preserued. Finally, our strange & almost miraculous deliuerance from that horrible conspiracie, and vnmatchable treason of the bloud-thirstie Papists, who had intended to blow vp at once both King and State, and within some few houres had brought their damnable designe into act and execution had not the Lord preuented them by his prouidence and power. Vnto which publicke dedeliuerances, euery one may adde all those which they haue had experience of in their owne particular; as protection from enemies, preseruation from dangers, supply of necessaries in the time of want, recouery of health after most dangerous sicknesses, and such like; which being innumerable in respect of particular men, I leaue them to the consideration of euery one, as they haue obserued them out of their owne experience. All which gracious deliuerances from dangers and passed miseries, should serue as effectuall arguments to comfort our hearts in our present afflictions seeing in regard of Gods vnchangeable loue, they giue vnto vs assurance of the like freedome from our present afflictions, being so many pledges and pawnes of Gods mercy, truth and carefull prouidence, still watching ouer vs. And thus Danid concludeth, that the same God who had deliuered him from the Lyon and Beare, would also saue him from the vncircumcised Philistim. And Paul hauing experience of Gods power & loue, in deliuering him from that great affliction, which so much pressed him, that hee doubted of his life, professeth his confidence in God for helpe and succour in all future dangers. And being deliuered out of the mouth of the Lyon; that is, from Nero that cruell persecutour, he comforteth himselfe, and strengtheneth his faith in this assurance, that God would deliuer him from euery euill worke, and preserue him vnto his heauenly Kingdome. Yea euen the heathen captaine calleth to remembrance the former deliuerances of him and his fellowes, that he might hereby comfort himselfe and them, in assurance of like preseruation from present troubles, whose example may conuince vs of greater weaknesse and infidelitie, if hauing many more pledges and experiments of Gods loue and power, wee come short of him in our courage and confidence. The which will lye as an heauy sinne vpon our soules, and adde much to the waight and bitternesse of afflictions; seeing wee so much distrust God, that wee will not onely, not giue credit to his word and promises, but not so much as beleeue him when hee hath, by former experience, put into our hands the pledges and pawnes of his loue and care ouer vs. And this was the sinne of Asa, who hauing been deliuered from the huge hoast, chariots and horsemen of the Æthiopians and Lubims; did not after this experience of Gods mercy rest vpon him for deliuerance and victory ouer Baasha king of Israel. As also of the Israelites, who hauing had continuall experience of Gods care, power and loue, in defending and prouiding for them, did in their next wants and dangers, shew so much diffidence and distrust, as though they had neuer seene any of his works of wonder, as the Prophet doth at full declare it, in the 78. Psalme.

1. Sam. 17. 37.

2. Cor. 1. 9. 10.

O socij (neque enim ignari sumus ante malorum) O passi grauiora dabit Deus his quoque finem, Æneid. 1.

2. Tim. 4. 17. 18.

2. Chro. 16. 7. 8.

Psal. 78. 19. 20. 35. & v. 41.

CHAP. XXXIIII.

How wee may strengthen our faith, hope and patience, when God deferreth to performe his promises concerning our deliuerance.

BVt against that which hath beene said, some haply may obiect, that they haue knowne many who trusting in God, and waiting for his helpe, and feruently calling vpon him for deliuerance, haue notwithstanding long liued, and at last died in their afflictions; yea, that they themselues doe still remaine in great misery and tribulation, though they haue often by feruent prayer cryed vnto him, and depended vpon no other for succour and freedome from their euils. To which I answere. First, that all Gods seruants haue deliuerance out of their afflictions in due time, whether it bee by life or death; and therefore seeing our longest liues are short and momentany, being compared with that euerlasting happinesse which is to follow after, the time of our afflictions cannot bee long, nor our deliuerance farre off, although it should bee deferred to the day of dissolution. Whereas contrariwise the punishments of the wicked being begunne, doe neuer end, their earthly miseries leading and bringing them into those euerlasting and hellish torments. Secondly, I answere, that Gods promises of deliuerance from temporarie afflictions are not absolute, but alwayes to bee vnderstood with this condition, if it will stand with his owne glory, and the spirituall good and saluation of the parties vnto whom hee maketh them. For otherwise our freedome from affliction would bee no benefit, but the greatest hurt, Gods promise would degenerate into a threatning, bringing vnto vs euill in stead of good, and it would proue vnto vs the greatest crosse, not to bee thus crossed and afflicted. Now often times Gods glory and our saluation, are more aduanced by the continuance, than by the remouall of our crosses; as when God tryeth by them his graces in vs, that he may afterwards crowne them, and causeth our fight to bee so much more long and dangerous, that accordingly our ensuing victory may bee the more glorious; or when hee doth vse them either for an hedge to keepe vs from leaping into the forbidden pastures of carnall pleasures; or for a fierie fornace to purge and purifie vs from the drosse of our corruptions. In which cases it is the greatest freedome not to be freed; and Gods greatest mercy towards vs, when as hee continueth vs in our temporary misery. And therefore in all our crosses and calamities wee are to comfort our selues in this assurance, that if it will stand with Gods glory, and the euerlasting good of our soules, wee shall most cer-certainely obtaine deliuerance; or otherwise, if it bee better for vs in these respects, that we should continue in them, then will the Lord assuredly giue vnto vs such strength, patience and inward comforts of his Spirit, as shall enable vs to beare them without fainting and sinking vnder them.

§. Sect. 1. How we are to vnderstand Gods promises concerning our deliuerance out of afflictions.

But oftentimes the Lord deferreth his helpe and our deliuerance, either for our further tryall, or for the restraining or mortifying of our corruptions, or finally to moue vs hereby with more earnestnesse and feruencie of spirit to emplore his assistance; that being deliuered, we may be more thankfull for this benefit, the want whereof hath made vs to value and prize it, according to its worth. And when hee hath purified vs from our drosse, and exercised our faith, hope, affiance and loue towards him, hee will then free vs out of all our miseries. And therefore seeing we are vncertaine, whether our deliuerance bee neere at hand, or far off; whether the Lord will now, or hereafter, or not till the day of death giue vs freedome from the miseries which afflict and grieue vs; therefore it behoueth vs to persеuere and continue in faith and hope, with patience and humilitie to waite the Lords leasure, and to stay the appointed time whether it be in life or death. The which duties, because they are not onely hard, but meerely impossible to flesh and blood; let vs earnestly labour in the vse of all good meanes which may enable vs to performe them. And these meanes enabling vs to waite and depend vpon God, when hee delayeth the accomplishing of his promises, in deliuering vs out of our afflictions, doe either respect meditation or action. Concerning the former, if we would attaine vnto this hope and patience when God deferreth to helpe vs, wee must diligently meditate in his word, which alone containeth in it all such comforts as may vphold vs in this tryall. For so Dauid saith of it; It is a comfort in my trouble, for thy promise hath quickned me. I haue remembred thy iudgements of olde, O Lord, and haue beene comforted. Thy statutes haue beene my song in the house of my pilgrimage. And a little after. Except thy law had beene my delight, I should now haue perished in mine affliction. More especially wee must meditate on the commandement of God, whereby he enjoyneth vs to waite vpon him, and to persеuere in our faith, hope, and patience, notwithstanding that hee deferreth to deliuer vs. So the Lord hauing by vision, reuealed the deliuerance of the people of Israel from those miseries where with the Chaldeans did afflict them, willeth to attend his leisure, for the accomplishment of it. For the vision (saith he) is yet for an appointed time, but at the last, it shall speake, and not lye; though it tary, waite for it shall surely come, and not stay. And the Apostle to this purpose vseth that notable exhortation. Bee patient (saith he) brethren, vnto the comming of the Lord. Behold, the husband-man waiteth for the precious fruite of the Earth, and hath long patience for it, vntill he receiue the former and the later raine. Bee yee also patient therefore and settle your hearts, for the comming of the Lord draweth neere. So the son of Syrach exhorteth vs to prepare our soules for tentation, if wee come with a resolution to serue the Lord, to set our hearts aright, and constantly endure, and not make haste in time of trouble; and willeth all those that feare the Lord to waite on his mercy, and not to goe aside, (namely, by vsing indirect and vnlawfull meanes to deliuer themselues) lest they should fall.

Secondly, let vs meditate and consider, that vnto this commandement, the Lord hath added his most gracious promises, to encourage all to yeeld vnto it their obedience; with which the Booke of the Psalmes abounds in euery place. So he saith, a The poore shall not alway be forgotten: the hope of the afflicted shall not perish for euer. b Hope in the Lord, be strong, and he shall comfort thine heart, and trust in the Lord. c Behold the eye of the Lord is vpon them that feare him, and vpon them that trust in his mercy; to deliuer their soules from death, and to preserue them in famine. d The Lord redeemeth the soules of his seruants, and none that trusteth in him shall perish. e Waite patiently vpon the Lord, and hope in him, &c. f For they that waite vpon the Lord shall inherit the land. And the Prophet Esay assureth vs, that they who waite vpon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall lift vp their wings as the Eagles, they shall run and not be weary, and they shall walke, and not faint. And elsewhere, Thou shalt know that I am the Lord; for they shall not bee ashamed that waite for mee. And againe, Since the beginning of the World, they haue not heard, nor vnderstood with the eare, neither hath the eye seene another God besides thee, which doth so to him that waiteth for him. Yea not onely helpe and deliuerance are promised in this life to those who waite vpon God, and persеuere in their affiance and hope, when he deferreth the accomplishment of his word; but also euerlasting blessednesse in the life to come, according to the saying of the Prophet; The Lord is God of iudgement; blessed are all they that waite for him. Yea, so are present and future benefits promised to those that persеuere in their hope and affiance, that they are all appropriated vnto them onely. For there is none attaineth vnto the crowne of glory, but he who hath first obtained full and finall victory ouer all the spirituall enemies of our saluation, and among the rest ouer these tryals, afflictions & tribulations, which

Q. Sect. 3. The second meanes to meditate on Gods gracious promises.

a Psal. 9. 18.
b Psal. 27. 14.
c Psal. 33. 18.
d Psal. 34. 22.
e Psal. 37. 7. 9.
f Psal. 41. 32.

Iam. 5. 7. 8.

Eccles. 2. 2. 7.

Chap. 49. 23. & 64. 4.

Psal. 32. 18.

which fight against vs vnder the conduct of world, for he onely that indureth vnto the end shall be saued, as our Sauiour teacheth vs. He alone that ouercommeth is admitted to eate of the tree of life, which is in the middest of the Paradise of God; he that ouercommeth shal not be hurt of the second death; he that is faithfull vnto the death, shall be crowned with the crowne of life. He that ouercommeth shall eate of the Manna that is hid, and shal haue that white stone, and in it a new name written, which no man knoweth, but he who receiueth it, &c. Now the meanes of obtaining this victory is to perseuere and continue constant in our faith, affiance, hope, and patience, in all our afflictions and tribulations. For (as the Apostle saith) All that is borne of God, ouercommeth the world, and this is the victory that ouercommeth the world, euen our faith. And because all Gods promises are made to those and those onely who perseuere in these graces, and waite vpon the Lord at all times, and in all estates and conditions, therefore vpon this foundation the Church groundeth her prayers for helpe and deliuerance out of her afflictions. O Lord (saith shee) haue mercy vpon vs; wee haue waited for thee, bee thou which wast their arme in the morning, our helpe also in time of trouble. And to the same purpose the Prophet Micah saith, Therefore I will looke vnto the Lord; I will waite for God my Sauiour: my God will heare me.

Matth. 24. 13.

Apoc. 2. 7. 10. 11. 17.

1. Ioh. 5. 4.

Esa. 33. 2. Micha. 7. 7.

3. Sect. 4. The third meanes is to consider that Gods promises are infallible.

Thirdly, let vs comfort our selues when God deferreth his promises, and continueth our conflict of afflictions, after wee haue long waited for helpe and deliuerance, by considering that in his good time they shall most certainely bee accomplished; seeing his truth being of his essence, it is no more possible that hee should faile of his word, than it is possible that hee should deny himselfe; and therefore seeing he hath promised that wee shall ouercome the world, that wee shall haue strength to endure all tentations, and haue an happy issue out of them, that if wee suffer with Christ, wee shall raigne with him, and that by many tribulations and afflictions we shall enter into the Kingdome of Heauen; we may be assured though our way bee long and foule, yet at last wee shall come to our iourneyes end; that after our painefull sufferings, shall come our glorious raigning, and that after our dangerous and irkesome fight, wee shall obtaine an happy victory, and bee crowned with euerlasting glory. In which regard (as one saith) wee may be secure in fighting, seeing wee are sure of ouercomming. O onely safe fight, which for and with Christ is vndertaken; in which the Christian souldier neither wounded, nor ouerthrowne, nor troden vnder foote, no nor slaine can loose the victory, if he manfully stand to it, and doe not betake himselfe to a shameful flight. For the onely meanes of loosing the victory, is by shamefull and sinfull flying from our enemies. By flying wee may loose it, but by dying wee cannot. For blessed is he that dyeth fighting, because he shall be crowned dying. But woe bee vnto him who by cowardly auoiding the conflict, doth loose both the victory and the crowne.

Securus potes pugnare, cum securus es de victoria. O vere tuta pro Christo & cum Christo pugna &c. Bernard epist. ad Robertum nepotem epist. 1. ad.

Fourthly, let vs consider, that the Lord vsually exerciseth the faith, hope, affiance and patience of those who are most deare vnto him, and enriched with the greatest measure of these sauing graces, with these delayes, and deferreth the accomplishment of his promises vnto those especially, who haue receiued the greatest strength to endure this tryall. Neither doth the Lord shoote his most pearcing bullets of tentations against his weakest armour, which would but disgrace his workmanship, and in mortall manner wound the wearer; but hee dischargeth them onely against such as hee hath made high proofe, which repell the shot without harme, and set forth the skill of him that made it. Hee will not lay a great waight vpon weake shoulders, which would crush them downe and make them vnprofitable for vse, but hee loadeth those with the heauiest burthen, whom he hath first enabled with sufficient strength. He will not leane too hard vpon his bruised reedes, nor cast water vpon his new kindled fire, which hee would haue encrease to a great flame; but hee putteth to the greatest stresse his most solid timber and heart of Oke, and casteth these waters of tryall vpon such a throughly inflamed zeale, as is but the more encreased in heate by this opposition and reluctation. And thus the Lord dealt with Abraham, the Father of the faithfull; for hauing made many notable promises vnto him and his posterity, hee kept him a long time without any issue, and hauing assured him, that in his seed both himselfe and all the Nations of the Earth should be blessed; he exercised his faith in this promise, by deferring the accomplishment thereof; vntill he and Sarah his wife were growne so olde that it seemed impossible in nature to bee performed. So hee giueth Iacob the blessing, and promiseth him the land of Canaan in possession, but afterwards he is faine to waite for the accomplishment twentie yeares, as a stranger and seruant in another countrey. He promiseth Ioseph many priuiledges, and the soueraigntie ouer his brethren, but in the meane while they vse him at their pleasure, they sell him for a slaue into Egypt, where hee passeth many dangers, and endureth many miseries, before he seeth any likelyhood of the performance of Gods promise. And finally, thus hee vsed Dauid, a man according to his owne heart, for after that he had had chosen him for King ouer his people, and had assured him by his promise, that hee should sit vpon the Royall Throne, hee deferreth the accomplishment thereof for many yeares, in the meane while exposing him to the persecution of his enemies, and to such innumerable troubles and tentations, that his faith sometimes receiued foyles, and brought into question the truth of Gods word. And this appeareth in many places of the Psalmes, where hee maketh these and such like complaints. How long wilt thou forget me, O Lord, for euer? How long wilt thou hide thy face from me? How long shall I take counsell within my selfe, hauing wearinesse daily in mine heart? How long shall mine enemies be exalted aboue me? Yea, hee cryeth out as one vtterly cast off; My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me; and art so farre from my health, and from the words of my roaring? O my God, I cry by day, but thou hearest not, and by night, but haue no audience. And againe. Will the Lord absent himselfe for euer? and will he shew no more fauour? is his mercy cleane gone for euer? doth his promise faile for euermore? hath God forgotten to be mercifull? hath he shut vp his tender mercies in displeasure? and I said, this is my death. Yea, so was his faith shaken with these long delays, that hee said in his feare all men (and among the rest the Prophet Samuel, who had reported vnto him Gods promises of the Crowne and Kingdome) were but lyars and deceiuers; and professeth that his eye fayled to expecting Gods saluation, and the accomplishment of his iust promise. And euen thus the Lord dealeth with the faithfull in these dayes; for howsoeuer when wee are babes in Christ, and weake in faith, he will not breake the bruised reed, nor quench the smoaking flax, and therefore is pleased to performe his promises speedily, and to encourage vs in his seruice with the liberall wages of his rich and plentifull benefits; yet when wee are growne strong in grace, and are endued with a great measure of faith, affiance, hope and patience, he will not lay light burthens vpon our able shoulders, nor exercise these gifts with his slightest tryals; but hee will propoue vs with great and dangerous tentations, and seeme to leaue vs in them without helpe and deliuerance for a long time together. And therefore, when this befalleth vs, we are not to be discomfited and discouraged, yea, rather we are to rejoyce in these tryals and afflictions, seeing they are signes of Gods greater loue towards vs, and that he hath vouchsafed vnto vs a greater measure of his gifts and graces; and comfortably to attend Gods good leasure for our deliuerance, seeing we know that the Lord delighteth in them that feare him, and attend vpon his mercy: as the Psalmist teacheth vs.

9. Sect. 5. The fourth meanes, how to consider that God vsually deferreth to helpe those who are most strong in grace and most deare vnto him.

Fourthly, let vs consider, that howsoeuer the Lord hath made his faithfull and beloued Seruants to waite long for the accomplishment of his promises, yet at last he neuer failed to bee as good as his word. For though hee long delayed it, yet in the end hee gaue Abraham children; he made way for the returne of Iacob into his owne Country; hee aduanced Ioseph aboue all his brethren; and deliuering Dauid from all his persecutions, he set him vpon the throne of the Kingdome, and made him happily to weld the Royall Scepter. For so himselfe speaketh: I waited patiently (saith he) for the Lord, and hee inclined vnto me, and heard my cry, he brought me also out of the horrible pit, out of the myrie clay, and set my feet vpon the rocke, and ordered my goings. And thus the Lord suffered his promises to be long vnperformed vnto the people of Israell, whilest they remayned in the Egyptian seruitude, but no sooner the day came which hee had appointed, but they were presently freed out of their cruell bondage. And after he had brought them into the promised Land, hee vexed and corrected them with many afflictions, and suffered them to be led captiue of their enemies, deferring their deliuerance out of these troubles, till he had caused them to waite long, and had made tryall of their faith and patience, by absenting himselfe for a time, and with-holding from them his promised helpe. So the Church saith. Therefore will I waite vpon the Lord, that hath hid his face from the house of Iacob, and I will looke for him. And againe; In that day shall men say, loe this is our God, we haue waited for him, and he will saue vs; this is the Lord, we haue waited for him, we will reioyce, and be ioyfull in his saluation. And in another place, Yea, O Lord, haue waited for thee in the way of thy iudgements, the desire of our soule is to thy Name, and to the remembrance of thee. After which expectation they were not disappointed of their hope, for when the seuenty yeares were expired, which was the appointed time of their deliuery, then maugre the malice, policy and power of all their enemies, they were graciously freed out of this their captiuity. And therefore seeing we haue such assurance of the truth of Gods promises, and so manifold experience in others and in our selues, that his delays though they sometimes cause doubting, yet they neuer bring vnto vs any danger; let vs by a liuely and constant faith lay hold vpon them, euen when they are long deferred, being assured that if with our Father Abraham, we tarry patiently, we shall at length with him enjoy the promise. And so shall we haue a testimony vnto our owne conscience, that we are endued with a true and liuely faith, when as we doe not make haste (as the Prophet speaketh) but waite the Lords leisure for the accom-

Q. Sect. 6. The fift meane is to consider that God neuer failed to performe his promises, at lest to those that haue waited on him.

Psal. 101. 1, 2.

Exod. 10. 4 1.

Esay 8. 17.

Esay 25. 9.

Chap. 26. 8.

Heb. 6. 15.

Esay 28. 16.

accomplishment of the promises. For these two goe together and haue not so separation; but as faith causeth hope, being (as the Apostle saith) The ground of things hoped for, and the euidence of things which are not seene; so hope accompanieth and strengthneth faith, expecting the appointed time when as the things beleeued shall be enioyed. Whereas on the other side we be euer ouer-hasty, and incredulity, when we will not stay Gods leasure, but seeke vnto God, for the accomplishment of his promises, but couet in post haste to haue our desires satisfied; resolueing that if God will not giue vs a lawfull meanes of freedome from danger, or deliuer vs out of our afflictions when wee would haue him, that we will no longer attend his leisure, but vse such meanes as are next hand, not caring or regarding whether they be lawfull or vnlawfull, so they bee but likely to satisfie our desire touching the remoual of our crosses. And of this haste we haue an example in Ioram, who protesteth in plain termes that he would not attend on the Lord any longer than pleased him, but would vse his own means for his deliuerance. And in many men who liue in these dayes, who will not waite on Gods leasure for their recouery of health, but send to Witches and Wizards; nor for the repayring of their poore estates in the vse of lawfull meanes, but fall either to oppression and violence, or to fraud and deceitfull dealing.

Heb. 11. 1.

2. Kings 6. 33.

6. Sect. 7. The sixth meanes is to consider that the Lord deferreth to deliuer vs for the furthering of our spirituall good and saluation.

Fifthly, let vs consider, that if the Lord deferreth to performe his promises for our deliuerance, he doth it not because he is vnable or vnwilling to helpe vs, or because hee taketh any delight in our miseries and afflictions, but as he doth at the first inflict vpon vs these tryals and chastisements for our spirituall good and the furthering of our euerlasting saluation; so he only continueth them so long as is fit for the effecting and perfecting of these his gracious ends in vs for example he afflicteth vs for our sinnes, that his graces vouchsafed vnto vs may be exercised and manifested to the glory of him that gaue them; and encreasing of the happinesse of those that haue them; and therefore if after the renewing of our faith and serious and sound repentance, our crosses are continued, we may be assured that the Lord is pleased to vse vs further as the instruments of his glory, and that hee is purposed by continuing the conflict so mightily for our victory, and to make our crowne much more glorious. Sometimes also hee afflicteth vs, that thereby our sinnes and corruptions may bee mortified and subdued, and we purged and purified by this fiery tryall: and therefore if after much praying and earnest suing wee are not freed, we are to know that the drosse of corruption is not yet sufficiently consumed, and we refined and purified, seeing the Lord continueth vs still in this fiery furnace; and that therefore of sinne are not yet cured, nor the core of corruption yet drawne out; seeing our skilfull and louing Physitian doth still cause these corrasiues to be applyed vnto vs. More especially he vseth these bitter medicines to wean vs from the loue of the World and worldly vanities, and therefore if after much loathing and complayning wee are still compelled to taste of them, we may hence conclude, that our loue and affection still too much doteth on these earthly things, and that wee haue as yet a desire to sucke this hurtfull milke, and to returne vnto these poysonous brests, if the Lord did not still annoint them with the Worme-wood & Gall of these temporary afflictions. So the Lord doth afflict vs, that his sanctifying (and saluing graces may bee confirmed and encreased in vs and therefore if they are still continued vpon vs after we haue often sued for help and deliuerance, let vs know that we haue not as yet profited by them as we ought, and that in infinite loue the Lord will not leaue vs, vntill hee haue brought vs to greater perfection. More especially we are corrected by the Lord, that by his chastisements our faith, repentance and obedience might be encreased, and therefore if after earnest suite we are not eased of them, we may assure our selues, that our faith yet needeth more exercise, and longer and greater experience of Gods loue, power & truth, in moderating our afflictions and supporting vs with the power of his might, that we may be able to beare them; and that wee haue not yet, as we ought, bewayled our former sins, hated our present corruptions, nor firmely (as wee should) resolued to labour in the vse of the meanes for the mortifying and subduing them; and for the time to come, to serue the Lord in holines and righteousnesse, with zeale, integrity and vprightnesse of heart. Finally, the Lord bringeth vs into these dangerous straights of trouble and misery, that wee may flee vnto him by hearty prayer for helpe and deliuerance; and therefore if wee haue already prayed often, and are not yet heard according to our desires, let vs perswade our selues, that the Lord stoppeth not his eares to our suites, but seeing that we are cold and negligent in soliciting of them, hee doth by these seeming refusals and temporary repulses, not make vs the more feruent and earnest in suing for his helpe, and in begging such benefits and deliuerances, as are much endeared vnto vs by his momentany denials and our owne wants; as it notably appeareth in the example of the woman of Canaan, who received at Christs hands diuers sore repulses, not because hee was purposed to deny her request, (for so gracious was he, that he neuer gaue final repulse to such humble suiters in their lawfull desires) but because hee would haue her prosecute it with greater earnestnesse, to which purpose one saith,

Math. 15. 22, 23.

Aug. in serm.

faith, that God in tribulation ſtirring vp the faith to aske, and himſelfe deferring to grant, doth not deny his ayde, but only intendeth and inlargeth our deſire. And therefore if being impatient of our croſſes we ſhould immoderately couet to haue them remoued before wee haue by them attained vnto theſe ends, wee doe in effect deſire that our corrections ſhould become (like thoſe of the Iſraelites) vaine and fruitleſſe. If we ſhould ſue to haue the playſters remoued, and the bitter potions taken away, before our ſores and ſickneſſe of ſinne be healed and cured, wee doe thereby deſire that the Lord would giue vs ouer as a deſperate cure, and leaue vs to rot and periſh in our diſeaſes and corruptions.

Sixtly, let vs conſider that the Lord oftentimes commeth to our ayde, and ſaueth and deliuereth vs out of our troubles, when wee are brought into the greateſt extremities, and paſt all hope of recouering out of our miſeries, for then is he moſt glorified and his wiſdome magnified, when as we being brought vnto our wits end, and ſeeing no poſſible meanes of eſcaping out of our tribulations, he findeth an eaſie paſſage and egreſſe out of them: then is the Omnipotency of his power manifeſted, when he deliuereth vs out of ſuch euils as doe quell and ouerwhelme all humane ſtrength; then is the proweſſe and might of our General beſt knowne, when he ſupporteth vs in moſt terrible conflicts, and giueth vs victory ouer inuincible enemies, wee ſeeing no ſtrength in our ſelues to make reſiſtance. And finally, then principally we are occaſioned to extoll and prayſe our heauenly Chyrurgion and Phyſician, when as he cureth our incurable wounds, and recouereth vs out of our moſt deſperate diſeaſes. An example whereof wee haue in Abraham, whom God continued childleſſe (though he had made gracious promiſes vnto him of multiplying his ſeed) vntill he and his wife were ſo ſtricken in age, that there was no hope remayning: And yet hee aboue hope, beleeuing vnder hope, that hee ſhould be the father of many Nations, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, And not weake in faith, neither conſidering his owne body, which was now dead, being almoſt an hundred yeare old, nor the deadneſſe of Sarahs wombe, but tarrying patiently, he did at length enioy the promiſe. So he promiſed the people of Iſraell that hee would bring them out of Egypt, and giue them poſſeſſion of the Land of Promiſe; but this hee performeth not whileſt Pharaoh liued, who was their friend, when as in reaſon there might haue beene ſome likelihood of it, but when they were moſt endangered to the rage and malice of their tyrannicall enemies, and had no appearance of hope to bee freed out of that cruell bondage, or to ſhake that iron yoke from off their necke. And thus afterwards hee deliuered them from the captiuity of Babylon, not when they were in their chiefe floure and ſtrength, and able to make ſome ſhift for themſelues; but when their caſe was vtterly deſperate, the Lord freed them out of this miſery, plucking them (as the Prophet ſpeaketh) like firebrands out of the fire. So he ſaued Dauid when he ſeemed vnto himſelfe vtterly forſaken, and deliuered him out of the hands of Saul, not by keeping him farre off from danger, but when hauing enuironed him about with a ſtrong army, he was euen ready to ſeize vpon him. And thus our Sauiour being in the ſhip with his Diſciples, did ſeeme to neglect them in their greateſt danger, and did not awake out of ſleepe, nor ariſe to deliuer them, till the ſhip was couered with waues, and ready to ſinke. And afterwards hee ſuffered them to be toſſed with a tempeſt, & by his miraculous walking on the Sea to be aſtoniſhed with feare; and then being brought into the laſt extremity, and paſt hope of eſcaping out of danger, he giueth vnto them comfort, by aſſuring them of his preſence. Finally, hee would not preſerue Lazarus life by going vnto him in the time of his ſickneſſe, nor yet when he was newly dead and buried, but he purpoſely ſtayeth from him foure dayes at the leaſt, after his death, and then goeth and raiſeth him to life. Neither did he by his Angell deliuer Peter out of priſon preſently after he was apprehended, but the very night before that Herod intended to proceed to his execution, when as he was ſtrongly guarded betweene two Souldiers, bound with chaines, and had the Keepers beſides waiting before the priſon doore, euen then when all hope was paſt to naturall reaſon, he ſaued and deliuered him out of that imminent danger. And ſo to conclude this point with an example which is freſh in memory, the Lord ſaued vs from the Gunpowder Treaſon, not by diſcouering it when it was firſt plotted, but euen a few houres before it ſhould haue beene put in execution, when as in humane reaſon it was much more likely to haue been ſtill concealed, then to haue beene kept ſecret ſo long before, eſpecially conſidering that beſides thoſe who were actours in this Tragedie, they had ſo many lookers on, who were well acquainted with their courſes and proceedings. The which experience of Gods mercy and power in deliuering vs and others, out of moſt deſperate dangers, ſhould mooue vs ſtill to depend and waite patiently vpon God in all our troubles and afflictions, not onely when we haue any likelihood of helpe, but when we ſeeme paſt all hope of recouery, ſeeing euen then the Lord is as able and ready to ſaue and deliuer vs out of theſe miſeries; and will aſſuredly doe it in his good time, if it will ſtand with his owne glory, our ſpirituall good and the euer-

Zach. 3. 2.
Pſal. 22. 1.
1. Sam. 23. 26.
Mark. 4. 37. 38.
Iohn 12. 6.

lasting saluation of our bodies and soules. And therefore in our greatest extremities, let this consideration moue vs to wait vpon God, and raysing and encouraging our dejected and fainting mindes, let vs say with the Psalmist, Why art thou cast downe my soule, and vnquiet within me? Waite on God, for I will yet giue him thankes for the helpe of his presence. Psal. 42.5.

9. Sect. 9. The eighth meanes is to consider, that God waiteth vpon vs to saue and deliuer vs in the fittest time.

Lastly, if we would with patience wait the Lords leisure when hee deferreth to helpe vs in affliction, let vs consider, that God no lesse waiteth vpon vs to doe vs good, than we to receiue it, expecting a conuenient time, when as hee may most fitly and seasonably extend his mercy in our deliuerance, both for his owne glory, and the furthering of our saluation; according to that of the Prophet; Yet therefore will the Lord waite, that he may haue mercy vpon you; and therefore he will be exalted, that hee may haue compassion vpon you. Esay 30.18. The consideration whereof should moue vs, with patience to attend Gods leisure for our freedome out of misery; for if the Lord waite vpon vs to shew mercy, much more should wee waite that wee may be partakers of it. If he be content to watch for the most conuenient time of deliuering vs out of trouble, and will not when it is come deferre his helpe (for who waiteth longer than he must needs, and who that is wise letteth passe his best opportunity of doing that good which he entendeth?) then how much more should we watch and waite with patience and comfort till this seasonable time come, when as it is best and fittest, that this promised mercy should be emparted vnto vs. Furthermore, let vs consider, that our greatest and longest afflictions shall not be able to separate vs from the infinite and euerlasting loue of God, as the Apostle telleth vs; but as in loue hee began to correct vs, so in the same loue he continueth our chastisements, that hee may by mortifying our sinne preserue vs from condemnation, and by perfecting his gifts and graces in vs, make vs fit for his euerlasting Kingdome; being euer ready in his tender compassion to vphold and strengthen vs in our greatest conflicts, and to giue vs victory by deliuering vs from them, when as it shall be most seasonable for our profit and best aduantage. Finally, let vs remember, that though our crosses and afflictions in this World be exceeding grieuous and tedious, yet they are light and momentany in comparison of those intolerable tortures and euerlasting torments of Hell fire, from which the Lord in his infinite goodnesse hath saued vs; vsing for this purpose the afflictions and sufferings of his deare Son, as the onely meritorious cause, and our afflictions who are the members of this body, as an inferiour, yet effectuall meanes of our freedome from these euils. And on the other side, let vs call to minde those vnspeakable and eternall joyes which we shall come vnto by this rough and thorny way of afflictions; which can in no comparison bee matched with our miseries; For the afflictions of this present world, are not worthy the glory which shall be reuealed, Rom. 8.18. seeing they being light and momentany, doe cause vnto vs a farre most excellent and eternall waight of glory, 2. Cor. 4.17. and being tolerable to him who beareth them vpon the shoulders of patience; and temporary, not out-lasting the vncertaine time of our short (though longest) liues, doe bring vs vnto an inheritance, immortall and vndefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserued for vs in the Heauens, Verse 6, 7. and that not through our owne power, which would soone faile, and at euery encounter hazard our saluation, but through the omnipotent power of God, out of whose almighty hand none can pull vs. In which regard we haue just cause of reioycing, though now for a season (if need require) wee are in heauinesse through manifold tentations, 1. Pet. 1.6. seeing the tryall of our faith, which is hereby exercised, being much more precious than gold that perisheth, shall be found vnto our prayse, and honour and glory, at the appearing of Iesus Christ, as the Apostle speaketh.

CHAP. XXXV.

Of certaine duties which wee are to performe for the strengthening of our faith and patience, when God deferreth to deliuer vs out of our afflictions, and of our thanksgiuing when we are deliuered.

1. Sect. 1. The first duetie is often to renew our repentance.

AND these are the things whereon wee must meditate for the confirming of our faith, affiance, hope and patience, when God deferreth the accomplishment of his promises, and doth not deliuer vs from our crosses and afflictions; now wee are to entreate briefly of certaine duties to be performed of vs for the same purpose which respect action. And first wee ought carefully when God continueth vpon vs these crosses and corrections, to renew oftentimes our repentance towardes God, and faith in Iesus Christ. Vnto the former, namely the practice of renewed repentance in the time of our afflictions, the Scriptures euery where exhort vs. So the Lord by the Prophet stirreth vp the people in captiuity to the performance of this duty. Turne vnto me, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will turne vnto you, saith the Lord of hosts. Zach. 1.3. And the Apostle Iames likewise perswadeth vnto it, Draw neere vnto God, and hee will draw neere vnto you, cleanse your hands you sinners, and purge your hearts ye wauering minded. Suffer afflictions, and sorrow ye, and weepe; let your laughter be turned into mourning, and your ioy into heauinesse. Iames 4.8, 9. Neither ther are wee in time of affliction to performe this duty after an ordinary manner, but with great earnestnesse, vehemency, and with all the powers of our heart and soules, according to that of the Prophet; Turne you vnto me with all your heart, with fasting, weeping and mourning; and rent your heart and not your clothes, and turne vnto the Lord your God. Vnto which earnest and sound conuersion the people of God exhort one another in the land of their captiuity. Let vs (say they) search and try our wayes, and turne againe to the Lord; Let vs lift vp our hearts with our hands vnto God in the Heauens. And thus seriously haue the faithfull from time to time renewed their repentance, when they haue by the hand of God beene brought into trouble and extremity, as we may see in the example of the Israelites oppressed by the Philistimes, who humbled themselues greatly, and wept so abundantly, that they are said to haue drawne water (as with buckets out of a Well) and to haue powred it out before the Lord. So Dauid saith, that he fainted in his mourning, and caused his bed euery night to swimme, and watered his couch with his teares. And among the people of the Iewes being in that great danger through Hamans Conspiracie, it is said, that there was great sorrow and fasting, and weeping, and mourning, and many lay in sackcloth and ashes. And in the time of their captiuity, the Prophet saith of the whole Church, that shee wept continually in the night, that her teares did runne downe by her cheekes, hauing none to comfort her. Which examples wee are to imitate when wee are in affliction, if we would haue our faith assured in Gods promises, when he deferreth to performe them; and our patience so confirmed that wee may endure and beare all crosses with comfort and contentment. For if our new committed sinnes, since the time of our first and generall repentance doe lie vpon our consciences vnrepented of, defiling our bodies and soules with their guilt and filthinesse; they will exceedingly weaken our assurance in Gods promises of helpe and deliuerance, and accordingly disable our patience, when as faith and hope, the chiefe pillars vpon which it resteth are taken from it.

For without this renewed repentance we cannot with any good ground of reason waite vpon God for freedome, and deliuerance with assurance and expectance of his helpe. First, because the promises are made vnto those onely who forsake their sinnes by true repentance, according to that of Azariah the Prophet, The Lord is with you, while yee be with him; and if yee seeke him, he will bee found of you; but if yee forsake him, hee will forsake you. So the Prophet Esay, Seeke the Lord whilest hee may be found, call yee vpon him whilest hee is neere. Let the wicked forsake his wayes, and the vnrighteous his owne imaginations, and returne vnto the Lord: and he will haue mercy vpon him, and to our God, for he is ready to forgiue. And Ezechiah to the same purpose saith to the people: If yee returne vnto the Lord, your brethren and your children, shall find mercy before them that led them captiues, and they shal returne vnto this land, for the Lord your God is gracious, and will not turne away his face from you, if yee conuert vnto him. And the Apostle telleth vs, that if wee iudge our selues, wee shall not be iudged of the Lord. So that still repentance is the condition of Gods promises, vpon the performance whereof they are likewise performed, according to that of Azariah, Whosoeuer returned in his affliction to the Lord God of Israel, and sought him, he was found of them. Especially when as this duty is performed with all earnestnesse and serious heartinesse, because this hath a more speciall promise from the Lord, speaking after this manner by his Prophet, Ye shall seeke me and finde me, because yee shall seeke me with all your heart. And consequently, they who liue in their sinnes without repentance, cannot apply vnto themselues these promises, because they doe not performe the condition, and so failing and faltring in their faith and hope, they easily fall into murmuring and impatiencie. Secondly, it is Gods maine end in correcting vs, to bring vs by his chastisements vnto vnfained repentance, and therefore if impenitently we continue in our sinnes, wee cannot waite vpon God for helpe and deliuerance, seeing so he should be frustrate of of his principall end, but may iustly expect that hee will double and redouble our afflictions, vntill according to his purpose hee hath brought vs vnto repentance and amendment; vnlesse wee be in the number of those whom hee giueth ouer as a desperate cure, reseruing them for euerlasting and hellish condemnation. So one saith, that God can this present day free and deliuer vs out of all our afflictions, but hee will not doe it till hee see vs purged and purified from our sins, soundly conuerted from our euill wayes, and our repentance not onely begun, but well setled and throughly confirmed in vs. And as the gold-smith will not take his gold out of the furnace, vntill he see that it is well purified from the drosse, because this was the end why hee cast it in; so the Lord will not deliuer vs out of this furnace of afflictions, vntill the drosse of sinne bee by our repentance purged away, because this was the end that moued him to cast vs into it. Thirdly wee must knowe and remember that our sins are the causes of our afflictions, & therefore till they be taken away by vnfained repentance, wee can haue no hope of the remouall of our crosses; for as the fire must needs

2. Chron. 30. 9.

1. Cor. 11. 31.

2 Chron. 15. 4.

Ier. 29. 13.

Chrysost. ad Pop. Antioch. Homil. 4. de patientia.

needs burne vs which wee cary in our boosomes vnlesse it bee cast out, or extinguished with water, because it is an effect which inseparably accompanieth its very essence and nature: so will this fire of sinne continually scorch vs with the heate of punishment, seeing they cannot bee severed a sunder, vnlesse we do put out and extinguish them, by casting vpon them the water and teares of vnfained repentance. Fourthly, sin is the sting of afflictions, which being pulled out they become harmelesse; but if it still remaine in them, it will infuse into them such a tormenting & deadly poyson, that the paine wil grow intolerable, & impossible to be endured with any patience. It doth exceedingly wound and weaken our faith, making vs to doubt of Gods loue towards vs, seeing we shew in our obedience so small fruits of loue towards him; which wounds will not bee cured till sinne the sting that made them bee pulled out, and the sores washed and bathed by vnfained repentance. And the guilt of sinne is vnto the conscience an intolerable burthen, which being added to the burthen of afflictions cannot possibly bee sustained with humane strength; and therefore it is no way able to beare them with patience, vnlesse wee lighten our loade, casting away sinne that presseth downe, by turning vnto God in vnfained repentance. And then bearing no burthen of our owne imposing, but that alone which God layeth vpon vs, wee shall easily sustaine it with comfort and contentment, both because it is light in waight, as the Apostle telleth vs, and also wee haue assured hope by Gods gracious promises, that within a short time we shal be freed from it.

9. Sect. 3. The second duty is often to renew our faith in Gods promises.

Secondly, hauing thus renewed our repentance, wee are in the next place to renew our faith, applying vnto our selues all the gracious promises of the Gospell, made vnto repentant sinners, especially those which concerne the free forgiuenesse of sinne, both in respect of the guilt and punishment, and our deliuerance out of all our afflictions and calamities in Gods due and appointed time, when as it will most stand with his glory and the euerlasting good of our owne soules. Whereby our faith being renewed and strengthened, we shall be the better enabled hopefully to expect the performance of Gods promises, although the things promised bee not subject to sight, and aboue the reach of naturall reason, for as the Apostle saith; Faith is the ground of things which are hoped for, and the euidence of things which are not seene. Heb. 11. 1. And although God tryeth vs with many delayes, yet wee will patiently attend his leisure; for as the Prophet speaketh, He that beleeueth shal not make haste; Esa. 28. 16. because he is assured by faith, that though hee haue not from God helpe and deliuerance, when he first desireth it, yet he shall most assuredly obtaine it, when as it will tend to his greatest benefit.

9. Sect. 4. The third duty is true humility, whereby we meekly submit our selues to Gods good pleasure.

The third meanes whereby wee may bee enabled to waite vpon God, when he deferreth to accomplish his promises, and to deliuer vs out of our troubles and afflictions, is to labour after true humilitie, whereby knowing and acknowledging our owne ignorance, which maketh vs vnable to discerne truely what is good or hurtfull for vs, wee doe wholly deny our selues and our owne wisedome, and resigne our selues ouer freely and wholy vnto God, to be ruled and ordered by him; as he thinketh good, whether it bee to liue in prosperity or affliction, plenty or pouerty, health or sickneſse, life or death, being perswaded, that hee is infinite in wisedome and knoweth what is best; infinite in power, and therefore able to bring it to passe maugre the malice and might of all opposers, and infinite also in loue and compassion; and therefore willing and ready to doe that which in his wisdome he seeth to bee fittest for vs. And this ground of patience the Apostle propoundeth, where hee saith, that the Lord knoweth to deliuer the godly out of tentation, that is, he so knoweth, that hee also both can and will powerfully effect it. 2. Pet. 2. 9. Vpon which foundation we must also build our patience and comfort, when as we continue long in trouble and affliction; and being perswaded of Gods infinite wisdome, power and loue, let vs resigne our selues wholy to his good will and pleasure, knowing that nothing euer miscaried which was intrusted to his care and prouidence. And though our afflictions bee tedious and bitter to flesh and bloud, yet let vs patiently endure that which hee in his wisdome and goodneſse is pleased to inflict, neither prescribing vnto him the measure of our afflictions (for it is absurd and ridiculous for the childe to make choice of his rod, and to appoint vnto his Father what number of stripes hee shall giue vnto him) nor the meanes by which wee would be deliuered, which are better knowne to God than vnto vs; nor finally, the time of our troubles, how long they shall last, and when wee would haue him to free vs from them. For so wee shall but fall into a dangerous premunire, and make forfeiture of our spirituall estate, by encroaching vpon Gods royall priuiledges and prerogatiues, seeing our office and dutie is onely to beare the crosse, and it is Gods part to take it away. According to the saying of an ancient Father; to know (saith he) the time when our tribulation and afflictions are to be taken from vs, it belongeth to him who hath inflicted them, but to beare them meekly with thanksgiuing, it is the proper worke of our patience. And if we thus meekly submit our selues to the will of Nostri est crucem ferre, Dei verò auferre. Nosse enim quando tribulationes auferre oporteat ille scit cui eas permisit inferri. Chrys. in Matth. 3. hom. 10.

of God, it will hereof come to passe, that both we shall beare our greatest afflictions with greater comfort and contentment, than worldly men the least defects of their earthly prosperity; & also that we shal much the sooner bee freed from them, seeing our gracious Father will no longer smite and beate vs, when as hee seeth vs already throughly humbled, vnlesse it be in the case of tryall, for the better manifestation of his graces in vs, that hereafter hee may crowne them with the greater glory.

The fourth meanes, enabling vs to waite vpon God in trouble and affliction, is to worke our hearts vnto firme affiance in him in all estates and conditions, that we may say with Iob, Though he kill me, yet will I trust in him, and that both in the presence and absence of inferiour meanes. For if in our crosses and calamities, wee doe not as wee ought, looke vnto God, but rest in the helpe of our worldly hopes and secondary causes; it is not possible to preserue our patience, seeing they will through vnfaithfulnesse betray vs when wee trust in them; through impotencie and insufficiency faile vs, when wee rest vpon them; and when they haue pulled vs vp (as we were sinking) to the top of the waters, and wee thinke our selues escaped out of the danger, they will let goe their hold for want of strength, or wilfully thrust vs backe againe into the gulfe of destruction: whereas if our whole affiance and confidence bee in the Lord and his promised helpe, wee shall bee well freed from the violence of passion, and neither bee much lifted vp with hope in the abundance of earthly helpes, because we know, that if hee doe but blow vpon them, they doe presently vanish; nor dejected with feare and despaire, when as they faile and forsake vs, because we are assured, that God in whom we trust, is able to deliuer vs without them, by his al-sufficient power, or else can when hee pleaseth prouide vs other meanes in their stead, which are more conuenient and better able to helpe vs. Let vs therefore in all our afflictions put our trust in the Lord, saying with the Church when hee deferreth his helpe. Be not terrible vnto mee, thou art my hope in the day of aduersity. And againe, Giue vs helpe against trouble, for vaine is the helpe of man. For it is better (as the Psalmist speaketh) to trust in the Lord, than to haue confidence in man: It is better to trust in the Lord than to haue confidence in Princes, for blessed is the man who trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is; as the Prophet pronounceth him, blessed in respect of his present condition, seeing hee is assured in Gods good time of helpe and deliuerance, and in the meane time of his gracious presence and assistance, enabling him to beare with patience and comfort whatsoeuer he is pleased to lay vpon him; and blessed in respect of his future hopes, seeing he shall haue his patience, and humble waiting on the Lords leisure, rewarded and crowned with euerlasting happinesse. Whereas contrariwise, Cursed is the man who trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arme, and withdraweth his heart from the Lord; because hee shall but inherit the winde, and bee frustrated of his hope and confidence, leaning vpon such weake reeds and broken staues, as will most faile and deceiue, when as they are most rested vpon. According to that lamentable complaint of the afflicted Church Whilest we waited for our vaine helpe, our eyes failed; and in our waiting wee looked for a Nation that could not saue vs.

Lastly, because in our afflictions we are so weake and wayward, that we are impatient of any delay, therefore we are to haue often our recourse vnto God by feruent and effectuall prayers, earnestly crying and crauing for freedome & deliuerance in such a time as the Lord seeth fittest for his owne glory and our spirituall good; and that in the meane time hee will giue vnto vs such strength and patience, and so inwardly refresh vs with the sweete feeling of his loue and comforts of his holy Spirit, that we may bee able to endure our afflictions, as long as he shall be pleased to continue them vpon vs; grounding these our prayers vpon his word and gracious promises, whereby hee hath assured vs, that hee will saue and deliuer vs, if wee call vpon him, when as it shall be most profitable for vs to receiue this mercy; and that in the meane while hee will so support vs with the power of his might, that wee shall not faint in the day of tryall, nor bee ouerwhelmed with the waight of afflictions.

And thus haue I shewed how the Christian is to cary and demeane himselfe whilest he is vnder the crosse: Now in the last place, according to our order propounded in the beginning of this second Booke, wee are briefly to declare what duety he is to performe, after that through Gods grace and mercifull assistance hee is freed from his afflictions. And this in a word is, out of a heart truely and vnfainedly thankfull to render vnto the Lord all glory, prayse and thanksgiuing for his deliuerance out of these troubles. For this dutie the Lord himselfe requireth of vs; Call vpon mee in the day of trouble; so will I deliuer thee, and thou shalt glorifie me. So the prophet Ieremy, Sing vnto the Lord, prayse yee the Lord, for he hath deliuered the soule of the poore from the hand of the wicked. And the Psalmist diuersifying the seuerall miseries, out of which the Lord deliuereth his people, doth take occasion thereby to incite and stirre men vp to praise his holy name. Let them therefore (saith he) con-

Sect. 4. e third du- s true ho- ity, wherby meekely mit our- es to Gods d plea-

Sect. 5. The fourth duty is to trust in God in all estates, in the absence and absence of inferiour means. Esa 13.25.

Ier. 17. 17. Psal. 108 12 Psal. 118. 8. 9. Ier. 17. 7.

Ier. 17. 5.

Lam. 4. 17.

Sect. 6. The fifth duty is frequent and feruent prayer.

Sect. 7. That after our deliuerance wee must render vnto God prayse and thanksgiuing.

Psal. 50. 15. Ier. 20. 13. Heb. 13. 15.

confeſſe before the Lord his louing kindneſſe, and his wonderful workes before the ſonnes of men; and let them offer the ſacrifice of prayſe, and declare his workes with reioycing. Let them exalt him in the congregation of the people, and prayſe him in the aſſembly of the Elders. And this duty the Lord highly prizeth, preferring it farre aboue all ſacrifices and burnt offerings. According to that of the Pſalmiſt. Will I eate the fleſh of bulls? or drink the blood of goats? Offer vnto God prayſe, and pay thy vowes vnto the moſt high. In regard whereof he profeſſeth, that he will much rather performe it than the other, as being much more acceptable: I will prayſe (ſaith he) the name of God with a ſong, and magnifie him with thankſgiuing; for this ſhall pleaſe the Lord better than a young bullocke that hath hornes and hooſes. Yea, this is the end which not onely God propoundeth of our deliuerances, that wee ſhould glorifie him, but which the faithfull alſo propound vnto themſelues in all their troubles, therefore eſpecially crauing helpe and ſuccour at Gods hands in their afflictions, that they may haue occaſion of thankſgiuing, and of lauding and magnifying his holy name for their deliuerance. So Dauid prayeth, Haue mercy vpon mee, O Lord, conſider my trouble which I ſuffer of them that hate me, thou that lifteſt me from the gates of death, that I may ſhew all thy prayſes within the gates of the daughter of Sion, and reioyce in thy ſalnation. And elſe where, Saue vs, O Lord our God, and gather vs from among the heathen, that we may prayſe thy holy name, and glory in thy prayſe. And becauſe through their great corruption of nature the faithfull haue feared to forget ſo excellent a dutie after their deliuerance, (like vnto the leapers who being cleanſed, onely one often returned to giue thankes) therefore they haue beene ready to binde themſelues by ſolemne vow and promiſe to the performance of it; according to that of the Prophet, Take away all iniquity, and receiue vs graciouſly, ſo will wee render the calues of our lippes. And thus Danid hauing bound himſelfe by vow to praiſe God for his deliuerance, after he was deliuered penned an excellent Pſalme of thankſgiuing, wherein hee performeth his vowes vnto God. What ſhall I render (ſaith he) vnto the Lord for all his benefits towards me? I will take the cup of ſalnation, and will call vpon the name of the Lord. I will pay my vowes vnto the Lord, euen now in the preſence of all his people. I will offer vnto thee a ſacrifice of prayſe, and will call vpon the name of the Lord. And againe, I will prayſe thee, becauſe thou haſt heard me, and haſt beene my deliuerance. The which vowes of thankeſgiuing, the Lord himſelfe requires, Offer vnto God prayſe, and pay thy vowes vnto the moſt high. And therefore ſeeing theſe thanks

Pſa. 107. 22. 23. 32.

Pſal. 50. 13. 14.

Pſal. 69. 30. 31.

Pſal. 9. 13. 14. & 106. 47.

Hoſ. 14. 3.

Pſal. 116. 3. 12. 13. 14. 17.

Pſal. 118. 21. & 50. 14.

and prayſe are the maine end of our deliuerances, which both God and the faithfull do chiefly aime at, let vs carefully endeauour to attaine vnto it; for by the rule of reaſon the end is alwayes better than that which is deſtinated vnto it; and conſequently if wee muſt eſteeme our deliuerance it ſelfe, by which wee are freed from all our troubles; much more accompt are we to make of the prayſes of God, and our thankſgiuing after that we are eſcaped; ſeeing it is the end for which God deliuereth vs, and we deſire to bee deliuered. And as in the time of our affliction wee are diligent in prayer, and earneſt ſuiters vnto God for his helpe and aide; ſo hauing obtained it, let vs bee as forward and ready to returne vnto him thankes and prayſe for his mercy and goodneſſe. For otherwiſe wee ſhall diſcouer vnto God and our owne conſciences moſt ſhamefull ingratitude, in that being ſuch bare banke-rupts, that wee haue nothing to returne vnto God for all his benefits, we will not remaine thankfull debters; and hauing nothing elſe to render vnto him for all his mercies, wee will not ſo much as yeeld vnto him prayſe and thankes. Yea, wee ſhall plainly proue, that we are not in the number of Gods faithfull people, whoſe conſtant practice in all ages hath beene, to magnifie and glorifie the holy name of God, when they haue beene deliuered out of any afflictions, as it plainely appeareth in ſo many places of the ſacred Scriptures; that it is but loſt time to inſiſt vpon them.

Now this thankfulneſſe whereby wee glorifie God, for his gracious deliuerance of vs out of trouble and affliction, is not to bee onely formall and externall, but is firſt and principally to bee ſeated in our minds and hearts, wherein wee are perpetually to retaine a gratefull remembrance of Gods mercy towards vs, with a reſolued purpoſe and intention in all things to glorifie his holy name, when as any occaſion is offered or may betaken by vs. For the Prophet Malachie threatneth a curſe againſt the Prieſts which was to fall vpon them, if they did not conſider, or put it in their heart to giue glory vnto the Lord. And the Apoſtle exhorteth vs in all things to intend and aime at Gods glory, Whether (ſaith he) yee eat or drinke, or whatſoeuer yee doe, doe all to the glory of God. But yet this thankfulneſſe is not wholy to be reſerued (as it were) in the cloſe priſon of our owne breſts, for ſo God ſhould loſe the glory, our neighbours a good example, and wee faile in the performance of our duty, but it is alſo to be profeſſed with our mouthes, and our profeſſion to be approued by our workes and actions. In our ſpeeches we are to declare what great things the Lord hath done for vs, to magnifie his mercies for our deliuerances out of trouble, and to praiſe his

Mal. 2. 2.

1. Cor. 10. 31.

§. 8. What kinde of thankfulneſſe is to be offered vnto God for our deliuerance.

his holy Name in Psalmes, Hymnes and spirituall Songs, sweetning the Musique of the voice with the harmonious melody of our hearts. And because the Lord is glorified, not onely in his prayses, according to the saying in the Psalmes, Hee that sacrificeth praise, doth glorifie me; but also in all our holy communications, and in our religious, honest and sauoury speeches; therefore wee must acquaint our tongues with the Language of Canaan, and auoyding all corrupt and vnprofitable words, we must set a watch before the doore of our lips, and carefully take heed that our speeches be so powdered with the salt of wisdome and holinesse, that they may not onely glorifie God, but also tend to the edification of those that heare vs. Finally, because thankfulnesse professed is not sufficient, vnlesse it also approued by our workes of godlinesse and sanctification; therefore wee must endeauour also that our lights may so shine before men, that seeing our good workes, they may glorifie our Father in Heauen. And to this end let vs take heed that we doe not dimme or dazle this light, by ouer-shadowing it with the black cloud of sinne and wickednesse; but especially let vs labour to mortifie those corruptions, and to forsake those sinnes, which our owne consciences doe condemne to bee the likeliest causes of our late afflictions, lest lying and liuing still in our sinnes, and impenitently going forward in our former euill courses, we fall into a relapse of Gods escaped iudgements, and after our deliuerance from lesser afflictions, haue (as our Sauiour speaketh) some worser punishment inflicted vpon vs. And withall let vs labour in the contrary workes of holinesse and righteousnesse, endeauouring by our abundant fruits of an holy and sanctified life, that our heauenly Father may be glorified; and so may we be assured that the Lord will for the time to come, either preserue vs out of such afflictions, as wee haue formerly suffered, or will inflict them onely for our triall, and the manifestation of his gifts and graces in vs; bringing vs as his most approoued Souldiers into this conflict of tentations, that wee may obtaine victory ouer all our spirituall enemies, and afterwards bee crowned with all glory and happinesse in his heauenly Kingdome, which he grant vnto vs that hath dearely bought it for vs, Iesus Christ the righteous, to whom with the Father, and the holy Spirit, be rendered of vs, and his whole Church, all honour and prayse, power, majesty and dominion both now and for euermore. Amen.

Col. 3. 16.

Psal. 50. 23.

Col. 4. 6.

Ephes. 4. 29.

Matth. 5. 16.

Iohn 5. 14.

Iohn 15. 8.

FINIS.

THE CHRISTIAN WARFARE,

The Fourth and laſt Part.

CONTAYNING THE CONFLICT BETWEENE THE FLESH AND THE SPIRIT:

WHEREIN IS DESCRIBED THE Nature of theſe Combatants, the malice and power of the Fleſh and fleſhly Luſts, with the meanes whereby wee may ſubdue and ouercome them.

By I. DOWNAME Bachelar in Diuinitie, and Preacher of GODS Word.

GAL. 5.17.

For the Fleſh luſteth againſt the Spirit, and the Spirit againſt the Fleſh, and theſe are contrary the one to the other, ſo that yee cannot doe the thing that yee would.

LONDON,
Printed by William Stansby, for Philemon Stephens and Chriſtopher Meredith, at the Golden Lyon in Pauls Church-yard, 1633.

- In this Conflict two things are to be considered.
  - 1. The Enemies and Combatants which are described
    - 1. By their names and natures, the { Flesh, Spirit. } Chap. 1. to 8.
    - 2. Their properties where is shewed that the flesh is an enemy exceeding dangerous; the which appeareth first in respect
      - 1. Of its own nature because it is very
        - Malicious, Chap. 8. { In it selfe, § 1. to 5. / Vnto vs, § 5. to 13.
        - powerfull in respect both of its
          - strength and that either { simply in it selfe, Chap. 9. § 1, 2. / compared with the Spirit, § 3.
          - Policy the which is considered either
            - 1. Generally where it is shewed that it is { great in it selfe, Chap. 10. § 1. / pernicious to vs. § 2.
            - 2. Specially, where of the speciall deceits which respect either
              - our persons and states, Chap. 11, 12, 13.
              - Certaine duties required which are of two sorts.
                - The first respect mortifying of our sinnes, Chap. 14, 15.
                - The second the practice of vertuous actions, by which it seeketh
                  - 1. To hinder vs from practising them, Chap. 16. 2.
                  - 2. To disturbe vs in them, Chap. 17. § 1, 2.
                  - 3. To withdraw vs from them, Chap. 17. § 3, 4.
      - 2. Of diuers aduantages which it hath against vs, the which are two: the { 1. That it dwelleth in vs, Chap. 18. § 1, 2, 3. / 2. That it is neuer weary in fighting against vs, § 4.
  - 2. The fight betweene them, in which consider two things,
    - 1. The Conflict it selfe where consider
      - 1. That there is such a Conflict in euery christian, Lib. 2. Chap. 1.
      - 2. The nature of it, where consider those things which are
        - more essentiall, as
          - 1. The causes of it which are { Efficient, Chap. 2. / Formall, Chap. 3.
          - 2. The manner of it in respect of
            - 1. The whole person regenerate, Chap. 4.
            - 2. His seuerall faculties and parts, Chap. 5, 6.
        - lesse essentiall, the which are three
          - 1. The effects of it the which are two
            - 1. That the man regenerate cannot with full consent of will chuse & commit any euill, Chap. 7. § 1, 2.
            - 2. That hee cannot with full consent of will choose and doe any good.
          - 2. The subiect in whom it is fought which is handled
            - 1. Negatiuely where is shewed that this fight is not in those who are
              - 1. Perfectly regenerate, Chap. 8. § 1.
              - 2. Vnregenerate. Where of the differences betweene the combate that is in the vnregenerate & the regenerate, C. 8, 9.
            - 2. Affirmatiuely. Where is shewed that it is in all the regenerate, and the signes of it, Chap. 10 § 10, 11, 12.
          - 3. The euent and successe of the fight.
    - 2. The meanes to obtaine victory vnto which two things are required
      - 1. That we remember certaine reasons which may encourage vs to the fight, Chap. 19.
      - 1. A due preparation to the fight vnto which two things are required
        - 1. The putting on of the spirituall armour, Chap 20. § 1.
        - 2. The right vse of certain meanes whereby we may be enabled to ouercome: the which are two
          - 1. The obseruing of certaine rules which are of two sorts,
            - 1. Tending to weaken the flesh the which are two
              - 1. To withdraw all meanes by which it is strengthened, Chap. 20 § 3, 4.
              - 2. To vse all meanes by which it may bee weakened, Chap. 21. 22, 23.
            - 2. Tending to the strengthening of the spirit, the which are two
              - 1. To shunne the meanes whereby it is weakened, Chap. 24.
              - 2. To vse the meanes whereby it is strengthened, Chap. 25.
      - 2. The right vse of certain meanes whereby we may be enabled to ouercome: the which are two
      - 3. A valorous carriage of our selues in the Conflict.

THE CHRISTIAN WARFARE.

The fourth Part.

OF THE CONFLICT BETWEENE THE SPIRIT AND THE FLESH: WHEREIN is shewed what they are, and the dangerousnesse of this Enemie the Flesh, with the aduantages which it hath against vs.

The first Booke.

CHAP. I.

An Introduction into the following Discourse, wherein is shewed, that our Enemies in the Christian warfare are many, mighty and dangerous, especially our owne flesh, with the lusts thereof.

1. Sect. 1. That we are to expect no peace in this life, but to fight continually against the enemies of our saluation.

IT was the errour of the Apostles in the infancie of their faith, that being admitted Christs disciples, they should abound in earthly priuiledges; for as they imagined that their Lord and Master should like a mighty Monarch rule in the World, triumphing ouer all his own, and the Churches enemies, & raigning in all Majesticall glory and Peacefull plentie: so they hoped that they, who for the present followed him in the state of affliction, should afterwards securely rest from all troubles & dangers, haue the chiefe preferments in his glorious Kingdome, and the largest share in this worldly happinesse. The like conceipt possesseth many at their first entrance into the profession of Christian Religion, who doe not with Abraham and the rest of the Patriarches, see and beleeue the promises afarre off, but expecting present reward and wages for their seruice, imagine that now they haue for Gods sake forsaken the pleasures of sin, they shall haue in liew thereof immunitie from dangers, and freedome from afflictions, fame and fauour among men for their well deseruing, secure plenty, and prosperous peace in regard both of outward and inward enemies. And therefore being sicke of the same diſeaſe, the like medicines are to bee vſed for their recouerie, which our Sauiour applied vnto his Apoſtles; namely they are to be informed that [a] Chriſts Kingdome is not of this world, that [b] in the world they ſhall haue afflictions, and [c] by many tribulations enter into the Kingdome of Heauen; that [d] Chriſt came not to bring peace and ſecurity, but fire and ſword, warres and diſſenſions, not onely betweene ſtrangers and enemies, but alſo among neareſt kindred and deareſt friends. Which warres and garboiles though they doe not preſently appeare after our conuerſion vnto God, and deliuerance out of that Egyptian ſeruitude of ſinne and Sathan, leſt being diſcouraged with our rough entertainement in our firſt entrance into the Chriſtian warfare, wee ſhould returne into our thraldome, and redeeme a baſe and diſhonourable peace, at the deare price of helliſh bondage; yet are wee ſure to meete with theſe difficulties and dangers, before wee can bee full conquerours and enter into the poſſeſſion of the holy Land.

Heb. 11. 13.

a Iob. 18.36. b & 16.33. c Act. 14.22. d Matth. 10. 34.

Q. Sect. 2. That we are daily aſſaulted with forraigne forces the world and the Diuell.

For no ſooner is the Chriſtian waged into Gods warfare, by receiuing the Preſſe-money of ſome ſauing graces, and taking vpon him the Colours of an outward profeſſion, wherby he is known to be a ſeruant and ſouldier of Ieſus Chriſt; but preſently, there ſetteth vpon him a world of enemies, ſometime aſſaulting him in the open field, by affliction and perſecution, and ſometime out of the ſecret ambuſhments of earthly proſperitie. Beſides with viſible forces of worldly foes, hee is continually encountred with principalities and powers, ſpirituall wickednesſes in high places, and inuiſible enemies, euen innumerable legions of infernall ſpirits, and the mighty troupes of that helliſh armie.

Ephes. 6.11.

Q. Sect. 3. That our outward enemies are not ſo dangerous, as our owne fleſh and fleſhly luſts.

But though theſe forraigne foes being mighty and malicious, are exceeding terrible to the Chriſtian ſouldiour; yet are they nothing ſo dangerous, as thoſe inbred enemies which wee nouriſh in our owne boſomes, who like ſecret traytors diſarme vs of our chiefe weapons and munition, when as wee are aſſaulted with thoſe profeſſed enemies, and lay vs open and naked to bee ſpoiled by their inuaſions, and wounded by their blowes. For ſo were wee in our creation (through Gods infinite goodneſſe) furniſhed with ſuch impenetrable Armour of innocencie and righteouſneſſe, that Sathan with all his helliſh army could not hurt vs; and therefore not being able to preuaile by force and violence, he entertained with our firſt parents a treacherous parley, wherein hee perſwaded them to put off their armes, and to entertaine into their ſoules a troupe of his tentations, which were no ſooner entred, but preſently they vanquiſhed all their forces, ranſackt their ſoules of all ſpirituall graces, and brought them into a miſerable ſubjection through his helliſh tyrannie. And that he might the better keepe them in perpetuall obedience, hee did not onely kill and ſpoile the natural inhabitants, Gods ſauing graces, but placed euen in the chiefe Caſtle of their ſoules, a ſtrong gariſon of carnall corruptions and fleſhly luſts, which ſhould reſerue them like a conquered Citie, for his owne vſe, and (as it were) open the gates vnto him and his tentations, when as he pleaſed to make an entrance.

Q. Sect. 4. That Sathan and the world could not hurt vs, were they not ayded by our owne fleſh.

And this was the fountaine of all our miſerie, and the chiefe cauſe and meanes of Sathans tyrannous ſoueraigntie, and of our baſe thraldome and ſlauerie; yea this is the cauſe why hee ſtill preuaileth and holdeth vs captiue to doe his will. For thoſe forraigne forces, led vnder the conduct of Sathan and the world, could neuer vanquiſh vs; vnleſſe the fleſh and the luſts thereof did betray vs into their hands; their wiſdome could not circumuent vs, vnleſſe theſe ſecret traytors gaue them continuall intelligence of all aduantages; their malice and power could not hurt vs, if they had not a ſtrong partie to aſſiſt them in our owne boſomes, who by their mutinous ſedition and ciuill warres, weaken vs and ſtrengthen them; neither could they euer conquer vs, if theſe inteſtine rebels did not open the gates and let in the troupes of their tentations. And therefore as I haue indeauoured to arme and ſtrengthen the weake Chriſtian againſt the forces of thoſe forraigne enemies, ſo it now remaineth, that I ſhould adde to the former, this laſt part of the Chriſtian warfare, deſcribing this conflict betweene the fleſh and the ſpirit; and teaching the Chriſtian with what aydes and ſupplies he muſt ſupport his weakeneſſe in theſe dangerous encounters, how he muſt keepe vnder theſe wicked traytours, and ſo carry himſelfe and manage his weapons, as that he may be aſſured to obtaine the victory.

CHAP. II.

Of the fleſh and the diuers ſignifications of it, and what we are to vnderſtand by it in the following diſcourſe.

Q. Sect. 1. That there is in a chriſtian this fight betweene the fleſh and ſpirit.

HEre firſt wee will ſpeake of the enemies which fight one againſt another in this Warfare, and then of their conflict. In the former wee will conſider firſt, what theſe enemies are, and then how dangerous and pernicious they are vnto vs if they bee not ſubdued and kept in ſubjection to them which fight on our ſide againſt them. The enemies which thus fight with one another are the Fleſh and the the Spirit, with an innumerable armie of their motions and lusts. Both which, with all their forces dwel in euery true Christian, making mutuall oppositiõ, the one nilling what the other willeth, and hindring and destroying, that which the other furthereth and aduanceth. This plainely appeareth by the Scriptures, which both discouer this hostile dissension & contrarie faction in the same man, & the opposition & conflict which ariseth from their enmitie and cohabitation, their naturall diuision and locall vnion, So the Apostle speaketh plainely of this conflict in all Christians. Gal. 5.17. The flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh, and these are contrarie one to another; and particularly in himselfe, where he thus complaineth, But I see another law in my members, rebelling, or warring, against the law of my minde, and bringing me into captiuitie to the law of sinne, which is in my members. And againe, I my selfe in my mind serue the law of God, but with my flesh the law of sinne. And hence it is that the Apostle Peter exhorteth vs, to fight valiantly against these lusts, because they doe continually make warre against vs. Dearely beloued (saith he) I beseech you as strangers and pilgrimes, abstaine from fleshly lusts, which fight against the soule. 1. Pet. 2. 11.

Now that wee may like Christs faithfull souldiers, after a lawfull and laudable manner thus fight against them, wee must in the first place labour to know what they are, least we mistake our enemies for our friends; to which end wee are to vnderstand that the flesh is diuersly taken in the scriptures: As (to omit many acceptations of it which are far off and nothing pertinent to our present purpose) sometime it is taken for all mankinde; In which sense it is said, that all a flesh had corrupted his way vpon the Earth, that is, all mankind; that all flesh is b grasse, that is, all mankinde is fraile and momentany, and that God would c poure out his spirit vpon all flesh, that is, vpon men of all sorts and conditions. Sometimes it is taken for the whole man, consisting of soule and body. And thus our Sauiour Christ is said, to haue beene put to death concerning the flesh, that is, his humane nature, his body being seuered from his soule, and his soule (in his present sense and feeling) from his God, when as vpon the crosse he bore his wrath for our sinnes: and the Psalmist, hauing said, that he d would not feare what flesh could doe vnto him, Ps. 56.4. expoundeth himselfe in the eleuenth verse; In God (saith he) haue I put my trust, I will not be afraid what man can doe vnto mee. Sometimes it is taken for the body of man alone consisting of many members. And so the Apostle exhorteth vs to cleanse our selues from all filthinesse of the flesh, and of the spirit; that is, body and soule; and the Psalmist saith, that the enemies of the Church had cruelly giuen the flesh of Gods Saints to the beasts of the Earth, that is, the dead bodies of Gods seruants, which also as he saith in the same place, were giuen to be meate to the fowles of the Heauen. Sometime this word flesh signifieth the whole nature of man, as it is borne in corruption and polluted with originall sinne. And thus our Sauiour saith, that, that which is borne of the flesh, is flesh; that is, if the parents bee defiled with sinne, then needs must the children bee polluted with their corruption; for a stinking fountaine cannot bring forth sweet waters; and who (as Iob saith) can bring a cleane thing out of filthinesse? And thus the Apostle saith, that they who are in the flesh, that is, remaine in that corrupt and sinfull condition in which they were borne, cannot please God. But in none of these senses are wee to conceiue the flesh to bee our enemie; for neither may we Timon-like be at enmity with mankinde; nor like mad-men make warre and offer violence against our owne persons, nor ought wee with the Baalites and Papists to fight against our owne bodies; neither is there any warre in the naturall man borne in corruption, seeing he is wholly flesh and vnder Sathans gouernment, who like the strong man whilest hee keepeth the house, possesseth all in peace; sauing that now and then there is some ciuill dissension and smal iarres betweene the will and conscience, and one passion with another, which are quickly taken vp, as wee shall shew hereafter.

But wee are further to consider, that the flesh is not onely thus substantially taken for things really and materially by themselues subsisting, but also for accidents and qualities; In which sense it is taken two wayes in the Scriptures: First for that qualitie of corruption, frailtie and infirmitie of the humane nature, which is not sinne, but rather the effect and punishment which attendeth and waiteth vpon it; and in this sense it is said of the Israelits, that he turned away his wrath from them, because he remembred that they were but flesh, and a winde that passeth away and commeth not againe. Thus also it is said that flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdome of God, and what this flesh and bloud is, hee expoundeth in the next words, neither doth corruption inherite corruption. And thus the Apostle saith, that though hee walked in the flesh, yet hee did not warre after the flesh, not with weake and carnall, but with strong & mighty weapons, which were able to cast downe all that opposed against them; and in this sense (as I take it) are wee to vnderstand the speech of our Sauiour to his Apostles, The Spirit indeed is willing, but the Flesh is weake. And in this signification the flesh is not to be taken for a ma-

Psal. 79.2.

Iohn 3.6.

Iob 14.4.

Rom. 8.8.

Sect. 3. Diuers significations of the word flesh, taken for accidents and qualities.

1. Cor. 15.50.

2. Cor. 10.2.3.4.

Mat. 26.41.

malicious enemie, but rather a weake and feeble friend, which is not to bee opposed in hostile manner (as it were) with a sword and speare, but rather to bee strengthned with the cordials of comfort, after that the corruption of sinne, which is the cause thereof, by the physicke of the Word is purged away.

Q. Sect. 4. The flesh taken for the corruption of nature.

Secondly, the flesh is taken for the whole corruption of nature, or for that originall sinne, whereby the whole nature of man, with all the powers and faculties of his soule and body are wholy defiled, the image of God vtterly defaced, and he quite disabled vnto all good, and made prone vnto all manner of euill, the which as it is the child and off-spring of our first parents sinne, so is it the mother and nurse of all actuall transgressions, and of all our rebellion against God and his will. And this carnall corruption possesseth and ouer-spreadeth the whole man before regeneration, defiling and disabling his body and soule, with all the members, parts, and faculties of them, raigning and ruling in him in his full strength a as King & soueraigne, and making him obedient to the sinfull lusts thereof; and after regeneration it still remaineth and dwelleth in him, (although wounded and weakened) like a wicked enemie and false traytor, rebelling against the Spirit, and resisting the good motions thereof; and though it be deposed from the regencie, and expelled (as it were) out of the heart of the kingdome, yet (like the cursed Cananites) it still keepeth residence in the borders of the land, and after it is beaten out of the City doth still dwell in the Suburbs, whence it much molesteth the spirituall part, and is to the regenerate man a snare to intangle him, and a trap to catch him, a scourge to his sides, and a thorne in his eyes, sometime assaulting him by open violence, and sometime indangering him by secret ambushments and hidden vnderminings. In which sense the flesh is taken either for the whole nature of man, as it commeth into the world corrupted & defiled with sin, seeing he is nothing but a masse of corruption and a sinke of all filthinesse, till he be regenerate by the Spirit of God; or else for that part of a Christian, which remaineth still vnregenerate after his effectual calling and sound conuersion vnto God. In the former signification wee are to vnderstand all those places, where vnregenerate and wicked men are called flesh, as where our Sauiour saith, that that which is borne of the flesh is flesh: and the Apostle Paul, that, when wee were in the flesh, the motions of sinne which were by the Law did worke in our members, to bring forth fruit vnto death; and that they who are in the flesh cannot please God. In the later wee are to vnderstand it when it is applyed vnto the faithfull, who are but in part regenerate, to signifie the reliques of naturall corruption and the vicious qualitie of sin, which doth still dwell and remaine in them vnmortified and vnsubdued. So the Apostle complaineth, that there was giuen him a pricke in the flesh, that in his flesh dwelled no good thing, and that in the flesh hee serued the Law of sinne. And thus he would haue the incestuous person deliuered to Sathan, for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit (that is the regenerate man) might be saued in the day of the Lord Iesus. But most plainely and distinctly doth he speake of it, where hee saith, that the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against flesh, and that these are contrarie the one to the other, bringing forth in the same man diuers and contrarie fruits, as hee there at large describeth them.

Now in this last sense we are to take the word flesh in the following discourse, vnderstanding thereby those reliques of corruption, which after regeneration doe still remaine in vs, the corrupt quality of sinne adhering to all the parts and faculties of our soules and bodies, vnmortified and vncrucified, or that part of a Christian which is vnregenerate and continually fighteth and striueth against the spirit. And this is the malicious enemie that assisteth Sathan and the world, to worke our vtter ouerthrow, vnto which the Scriptures haue giuen many names, whereby the nature and qualities thereof are implyed, that we may the better know it, and arme our selues to fight against it. For it is called the old man, not onely because in age and antiquitie, it almost matcheth humane nature; but rather to imply vnto vs, that like those, who, by reason of their old age, haue had much experience, it is very subtle and politique, and so full of sleights and stratagems, that if we be not exceeding wary and watchfull it will easily circumuent vs. It is called also the b naturall man, because this corruption ouerspreadeth the whole nature of all men who are vnregenerate; for howsoeuer in the first creation, wee were good and free from sinne, yet after the fall of our first parents, wee were so degenerate and infected in our natures with the poyson of their corruption, that it is as naturall, familiar and easie to sin and offend God, as for a man to eate, drinke and sleepe, for a fish to swim, a bird to flie, or for a stone to descend downwards. It is called the old Adam, to leade vs vnto the fountaine from which it sprung, that is, not God who made all things good, but our first Parents, who as they lost the image of God by their fall and were wholy corrupted in their owne natures, so they deriued their corruption vnto all their posterity, & hauing first defiled themselues with this spirituall Leprosie did also infect therewithall that nu-

Q. Sect. 5. That the flesh in this discourse signifieth the part vnregenerate in a christian, or the reliques of corruption remaining after sanctification.

Iob. 3. 6. Rom. 7. 5.

Rom. 8. 8.

a Rom. 6. 6. Ephes. 4. 22. Col. 3. 9.

b 1. Cor. 2. 14.

numerous off-spring which descended of them. It is called the c body, because this corruption d welleth in the bodie, and exerciseth it selfe in it and by it, as by its instrument in the committing and perpetrating of all the workes of darknesse; and that we may the more clearely discerne what body the Apostle meaneth, he calleth it the d body of sinne, and the e body of the sinnes of the flesh, because the flesh by the body committeth all manner of sinne and wickednesse. It is called the f body of death, because it is the cause of death and condemnation, in which sense Elizeus his Disciples said, that death was in the pot, that is, deadly poysonous hearbs, which would cause them to dye who had tasted of them. It is called also g sinne, not onely because it selfe is sinne, but also the roote and fountaine of all other wickednesse; and the h sinne that dwelleth in vs, because like the strong man it keepeth sure possession till a stronger commeth and dispossesseth it, euen the Spirit of God dwelling in vs. It is called i euill concupiscence, because it filleth vs with sinfull lusts, & maketh vs to stand in opposition against the will of God, desiring and willing, that which hee nilleth and condemneth. It is called k ἐυπερίστατος ἁμαρτία, the sinne which encloseth or besetteth vs about, because this hellish Captaine with a whole armie of sinfull lusts enuiron vs on every side, so as wee cannot possibly of our selues escape out of their ambushments. Finally, it is called the law of sinne, the l law of the members, and the m law of death; because it is the rule of all the naturall mans actions, guiding him into all wickednesse, the commander of all his parts and members, vnto whose injunctions they doe like subjects yeeld free and willing obedience, the which their seruice and subjection is in the end rewarded with euerlasting death of body and soule.

a Iob 4. 24.
b Iob 6 63.
c 1. Ioh. 5. 6. 7.

d Eccles. 12 7. Act. 7. 59. 2. Cor. 7. 1.

e 1. Cor. 2. 11. Rom. 12. 2. Luk. 1. 47.

f Luke 1. 15. Gal. 3. 5. Act. 2. 18.

CHAP. III.

What wee are to vnderstand by the Spirit in this discourse.

AND thus wehaue shewed what the flesh is, which is one of the champions in this spirituall combate: now wee are to consider of the other, which is the Spirit; and that wee may the more distinctly know what it is, we must vnderstand that the word Spirit is diuersly taken in the Scriptures; and to omit many acceptations which are altogether impertinent to our present purpose, we may obserue, that it is sometimes taken generally, for all spirituall and incorporeall substances, and sometimes more specially for some one of them; And thus it sometime signifieth the whole a Diuine, and sometime euery one of the persons, the Father, the b Sonne, in respect of his diuine nature, and the c holy Ghost, who hath this name of Spirit, after a vsuall and peculiar manner giuen vnto him. But howsoeuer God and euery of these holy and diuine persons, doe fight in vs, and for vs against the flesh seeing it is their grace that supporteth vs, and their strength whereby wee ouercome; yet wee are not to vnderstand by Spirit in the following discourse this diuine nature, who being omnipotent none is able to resist. Sometime it signifieth the d soule of man, euen as the flesh is taken for the body; but these are not opposites and enemies but deare friends, who so entirely loue, that they feare nothing more than to be separated and to part company. Sometime it signifieth that chiefe and excellent facultie of the soule called e reason and vnderstanding; but neither can it here bee taken in this sense; because this spirit it selfe is corrupt and sinfull, & this naturall reason and wisedome is enmitie against God, and against this spirit whereof we speake, which opposeth and fighteth against it, as against its chiefest enemie. Sometime it is taken for the vigour and efficacie of the vnderstanding and reason it selfe, as where the Apostle exhorteth the Ephesians, to be renued in the spirit of their mind. Sometime by spirit wee vnderstand the f gifts and graces of the spirit, as Faith, Loue, Hope, Ioy and the rest; which being fruits of the Spirit, doe stand in opposition to the lusts of the flesh, and in some sort doe fight against them, they being contrarie the one to the other. Finally, the Spirit sometime signifieth a new qualitie of holinesse, created and wrought in all the elect by the Spirit of God, whereby all the powers and faculties of his soule and body are renewed according to the image of God, in wisedome, holinesse and righteousnesse; In which sense we are to vnderstand it in this place.

g. Sect. 2. What wee are to vnderstand by Spirit in the following discourse. Ephes. 4. 24. Col. 3. 10.

The Spirit then whereof wee intreat, is the new man, or the regenerate part of a Christian which is nothing else but a created qualitie of wisedome, holinesse and righteousnes, wherby we are in the whole man renewed vnto Gods image; which continually fighteth against, and in the end ouercommeth the flesh with all the lusts thereof. And this is the other champion in the spirituall combate, which also is described vnto vs in the Scriptures by diuers names, that wee might the better conceiue of the nature thereof; For first it is called the Spirit, both to note the cause and authour of it, which is the Spirit of God; and to teach vs, that it is of a simple, pure and immortall nature, and most opposite to that which is carnall, earthly and sensuall. It is called the new man, in opposition to the old Adam, and

Ioh. 3. 6. Rom. 7. 6.

that

that corruption of nature which was deriued immediatly from him, and to point out the difference betweene the flesh and the spirit in respect of their causes; for the cause of the flesh, was the old man, our first parent Adam, from whom it was propagated; the the cause of the other, was the new man or second Adam, Christ Iesus, who by his Spirit hath regenerated and begotten vs vnto God, making vs to become new creatures, renewed according to the image of God. It is called the spirituall man both to point out the cause from which it hath its being, euen the Spirit of God, which regenerateth and sanctifieth vs, and also in respect that it selfe is the cause of many spirituall actions, and is wholly taken vp and exercised about spirituall and diuine obiects; aboue all things seeking to bee inriched with God and sauing graces, and to haue sure title and iust claime to the Kingdome of heauen, which is the inheritance of the blessed Angels and holy Spirits. And finally to put a difference betweene him who is led by the spirit, and him who is meerely naturall and worldly (the one resembling and imitating the old Adam, who was from the earth, earthly; the other the second Adam, who was from heauen, heauenly; the one led by the sense, and seeking onely things sensuall and carnall; the other soaring aloft, and minding those things which are diuine and spirituall;) It is called the a regenerate man, to note, that wee haue it not by naturall propagation, but by spirituall regeneration and new birth; whereby being begotten by the word and spirit wee are borne vnto God. It is called the b inner man, and the c hidden man of the heart; because it swayeth and ruleth principally in the soule, mind and heart, inlightning the vnderstanding and sanctifying the will and affections, and so making them conformable to the Word and will of God; and cannot be discerned outwardly by the sense, but onely when it sheweth it selfe in the effects and fruits thereof. It is called a d new creature, because it is no relique or remainder of that image of God, according to which we were at the first created, but a new work of Gods holy Spirt, by his sole omnipotent power made of nothing, and not of any præexistent matter which it found in vs. Finally, it is called the law of the spirit, and the law of the mind; because it is ingrauen and written in our hearts, ruling and gouerning vs, directing & inclining vs both in our soules & bodies vnto all holy obedience, and inciting vs to the performance of all Christian duties, wherein this law of the Spirit differeth from the lawes of men, for although it bee the intention of lawgiuers to make men good; yet their lawes doe this onely thus far forth, as they giue notice vnto them what they ought to doe and leaue vndone; but the holy spirit dwelling in vs, doth not onely, by inlightning our vnderstanding, teach vs what is our dutie, but also inclineth our hearts and affections vnto obedience, causing vs to put in practice the things wee know. And it is called the Law of the spirit of life; For as the naturall spirit or soule is the cause of our naturall life; so Gods holy spirit is the cause of the life of grace; according to the saying of our Sauiour: It is the spirit which quickneth, and the words which I speake vnto you are spirit and life. The which spirit of life is originally in our Sauiour Christ, and from him deriued vnto vs who are vnited vnto him, and to no other. For as the naturall spirit extendeth vnto no member which hath not connexion with the head; so this holy Spirit of life is deriued vnto none who is not ioyned in communion with Christ our head, according to that 1. Ioh. 4. 13. Hereby wee know that we dwell in him, and he in vs, because he hath giuen vs of his spirit.

And thus haue I shewed what the flesh and the spirit are, which are the combatants in this spirituall Warfare, the one being that naturall corruption, and carnall concupiscence, in which wee are conceiued and borne, the other a created of holinesse, whereby we are renewed vnto Gods image, which through the sinne of Adam was defaced in him and his posterity; and is continually preserued, supported and strengthned by the Spirit of God dwelling in vs from which also it had first its being. Neither are wee so to vnderstand it, as though this combate were onely maintained by bare and naked qualities, of renewed puritie, and old corruption; but that they are also backed and vpheld by those spirts which are the causes and the authours of them; namely the holy Spirit of God, the author of all sanctity and purity; and the impure and wicked spirit Sathan, the authour of all sinne and wickednesse. For whilest men remaine in the state of infidelity, the strong man Sathan keepeth possession and dwelleth in them, though not after a grosse and sensible manner, as in demoniacks, yet inuisibly and spiritually, ruling and reigning in them, and (as the Apostle speaketh) holding them captiue to doe his will. In which his regiment and gouernement, hee imployeth the flesh and our carnal concupiscence as his deputie and chiefe instrument, to leade sinfull men into all wickednesse, the which hee continually animateth, inrageth and strengthneth vnto all euill. But when a stronger than he commeth, euen the good spirit of God, he casteth him out, and taking possession, dwelleth, raigneth and ruleth in our soules & bodies, creating in vs that quality of holinesse and righteousnesse called the Spirit, which hee sub-

Ephes. 4. 22. Col. 3. 10.

1. Cor. 2. 15.

Gal. 6. 1.

a Ioh. 3. 3. 4. 1. Pet. 1. 23.

b Rom. 7. 22. Eph. 3. 16.

c 1. Pet. 3. 4.

d 2. Cor. 5. 17. Gal. 6. 15.

e Rom. 8. 2. & 7. 23.

f Rom. 8. 1. 14.

Iohn 6. 63.

1. Iohn 4. 13.

Q. Sect. 3. That this combate is not maintained betweene bare qualities only, but as they are backed by the holy Spirit & Sathan the wicked spirit.

2. Tim. 2. 26.

substituteth as his Vicegerent and chiefe Deputie in the regenerate man. And though he doth not quite expell the flesh, Sathans Lieutenant out of vs, yet at the first entrance hee giueth him a mortall wound, of which hee neuer recouereth, and deposeth him from his Vice-gerency, so that howsoeuer it stil dwelleth, yet it reigneth not in our mortall bodies, as in former times. Onely Gods Spirit suffereth this enemy to inhabite still with vs, that by the opposition which it maketh, it might exercise the spirituall part in the Christian Warfare, that hereby it might be made more vigilant and diligent, more strong and active, and in the end obtayning victory might bee crowned with the greater glory. In which combate and conflict hee leaueth not the spirituall man to himselfe, but continually sendeth vnto him fresh aydes of renewed graces whereby he is inabled to ouercome. Euen as on the other side Sathan, the Prince of darkenesse, though hee be thrust out of his possession and regency, yet hee leaueth and forsaketh not his wounded and weakned deputy the flesh, but laboureth continually to recure his wound, ministreth vnto him new strength, by his hellish tentations and suggestions, and by breathing and infusing into him the poyson of enmity and malice against God and all goodnesse, stirreth him vp to rebellion against his holy Spirit, and to make warre against that Garrison of his graces which he hath placed in vs.

So that not onely the quality of holinesse, but the holy Spirit, not onely the gifts and graces of the Spirit, but the Holy Ghost himselfe dwelleth and raigneth in the man regenerate, keeping still possession, after that Sathan is driuen out, and strengthening the regenerate part against all the assaults of the flesh, and the lusts thereof. The which may appeare by these reasons, first, because wee are called the habitation of God, and the temples of the Holy Ghost, which cannot be vnderstood of his gifts and graces onely, which are improperly said to dwell in Temples, seeing this belongeth rather to persons than vnto things and qualities, but of the holy Spirit himselfe. Secondly, the Spirit of God, and not his gifts and graces onely, are the bond of the spirituall vnion which wee haue with Christ; for dwelling in Christ our Head, and in vs likewise who are his members, it maketh vs to become one mysticall body with Him, euen as the head and diuers members make one naturall body, being animated and quickned by the same soule. Thirdly, the actions which in the Scriptures are attributed to the Spirit dwelling in vs, cannot fitly be applyed to bare qualities, but properly belong to the Spirit it selfe. For this Spirit dwelling in vs, is said to rule and gouerne vs, to guide, direct, teach and instruct vs, to sanctifie and purifie vs, to conuince vs of sin, and to repleniſh vs with all sauing graces. Now the quality of holinesse, and the authour by whom it is created; the graces themselues, and he that infuseth them and worketh them in vs are diuers. Fourthly, as Sathan keepeth his residence in wicked men, working them vnto all manner of sinne, and holding them so captiue, that they doe his will, (for so the Apostle saith, that the Ephesians walked in time past according to the Prince of the power of the ayre, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience, &c.) So the Spirit of God comming and thrusting him out of possession, dwelleth in vs, leading vs into all truth, repleniſhing vs with all grace, & enclining vs to all holy obedience, and to the performance of all good and Christian duties. Lastly, the Spirit dwelling in vs, and the new man are plainly distinguished in the Scriptures. For so the Apostle saith; yee are not in the flesh, but in the spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you, now if any man haue not the spirit of Christ (that is the same holy Spirit which dwelleth in our Head and Sauiour Christ) hee is none of his. And else-where he prayeth, that God would grant vnto the Ephesians, according to the riches of his grace, to be strengthened with might by his spirit in the inner man. By all which it appeareth that not onely the quality of holinesse wrought in vs by the Spirit, and the sauing graces thereof, but also the Spirit it selfe, dwelleth in vs assisting and strengthening vs in this Christian Warfare against the Deuill and the Flesh with the lusts thereof.

Ephes. 2. 2.

Rom. 8. 9.

Ephes. 3. 16.

Notwithstanding, I doe not, nor dare affirme, that the Spirit of God dwelleth in vs essentially more than in any other creature, communicating his essence with vs, as an essentiall part of vs. For his nature and essence being most simple and indiuisible, incomprehensible, and omnipresent, filling all places without repletion, and containing all, it selfe being infinite and contained of nothing, cannot be said thus to dwell in man; for this were to deifie and make a God of him; much lesse doe I say that the Spirit assumeth our nature, (as the second person assumed the nature of Christ) to subsist in him by personall vnion and to become one with him and hee with vs, for thus also wee should fall into the same errour of deifying man, and besides, then the third person in Trinity should bee incarnate as well as the second. Yea, contrariwise wee are to know, that the Spirit is said to be giuen vs in the same sense, as hee is said to be sent forth vnto vs: Because yee are sonnes, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Sonne into your hearts, crying Abba father. Now by this phrase of sending forth; the Holy Ghost teacheth vs, that the Spirit is in one manner in Christ; and in another manner in vs; for hee is in him most

Gal. 4. 6.

9. Sect. 9. That the spirit doth not dwell in vs essentially more than in other creatures.

moſt properly, ſubſtantially, and eſſentially, as being his ſpirit, coeſſentiall with him and co-eternall: in which reſpect the Apoſtle maketh him and the Spirit all one, 2. Cor. 3. 17. The Lord is that ſpirit; and where the ſpirit of the Lord is there is liberty, and Col. 2. 9. hee ſaith, that in him dwelleth the fulneſſe of the God-head bodily: but in vs not primarily, and originally, but as hee is ſent forth of Chriſt vnto vs, by whom wee haue ſpeciall right vnto him ſince his reſurrection, by vertue of his promiſe, Iohn 16. 7. If I goe not away, the Comforter will not come vnto you, but if I depart I will ſend him vnto you. And by his mediation and interceſſion now ſitting at the right hand of his Father: according to that, I will pray the Father, and hee will giue you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for euer. So that the ſpirit is in Chriſt originally and aboue meaſure, euen the fulneſſe of the ſpirit, but in vs in that meaſure which we haue receiued from him, according to that of the Apoſtle, Epheſ. 4. 7. Vnto euery one of vs is giuen grace, according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt: and that of the Euangeliſt: Iohn 1. 14. The Word was made fleſh and dwelt among vs, full of grace and truth. v. 16. and of his fulneſſe haue all we receiued, and grace for grace. Finally, this oyle of the Spirit (like that of Aarons) was firſt powred vpon our Head Ieſus Chriſt, and from him deſcended to vs, as vpon the skirts of his cloathing, or rather members of his Body.

Col. 2. 9.

Iohn 16. 7.

Iohn 14. 16.

Epheſ. 4. 7.

Iohn 1. 14.

Pſal. 133. 2.

9. Sect. 6. That the faith full haue ſpeciall right to the very eſſence of the ſpirit, and that he dwelleth in them in reſpect of efficacie.

Furthermore although the Spirit of God doth not eſſentially dwell in vs more than in all other creatures; yet the Elect and faithfull haue right vnto him aboue all others, euen in reſpect of his eſſence and efficacy, becauſe he is ours by Gods free and gracious couenant, wherein he hath promiſed that he will be our God, and we ſhall be his people: now he is ours in his Sonne, and by his holy Spirit. So in many places the Lord promiſeth to giue vnto vs his holy Spirit, which is not onely to be vnderſtood of the gifts and graces of the ſpirit, but alſo of the vertue and efficacie of the ſpirit dwelling in vs, and effectually working theſe graces in our hearts; for ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, that the loue of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts, by the Holy Ghoſt which is giuen vnto vs; where he ſheweth, that by Gods gift we haue right, not onely to the graces of the Spirit, but euen after a ſpeciall manner to the Spirit himſelfe. Beſides where Chriſt is ſaid to dwell in vs, and to be united vnto vs by his Spirit, we are to vnderſtand, that the bond of this vnion, is not onely bare qualities, and gifts and graces of the Spirit, but euen the Spirit it ſelfe, which dwelling in Chriſt our Head eſſentially, is after an vnſpeakable and myſticall manner, yet really and truly, communicated vnto vs who are the members of his body. In which reſpects, though the Spirit of God in regard of his eſſence be alike preſent to all creatures, yet is hee not ſaid to be giuen vnto them, or to be their ſpirit, becauſe they haue no right vnto him by couenant as wee haue, nor any intereſt by Ieſus Chriſt, neither yet any efficacy, operation nor influence of ſauing grace from him, in all which hee is proper onely to the Elect. Moreouer, by vertue of this donation and right, the holy Spirit becomming ours, doth worke in vs after a ſpeciall and powerfull manner; hee is intimate, familiar and in neere acquaintance with vs, like inmates or co-inhabitants, comforting, directing, ruling, ſtrengthening, and cheriſhing vs. In which reſpect wee are ſaid to bee his [a] Houſes and Temples in which [b] he dwelleth. Whereas contrariwiſe Worldlings and Infidels, to all theſe purpoſes are meere ſtrangers vnto him, becauſe they receiue him not, but make their bodies habitations for vncleane ſpirits. For ſo our Sauiour ſaith, that the World cannot receiue this Spirit of Truth, becauſe it ſeeth him not, neither knoweth him, but yee (ſaith he to his Diſciples, and in them to all the faithfull) know him, for hee dwelleth with you, and ſhall be in you. Furthermore, this holy Spirit is giuen to the Elect and faithfull in a ſpeciall manner, not onely in the fruits and ſtreames of his graces, but alſo to be vnto them as the roote and fountaine from which they ſpring and flow, and the authour, worker, preſeruer and continuer of all grace and goodneſſe in them; according to that of our Sauiour. Whoſoeuer drinketh of the water that I ſhall giue him, ſhall neuer thirſt, but the water that I ſhall giue him, ſhall bee in him a well of water, ſpringing vnto euerlaſting life. And againe, If any man thirſt let him come vnto mee and drinke: He that beleeueth on me (as the Scripture hath ſaid) out of his belly ſhall flow riuers of liuing water. But this, (ſaith the Euangeliſt) he ſpake of his ſpirit, which they that beleeue on him ſhould receiue: for the Holy Ghoſt was not yet giuen, becauſe that Ieſus was not yet glorified. Now the ſtreames of Gods graces, and the euerlaſting ſpringing fountaine from which they flow are diuers, and to be diſtinguiſhed, the one being the cauſe and the other the effect, the one the tree the other the fruit. Finally, to conclude this point, although the Spirit dwelleth in vs, in reſpect of eſſence as in other creatures; yet he doth after an eſpeciall manner exerciſe his nature, and ſhew his preſence by his vertue and efficacy more in the faithfull than in the whole earth, in that he chooſeth them for his owne peculiar people, taketh full poſſeſſion of them as of his owne right, raigneth and ruleth in their hearts and conſciences, as in the chiefe ſeate of his Kingdome, vniteth them vnto Chriſt their Head, purgeth and purifieth them from their ſinne and corruption,

Eſay 59. 21.

Ezek. 11. 19. & 36. 26. & 37. 14

Rom. 5. 5.

Iohn 7. 37, 38.

Iohn 4. 14.

a 1. Cor. 3. 16. & 6. 19. 2. Cor. 6. 16.

b Rom. 8. 9, 11. 1. Ioh. 3. 16. 2. Tim. 1. 14.

tion, repleniſheth them with all ſanctifying and ſauing grace, defendeth, preſerueth, and ſtrengtheneth them from all enemies, and from the inundation of all dangers by his Almighty power and eſpeciall prouidence watching ouer them. And finally inlighteneth them in all truth, and guideth and directeth them in the way of holines and righteouſneſſe which leadeth to Gods Kingdome. And euen thus doth Sathan dwel in the children of vnbeliefe; not by communicating his eſſence vnto them, for then they ſhould be no more men but incarnate Deuils, but by taking full poſſeſſion of them as his owne vaſſals, by infuſing malice into their hearts, and all manner of corruption and ſinne into all the powers of their ſoules and bodies, by ſetting vp his Throne in them, and ruling them with his power according to his owne pleaſure, and making them to become his ſlaues to doe his will; finally by leading and guiding them into all manner of wickednes through his tentations and ſuggeſtions, vntill at laſt hee bringeth them together with himſelfe vnto condemnation and vtter deſtruction in the fire of Hell.

CHAP. IIII.

The erroneous conceit of the Papiſts, who by the fleſh vnderſtand the body, and the ſenſuall faculties onely.

HAuing ſhewed what our enemies in this ſpirituall Warfare are, we ſhould now proceed to diſcouer their nature and properties, were it not that theſe enemies were by the Deuill and the World diſguiſed: yea, quite hid from our ſight in ſecret ambuſhments; and our friends through their malice muſtered againſt vs, as though they were our enemies, that ſo whileſt wee bend all our forces againſt them who oppoſe vs in this ſeeming hoſtility, theſe may ſuddenly ſet vpon vs, and aſſault vs at vnawares, giuing vs deadly wounds when wee feare no danger. For the plotting and contriuing of which ſtratagem they vſe the vaſſals of Antichriſt, the Clergy of Rome as their Chieftaines and eſpeciall inſtruments, who hiding our true enemy, the corruption of nature, which hath ouerſpread all the powers and parts of our ſoules and bodies, vnder the cloſe couert of their cunning ſophiſtry, doe inſtead thereof, offer to our view ſeeming foes of their owne fancying. For by the fleſh they would haue vs to vnderſtand (not the reliques of corruption which keepe their chiefe reſidence in the ſoule, minde, and will) but the body it ſelfe and the fleſh thereof; and at moſt the inferiour, bruite and ſenſitiue faculties of the ſoule; and by the ſpirit they vnderſtand the intellectuall faculties, the minde, reaſon and vnderſtanding, and ſo affirme this to be the fight betweene the fleſh and the ſpirit, when as the body and ſenſitiue parts doe rebell and ſtand in oppoſition againſt the vnderſtanding and reaſon, and contrariwiſe when theſe ſtriue to maintaine their Regency by keeping them vnder and ſubduing them to their Lawes and Orders. And although, being ſometime conuinced with the euidence of truth, they giue together with vs the ſame verdict, affirming that not the body it ſelfe is meant by the fleſh, but the corruption of it, that it is onely the inſtrument of the ſoule in wicked actions, and the ſoule it ſelfe the chiefe cauſe of ſinne, and that the minde, vnderſtanding and reaſon are poyſoned and tainted with naturall corruption; yet by and by they are ready againe to make voide their euidence and to reuerſe this ſentence, and relapſing into their old abſurdity, they either vnderſtand groſly by the fleſh the body alone, or when they pleaſe to deale more liberally with vs, they alſo grant that the inferiour parts of the ſoule, the animall and ſenſitiue faculties are thereby included and comprehended, and ſo imagining that therefore our regeneration is in the Scriptures ſaid to be imperfect, becauſe, howſoeuer the mind and vnderſtanding are truly and perfectly regenerate, yet the body remayneth in the ſtate of corruption, they hereby conclude, that in the ſoule remayneth no part of this originall corruption, but onely in the body.

All which doth euidently appeare, not only by their groſſe practice (for if they did not imagine that the body were the chiefe cauſe of all ſin, why doe they ſo miſerably and ſuperſtitiouſly afflict it, placing their mortification onely in a bodily exerciſe, and corporall puniſhments? and if they did not thinke that the ſoule and intellectuall faculties were pure and free from this corruption, why doe they ſo much magnifie and extoll it, aſcribing all our falls and faylings either to the body alone, or to the reaſon and minde only through the corruption & default thereof) But this alſo may appeare by their doctrine: For not to produce many teſtimonies out of a multitude of Authours, but onely to name two or three of the chiefe and moſt refined, Thomas Aquinas himſelfe howſoeuer ſometime hee agreeth with vs, holding that the fleſh is the a corruption of nature and originall ſinne, as appeareth in his readings vpon the Romanes, yet in other places he confoundeth the fleſh and the body, and maketh the body of ſin and death, and the naturall body to be all one, although in theſe places, by body and fleſh he vnderſtandeth the vices and corruptions of them, as he expoundeth himſelfe in c other places. So like wiſe he holdeth that by the Spirit, part re-

Aſſ. 2.26.

1. Cor. 3.16. 6.19. 2. Cor. 6.16. Rom. 8.9,11. 2. Tim. 1.14. Iam. 4.5.

1. Cor. 14.

1. Ioh. 3.7,8.

1. Self. 1. That the Papiſts propound vnto vs a kind to fight againſt inſtead of our enemy.

2. Self. 1. That the chief Doctors of the Papiſts by fleſh vnderſtand the body a Aquin. in Rom. 7. lect. 4.

b Aquin. in Epheſ. 5 lect. 9.

c In Rom. 7. lect. 4. & cap 8. lect. 2.

regenerate, or inner man, wee are to vnderstand the d mind and reason, which as hee saith is called the inner man, because that is said to be man, which is principall and chiefe in him. And thus hee opposeth the flesh and the heart, or the mind and reason; where speaking of the Apostles e words; I know that in me, that is in my flesh there dwelleth no good thing, hee saith, that this is not to be vnderstood of his reason: for in me, that is, in my heart good dwelleth, according to that, Ephesians the third, where the Apostle saith, that Christ himselfe dwelleth in our hearts by faith. So also Lewis Granada, a chiefe Doctor of their superstitious deuotion and mortification, joyning with the famous Heathen Philosopher Mercurius Trismegistus, inueigheth against the body, as though it alone were this corrupt flesh, which is the author and fountaine of all our sin and euill. Vnlesse (saith he) O sonne thou hate thy body, thou canst not loue thy selfe, for it is impossible seriously to intend both, vnto things mortall and diuine. But first of all of necessity thou must put off this garment which thou carriest about thee, being the couering of ignorance, the foundation of wickednesse, the bond of corruption, the darke vaile, the liuing death, the carcasse of the senses, the mouing Sepulchre, the household Thiefe, which hateth whilest it flattereth, and enuieth whilst it hateth, &c. which speech of the heathen man he judgeth so full of light and truth, that for it alone hee well deserued the name of Mercurius Trismegistus the thrice great or excellent. And in the same Chapter hauing demanded, how it can possibly be, that any man can hate himselfe, that is his owne body, vnto which naturally he is so obliged in the bond of friendship, that the Apostle saith, No man yet euer hated his owne flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it? answereth, that this is an argument properly of flesh and bloud; and that Gods Spirit and Grace, aske rather and with better reason, how can it possible be that they should not hate it; For whereas the most pernicious enemies vnto man are, Hell, the Deuill, the World, the Flesh and Sin, this last is the greatest, but the next vnto it is our flesh, which is the mother and seed of all sin. Thus also Bellarmine, although in many places he speaketh as much for vs in this question as wee would haue him, yet hee commendeth whipping and tormenting of the body, as a worke satisfactory, tending to the mortifying of the flesh, alleadging for it these absurde and ridiculous reasons; first the Apostles exãple, who saith, that he did chastise his body (for so the vulgar latine readeth it) that so hee might bring it into subiection. Where by body hee grossely vnderstandeth the very body of the Apostle (whereas it heere rather signifieth the body of sinne and corruption, which else where he calleth the body of death) and by chastizing, whipping; whereas the word ὑποπιάζω signifyeth to suppresse or keepe vnder. And although hee granteth the Apostle heere vseth a borrowed speech from those who according to ancient custome fought for a mastery; and saith, that he did cuill intreate and keepe vnder his body, like those Champions who either with their fists, or with bags of sand did beat and bruise their aduersary till they were blacke and blue, yet hee saith (and onely saith it without any shewe of reason) that it is very probable that Paul vsed to whip his owne body, both because the Greeke word signifieth so much (which is vtterly false) and because this kind of punishment was vsuall among the ancients; which also wee must take vpon his word, seeing he neither alleadgeth, nor in trueth is able to alleadge any authoritie for it. His other arguments to commend whipping and afflicting of the body, are the Publicans smiting of his breast, whereby hee shewed the compunction of his heart in his humiliation and penitent confession of his sinnes; some testimonies of Hierome which speake of fasting, sackcloath and beating of the breast; Gods approouing and commaunding the paying of voluntary vowes, the which hee childishly restraineth to fastings and other afflictions of the body, and among the rest to whipping, though there be no colour for it in the place which hee alledgeth. And finally he produceth the example of Iohn the Baptist whose garment was Cammels hayre, his meate locusts, his bed (as he saith, but proueth not) the ground, his house the desart. All which reasons and examples being farre vnfitting the wit of such a subtill sophister, and in trueth nothing to the purpose, I will passe ouer, supposing that the bare repeating of them is a sufficient confutation, and that like abortiue birthes they will presently dye, as soone as they come to light.

And thus do they (as it were in their dreame or dotage) by the flesh vnderstand the body alone, but when they are most awake, and in the best strength of their memory and vnderstanding, they do by the flesh vnderstand the inferiour parts of the soule, the sensitiue faculties, the appetite, and imagination, as they are corrupted, which also according to the doctrine of the last councell of Trent, they hold not to be sinne but onely the punishment of it, though the Apostle maketh the flesh, not onely to be the cause of al other sinne, but also with a certaine emphasis calleth it, sinne it selfe. So on the other side by the spirit they vnderstand the superior part of the soule, the reason, vnderstanding and will, which they magnifie and extoll, as though it were free in it selfe from all corruption, the cause of all good, and a professed enemy

d Ibidem.

e In Rom. 7. lect. 3.

Ephes. 3. 17. De perfect. amoris Dei, cap. 5.

Ephes. 5.

De panitent. lib. 4. c. 6. tom. 3.

1. Cor. 9. 27.

Rom. 7. 24.

Numb. 30.

9. Sect. 3. That the Papists in their purest doctrine vnderstand by the flesh our bodies and the inferiour and sensitiue faculties only.

Rom. 7. 17.

enemy to the flesh, fighting against it continually with all the lusts thereof. And thus Thomas Aquinas saith, that the flesh is said to fight against the spirit, in as much as the sensitiue appetite tendeth to the contrary of that which reason desireth, according to that of the Apostle. Gal. 5. the flesh lusteth against the spirit. So Lewis de Granada, saith, that there are in our soule two principall parts, which of Diuines are called the superiour & inferiour parts. And that in the superiour (which is called the spirit and the minde) is the will and vnderstanding which ruleth the will, and is (as it were) its eye and guide. In the inferiour is the sensitiue appetite with the imagination which also is the eye of the appetite of which it is moued; and these parts he maketh to be (as it were) two Commonwealthes in man, the one of beastes, the other of Angels. That hee calleth else where the flesh, concupiscence, sensualitie, or the sensitiue appetite, whence all the perturbations of the minde doe arise, as it is corrupt and made inordinate through sinne. And in the same place hee compareth the superiour part to a wife of so great beautie, nobilitie and wisedome, as is possibly incident to that sex, making the man happy who is married vnto her; and the inferiour part he compareth to a seruant, a witch and sorceresse, vpon whose loue this man is so besotted that putting away his wife, hee maketh himselfe a prey to his slaue, &c.

Aquin. in Rom. 7. lect. 3.

L. Granat. de perfect. amoris Dei cap. 7.

Ducis peccator. lib. 1. par. 2. cap. 19.

§. Sect. 4. That the practice of Popish mortification plainly sheweth that by the flesh they vnderstand the body onely, their mortification being nothing else but a bodily exercise.

And this is their purest conceit concerning the flesh and the Spirit, which being wholly corrupt, how great is the corruption? For in their practice they manifestly shew that by the flesh they vnderstand the body, seeing for the mortification thereof they appoint onely bodily exercises, which tend to the vexing, tormenting and weakning thereof; as Penance, Pilgrimages, Watchings, Whippings, rough clothing, hard lodginng and such like: supposing that they fight against the flesh, when they make war against their own bodies by afflicting & punishing it. Wherein that I may not seeme to slander them, I will insert an History of Monkish mortification, as it is recorded by their famous Saint Climacus in his Booke called the Ladder of Paradise, and in the fifth staffe of his Ladder. Which story for the worthinesse of it, is related by Lewis of Granada, in his Booke intitled the Memoriall of a Christian Life, as a perfect patterne of mortification, and is most vnfaithfully translated into English by one Hopkins a Priest, for the practice and exercise of the English Catholickes. And not to alter his methode though most confused, because it is well enough sorted and suited to the matter, nor to tire the reader with viewing ouer euery particular in that heape of trash, briefely he telleth vs, that himselfe comming into a much admired monastery, hee saw among the Monkes in their practice of penitence, such wonderfull things, as the eye of the negligent hath not seene, the eare of the slothfull hath not heard, neither hath entred into the heart of the dull and sluggish. To wit, such things and wordes as might ouercome with violence euen God himselfe, and such fashions and endeauours, as would speedily encline him to shewe mercy. For (saith he) I sawe some of the penitents stand abroad in the open ayre, watching there whole nights, vntil the morning, neuer moving their feete out of the same place; and when they were grieuously vexed with drowsinesse comming vpon them, they offered force to nature, and would not take any rest, but reuiled themselues, and with disgraces and contumelies offered against their owne persons, they rowsed vp their spirits. Others I sawe standing in prayer & hauing their handes bound behind their backes like malefactors, they inclined their pale faces towards the ground, crying out that they were vnworthy to look vnto heauen. Neither did they presume in their orizons to say any thing to Almightie God, by reason of the fearefull doubting of their thoughts, and consciences, but onely offered their silent soules and their mute mindes vnto God being full of darkenesse and desperation. I saw others sitting on the pauement couered with sack-cloth & ashes, which hid their faces betweene their knees, beating their foreheads against the earth. Others I saw who in respect of their habite, cogitations and actions seemed out of their wits, whose mindes were so stupified with excessiue sorrowing, that they stood like copper images, compassed about with darkenesse, and made insensible (as it were) for all vitall actions. Others humbly desired of God to be heere vexed and tormented, that there they might haue mercy; and many afflicted and cast downe through a burthened conscience, saide that it should well satisfie them to be freed from hell torments, though they should neuer attaine vnto the ioyes of Gods kingdome; and that it was sufficient if they were freed from Gods great and terrible commination, and those vnknown, hidden and hellish paines, neither durst they desire to be deliuered from punishments altogether. In others I sawe Dauids words effected indeed, men possessed with sorrows, made crooked to the ende of their liues, going mournfully all their dayes, and casting out noysome smels out of the putrified parts of their bodies; who liued without all care of their flesh, forgot to eat their bread, mingling their drinke with groanes, and their bread with ashes. There you might see their burned tongues like wearied Dogges hanging out of their mouthes. Some among them tormented themselues in the scorching heate of the Sunne; others contrariwise afflicted themselues with extreame cold. Some tasting a little water that they might not be parched with thirst, so contented themselues without drinking more, others eating a small bit of bread, would cast away the rest, affirming that they were vnworthy to feed on the meat which belonged to reasonable men, because they had carried thēselues vnreasonably like vnto beasts. Some amongst thē excited others, saying, let vs run brethren and not obey this filthy and wicked flesh, but let vs kill it, as it hath first killed vs. And thus (saith he) these blessed Penitents behaued themselues. Their knees, with their continuall praying, were growne hard; their eyes fayling and ouerwearied, were sunke deepe into their heads, the haire of their browes and eye-lids being falne away and lost, their cheekes seemed burnt with the heate of their scalding teares, their faces so withered, pale and deformed that they differed not from dead men. Their brests were made sore with their blowes, and being blacke and blue with bruises, they did spit bloud. What vse had they of any bed? What cared they for cleane and whole cloathing? All there were torne, filthy and full of lice. And in a word what is their affliction who are possessed with a Deuill, in comparison of these? What the bitter vexation of those who mourne for their departed friends? What their sorrow who liue in banishment? What the punishments of cruell Parricides? Surely the paines and torments which all these vnwillingly suffer, are nothing being compared with their voluntary penance. And not content with punishments inflicted by themselues, they would intreat their great Iudge and Gouernour of their Monastery, who was a very Angell amongst men, that he would put irons and chaines about their necks and hands, and fasten their feet in the stocks, not suffering them to come out till they were to be buried. Yea, indeed they would not so much as haue any buriall. (Neither will I hide their wonderfull Charity towards God and the penitence of these blessed men.) For being to die and to become Citizens of that heauenly City, they would with earnest prayers adjure their Abbot, that hee would not vouchsafe them humane buriall, but like brute creatures cast them either into the riuers or into the open fields to be deuoured of beasts; which sometimes he also did being ouercome with their importunate requests. But what was the quality of their place and habitation? Surely it was very darke, vnhandsome, stinking, foule and filthy, so as it might fitly be called a prison for condemned persons, and the very sight thereof might well bee a Mistresse of perfect penitence and mourning. Yea, they were not contented with those torments which could be inflicted by men; but (as he further saith) they desired of God with many grones and great lamentation, that they might be taken away by the Deuill, or fall into some grieuous diseases, or loose their eyes, and so become a miserable spectacle vnto all men, that so by these present paines they might escape future punishments. Now if we would know the fruit of all their labours, and what inward peace and security they had by these outward torments and vexation; this also in that worthy Story is made knowne vnto vs, namely, that as they passed their dolefull dayes in these selfe-deuised tortures and torments of body, so at the day of death they were no lesse vexed with terrours of conscience, affrighting feares, and dreadfull doubtings; as in truth what other can be expected from them who by their superstitious deuises haue robbed God of the glory of his free grace in our saluation, derogated from the al-sufficiency of Christ Iesus our alone Sauiour his merits and obedience, and in a great part arrogated the prayse of the remission of their sinnes, and attaining vnto euerlasting life, to their owne penance and satisfactions?

Stanor. lib. 2. in tract. de sanctitate cap. 1.

9. Sect. 8. That the Popish Doctors are iustly to be taxed for teaching the former doctrine: and the superstitious people for putting it in practice.

Now by this which hath beene said it appeareth what the Church of Rome and her adherents conceiue and hold concerning the flesh, in respect both of their doctrine and practice. Wherin they are justly to be taxed, first of vntruth and falshood, in that they doe herein teach grosse errours which are directly contrary to the whole course of Scriptures, as it shall (God willing) afterwards plainly appeare. Secondly, of damnable pride, and that first in this respect that they afflict and torture their bodies by their voluntary penance for meere ostentation to be seene and praysed of men, (for else to what end serue their going bare-foot on their Pilgrimages; and their Whipping of themselues in the open streets) of all which their torments, if any pitty them more than they doe themselues, would haue them eased and freed; the best way were to follow the aduice of Plato, who seeing men take compassion on the proud Cynicke Diogenes, because he voluntarily stood in a great storme of raine, told them, that the onely way to rid him out of that misery, was to withdraw themselues, and to let none remayne to looke vpon him: for there would surely but few be carried about in this Pageant of Penance, if there were no Spectators who might encourage them with their applause. Secondly, their pride appeareth in the acting and suffering of this voluntary Penance in respect of the end, which is not so much to mortifie the flesh, as to make satisfaction to Gods Iustice for their sins, or to merit his fauour and the joyes of Heauen; wherein as they derogate much from Gods mercy, and the al-sufficient merits and satisfaction of Iesus Christ, so also also they manifest their hellish pride, which will not suffer them wholly to deny themselues, and ascribe the glory of their iustification and saluation onely to Gods free grace and Christs sufferings and obedience: but needs will they share with them in the prayse, in part at least pay their owne debt, and giue something towards the purchase of our heauenly inheritance. In which respect it may truely bee said, that the leaner they make their bodies with penance and punishment, the more their hearts are fatned with pride and vaine-glory; and the more they subdue and keep vnder their fleshly carkasse, the more their minds are lifted vp with opinion of their merit and deseruing. Thirdly wee may in this regard justly taxe them to bee those impostors and deceiuers of whom the Apostle speaketh, who seeke to deceiue men of their heauenly reward; seeing they hold not the Head Christ, but in part rest vpon their owne superstitious deuices, being (as the Apostle there speaketh,) vainely puft vp in their fleshly minds, and placing the chiefe of there Religion, in a voluntary humility, and worshipping of Angels, in subiecting themselues to humane ordinances after the commandements and doctrines of men; which things haue at the most but a shew of wisedome, in wil-worship and humilitie, and not sparing or punishing of the body. Lastly, herein wee may well charge them with grosse hypocrysie, and false treachery, seeing they betray the poore Christian who asketh their counsell and aduise in this spirituall warfare, whilest they pretend his strengthening and defence. For as they professe Christ in shew, but oppose him in truth, being those limmes of Antichrist who make warre against him and his members; so they outwardly proclaime war against the world and the flesh, when as in truth none are greater friends vnto them; for that the flesh our true enemy may escape vntouched and vnhurt in the Christian conflict, they disguise and hide it, lest it should be knowne, and craftily substitute into the place thereof our bodies which are our friends to receiue deadly wounds and blowes by the sword of mortification; and whilest they afflict and persecute them, as though they were the onely troublers of this our Israel they (as Iesabell Baalls Priests) cherish and nourish the corruption of nature, the flesh and the whole army of carnall lusts (as it were) at their proper charges giuing them meate and drink at their owne table.

Col. 3. 19. 20. 22. 23.

And thus haue I spent more paines and paper vpon this base subiect than it deserueth, and both by their doctrine and practice shewed what the Church of Rome and her fauorites thinke of the flesh and of the meanes whereby it may bee mortified and subdued, partly that all might take heed of the bewitching cups of the whoore of Babylons fornications, seeing those who haue drunke thereof, haue beene so intoxicated and made drunke with these inchanted potions, that like mad men and inraged bedlems they haue not onely wrastled with God himselfe, to spoyle him of his glory, murthered his holy Martyrs and caused the streets to runne with riuers of their bloud, but also frantiquely haue offered violence to their owne persons, grieuously tormented their owne bodies, and sought to satisfie their insatiable cruelty, by drinking deepe draughts in their owne bloud. Partly also to preserue all, who loue the truth from these superstitious cruelties in the practice of their mortification, seeing corrupted nature, and blinde superstition, with as strong a streame of violence, carrieth men headlong into these inhumane and vnnaturall practices against their owne persons, as the pleasures of the flesh transport others who are licentious and prophane to the imbracing of them. The which wee may plainely see in the practice of the Baalitish priests, who with kniues lanched their owne bodies, and in the experience of all ages among the heathens and infidels, yea euen of our owne times, not only among the Sauadges & Barbarians, but aboue all others among the Papists who are all ready rather to torment their bodies, than to crosse their carnall wils; to torture the flesh, rather than to subdue their fleshly lusts; yea euen to mortifie with voluntary penance their naturall parts and members, rather than to labour in the crucifying of the old man, and to forsake any of their darling sinnes. But especially my maine drift herein is to discouer our true enemy that wee may discerne it from our friends, and to shew what in truth the flesh is, that so wee may labour to subdue and mortifie it, seeing it is ready in craft and subtiltie to hide or disguise it selfe, and to substitute another in its place, that so we may spend our strength in vaine, and being spent and tyred in fighting against those who are friends vnto vs, may bee the more easily ouercome at the first incounter of our spirituall enemies.

§. Sect. 6. That our opposition against the Papists in this doctrine is very necessarie.

CHAP. V.

That the body and sensitiue faculties onely are not the flesh proued by the Scriptures, and diuers reasons.

§. Sect. 1. That the body and sensitiue faculties only are not the flesh proued by testimonies of the Scripture.

AND therefore hauing shewed what is the erroneous conceipt of the Papists concerning the flesh, in the next place wee will confute it, and proue that by flesh wee are to vnderstand, not the body and inferiour and sensitiue faculties of the soule, nor yet onely the corruption of them both; but also the corruption of the whole man, and principally of the reason and will which they magnifie with so many prayses. And this will appeare by the cleare euidence of the holy Scriptures, by strong and demonstratiue reasons grounded vpon them, by the testimony of the Fathers, yea euen of the Aduersaries themselues. And first in the whole course and current of the Scriptures wee may obserue that there is much more spoken of the sinfull corruption of the soule, than of the body; and in the soule, not onely of the inferiour, sensitiue and animall faculties, but also of the superiour and intellectuall, as of the corruption and deprauation of the minde, vnderstanding, reason, wisedome and will. The Apostle ioyneth them both together, 2. Cor. 7.1. Hauing therefore (saith he) these promises (deerely beloued) let vs cleanse our selues from all filthinesse of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holinesse in the feare of God. Where he necessarily implyeth, that both in himselfe, and in those beloued Saints to whom he writeth, there was remaining corruption and filthinesse of nature, which was to bee purged away, not onely in the body which here is signified by flesh, but also in the soule, which is here vnderstood by the Spirit. So Ephe. 2.3. Among whom (saith he) also wee all had our conuersation in times past, in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and minde. And Rom. 8.8. he telleth vs, that they, who are in the flesh cannot please God. Where by flesh wee cannot vnderstand the body (for then the seruants of God could not please him in this life) but the corruption of nature, with which our bodies and soules are defiled, till they be renewed and sanctified by Gods Spirit. And thus Chrysostome expoundeth this place. What then (saith he) shall we destroy our owne bodies, and so goe out of the flesh that we may please God? Doest thou command vs to be murtherers, when as thou pretendest to draw vs vnto vertue? Yee see what absurdities doe hence arise, if these things be simply and literally vnderstood. But by flesh here he meaneth not the body or bodily essence, but a worldly and carnall life addicted to wantonnesse and voluptuous pleasures, which make the woole man to become flesh. For as they who are led by Gods spirit, haue also their bodies made spirituall, so they who are led by the flesh and are addicted to carnall delights, they make their soules to become fleshly and carnall, not by changing the essence and substance, but by spoyling it of true nobility. And this manner of speaking is vsed in the Old Testament, where the flesh signifieth that grosse and earthly life, which is filthily intangled in all absurd pleasures. For God saith to Noah, my spirit shall not stay with these men because they are flesh. And yet Noah himselfe was clothed and encompassed with the garment of flesh; but this was not the fault that offended God, to be compassed with flesh, because this was the worke of nature, but in that they had made choyse of a carnall and sensuall life. And therefore Paul saith, They who are in the flesh cannot please God; and also addeth; But you are not in the flesh but in the spirit, not vnderstanding simply the substance of the flesh, (for so they were in it to whom hee writeth) but such a flesh which is drawne and oppressed with lusts and passions. Euen as the like speech of our Sauiour is to bee vnderstood, but you are not of the world, not because they had not their habitation in the world, But because they were not defiled with worldly malitiousnesse. And afterwards more fully expounding those words; You are not in the flesh but in the spirit; What then (saith he) were they not in the flesh? and did they go about without bodies? What sense or reason were in such a speech? And therefore you see that he meaneth by flesh, a fleshly life. And thus also Ambrose expoundeth this place, The Apostles (saith hee) by denying those to be in the flesh whom it is manifest to haue beene in the flesh, did not condemne in them the substance of flesh, but their sinnes and sinfull corruptions, that is, the workes of the flesh.

2. Cor. 7.1.

Ephes. 2.3.

Chrysost. in Rom. 8. Ser. 13. Rom. 8.8.

Ambros. de fide resurrect. To. 3.

And vnto these testimonies of Scripture many more might be added. As Tit. 1.15. Vnto the pure all things are pure, but vnto them that are defiled and vnbeleeuing is nothing pure, but euen their minde and conscience is defiled. So the Apostle saith, that the wisedome or a minding of the flesh is enmity against God, and that the b minde as well as the body is fleshly. And thus he exhorteth the Ephesians to bee renewed in the spirit of their minds, thereby implying that not onely the body and sensitiue faculties are naturally corrupted, but also the minde, the chiefe part of man, and hereof the spirit, that is, the prime vigour and chiefe faculty of the minde. For what needeth any renouation if there were not in them the taynture of their old corruption? So Rom. 12.2. c And be not conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your minde, that you may proue what is that good, that acceptable, and perfect will of God. Whereby he implyeth that naturally they were corrupted, euen in the vnderstanding part, and ignorant of the will of God, till they were renewed and inlightned by the Spirit of God, which renouation is not finished at once, but by little and little, euen to the end of life; according to that 2. Cor. 4.16. Though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day. Againe, where the Apostle prayeth vnto God that the minds of the faithfull might bee renewed, he plainely intimateth that they were by nature §. Sect. 2. Other testimonies to proue the former point.

a Rom. 8.7. τὸ φρόνημα.
b Col. 2.18. ὑπὸ τοῦ νοὸς τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ.
c Eph. 4.23.

Rom. 12.2.

ture corrupt and sinfull. And thus he prayeth that the faithfull Thessalonians might be sanctified wholly, and that their whole spirit, and soule and body might be preserued blameles vnto the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ. And that the Ephesians might haue the spirit of wisedome and reuelation in the knowledge of him, and that the eyes of their vnderstanding being inlightened they might know what was the hope of their Calling, &c. Of which prayers they had great neede, seeing as the Apostle testifieth of them, they together with the rest of the Gentiles had their vnderstanding darkned being alienated from the life of God, through the ignorance which was in them, because of the blindnesse of their heart. Ephes. 4. 18. Finally the Apostle plainely determineth this question, whereas hee saith that the enemies with whom wee wrastle in this Christian Warfare, are not flesh and bloud, but spirituall wickednesses, euen the wicked spirit, the world and our owne corruption.

1. Thes. 5. 23.

Eph. 1. 17. 18.

Eph. 4. 18.

Eph. 6. 12.

Q. Sect. 3. Reasons to proue that the body only is not the flesh. The first taken from the names that are giuen vnto it.

Vnto these testimonies of Scripture wee may adde many reasons to proue, that by the flesh wee are not onely to vnderstand the body and the sensitiue faculties or the corruption of them both; but the sinne and pollution which hath ouerspread the whole man, soule and body. First because the names in the Scriptures which are giuen to the flesh doe intimate thus much, for it is called the old Adam and the old man, which consist as well of a reasonable soule, as of a naturall body; It is called sinne, according to that of Ambrose; All sinne is called the flesh; and the soule sinneth as well as the body, as the Prophet implyeth, where he saith, that the soule that sinneth shall dye. It is called the euill concupiscence, and the act of lusting belongeth to the soule and not to the body. It ic called the euill which encloseth vs, namely all the whole man, body and soule, and finally it is called the law of sin and law of death; and lawes are giuen by the chiefe Commander & supreame soueraigne, which as all confesse, is not the body, but the soule, and herein the reason and vnderstanding. Secondly, the actions which are attributed to the flesh doe proue this; for it is said to conet, desire, or lust, Gal. 5. 17. which is an act of the soule, & therefore Chrysostome concludeth that the Apostle meaneth not the body but the soule, for otherwise (saith hee) how can the flesh be said to lust; seeing lusting belongeth not to the body but the soule, for the body is to be reckoned among those things which are moued and not which moue, as being not an agent, but a patient. Thirdly, the sinnes which are attributed to the flesh shew plainely that wee are thereby to vnderstand the corruption of the soule, as well as of the body. So the Apostle reckoning vp diuers fruits of the flesh, nameth not onely adultery vncleanesse, murthers, drunkennesse and such like; But also Idolatry, Witchcraft, Heresie, which are the sinnes of soule and minde, and not properly and immediately of the body: And this Austine obserued. Who knoweth not (saith hee) that Idol-seruice, enmitie, contention, emulation, stomaching, dissension, heresie, enuy are rather the vices of the mind than of the flesh; seeing it may be that for idolatrie, or some errour of heresie, a man may abstaine from the pleasures of the flesh. Where further it is to bee noted, that these workes of the flesh, are not onely in the wicked and vnregenerate, but also in the godly and sanctified in respect of their flesh or part vnregenerate, for of such the Apostle speaketh, seeing they onely are exercised in the spirituall conflict, and they, and none but they, haue the spirit in them lusting against the flesh.

Reason 2.

Gal. 5. 17. Non hic carnem appellat corpus, alioquin quomodo concupiscit, quando quidem concupiscentia non earum est sed animæ. Chry. Soll. in Gal. 5.

Reason 3.

Gal. 5. 19. 20.

August. de ciuit. Dei lib. 14. cap. 2.

Fourthly the corruption of originall sinne (which in the man regenerate is all one with the flesh) hath ouerspread not the body alone, but also the whole man, body and soule: for the image of God was thereby defaced which principally consisted in wisedome, originall righteousnesse and holinesse, and these were chiefly & immediately seated not in the body, but in the soule: and in this regard the whole man, the soule as well as the body, needed to be washed in the blood of Christ, and in the lauer of regeneration, because all his powers and parts were defiled and corrupted. The which will better appeare if wee consider of some particulars. For in the mind and vnderstanding are seated, as in their proper place, the sinnes of ignorance, not onely in the vnregenerate, according to that of the Apostle; the naturall man perceiueth not the things which are of the spirit of God, for they are foolishnes vnto him, neither can hee know them, because they are spiritually discerned; but also the reliques thereof remaine in the regenerate, for wee know but in part, and we see but as through a glasse darkely; in which regard Christ telleth Peter that flesh and bloud had not reuealed vnto him that our Sauiour was the Sonne of God, meaning by flesh and bloud, humane reason and vnderstanding. And vnto this we may adde the sinnes of infidelity and doubting; errours and heresies. In the conscience also there is stupidity and terrours, whereby it is either asleepe, and obserueth not our actions to approue that which is good, and to accuse vs for euill, or being awakened doth with horrible fury pursue and terrifie vs admitting of no pacification. In the cogitation and imagination, vanity and much wickednesse, according to that Gen. 6. 5. Where it is said, that God saw that euery imagination of the thoughts of mans heart, were only euill continually. Finally in the will remaineth much auersnesse to

Q. Sect. 4. Reason 4. Originall corruption hath ouer spread the whole man body and soule.

1. Cor. 2. 14.

1. Cor. 13. 9. 12.

Gen. 6. 5. 2. Cor. 3. 5.

good,

good, and proneneſſe to euill, great rebellion and ſtubbornneſſe againſt God whereby we reſiſt his holy will in reſpect whereof the Prophet ſaith, that the heart of man is wicked aboue all things; and the Apoſtle telleth vs that in our wils there is no inclination vnto any thing which is good, vnleſſe God firſt worketh it in vs. By all which it appeareth, that by the fleſh wee are to vnderſtand the corruption of ſoule and body, according to that of Bernard; As (ſaith he) the old Adam was ſpread ouer the whole man, and poſſeſſed him wholly; ſo now let Chriſt haue all who hath created all and redeemed all, and will alſo glorifie all.

Ier.17.10.

Philip.2.12. Bernard. de Aduentu.domini. Serm.5.

Q. Sect.5. Reaſon 5. Becauſe the Body and Spirit are not enemies but louing friends. Gal.5.17.

Fiftly, the Fleſh and the Spirit are as the Apoſtle telleth vs; contrarie one to the other, and like mortall enemies in hoſtile manner they fight together ſeeking one anothers ruine and deſtruction; but ſuch enmitie is not betweene the ſoule and body, for then they would ſeeke one anothers ouerthrow, whereas contrariwiſe they mutually loue and cheriſh the one the other, and are much grieued when they muſt part aſunder. So the Apoſtle telleth vs, that no man euer yet hated his owne fleſh, but nouriſheth it and cheriſheth it, euen as the Lord the Church, and in this regard he willeth the the husband to loue his wife, as his owne body. And this argument Chryſoſtome vſeth. Whereas (ſaith he) the Apoſtle telleth vs that the fleſh luſteth againſt the ſpirit, he ſpeaketh of a twofold knowledge, whereof the one is contrary to the other, to wit not the ſoule and body, but vertue and malicionſneſſe; for if they ſhould be ſo oppoſed, they would deſtroy, one another, as water fire, and light darkeneſſe, &c. Now whereas the oppoſition and fight is not betweene the body and the ſoule, but the fleſh and the ſpirit, hereof it will clearely follow, that wee are not by fleſh to vnderſtand the ſubſtance of the body, but the quality of corruption in ſoule and body; for theſe enemies are of like nature, and therefore as by the ſpirit we vnderſtand not the ſubſtance or eſſence of the holy ſpirit, but a created quality of holineſſe and righteouſneſſe, in the whole man; ſo contrariwiſe wee are by the fleſh to vnderſtand not our bodily ſubſtance, but the ſinfull quality of corruption which hath defiled ſoule and body.

Eph.5.28.29.

Chryſoſt.in Gal.5.

Q. Sect.6. The ſixt reaſon taken from the words of the Apoſtle. Rom.7.18.

Sixtly, the Apoſtle ſaith, that in him that is in his fleſh dwelleth no good thing; where the fleſh cannot ſignifie the body as it is diſtinguiſhed from the ſoule, for ſo it is not true which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, ſeeing his body was not onely the habitation of his ſoule, but alſo the Temple of the holy Ghoſt. Neither was it here the Apoſtles purpoſe to diſtinguiſh betweene his ſoule and his body, but betweene grace and naturall corruption which had ouerſpread the whole man, ſo farre forth as he remained vnregenerate; as contrariwiſe by ſpirit hee vnderſtandeth the whole man, as he is regenerate and ſanctified. And this is the reaſon why hee correcteth himſelfe ſaying in mee, that is in my fleſh, becauſe hee would not be injurious to Gods ſpirit dwelling in his body, which maketh him thus to explicate his ſpeech, of his fleſh or part vnregenerate, in which the holy ſpirit dwelleth not. So Chryſoſtome telleth vs that the Apoſtle calleth Fleſh not the naturall body, but the depraued will, as when hee ſaith, you are not in the Fleſh but in the Spirit; And againe, thoſe who are in the fleſh cannot pleaſe God. What then is the fleſh to bee deſtroyed? Why hee who ſpake theſe things, was not hee compaſſed with fleſh? &c. By fleſh therfore he meaneth earthly, ſluggiſh and retchleſſe thoughts. So that this is not the accuſation of the body, but the fault of the negligent ſoule.

1.Cor.6.19. Chryſoſt.in Gal.5.

Rom.8.8.

Eightly, that which is called the fleſh, is in other places, called the euill concupiſcence, the euill which encloſeth vs, and the law of ſinne; but the body is not euill abſolutely, for it is the good creature of God as well as the ſoule; but reſpectiuely, as together with the ſoule it is tainted and defiled with corruption. So Auſtine telleth vs that our fleſh that is our body is good, yea very good, as being the workmanſhip of our onely good God; and it is not euill as Sethianus, Ophianus, and Patricianus would haue it; nor the cauſe of euill as Florianus hath taught, nor yet compacted of euill and good, as Manichæus blaſphemeth, but whereas it is good by creation, it is as the choiſe of the minde made vnto vs either good or euill, not by the change of the ſubſtance, but by the wages of execution. With whom Chryſoſtome agreeth, ſaying, that the Apoſtle doth not call the fleſh (that is the body) ſinne, but it is the worke of God, which if we wiſely vſe it, is exceeding fit for the purſuing of vertue. Neither is the body our enemy in this ſpirituall conflict, but our friend which aſſiſteth vs in in the fight, and taketh our part againſt the fleſh with the reſt of our ſpirituall enemies; namely as it is imploied by the ſoule, in praying, faſting, watching, hearing the word, holy conferences, giuing of almes and ſuch like religious and Chriſtian duties. So Hierome teſtifieth that this life to mortall men is a place of Combate, here we fights that elſewhere wee may bee crowned, and no man can goe ſecurely among ſerpents, and ſcorpions. Wee are compaſſed about with great troupes of enemies; the whole world is full of them; the fraile fleſh which within a while will become duſt, fighteth alone againſt many, &c. For as the body partaketh with the ſoule in the ſtate of corruption, ſo alſo in the ſtate of regeneration, the one being ſanctified as well as the other. For whereas the Apoſtle ſpeaking

Q. Sect.7. The ſeuenth Reaſon becauſe the body is not abſolutely euill, as the fleſh is.

Aug.de ciuit. Dei. lib.14. Cap.24.

Chryſoſt.in Rom.7.Serm. 13.

Hieron.ad Euſtochium.

ing to the faithfull telleth them, that they were washed and sanctified, he excludeth not their body but vnderstandeth it of the whole person body and soule. And this he plainely testifieth, saying, that the vnmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy, both in body & in spirit. And therefore hee exhorteth the Corinthians to the washing and purging of the whole person. Hauing (saith he) these gracious promises, (dearely beloued) let vs cleanse our selues from all filthinesse of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holinesse in the feare of God. So whereas hee affirmeth that our bodies are temples of the holy Ghost, he implyeth, that they are regenerate and sanctified; for what communion can there be betweene light and darknesse, God and Belial, the holy Spirit, and a polluted cage of vncleane spirits? And therefore as our soules are not in this life perfectly regenerate, but haue remaining in them many reliques of corruptions, so our bodies are not quite without regeneration, but are in part washed and purged by Gods holy Spirit, that they may bee fit habitations for himselfe to dwell in. To which purpose Hierome saith, that the Apostle doth not prayse the spirit, and dispraise the flesh, because that is good and this is euill: Seeing himselfe saith, that the Virgin careth for the things of the Lord, that shee may be holy in body & in spirit, and contrariwise doth accuse the spirit, saying men corrupted in their minds, &c. So Chrysostome saith, that Christ hath destroyed the kingdome of sinne, and hath made the flesh more able and spirituall for all good duties, not by changing the substance of it, but by raising and inciting it hereunto. For as fire being soyned with iron, doth make the iron like vnto the fire, though it remaine the same in its owne nature: so the flesh of the faithfull, who are indued with the holy Ghost, is changed by vertue of the spirit, and being made spirituall and lofty is lifted vp on high together with the soule. And as the body is thus in part sanctified, so also the affections and inferiour faculties of the soule, as loue, hope, desire, hatred, and the rest, and are made seruiceable to the soule for holy and religious duties: and whereas whilest wee were in the state of vnbeliefe, they sought on the diuels side, and prouoked vs to the committing of all wickednesse, now they forsake his campe and take part with the armie of Iesus Christ, inciting vs both in our soules and bodies, to the ready performance of all holy duties. And as the Apostle numbreth idolatry, witchcraft and heresie which are more properly belonging to the superiour to faculties of the soule among the workes of the flesh: so contrariwise he reckoneth loue, ioy, and peace, among the workes of the spirit, which are affections belonging to the inferiour part.

Lastly, euen the faithfull and regenerate are tempted, not onely to sinnes wherewith the inferiour faculties of the soule are delighted, as lust, wantonnesse, intemperance, and the like; but also vnto such sinnes as properly belong to the vnderstanding and will, as errours, heresies, infidelity, doubting of Gods mercy, truth, and prouidence; security, impenitency and hardnesse of heart. Now of what are they thus tempted, but as the Apostle telleth vs, of their owne concupiscence? and therefore this concupiscence extendeth as well to the superiour as the inferiour faculties of the soule. Yea not onely are they tempted but often are foyled by yeelding to the tentation; of which I need no other proofe, but that experience which euery Christian may haue in himselfe, if without partiality he will examine his owne conscience: for who is so inlightned that doth not find in his minde much darknesse? who so sanctified, that doth not acknowledge many errours whereby he hath beene ouertaken in his iudgement; and much vanity in his cogitations? Who is so humbled and hath so denied himselfe, that doth not feele in his will much peruersenesse and rebellion against the will of God? Finally, who hath his remembrance so confirmed and strengthned in grace, that doth not see his forgetfulnesse of God and of holy duties? And who is so strong in his faith, that doth not find many assaults of doubting and infidelitie? All which doth plainely proue that euen in the regenerate the reliques of carnall corruption doe remaine not onely in the inferiour and sensitiue faculties of the soule, but also in the superiour and intellectuall.

1. Cor. 6. 11.
1. Cor. 7. 34.
2. Cor. 7. 1.
Hieron. in. Ep. ad.
Chrys. in. Ro. 8.
Gal. 5. 22.
§. Sect. 8. The eight reason. Because the faithfull are tempted to such sinnes as properly belong to the vnderstanding and will. Iam. 1. 14.

Chap. VI.

Testimonies of Fathers to proue that the body alone is not our enemy the flesh.

Vnto these reasons wee may adde diuers testimonies for the better clearing of this point. And first Saint Augustine telleth vs, that the corruption of the body, which ouerburtheneth the soule, is not the cause of the first sinne but the punishment. Neither doth the corruptible flesh make the soule sinfull, but the sinfull soule maketh the flesh corruptible. From which corruption of the flesh, although there arise many prouocations of vices and vicious desires, yet not all the vices of a wicked life are to be imputed to the flesh (that is the body) least hereby wee acquite the Diuell of them who hath no flesh. Againe, he that magnifieth the nature of the soule, as though it were the chiefe goodnesse, and accuseth the nature the flesh as euill, without doubt he doth carnally §. Sect. 1. Testimonies to proue that the body is not our sinfull flesh. August. de ciuit. Dei lib. 14. cap. 3. tit. 5. col. 755.

August. de ciuit. Dei lib. 14. cap. 5. tit. 5. col. 758.

nally affect the soule, and after a fleshly manner shun the flesh, because he so iudgeth out of humane vanity, and not out of diuine truth. So in another place, the soule is not better than the body in merit but in nature; for the soule is sinfull and stained with many corruptions of concupiscence. But yet impure gold is better than the most purified lead. And elsewhere he saith; The flesh therefore is not euill if it want euill, that is, sin wherewith man is corrupted, neither is he euill made, but doth euill, for in both parts, soule and body, he was made good of our good God, but he doth euill whereby he is made euill. Now as by all these testimonies hee sheweth what the flesh is not, namely not the nature or substance of the body; so in many other places hee sheweth what it is, namely the law of sinne and corruption of nature, which hath ouerspread and defiled the soule and body. To name one or two for all. In his booke of retractations, hee saith that the Apostle by the names of flesh and blood, vnderstandeth the corruption of them both. And againe, the soule when as it affecteth those things which are carnally good, is named the flesh. With him agreeth Chrysostome; for writing on the words of the Apostle, they haue crucified the flesh with the lusts of it, he saith, that he here calleth their euill deeds the flesh, for if they should haue crucified their bodies, how then could they haue liued? And againe, it is the manner of the Scriptures to call by the name of flesh those, who onely minde carnall things, and neuer thinke on that which is heauenly. Thus also Gregorie saith, that the Scriptures are accustomed to signifie by the names of flesh and blood, the sinnes of the flesh. And in another place; It is written (saith he) that flesh and blood cannot inherite the Kingdome of Heauen, and how then shall I beleeue that in truth the flesh shall arise at the last day? I answere in the holy Scriptures the flesh is sometime taken according to nature, and sometime according to fault and corruption; in the former sense, this now is bone of my bone, and flesh of my flesh: and againe, the word was made flesh. In the other sense is to bee taken; my spirit shall not striue in these men, because they are flesh, and the speach of the Apostle, but you are not in the flesh, but in the spirit; not that they were not in the flesh, to whom the Apostle wrote, but because they had ouercome the passions of their carnall desires &c. So Hierome on the eight of the Romanes, saith, It is to be noted that the Apostle there accuseth the workes of the flesh and not the substance. And thus also Basill vnderstandeth it; for (saith he) he that is called the old man, signifieth together all sinnes and defilements particularly, as it were, in his parts. So Theoderet; The Apostle calleth flesh the inclination of the minde vnto those things which are euill; and the spirit, grace which inhabiteth and guideth the minde vnto those things which are good. And againe; it is manifest, that idolatry, witchcraft and such like sinnes, are not proper to the flesh, (that is the body) but to the soule; and therefore he doth not accuse the flesh; but the wicked and slothfull cogitation.

Augus. psal. 145.

Augus. de continent. cap. 8. Tit. 4. col. 998.

Carnis & Sanguinis nomine ipsam corruptionem carnis & sanguinis intelligendus est apostolum nuncupasse. Aug. retract. Lib. 2. cap 3.

Augus. de fide & Symb. c. 10.

Chrysost in Gal. 6.

Chry. in Gen. 6. Homil. 24.

Gregor. moral. lib. 3. c. 11.

Moral lib. 14. cap. 19.

Hieron. in Rom. 8.

Basil. de baptis. lib. 1.

Theodin Gal. 5. 17.

Ibidem.

And thus haue I shewed by the Scriptures and Fathers, that by the flesh wee are not to vnderstand the body and the sensitiue part of the soule alone, but the sinfull corruption of our nature: and that this hath ouer-spread and infected not the flesh or affections alone, but euen the minde and will. For Sathan hauing a desire to conquer vs, and to hold vs for euer vnder his subiection, did not onely by assault, take in the body and sensitiue faculties (at it were) the out-sconces, but hath also skaled and surprised the reason and vnderstanding, which is the strong tower and castle of our soule, through the strength whereof he commandeth all the rest. And hauing gotten possession of it, hee hath placed in it a strong garrison of his hellish armie, to keepe it for his vse; knowing that if hee can hold the minde vnder his gouernment, he may by the helpe thereof keepe all the rest. And this maketh him to vse all his skill and diligence, in darkening and deluding the reason and vnderstanding, and to this purpose hee doth sometimes possesse it with a spirit of slumber by making it drunke with the intoxicating cuppes of ignorance and errour; sometimes hee dazeleth and darkeneth it with the smoake and vapors of hellish temptations, that it may see no more, nor in other manner, than he will haue it, and sometime hee abuseth and deceiueth it by casting betweene the things presented vnto it, and the eye of reason false colours; and then as a man looking through a greene glasse thinketh a christall streame and filthy puddle all alike, so the eye of our iudgement being deluded, with Sathans false glasse or glosses which hee casteth before it, can put no difference betweene right and wrong, good and euill.

¶. Sect. 2. That Sathan hath assaulted not onely the body and affections, but the minde, and vnderstanding.

And byreason of this the diuels diligence, and politique care, it commeth to passe that no part or facultie of man is more infected and corrupted with the poyson of sinne than the minde and vnderstanding. It cannot be denied but that the minde and reason of man doe in their naturall endowments as farre exceede the body and sensitiue faculties, as the Sun in his chiefest brightnesse doth the smallest and dimmest Starre; It is true also that by those reliques of light, which remayne in the vnderstanding a man is excellently guided in naturall, ciuil, and meere morall actions, and by vertue thereof is able to atchieue great and difficult matters: but as in physicall bodies the best substance hath the worst corruption: so is it also true in in Diuinitie, that the more excellent the faculties of the soule be, the worse they be in the state of corruption. For the reason and vnderstanding in man is the chiefe rebell, which leadeth and ruleth the body and inferiour faculties (as it were) the baser sort of the common people: and therefore the more politique, eloquent and potent this rebel is, the more dangerous also and pernitious; seeing he holdeth the more powerfully al his subiects and inferiours in their enmity and opposition against their supreame soueraigne. And in this regard the soule is much more worthy blame than the body, and in the soule, the reason, minde and vnderstanding than the will, because it is the chiefe ring-leader in this rebellion, and the arch-traitor which giueth lawes and gouerneth all the rest; for as the iudgement alloweth or disalloweth, esteemeth or vilifieth, so the will chuseth or refuseth, and the affection loueth or abhorreth. Euen as contrariwise the chief praise belongeth vnto it in our conuersion vnto God, because with it selfe it causeth all other parts which it commandeth to returne vnto him and to submit themselues in all obedience to his rule and gouernment, whereof it is that true repentance is called μετάνοια the changing of the mind, because this being the first and principall act in our conuersion doth giue denomination to all the rest. And this chiefe faultinesse of the soule in the state of rebellion and corruption, as it appeareth by the former reasons, so doth antiquity giue testimony vnto it. Thus Chrysostome saith, that the soule here is more to bee blamed and accused than the body, because the body desireth no euill without direction from the soule, but contrariwise the soule committeth much wickednesse without the vse and assistance of the body. So Austine saith that the flesh (that is the body) without the soule cannot couet. And although the cause of carnall concupiscence bee not in the soule alone, yet much lesse is it in the body alone. And therefore it ariseth from both, to wit, from the soule because no delight is felt without it, and also from the body, because neither without it is there any sense of carnall pleasure.

¶. Sect. 3. No part more corrupted than the minde and vnderstanding.

Chrysost. in Eph. 2. Serm. 6.

Aug. de Genes. ad literam, lib. 12. cap. 12.

But the chiefe faultinesse of the soule will better apppeare, if wee consider that in the acting of this sinfull Tragedy, the soule, and in it, chiefly the minde and vnderstanding, playeth the chiefest part; for it is the Grand Captaine in this sinfull army which leadeth the body and inferiour faculties, and appointeth them to the accomplishing of its particular designes: it is naturally the Deuils Steward, which receiuing immediatly instructions from this hellish Master, doth appoint to euery inferiour part their taske as common seruants. It is the Deuils forge wherein hee first hammereth and fashioneth his sinfull temptations. It is the master workman in the shop of our sinfull nature, which setteth on worke all the other parts as vnder Prentizes. For first the minde thinketh on mischiefe, or entertaineth the Deuils temptations; then the iudgement alloweth it, if not simply, yet in respect of some circumstance; if not as an hellish hooke, yet as it is couered with the baytes of worldly vanities, either esteeming the sin for it owne sake, or at least for the wages and reward, and so then the will chuseth it, & the heart affecteth it, the concupiscence desireth it, and the body accomplisheth it. So that if the minde were bound to the good behauiour, and either would not thinke on wickednesse, or at least would vilifie and contemne it, our peace with God, and our owne consciences would be kept, and wee should haue no sinnefull seditions, and tumultuous vproares in the inferiour parts and members. In a word the minde and vnderstanding is the spring head from which all the streames of sinne doe runne and flow; and therefore the diuell first poysoneth and corrupteth it, that so it may taint and infect all the other parts, as wee may see in the example of our first parents whose iudgement he first corrupted, and then with ease infected their will and affections. Wherein he dealeth with vs as Elisha with the Aramites; first blinding vs and then misleading vs at his pleasure. For whereas God in the little world of man hath appointed the reason and vnderstanding, to be as the Sunne to giue light and directions vnto all the other parts and faculties, that so they may orderly exercise their functions and operations, Sathan knoweth right well, that if he can eclypse this light, by the opposition of changeable trifles, or vtterly darken it by the interposition of earthly vanities, there can thereupon nothing follow, but sinfull disorder and dangerous confusion in all our actions. And thus the Apostle liuely describing mans misery and sinne, first pointeth at this as the chiefe fountaine, that there is none that vnderstandeth nor seeketh after God, & then that, they are all gone out of the way and become vnprofitable. And this is the cause why the kingdome of sinne is called the Kingdome of darkenesse; and sinfull lustes are called the lustes of ignorance; & sinfull workes, the workes of darkenesse; because ignorance is the scepter of the diuels kingdome by which hee raigneth and ruleth in the children of disobedience; all carnall lustes spring from the blindnesse of the minde; and the darkenes of ignorance is the vayle which hideth all wicked workes, not onely from others but also from their owne eyes who commit them; and so encourageth them to goe on in these sinfull actions.

Rom. 3. 11, 12. Ephes. 6. 12. Col. 1, 13.

1. Pet. 1. 14. Rom. 13. 12.

1. Sect. 4. That the soule chiefly sinneth, and in it the minde and vnderstanding

2. Sect. 5. That the soule is the chiefe actor of sinne proued by testimonies.

And vnto this truth the ancients haue giuen their suffrage and testimony. Chrysostome saith; that in euery sinne, the soule first sinneth, Chryſ. in Math. 7. Hom. 21. Chryſ. in Rom. 7 Serm. 10.

ſinneth, and afterwards the fleſh, and vnleſſe the ſoule were firſt ouercome, the fleſh could neuer ſin. And expounding thoſe wordes of the Apoſtle, when we were in the fleſh; that is (ſaith he) in euill actions or in a carnal life. Neither would he ſay, that before times they were in the fleſh, and that now they walked about without bodies, &c. Moreouer leaſt any man ſhould accuſe the body, he doth not ſay, which euill actions the members themſelues haue wrought and done, but which were wrought in our members, that he might ſhewe how that the firſt beginnings of wickednes were derined elſewhere, namely from our thoughts working them, & not from the members which were driuen by their motion. For the ſoule holdeth the place of the Artizan or Muſician, and the fleſh of the inſtrument, giuing that kind of ſonnd or Muſique which the Muſician maketh it; and therefore it is not to be aſcribed to the fleſh if there bee diſcord in the Muſique, but rather to the ſoule by which it is ruled. So writing on thoſe words

Rom. 1. 28. of the Apoſtle, that as the Gentiles did not like to retaine God in their knowledge, God gaue them ouer to a reprobate minde to doe theſe things that are not conuenient: he ſaith, that the Apoſtle hereby diſcouereth that our ſins doe not ariſe primarily from our bodies, as certaine Heretiques would haue it, but from the minde, to wit from the euill concupiſcence, as it were, from the fountaine from which all euils flow. For the minde being reprobate, all other parts are ſo too, as the Coachman being diſordered which driueth the Coach, all that is vnder his rule, muſt needs be diſordered and out of frame. So

Ambroſ. in Rom. 7. Ambroſe demanding, what it is to be ſubiect vnto ſin, anſwereth, nothing elſe but to haue the body corrupted through the ſin of the ſoule; into which, ſin chuſeth it ſelfe to driue man as a captiue vnto it, that hee may doe its will. And Fulgent. de myſter. mediat. ad Truſim lib. 1. Math. 15. 19. Fulgentius likewiſe ſaith, that although ſin ſeemeth to be commited of a man corporally, yet it taketh its beginning from the heart; neither is any thing done outwardly, vnleſſe it be firſt inwardly concluded by the iudgement of the minde; the truth whereof truth it ſelfe hath ſhewed vs, ſaying, that out of the heart proceedeth euill thoughts, murthers, adulteries, &c. So

Aug. quæſt. ſuper Exod. lib. 2. q. 2. Auguſtine ſaith, that not in the body or inferiour faculties, but in the will of man is the originall of all vices.

§. Sect. 6. That the body is but the ſeruant of the ſoule in acting ſinne.

Aug. in Pſal. 145. Serm. 27. tom. 10. So likewiſe they teach, that the body is but the ſeruant of the ſoule which can or dare doe nothing but by the Maſters appointment. So Auguſtine ſaith, that the fleſh is an obedient ſeruant to the ſoule: the rule, the other is ruled, the one commandeth, the other obeyeth. In which regard he would haue the Manachees derided, who imputed all ſin vnto the fleſh, the which hee would haue, to Gods glory, duely praiſed, and all the faults to be attributed to the will. Chryſoſtome likewiſe compareth the body to armes and weapons, which are to be eſteemed according to their vſe. The Souldier vſeth them whileſt hee fighteth in defence of his Country; and the Thiefe againſt common friends who are of the ſame Countrey, the which is not the fault of the weapons, but of thoſe who abuſe them vnto euill: And ſo (ſaith hee) the body is either this or that, not in its owne nature, but by the predominant direction of the minde. And in another place, the ſoule ſo vſeth the body, as the ſmith the hammer & the anuile, vpon which it forgeth and faſhioneth the Idols of all carnall corruption & filthines; & frameth the images of all pleaſures. Nor is the fleſh the prompter & teacher of ſin, nor the inuenter of all malicionſneſſe, or the framer and diſpoſer of the things which are done; but it is the ſhop of the ſoule, which worketh and accompliſheth in it and by it whatſoeuer it effecteth. Thus alſo

Ambroſ. de Paradiſo. cap. 14. Ambroſe concludeth; You ſee then, that the minde is the authour of our faults, and that the fleſh is innocent, ſaning that it is often the inſtrument of ſin. Yea, euen the heathen man by the light of nature could diſcerne this truth; affirming that our eyes offended not, if they were not ruled and commanded by an euill minde.

Nihil peccat oculus ſi non ex illi animus imperet, Seneca.

Yea, ſo far is it off that our bodies ſhould be chiefly corrupted, and the principall authours of ſinne, that if wee ſpeake properly the ſoule onely ſinneth; and the corruption of the ſoule alone is ſinfull, and as for the corruption of the body it is rather the puniſhment of ſin than ſin it ſelfe. So

§. Sect. 7. That the ſoule only properly ſinneth. Auguſtine ſaith, that the corruption of the body which cloggeth the ſoule is not the cauſe of the firſt ſin but the puniſhment. So Auguſtin. de ciuit. Dei, lib. 14. c. 3. Chryſoſtome ſpeaking of our Sauiours ſpeech concerning the cutting off the right hand, and pulling out the right eye; he ſaith, that he intendeth not the diſturbing, much leſſe the deſtroying of the frame of the body. Farre be it from vs ſo to conceiue, for hee doth no where ſhew that there is any faults in the body, but euery where conuinceth the will of the euill; for not ſo much the eyes, as by the eyes, the minde and reaſon doe ſee; whereof it is that ſometimes the eyes doe not diſcerne thoſe who are preſent before them, the mind and cogitation being otherwiſe occupied. And elſe-where hee plainly affirmeth, that the peruerſe will is the cauſe of all euill. And againe, our mortall body is not the cauſe of ſin, but our wicked will is the roote of all euill. For why did not Abels body make him vniuſt? And why doth not the want of bodies benefit the Deuill? Will you know the cauſe, becauſe the mortall body bringeth to men, not onely no detriment, but much profit and benefit. And therefore hee concludeth, that it is the worke of the Deuill to make fooliſh men rather to accuſe their body, God himſelfe or their Neighbour, than their corrupt minde, leſt finding the cauſe of their ſinning, they ſhould plucke vp the roote of all their euils.

Chryſoſt. in Rom. 6. Ser. 12. And

In Geneſ. 3. Hom. 42. Iſai. Cap. 6. Hom. 1.

9. Sect. 8. That the body is not the flesh proued by the testimonies of the aduersaries themselues, and first out of Thomas Aquinas.

And thus haue wee proued by testimonies of Scripture, Reasons, and Fathers, that by flesh in the spirituall conflict, wee are not to vnderstand the body and inferiour faculties of the soule, or the corruption of them both, but the corruption of the whole man in euery part and faculty, and especially in the minde, vnderstanding and will which aboue all the rest are chiefly tainted and defiled. Now let vs also produce the testimony of the Aduersaries themselues, who howsoeuer in their doctrine they commonly confound the body and the flesh as being all one; and in their whole practice of mortification, doe bend all their strength against the body to subdue and keepe it vnder, yea, euen to torment, consume and destroy it, as though it were their mortall enemy; yet hauing sometimes their eyes dazeled with the light of Truth, they acknowledge euen the same verity of Doctrine which wee teach and defend against them. Thus Thomas Aquinas, their great Schoole Doctour, extendeth the flesh and corruption of nature to the whole man, the soule as well as the body; for writing on the words of the Apostle, In me that is my flesh, dwelleth no good thing, hee saith, that in man as hee is a sinner dwelleth no good thing, neither in his body nor minde. Now this is spoken by the Apostle of himselfe, and that as he was in the state of grace and regeneration as Aquinas a little before acknowledgeth, and therefore must necessarily bee referred to the part vnregenerate both soule and body.

And commenting on these words of the Apostle, The flesh lusteth against the spirit, hee saith, that heere is a doubt to bee cleered; namely that, seeing to lust or couet, is an act proper to the soule; therfore, as it may seeme, it cannot agree with the flesh: vnto which wee are to say with Augustine, that the flesh is said to couet or lust, in regard that the soule doth lust or desire according to the flesh; as the eye is said to see, when as rather the soule seeth by the eye. And therefore the soule then lusteth by the flesh, when as it desireth those things which are pleasant according to the flesh. But the soule lusteth or desireth by it selfe, when as it is delighted in those things which are according to the spirit, as workes of vertue and diuine contemplation. Yea, but if the flesh lusteth by the spirit, how is it said that it lusteth against it? namely, in this respect, as the concupiscence of the flesh, hindereth the concupiscence of the spirit. But this answere is not sufficient; for if both kinds of concupiscence come from the soule, the one immediately, the other mediately according to the flesh, this maketh no contrariety betweene the spirit and the flesh, as hee vnderstands it, but only in the same act of concupiscence which is in the soule alone in respect of the diuers manner of lusting, the one kind by the body, the other by it selfe. And therefore this answere would better fit the objection and agree with Augustines speech, That there is in the soule a double concupiscence; the one in the part regenerate which is spirituall, the other in the part vnregenerate which is carnall, the which are directly contrary the one to the other. And thus hee might answere another objection which himselfe maketh against his owne words; for whereas the Apostle saith, that the spirit lusteth against the flesh, he obiecteth, that if we here take the spirit for the holy Spirit, and grant that spirituall concupiscence is onely against that which is euill, it will follow, that the flesh or body against which the spirit lusteth is euill, which was the errour of the Manichees. To which hee answereth that the spirit lusteth not against the nature of the flesh, but against its desires onely as they extend to superfluity. But this answere crosseth his former speech, whereby he affirmed that the flesh or body had no concupiscence at all, but that it was an act proper to the soule alone. And therefore the objection were better satisfied if wee say that there is not onely in the regenerate part of the soule, the concupiscence of the spirit, but also the reliques of carnall concupiscence in the part vnregenerate, which fight as contraries and enemies the one against the other. But as Aquinas affirmeth, that concupiscence is onely an act of the soule, and consequently euill and carnall concupiscence, as well as holy and spirituall, wherein hee agreeth with vs; so also hee granteth in some places that the flesh is the corruption of nature or originall sinne, which is deriued vnto vs from our first Parents. So he saith, that the carnality which importeth or signifieth the rebellion of the flesh against the spirit, proceeded from the sin of our first Parents, because it belongeth to that smell of corruption deriued from that sin. So he expoundeth the Law of the members to bee that smell of sinne and corruption which moueth vs to sin, and is the punishment of the sinne of our first Parents in vs who are their posterity. And yet more plainly speaking of those words of the Apostle. But you are not in the flesh, hee saith that it is euident that this is not to bee vnderstood of the substance of the flesh, seeing the Romanes were mortall men cloathed therewith, but hee taketh the flesh for the vices and corruptions of the flesh, according to that, 1. Corinth. 6. 9. Flesh and blood shall not inherit the Kingdome of God. So that when hee saith, yee are not in the flesh, the meaning is, yee are not in the vices, and corruptions of the flesh, liuing as it were according to the flesh.

Aquin. in Gal. 5. 17.

Aquin. in Rom. 7. lect. 3. lect. 4.

Aquin. in Rom. 8. lect. 2.

But much more cleerely doth the arch-champion of the Papists, Cardinall Bellar-

9. Sect. 9. Testimonies out of Bellarmine to proue the former point.

mine assent vnto this truth; the flesh (saith he) in the Scriptures almost euery where is opposed to the spirit or some thing else more high and heauenly. For it doth not signifie the substance of the flesh, but the infirmitie or corruption, or humane and fleshly cogitation; all which are to the same effect, seeing it ariseth from our corruption, that a man will take vpon him to iudge of diuine matters after an humane sense. And in another place he saith, that sinne taken properly cannot be in the body but in the minde. For sinne is vnrighteousnesse, and vnrighteousnesse truely so called, can there only haue place where true righteousnesse hath its place. Now who euer hath placed righteousnesse, truely and properly taken, in the members of the body? But why doth he affirme this truth? Surely to confirme an vntruth; for hence hee concludeth, that whereas the Apostle saith, that concupiscence is sinne, and that it dwelleth in the flesh and not in the minde, hereby hee plainly sheweth, that it is not sinne properly but figuratiuely. But the Apostle speaketh properly when hee calleth concupiscence sinne, neither doth Bellarmines argument proue the contrary, seeing the Apostle doth not (like the Iesuite) by flesh vnderstand the body but the vnregenerate part & the corruption of nature, which is as well (yea much more) in the soule as in the body; the which I haue fully prooued, and Bellarmine himselfe will presently confesse. For in another place hauing said that Augustine by the name of concupiscence vnderstandeth the corruption of the inferiour part of the soule which rebelleth against the superiour, hee presently addeth; But it must not be denied that the like sin and corruption is to be found in the superiour part; for euen this part of the soule also is prone to lust after honours, vain-glory and other vanities, and although it be against our wils it doth sometimes bring forth such desires. And therefore Saint Paul, numbreth among the lusts of the flesh, not onely whoredome and drunkennesse, but idolatry, enmity, heresie, as Augustine hath diligently obserued, Lib. 14. de Ciuit. Dei, cap. 2, 3, & 4. Where hee sheweth that the flesh is sometimes taken for the whole man, as he is without the grace of God after the fall of Adam and that he is said to be carnall who liueth according to himselfe and not according vnto God. So elsewhere answering Caluins and Beza his obiection, who say, that the flesh in the seuenth of the Romans, is to be taken for the whole man, as hee is in the state of corruption, because Saint Paul numbreth the minde among the parts most corrupted, 1. Tim. 6. and commandeth vs to be renued in the spirit of our minds; to this hee answereth, that in many places of the holy Scripture wee are without doubt by the flesh to vnderstand as well all the superiour as the inferiour faculties corrupted with sinne. Neither doe wee deny but that with this sinne the mind also of man is corrupted, &c. No maruell therefore if the workes of Bellarmine are not suffered to bee reade without speciall licence nor scarce to bee found in common shops throughout Spaine and Italy, seeing in this and innumerable other points of Poperie he differeth from the most of their other Writers, and generally from the whole course of their practice, both in those and all other places, as hath in this particular beene before sufficiently proued.

Bellar. de Sacram. Eucharist. lib. 1. cap. 14.

Bellar. de amiss. gratie & stat. peccati, lib. 5. cap. 10.

De amis. gratie & stat. peccat. lib. 5. cap. 15.

Bellar. de amiss gratie & stat. peccat. lib. 5. c. 7.

Ephes. 4. 23.

CHAP. VII.

Obiections of the Aduersaries answered, whereby they indeauour to proue that the body and sensitiue faculties are the flesh.

NOw in the last place it remayneth that wee answere some Obiections; whereby they endeuour to proue that by the flesh wee are to vnderstand our bodies and sensitiue faculties only with their corruption; and not the soule and superiour faculties. And first they reason that this spirituall enemy of our saluation is the body and inferiour faculties of the soule, seeing it is vsually called by the name of flesh and carnall concupiscence. To which I answere that this manner of speech is not proper but tropicall and figuratiue, and to be vnderstood by a Metonymy of the subject for the adjunct or quality, flesh for the fleshly quality of corruption which hath defiled soule and body, the which is vsuall with the Hebrewes who in their ordinary phrase, put the abstract for the concrete, and the subject for the quality that belongeth vnto it; the which also the Greekes and Latines doe sometimes imitate, as when they called a wicked fellow nebulum, Scelus. But it may further be demanded why this spirituall enemy should by this Metonymy bee called the flesh rather than sin and corruption, if it were not chiefly seated in the body. I answere that it is thus called to shew how deeply our nature is tainted and infected with the poyson of sinne, in that it is, (as it were) incorporated into our flesh, and one of our essentiall parts turned, and (as it were) transformed into corruption, and it into them; so as there is nothing naturally remayning but euen a masse of corruption and lumpe of sin. And secondly, to intimate vnto vs the dangerousnesse of this enemy, in that it is not onely domesticall, dwelling in vs, but (after a sort) essentiall and inherent, so as it is not possible to auoyde it, but wee must deny our selues, nor to kill it, vnlesse we crucifie our owne flesh, nor to vanquish and subdue it, vnles we ouercome our selues. Yea, but why is this corruption of nature called called carnall and fleshly, rather than animall and spirituall, if it were not seated in the body, rather than in the soule? I answer that this corruption having defiled both the speciall parts of man the body, as well as the soule, it was indifferent by a Synecdoche to vnderstand the whole corruption of nature, by the name of either part. But if this answer will not satisfie: but that they will further object; that the soule is the principall part and therefore the name or denomination should follow it especially if it bee chiefly tainted and corrupted, and the arch-authour of all sinne: I answere that notwithstanding all this, our enemy in this spirituall conflict is called the flesh rather than the soule or spirit, to note vnto vs the great contrariety, and vnreconciliable enmity that are betweene the Combatants in this Warfare; for as opposite are these the one to the other as Light and Darknesse, Heauen and Hell, God and the Deuill, Good and Euill. And therefore to expresse this contrariety which is betweene them, names were chosen which were most extremely opposite: and it is not called after the soule, because there is some agreement betweene the soule and the body, and some resemblance between the spirit and the soule, but after the body, which being the grossest and most earthy part of man is most opposite and different to the spirit which is the purest part of the minde and reason.

Q. Sect. 1. The first Obiection, because this our enemy is vsually called the flesh.

Ephes. 4. 23.

3. Sect. 2. Other reasons why the corruption of nature is called the flesh.

And vnto these diuers other reasons may be added. For first this corruption of nature is called the flesh, because the body is the instrument of the soule to execute & put in practice the lusts and desires of sinfull concupiscence, according to that, Rom. 6. 13. Neither yeeld yee your members as instruments of vnrighteousnesse vnto sin: And the soule lusteth by the body; whereof it is, that the sin of euill concupiscence is attributed to the body as the instrument, though the mind be the chiefe agent, euen as the eye is said to see, when as the soule rather seeth by the eye, and the sword is said to kill, when as it is the man rather that killeth with the sword. Secondly, because the sinfull corruption of our natures doth discouer and manifest it selfe rather by the outward actions of the body and concupiscence of the flesh, than by the secret cogitations and desires of the mind and will. For whilest this poyson lurketh in the mind and will, it is secret and hidden alwayes to others, and oftentimes euen to our selues; but then it commeth to be knowne, when as it swelleth in our carnall concupiscence, and breaketh out in the sores of wicked actions. And as it fareth in the naturall birth, so in this hellish brood of sinne, after that the Deuill, or our corrupt flesh, haue cast into the minde the cursed seed of sin, the concupiscence warmeth, fashioneth and nourisheth it, and so though in the first conception it was vnknowne euen to the parents themselues that bred it, in the further growth thereof by lust, and in the birth by the outward action, it is made manifest, both to them and others. Whereof it is that the Holy Ghost calleth this sin and corruption concupiscence of the flesh, not because it gaue vnto it the first being in nature, but did onely first discouer it, & (as it were) brought it forth into the World. Thirdly, because the baits and allurements wherewith the Deuill and the World intice vs to sinne, are offered most vsually vnto our minds and vnderstandings by the mediation of the body and the outward senses, as riches, honours, & voluptuous pleasures; for these obiects being tendred to the senses, they present them to the vnderstanding and will, which approue and chuse them, not caring to swallow the hooke of sin, so they may feed on the bewitching bait. But what is the cause here of? Not for that the senses and carnall concupiscence doe first infect the superiour faculties, but because being already corrupted they are ready to entertain al such wicked motions. And as inferiour seruants, doe not, nor dare not, perswade their Soueraignes to such sinfull actions as are contrary to their liking and odious vnto them, as those who are royally munificent and bountifull, to base bribing and vnconscionable pilling of their people; those who are chaste and temperate to wantonnes and excesse; but onely vnto such vices as they are by nature somewhat inclinable to: so is it in this little Kingdome and Commonwealth of man; for the vnderstanding and reason are first corrupted and falne from that integrity, spirituall wisdome and excellency in which they were created, wherewith they were inlightned with the knowledge of God and of spirituall and heauenly things in which originally they tooke all their delight and sweet contentment, and now being blinded with ignorance, and not able to discerne or relish these diuine delicates, they cease to liue this spirituall life and can take no pleasure in heauenly things; and therefore giue themselues ouer to all sensuality, and willingly entertaine all corrupt motions of the flesh, which by the mediation of the body and carnall appetite may conueigh vnto them any earthly delight. And thus the soule is said to lust by the flesh, when as it desireth those things which are delightfull and pleasant according to the flesh; euen as contrariwise the concupiscence of the soule, in its created purity, was, when it delighted it selfe in those things which were spirituall and heauenly. To which the speech of Augustine fitteth well, What (saith hee) is it to walke according to the flesh? Nothing else but when we consent to carnall lust. And what is it to walk according to the spirit? It is to be so assisted Quid est secundum carnem ambulare? carnalibus concupiscentijs consentire, &c. Aug. Serm. 7. Tom. 10.

sisted with Gods holy Spirit in our mindes, as that wee doe not obey this fleshly concupiscence.

§. Sect. 3. Another reason why this our spirituall enemy is called the flesh.

Fourthly[1], the whole corrupt man body and soule is called flesh, because the soule as well as the body being giuen ouer to all sensualitie, doth only desire and joy in fleshly delights and the vain pleasures of sin, whereof it fitly hath its name from the objects and actions about which it is wholly exercised. And this reason Aug. giueth, the soule (saith he) is therfore called flesh, because it onely desireth those things which are carnally good. Yea will some say, but there remayne yet in corrupted nature some reliques of diuine light, and some sparkes of created wisdome, which condemne fleshly pleasures, and oppose against carnall and sensuall lusts: I answere that there are indeed euen in meere naturall men, some conflicts betweene their reason and affections, their conscience and concupiscence, but seeing that commonly the issue of this skirmish is the victory of the lusts and passions, and the base yeelding of the minde and reason, to subject themselues to their Lawes in the members, and to agree to the carnall conclusion of these inferiour parts, they are fitly with the sensuall faculties intituled with the same denomination of flesh, sinfull concupiscence, and the rest. Fiftly, the corruption of nature, as well in the soule as the body, is called flesh, because by the flesh and carnall seed in our generation sin is propagated vnto the whole man, soule and body. And finally because the soule, reason and vnderstanding, forgetting their created excellency, supremacy and authority ouer the other inferiour parts, doe basely subject themselues to become seruants and slaues vnto the flesh, for the contemptible wages of sinfull pleasure. And whereas they were made to rule the body, now they spend all their study and paines in doing seruice vnto it, in pampering of the belly and decking and adorning of the backe, and in deuising all meanes for the pleasing of the fleshly appetite, and satisfying of the lust and carnal concupiscence. And therefore justly with their rule and gouernment, they loose also the honour of their Titles, and whereas whilest they remayned Lords and Kings, they gaue names to the body and inferior parts, which were called after them reasonable and spirituall; now becomming their seruants they loose their owne names, and are called after their Lords and Masters whom they haue chosen to serue, fleshly and carnall. And this reason Augustine giueth, As the spirit (saith he) seruing the flesh is not vnfitly called fleshly; so the flesh serving the spirit, is fitly called spirituall; not because it is turned into spirit, but because by an admirable facilitie and readinesse to obey, it is subiected to the gouernment and rule of the spirit.

Anima verò cum carnalia bona adhuc appetit caro nominatur, Aug. de fide & Sym. cap. 10.

Aug. de Ciuit. Dei, lib. 13 c. vlt.

The second reason objected is grounded vpon the Apostles words, 1. Cor. 9. 27. But I keepe vnder (or as the vulgar Latine hath it) chastise my body, lest by any meanes when I haue preached to others I my selfe should be a cast-away. Where the Apostle maketh the body (as they thinke) the enemy against which hee fighteth, and the chiefe object of mortification. To which I answere first, that we doe not deny, but that the body is corrupted, as well as the soule, and that sin holdeth part of his residence euen in our earthly members; in which regard this naturall corruption is to be subdued euen in the body, by those exercises of mortification which the Scriptures haue prescribed, as fastings, watchings, laborious exercises in the duties of Christianity and of our spirituall callings. And to this he exhorteth vs, Col. 3. 5. Mortifie therefore your members which are vpon the earth; whereby hee meaneth those sinnes which dwel in our earthly members, to wit, fornication, vncleannesse, inordinate affection, euill concupiscence, as hee expoundeth himselfe in the next words. But all this doth not exempt the soule, from being the seat also of naturall corruption; yea, euen the chiefe Palace where sinne dwelleth. Secondly, I answere that by body in this place is not meant the substance of the flesh, but the whole corrupt man, or part vnregenerate both soule and body; In which sense the Apostle else-where calleth himselfe carnall, extending this fleshly corruption to his whole person; euen as by members we are to vnderstand those speciall sins which dwell in the members, as the Apostle in that place of the Collossians explaineth it. And thus he calleth this a body of sin, the law of sin which was in his members, and the body of death, and saith, that the old man is b crucified with Christ, that the body of sin might be destroyed, and that in Christ wee are circumcised with Circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh. And finally, that c if Christ be in vs (namely by his spirit) the body is dead because of sin, but the spirit is life because of righteousnesse; where by death of the body wee are to vnderstand the mortification of the flesh in respect of sinne; as appeareth by the Antithesis, whereby we are to vnderstand the quickening of the inner man to newnesse and holinesse of life.

§. Sect. 4. The second obiection grounded on 1. Cor. 9. 27.

Rom. 7. 23.

Col. 3. 5.

a Rom. 7. 23, 24.

b Rom. 6. 6.

c Col. 2. 11, 6.

Thirdly, they obiect the words of the Apostle Rom. 12. 6. Let not sin raigne in your mortall body; from whence they conclude that the seate of sinne is in the body and not in the soule and reason. To which the answere is easie; namely that by the name of body, here wee are not simply to vnderstand the body alone, but by a Synecdoche of the part for the whole, the person of man consisting of soule and body. And this is vsuall in the Scriptures by one part to signifie the whole §. Sect. 5. The third obiection grounded on the Apostles words, Rom. 12. 6.

d Rom. 8. 10.

whole person, and as by the body to include the soule, so in other places, by the soule to include the body. As, the soule that sinneth shall die, and all the soules that came with Iacob, into Egypt, which came out of his loynes were threescore and sixe. And thus Ambrose expoundeth this place. The Apostle (saith hee) calling it mortall body, vnderstandeth the whole man, because they who obey sinne are called mortall. For the soule (saith he) that sinneth shall die, that is the whole man, for none shall bee iudged without their bodies. And that the Apostle by naming the body did not exclude the soule, it appeareth in the next words, that you should obey it in the lusts thereof; whereby he sheweth that sinne is not onely in the body, but first and principally in the powers and faculties of the soule.

Ezech. 18.4. Gen. 46.26.

Mortale ergo corpus dicens totum hominem significauit. Ambros. in hunc locum.

Obiect. 6. The fourth Obiection is that the cheife poyson of corruption is to be sought in the sensitiue faculties.

Fourthly it is obiected, that the chiefe poyson of corruption is in the sensitiue and inferiour faculties, seeing experience teacheth vs that the mind, reason and vnderstanding, is infected by them, and so blinded and milled by passion and carnall concupiscence, that men giue themselues ouer to all sensualitie and become like vnto bruit beasts. To which I answere, that indeede the poyson of sinne hath exceedingly tainted the concupiscence, appetite, affections and all the sensitiue faculties, and that they being infected doe infuse their poyson into the superiour faculties, and like filthy sinkes of sin doe send vp noysome sents into the vpper parts, the minde and reason; for the obiects moue the senses, and the senses the will and vnderstanding; and it is true, that in this little common-wealth of man, the lusts and passions like rebbels rise against reason their King and Soueraigne. Finally we deny not but that the minde is drawne to thinke on that euill which the heart affecteth, and is corrupted by giuing way to these sinfull lusts, and by plotting and deuising the meanes whereby they may bee satisfied: but yet all this proueth not that the fountaine of corruption is in the body and sensitiue parts, for the poyson is first sent from the minde to the heart, which being infected and corrupted returnes it backe againe to the minde: euen as the liuer sendeth grosse blacke blood to the spleene, which regurgitating and ouerflowing, sends it backe againe to the liuer, and to the fountaine of blood being corrupted, it corrupteth the whole body. Neither doth this intestine rebellion arise first from the inferiour and subiect parts; but from the sinfull corruption of their superiours, whereby they are misgouerned, either through loose negligence, or desperate malitiousnesse; for why doth the heart affect that which is euill, but because the minde esteemeth it, the iudgement approueth it, and the will chooseth it, if not simply, yet as it is baited with some worldly profit, preferment or voluptuous pleasure. But it may be further vrged, that there are many who haue great knowledge & deep iudgments, that notwithstanding are much corrupted in their hearts, passions and affections. To which I answere, that though they haue some knowledge, yet not sauing knowledge, and though they haue great illumination, yet no spirituall wisedome and prudence, to apply this light after an holy manner to particular actions. For this Christian prudence in doing any thing, first propoundeth the end of the action which moueth vs to vndertake it, and then first it rightly counselleth, secondly rightly deliberateth and iudgeth of the counsell; and lastly rightly and constantly commaundeth that which is counselled and determined. Now the naturall man though hee hath wit to counsell, yet no true iudgement and consideration to approue of that which is best; but like Absalon heareth diuers counsels, and in conclusion chuseth the worst. And therefore the Apostle prayeth for the Colossians, not onely that they might bee filled with the knowledge of Gods will, but also, with all wisedome and spirituall vnderstanding, that they might walke worthy of the Lord, &c.

Col. 1.9. 10.

Obiect. 7. The fift Obiection is that there are certaine sinnes proper to the body and sensitiue faculties.

Lastly it is obiected that whoredome, surfetting and drunkennesse, proceed from the body and sensuall appetite and are sinnes proper vnto them, and therefore the minde and reason is not alwayes the chiefe authour and fountaine of sinne. To which I answere that though these actions of eating, drinking lusting and committing vncleannesse, are immediately from the sensuall concupiscence and the body, yet the corruption and sinfulnesse of these actions is from the minde and reason. Either because it bridleth not the appetite, or pricketh it forward to excesse, because it taketh delight in these voluptuous pleasures: for not the body it selfe, but the soule by the body taketh pleasure in eating, drinking and satisfying of the lusts. Neither are these actions in themselues sins, but the immoderation and excesse, or the misapplying of them to wrong obiects, as we may see in lust it selfe, which in its owne nature is not euill, for then it could in no case be lawfull, but when a man lusteth after strange flesh. So Chrysostome saith, that the body lusteth & desireth but neither fornication nor adulterie, but commixtion; the body coueteth, yet not dainties but meate, not drunkennesse but drinke. And elsewhere; the body (saith he) is made to doe this or that, not out of its owne nature, but out of the ouerruling iudgement of the minde. The eye indeed when as it curiously beholdeth another's beauty becommeth an instrument of vnrighteousnesse, but not out of its naturall action (for the Corpus concupiscit, at neque fornicationem nec adulterium sed simpliciter commixtionem, &c. Chrysost. In Eph. 3. Serm. 6.

Chrysost. in Rom. 6. Ser. 11.

the naturall office thereof is to ſee and not to ſee euilly) but out of the cogitation infuſing malitionſneſſe. Whereas if it were thereby reſtrained as with a bridle, it would become an inſtrument of righteouſneſſe. And the ſame is to be ſaid of the tongue, hands and all other members. And in another place; Thou wilt (ſaith hee) obiect, that the body draweth thee into fornication. To which I anſwere, not the body but the incontinency of the mind, &c.

CHAP. VIII.

That the fleſh is a moſt dangerous enemy. Firſt becauſe it is exceeding malitious.

1. Sect. 1. That through the fleſh alone wee are expoſed to all danger.

BY this which hath beene ſaid it appeareth ſufficiently what our enemy is; and now in the next place we are to conſider that it is not an enemy to bee contemned, but exceeding dangerous and pernitious; for howſoeuer it may ſeeme at the firſt ſight to bee weake and of ſmall ſtrength yet is it the mightieſt and chiefeſt Captaine vnder the prince of darkeneſſe, by whoſe aide and aſſiſtance he getteth the victory, and without whoſe helpe he could do nothing. For though he ſhould aſſault vs with a huge army of his temptations, and haue his ſtrength reenforced, and euen twiſe doubled with the aides of all our worldly enemies, yet they could neuer preuaile againſt vs, but ſhould bee ſure of a ſhamefull ouerthrow, vnleſſe theſe inbred enemies did betray vs into their hands, and ſecretly open the gates of our ſoule to let in the troupes of their temptations. The which is apparent in the example of our Sauiour Chriſt, who being free from the inward corruption of the fleſh, was not at all endangered with the outward temptations of the Diuell. And whereas the helliſh ſparkes of his ſuggeſtions fall into our corrupt hearts (as it were) into tinder or gunpowder, by which they are nouriſhed and much encreaſed in their ſtrength and violence: they did no more worke vpon our bleſſed Sauiour, whoſe pure nature was no iot tainted with carnall corruption, than a weake dart that lighteth vpon an impenetrable armour, or a ſmall ſparke of fire that ſhould fall into a Sea of water. Needs then muſt the fleſh be a dangerous enemy, ſeeing all danger is by and through it: needs muſt it aboue all be moſt pernitious, ſeeing it expoſes vs to all miſchiefe, and nothing without it were able to hurt vs. The which ſhould perſwade vs to bend all our ſtrength againſt it, ſeeing if we ſubdue our carnall corruptions, wee ſhall eaſily put to flight the Diuell and the world; whereas in vaine ſhall wee fight and ſtriue againſt theſe forraigne forces, if wee doe not firſt kill and crucifie theſe ſecret traytors, for no more buſie can wee bee in building forts and bulworkes to ſtrengthen vs againſt their ſtrong aſſaults, than they will be in raſing and ruinating them, that they may giue an eaſie entrance to theſe outward enemies. And this was the practice of the Apoſtle Paul, who did not beate the ayre and ſpend his ſtrength in vaine by fighting againſt a ſhadowe or phantaſie, but like a politique ſouldier diſcouers and ſingles out his moſt dangerous enemy, euen this body of corruption which dwelled in him; and though hee could not quite kill or thruſt him out into perpetuall baniſhment, yet hee employes all his ſtrength to ſubdue & keepe him vnder, and vſes him like a baſe bond-ſlaue beating him blacke and blew, and giuing him daily deadly wounds, that ſo he might neuer gather ſtrength, nor bee able to ſtand out in rebellion againſt the part regenerate. 1. Cor. 9. 27.

2. Sect. 2. That in the fleſh dwelleth nothing that is good.

But the dangerouſneſſe of this enemy will the better appeare, if we conſider both how dangerous it is in reſpect of its owne owne nature, and in regard alſo of diuers aduantages which it hath againſt vs in the conflict. The dangerouſneſſe of it in reſpect of its owne nature will appeare, if we conſider that as on the ſide it is moſt malitious; ſo on the other very mighty and powerfull. The wicked malitiouſneſſe of it may be conſidered both in it ſelfe and in its owne nature, and as it is exerciſed towards vs, that is, the true Chriſtian, or the part regenerate. For the former; the fleſh is ſo wicked and malitious, that no good thing remaineth in it, for ſo the Apoſtle plainely confeſſeth I know that in mee, that is in my fleſh, dwelleth no good thing. From which abſence of all good, one of the ancients giueth the notation of the latine name. Thou fleſh (ſaith he) art naked and vtterly deſtitute of all vertues, and art therefore called fleſh from thy wanting, becauſe thou art naked of all that is good. In which reſpect the fleſh is much worſe than the Diuell himſelfe; for though he be wicked, yea that wicked one, by a kind of eminency, yet is there in him ſome relation and reſpects of good, namely as hee is the creature of God, and in reſpect of his eſſence and ſubſtance, as alſo his gifts of wiſedome, power, ſwiftneſſe, &c. being conſidered in their owne nature, and not in regard of his abuſe. But in the corrupt fleſh there is nothing but a lumpe and maſſe of ſinne, not any part of Gods workmanſhip, an vtter abſence of all good gifts, and nothing but folly, ignorance, dulneſſe, impotency and whatſoeuer may bee called by the name of euill; for as it is deſtitute of all good, ſo is it euill in all relations: for as the fleſh is all euill, ſo all euill is in the fleſh, and from the fleſh is all euill. In which reſpect wee wee may truely say that the flesh is vnto this euill of malitiousnesse, subiectum adæquatum, a subject equally extended vnto it, for there is no part or power of the flesh which is not wicked and sinnefull, nor any wickednesse of sin which is not to be found in this center of wickednesse. For first the flesh is wholly wicked and malitious. The a wisedome of it is enmity against God. The b vnderstanding of it a dungeon of ignorance; the c imaginations onely euill and that continually, the d will stubburne and peruerse, standing out alwayes in an vtter opposition and obstinate rebellion to the will of God. And if the superiour faculties of the flesh bee nothing else but a sinke of sinne, what can wee expect, but that the inferiour parts must in their degree bee sutable in corruption? And therefore as the Apostle speaketh of sinfull men, so may wee speake of the fountaine and authour of all their sinne; the eyes of it are full of adultery, the throate an open sepulcher, the tongue of it vsed to deceit, the poyson of aspes is vnder its lippes, the mouth of it is full of cursing bitternesse, the feete swift to shed blood; destruction and misery are in its way, the way of peace it hath not knowne, nether hath it the feare of God before its eyes.

Rom. 7. 18.

Tu caro cauſſa virtutibus denudata es, ideo dicteris caro à carendo, quia carens omni bono. Ideot. in orthodoxogr. de conflict. carn. & animæ. c. 1.

a Rom 8.7.
b Rom.1.21.18. & Eph.4.18.
c Gen 6.5. 8.21. 22. d Eph 4.19.
2 Tim.2.26.

Rom.3.18.19.

§. Sect. 3. That all manner of euill is in the flesh.

Secondly, as the flesh is wholly euill, so all manner of euill is in the flesh. For it is the common sewer in which all filth and loathsome poyson of sinne meeteth: and in a full source runneth together; it is the Diuels storehouse of wickednesse, and his armory in which hee layeth vp all the weapons of impietie; It is the Sea of sinne from which all wickednesse floweth, and into which it floweth backe againe. In a word it is the fruitfull wombe into which the diuel casting the seeds and spawnes of his hellish temptations, they receiue warmth, nourishment, growth, and in the end life and the perfect shape of all kinds of sin. For there is not any sinne whatsoeuer though neuer so monstrous and abhominable, but hath its being in this wicked flesh; if not appearing, yet at least secretly lurking in this filthy dungeon, if not in the full groweth, yet at least in their seeds and chiefe principles. There lyeth hid impious Atheisme, filthy prophannesse, abominable idolatry, palpable ignorance, cursed infidelity, damnable hypocrisie, hatefull, pride, bold presumption, fearefull desperation, wicked treasons, horrible murthers, beastly incests, adulteries, thefts, couetousnesse, ambition, crueltie, falsehood deceit, with a huge swarme of innumerable other sinfull abhominations. And though these vices and corruptions doe not alwayes burst out into the sores of outward actions; yet (like dangerous impostumes) they lye hidden within the body of this flesh; though they are not alwayes exercised in their functions and operations, they being subdued with Gods sanctifying spirit in the faithfull, and with his restrayning grace in the vnregenerate, yet these cursed habites and hidden faculties doe still remaine, euen in the regenerate in some degree, although in part mortified and weakened, and in their full strength in wicked men. And as the egge hath in it potentially all the parts of the bird, and onely needeth to haue the damme to sit and houer ouer it, vntill by her warmth it may bee hatched: so the flesh containeth in it all manner of wickednesse, and if the filthy spirit, like an vgly toade, houer ouer it, and (as it were) warme it with the heate of his hellish temptations, there will bee hatched the killing cockatrices of all sinne, if the spirit of God doe not crush them in the shell. Neither is this the state of some alone, but euen of all mankinde, so farre forth as they are vnregenerate, whereof it is that what Dauid had spoken of some speciall and notorious sinners of his times, the Apostle in the third Chapter of the Epistle to the Romanes, extendeth it to all mankind, being considered in the state of corruption.

Rom.3.19.20.

§. Sect. 4. That the flesh is the author of all wickednesse.

Lastly as the flesh is all euill, and all euill in the flesh, so it is also a fruitfull mother of all wickednesse, and a filthy sinke from which arise the noysome sents of sinne, and that poysonous fountaine from which doe flow the streames of all euill. And this our Sauiour noteth whereas he saith, that which commeth out of a man (namely from the inner fountaine of a fleshly heart) defileth him. So the Apostle Iames maketh this carnall lust the mother, as the Diuell is the father of all sinne and wickednesse: for receiuing the seeds of Sathans tentations (as it were) into a fruitfull wombe, it first conceiueth, and then bringeth forth sinne, and so sinne when it is finished bringeth forth death. And the Apostle Paul telleth vs what cursed fruits doe spring from this roote of bitternesse, namely Adulterie, Idolatrie; Witchcraft, Hatred, Heresie, murther and many other horrible abominations. Neither in truth can it other wise bee; for who (as Iob saith) can bring a cleane thing out of an vncleane? Or what can wee expect from an euill tree but euill fruits? as our Sauiour hath taught vs. And seeing the flesh is a Sea of wickednesse, and a fountaine poysoned in the very head, there can nothing flow from it but corrupted streames. And therefore as the Lord gaue nine commandements to dry vp (as it were) these streames of wickednesse, so he gaue the tenth to damme vp the well head, for in vaine it is to stop the current, if the fountaine it selfe be euer springing.

Mark.7.18.
Iam.1.14.15.
Matth.7.18.
Gal.5.19.20.
Iob.14.4.
Matth.7.18.

§. Sect. 5. That the flesh is a more malitious enemy vnto vs, than the deuill or the world.

And thus it appeareth how euill and malicious this wicked enemie the flesh is in its owne nature; now let vs consider how it standeth affected towards vs: in which respect spect wee are to know that it matcheth (if not exceedeth) the world, yea the Diuell himselfe in mischiefe and maliciousnesse; for howsoeuer it disguiseth it selfe vnder the vizard of friendship and (courtier-like) maketh semblance of all loue, yet is it in deadly hatred with the spirituall man, continually disturbeth his peace, vndermineth his safety, and is still plotting his ruine and destruction. Neither is it possible to conceiue a more bitter opposition in all things, than betweene the flesh and the spirit; for what the spirit vndertaketh, the flesh crosseth, what that furthereth this hindereth, and at all times and vpon all occasions the one willeth what the other willeth. In which respect it may truely bee said, that these two cannot reigne and flourish in the same man at once; for the prosperity of the one, is the ruine of the other, the kindling of fleshly lusts is the quenching of the spirituall, the nourishing of carnall concupiscence after earthly things, is the choaking of spirituall concupiscence after that which is diuine and heauenly; and the feeding and fatning of the one, is the pinching and staruing of the other, according to that of the Psalmist, hee satisfied their carnall desires, but withall hee sent leanenesse into their soules; for the pampering of these lusts bring the soule into a desperate consumption; and the satisfying of them taketh away all appetite after spirituall nourishment. From which mortall and malicious opposition, wee may plainely gather, that there is no peace to bee expected, no not any intermission or surceasing of this warre, vnlesse one of the combatants bee killed and destroyed; for as fire and water being put together, neuer cease striuing and fighting, till either the fire bee extinguished, or the water consumed; so is it in this spirituall conflict betweene these vnreconcileable enemies. The which should adde much to our Christian resolution, and make vs couragiously to assault this enemy with carefull diligence, renewed spirits and redoubled strength, seeing there cannot bee so much as a truce, much lesse a secure peace betweene vs, nor any meanes to preserue the life of the spirituall man, vnlesse wee kill and crucifie this malicious enemie.

Psal. 106. 15.

2. Sect. 6. That the flesh is most malitious vnto vs because it is the author of all sinne.

But this maliciousnes of the flesh wil better appeare, if wee consider the effects and fruits that it bringeth forth against vs: which may either bee referred to our sinne or to our punishment. The former appeareth by that which hath beene said, for it is this sinfull flesh which worketh in vs all manner of euil concupiscence, and from the inward corruption of the heart proceed euill thoughts, murthers, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witnesse, blasphemies as our Sauiour teacheth vs. And so farre off is the Law of God from stopping this floud of wickednes, that it swelleth so much the higher, and by the opposition of Gods will taketh occasion of greater rebellion, breaking downe all the bounds and bankes that should stay and keepe it in. And as a wilde beast or curst ban-dogge groweth more fierce and inraged when as they are resisted, or when they are curbed in and tyed vp: So this sauadge flesh and sinfull corruption take occasion by the knowledge of the law the more to transgresse it, and the more that they are checked and restrained, the more violent they grow in their wicked outrage. And this the Apostle testifieth out of his owne experience; But sinne (saith he, that is, the sinfull flesh) taking occasion by the commandement, wrought in me all manner of concupiscence; for without the Law sinne was dead. Now sinne is the greatest euill that can bee imagined, as being opposite to God the supreame goodnesse, neither is death, punishment, hell, condemnation, nor the Diuell himselfe, so absolutely euill, nor so extreamely contrarie to Gods glorious Majestie. In which regard the flesh which is that sinning sinne as the Apostle calleth it, and deepe festered and euer running sore which sendeth forth this filth of corruption, is chiefely to bee hated of those who loue God, as being the principall prouoker of rebellion against our supreame soueraigne, the bellowes which inflame vs with the fire of concupiscence, the cause which maketh vs so often to offend our gracious God, the thiefe which robbeth vs of all sauing graces, the wall of separation betweene vs and heauenly happinesse, and that arch-enemy which would often euery day thrust vs into Hell, and the gulph of destruction, if wee were not supported by Gods grace and holy Spirit.

Rom. 7. 8.

2. Sect. 7. That the flesh is the cause of the depraning of our nature and the defacing of Gods image in vs.

And as it is the cause of all euill of sinne, so consequently of the euill of punishment: for this is the running and fretting Leprosie which hath monstrously defiled the whole man; and defaced that glorious image of God in which we were created, turning our spirituall wisdome, into folly and ignorance, and our created holinesse and righteousnesse into all injustice and hellish impietie. Yea this flesh & fleshly lusts do not onely deface the image of God, but euen the image of a man, whilest they take away from him his reason and vnderstanding, and so all difference betweene him and a beast; for through the sinfull concupiscence of the corrupt flesh, man turning away from his Creator to the creatures, looseth not onely the image of God, but euen the image of himselfe; and hath the image of the creatures imprinted vpon him. And hereof it is that man, Gods most excellent workmanship, is so monstrously deformed, and so horribly abased, that hee is become in his naturall condition vile and vgly in the sight of God and his holy holy Angels; yea euen a terrour and ſhame to himſelfe, if once the Lord open his eyes and giue him a ſight of his naked deformities. As we may ſee in the example of Adam, who being made the moſt beautifull and glorious of the creatures, was ſo miſhapen and deformed with theſe ſinfull luſts, that he could not indure the ſight of himſelfe, but as he did run into the buſhes to hide his deformites from the eyes of God, ſo if it had bin poſſible hee would haue hid himſelfe from himſelfe and therefore for want of a better couering, made him breeches of Fig-leaues to couer his nakedneſſe. Thus alſo Iob, when by the light of Gods preſence he came to a ſight of his owne corruptions, he was vile and baſe in his owne eyes, abhorred himſelfe, and repented of his ſinnes in duſt and aſhes. So that nothing maketh vs more vile and baſe than the fleſh and carnall luſts, euen as contrariwiſe nothing more intituleth vs to honour and dignity, than to bee cleanſed from this naturall filth, and to bee adorned with holineſſe, whereof it is that the Apoſtle matcheth theſe two together; for hauing exhorted vs to purge our ſelues from the ſinne of vncleanneſſe, he wiſheth vs in the next place to poſſeſſe our veſſels in ſanctification and honour.

Iob.42.6.

1.Theſ.4.3,4.

§. Sect.8. The the fleſh bringeth vs into a moſt baſe condition.

But this will better appeare, if we further conſider into what a baſe condition we are brought, if the fleſh and the luſts thereof doe get the dominion ouer vs. For whereas there is no eſtate ſo vile and abject as the eſtate of a bondſlaue, becauſe hee is in all things ſubject to the command of his maſter, there being no place left vnto expoſtulation, nor ſo much as any liberty to demand a reaſon; nor no bondage comparable to the bondage of Sathan and our owne ſinfull luſts, becauſe there is no maſters ſo vnjuſt and cruell, the fleſh ſubjecteth vs to this miſerable thraldome. For if Sathan command theſe abject vaſſals, they muſt obey, though it directly tend to the diſhonour of God, the hurt of their neighbours, and the vtter deſtruction of their owne bodies and ſoules. And in the like or greater ſlauerie they are to their owne ſinfull luſts. If vnjuſt anger prouoke them to reuenge, they muſt kill and ſlay; if filthy luſt impoſe vpon them neuer ſo hard a taske, they muſt vndertake it, though it bee to the ruine of their eſtates, the ſtayning of their fame, yea the hazard of their liues, and damnation of their ſoules. If couetouſneſſe command the compaſſing of ſome wealth, they muſt make no queſtion of right or wrong; of hurting other men or their owne perſons. If ambition would haue them to aſpire to preferment, they muſt not ſticke to tread all vnder foote that ſtand in the way, they muſt lye and diſſemble, ſweare and forſweare, and climbe vp the craggie rocke of honour with intolerable toyle, though they are in danger by falling to breake their neckes, either when they are in the midway, or when they be come to the top of their hopes. If voluptuouſneſſe and ſenſualitie will haue their appetite ſatisfied, they muſt toyle and moyle and indure many dayes labour for an houres delight. In a word, they who are in ſubjection to the ſinfull fleſh, are aboue all men in the world in the greateſt ſlauerie, being like vnto Cham, who was a ſeruant of ſeruants, not ſo much in reſpect of outward ſubjection, as in that they are embondaged to their owne carnall luſts; for as there is no ſeruant or ſlaue ſo baſe and vile, ſo there is no tyrant in the world ſo proud and cruell.

§. Sect.9. That whilſt we liue in the fleſh we cannot pleaſe God. Rom.8.8.

A third fruit and effect which ſpringeth and proceedeth from this ſinfull fleſh is, that whileſt we liue in it, and it in vs, we cannot pleaſe God, nor doe any thing which is acceptable in his ſight. So the Apoſtle plainely telleth vs, that they who are in the fleſh cannot pleaſe God; and the reaſon hereof is cleare and euident, becauſe to bee in the fleſh, is to bee the ſeruant of ſinne and the vaſſall of Sathan, and to doe nothing but what they like and command; and therefore ſeeing nothing in the world can bee imagined, ſo oppoſite and contrarie vnto God as they, nor any thing ſo odious and abominable in his ſight; and ſeeing their friends bee Gods enemies, and thoſe things which pleaſe them be moſt diſpleaſing in the ſight of God, needs muſt all thoſe actions which are done in the fleſh be odious vnto him and make the agents obnoxious to his wrath. Now what a miſerable condition is this, into which man is brought by his ſinfull fleſh, that both his perſon and all his actions his words, workes and ſecret cogitations ſhould bee vtterly miſliked and diſallowed of him who is the ſupreame King and judge of Heauen and Earth, who hath all power in his hand to reward infinitely thoſe whom hee liketh and alloweth, and to puniſh in like proportion, thoſe whom hee diſalloweth and miſliketh.

§. Sect.10. The fleſh ſetteth man at enmitie againſt God. Rom.8.7.

Fourthly the fleſh nouriſheth perpetuall enmity betweene God and the carnall man, for ſo the Apoſtle ſaith that the wiſedome of the fleſh, or the carnall minde, is enmity againſt God; for the fleſh and carnall luſts are in great league and amitie with the Diuell and the world, and they all three vnite all their forces to fight againſt God and all his friends; and howſoeuer they are often vanquiſhed by his almighty power, yet like malicious enemies they ſtand continually againſt him in open rebellion, rather to teſtifie their malice and hatred, than out of any hope of preuailing againſt him. And therefore they who will bee friends vnto theſe fleſhly luſts, the wicked world and the archtraytor Sathan, muſt needs hereby make themſelues themselues enemies vnto God, according to Iam.4.4. that of the Apostle, Know yee not that the amitie of the world is enmity with God, and whosoeuer will bee a friend of the world, is the enemie of God. And againe, if any man loue the world, the loue of the Father is not in him; and the reason which he rendreth is this, because the world and the flesh with the sinful lusts therof are combined together,

1.Joh.2.16. for (saith he) all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father but is of the World. For this carnall lusting after earthly things, breeds a neglect and loathing of things spirituall and euen of God himselfe: for their appetite being filled and glutted with the sweet poyson of fleshly delights, they haue no tast nor relish of those heauenly excellencies, and they who haue their senses filled with the seeing of worldly pleasures, haue their spirituall sense so dulled and deaded, that they cannot smell Gods odoriferous sweetnesse in his Word and holy ordinances. But as the Beetle chuseth rather to bee in the dung than among the sweetest flowers, and the filthy hogge is more delighted with routing in the dunghil, than to walke about in the most pleasant garden: so those who are carnally minded are best pleased, when as by any meanes they may satisfie their sensuall and fleshly appetite, and take no pleasure in spirituall or heauenly things; yea so contrarie and opposite are they vnto God in all goodnesse, and such enmity there is betweene them, that nothing giueth vnto them greater distaste and discontentment. And as these fleshly lusts enrage men against God; so also doe they prouoke Gods wrath against
Eph.2.3. them; and therefore the Apostle saith, that whilest they had their conuersation in the lusts of the flesh, fulfilling the desires thereof, they were also the children of wrath, and in that respect in danger daily to bee consumed with the fire of his displeasure. Now what a fearefull condition is this, to bee at enmitie, mortall opposition and in hostile termes against God himselfe? For as the 1.Cor.10.22. Apostle saith, doe we prouoke God vnto anger? Are wee stronger than he? Can it bee well with the earthen pitcher when it dasheth its selfe against the strong Rocke? Or can the seely Mouse escape destruction when hee prouoketh and encountreth the fierce Lyon? And how much more may they bee assured of vtter ruine and destruction who are at enmity with God himselfe, who is not onely able to arme all the creatures against them, but with a word of his mouth to cast them into Hell?

Q. Sect.11. That the flesh is the cause of all our punishments.

Finally, as the flesh is the cause of all sin, so also of all punishment; & therfore (because it were infinite to stand vpon the particular euils and mischiefes which this malicious enemy causes vnto vs,) looke how many plagues and punishments are inflicted vpon mankinde, either in state or name, soule or body, and impute them all to the flesh, as the fountaine of these bitter waters from which they spring and flow. And yet all these being put together are not comparable to those fearefull punishments which it causeth to carnall men in the life to come. For it excludeth them out of Gods Kingdome and cutteth off all hope of hauing any part in the heauenly inheritance. For they that are in the flesh, are vnregenetate and vnsanctified, and without holinesse they can neuer see God; and out of this heauenly City are excluded, dogges and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murtherers, and idolaters, and whosoeuer loueth and maketh a lye. And more plainly, the Apostle hauing reckoned vp the fruits of the flesh, directly affirmeth, that they who do such things, shall not inherite the kingdome of God. And lastly the maliciousnesse of this wicked enemy and the sinfull lusts thereof herein appeareth, in that nothing will satisfie them but our death and destruction. For they are those mortall weapons which kill and murther vs, and the edge and point of them is not onely directed against the body, but against our soules, which are much more precious. And this argument the Apostle vseth to perswade vs to shunne and auoide them; Dearely beloued (saith he) I beseech you as strangers & pilgrims, abstaine from fleshly lusts, which warre against the soule. The end of which warre is not onely to get the victory, and to keepe vs in subiection, but to cast all that are conquered into the prison of hell, and to plunge them into euerlasting condemnation of body and soule. So the Apostle saith, that when wee were in the flesh, the motions of sinnes which were by the Law did worke in our members to bring forth fruit vnto death; and that to bee carnally minded is death: and yet more plainely, that if wee liue after the flesh we shall die; and that hee who soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reape corruption, whereby is meant eternall death and destruction, as appeareth by the antithesis following; but hee that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reape life euerlasting. And the Apostle Peter likewise telleth vs, that the Lord reserueth the vniust vnto the day of iudgement to be punished, but chiefely them that walke after the flesh in the lust of vncleannesse.

Heb.12.14. Apo.22.15. Gal.5.21. 1.Pet.2.11. Rom.7.5. Rom.8.6.13. Gal.6.8. 2.Pet.2.10.

Q. Sect.12. That the malice of the flesh is the more dangerous, because it is masked vnder the color of friendship.

Now this maliciousnesse of the flesh is so much the more dangerous, because it is masqued and disguised vnder the colour and couerture of the neerest friendship; for whilest in outward shew it seemeth a neerer friend, than a Kinsman or dearest brother, and like another selfe appeareth most carefull of aduancing our present and future goods, it doth most maliciously vndermine our safety, & betrayeth trayeth vs into the hands of our professed enemies; neither can Satan and the World be more ready to besiege and assault vs with the forces and troupes of their temptations, than the flesh to yeeld vs into their hands by giuing free entrance to these assailants. Yea it doth not onely open the gates of our soules to let in these mortall enemies, but being entred, ꝛ joyneth with them, assisteth these hellish forces with a strong army of carnall lusts, and fighteth against our soules, robbing and ransacking them of all spirituall graces, and wounding them euen to the death with the wounds of sin, if they were not recured with the precious Balsum of Christs bloud. So that we haue just cause to complaine with our Sauiour, that it is not a stranger or professed enemy, but a wicked Disciple and false Iudas that continually followeth vs; waiting all opportunities wherby he may betray vs; & that he who eateth bread with vs hath lift vp his heele against vs. And as Dauid complaineth of Achitophel. It is not a professed foe that doth vs this mischiefe, but it is thou, a man, mine equall, my guide and mine acquaintance, our councellour and companion that walketh with vs to the house of God. It is one who was borne and bred, liueth and dieth, eateth, drinketh, sleepeth, walketh and talketh with vs, which notwithstanding watcheth all occasions of bringing vs to destruction; for like Tinder receiuing the sparkes of Sathans temptations it nourisheth and encreaseth them, till at length our soules be inflamed with a world of wickednesse. Whereby it appeareth that the flesh with the lusts thereof are enemies aboue all others most dangerous and pernicious; for being secret Traytours they are much more malicious than professed enemies, malice and hatred being of such a nature, that the more they are smothered and concealed, the more they are inwardly increased and inraged. They haue also the fittest opportunities to worke our ouerthrow in that lying and liuing with vs, they can easily take the best aduantages, and then set vpon vs when as wee are most weake or secure, and least prouided to make resistance. Moreouer being secret Traytours they are so much the more able to doe vs mischiefe, because suspecting no hurt from them, wee doe not arme our selues against them, nor fortifie our soules against their assaults; whereof it commeth to passe that we are often ouercome and led captiue vnto sin, before we discouered the enemy, or did discerne that we were encountred. Finally, they fight with vs not by marching against vs in the open field, but out of secret ambushments, when wee feare no danger, and so oftentimes put vs to flight, before we haue any time to recollect and marshall in order the forces of our mind, or to make any head against their fury. Now what can bee more dangerous than to haue alwayes in our company such a treacherous Iudas, who is still plotting the fittest meanes whereby hee may betray vs into the power of our enemies? To haue alwayes with vs such a flattering, false Ioab, who when hee performeth all complements of kindnesse, doth but watch his opportunity to stab and kill vs; to bee besieged with mighty enemies, and to haue within the wals of our City secret Traytours, who are still ready to open the gates to let them in, and being entred to joyne with them, that so together they may worke our ouerthrow?

But it is not enough to know our danger, vnlesse we also be acquainted with the meanes how we may preuent it. And therefore let vs inquire how we may auoid these pernicious Treasons and escape the perill of these secret ambushments. And first taking notice that the flesh, whilest it professeth friendship and offereth vnto vs much profit and many delights, is our mortall enemy, and a sly Traytour which taketh part with the chiefe enemies of our saluation, wee must hearken to the Prophets counsell in another case. Trust yee not in a friend, put yee not confidence in a guide, keepe the doores of thy mouth from her that lyeth in thy bosome, and alwayes haue it in jealousie, then most suspecting it, when as it offereth to satisfie our desires. And when it commendeth vnto vs the vanities of the World, promising that in the fruition of them wee shall haue great contentment, let vs beware of secret treachery, and againe and againe looke vnder these baites to see if there be not hidden vnder them the hooke of sinne, and curiously search if these booties are not purposely set out, to make vs fall into Sathans ambushments, that so hee may ouercome and lead vs captiue to doe his will. For who would giue any credit to such a false Traytour, as hath before his eyes brought so many to vtter ruine, yea, which we know by manifold experience, hath many hundred times betrayed vs to the Deuill and the World, when as it hath tendred vnto vs the fairest promises and pretences. Secondly, seeing we know it to be a trayterous enemy we must disarme and weaken, captiue & hold it in subjection, that so though it haue euer a malicious will to hurt vs, yet being disabled, it may not haue any power to rebell against vs. Thirdly, wee must keepe a narrow watch ouer it and ouer our selues, that it doth not take vs at any aduantage, and often looke to our senses, as it were the gates of our soules, that they be not by our flesh and carnall corruption vnbarred and left open to entertaine the forces of our spirituall enemies. And because our vigilance is not sufficient to preuent the plots and practices of this subtile Traytour, let vs often

Q. Sect. 13. How we may defeat the malicious treasons of the flesh.

Micah. 7. 5.

Iohn 13. 18. Psal. 55. 13, 14.

often intreat, by our most feruent prayers, the keeper of Israel who neuer slumbreth nor sleepeth, that hee will watch ouer vs, and by his holy Spirit discouer and defeat these treacherous enemies.

CHAP. IX.

That the flesh is an enemy exceeding powerfull and mighty.

Q. Sect. 1. That the flesh is to the vnregenerate a mighty King, & to the regenerate a powerfull Tyrant.

WE haue shewed that the flesh is a most malicious enemy, so that it wanteth no will to bring vs to destruction: And now it remayneth that wee shew how mighty and powerfull it is in effecting that which it desireth and lusteth. The which will appeare if we consider the mighty power and subtile policy of these malicious enemies. Their power appeareth both in regard of their strength and number. For the first, if wee looke vpon the flesh in its full strength, as it is in a man vnregenerate, and is not subdued nor hath the vigour thereof abated by Gods Spirit, wee shall finde that it raigneth as a mighty Monarch in the little World of man, holding euery faculty, power and part both of soule and body in subjection. The which the Apostle plainly intimateth, where he exhorteth those whom Christ by his Spirit hath regenerated and freed from this regiment, not to let sin raigne in their mortall bodies, that they should obey it in the lusts thereof. Yea, it raigneth not onely as a King and absolute Soueraigne; but as a Lord or Tyrant who hauing conquered mankind doth hold them in subjection as miserable captiues and bond-slaues, selling them ouer to the committing of all actuall transgressions, for the base price of earthly vanities. The which the Apostle intimateth in these words; but I am carnall, sold vnder sinne. Whereby he signifieth that the flesh dealt with him like a proud and cruell Tyrant, seasing vpon him, like one who had bought a slaue in the market, and forcibly compelling him to doe his will. The which if the Apostle might truly speake of himselfe though hee were regenerate, in respect of that part which remayned vnsanctified, then how much more may it be verified of those who remayne in the state of corruption and vnregenerate, who are wholly vnder the dominion of sin? Now if we would see with what power and vnresistable force, this cruell Tyrant did rule in all the sonnes of men, whilest they remayned in the state of corruption, hereby it will appeare in that they were so vtterly vnable to free themselues out of this thraldome, that they neuer durst nor could attempt their liberty, because their wils were no lesse captiuated, than their other parts and faculties, and it was their chiefe delight to liue in this slauery. Neither were any outward helpes auaileable, because being possessed and ruled by this legion of wicked lusts, like the Demoniake in the Gospell nothing would containe them nor restraine their fury, but they brake easily all those Chaines, Giues, and Fetters wherewith they were bound, being (like mad men) a like harmefull both to themselues and others. For neither would Gods loue and many benefits allure them and contaid them in obedience, nor his wrath and fearefull judgements terrifie and restrain them from sinne. Neither the Law of God, contayning so many gracious promises to them who obeyed it, and so many terrible threatnings against them that transgressed it, both of temporary plagues and euerlasting punishments; nor the execution of these dreadfull judgements in the punishment of the whole World by an vniuersall deluge; of Sodome and Gomorrah with fire and brimstone, with many other Cities and Countries which haue beene made examples of Gods wrath against sinne; besides the experience of innumerable particular persons, and euen of themselues, visited by the hand of God in a fearefull manner, were all sufficient and strong enough to curbe and keepe vnder these sinfull passions and corrupt lusts, nor to subdue and thrust out of his regency this powerfull Tyrant the flesh; till Christ Iesus himselfe came who is the wisdome and power of his Father, and conquered him on his Crosse, triumphing gloriously ouer him together with the rest of our spirituall enemies; and vntill hee apply the vertue of this victory vnto vs, and by his powerfull Spirit, which is infinitely stronger than all men and Angels, doe vanquish this mighty Tyrant, giue him a deadly wound of which hee continually languisheth, and deposing him from his regency, doe set vp in our hearts the gracious and glorious Kingdome of our blessed Sauiour. So that we may conclude this point with the saying of Cyrill. The voluptuous lusts of the flesh without doubt are of mighty power, by which the minds of men are wholly diuerted from all honestie and goodnesse.

Rom. 6. 12.

Rom. 7. 14.

Mar. 5.

In Johan. lib. 3. cap. 34.

Q. Sect. 2. Of the strength of the flesh being considered in its selfe.

But lest those who are regenerate should contemne this enemy, as being weake and impotent, because it is in part mortified and the strength thereof abated by vertue of Gods Spirit dwelling in them; let vs in the next place know, that though it be not in them so puissant and powerfull as in those who remayne in their naturall corruption, yet it is exceeding strong and mighty, whether wee consider it simply in it selfe, as it worketh and rebelleth in those who are sanctified, or compare it with the spirituall and regenerate part. The former is notably set downe by the Apostle in his owne person, in the seuenth Chapter of the Epistle to the Romanes, manes, where hee sheweth that this corrupt and sinfull flesh is so farre off from any conformity to the Law, that taking occasion by the commandement, it wrought in him all manner of concupiscence, and so abused the Law which was purposely giuen to restrain him from sinne, and to subdue and mortifie his corruptions, as a means to giue strength, life and vigour vnto it; Whereby the Law which was ordained to life, became to be vnto death. Further shewing the power of his fleshly corruption hee saith, that it tooke occasion by the commandement to deceiue and slay him, working death vnto him by that which is good; that it ouercame him and like a slaue sold him vnder sinne, that it made him to doe that which hee allowed not, to omit the good which hee affected, and commit the euill which he hated; that though he were delighted in the Law of God and desired to obey it, yet euill was present with him. That though hee constantly resolued to serue God, yet the flesh like a strong rebell making warre against him, did often foyle and ouercome him, and carried him into captiuitie to the law of sinne. Yea, of such force and might did this holy Apostle find the flesh in him, that it forced him to cry out; wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer me from the body of this death. So elsewhere hee telleth vs, that the flesh is not so subdued, but that it continually maketh warre against the part regenerate; and standeth in such strong opposition against it, that the godly cannot doe the good they would. With whom the Apostle Peter agreeing telleth vs, that the fleshly lusts doe fight against our soules. Finally, as it hindreth vs oftentimes from yeelding any obedience to the law, and enforceth vs to transgresse it; so when wee doe performe any duties which it requireth, it so defileth and staineth them, that wee haue just cause to acknowledge with the Prophet that our best righteousnesse is but like a polluted cloth. Now this strength of the flesh vnlesse it be wounded, subdued and kept vnder by Gods Spirit, is alwayes in it full vigour, yea in daily growth, notwithstanding all naturall means which can be vsed. For the decay of nature it selfe doth not make it decay, but euen in sicknesse it retaineth health and vigour, and when through olde age the body is weak and decrepite, it continueth firme and strong.

Rom. 7. 8.
Vers. 9.
Vers. 10.
Vers. 11.
Vers. 12.
Vers. 13.
Vers. 14.
Vers. 24.
Gal. 5. 17.
1. Pet. 2. 11.
Isay 64. 6.

§. Sect. 3. That the flesh is mighty being considered comparatiuely with the spirit.

So also if we compare it with the spirituall part, the flesh is much greater and stronger; and therefore would easily ouercome it and quench all Gods graces in vs, if God should leaue vs to our selues to be supported and defended by the strength which wee haue receiued, and not continually send vs new supplyes, and vphold vs with the power of his owne spirit. For the Apostle telleth vs, that in this life we haue receiued but the first fruits of the spirit, which is but an handfull in comparison of the haruest, the whole crop of grace being reserued, till we shall receiue with it the fulnesse of glory. And in regard that the flesh in quantity did so much exceed the spirit, he sticketh not to say, that the Corinthians though sanctified in Christ Iesus and called to be Saints, were carnall and but babes in Christ; yea, hauing himselfe receiued such a great measure of grace, hee notwithstanding in the sight and sense of his great corruption acknowledgeth that hee was carnall and sold vnder sinne. Hereof it is that Diuines compare the flesh to the great Gyant Goliah, and the spirit to little Dauid; and not vnfitly, for as Dauid was farre vnequall to the mighty Gyant, and therefore preuayled not against him by his owne strength, but by the power of God assisting him, in whose name he came against him; so by the same meanes only the spirit getteth victory ouer the flesh, God giuing it strength to ouercome because it fighteth his owne battailes.

Rom. 8. 23.
1. Cor. 1. 2. Chap. 3. 1. 3.
Rom. 7. 14.

§. Sect. 4. Of the multitude of our fleshly lusts,

Finally, vnto the strength of our enemy wee may adde their multitude, for though they be one in name, to note that they are all of the like sinfull nature, and as one combined in malice to worke our destruction; so are they many in number, euen whole legions of vnlawfull lusts, which continually multiply themselues, by begetting a new offspring after the old are killed and subdued. Whereof it is that the Apostle Peter willeth vs, to abstaine from fleshly lusts, which fight against the soule, speaking plurally of them as being many, euen a whole army which maketh warre against vs.

§. Sect. 5. That the power of our enemies should make vs to shake off all securitie.

The consideration whereof should moue vs to shake of all security, arising from contempt of our enemies, and seeing they are so mighty in strength, and many in number, let vs vse so much the more care, diligence, and vigilance to defend our selues against their fury, buckling vnto vs the whole armour of God, and vsing all means both for the weakning of our enemies, and the nourishing and strengthening of Gods graces in vs. Especially let vs call vpon God, the Lord of hoasts, desiring him by our feruent Prayers, that he will by his Spirit abate the power of the flesh and the sinfull lusts thereof, and re-inforce and strengthen the army of his spirituall graces in vs, by sending to them daily new aydes and fresh supplyes, that so in the end we may obtaine the victory.

§. Sect. 6. That the might of our enemies should not discourage vs from the fight, but make vs more courageous.

Neither should the power of these spirituall enemies daunt and discourage vs, and so make vs cowardly to flie, or yeeld our selues as slaues vnto them; because being so much too strong for vs, there is no hope of withstanding their fury or obtayning victory. But let vs still remember that wee fight the Lords battailes, and therefore hee being on our side, wee are sure (if wee will but fight) to obtaine the victory in the end. Let vs remember that our Grand Captaine Iesus Christ hath by his death ouercome sinne, and led it captiue vpon his Crosse, triumphing gloriously ouer it together with the rest of our spirituall enemies, so as none of them shall bee able to hurt vs. With which meditation the Apostle comforted and incouraged himselfe in his tedious conflict with the flesh; for hauing pitifully complayned and cryed out; Wretched man that I am who shall deliuer mee from the body of this death? Rom.7. Hee presently addeth; I thanke God through Iesus Christ our Lord; By whom alone hee had obtained strength, whereby hee was able to stand in the fight, and was assured in the end to get the victory. Yea, let vs call to minde that hee by his Spirit hath applyed vnto vs the vertue of his death, whereby hee hath giuen vnto our flesh such a deadly wound, that it shall neuer recouer of it, but languish in a continuall consumption, vntill by our death it bee fully abolished. And therefore when wee like weake and white-liuered Souldiers are tyred in the fight, let vs flie to the standard, and fight vnder the shield of Christ our Sauiour, who is our true Eleazar (the comfort of God) and so mighty and omnipotent, that hee is able to vanquish and ouercome all our enemies alone; onely hee would haue vs to fight with him in the battaile, that so wee might also accompany him in his glorious triumph. Let vs remember that though our spirituall part bee but the first fruits, yet it is an earnest of the whole harueſt; though it be but small in quantitie, yet it is full of vertue and vigour, the God of Life giuing life vnto it, and like a little quintessence, which is stronger in operation, by that vertue which it receiueth from the fire of Gods Spirit, than a great quantitie of common waters. Whereas contrariwise the flesh, though it be much greater and stronger, yet being deputed to mortification and hauing receiued a fatall blow, of which it daily languisheth and decayeth; it is a Gyant in deed in strength and bignesse, but yet such an one as being in a deadly consumption, pineth away by little and little till it be wholy abolished. And on the other side though the spirit bee as a childe in age and stature, yet it is in a continuall growth vntill it come to mans estate and a perfect age in Iesus Christ.

CHAP. X.

Of the policy of the Flesh; and that it is more dangerous and pernicious than its power and strength.

§. Sect. 1. That the policy of the flesh is in its nature exceeding pernicious.

IT now remayneth in the next place, hauing seene the power of the Flesh, that we also consider of the policy of this enemy. The which as it is great in it selfe, so also most dangerous and pernicious vnto vs. For howsoeuer the strength of the flesh be very great, yet the policy thereof doth farre exceed it; for being not a professed enemy, but a secret Traytour, it is more exercised in cunning vndermining of our safety with subtle sleights and politique stratagems, than in assaulting vs after an open & hostile manner with strength and violence. Hence it is that the Lord telleth vs by the Prophet, that the heart (whereby hee vnderstandeth the soule of man, or that part of the soule which remayneth vnregenerate) is deceitfull aboue all things, and so desperately wicked in this depth of fraude, that none can know it but the Lord, who is omniscient, and knoweth all things. For howsoeuer Sathan the olde Serpent in respect of his naturall abilities and long experience, may be more cunning and politique in himselfe, yet his deceit is not so great, in abusing and wronging vs, as is the deceit of our owne flesh. For this being a part of our selues, yea, of euery power, faculty and member of our soules and bodies, it is of the priuy counsell of all our thoughts, and knowing our most hidden imaginations and secret intentions, it can take aduantage of them to worke our owne ouerthrow; where as Sathan being ignorant of them, cannot by all his craft and subtilty so much endamage vs. And in this respect Sathan cannot deceiue vs, vnlesse our owne flesh assisting him doe first deceiue vs, whereof it is that our Sauiour, being pure from all fleshly corruption, and most free from this carnall guile, could not possibly be deceiued with Sathans policies and most subtle stratagems. Whereas on the other side our owne flesh can easily abuse and coozen vs, though it haue no helpe at all from the arch-enemy of our saluation. And hereof it is that the flesh in the Scriptures is called the olde man, to note vnto vs, that as men in this age, grow by their long experience very politike, and vnlesse they bee sanctified with Gods grace and holy Spirit, very subtill, crafty and full of fraude, so the flesh exceedeth and aboundeth in fraude and treachery. Ier.17.10.

§. Sect. 2. Of the strength of the flesh being considered in it selfe.

Now this fraude and policy of the flesh, as it is most malicious in it selfe, so it is most pernicious vnto vs. The former appeareth in that it taketh part with Sathan, the wicked one, against God himselfe the chiefe goodnesse;

nesse; for so the Apostle telleth vs, that the wisdome of the flesh is enmity against God. And that this policy is most pernicious vnto vs, it is manifest, first because it often preuaileth, and much deceiueth vs; as the Apostle out of his owne experience complaineth, Rom.7.11. Sinne taking occasion by the commandement deceiued mee. In which regard that may iustly bee said vnto vs which the Prophet speaketh in another case, Trust yee not in a friend, put yee not confidence in a guide, keepe the doores of thy mouth from her that lyeth in thy bosome. For so often and commonly are wee hereby deceiued and abused, that we haue iust cause to subscribe to the Wise mans saying: Hee that trusteth in his owne heart is a foole. Secondly, the perniciousnesse of this policy vnto vs hereby appeareth, in that it tendeth vnto no lesse hurt than our death and vtter destruction; for so the Apostle telleth vs, that the wisdome of the flesh is death, and therefore he joyneth these two together, that sinne, or his sinfull corruption deceiued and slue him; because it was such a deceit as brought death and destruction, vnlesse he had beene redeemed and freed from it by the precious death of Iesus Christ. Finally, the danger of this carnall policy and deceipt is so much the greater, because it is so subtill and secret, so deepe and disguised, that it can hardly be discerned and found out; according to that of the Prophet Ieremy, The heart is deceitfull aboue all things and desperately wicked, who can know it? So that our longest line cannot sound the bottome of this gulph; our quickest and most piercing sight cannot discouer the multitude and strength of these subtle enemies, because they display not their colours in the open field, but lie hidden in secret ambushments: yea, they mingle themselues amongst our owne forces, and disguise themselues in our owne coats and habits. They make shew of simplicity and sincerity, when as there is nothing but craft and deceipt: and these dangerous bogs seeme outwardly faire greene fields and firme ground, but hauing with this outward shew inuited vs to them, wee are ready to sinke, and to bee swallowed vp and perish, when wee rest vpon them. In which regard it behoueth vs to follow the Wise mans aduice: Pro.4.23. Keep thy heart with all diligence. And the exhortation of the Apostle: Take heede brethren lest there be in any of you an euill heart of vnbeliefe in departing from the liuing God. But exhort one another dayly, whilest it is called to day lest any of you bee hardened through the deceitfulnesse of sinne. For how hard is it to ouercome those enemies, which are so hardly discouered? and to frustrate and preuent those deceits which cannot without great difficultie be so much as discerned?

But let this difficultie in sounding of the depth of this hellish policy, and in searching out those deceipts which lye lurking in these darke corners, onely make vs more vigilant and diligent to discouer them but not daunt and discourage vs, or make vs lesse confident & couragious in fighting this spirituall conflict; for be the flesh neuer so politique and euen inspired withall the subtiltie of the Deuill, yet haue wee a wisdome to direct vs in comparison whereof all this depth of craft & cunning is but childish folly. And though there be in our corrupt nature such a maze of deceit, that we cannot enter into it, or being entred cannot tell how to get out; and though it be such a darke dungeon of subtilty, that by the light of our owne wisedome and vnderstanding wee cannot see into it; yet the Lord hath giuen vnto vs his Word to be our line, which if we follow we shall find euery creeke and corner, turning and winding of this Labyrinth of wickednesse; and to be a light shining in the darkest places, which is able to dispell this Cymerian darknesse, and to discouer cleerely all these subtilties and crafty policies, teaching vs also the way to preuent and defeat them, so as wee shall not be in danger of these secret ambushments. So the Apostle telleth vs, that the Word of God is quicke and powerfull, and sharper than any two edged sword, piercing euen to the dividing a sunder of soule and spirit, and of the ioynts and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. And therefore as the darkest dungeon where all things are hidden and vnseene, becommeth as light as any other place, if there be made an open passage, for the Sun-beames to shine into it, so as all the filth and sluttish corners are manifest to euery beholder, which before by reason of the darknesse none could discerne: so this dungeon and depth of carnall policy hideth all things, and is it selfe hidden from our sight, so long as we bring vnto it no other light than our darke vnderstanding: but if once the beames of Gods shining Truth, and the bright rayes of his holy Word doe inlighten vs, wee shall easily discerne these deepe and darke deceits, and discouer all the secret filthinesse and abominable wickednes which lyeth lurking in these secret corners. So that if wee will make choise of Gods Word to bee a lampe to our feet and a light vnto our paths; wee shall easily auoid those secret snares which lie in our way, and escape those subtile stratagems and dangerous ambushments, which the flesh hath purposely laid to insnare and circumuent vs. If we will often and seriously study in this holy booke we shall find all the slights and subtilties of those spirituall enemies layed open, together with the meanes how wee may defeat them. But withall, because the flesh doth continually cast fogs and mists before our eyes, that we may not discerne this light, and like vnto some

That the policie of the flesh should make vs more watchfull and vigilant.

2.Pet.1.19.

Heb.4.12.

Psal.119.105.

kinds of fish doth purposely muddy these cleere waters, that so it may the better glide away and not be discouered; we must continually desire the Lord to open our eyes, that wee may see the wonderfull things of his Law, and that he will by the light of his holy Spirit so illuminate our minds, and dispell these fogs and mists which the flesh daily raiseth, that wee may see all its deepe policies, and dangerous subtilties, and haue such a measure of spirituall wisedome and vnderstanding, that wee may be able to preuent and escape them.

Psal. 119. 18.

CHAP. XI.

Of certaine particular deceits of the flesh respecting our persons.

¶. Sect. 1. The first deceit that wee are nothing so euill as in truth we are.

BVt come wee from the generall to some particulars, which as they are most common and ordinary, so also most dangerous & pernicious, for more easily might I number the haires of a mans head, or the starres of Heauen, yea, the grasse in a large field, or stones vpon the Sea shore, than all the deceits of our corrupt flesh. Besides my late worthy assistant in the worke of my Ministery, that excellent light of Gods Church, which (ah) too soone did set vnto vs, that hee might for euer gloriously shine in Heauen, hath in his Booke of the deceitfulnesse of the Heart so sweetly and diuinely discoursed on this subject, that hee hath eased mee of this labour. Yet this discourse, so necessarily requiring that I should say some thing of this argument, as that it will seeme maymed if it goe without it, I will a little insist vpon it, and for our more orderly proceeding I will referre these deceits of the flesh to two principall heads. The first such as respect our persons and states, the other such as concerne certaine duties which God requireth of vs. For the former, it is a common and most pernicious policy of the flesh to perswade vs, that we are nothing so euill, corrupt and wicked as in truth we are. To the entertayning of which conceit we are the more easily induced by reason of ignorance and blindnesse of minde, pride & selfe-loue which naturally raigne and rule in vs. For though wee be wholy, from the crowne of the head to the sole of the foote, defiled with sinne, and thereby vtterly disabled vnto any good duty, yet we see that the most haue an opinion of their owne worth and excellency; For many boast themselues in the goodnesse of their natures, as though therein they might be accepted, not only of men, but also of God himselfe; many vaunt of their pure naturals and workes of congruity, which before grace receiued they are able to performe in the strength of their naturall abilities; many doe rest in their owne ciuill iustice and honesty as though it were sufficient to iustifie them in Gods sight, many blesse themselues in their legal righteousnesse, as though thereby they could merit Heauen with some small helpe; and finally, many with the Angel of the Church of Laodicea doe thinke themselues rich and so increased in goods, that they stand in need of nothing, when as in truth they are wretched and miserable, poore, blinde and naked. But let vs take heed of this policy as being most dangerous and pernicious, seeing it maketh men rest in themselues and vpon the weake reed of their owne righteousnesse to their vtter perdition, and keepeth them from flying vnto Christ, and from hungring after his righteousnesse by which alone wee are iustified and saued. And as it keepeth vs from imbracing Christ by faith, so also it hindreth our repentance, and nourisheth in vs carnall security and hardnesse of heart: for wee must first see our sins before we can euer bewayle or turne from them, and whilest we haue any opinion of our owne good natures, or our legall righteousnesse, wee can neuer as wee should bewayle our sinfull corruptions, nor carefully vse any meanes to be purged from them.

Apoc. 3. 17.

Whereby it appeareth that no policy is more pernicious if it preuayle against vs, seeing it spoyleth vs of our Sauiour Christ, and of all the gracious promises of life and saluation contained in the Gospell, which are all made on the condition of faith approued to be liuely and iustifying by the fruits thereof in vnfained repentance. The which should moue vs to vse all our care and indeuour that we may defeat it: to which purpose we must not looke vpon our selues as wee appeare in the twilight, or rather in the darke night of naturall knowledge, nor yet through the false spectacles of pride and selfe-loue, which will hide and disguise our vices and corruptions, and make them to shew themselues in vertues colours; but we must looke vpon our selues in the glasse of the Law, and try our thoughts and words, our workes and our wayes by the rule of Gods Word, and so shall wee plainly discouer our blemishes and defilements, yea, our monstrous deformities and vgly corruptions, with the auersenes of our wils to all good, and the peruerseneſſe and crookednes of our hearts and affections. For there shall wee see that our vnderstandings are so blinded that though they be wise vnto euill, yet to doe good they haue no knowledge; that our iudgements are wholy corrupted, mistaking euill for good, and good for euill, right for wrong, and wrong for right, truth for falshood, and falshood for truth; that our imaginations are euill and that continually; that our consciences are (either seared through securitie, or affrighted ¶. Sect. 2. The meanes to defeat the former policy.

Ephes. 4. 18. Ier. 4. 22.

frighted with terrours and horrours through despaire, and either accusing when they should excuse, or excusing when they should accuse; that our memories are slippery to retaine any good thing, and retentiue like brasse or yron in keeping and preseruing sinfull and wicked impressions; that our wills stand in open rebellion against God, nilling what he willeth, and willing what he nilleth. That our hearts are alwayes cleaue fast to all goodnesse and cleauefast to all worldly and sinnefull vanities; that our affections are wholly corrupted and disordered, and all the members of our bodies the ready instruments of sinne. There shall wee finde that by reason of this corruption wee are not able to thinke a good thought, nor so much as will that which is good, that we are altogether vnprofitable seruants, yea rather the slaues of sinne and Sathan, the children of wrath, and not onely sicke but euen starke dead in our sinnes; that wee haue not onely in vs vtter barrennesse of all good, but the seedes of all wickednesse, lurking and lying hid, which sproute fourth vpon all occasions, when as they receiue any warmth and moysture from the temptations of Sathan and the world; yea would of themselues daily come to growth and ripenesse if they were not continually nipped and restrained by the common grace of Gods Spirit. Finally that the black-moore may as easily change his blackenesse, and the leopard his spots, as wee our sinnefull condition into a better estate; yea that in stead of making any satisfaction by paying the old score, we are ready to encrease our debt by adding new sinnes vnto the olde, and so plunge our selues into more fearefull condemnation. And thus may we deteate this pollicy of the flesh and comming vnto a true sight of our owne naturall vilenesse, wee may abhorre our selues and repent in dust and ashes, and renouncing our owne righteousnesse, may hunger after the all-sufficient righteousnesse of Christ, and applying it vnto vs by a liuely faith may find it effectuall for our justification and saluation.

Sect. 3. The second pollicie that the good things in vs are much better than in truth they are.

Secondly as the flesh perswadeth vs that wee are nothing so ill as wee are in respect of our sinfull condition, so that the good things which we seeme to haue are farre better and of much greater excellency than in truth they are; and as there it lookes vpon our faules and vices through the thicke fogge of ignorance which maketh them to bee scarce visible and discernable; so when it beholdeth any appearance of good in vs it putteth on the spectacles of pride and selfe-loue, which make them seeme to bee farre greater than they are in deede, euery moale-hill a great mountaine, and euery small starre as large as the Sunne it selfe. Thus it magnifieth to a meere worldly man the goodnesse of his nature, as though this alone without any further helpe would bring him to Heauen; and maketh him beleeue that his common guifts are speciall endowments, that Gods restraining grace in him, is sanctifying and sauing grace, and his moderated and blunted vices and corruptions to bee singular vertues and great perfections. Thus it perswadeth the proud justiciarie to rest in his inhærent righteousnesse and legall obedience for his justification and saluation. And to this end it beareth his eyes so as hee cannot see any wants and imperfections in it, and worketh in him a conceipt, that it is most perfect both in the parts and degrees, when as there is nothing but defects and corruptions. Thus it made the young man in the Gospell to boast that hee had done all commaunded in the Law, when he had transgressed all; and to aske after a greater taske, what lacke I yet, when as his worke was not so much as begunne, and as yet hee had done nothing. Thus it made the proud Pharisie to bragge of his legall righteousnesse euen vnto God himselfe, and to rest in his paying of small tithes, minte, cummine and annise, as though hee had done the waighty things of the Law. Finally thus it perswadeth the sincere professor to ouerweene his guifts, and to magnifie aboue measure the graces which he hath receiued. It maketh him beleeue that his little mite is a rich treasury, and his small graine of mustersed, and first degrees of saluation bee already a great tree; that he is good wheate able to indure the fanne or the blasts of any temptations, whereas if Christ prayed not for him, that his faith might not faile, hee would when Sathan should sift him, proue but light corne, if not very chaffe. Finally that hee is so strong in Christ, that hee can willingly suffer Martyrdome for his name sake, and with Peter to presume that though all the world should forsake him, yet hee would not; when as the voyce of a poore damosell will make him start backe, and the smallest losse of goods or impeachment to his credit, will easily moue him to abiure his profession. The issue of which deceipt is most dangerous if by Gods grace it be not preuented, for the maine end at which our deceitfull flesh herein aymeth is either to puffe vs vp so in pride, that wee forget God the sole author of our guifts, and spoyle him of his prayse, by arrogating it vnto our selues; and that wee grow insolent in respect of men, contemning those who in our false conceipt come short of vs; or secondly that wee rest contented with that measure of grace which wee haue, as being abundantly sufficient; and neuer vse any meanes, whereby our imperfect and defectiue graces may be encreased and grow to greater perfection.

Now if wee should stand in the day of Sect. 4.

The meanes to defeate the former pollicie. 1. Pet. 5. 5.

temptation, and not bee ouertaken with this deceipt of the flesh; the best way is first, that, wee decke our selues with humilitie, as the Apostle exhorteth: remembring that the way to obtaine more grace at the hands of our heauenly father, is to bemoane our small measure, to bee emptie in our owne conceipt, and to hunger and thirst after more, Luk. 1. 53. for hee resisteth the proude, but giueth his grace to the humble, hee filleth the hungry with good things, but sendeth the rich empty away; neither doeth hee euer raise and build the goodly pallace of his grace and vertue, but where hee hath first laid the foundation of humilitie. And therefore let vs not (as the Apostle exhorteth vs) Rom. 12. 3. thinke of our selues more highly than wee ought to thinke, but thinke soberly, according as God hath dealt to euery man, the measure of faith. Secondly, let vs cast away those false spectacles of pride and selfe-loue, which make our small guifts to seeme so great, and examine our graces by the neuer-deceiuing light of Gods word. And there we shall plainely see how farre we come short of that perfection which God requireth, what a little pittance it is wee haue in comparison of that which wee want, and how our small measure is blotted and stained with the flesh and the taint of our corruptions. Thirdly, let vs not commend our graces to the eye of our deluded iudgements, as shop-keepers doe their course wares, by setting coarser by them; or by setting in our sight the example of others who come short of vs; but let vs compare our little sparkes of grace with those bright flames which haue shone in the Patriarches, Prophets and Apostles, yea in our Sauiour Christ himselfe, and so wee shall not bee proude of our progresse, but ashamed rather of our small proficiencie; and with the Apostle Phil. 3. 13. forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth to those things which are before, wee shall presse towards the marke, for the price of the high calling of God, in Christ Iesus.

CHAP. XII.

Of the fleshes policies respecting our estates.

§. Sect. 1. The first pollicie respecting our estate is to perswade the faithfull that they are hated of God because they are afflicted.

AND these were the chiefe deceipes of our flesh respecting our persons. Now concerning our estate it vseth a wicked policie whereby all men are exceedingly abused and deluded, which is to draw vs vnto a false iudgement concerning our estate, as either to thinke our selues miserable when wee are in the way to happinesse, or happy when wee are in the way to perdition. Concerning the former it is commonly vsed by the flesh towards the children of God when they are in the state of affliction either of body or minde. For when pouerty pincheth them, or reproaches are cast vpon them, or sickenesse seazeth on their bodies, or griefes vpon their mindes; when they are cast downe in the sight of their sinnes, and are terrified in their consciences with the apprehension of Gods displeasure, then the flesh is ready to perswade them that these are signes of Gods wrath and of their reprobation and damnation. But concerning this policy I shall not neede heere to say much, seeing I haue sufficiently armed the Christian against it in the first and third part of this Christian warfare, where I haue proued that this is the false iudgement of the flesh and quite contrary to the Scriptures, which teach vs that afflictions, either of body or minde are vnto vs markes of Gods loue and signes of our adoption, when as wee make a right vse of them, and are by these fatherly chastisements reformed and amended.

§. Sect. 2. The second pollicie is to perswade vs that we are in an happy condition when our state is most miserable.

But the contrary vnto this, as it is much more dangerous, so also much more frequent and common; namely for the flesh to perswade vs that we are in an happy and blessed condition, when as in trueth wee are in the very iawes of eternall death and condemnation. And thus the flesh abuseth either those, who being in the bosome of the Church are professed worldlings, or such as in their profession and conuersation do make some shew of Christianitie. Concerning the former; how many are there that beare the name of Christians, who are slaues to the world and their owne lusts, and the very bondslaues of the Diuell, making no conscience of their wayes, but giuen ouer to all liscentiousnesse, and to commit all manner of sinne with greedinesse? & yet are deluded by the Diuell and their owne corruption, with this conceipt, that they are in Gods fauour, and that they among other shall be saued. How many are there that liue in ignorance and infidelitie, and worship no other God but the idoll of riches, pleasures and worldly glory; that make no conscience of swearing, forswearing, blaspheming, of prophaning Gods Sabbaths, vniust anger, furious reuenge, malice, enuy, cruelty, oppression, whoredome, drunkennesse, fraude and all manner of outragious wickednesse: and yet are deceiued by their owne corrupt flesh, perswading them that God will neuer call them to an account for any of these things, but either not obserueth them, or will soone forget them; or if at all hee doe remember them, yet hee will not at all lay these things to their charge if they professe themselues Christians, and haue time euen at their last houre to call for mercy?

§. Sect. 3. Outward priuiledges no

Now the chiefe arguments which the flesh vseth to delude men with this false iudge-judgement are two. First because they are Christians by profession and not Turkes, Iewes or Infidels, and members of the true Church who haue their part in those royall priuiledges, the Word, Sacraments and Prayers in the assemblies. But let such know that all these priuiledges will no more benefit them, than they did the rebellious Iewes, who hauing these prerogatiues long before them, were vtterly rejected for their rebellion and disobedience, that it will doe them no more good to pretend the name of Christ or his Church, than it did them to cry out, the Temple of the Lord the Temple of the Lord, or to boast of their circumcision, sacrifices and legall ceremonies. Let them remember that; not the hearers of the law, but the doers thereof are iustified; and that these who are onely hearers and not doers of the word doe but deceiue themselues. Let them call to minde, that he who was priuiledged to come to the wedding feast of the Kings Sonne, but was found there without his wedding garment, was haled from thence and cast into vtter darknesse where is weeping and gnashing of teeth; that though the tares are suffered to grow with the good corne in the same field euen vntill harueſt, yet then they shall bee pulled vp, gathered into bundles and cast into the fire. And that though the goates and sheepe be suffered here to graze together, yet the time shall come when they shall bee seuered, and the goates being set on the left hand shall heare that dreadfull sentence: Depart from me ye accursed into hell fire prepared for the diuell and his Angels. Let them knowne that by all these outward priuiledges the which they haue so much abused, they shall haue their punishments hastened and encreased; For iudgement must beginne at Gods owne house, and hee will plague the Citie where his name is called vpon. If our King be so just and vertuous that hee will seuerely punish wickednesse in the common-wealth, how much more in those who are in his owne family? If the iealous husband hateth filthinesse in strangers, how much more in his own spouse or children? Aud if the husbandman will scarce suffer a brier or thistle grow in the fallow field, how much more will hee pull them vp when as they grow among his corne and in such grounds as he hath best tilled and most carefully manured? If the Bridegrome can abide no loathsome annoyance in any corner of the house, how much lesse will he endure it in his bridall chamber? Yea let strangers speed how they can, the Lord will not suffer himselfe, to bee dishonoured by those who professe themselues to be his seruants, but as they cause his name to bee blasphemed by their sinnes, so he will cause it to bee glorified in their punishments. Let the weeds in the woods grow till they wither with age, yet they shall bee pulled vp if they bee found in the garden wherein God delighteth. And if Sodom and Gomorrah shall not scape vnpunished, then Corazin and Bethsaida shall fall into a much more fearefull condemnation, who hearing Christs heauenly Sermons and seeing his miracles, continued in their sinnes without repentance. And the Apostle telleth vs that, the Earth which drinketh in the raine that commeth oft vpon it, and yet bringeth forth nothing but thornes and briars, is aboue all other soyles reiected, and is nigh vnto cursing, whose end is to be burned. Mat. 11. 21. Heb. 6. 7. 8.

The second argument which the flesh vseth to perswade carnall worldlings that they are in an happy condition and in the loue of God is, because they abound in earthly prosperitie and with many temporall blessings, which they esteeme as so many testimonies of Gods loue and signes of their owne saluation. And surely it cannot bee denied but that these things are good in their owne nature, as being the gifts of our good God, which he giueth as rewards of vertue and the temporary wages to those who serue him; but yet they are not absolutely and simply good, but, in respect of their vse, of an indifferent nature, good to the good, and euill to those who abuse them vnto euil. And therefore as the children of God who haue a right vse of these temporall blessings, when they vse them as instruments of their bounty and beneficence, to the glory of God and the good of their fellow seruants, may esteeme them as pledges of Gods loue and earnest-pennies of their saluation; so carnall worldlings who abuse them to pride, forgetfulnesse of God, prophaneneſse, wantonneſse, oppression, cruelty and all manner of sin, haue just cause to thinke, that they are gifts giuen them in Gods wrath, that they may be snares to entangle them to their deeper condemnation, according to that of the Psalmist, let their table become a snare before them, and that which should haue beene for their welfare let it become a trappe. Psal. 69. 22. Againe the Scriptures teach vs that wee cannot by these outward things judge either of Gods loue or hatred towards vs, seeing all these things come alike to all, and there is one euent, to the righteous and to the wicked, or if there bee any difference it is commonly in this, that the wicked flourish in all worldly iollitie, when as the godly are afflicted with many miseries; as it is notably obserued and at full described both by Iob, Dauid and Ieremie. Thus wee see Abell murthered, and Caine waxing great and building Cities, Pharaoh and the Egyptians raigning as Lords and tyrants, and the poore Israelites making bricke, beaten and misused; Nebuchadnezzar like a great Monarch ruling ouer Nations, and the people of God subdued and led into Eccl. 9. 1. 2.

Iob. 21. 6. 7. 8. Psa. 73. 3. 4. 5. Ier. 12. 1.

Q. Sect. 4. That worldly prosperitie is no sure signe of Gods loue or our happy condition.

mi-

miserable captiuitie. And the experience of our owne times teacheth vs, that wee cannot conclude, that we are in Gods fauour and in the state of saluation, because wee thriue in the world and haue good successe in all our endeauours, seeing by this reason wee might inferre that the great Magor, the Turke, Persian and many other Infidels and Pagans were better beloued of God than Christian Princes; and among Christians many prophane and carnall men, than the sincere louers of Gods truth; because they more abound in these worldly blessings. But of this point I shall needes to say little here, seeing I haue written so much of this argument in my second part of this Christian Warfare.

9. Sect. 5. That a ciuill life is no sure signe that we are in the state of grace and saluation.

And thus the flesh abuseth those who are professed worldlings: Neither doth it deale lesse deceitfully with those that make some shew of religion; the which are of two sorts, ciuill justiciaries and temporarie hypocrits. Concerning the former, it perswadeth them, that they are in good estate because they liue ciuilly and vnblameably among their neighbours in respect of notorious crimes which are punishable by the lawes of men; and maketh them to blesse themselues because they are no murtherers, adulterers, drunkards, theeues periured persons, and couenant breakers; but contrariwise deale honestly with all men, keepe their word, pay euery one their due, and sometimes also giue an almes to those that are in want and misery. And because in respect of their dutie towards God, they are of that religion which the Prince is of, and the Law requireth, and are no recusants, but come to the Church with the rest of their neighbours, and there heare diuine seruice, and the word preached, and receiue the Sacrament as oft as the law injoyneth. Though in the meane time they are vtterly ignorant of the true God, his persons, nature and attributes, of Iesus Christ and his natures and offices, and the great worke of redemption, and in a word of all the principles of true religion. And though they make no conscience of performing any duties of the first table (as of Prayer, hearing the Word, receiuing the Sacrament, sanctifying the Sabbath) in spirit and in truth, as God requireth, but onely formally for custome and fashion sake, yet their corrupt flesh maketh them beleeue, that God will accept of their good meaning and superstitious deuotion, and will be well satisfied with their bodily exercise and lip-labours, though their hearts bee farre from him; yea though in the very time of his seruice they set vp idols in their hearts, and haue all their cogitations wholly taken vp with their pleasures, profits and other vanities of the world. But that wee may not be ouertaken with this deceit, let vs know and remember, that God will not accept of vs, vnlesse with Dauid wee haue respect vnto all his commandements, and make conscience of performing as well, (yea principally) the duties of the first table, as of the second; that the feare of God and his true religion is the head and first beginning of gaining wisedome; and that it is but a counterfeit and carnall righteousnesse, such as was in the heathens, which doth not spring from the roote of piety, that wee cannot haue a liuely faith without sauing knowledge, nor doe any good workes without faith; that without faith wee cannot please God, and whatsoeuer we doe without it, is sinne. That if our iustice arise not from godlinesse, it is but meerely morall ciuilitie, and if our loue of our brethren spring not from the cleere fountaine of Gods loue, then it streameth from the filthy puddle of selfe-loue. Let vs know that God will bee worshipped, not after the commandements of men, but after his owne reuealed will, and that whosoeuer serue God principally because the Princes law requireth it, and not because God commandeth it, hee worshippeth his King aboue his God. That bodily exercise profiteth nothing, and that the Lord will bee worshipped in spirit and truth; that God regardeth not formall seruice which riseth rather from custome than conscience, and that the religion of the soule, is the soule of religion, without which it is but a dead carkase. That God can indure no riuals in his seruice, nor no halting betweene Iehouah and Baal, God and the world; hee cannot abide a double or diuided heart, but hee will either haue all, or leaue all to the Diuell and the world; and finally that our good meaning will bee no currant payment in the day of accompt, seeing it hath not Gods image and stampe vpon it, but is coyned in the forge of our owne braine, and hath on it the print of our owne intentions, which the Lord esteemeth no better than high treason against his royall crowne and dignitie.

Psal. 119. 6.

Psal. 111. 10.

Heb. 11. 4. Rom. 14. 23.

1. Tim. 4. 8. Ioh. 4. 24.

9. Sect. 6. That a bare profession of the true religion is not sufficient for saluation.

And thus the flesh deceiueth ciuill justiciaries: the like deceit it vseth towards hypocrites, with whom it dealeth diuersly according to their kindes. For either they are grosse hypocrites, who though they make a great shew of religion, yet their liues are so euill and scandalous, that their hypocrisie is detected and manifest, not onely vnto others, but also to their owne hearts and consciences; or more cunning and subtle, who by their outward profession & seeming conformitie to the law, deceiue not onely other men, but themselues also. Concerning the former; the flesh deceiueth them with a vaine conceipt that the bare profession of the true religion is sufficient for their saluation without all practice and obedience, that it is inough to say that they haue faith, though though they bee vtterly barren of all good Workes; to cry, Lord, Lord, though they neglect the will of our heauenly Father; that they be hearers of the word, though they be not doers of it; and that they professe that they know God, though in their workes they deny him, being abominable, disobedient, and to euery good worke reprobate. But this is so contrary to the whole course of the Scriptures, that who so is but a little conuersant in them, may plainely see, yea palpably feele this deceipt, neither is it possible, that any should bee deluded with it, but those whom the god of this world hath blinded, and for want of loue to the truth are giuen vp of God to be seduced with strong delusions, and to beleeue lies. For there we shall plainly see, that these conceits are crossed and contradicted in direct and expresse tearmes; namely that not the hearers but the doers of the word are iustified; that if we heare and doe not, wee doe but deceiue our selues: that they onely are blessed who heare the word and keepe it; that not euery one who saith Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdome of Heauen; but hee that doth the will of our Father which is in Heauen; that it will nought auaile vs to boast of our faith, if it doe not appeare in the fruits of good workes, seeing such a faith, as is without workes, is but a dead carkase, without life or soule, and therefore cannot iustifie nor saue vs. So the Lord sharpely reprehendeth and condemneth wicked men, for making profession of his religion: Vnto the wicked, saith God, What hast thou to doe to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldest take my couenant in thy mouth; seeing thou hatest instruction, and castest my words behinde thee? &c. And then concludeth: Now consider this yee that forget God, lest I teare you in pieces and there bee none to deliuer. So the Prophet Ieremie. Behold yee trust in lying words that cannot profit. Will yee steale, murther, and commit adulterie, and sweare falsly, and burne incense vnto Baal, and walke after other gods that yee know not, and come and stand before mee in this house which is called by my name, and say, we are deliuered to doe all these abominations?

§. Sect. 7. The fleshes deceipt in perswading men to rest in externall ceremonies.

But if this deceipt bee too grosse, as hauing nothing to colour or countenance it but the slight thin vayle of a bare profession, then it will perswad vs to place all religion about externall rites and ceremonies, and to thinke that wee haue done inough, if wee bee strict in the obseruation of them, although in the meane time we make no conscience of many Morall duties, and vtterly neglect the waighty things of the Law. So the Pharises of old placed all their religion in some legall rites and humane traditions, in externall washings, sacrifices, and tything mynte, cummine and annise, and neglected the duties of children to their parents, the pure and sincere seruice of God, and the waighty points of the Law, iudgement, mercy and faith. And the Apostle telleth vs of some in his times, who placed all their religion in the obseruation of dayes, Sabbaths, Holydayes, and new Moones, and in their obseruance of certaine ordinances, as touch not, taste not, handle not, all which did perish with the vsing. And wherein doth in these dayes the religion of the Papists chiefely consist, but in the obseruation of such holidayes, washings, purifications, fastings from certaine meates, at certaine times, and in vse of their rites and ceremonies which they preferre before, and presse more than many Morall duties or the essentiall parts of Gods seruice, with which they will much more easily dispence, than with their traditions and superstitious inuentions? With which deceipt if the flesh preuaile not, it is readie to thrust vs into the contrary extreame, and to place all religion in the opposing of these superstitious ceremonies, and to spend all our time which should be spent in attaining vnto the knowledge and practice of true godlinesse in declaiming against will-worship and humane traditions. As though it were enough to be free from superstition, though wee be destitute also of all true religion, to oppose against false worship, though wee doe not practice that which is true to bee zealous against ceremonies, and to be key-cold in imbracing the substance, truth, faith, mercy, judgement, brotherly kindnesse and the rest.

Col. 2. 16, 21.

§. Sect. 8. The meanes to defeate the former policy.

But that wee may not be ouertaken with this deceit, nor bee perswaded to spend the strength of our deuotion about ceremonies and things of small moment, let vs know that there is no lesse order and due proportion, than justice and judgement in the commandements of God, the Lord requiring that those things which are chiefe and principall in their owne nature should haue the first and chiefe place in our obedience. So the Morall duties are to bee preferred before ceremoniall; and among them, our dutie to God before our dutie to our brethren; the duties of greatest importance, before the meane, and the meane before the least. Which order who so transpose, and will preferre the duties towards men before their dutie vnto God, and the ceremonies before the substance; such mens religion is hypocriticall and odious in Gods sight. Hence is it that the Lord condemneth the Sabbaths, New Moones, sacrifices, and solemne assemblies of the Iewes, because they did put all their religion in them, and neglected iudgement, mercy, relieuing the oppressed, and judging the fatherlesse. Thus he condemneth their fasts and the afflicting of their soules by those bodily exercises, because

Esa. 1. 12, 13.

Esa. 58. 5.

cause they were ioyned with strife & debate, oppression and crueltie, yea so odious is this ceremoniall seruice being seuered from the more waighty and substantiall, that the Lord professeth, that he that killeth an Oxe, is as if hee slue a man, hee that sacrificeth a Lambe, as he that cutteth off a Dogges necke, hee that offereth an oblation, as hee that offereth Swines blood, hee that burneth incense as if hee blessed an Idoll. So he professeth, I will haue mercie and not sacrifice, not because he simply reiected sacrifices, which himselfe had commanded, but when they were seuered from mercy, or preferred before it. And saith that hee spake not vnto their Fathers, nor commanded them in the day that hee brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning burnt offering or sacrifices; but this thing (saith he) commanded I them, saying, obey my voyce, and I will be your God, and yee shall bee my people: and walke yee in all the wayes that I haue commanded you that it may bee well vnto you. Implying hereby, that as these maine Morall duties were first commanded, so also they should be first and chiefely practised. Finally, the Apostle telleth vs that true religion consisteth not in outward rites, signes and sacraments, but in the truth and sincerity of the heart; Circumcision (saith hee) verily profiteth, if thou be a keeper of the Law, but if thou bee a breaker of the Law thy circumcision is made vncircumcision. For hee is not a Iew which is one outwardly, neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh. But hee is a Iew which is one inwardly, and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit and not in the letter whose prayse is of not of men, but of God.

Esa. 66.3.

Hos. 6.6.

Ier. 7.22,23.

Rom. 2.25,28.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the pollicies of the flesh towards temporary beleeuers.

Q. Sect. 1. That the flesh in a subtill sort deceiueth Temporaries.

AND thus the flesh deceiueth the grosser kinde of hypocrites: But when men haue receiued such a measure of illightening, that these darke fogges and mistes of ignorance are somewhat dispelled, and haue their sleepie consciences somewhat awakened, so that they are able and ready to tell them that all which is formerly spoken of, will bee to little purpose, if they make no further progresse in the wayes of God; Then the flesh vseth more refined and subtill pollicies, and condemning as much as any others carnall Gospellers, ciuill iusticiaries and grosse hypocrites, it perswadeth them to be like Agrippa almost, (and but almost) Christians; and to rest in some shadowes and meere counterfaits of saving graces and Christian obedience, which are so like vnto them, that vnlesse they bee brought to the all-discouering light of Gods word, and diligently examined by this touchstone of truth, they can hardly bee discerned, I will not say by others (which is meerely impossible) but euen by those that haue them. And this is the estate of temporarie beleeuers in, whom there is almost nothing wanting which is in sound Christians but sincerity and truth. For they are allowed by their sinnefull flesh to bee as like Christians as possibly may be, so they be not so indeed, and to runne before many true beleeuers in outward duties, and euen to knocke at Heauen gates, so that they will there rest but for a time and neuer enter. They haue knowledge often times in farre greater measure than many of Gods deare children; some shewes and semblances of true faith, repentance, obedience, and that in such a degree, that in outward appearance many true Christians come far short of them. And therefore seeing aboue all deceipts this is most deceitfull, we are to bend all our care and study that wee may discouer and defeate it.

Q. Sect. 2. That we must labour to haue all spirituall graces in sincerity and truth and first our knowledge.

To which purpose wee must not onely labour to haue all sauing graces, and to bee enabled vnto the performance of all Christian duties; but also assurance that they are in vs and done by vs in sincerity and truth. And to this purpose wee are often to examine and waigh them in the ballance of the sanctuary, and to obserue the infallible markes and signes, whereby our true graces and vertuous actions may bee discerned, not onely from vices and grosse corruptions, but also from these neere counterfaits and shadowes of them, which are in subtill hypocrites and temporary beleeuers. For here wee shall find that though the knowledge of temporaries bee in respect of the measure very great, yet it faileth in the qualitie and effects; for it is barely learned by hearing and reading, and not taught by the spirituall annoynting, whereof the Apostle speaketh which the faithfull onely receiue: it is much in speculation and theorie; and little in practice, spirituall power, feeling and repentance; and they know the things of God appertaining to saluation, as a man knoweth a strange land by reading, which he neuer trauailed; whereby hee is enabled to discourse of it, and of the fruites and benefits contained in it, though hee neuer tasted them, nor hath any hope euer to enjoy them; whereas the true beleeuer, though he be in his pilgrimage, yet knoweth Heauen and heauenly things, as his owne country, and the blessings contained in it, of which hee hath already tasted and had feeling experience, and is assured after a while when he hath finished his iourney to haue the full fruition of them. And hereof it is that the knowledge of the Hypocrite bring-

1. Iob. 1. 20.

bringeth small joy and comfort with it, and though it exceed in measure, yet it cheareth not the heart, like the least knowledge of a sound Christian; euen as the knowledge of the Lawyer in the euidences of a mans lands may be greater than the owners: but yet hee cannot tead them with like comfort, because he hath no right vnto them.

3. Sect. 3. ...wee may ...erne a true ...fying ...h; from ... which is ...porary.

So also Hypocrites and temporaries haue faith whereby they not onely know and beleeue the whole Word of God and the promises of the Gospell to be true, but also giue their assent vnto them, yea, make some kind of application of them vnto themselues; And yet there are diuers essentiall differences betweene this faith of Hypocrites and of true Beleeuers. For first they differ in their causes, the one being wrought by the Ministery of the Gospell made effectuall by the inward co-operation of Gods Spirit; the other by Sathan and carnall corruption, abusing and mis-applying of these promises in Christ. Secondly, in their grounds; for a liuely faith is grounded vpon Gods reuealed Truth, but the faith of Hypocrites vpon no other groũd than the false suggestions of Sathan, vnwarranted conceits, carnall security and fond presumption, which cause the Hypocrite to apply vnto himselfe the mercies of God, and merits of Christ, and the sweet promises of the Gospel when as he is in no sort qualified and fitted according to the word to receiue or haue any interest in them. For before we can beleeue with a true faith, wee must be humbled in the sight and sense of our sinnes, we must deny our selues and become vile in our owne eyes, and haue an hungring and thirsting after Christ and his righteousnesse, and an high valuation and esteeme of them aboue all things in the World, all which are wanting in the faith of Hypocrites. Thirdly, true faith is joyned with vnfained loue of God, for he that is assured that much is forgiuen him, hee loueth much, not only God himselfe but his Neighbours, yea euen his enemies for Gods sake, and those aboue all the rest in whom he discerneth the Image of God most cleerely shining: But the faith of Hypocrites being alwayes accompanied with selfe-loue, maketh a man to value himselfe aboue all things, yea aboue God himself the chiefe goodnes. Fourthly, where there is true faith there is alwayes a sore combat and conflict betweene the flesh and the spirit, betweene faith purifying the heart, and vnbeliefe labouring to retaine the pleasures of sin and all our inbred corruptions which are pleasing or profitable, but the faith of Hypocrites is still quiet & peaceable, because it is nothing but carnall presumption, which being corrupt & sinfull, agreeth wel with other corruptions neither doth Sathan moue, or as much as in him lyeth suffer it to be moued by any questions, because hee would possesse all things in peace, and not haue his Kingdome diuided in it selfe. Secondly, true faith is the instrument of a mutuall donation, for as it receiueth Christ who is giuen vs of God, so it offereth and consecrateth our bodies and soules vnto Christ who by the gift of God hath as much right vnto vs as we vnto him: But the faith of Hypocrites would haue part in Christ and all his benefits, but Christ must haue no part in them, or if any at all, he must be contented with their tongue onely; whereas the World and the Deuill must haue their hearts. Secondly, truth faith is not easily daunted or dismayed, but commonly shineth most cleerely in the darke night of afflictions, and manifesteth it self in its chiefe strength, when carnall reason will minister no comfort: but the faith of Hypocrites resteth onely vpon the prop of worldly prosperity which being pulled away sinkethand faileth; and whilest this faire greene blade, which springeth out of the stony ground, is moystened with the dew of temporall benefits, it sprouteth vp and flourisheth; but no sooner doth the Sun of affliction and persecution arise but presently it withereth and fadeth. Lastly, true faith is alwayes a liuing and fruitfull faith, and is continually exercised in good workes and Christian duties, and in loue and obedience towards God: but the faith of Hypocrites is dead, barren and fruitlesse, or if it beare any fruits at all, yet haue they no respect to God, but are done out of pride or selfe-loue, for feare of punishments or hope of rewards. But more of this afterwards.

4. Sect. 4. The difference betweene true and false repentance.

Thus also the Hypocrite hath some kinde of repentance, the which the flesh commendeth vnto him as agreeing well enough with it selfe, and that to this end that he may content himselfe with it, and neuer labour after sound repentance. Which deceit that wee may preuent we are to learne and obserue the many differences betweene this counterfeit and false repentance, and that which is sound and sincere. For true repentance springeth from a liuely faith assuring vs of Gods loue, which causeth vs to bewayle our sinnes, because by them we haue displeased our gracious God, who so loueth vs, and whom wee so loue: but the sorrow of Hypocrites riseth from infidelity and selfe-loue, which maketh vs mourne because by our sins we haue made our selues obnoxious to punishments. Godly sorrow ariseth from a true hatred of sinne, which being odious vnto vs as an vgly Serpent, or grieuous as an heauy burthen, doth cause vs to sorrow and mourne because wee cannot bee rid of it, nor shake it off; but worldly sorrow from our loue of sin, because wee are loath to leaue it, and yet must needs for feare of further punishment. Godly sorrow driueth the sinner to God with Dauid, and maketh him to humble himselfe, acknow-

Zach. 12.10. Luke 15.18.

knowledge his sin and aske pardon: But the sorrow of Hypocrites driueth men from God, and maketh them to deny their sin, or to excuse and mince it. Godly sorrow worketh a change and alteration to amendment of life; but the Hypocrite though he hangeth downe his head like a bul-rush for a day, and blubbereth his cheekes with teares, yet either he leaueth not his sin at all, or onely as hee leaueth and putteth off his clothes with a purpose to resume & put them on the next day. Godly sorrow doth chiefly respect the sin, whereby the Christian hath offended God, but the sorrow of Hypocrites looketh chiefly to the punishment wherby they haue displeased themselues. Finally, the sorrow of the faithfull is constant and continuall from the first day of conuersion to the end of their liues; but the sorrow of Hypocrites is but by flashes and spurts, and commonly ceaseth when they are freed from their smart and paine.

9. Sect. 5. The differences betweene the obedience of the faithfull and of Hypocrites.

The like differences also wee may obserue in the other part of repentance which is amendment of life and new obedience. For the obedience of the faithfull springeth from their faith and loue of God: but the obedience of Hypocrites from selfe-loue and carnall respects. The faithfull propound vnto all their good workes the glory of God as their chiefe end: but the Hypocrite propoundeth to himselfe chiefly his owne good and that in worldly and carnal respects. The true Beleeuer performeth totall obedience in respect of the subject, with all the powers and parts of his soule and body: but the Hypocrite contenteth himselfe with bodily exercise, which is without the power of godlinesse, and doth not worship God in spirit and truth, nor with a willing and chearefull heart, but inuerting the Apostles speech he may say, the euill which I loue, that doe I not, but the good which I hate that doe I. So also the faithfull Christian performeth totall obedience in respect of the object, and hauing regard vnto all Gods Commandements, he fleeth from all sin and embraceth all holy duties: yea, aboue all sins, hee hateth those most which cleaue fastest vnto him, and laboureth most to bring his heart to the loue of those duties to which naturally he is most backward. But the Hypocrite seeming to make conscience of one Table neglecteth the other, or if hee forsaketh many sins and doth many duties; yet he hath some darling sinnes which hee holdeth as sweet vnder his tongue, which hee will by no meanes part with, and some duties there are so contrary to his corrupt nature, that there is no arguments that can be vsed which can moue him to practise them. Finally, the obedience of the faithfull is constant and permanent, and the longer it continueth, the more it groweth and increaseth: but the obedience of Hypocrites is vnconstant and by fits onely and flashes; and commonly like a naughty jade he is most free and forward in the beginning of the journey, but quite tired before he come neere vnto the end.

Rom. 7.

Psal. 119.6.

Iob 20.12.

And thus wee may defeat the policies of the flesh, whereby it draweth vs to hypocrisie. Wherewith if it cannot preuayle with vs, it will labour to draw vs into the contrary extreame; and because Hypocrisie is odious vnto vs, it will moue vs more to disguise and hide our profession of Religion, to refraine from all good speeches, which might glorifie God, and edifie our Brethren, to conforme our selues to their fashions which beare vs company in outward shew, though in heart we be farre vnlike them, and to neglect all good actions and holy duties, as Meditation, Fasting, Prayer, giuing of Almes, or to doe them in great secrecie, and (as it were) by stealth, for feare lest men taking notice of them, should think vs too glorious in our outward shew, and condemne vs of Hypocrisie. The which conceit so ouerswayeth with diuers who are otherwise good Christians, that they are ashamed and ready to blush, when they are taken at vnawares in doing religious duties; as though they were guilty of some great fault. And so much the rather because the most godly Christians, hauing the reliques of Hypocrisie, as of all other sinnes remayning in them, are guilty to themselues of this corruption, as finding it often to preuayle with them, & therefore labour with so much the more diligence to auoide all semblance and appearance of it. With which deceit that we may not be ouertaken, let vs consider, that wee ought not so to auoid the shew of Hypocrisie, as that wee doe in truth shun Christian apology and profession, whereby God is to be glorified, and our Neighbours edified: that we fall into the sin of hypocrisie indeed, whilest we thus labour to flie the appearance of it; for it is Hypocrisie to seeme that wee are not, and disguising and dissembling our religious and honest hearts vnder the outward shew of a carnall conuersation, to appeare Worldlings, when in truth we are sincere, though weake, Christians; as Iacob though to a better end, tooke vpon him the habit of Esau, whose prophanenesse hee hated. Let vs know that wee dishonour God, when wee hide and dissemble his gifts and graces in vs, and wrong our Neighbours who might walke in our light, if we did not couer it (as it were) vnder a bushell; & that they in some degree are ashamed of Christ and his Truth who dare not before Worldlings, either professe it in their words, or practise it in their workes. Let vs remember that our Sauiour requireth not onely that we should haue the light of holinesse in our selues, but that we should also, let it shine before

9. Sect. 6. The fleshes deceit in moouing vs to leaue off from doing good duties that we may auoyde Hypocrisie.

Math. 5.8.

before men, that they seeing our good workes, may glorifie our Father which is in Heauen; onely he condemneth these outward shewes of good workes when as thereby we doe not seeke Gods glory, but our owne. And the Apostle chargeth Christians to haue their conuersation honest among the Gentiles, that whereas they spake against them as euill doers, they might by their good workes, which they should behold, glorifie God in the day of visitation. That Daniel professed his loue to Gods Commandements before Princes, and was not ashamed; and that Daniel would not smother for a few dayes his practicall profession of religious duties, though it were to the extreme hazard of his life. Let vs consider that one speciall dutie of Christianity which we owe vnto our Neighbours is, that we shine before them by our holy example, which is required in the sixt Commandement, as a meanes of preseruing the life of their soules, and therefore that we are guilty of spirituall murther if we neglect it. Finally, seeing carnall Worldlings are not ashamed to professe their seruice and allegeance to their master Sathan, but with all boldnes vtter blasphemous oathes, ribald words and rotten speeches which corrupt the hearers, and audaciously performe all sinfull actions, which are without the compasse of mens law, not caring who heare or see them; let it be our shame, to be ashamed of the seruice of our great Lord and Master, who is so infinitely good in himselfe and gracious towards vs; but let vs with all confidence and courage performe all holy Christian duties which we owe vnto him, though we liue in the middest of an adulterous and sinfull generation: least being ashamed before such of Christ and his words, hee be ashamed of vs, when hee commeth in the glory of his Father with his holy Angels.

Psal. 119. 46.

Luke 8. 38.

CHAP. XIV.

Of the policies of the flesh in alluring and perswading vs to sinne.

§. Sect. 1. The first policy to perswade that sinne is no sinne.

WE haue spoken briefly of the deceits of the flesh which respect our persons and estates; and now wee are to speake of the other which concerne certaine duties which God requireth, the which are of two sorts, the first respect the withstanding, subduing and mortifying of our sins; the other the exercise and practice of vertuous actions. Concerning sin, God requireth two things of vs; the first that we should not commit or fall into it; the second that being falne we should not securely liue and lie in it, but rise out of it by vnfained repentance. Against both which the flesh opposeth, vsing many policies and deceits first to draw vs to the committing of sin, and hauing committed it to continue in it without repentance. To the former purpose it vseth diuers deceits. As first it putteth vpon the foule face of sin a faire Vizard, and dresseth this filthy Strumpet in the habit of vertue; it adorneth it with borrowed ornaments, and beautifieth it with false colours; intitling wicked vices, with vertuous names, as though it would commend nothing vnto vs, but what God himselfe commandeth. Thus that wee may imbrace and liue in it, the flesh graceth superstition with the name of deuotion, doubting and infidelity, with the name of humility, security and presumption, it calleth faith and affiance in God; Choller and vniust anger, zeale for Gods glory; lust it tearmeth loue, drunkennesse good fellowship, prodigality, bounty and munificence, and base niggardlinesse and couetousnesse, good husbandry and frugality.

And hauing thus marshalled and ranged these foule vices in the ranke of vertues, and beautified them with these false and borrowed colours, it doth further authorize them by testimonies of Scriptures, and not onely offereth them to our choice as things indifferent, or tolerable, but presseth them vpon vs as profitable and necessary. Which policy of the flesh if wee would defeat, wee must first labour to be illightened with the knowledge of Gods Truth, and with the inward illumination of his Spirit, that so wee may discerne betweene vertue and vice, good and euill, which are easily confounded and mistaken the one for the other in the darke night of ignorance, and through the naturall blindnes of our minds. Secondly, we must not take nor imbrace any thing suddenly and rashly, which Sathan or our own corrupt flesh commendeth vnto vs, but examine and try all things by the light of Gods Word, and the touch-stone of truth, which will plainly discouer vnto vs what is to be imbraced, and what auoyded, what to be treasured vp in our hearts as pure gold and good treasure, and what to be rejected as drosse and base metall. Finally, we must labour to purge our hearts from pride and self-loue, which aboue all other things corrupt our judgements, making those things to seeme louely which wee loue, and worthy our choice because wee haue chosen them: And contrariwise wee must adorne our selues with humility denying our owne wils and carnall lusts, and make the will of God reuealed in the Scriptures to be the rule of our wils and the guide of our affections.

§. Sect. 2. The second policy to tell

In the second place, if the flesh cannot perswade vs that our sins are no sins, but rather vertues, then it will intice vs to commit vs that the sin is but small which it perswadeth vs to commit.

them vnder this colour, that they are but small sins, telling vs, that wee cannot bee Saints on earth and pure from all sinne, but must of necessity be subject to many infirmities and frailties; that in many things wee sin all, and that there is no man so just on earth that sinneth not, that the righteous fall seuen times a day, and therefore that it is too much preciseneſſe to stand so strictly on euery trifle; and finally, that the best of Gods children which euer liued haue had their imperfections, as Abraham his lie, Ioseph his vaine oath, Moses his vnbeliefe, Peter his dissimulation, &c. and that these are so venial in their owne nature, that either God will not punish them at all, or but very lightly. For the defeating of which deceit let vs know, that the least sin that is, in it owne nature, offendeth the infinite Majesty of God, prouoketh his fierce wrath, subjecteth vs to the curse of the Law, and maketh vs lyable, to eternall death and condemnation. For the guilt of sin is to be measured, not onely by the act, but also by the object; and therefore seeing the object is the infinite Majesty of God who is offended by the least sinne, it becommeth, after a sort, of infinite guilt, and so deserueth infinite punishment. The which answerably should be inflicted vpon him who least offendeth, if Christ by bearing his small, as well his great sins in his body vpon the Crosse, had not freed him from it. And therefore let vs thinke no sinne small which prouoketh God vnto anger and offendeth his infinite Majestie, let vs thinke no sinne in it owne nature sleight and venial, which plungeth a man into euerlasting death and condemnation, and which can no otherwise be purged away and pardoned, but by the precious bloud of Iesus Christ.

Gal.3.10.

Secondly, let vs know that there are no sinnes small vnto them who thinke them so; for sin is not to be measured so much by the matter and act of it, as by the forme and malicious nesse of it, in which respect willingnesse, consent giuen to any sinne, maketh it become wilfully and presuming that wee may liue in it because it is but a little one, maketh it to be a sinne of presumption, and so exceeding great and worthy of the greatest punishment, as wee see in the example of him, who would needs gather sticks on the Sabbath, because hee presumed that this was a small and tolerable breach of Gods Commandement. To this purpose tendeth the speech of our Sauiour, that he who neglecteth and breaketh the least of Gods Commandements, and teacheth men so, shall be the least (that is none at all) in the kingdome of Heauen.

Leuit.24.10.

Math.5.19.

Thirdly, euen our least sinnes, if God should let vs feele the weight of them, would be an intolerable burthen, and so sting our consciences, that wee should neuer rest, as the experience of many afflicted in minde doth plainely manifest; and therefore let vs thinke no sinne light which with the weight thereof, if it should lie vpon vs, would crush and presse vs into Hell.

Fourthly, let vs know that there is no lesse danger in small sinnes than in those which are great and haynous, first because as these exceed them in their qualitie or quantity, so they exceed these in number, as being common and ordinary. Now as the ship will be sunke as well by many small holes, if they be not stopped, as at a great leake; and may be ouerburthened and perish as well by a multitude of small pibbles, as by a few Milstones: so may our soules sinke and perish if they be surcharged with a multitude of lesser sins, as well as with hainous sins being rarely committed. Secondly, because small sins are commonly accompanied with impenitency, security and hardnesse of heart; and men not regarding them, doe like and liue in them without desire of amendment; whereas those which are hainous, making deepe wounds and gashes in the heart and conscience, doe cause men to bee more sensible of them, and more earnest in looking after the cure; as wee may see in the example of the Pharises and Publicans. Now our other sins though neuer so damnable, yet will not condemne vs, if they be not joyned with impenitency, and contrariwise the most venial sin will proue vnpardonable, if we liue and die in it without repentance. Whereof it is that our Sauiour telleth the Pharises, that Publicanes and sinners should goe to Heauen before them. For as small sparkes of fire lighting in combustible matter, will if they be not quenched, burne a whole Citie, and contrariwise a great flame doth little hurt if it be speedily put out; so if the least sparkes of sin be nourished with the oyle of security, it will proue dangerous and damnable, whereas, though it bee a great flame of wickednesse, it will not doe that hurt, if we soone extinguish and quench it with the teares of repentance. Lastly, let vs know that the allurements which the flesh vseth to make vs liue in smal sinnes without repentance are vaine and friuolous. For if we doe not desire & indeauour to be Saints on earth, we shall neuer become Saints in heauen, if we doe not labour to shake off daily our imperfections, and to grow vnto more perfection in this life, we shall neuer attaine vnto it in the life to come; if wee doe not seeke to be pure in heart, we shall neuer bee blessed in the Vision of God. If we be not precise and conscionable in flying the least sins, we shall surely become secure and presumptuous. Moreouer, let vs remember that the least sins are not frailties and infirmities, if we liue in them them securely and wilfully; as contrariwise the greatest may deserue this name if wee commit them suddenly, and rise out of them speedily. Euen as a man may be said to fall through weaknesse and infirmity into a deep gulfe, when as slipping at vnawares hee vseth all his indeuour to recouer himselfe; and on the other side it is not weaknesse but wilfulnesse, if hee fall but into a shallow ditch, if hee will not labour to get out againe, but lyeth groueling in the water vntill he be drowned. Let vs know, that though in many things wee sinne all, yet they who belong to God doe not make a trade of wilfull sinning, and being sometime ouertaken they are not at rest till they haue risen againe by vnfained repentance; and though there be none so just who sinneth not, yet all who will be saued, must be so just as not to suffer it to raigne in them. And finally, that though the best of the Saints, Patriarches and Apostles had their infirmities, yet none of them could euer be found that nourished, defended and continued in them wittingly and willingly, after their judgements haue beene rightly informed and their consciences conuinced. And therefore the examples of their slips will not countenance our wilfull sinnes, no not our least infirmities; yea, rather it wil make vs the more vnexcusable, if seeing them fall (as it were) before vs, we doe not looke the better to our footing.

Math.5.8.

Thirdly, the flesh dealeth most deceitfully with vs, whilest it perswadeth and inticeth vs to entertaine some smaller and lesser sins, promising that it will rest contented with them, and craue no more; and so these lesser sinnes shall serue as preseruatiues to keepe vs from those which are great and hainous; and these small allowances, being giuen to these sauage beasts, our sensuall and vnruly lusts, shall keepe them in quiet, which if they bee too much restrained and famished will with violence breake all bonds, and with outragious cruelty vtterly destroy vs. And thus it perswadeth vs, that if we wil let the world haue quiet possession of some little corner of our hearts, God shall for his share haue all the rest, that if we will vse small oathes, as ornaments to our speech, it will neuer moue vs to dishonour God by outragious blasphemies; that if we will at least in some companies, either to please them or aduantage our selues, dissemble our Religion, and be seemingly conformable to their example; we may still be as zealous in our hearts as euer wee were, and neuer be in danger of relapsing to worldlinesse and prophanesse. That if wee will not be ouer-strict in sanctifying Gods Sabbaths, wee shall be the more constant in ordinary duties: that if we will vse wanton dalliance, and giue our tongues liberty to vtter obscene and ribbald speeches, our flesh will rest contented and neuer moue vs to commit filthinesse in act: that if wee will vse deceit, vsury and oppression for a time till wee haue gotten some competency of estate, we shall leaue these vnlawfull courses, when as we are not pressed vnto them by any necessity. Whereby it grosly abuseth vs, and from one degree of sinne draweth vs vnto another, vsing lesser sinnes as strong cords to draw on greater, as the small point of the pierter which maketh way for all the rest, and the Deuils Pioners to smooth the passage, that he may easily bring against vs the greatest Ordinance. For who seeth not by daily experience that those who make the World sharer with God, doe in the end giue it possession of the whole; that those who sweare vainly in their ordinary communication, within a while make no conscience of forswearing and blasphemy; that dissimulation in Religion bringeth to abnegation and apostacy. That neglect of holy duties ends commonly in open profanation; that filthy words draw many on to filthy actions, and that when once men haue giuen way to vnlawfull courses for the getting of some small competency, they will much more continue in them for the obtayning of abundance. Neither in truth is any other thing reasonably to be expected. For doe we think that we can driue away Beggars from our doores by vsing euery day to cast them scraps, or that they will be weary of crauing till they see vs to be weary of giuing? Can we quench the fire of our concupiscence by casting Oyle vpon it? Or satisfie our dropsie desires by giuing them a little? Is it a safe way to let little Theeues which are of the same company lodge in our Houses, to keepe out great ones and preserue our goods? Is it the best meanes to set fire on the Kitchin, that the rest of the house may be preserued from burning? And will it not rather creepe from thence to the Hall, Parlour and the rest of the building? Finally, is it held good policy to giue our enemy leaue, to make some small breaches in our wals, whereby he may enter and surprize vs; to suffer him to haue some competent allowance and quiet possession in some corners of our Cities, and not rather to keepe him aloofe, and vtterly to starue and famish him, so as he may haue no strength to assault and indanger vs? Againe, let vs know that there being no other argument to restraine vs from sinne, but Gods Commandement, when we haue broken our bounds, by giuing way to lesser sins, we are ready to grow loose & dissolute, for he that in one thing neglecteth Gods Commandement, hath as great reason to neglect it in another. That we quench the Spirit by these voluntary sins, & by polluting his lodging do make him weary of it, and (if wee doe not cleanse it by vnfained repentance) vtterly abandon it and so leaue the full possession to Sathan and our owne lusts. Let vs consider that we cannot satisfie our liquorous lusts by giuing them a taste of sin, which is so sweet to their pallet, but shall hereby make them much more greedy and eager; and that wee may better stand firmely on the hill top, than when wee haue begun running, to stay our selues till we come to the bottome. Finally, let vs remember, that no man who hath had any shew of goodnesse, doth at once become out-ragiously wicked, but by degrees, one sin drawinghim on to another, & the lesser to the greater, till at last many particular acts bring men to a custom, & ofte vse grow to an habit.

9. Sect. 4. The fourth policy is to perswade vs that wee are in no danger of falling into some sinnes.

Fourthly, the flesh oftentimes deceiues vs by bringing vs into careles security, whilst it maketh vs beleeue, that there is no danger of falling into some sins; for when it cannot perswade vs that sin is no sin, or if any at all, yet so small and venial that we may liue in them without perill to our soules, or hazard of our saluation; then it is ready to suggest, that there is no cause why we should feare falling into many sins, because they are so haynous and monstrous, and we not onely in our natures are so auerse vnto them, but also haue receiued such a measure of grace & strength, that no allurements can draw vs to them. Thus when the Prophet told Hazaell what horrible outrages he should commit, he was so blinded with this deceit of the flesh, that he would not beleeue it, but cryed out vnto him, What is thy seruant a Dogge, that I should doe such things? And when our Sauiour told Peter, that he should deny and abjure him, consulting onely with his flesh, he was ready to presume vpon his own strength, and rather doubted of his Masters truth, than of his owne courage and fidelity. Now by this deceit we are made reckelesse and secure, and keepe no watch ouer our selues, because we feare no assault of such enemies, whereby it commeth to passe that wee are suppriled at vnawares, and carried captiue of sin because we neuer expected, and therefore neuer armed our selues against such mighty enemies; as wee may see in the example of David who hauing long made conscience of small infirmities and seriously repented enen for his secret slips and least sins, neuer feared falling into adultery & murder, & so was the more easily ouercome, because he neglected his watch and suspected no danger. And thus Lot hauing beene preserued pure from the filthinesse of Sodome, was ouertaken by incest, when hauing no other company with him but his owne daughters hee grew secure and feared nothing. For the defeating of which policy let vs consider that; whilest we liue in this World, we are but in part regenerate, and that in our flesh, as there dwelleth no good thing, so contrariwise, there lie secretly lurking the seeds of al sins, which are ready continually to sprout and shoot forth, when they are watred and warmed with Sathans temptations, if they be not nipped and restrained by the sanctifying grace of Gods holy Spirit; that our hearts so farre forth as they are vnregenerate, are a sinke of sinne and a sea and gulfe of wickednesse, wherein the Deuill casting the spawne of his temptations, begetteth vgly monsters of all sorts both small and great. And that as our bodies when they are at the purest, haue in them sufficient matter for all manner of diseases; so our soules being much more corrupted are aptly disposed to any sin. Secondly, knowing and remembring that through this corruption we are prone to all sin, let this humble vs in the sight of our frailty and weaknesse, and cause vs with more earnestnesse to craue Gods assistance and denying our selues to rest on his strength, which alone is able to preserue vs from falling. Thirdly, let this moue vs to shake off all carnall security and presumption of our owne graces, and to keep continually a narrow watch ouer our harts, that wee bee not at vnawares ouer-taken through the deceitfulnesse of sin. Let it make vs to worke out our saluation with feare and trembling, as the Apostle exhorteth, and whilest we thinke we stand take heed of falling. Let vs be perswaded hereby to labour and endeuour daily to purge our selues from all filthinesse of the flesh and spirit, and finish our sanctification in the feare of God. Finally, let vs remember that the man is blessed that feareth alwayes: But as for those who harden their hearts through security and presumption; they are of all others most ready to fall into all euill and mischiefe.

2. King. 8. 13.

Phil. 2. 12. 1. Cor. 10. 12. 2. Cor. 7. 1. Prou. 28. 14.

9. Sect. 5. The fifth policie is to perswade vs that we may safely vse the meanes and occasions of sin.

A fifth pollicy which the flesh vseth to draw vs vnto sinne, is to perswade vs, that we may safely vse the meanes and occasions of sinne, and yet be preserued from the sinne it selfe. And thus Lot was allured to drinke excessiuely, neuer suspecting his falling into that brutish drunkennesse, and much lesse that abhominable incest with his owne daughters. Thus Dauid securely liued in idlenesse and wantonnesse, neuer thinking, that these would be the meanes to bring him to whoredome. Thus Salomon gaue his strength vnto women, and defiled himselfe with vnlawfull lusts, neuer imagining that this corporall whoredome would be the occasion and meanes to make him commit also spirituall whoredome with Idols & strange Gods. Thus Iehosaphat lincked himselfe with wicked Ahab by marrying his daughter, and yet supposed that he should no way bee tainted with his impieties; and Peter presumed that hee should bee constant in his loue to his master, and the profession of the truth; and yet consorteth himselfe with the high Priests seruants. And thus in our times many thinke that they may be safely present at the Masse & idolatrous seruice, yea themselues selues haue about them many meanes and occasions of idolatry, and yet not fall into the sinne it selfe; many thinke they may ordinarily sweare and yet neuer commit the sinne of periury; that they may nourish couetousnesse, and yet neuer commit theft, fraude, oppression or any vnjustice; that they may drinke, pamper the belly and vse all manner of wanton dalliance, and yet bee farre enough off from fornication and adultery. Now that wee may not bee abused with this deceipt, let vs consider, that where the Lord forbiddeth any sinne, there he also forbiddeth the occasions and meanes thereof because those who doe not carefully auoide these, they cannot possibly escape the other. That they who goe in the way, will (though they neuer thinke of it) come thereby to the towne or place to which it leadeth. That if wee alwayes walke vpon the yce or slipperie places, we shall euer bee in danger of falling, and often fall though we be neuer so wary; and therefore the Psalmist pronounceth him blessed, who hath not walked in the way of sinners. That as they who vse surfetting and drunkennesse, yea drinke dangerous poysons, cannot looke to enjoy their health, because they vse the meanes which bring men ordinarily to sicknesse and death; so they who vse the meanes of falling into sinne which is the sicknesse of their soules, cannot looke to enjoy the life of grace, but will quickly fall into spirituall diseases which in the end will bring them to vtter destruction. Finally, that they who vse the meanes and occasions of euill, doe desperatly runne into temptations presuming of their owne strength, and so are giuen ouer of God; and being abandoned of his assistance, must needs fall and come to ruine; for hee that loueth danger shall perish therein.

Sixtly, the flesh ostentimes deceiueth vs, by drawing and intycing vs by degrees to the committing of those sinnes which are most great and haynous, as first to looke and cast wanton glances, then to lust, then to consent to the committing of the fact, then to plot and deuise of the meanes, how it may be effected, then to the act it selfe, and lastly to the often reiterating of the same sin. Thus first it defileth the heart with couetousnesse, then causeth it to bee discontented with our state and portion, then to couet other mens goods, and finally to deuise and put in practice the meanes whereby they may bee gotten from them, as fraude, deceipt, extortion, oppression and such like vnlawfull courses. And thus it draweth vs into all kinds of wickednesse, by alluring vs to keepe company with those that loue and line in it; then for carnall and by-respects to wincke at and tolerate their sinnes whose persons we affect; then to thinke them light and veniall; then for company sake to commit them, lest wee would bee thought more precise and scrupulous than the rest of our consorts; and finally to defend our wickednesse, yea to boast and bragge of it, as though it were some vertuous action and much for our credit to liue in it. And thus it bringeth vs to the highest step of the ladder of wickednesse, vnto which it could neuer haue mounted vs, vnlesse it had caried vs by these degrees, and maketh vs embrace the most haynous sins, as it were, our choysest friends, which before we tooke for our greatest enemies, and therefore hated and auoided them, by bringing vs first acquainted with all the alies, friends and attendants which waite vpon them. For the preuenting of which deceit our best course is to keepe a narrow watch ouer our selues that wee be not thus ouertaken; specially ouer our owne hearts, that we may withstand the first motions vnto sinne and euen crush it in the shell that it may neuer come to be hatched. Secondly, to take notice of our least sinnes, that wee may not securely liue in them, but hauing fallen may recouer our selues by vnfained repentance. And lastly that seeing our selues are too too retchlesse and secure, wee doe often and vnfainedly desire the Lord to watch ouer vs, and by his spirit to waken our consciences that they may admonish vs of the euill which we are ready to fall into, and so preuent the committing of it, or accuse vs being fallen that we may arise againe by repentance, and afterwards bee made more carefull of our wayes.

6. Sect. 7. The seuenth policie is to draw vs from things indifferent to sinne.

A seuenth pollicy of the flesh is, to draw vs from that which is indifferent and in its owne nature lawfull, vnto that which is vnlawfull and sinnefull; for whereas things indifferent are not simply good, but onely in their right and moderate vse, the flesh alloureth vs to abuse them through immoderation and excesse, whereby they become sinfull and euill. Thus because the creatures are good in their owne nature: and the blessings of God vnto vs if they be sanctified by the word and prayer, and bee vsed soberly for the better fitting and enabling vs to Gods seruice, and for the performance of all religious and Christian duties, the flesh alloureth vs to loue them excessiuely more than the Creator himselfe, and than all saving graces and heauenly happinesse; and so chiefly to value, affect and seeke them and to place all our happinesse in the fruition of them. Thus because riches, honours and pleasures, are in their owne nature good, it perswadeth vs to loue them excessiuely, to set our hearts vpon them and seeke them more diligently than the Kingdome of God and his righteousnesse, and so through our abuse to make them become vnto vs shamefull Idols with which wee commit spirituall whoredome. Thus because recreations are lawfull, if we vse them lawfully, seasonably, and with moderation, that so wee may bee the better enabled for the duties of Gods seruice, it allureth vs to abuse them through excesse, and to spend all, or the chiefe part of our time in them, whereby of recreations they become occupations, which take vs wholly vp, and shoulder and thrust out all Christian duties of our callings with all religious duties of Gods seruice; or to vse them vnseasonably on the Lords day, which should bee consecrated as holy vnto him, and be wholy spent in diuine duties and religious exercises. So because meates and drinkes are lawfull and of an indifferent nature, the flesh draweth vs to abuse them by intemperance and excesse, surfetting and drunkennesse, and so to become grosse Epicures who make their belly their God. Because apparrell is necessary to keepe vs warme and hide our nakednesse, the flesh perswadeth vpon this ground to excessiue brauery, and strange attyers: because sleepe is warrantable in the moderate vse of it, it allureth vs to immoderate sloth and sluggishnesse, which consumeth our precious time, and so dulleth the spirits, that we are made vnfit for any good duties. And finally because honest mirth is commendable, it prouoketh vs securely to embrace carnall delights, and passing all bounds of sobriety, to turne our mirth into madnesse, to the dishonour of God, the discredit of our profession and the wounding of our owne consciences. And thus the flesh spurreth vs on in the vse of these things indifferent, and neuer suffereth vs to rest, vntill we haue wholly passed the bounds which God hath set vs, & haue turned our Christian and lawfull libertie into vnchristian and lawlesse licentiousnesse. The which deceipt is so much the more dangerous, because it inticeth vs to the embracing of those things, vnto which wee are naturally carried and hurried with our carnall desires, and sinfull appetites; as also because the things wherein wee offend, are in their owne nature lawfull and the good blessings of God, which maketh vs vs securely to vse them, neuer suspecting any danger. Now if we would not be ouertaken with this pollicy, wee must keepe a vigilant watch ouer our selues in the vse of things indifferent, that our libertie doe not turne to libertinisme. Let vs consider not onely what is lawfull, but also what is expedient in respect of time, place, persons and other circumstances, which not being obserued, things lawfull in themselues become vnlawfull vnto vs through our abuse; that they who will alwayes doe the vttermost that they may, will often do that which they should not; and they who will presumptuously walke vpon the brinke of the riuer, will sometimes slip in and bee in danger to bee drowned; that these things which are not absolutely good, but of an indifferent nature, are vnto vs according as we vse them, good to those which vse them well, and euill to those who abuse them vnto sinne; that we are naturally exceeding inclinable to this abuse, if wee bee not very watchfull and wary; and finally that those things which are not simply good, but as they are confined within their bounds and measure, their cautions and conditions, become euill and vnlawfull, when these limits are exceeded and these cautions not obserued.

Finally the flesh perswadeth vs to sinne, by proposing vnto vs the example of the Saints; and that either inticing vs to embrace sinne generally, because all of them generally haue sinned, or else alluring vs vnto particular sinnes, by propounding vnto vs particular examples; and (as it were) speciall patrons for euery kind of wickednesse. As for example Noah and Lot for drunkennesse, Dauid for whoredome and murther; Ieremy and Ionah for murmuring and impatiency, Peter for denying of Christ and dissembling of our profession. For the defeating of which deceipt let vs consider that the vertues of these men and not their vices are propounded vnto vs for imitation; yea that their sinnes are set before vs, that seeing their falls we should be more watchfull and warie, or being fallen wee should not despaire, but bee encouraged to rise with them by vnfained repentance. Finally let vs know, that without this repentance wee can haue no comfort by their example; and that if we do soundly repent with them, it will cause in vs many a deepe sigh and dolefull groane, and so we shall finde much more bitternesse in our sorrow, than wee haue done sweetenesse in our sinne; and that where as the delight was vaine and momentanie, the griefe will be great and permanent. And therefore looke not vpon Dauid sporting himselfe in his vnlawfull lusts, but behold him afterwards when hee is bowed and goeth crooked vnder the waight of his sinne, complaining as a man affrighted with the terrors of conscience and rejected of God, making teares his food, and watering his couch with them. Looke not vpon Peter sauing himselfe by forswearing his master, but behold him afterwards weeping bitterly. Finally looke not vpon the Church delighting her selfe with her louers, and with that spirituall whoredome committed with them; but listen vnto her pitifull lamentations, when being led into captiuity, shee is grieuously afflicted for her sinnes.

9. Sect. 3. The eighth pollicie is to perswad vs to sin by the examples of the Saints.

Psal. 38. 6. & 6. 6.

CHAP.

CHAP. XV.

Of the pollicies which the flesh vseth to hinder our repentance.

¶. Sect. 1. The first policie is to perswade vs that our common sinnes are no sinnes, and our haynous sins small and veniall.

WEe haue spoken of some speciall and notable deceipts which the flesh vseth to allure vs to the committing of sinne; and now we are briefly to consider of some other which it vseth, to make vs being fallen to continue in our sinnes without repentance. The first whereof is to blinde or hoodwinke the eyes of our vnderstandings, and to corrupt and delude our judgements, that wee may thinke our common sinnes to bee no sinnes, and our great and haynous ones to bee small and veniall: with which deceipt wee are the more easily abused if wee thriue and prosper in our euill courses, and haue not our eyes cleared by the sharpe waters of afflictions. For when God suffereth vs to goe on in our euill wayes without checke, wee either thinke that hee approueth, or not much misliketh them; or else continue securely in them and neuer call them to examination. For the defeating of which pollicy the best meanes are first, diligent studying and meditating in the booke of God, which is that al-sufficient light whereby wee may discouer these workes of darkenesse, and that most vpright judge, which not onely adjudgeth what is good and euill, but also in what measure and degree. Secondly, that we often pray vnto God that our eyes may be annointed with the eye-salue of his grace and holy Spirit, that being cured of their naturall blindnesse, they may be able to discerne betweene euill and good, darkenesse and light. Finally, that wee doe not liue in carnall security, but often examine our workes and wayes by the rule and square of Gods word, and especially those wherein wee thriue and prosper, and so wee shall perceiue plainely which are just and straight, and which are crooked, and also in what measure and degree.

¶. Sect. 2. The second policie is to extenuate and couer our sins with vaine excuses, as first corruption of nature.

Secondly, if it cannot perswade vs that our sins are no sinnes, then it will extenuate and couer them with vaine excuses, & make them so little, light, and veniall, that as it will make vs beleeue, wee may without danger continue in them. And first it pretendeth corruption of nature and humaine frailtie, which is so great in all men, that doe what they can, they must needs be guiltie of many sinnes. But in this wee may vanquish our flesh with its owne weapon, for we should not giue willing entertainement vnto any sinne, because through our infirmitie, and the strength of naturall corruption, many will thrust in vpon vs whether we wil or no; but rather wee should therefore fight the more couragiously against these enemies, because they are so instant to presse vpon vs. Yea in truth this should double our repentance, seeing there doth not onely some streames of wickednesse flow from vs, but also we haue the fountaine in our selues; especially considering wee were not thus by creation, but through our owne default, whereby we haue defaced Gods image, and brought our selues into this state of corruption.

¶. Sect. 3. Secondly the flesh teacheth vs to pretend custome.

Secondly men excuse themselues for liuing impenitently in their sinnes, by pretending custome, which hath taken such fast hold vpon them, that they can by no meanes shake it off. Thus the swearer pretendeth, that hee would willingly leaue vaine and blasphemous oathes, but that he is so inured vnto them, that hee often sweareth at vnawares. Thus the voluptuous man saith, that he would be content to leaue his carnall delights, as drinking, gaming, rioting, whoring, but that hee hath so accustomed himselfe vnto them, that he cannot forsake nor giue them ouer. But let such know that it is high time for them to come out of their sins by repentance, seeing they haue brought themselues into a most miserable and fearefull condition; for sinne is turned into another nature, and by pleading custome holdeth them in subjection (as it were) by vertue of a Law. And Sathan who through their naturall corruption held them in the vilest and basest slaurie, hath his possession confirmed by their customable seruice of him in their actuall transgressions, and now the strong man holdeth the house with some shew of right, hauing so long possessed it that he can pleade prescription. Of these men I would demand if euer they meane to come out of their sinnes by vnfained repentance or no. If not what appearance of hope is there but that they must be eternally miserable in the fire of Hell. But if they doe, as all will pretend, why doe they it not presently? For if custome be too strong for them already, how much more vnresistable will it bee, when it is more & more confirmed by much practice and continuance? But I am so fettered in sinne by an ill custome, that I cannot shake it off. Yet know that though it be hard, yet vpon the necessity of thy saluation it must bee done; and therefore in stead of breaking these cords with a Sampson-like resolution, let not time and vse double them and make them stronger. Yea rather vntwist them by little and little, if thou canst not at once breacke them; and by a contrary custome of piety and righteousnesse, disuse thee from thy sinnes by degrees, indeauouring first to set thy heart at liberty. For if the heart being deliuered out of the bondage of sinne, begin now to hate it, then neither will the tongue delight to speake it, nor the hand to act it. And therefore pretend not custome, seeing it

it is not this, but our malicious wils, that imbrace it and our hearts that affect it, which make vs continue in our sinne without repentance, neither can custome hold vs vnto any thing which is in our owne power to alter, if our wils with any resolution doe breake away from it. For tell me thou who pretendest this excuse; if this custome should bee punished in euery particular act with some forfeiture, whereby thy estate would bee impouerished, or some punishment inflicted on thy body, which would bring vnto thee more damage and smart, than thy sinne doth pleasure and delight; wouldest thou not leaue thy sinne and hate it, if not for it selfe, yet for the penalty sake inflicted on thee for it? And wilt thou not regard thy precious soule as well as thy corruptible body; and be as carefull to auoide eternall damnation, as well as some worldly losse? Finally know, that it will proue but a miserable excuse at the day of judgement, when God and our owne consciences shall accuse vs for our sinnes, to say that wee committed and could not leaue them, because we were accustomed vnto them; and all one, as if the man-slayer should excuse his murther, by telling the judge that he could doe no otherwise, because hee had for a long time beene accustomed thereto, by killing of many other: Or as if the thiefe should excuse his theft by saying, that he could not choose but doe it, because his hands for a long time haue beene inured to stealing. And therefore let vs not continue in sinne because wee haue sinned, thinking that we can bee excused by pleading custome, but because wee haue long and often committed these sinnes, let vs be so much more earnest in the exercise of repentance. For as the Apostle telleth vs, Christ hath suffered in the flesh, that we should no longer liue the rest of our time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God. For the time past of our life may suffice vs, to haue wrought the will of Gentiles, when we walked in lasciuiousnesse, lusts, excesse of wine, reuellings, banquettings and abhominable idolatries. So the Apostle Paul exhorteth vs, that as wee haue yeelded our members seruants to vncleanesse and to iniquitie, vnto iniquitie; so now we should yeeld our members seruants to righteousnesse, vnto holinesse.

1. Pet. 4. 2. 3.

Rom. 6. 19.

Q. Sect. 4. The third deceipt is to pretend pouertie.

Thirdly the flesh deceiueth vs, by pretending the pouerty and necessity of our estate as a sufficient cause, and reasonable excuse, why we should continue in our sins; and maketh vs beleeue, that though we neglect all meanes of knowledge, faith, and all sauing grace, and all duties of Gods seruice, we may be dispensed with because our whole time is little inough to bee imployed for the obtaining of worldly necessaries; yea that wee may vse wicked and vnlawfull meanes, for the supplying of our wants, as all manner of fraud and deceitfull dealing in our trades and occupations, which is no better than theft it selfe in the sight of God. But let vs know that though we be neuer so poore, this is no excuse why wee should neglect any religious duty, or commit any sinne. For one thing is necessary and happy are wee, if with Mary we quit our selues of worldly incumbrances, and choose the better part. That if we bee poore in earthly things, wee haue greater cause to labour after sauing graces & heauenly treasures, which alone without the other are all-sufficient to make vs rich. That when we haue carked & cared, toyled and moyled to prouide earthly things, yet all is in vaine except Gods blessing be vpon our labours; and we cannot expect it either by neglecting holy duties which he hath commanded, or by committing such sinnes as he hath forbidden and condemned. That we haue Gods gracious promise of earthly necessaries, if we first and chiefely seeke his Kingdome and righteousnesse: That pouerty, if we vse it well, is no hinderance to grace in this life nor glory in the life to come; as we see in the example of the Disciples, yea Christ himselfe, who being most poore in worldly things, were most rich in spirituall and heauenly treasures. Finally let vs know, that if we serue and seeke the Lord, he will take care for vs, and not suffer vs to want any thing which is good, and that they of all others are best prouided for, who haue his prouidence to watch ouer them. Or though wee should be pinched in respect of earthly things, yet it is much better with Lazarus to goe poore to Heauen, than with Dines hauing abundance, to be cast into Hell.

Psal. 127. 1.

Mat. 6. 33.

Psal. 34. 10.

Q. Sect. 5. The fourth policie is to pretend a necessitie of liuing in our sins by reason of our calling.

A like conceipt vnto this is, when as the flesh perswadeth vs that wee may neglect good duties, or commit and liue in diuers sinnes because we liue in such callings as doe force vs to take these courses, without which we could not maintaine our charge. Thus it perswadeth shop-keepers, that they should not bee able to liue in their trades, if they should not vse lying and deceipt; and other trades-men as Cookes, Taylors, Shoomakers, Vintners, Butchers, Cariers, and such like, that they may be dispensed with, though they neglect the seruice of God, and labour in the workes of their calling on the Lords Sabbaths, because otherwise they should loose their custome, together with those gaines, by which they are inabled to maintaine themselues and theirs. Yea and thus it perswadeth others to liue in vnlawfull callings, because they haue no other meanes, as Players and Playmakers, gamesters, and those who keepe gaming houses, and such like. But let the former know that no particular calling should withdraw vs from performing the duties which belong to the generall generall calling of a Christian; that they shall in the end find those gaines the greatest losses, when to keepe a market for our body and state, wee neglect the spirituall market of our soules, and the meanes whereby wee might attaine vnto the riches of saving graces and heauenly happinesse. That those who seeke to compasse riches by vnlawfull meanes, they either faile of their end, and so labour in vaine, or together with them get a curse, which will make them moulder and consume away: or if they continue, will bring to the possessers but small comfort, when they must leaue their riches behinde them and carry their sinne with them before their judge. Let them know that no man in any lawfull calling is brought into such streights, but that if there bee prudence, prouidence and wise forecast ioyned with it, he may finde some time and opportunity for the seruice of God and the feeding of his soule: and though he doe not vse the meanes of thriuing in his calling as others doe, who so earnestly follow their worldly businesse that they neglect all holy duties; yet may they expect from God vpon their weaker indeauours a greater blessing, which may make their state become as fat and in as good liking, as those children were in their bodies who fed onely vpon pulse and water: or though God seeth it good to scant them in wordly things, yet they shall enjoy the little they haue with aboundant comfort, seeing they are vnto them little pledges of Gods great loue, and in the meane time haue their bodily wants exceedingly recompenced with the peace of a good conscience, the joy in the holy Ghost, and the spirituall riches of all saving graces. As for those whose callings are vnlawfull, their best course were to exchange them for those that are lawfull, seeing they haue no better excuse of their liuing in them, because they haue no other meanes to maintaine themselues, than Harlots, Theeues and Pickpurses, who are alike ready to alleadge, that therefore they vse these courses, because they haue no other meanes whereby they may liue. For better it were for them not to liue at all, than to liue in sinne to the dishonour of God and hurt of their brethren; better it were that their bodies should pine and famish in this world, than that their bodies and soules should eternally bee tormented in the fire of Hell.

Iam. 1. 15.

6. Sect. 6. The fift policy of the flesh perswading vs to continue in our sinnes, in regard of the corruption of the times.

Fiftly the flesh deceiueth vs, whilest it perswadeth vs to continue in our sins without repentance, by alleadging that the times wherein we liue, and the persons among we dwell, are so euill and wholy corrupted with sinne, that there is a necessitie laide vpon vs of conforming our courses to the example of others; seeing if wee purge our selues from the sinnes which commonly raigne, and make conscience of those vices which others commit; wee shall not onely expose our selues to the scorne and obloquie of all that obserue vs, as being more strict and precise in our courses than wee neede, but also (as the Prophet speaketh) make our selues a common prey. For the defeating of which deceipt, let vs know that wee must bee of the little flocke of Christ, if euer wee meane to be in their number, vnto whom his Fathers pleasure is to giue a Kingdome; that wee must not follow a multitude in doing euill, valesse wee thinke also to bee partakers in their punishments; that wee must not fashion our selues to the example of the world, if we would not perish with it, but must bee transformed by the renewing of our minds, and bee seuered from the world and culled out of it, if wee would be in the number of Christs Disciples, or become true members and subjects of his kingdome. That it is better to goe into Heauen alone, than to goe into Hell and haue all the world to beare vs company. Let vs remember that wee must through good report and euill report, goe on in our Christian course, with the blessed Apostle, if we euer meane to accompany him in Heauen. That it is no great matter to suffer a scoffe for Christ, who hath for our sakes suffered the bitter death of the crosse; that we must not refuse to be the sheepe of Christ, nor alter our nature to a woluish condition, because we would not be iniured by wolues and goates, vnlesse we would with them be set at Christs left hand and heare that dreadfull sentence of condemnation denounced against vs. That wee shall in the end ouercome by suffering, and receiue a crowne of our patience, which without all comparison will exceede our paines. Let vs further consider that no man is careless of the health of his body, because the ayre is infected, and the country full of contagious sicknesses, but doth so much the more carefully vse all good preseruatiues to keepe him from these Epedemicall diseases, and the like care wee would haue of our soules, if we loued them as well as wee doe our bodies. In regard whereof the Apostle vseth this as an argument to make vs more watchfull and diligent, in redeeming the time, because the dayes are euill. Finally let vs know that neither time nor place in which we liue, will excuse vs before God, if wee liue in our sinnes, seeing as the best time or place will not priuiledge vs from falling into sinne no not Paradise it selfe, and the society of the Angels, as we see in Adam; so neither will those times and places which most abound with euill, poyson vs with the contagion of sinne, if we haue about vs the preseruatiue of a good conscience, and haue sincere and vpright hearts, which make vs with Enoch in the middest of worldly distractions to walke with

Iam. 4. 4.
Esa. 59. 15.
Luk. 12. 32.
Exod. 23. 2.
Rom. 12. 2.
Iob. 15. 19.
2. Cor. 6. 8.
Mat. 25.
Eph. 5. 16.
Gen. 5.

with our God. Yea rather when we are on all sides compassed about with wicked men, the heate and zeale of our godlinesse (as it were by an antiperistasis) will be intended and increased. As we see in the example of Noah, who continued just, when all the world were wicked. Of Abraham, who was vpright in his wayes among the wicked Cananites; of Lot, whose soule was righteous, though hee liued among the filthy Sodomites; of Ioseph and Moses in the Court of Pharaoh, Dauid in the Court of Saul, and of Nehemiah, Daniel, the three children, and many others, who feared and serued the Lord, though they liued, yea bore office in the Court of the Kings of Babylon.

Gen.6.9.

Q. Sect.7. The sixt policy of the flesh in perswading vs to continue in our sins because God is mercifull.

A sixt pollicy which the flesh vseth, to perswade vs to continue in our sinnes without repentance is to tell vs of Gods mercy, which is so endlesse and infinite, that notwithstanding we goe on in our owne courses yet we shall be saued. With which that we may not be ouertaken, let vs consider; that it is an horrible abuse of Gods mercy, when we take occasion thereby to continue in sins, which in the Scriptures is offered vnto vs as the maine argument whereby we are inuited vnto repentance. So the Psalmist saith that there is mercy with the Lord that hee may be feared; and the Apostle telleth vs, that the riches of Gods goodnesse, his patience and long-suffering doe inuite vs to repentance. It is a notable motiue to perswade a rebell to yeeld & submit himselfe to his Prince, because he is gracious and mercifull, but if any will goe out or continue in his rebellion vpon this ground, his presumption alone would make him worthy to bee hanged, because the grace and goodnesse of his Prince should worke in him loue and obedience, and make him loath and euen ashamed to offend and displease so gracious a soueraigne. Secondly, let vs know that howsoeuer Gods mercy in itselfe is infinite and incomprehensible, yet in respect of the obiect and exercise of it, it is limitted by his truth, which appropriateth it only to repentant sinners, because such onely doe lay hold of it, and apply it vnto themselues by a liuely faith; without which application, the mercy of God can doe vs no more good, than a soueraigne salue can cure a wound, which is cast behind the doore and neuer applyed vnto it. Lastly, let vs know, that as God is infinite in mercy, so also in justice, yea in truth these are all one in God, his mercy being a just mercy, and his justice a mercifull justice, onely they seeme to differ in respect of the obiect, and his diuers manner of exercising them towards his creatures. In which regard notwithstanding it may truely be said, that hee is iust in iustifying a sinner, because beleeuing in Christ his sins are satisfied for by his merits and obedience; and that he is mercifull towards the wicked in bearing with them so long, and affording vnto them so many meanes to bring them to repentance. But if these meanes bee contemned, then the acceptable time and day of saluation being past, there is no more place for mercy, but onely for justice; in the manifestation whereof towards the wicked and reprobate, God is no lesse glorified, than in the declaring of his mercy and truth towards the faithfull and Elect. Neither must wee thinke it any disparagement to Gods mercy, that it is not effectuall for the saluation of all, seeing the fault is in themselues who despise it; neither is the infiniteness thereof at all limited or shadowed, because it is not extended to those who reject it, no more than the mercy of the Prince is eclypsed, who sendeth his pardon to a malefactour with this condition, that hee shall haue the benefit of it, if hee will receiue and pleade it; and for the time present bee sorry for his fault, and for the time to come endeauour to amend; and yet afterwards hangeth the offender, when hee refuseth to receiue it, and withall professeth his resolution to continue in his wicked courses. Besides the infiniteness of Gods mercy is not onely manifest by the number which he forgiueth, but also by the quality and greatnesse of the debt which hee pardoneth and remitteth. In which regard the infinite grace and goodnesse of God would clearely shine in the saluation of one sinner though there were no more than he, because hee forgiueth the infinite guilt and punishment of his sin, whereby he hath offended his infinite Majestie.

Psal.130.4.

Rom.2.4.

Rom.3.26.

Q. Sect.8. The seuenth pollicie of the flesh in perswading vs to deferre our repentance.

Lastly, if the flesh cannot draw vs to a resolution of liuing in our sins without repentance; then it allureth vs to deferre it from time to time, because it will neuer be too late to performe this duty though it were delayed to the last houre of our liues; which deceit that we may defeat, let vs know, that this is a like abuse of Gods infinite mercy and goodnesse, when as by our presumption we make it serue as a reason to continue vs in our sins, which should be the chiefest motiue to hasten our repentance. Secondly, let vs consider that wee haue no assurance of our liues for the space of one houre, nor that wee shall haue power to repent, if wee despise Gods present grace though our liues should be prolonged for many yeares. Thirdly, that without repentance there can bee no saluation, which being the chiefe thing, deserueth our first and best endeuours; and what folly is it to seeke first for vaine and momentany trifles and to defer this greatest and most important businesse to our last and vncertain times seeing if we be preuented by death there is no hope, but that we shall goe vnto hell? Fourthly, let vs know that the longer we defer our re-repentance, the more hard and difficult shall we find it to be done, for if wee cannot shake off our sinnes, when like strangers they are first entertained, much lesse shall we be able to doe it, when they are of familiar acquaintance, yea, by long custome habituall; and (as it were) turned into a second nature. Finally, let vs remember that this late repentance is commonly false and counterfait, not springing out of faith and the loue of God, but out of selfe-loue and feare of approching iudgements. The which lamentable experience maketh too manifest, seeing few among many hundreds performe that which they promised, when the hand of God correcting them is pulled backe, but after their recouery out of those sicknesses which they thought mortall, returne to their former courses, yea, become more worldly and wicked than euer they were before. But of this subject I haue largely intreated in the first part of this Christian Warfare, and therefore will content my selfe heere to haue so briefly touched it.

CHAP. XVI.

Of the policies of the flesh which it vseth to hinder vs from performing holy duties, and vertuous actions.

WE haue heard of some notable deceits which the flesh vseth to draw vs vnto sin, and being false to make vs lie in it without repentance: now let vs consider some chiefe policies which it vseth about holy duties and vertuous actions. And these are of three sorts; the first it vseth to hinder vs from embracing and practising them. The second to disturbe and interrupt vs in them. The third to alienate our hearts and withdraw vs from them. For the first, it vseth many deceits to keepe vs from embracing vertue, & bringing forth the fruits of new obedience. As first of all, when wee haue some inclination to embrace vertue and to practise Christian duties in the generall, it cunningly indeuoureth to dazle the eyes of our minde, and to corrupt our iudgements, that wee may mistake vertue for vice, and good for euill. To which end it either mooueth vs to iudge of them according to common errour, and the false opinion of worldly men, who by selfe-loue are easily brought to condemne that as naught, which is most contrary to their carnall appetite; or else it disguiseth vertues beauty with the foule and vgly vizard of vice and sin, or so besprinkleth and besmeareth them with the blacke colours of false imputations, that we are ready to abhorre and reject them at the first view, without any further tryall or examination. Thus it brandeth a Christian conuersation with the name of a melancholicke or Monkish life, deuotion with the name of superstition, and a conscionable care to approue our hearts and all our wayes vnto God it tearmeth nice scrupulosity, and needlesse, yea, peeuish preciseneſse. Thus a religious care to sanctifie the Sabbath, it calleth Iudaisme; zeale, fury and madneſse, or at best rashneſse and indiscretion; humility it tearmeth baseneſse, magnanimity pride, bounty lauishneſse, frugality niggardlineſse, meekneſse cowardize, and Christian courage and fortitude it intitleth with the name of desperate and audacious boldneſse. Now the meanes to preserue vs from being ouertaken with this deceit, is to pull off these deformed Vizards, and to behold vertue and all Christian duties, in their owne natiue beauty by the neuer deceiuing Light of Gods Word. And not to listen to the false opinion of the World and the flesh, which make light darkneſse, and sweet sower, but to examine by the Scriptures what God approueth, and what heedisliketh and condemneth. To which purpose wee must daily exercise our selues in the study and meditation of Gods Word, which will so enlighten, rectifie and informe our iudgements, that wee shall neuer be deceiued by those foggy and false mists, which the Deuill, the World or our owne corrupt Flesh, doe cast before them.

1. Sect. 2. The second policy in alledging difficulties that are in Christian duties.

A second deceit which the flesh vseth, to discourage vs from seeking after vertue, and endeuouring to practise Christian duties, is to perswade vs, that the house of vertue is scituated on so high an hill, that wee shall be out of breath and quite tyred before wee can clime vnto it; and that there is so much difficulty and so many discouragements in a Christian life, that it would be but in vaine to enter into it, it being impossible that we should goe forward, and that better it were not to giue the on-set, than in the first skirmish to be foyled, and forced to make a shamefull retraite. To this end it is ready to tell vs, that wee must leaue all our delights, which so much content vs, and exercise our selues in such duties as are quite against the haire, and through the contrariety which is betweene them and our nature, so displeasant and distastfull to our appetite, that wee shall not liue one merry day after we haue taken vpon vs this mopish and melancholicke profession. Yea, and for the better countenancing of this deceit, it is ready to abuse Gods infallible truth, and to set before vs the afflictions of the Saints, their mournings and lamentations, their pouerty and reproches, imprisonments, banishments and cruell death, assuring vs (as the truth is) that if we follow them in the same courses we shall meete with the same crosses, seeing it is expresly said, That all who will liue godly in Christ Iesus must suffer persecution. Now that we may be armed against this subtill incounter, let vs know, that the chiefe strength of it lyeth in laying open and amplifying the discouragements which might hinder vs in our Christian course, and in the concealing and hiding of those helpes and comforts which might bee encouragements to our good proceedings. For though the worke of repentance be vnto vs hard and difficult, yet seeing it is not onely an act done by vs, but chiefly and principally a grace and gift of God, who is ready to bestow it freely vpon all who desire to haue it, and doe endeauour to embrace and practise it, the difficulty should bring with it no discouragement, seeing God is al-sufficient to effect his owne worke, and by the power of his Word and Spirit, to make that easie and delightfull which is naturally impossible and vnpleasant. Againe, let vs know that in repentance there is a change not onely of our actions, but also of our hearts and minds, whereby it commeth to passe, that those sinfull delights which were formerly most sweet to our carnall appetites, are now most bitter and loathsome to the part regenerate; and those godly and religious exercises which were to the flesh and naturall man most distastfull and tedious, are now to the man regenerate most pleasant and comfortable; as wee may see in Dauid who esteemed Gods Word and holy Ordinances aboue all manner of riches, and found them sweeter to his taste than the hony or the hony combe; and in Iob who professeth, that he esteemed the Word of God much more than his necessary food. And therefore though new obedience be irksome and painfull to those who are vnregenerate, yet not to those who are sanctified, changed and renewed in the spirit of their mindes. Euen as wee see those paines and serious studies which were so tedious and contrary to our disposition whilest we were children, are sweet and delightful when we are come to years of discretion. Furthermore let vs consider that though it be a most toylesome labour vnto vs to run in the Christian race being considered in our selues, because we are stiffe and benummed, and sore & lame in al our joynts through the fetters and bolts of sinne which haue long hanged vpon vs, yet being strengthened by the spirit, and being made partakers of this spirituall anoynting, we are made able, nimble and actiue to run in the wayes of God, according to that of the Spouse, Draw mee, and I will runne after thee, and of the Prophet; I will runne the way of thy Commandements when thou shalt inlarge my heart; and that also of the Apostle; I can doe all things through Christ which strengtheneth me. Finally, let vs know, that as wee haue in the way of Christianity many crosses, so also many comforts; as for example, for the present wee loose the applause of Worldlings, and lie open to obloquy and reproach; but for recompence we haue the approbation of God and our owne consciences; wee haue warres with men, but peace with God; wee loose carnall rejoycing in the pleasures of sin, but in stead thereof we haue spirituall rejoycing in the assurance of Gods loue, the remission of our sins, and the saluation of our soules; wee are stripped of worldly wealth, but we are inriched with spirituall treasures, Gods sanctifying gifts and graces, and gloriously decked both with inward sincerity and the rich roabes of an holy conuersation; wee forgoe carnal security which within a while would bring vs into horrour and despaire in the sight of our sins, and that horrible vengeance which is due vnto them; but we haue in exchange spirituall security, whereby we quietly rest vpon Gods promises and prouidence in the midst of all dangers, and can with Dauid walke through the vale of the shadow of death, and yet feare no euil. And thus our worldly losses are euen in this life infinitely recompenced with our spirituall gaines, and how much more when we come to the fruition of our future and heauenly hopes, for if we suffer with Christ wee shall raigne with him, and those present sufferings, are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be reuealed in vs; for they are light and momentary; but they shall cause vnto vs a farre most excellent and an eternall waight of glory. And therefore let vs not so remember the crosse, as that we forget the Crowne, nor so looke to the foulenesse of the way, as that wee doe not regard the glorioufnesse of our Palace vnto which we are trauelling; but let vs consider that by Mount Caluarie wee shall come vnto Mount Sion, the City of the Saints, and that by our many tribulations we shall enter into the Kingdome of Heauen. And so shall we with Moses, preferre afflictions with the people of God, before the enioying of sinfull pleasures which last but for a season, and esteeme the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of this worldly Egypt, hauing respect to the recompence of reward. Yea, so shall wee be like vnto Iesus Christ, the author and finisher of our faith, who for the ioy that was set before him, endured the crosse, despising the shame, and is now set down at the right hand of the throne of God, where we also shall sit with him if wee follow his example.

2. Tim. 3. 12.

that

But if the flesh cannot perswade vs vtterly to neglect good duties, because wee discerne that they are necessary for our saluation, then it will moue vs to deferre them for a time, telling vs that hereafter they will be more seasonable, and that we also shall haue better leisure to performe them. For the defeating of which policy let vs know, that there is no time alike seasonable for the exercise of a godly life vnto the time present; For whilest

Q. Sect. 3. The third policy is to perswade vs to deferre the doing of holy and Christians duties.

Psal. 19. 10. Iob 23. 12. Cant. 1. 4. Psal. 119. 32. Phil. 4. 13. Psal. 23. 4. 2. Tim. 2. 12. Rom. 8. 18. 2. Cor. 4. 17. Acts 14. 22. Heb. 11. 25, 26. Heb. 12. 2. Math. 22.

it is called to day, and the Lord calleth vpon vs to performe holy duties, it is the acceptable time and day of saluation which being once past, will neuer returne againe. That those duties which are first in excellency, should be first also in time, and that no wise man putteth off matters of greatest waight, but giueth them priority and precedency both in respect of time and place. Let vs remember that our liues are short and momentany, and that it were but all too little, though they should be wholy spent in Gods seruice; and that this short time is so vncertaine, that wee haue no assurance of liuing another day or houre, in regard whereof it is great madnesse to put off those duties, for the doing whereof we chiefly came into the World, and vpon the performance of which our saluation dependeth, and to preferre before them trifles, which for the present are of small value and will not profit vs any whit at the day of death and judgement. That wee cannot by our owne naturall strength doe any good duty, but as we are assisted by Gods Spirit, & that if we from day to day quench the good motions thereof and will not open, when hee knocketh so hard and often at the doore of our hearts, wee shall moue him to depart from vs and leaue vs to our impenitency, security and hardnesse of heart. Finally, let vs know, that if it be now troublesome and tedious to performe holy duties and vertuous actions, how much more will it be so, when our vices are growne habituall, and by long custome are turned into another nature. Furthermore whereas the flesh pretendeth many occasions of present distraction and multitude of businesse, and telleth vs, that we may more conueniently performe Christian duties, and betake our selues to a godly life, when these troubles are a little ouer; as for example, that wee may better serue God, when as wee haue setled our worldly estate, and are freed from distractions which for want hereof, doe now disturbe vs; when wee haue gotten such a summe of money, such a Farme or Lordship, attained to such honour and preferment, or haue had the fruition of this or that pleasure vpon which wee haue set our hearts; let vs know that all these are but friuolous excuses, like vnto theirs who being inuited to the mariage Supper of the Kings Sonne refused to come, which will in no case be accepted of God as sufficient when he calleth vs to account, seeing they only discouer our doting loue on worldly vanities and our vtter neglect of spirituall and heauenly things. Let vs consider that it is a great indignity, to consecrate vnto the World our chiefe strength and prime seruice, and to destinate vnto God the after-leauings, of which also wee are vncertaine, whether wee shall performe them or no; that it is great folly and want of judgement to prouide, first temporary necessaries, yea, superfluities for our bodies, and leaue to a second vncertaine care the eternall saluation of our soules. That we haue no assurance to liue till wee haue attained earthly things, and afterwards to prouide for heauenly; and therefore if wee thinke Heauen better than Earth and those euerlasting joyes, better than these momentany trifles, it were our wisdome to preferre and seeke them in the first place, seeing wee cannot be assured of them both; and leauing off with Martha to be incumbred with worldly businesse, to choose with Mary the better part. For though many things might be conuenient and worth our seeking, if we had a lease of life, and leisure enough to looke after them, yet this one thing is necessary, that by feating and seruing the Lord, (which was the mayne end for which wee came into the World) we may glorifie him, and so gather assurance of our owne saluation.

Psal.95.7. Heb.3.2.

Luke 10.41.

Math.22.

2. Sect. 4.
The fourth policy of the flesh in moouing vs to rest in faire promises and faire purposes.

Fourthly when as the flesh cannot intice vs to vse meere delayes, and doe just nothing; then it will perswade vs to rest in that which is as good as nothing, namely, faire promises and faint and false purposes and resolutions, that wee will become new men out of hand: Especially if wee haue our desire in some things which we presently hope for, as deliuerance from some affliction, freedome from some danger, or recouery from some sickenesse. But when wee haue gone thus far there it maketh vs to stay, by offering vnto vs, if wee will continue in our old courses some accesse of worldly wealth, or the fruition of sinfull pleasures; and hauing preuailed so much with vs, it stayeth not here, but maketh vs soone after more carnall and wicked, more slothfull and negligent in performance of all duties than euer wee were before. With which deceit if wee would not be ouertaken; let vs know, that it were better not to promise at all, than hauing promised not to performe and pay, for what is this but to mocke God who will not be mocked? What is it but to dally and to play childes play with him, seeking to please him with complementall promises and faire words? That the Lord is not pleased by our making vowes and promises, if wee doe not also pay them, seeing we doe hereby but multiply our sinnes, adding to our former euill courses couenant-breaking and falsifying of our promises, euen with God himselfe. Finally, that we doe but quench the good motions of the Spirit, when as we doe not nourish and cherish those good purposes and resolutions which he suggesteth vnto vs; but suffer our selues to be carried away by the contary motions of our sinfull corruption. And therefore the Psalmist biddeth vs vow and pay vnto the Lord our God; the which the Prophet Esay ma-

Psal.76.11. Prou.20.25. Esay 19.21.

maketh a note of the faithfull, and the contrary by the Wise man is said to be a property of a foole. When (saith he) thou vowest a vow vnto God, deferre not to pay it, for hee hath no pleasure in fooles, pay that which thou hast vowed.

Eccles.5.4.

5. Sect.5. The fift policy is to withdraw vs from more excellent duties by occasion of doing of some lesser good.

But if it cannot by all the former deuises and deceits perswade vs to neglect such duties as are truly good, then will it by the occasion of doing some lesser good, withdraw vs from that which is greater and more excellent, in which regard that good which is of a meane and inferiour nature becommeth vnto vs euill, because it is abused by our flesh to shoulder and thrust out that which is of greater worth and waight. And thus it perswadeth men to reade the Scriptures at home on the Lords Day, and in the meane time to neglect the publique assemblies, the ministery of the Word and Prayer with the Congregation; yea, sometime to pray priuately in the Church, or to read some good Booke, that so they may neglect to joyne with the rest of Gods people with vnanimity and vniformitie in the publique seruice of God. Thus it moueth men to preferre the outward rest of the Sabbath before the workes of necessitie or mercy, which God requireth as speciall parts of the sanctification it; as helping the distressed, visiting the sicke, indeauouring to preuent some great and imminent danger, either to our Neighbours or our selues; the which was the sin of the Hypocriticall Pharises which our Sauiour so sharply reprehendeth; teaching them and vs, that the Lord preferred mercy before sacrifice; and such was Martha her sinne in neglecting Christs Sermon, the food of her soule, that she might minister vnto him food for his body. For the preuenting of which deceit, we must labour to haue our judgements rightly informed out of Gods Word, not onely in the knowledge of that which is good, and to be embraced of vs, but also in what degree of goodnesse euery Christian duty is, that euery thing in due order may bee esteemed, chosen and practised by vs; the highest degrees before the meane, and the meane before that which is inferiour vnto it: the duties which we owe vnto God in the same ranke and degree, before those which wee owe to our Neighbour; the end, duty and seruice it selfe, before the meanes whereby wee are enabled thereunto. As for example, the obedience and seasonable practice of the things we know, before hearing & reading, which are the meanes of knowledge, when as of necessity the one must giue place to the other. And the loue and true seruice of God, before the loue which we owe to our Neighbours, when as they will not stand together. And finally honest recreations which are the meanes whereby we may be the better fitted for the workes of our callings, must giue place vnto the duties themselues, which they inable vs vnto.

Math 9.13.

Luke 10.40.

Deut.33.1,2.

6. Sect.6. The sixt policy is to moue vs to performe good duties vnseasonably.

Like vnto this is an other deceit of the flesh, whereby it moueth vs to do that good which we resolue to doe, vnseasonably, and to our great hinderance in our course of godlines: as when, to distract vs in prayer, it putteth into our minds good meditations and profitable instructions, which wee haue formerly heard and learned; or, to hinder vs from hearing the Word, it causeth vs to thinke of some dutie or worke of mercy which is not pertinent to the present purpose; or, to keepe vs from sanctifying the Sabbath, and consecrating it wholy, as an holy rest vnto God, it moueth vs to thinke vpon the duties of our particular callings and of prouiding for our Children and Families. Now the meanes to frustrate this policy is wisely to discerne it, and to obserue & set a watch ouer our hearts, that they may seriously and onely intend the well performing of those duties about which we are employed, that so wee may doe them with all our might: for as the Prouerbe is, He that hunteth after two Hares at once shall catch neither; and as nature intendeth not many things at once, so neither doth grace; because the vertue and powers either of body or minde, being distracted by diuers objects, doe (like the Riuer diuided into many streames) but weakly performe their functions and operations, and being vnited, are much more strong and actiue.

7. Sect.7. The seuenth policy is to moue vs to neglect some present good, vpon pretence of doing some greater good afterwards.

And not vnlike to the former is that other deceit whereby it mooueth vs to neglect the doing of some present good vpon the pretence of doing some other and greater good afterwards, whereby it not onely defeateth our present good purpose, but commonly doth also withdraw vs from doing that future good for the performance whereof the other was neglected. And thus when we are purposed to pray vnto God, it perswadeth vs to delayes, vnder this colour that wee may afterwards performe this duty more effectually when wee are not so dull and heauy, so troubled with distractions, nor so assaulted with temptations. And thus generally it disswadeth vs from performing any seruice vnto God, pretending that wee may haue afterwards better meanes and fitter opportunity, and so may do it in such a manner as may be more acceptable vnto God. And thus also it moueth vs to neglect the workes of mercy all our life long, pretending that we may doe them much more amply and liberally by our last will, which taketh not effect till after death. For the defeating of which policy let vs know, that wee cannot performe seruice vnto God till he calleth and enableth vs by his Spirit thereunto, and that we are called when the Lord offers meanes and opportunitie; which if we neglect, wee know not whether hee will afterwards honour nour vs so much as to appoint vs to these holy seruices which wee haue carelesly and causlesly omitted. Let vs remember, that the time present is ours, and therefore at our pleasure to bee vsed for all good purposes; but the time to come is out of our reach, and we know not whether we shall catch hold of it yea or no. That it is better to doe a certaine good, though not so great and excellent, than to neglect it, in hope of doing that which is vncertaine, though in it owne nature more eminent and commendable. Finally, consider, that if we vse well the time present for doing God that seruice which we are able, hee will with the inlarging of our desires, inlarge also our meanes and opportunity of doing greater good in the time to come.

Chap. XVII.

Of the policies which the flesh vseth to interrupt vs in the doing of good duties, and to alienate our hearts from them.

§. Sect. 1. How the Flesh hinderpoleth when we are exercised in doing good duties.

AND thus the flesh hindereth vs from the performance of all good duties. In the performance of them it dealeth also no lesse deceitfully, and thereither to interrupt and distract vs, that wee may doe them onely formally and to no purpose, or else so to corrupt and poyson our best graces and most vertuous actions, that they may become vnprofitable, yea, hurtfull vnto vs. For the former, when we endeauour to seeke the Lord in his holy Ordinances, and set our selues to performe the pious duties of his seruice, if it cannot by the former deceipts wholy binder vs from doing of them, it will (like Dauids false friend) accompany vs to the House of God, as though it likewise were delighted in these holy exercises; but to no other end, than that it may frustrate and defeat our holy desires. For when we labour to heare Gods Word, to call vpon his Name, or sing his prayses, this sinne that hangeth on vs and presseth vs downe, doth either make vs dull and drowsie, lumpish and heauy, so that wee cannot attend these holy exercises with any chearefulnesse and alacrity of spirit, but offer vnto God dead and carrion-like Sacrifices, which hauing no heart nor life in them are loathsome vnto him: or else it worketh in our minds to some carnall prejudice or dislike of our teachers, or of some passages in his Sermon, whereby we are affected with choler and spleene towards him; or to thinke meanly and basely of him in respect of some naturall infirmities or defects; or else because of the mediocrity of his gifts: or it hangeth so heauily on vs that is maketh vs weary of these holy exercises before they be halfe ended. Or if none of these, yet it will neuer faile to distract our mindes with worldly cogitations & wandring thoughts, so as we cannot intend these religious duties, but performe them with the lips, eares, and outward man, but not with the heart; in shew and ceremony, but not in spirit and truth. And thus the flesh like Sodar waiteth vpon vs that it may betray vs; it goeth with vs into Gods market, that it may hinder vs from buying any spirituall merchandize; it thrusteth in with vs into Gods armory, when as we go to furnish our selues with spirituall weapons, that it may make vs neglect them and leaue them behind vs, or else to weaken vs that we cannot carry them with vs; it will like Husbai forge kindnesse vnto vs, and by no perswasion will stay behind vs, but it is to this end that by cunning policy it may frustrate our enterprises, & so betray vs into the hands of our enemies. For the defeating of which policy our best course is, to leaue behind our chiefe corruptions by renewing of our repentance, before we come to performe these holy exercises, and keepe vnder those which we carry with vs, watching ouer them with all diligence, that they doe not distract nor hinder vs. To which end we must come vnto these holy duties with due preparation, and being come wee must meditate on Gods glorious presence before whom we stand, we must with all diligence looke to our hearts, because the Lord chiefly requireth them in all duties of his seruice; wee must thinke of the excellency, waight and fruit of these Religious exercises, that our hearts being inflamed with the loue of them, we may performe them with all cheerefulnesse and delight. And finally, wee must continually craue the assistance of Gods gracious Spirit, that thereby wee may be in some good measure enabled to performe them so, as that they may be acceptable to God, and profitable for our owne saluation.

§. Sect. 2. How the Flesh corrupteth & poysoneth our best duties.

Thus also when we haue in the regenerate part an earnest desire to embrace vertue, and to be inriched with sauing graces, like a cunning Sorceresse it laboureth to infect them with the poyson of corruption, and like a subtile Merchant it sophisticates these pure wares, and intermingleth with them the base refuse of sinfull vices, that they with the other may become vendible. Thus if wee be deuout and earnest in Religion, it seeketh to taint vs with wil-worship and superstition; if wee excell in knowledge, it labourgth to puffe vs vp with selfe-conceit, to contemne plaine truth, and curiously to affect nice and vnprofitable speculations, and to despise others in comparison of our selues whom wee thinke doe come short of our measure. With our faith it intermingleth presumption and carnall security, with our loue, hatred, iealousie, with our zeale, rashnesse and corrupt anger; anger, with out humility, boldnesse, with our courage audaciousnesse, with our constancy, pertinacy and obstinate inflexiblenesse; and finally with all our graces and excellent vertues, pride and vaine glory, whereby we ouer-weene them, or arrogate the praise of them, or magnifie our selues before others who haue not attained to our pitch and proportion. And thus this cunning Coyner embaseth the pure metall of grace and vertue, by mixing with it the Copper, or rather drosse of carnall corruption; leauing notwithstanding vpon it vertues stampe and superscription, that so it may goe for current with vs, and by mingling these poysons with our wholesome food, doth make it become vnto vs mortall and pernicious. For preuenting of which deceit we are often to examine our vertues, and to try if they be not tainted and infected with the contagion of the next extremes; let vs often bring them to the touch stone of Gods Truth, which is onely sufficient to make vs discerne the differences betweene the pure gold of Gods graces, and the base mettals of our owne corruptions; and let vs continually desire the helpe of Gods holy Spirit, which is that heauenly fire, that can pure and seuer the solid substance from the drosse, purifying the one, and consuming the other, and the pure gold from other base mettals of any kind.

§. Sect. 3. How the Flesh perswadeth vs to abate of our zeale, and to intermit vertuous actions for a while.

The third and last kind of policies which the flesh vseth are those, whereby it seeketh to alienate our hearts and affections from imbracing and practising of holy vertues and Christian actions. And first of all, if it cannot perswade vs wholy to forsake them, and at once to desist from the exercise of them, then it will allure vs to abate our feruour and zeale in piety, to intermit all vertuous actions for a little while, and not to fall altogether, but in some degree from our former liuely, either pretending that if we goe more slowly, we shall goe more surely, or that we are more zealous than needs, seeing with more leisure and easinesse in our course we may attaine vnto happinesse; or else though vpon some occasions wee slaken our pace in the wayes of godlinesse for a while, we may hereafter make more speed and easily recouer and redeeme our lost time, by our future diligence. With which deceit that we may not be ouertaken, let vs consider that there is no standing still in the Christian course, seeing he who doth not daily goe forward in it will questionlesse goe backward; and what then can become of them who are in the way of declination and backsliding? That I forget not the way to our spirituall enemies for euer, and be perswaded to lay aside our Christian armour, they will giue vnto vs deadly wounds before we shall be able to put it on againe, and that wee may much more easily keepe them out of the gates of our City, than driue them backe when they are once entred. Let vs know that if we slacken our hold, wee shall hardly recouer it in our fall; and that we may be as desperately endangered by a lingring consumption of grace and goodnesse, as by a feuer of Apostasie. Let vs remember that if our heate come once to luke-warmenesse, it will within a while turne to key-coldnesse; and that if the Deuill & our owne corruption can but a little while distacquaint our hearts from God and his wayes, they will not leaue till they haue made them meere strangers, if they haue a little loosened them from him they will with much more ease pul them quite asunder. And therefore let vs carefully watch ouer our selues, that there be no declination in grace nor the least backsliding from our former sincerity, but forgetting that which is behind, let vs reach vnto those things which are before, and presse hard towards the marke, for the price of the high calling of God in Christ Iesus. For if we slacken our pace in the waies of godlinesse, and sit still, though but a little while, we shall grow so stiffe and sore, that wee shall haue little desire to goe on in our journey. And by our negligence we shall loose our sweet communion with God, the light of his countenance, the sense of his loue, and ioy and comfort of his Spirit, which are our chiefe encouragements that make vs goe on in the way of godlinesse. Of the liuely feeling whereof when wee are depriued, we shall either distonsolately sit downe and loose our Crowne, or faintly proceed with much weakenesse and wearinesse. Phil. 3. 13, 14.

§. Sect. 4. How the flesh perswadeth vs to rest in that which we haue already done or suffered.

Another deceipt like vnto this, whereby the flesh allureth vs to desist from vertuous actions, is to make vs to rest in that which wee haue already either done or suffered, as being abundantly sufficient for our saluation. Which that wee may defeate, let vs consider, that though it were true, yet it is of no force to make vs leaue off or intermit our vertuous actions. For what ingratitude and grosse negligence were this in a seruant, who hauing done a little worke would loyter and surcease his paines, because hee is assured that his Lord is so bountifull, that he would not hold backe any part of his wages? And how much more in vs seeing the riches of our reward is so inestimable and permanent, that wee haue just cause to thinke our whole life, which is but short and momentanie to bee too too little (though wee could arriue to the age of Methuselah) if it were soly imployed in glorifying our gracious God by our faithfull seruice, which if wee doe not, but content our selues onely with that which standeth vpon the necessitie of our saluation we plainely shew, that all we haue done is but false and counterfeit obedience, seeing it did spring and flow only from foolish selfe-loue, and not from the sincere sincere loue of God. Foolish I say because it shall surely bee frustrate of its end, or though it should not, yet of that measure of glory which those who are wise will labour after: for according to that measure of grace we haue receiued, and obedience which we haue performed, we shall haue our portion and proportion in that heauenly happinesse. But bee it that thou art not so ambitious of blessednesse, but that the least part and lowest place will well content thee, consider in the next place, that in this life wee are neuer so rich in grace & the fruits of obedience, that wee may now giue ouer and spend vpon the stocke, vnlesse wee meane to be bankcrupts in goodnesse: for if there bee not a growth there will bee a decrease, if not a progresse, then a regresse in the wayes of godlinesse, and when wee neglect the seruice of God, then doe wee begin to serue the Diuell, the world and our owne flesh. Besides, true sauing grace is not like the Moone sometime in the full and sometime in the vaine, but like the light of the morning which still increaseth till it be perfect day; It is alwayes in the growth vntill wee come vnto a perfect age in Christ, which perfection we shall not attaine vnto till wee haue layed downe these bodies of flesh. And that which a while groweth and then standeth at a stay, was but a false conception, and like an Embrio in the wombe, which though it may delude a woman with a deceiuing hope, yet this ioy will bring bitter sorrow without all comfort in the end. Againe consider, that all Gods promises are made to those alone who continue constant in their faith and obedience to the end. Hee that indureth to the end shall be saued; and be faithfull vnto the death and I will giue thee the crowne of life; and to him that ouercommeth I will grant to sit with mee in my throne &c. And as the tree falleth so shall it lye. And therefore our former graces and good workes should not make vs slothfull & liuggish for the time to come, but much more painefull and diligent in imbracing and practising them, seeing if we now desist we shall surely loose all our former labour. Finally what souldiour will thus foolishly reason; I haue fought long and indured many brunts in the battell, and now I will take my ease, because I haue almost obtained the victory? What traueller will sit downe in the middest of his iourney, because hee hath gone farre and taken much paines, seeing all his labour is lost if he come not to the end? And who running in a race will giue ouer before he come to the goale, excusing himselfe that hee hath runne well in the beginning, because hee is sure to loose the garland with all his former paines? Yea rather because they haue begunne wel they wil continue till by their constant labours they haue obtained their reward. And therefore let vs not bee lesse wise or industrious for the assured gayning of heauenly and euerlasting happinesse, than wee are for the momentany and vncertaine possession of earthly trifles; but after wee haue done much good, let vs still hold on to doe more, for blessed is the seruant (not who hath done well in former time but) who when his master commeth shall be found so doing. Mat.24.46.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of certaine aduantages which the flesh hath against vs in the spirituall Conflict.

HAuing discouered the dangerousnesse of this enemie the flesh in its owne nature, it now followeth according to our order propounded, that wee further consider that this perill is much intended and increased in respect of diuers aduantages which it hath against vs in the spirituall Conflict. And these are principally two; the first is, that this enemy is not farre off, whereby wee might haue leysure and opportunitie of fitting and preparing our selues against the Conflict, before he could approach vnto vs, but dwelleth with vs, yea in vs. Hee is not onely neere at hand, and (as it were) in the Suburbs, close vnto the gate of our soules, but lodgeth euen within the walles of the Citie, not in the out-parts and backelanes, but keepeth strong possession in the chiefe sorts and castles of our minds and wils, our hearts and affections, where our chiefe strength and treasure lyeth. And (as one saith) wee beare our foare with vs, and carry our enemy about vs whither so euer wee go. The which danger is much aggrauated in that he doth not professe his enmity, but is in outward shew a familiar friend who eateth, drinketh and sleepeth with vs; it maketh shew of loue, but indeede mortally hateth vs, it is like an helper, but is in truth our greatest Aduersarie, and like Sanballat and Tobiah it offereth his paines in building the wals of our Citie, which may repulse forraigne forces, when as it intendeth nothing but our ruine and to betray vs into the power of outward enemies. For no sooner doth Sathan and the world besiege and assault vs with their temptations, but presently it ioyneth with them, and being acquainted with all our counsailes, it reuealeth vnto them our secrets, euen our hidden thoughts and vnknowne lusts, and like a wicked Dalilah, hauing by treacherous flattery vndermined vs, it discouereth to these cursed Philistims where our chiefe strength lyeth. Yea it secretly openeth the gates of our hearts, and not onely letteth

1. Sect.1. That this enemy the flesh hath great aduantages against vs, because it dwelleth within vs.

Psa.4.18.

Phil.1.6.

Mat.24.13.

Apoc.2.10. & 3.11. Iosh.11.3.

Ipse gestamus laqueum nostrum, ubicunq; circumferimus inimicum Bernard. de Quadrages. serm.3.

in all their forces, but as soone as they are entred, ioyneth with them, and laying violent hands on the spirituall man, it laboureth all it may to captiuate and destroy him. And therefore the wilie red Dragon neuer maketh warre against vs, vntill he bee assured first of these inbred trayters and carnall aydes; And as one saith, it is his policie to binde vs alwayes with our owne girdle, and to ouercome and beate vs with our owne staffe. Yea not onely doth the flesh dwell and cohabite with vs, but it also adhereth and inseparably cleaueth vnto vs, as being a part, and the greater part of our selues. Whereby the dangerousnesse of this enemy appeareth, for the warre which it maketh against the new and spirituall man, is not onely ciuill and domesticall (which notwithstanding is much more perilous and terrible than that which is forraine) but without any metaphor, properly, and truely intestine, and (as it were) in our own bowels. Besides, this combate betweene them is fought in a place of great disaduantage, namely this world where the worser part hath many friends and strong aydes, euen Millions of wicked men and whole legions of Diuels, and contrariwise the better part hath few friends and many enemies. Graue surely (saith one) is the danger, and the conflict sore and grieuous against an enemie so domesticke, especially seeing wee are strangers and see a Citizen; hee inhabiteth his owne country, and we here are exiles and strangers. Yea in truth this warre is more intestine than that which was betweene Rebecca her twins. For not onely doth here one person fight against another, nor (as some would haue it) the body against the soule of the same man, nor yet one faculty alone against another of a different nature, the sensitiue against the reasonable, and the will and affections against the iudgement and conscience; but also the selfe same faculties against themselues, reason against reason, will against will, the same affection against the same, loue against loue, feare against feare, and hope against hope. In which respect this fight with our flesh is much more dangerous than our fight with Sathan himselfe; for though hee bee sometime yea often neere vs, yet not alwayes, and when he is neerest hee is not alike neere as our owne flesh, which adhereth to euery part and faculty of body and soule. Though he casteth into our hearts and minds the fiery darts of his temptations, yet if wee catch them vpon, and quench them with the shield of faith they will not hurt vs. Yea though he buckle and close with vs, yet if the Spirit of God dwelling in vs resist, this foule spirit, he will flie away as left for a season, and we shall be rid of his noysome company: but our flesh and carnall corruptions inseparably cleaue vnto vs, and though they be neuer so often ouercome, by fasting, prayer, watchings and such like spirituall exercises, yet as long as we liue, we cannot be quite rid of them, nor wholy subdue them, and annihilate their strength, but after they seeme to bee withered they will againe flourish, after they are weakened they will recouer strength, after they seeme to languish with age, they will regaine their youthfull vigour; yea when in outward shew they appeare mortified and quite dead, they will againe reuiue and standing stoutly in their strength they will re-enforce the fight against vs.

Ille est qui manus nostras proprio cingulo alligat, & baculo nostro nos cedit. Bernard. ibid.

Grande quidem periculum est & grauis luctta aduersus domesticum hostem &c. Bernard. de Quadri. serm. 5.

Luk. 4. 13.

Sect. 2. That the dangerousnesse of this enemie is much increased by reason of this cohabitation.

From whence it may plainely appeare, how exceeding dangerous the flesh with the lusts thereof are vnto vs, seeing they are enemies not onely strong and subtile, but alwayes hard at hand, not onely besieging and beletting vs, but euen dwelling with and in vs. Whereby they haue no small aduantage against vs, for neuer leauing but adhering and cleauing vnto vs in all places and at all times, they are ready to watch all occasions and to take all opportunities of doing vs mischiefe, laying trappes and snares for vs in all our enterprises. For doe we vndertake the performance of holy & religious duties? Why then they dogge and follow vs to the exercises, and distract vs with worldly cogitations and wandring thoughts, and oppresse our minds with dulnesse, drowsinesse and carnall wearinesse. Are wee imployed in the duties of our callings? They will make vs negligent and lazie, and carry vs away with carnall pleasures, or so wholy and earnestly intent on them, that we shall spare no time for Gods seruice nor for the inriching of our soules with spirituall treasures. Doe we eate and drinke to relieue and sustaine our bodies? They are ready to make our tables snares, turning sufficiencie into superfluitie, and necessary foode into excesse and belly-cheare, surfetting and drunkennesse, whereby the soule and spirits are so oppressed, that they are vtterly vnfit for any Christian duties. Doe we intend to refresh our selues with honest recreations? They do attend and waite on vs, mouing vs to consume a great part of our time in them, which should be allotted to better exercises, and euen to spend our strength and spirits in the immoderate vse of them, wherby in stead of being refreshed and cheared, wee are disabled and made vtterly vnfit for the duties of Christianitie and of our callings, and are so wholy taken vp in the meanes, that wee neglect the maine ends for which wee vse them. Yea doe wee after our labours betake our selues to our rest? When wee locke our chamber doores, wee cannot shut out these enemies, but whether wee will or no, they will be our bed-fellowes, and are alwayes ready at our lying downe to to distract vs from any good meditations or serious examination of what wee haue done or omitted the day past, to fill our minds with vaine dreames and wicked imaginations, and to oppresse nature, in stead of refreshing it, whilest wee giue our selues to too much drowsinesse. And thus these cowards sticke not to strike vs euen when we are downe, and if wee stand vpon our watch and guard when wee are waking, to giue vs deadly wounds when wee are asleepe, neuer suspecting any danger.

§. Sect. 3. The meanes of preuenting the former danger, is to stand vpon our guard and to pray the Lord to watch ouer vs.

Now if wee would bee secured against that dangerous aduantage which the flesh hath against vs, the best way is, not to bee secure, but continually to stand vpon our guard, and as the Apostle exhorteth Timothy, to watch in all things, that wee bee not circumuented by this enemy, who is alwayes present with vs to take all opportunities of working our destruction. For who walking among snares or scorpions would not carefully looke to euery step? What man carrying a serpent in his bosome will not vse his best heedfulnesse to preserue himselfe from stinging? Who being among the thickest of knowne theeues, will not looke to his purse, and haue alwayes an eye to his choysest iewels, that he be not robbed by them? What Citizens hauing their mighty and malicious enemies, not onely besieging them in the suburbs, but euen entred into the Citie, and alwayes ready in armes to surprize them, will lye snorting in securitie and not carefully stand vpon their watch and guard? Yea, who hauing a cruell and malicious enemy lodging in his owne heart, and alwayes ready to pry into all his thoughts, words, and actions that he may take all opportunities to circumuent and hurt him, would not be moued hereby to hearken vnto the Wise mans counsel, and keepe his heart with all diligence, that so hee might defeate this enemy, and bee preserued from euill in the middest of these dangers? And yet this is not inough if wee goe no further; for wee must not onely watch, but pray also, if wee would bee freed from these tentations. Neither is our care and prouidence sufficient to keepe vs in the middest of these dangers, seeing if wee sometime bee awake, wee bee at other times asleepe; if now wee keepe a narrow watch, soone after we will be secure and retchlesse, and therefore wee must pray the keeper of Israel; who neither slumbreth nor sleepeth, to watch ouer vs and to preserue vs from these perilous and pestilent enemies, and of him wee must beg with Dauid, not onely that hee will set a watch before our mouthes and keepe the doore of our lips, but also ouer our works and wayes, yea euen the secret thoughts of our hearts, that they may not bee tainted and corrupted, subdued and led captiue vnto sinne by this sinnefull flesh, which adhereth vnto vs and dwelleth in vs.

1 Thes. 5. 6.

Psal. 4. 23.

Psal. 121. 4.

Psal. 141. 3.

§. Sect. 4. The second aduantage which the flesh hath is that it is indefatigable and neuer wearied.

The second aduantage which the flesh hath against vs, is that whereas we are faint and soone wearied in this spirituall conflict, the flesh vsing herein a naturall motion, is altogether indefatigable and neuer wearied; whereof it is that it is so impudently importunate, that though it hath many repulses yet it will take no denial, though in the conflict it bee often beaten backe and put to flight; yet it will neuer quite leaue the field; but vnite its scattered forces, and receiuing new aydes and encouragements from the Diuel and the World, it will afresh assault vs and renew the fight; herein resembling an hunger-starued dogge who will by no meanes leaue the house where he hath often beene relieued, but no sooner is beaten out of one doore, than he re-entreth into another. So one saith, that the flesh rageth with furious strength, and neuer resteth from the warre; the successe whereof is very doubtfull, for sometime the flesh is subdued by the spirit, and sometime against the spirit vnwillingly followeth the flesh; and although it desireth that which is better, yet it doth that which it hateth, &c. For the flesh is vsed by no meanes, it is broken and weakened with no labours, nor yet bowed or softned with any length of time; but alwayes with blind eyes hasteneth against our liues and (like him possessed with the legion) it lusteth to bee on the steepe mountaines and craggy rockes; and if sometime it bee forced for a while to giue place to the feare of God, painefull labours, and diuine oracles, yet againe like a plant bended downe by the hands of the gardiner, it returneth to its peruerse sauagenesse. Yea oftentimes the more these fleshly lusts are resisted, the more enraged and violent for the time they grow, and the meanes and medicines which God hath appointed to cure them make the disease but the more desperate. An example whereof wee haue in those heathen Princes of which the Psalmist speaketh, who when Christ by his word and spirit would raigne ouer them, vnite all their forces and rebell against him saying, let vs breake his bonds in sunder, and cast away his cords from vs. So the Apostle confesseth, that the more he charged the Law vpon his sinnefull lusts, the more they rebelled, and tooke occasion by the Commandement to worke in him all manner of concupiscence. Wherein these lawlesse lusts may be fitly likned vnto lime which is kindled and inflamed by water, wherewith all other fires are quenched, and do resemble their Lord and leader the Diuel, who the more hee is crossed of his ends, the more he rageth; and are fitly by the Prophet compared to a raging Sea, which the more the tide and current is crossed and opposed by the winde, the more tempestuous it waxeth, Nazianzen. de anima sua calamitate. pag. 934.

Psal. 2. 3.

Rom. 7. 8.

1. Pet. 5. 8. 9.

Esa. 57. 20.

waxeth, swallowing and deuouring all that is in the way, with his loftie waues and surging billowes.

§. Sect. 5. Of the meanes to frustrate the former aduantages.

Now if wee would not haue these aduantages which the flesh hath against vs pernicious to our soules, let vs labour that as he is neuer weary in fighting against vs, so we also may not be weary and faint in this conflict; but let vs with vndaunted courage, not only sustaine the assaults of this enemy, but also prouoke and set vpon him with all his sinfull lusts, that wee may mortifie and subdue them, though wee cannot wholy expell them and driue them out. For if our sinfull flesh be neuer weary in running such courses as will bring vs to destruction, let vs bee neuer weary in stopping and opposing it, and contrariwise in running the Christian race which will bring vs to saluation. If it be neuer weary of tripping at our heeles, that wee may fall, and in clinging vnto vs as a heauy burthen, that it may slacken our pace, stay vs in our course, and so make vs loose our crowne; let vs neuer be weary in looking warily to our footing that we may not slip nor slide, or being fallen that wee may speedily rise againe by vnfained repentance, nor yet let vs thinke any paines too much that wee may shake off this weight of corruption, and this sinne that doth so easily beset vs, that wee may runne with patience the race that is set before vs. Heb.12.1. To which end let vs first consider, that if we will take this paines, wee shall in the end be assured of victory; the which may well put courage into vs, and make vs bold out in this conflict, for if the flesh vs not wearied in this fight after many wounds and foyles, though in the end it bee sure of a shamefull ouerthrow, much lesse let vs faint who are assured in the end to obtaine a ioyfull victory. 2. Cor.1.1.58. Secondly, let vs meditate on the riches of the crowne, and of the glorioulnesse of the tryumph, which wee shall enioy after wee haue suffered a little while the paines of this spirituall warfare; and when we are weary in running the Christian race, let vs comfort and refresh our selues by hauing continually in our eye the goale and garland, imitating and looking vnto Iesus the author and finisher of our Faith, who for the ioy that was set before him despised all the scorne and trouble which hee found in the way. Heb.12.2. And finally let vs being weake and faint in our selues, pray continually vnto God for the assistance of his holy Spirit to strengthen vs in this conflict, and to renew and repaire our wearied, fainting and decayed graces, that so receiuing new life, vigour and strength from him, we may thereby be enabled to hold out vnto the end; let vs when wee are tyred craue this holy annoynting, which will so supple and soften our stiffe ioynts and weary limmes, that wee shall bee able to continue in the Christian race, till being come to the goale wee shall obtaine the garland. Neither let this discourage vs, that the more sharply wee deale with the flesh, the more it is inraged; for it is but like the fury of an enemy, who hath receiued a mortall wound, which if for the present it bee resisted, the blaze of the choller quickly goeth out, and fainting in his strength hee will fall at our feet. It is but like the reluctation and resistance of a base minded slaue, who by a few and small strips, is so inraged that hee is ready to catch his master by the throate; but if he be throughly hampred and soundly beaten, hee will fall downe at his feete and beare what stripes he pleaseth to giue him without resistance. And therefore let vs make this vse of the rage of the flesh, to be moued thereby to vnite our forces and redouble our blowes, and then though it make neuer so many gallant brauadoes, it will quickly yeeld and wee shall be sure of an happy victory.

The end of the first Booke.

THE CHRISTIAN WARFARE.

The fourth Part.

INTREATING OF THE CONFLICT IT SELFE, BETWEENE THE FLESH and the Spirit, and of the meanes whereby wee may get the victorie.

The second Booke.

Chap. I.

That there is a combate in euery true Christian betweene the Flesh and the Spirit.

NOw hauing shewed the nature of our enemie, how dangerous hee is, and how wee may bee armed and prepared to withstand his assaults and obtaine the victory: we are to intreate of the combate and conflict it selfe. And first we will shew, that there is in the faithfull such a combate and conflict indeede and truth, although worldly and carnall men who neuer found it in themselues are ready to think it to be but a meere conceit. The which will appeare by plaine testimonies of Scripture, for the Apostle telleth vs, that the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, and that these are contrary the one to the other so that wee cannot doe the things we would. Where by flesh and spirit (as I haue proued) we cannot vnderstand the body and soule, but the part regenerate and vnregenerate, the corruption of nature and the qualitie of holinesse in euery faculty and power of them both. So in his owne example he sheweth the practicke and experience of this truth in the seuenth chapter of the Romanes, for he professeth that he could not doe the good he would, nor leaue vndone the euill hee would not, that hee was delighted in the law of God in the inner man, but at the same time found another law in his members rebelling and making warre against the law of his minde, and bringing him into captiuitie to the law of sinne which was in his members; and plainely saith that when he was thus led captiue vnto sinne, it was no more he that did it, but the sinne, that is, the sinnefull corruption that dwelled in him.

Now that the Apostle did not speake this of himselfe as he was vnregenerate, as some affirme, not as hee was vnder the law, as others would haue it, in his state of humiliation and preparation to his conuersion, and so consequently not of the conflict betweene the flesh and the spirit, but betweene the conscience and the corrupt will: it may easily appeare by the Scripture it selfe. For the Apostle doth not write in the preter-perfect-tense, what hee had beene in time past, but in the present-tense, as his state was when he wrote this Epistle. And besides, the things which hee speaketh of himselfe doe plainely euince this, which cannot be truely attributed to a man vnregenerate, or vnder the law, and onely in his preparation to his regeneration; but are proper vnto them who are conuerted and in part sanctified. For first hee alloweth not the euill hee doth, and consenteth vnto the law that it was good, and therefore his conscience and iudgement were in part inlightened and rectified, hee willeth the good hee did not, and the euill which hee did, that hee willeth, and therefore his will was in part regenerate; he beareth the euill he doth, and delighteth in the law of God after the Sect. 1. Testimonies of Scripture proue that there is this conflict in euery man that is regenerate.

Gal. 5. 17.

Sect. 2. That the Apostle in the seuenth of the Romans speaketh of this conflict in himselfe as he was regenerate. Arminius in Rom. 7.

the inner man, and therefore his affections were in part sanctified, [illegible] which [illegible] in him, and there is a sore conflict betweene the law of his minde and of his members, which was nothing else but the combate betweene the flesh and the spirit, and therefore in respect of his whole man he was in part regenerate. Finally hee desireth earnestly to bee deliuered from the bondage of corruption, and professeth, that with his minde hee serued the law of God, though his flesh serued the law of sinne, and therefore he was not the slaue of sinne and Sathan, as all are who are vnregenerate and vnder the law; but the seruant of God, and a subiect of the Kingdome of Iesus Christ. And thus Austine, vpon his second and sounder thoughes, reuoking his former errour, expoundeth this place; I thought (saith hee) that these things (to wit) I am carnall, sold vnder sinne, and led captiue vnto the lawe of sinne by the law of my members, could not bee truely spoken of any, but of such as are so inthralled of their carnall concupiscence, that they did whatsoeuer it compelled them, which to conceiue of the Apostle were meere madnesse seeing in many of the Saints, the spirit so lusteth against the flesh, that it cannot thus preuaile. But afterwards I gaue way to others of better iudgement, or rather to the truth it selfe, plainly perceiuing in these words of the Apostle the groaning and complaint of the Saints striuing against their carnall concupiscence, &c. whereof it came to passe that I vnderstood this place as it was vnderstood by Hilarie, Gregory, Ambrose, and the rest of the holy and famous Doctors of the Church, who doe all thinke that the Apostle did conteinually fight against his carnal concupiscence, which he had in him though he desired to bee freed from it, and that in these words hee professeth this his conflict. And a little after; neither can well any mans spirit lust against his flesh, vnlesse the spirit of Christ dwelled in him. So Gregory Nazianzen acknowledgeth and deploreth this conflict which hee felt in himselfe betweene the flesh and the spirit. Neither am I (saith hee) wholy minde or spirit, that is, pure nature, nor on the other side wholy flesh, that is, nature corrupted, but composed of both, I am an other thing and yet both of them. Whereof it is, that I continually suffer perpetuall tumults of warre, the flesh and the spirit encamping against one another. I am the image of God, and am drawne into vice, though I struggle and striue against it, the worse part wickedly conflicting against the better; so as not without great labour and daily wrastling, the hand and helpe of God assisting mee, I flee and resist vice. And these two conflicting the one with the other, the eye of God beholding them from Heauen hath ayded the spirit, subdued the tumult and rage of the troublesome flesh, and stilled the swelling waues of all perturbations. And so also the flesh rageth with furious strength, and neuer resteth from making cruell warre; and though there may be sometime an intermission, yet there is neuer a dismission from the fight.

Ego enim putabam dici ista non posse, nisi de eo, quee ita haberet carnis concupiscentia subiugatot, vt facerent quicquid illa compelleret. Augustin. contra Iulian Pelagian lib. 6. cap. 11. Col. 1135. T. 7. Vide etiam retract. lib. 1. cap. 23. & lib. 2. cap. 1. Tom. 1.

Greg. Nazian. de anima sua calamitat. pag. 93. 934.

And these testimonies out of the Scriptures and Fathers may bee sufficient to conuince the carnall, and vnregenerate, who hauing no feeling of this conflict in themselues, because they are wholy flesh, doe imagine that it is not in any other. For as for those who are in part regenerate, and yet haue the old man and the reliques of sinfull corruption dwelling and remaining in them; they will easily acknowledge this truth, euen out of their owne feeling and experience, though no other testimony or reason could bee alleadged. Neither is it possible that this mortall combate should be fought in any, but that they must easily feele the terrible encounters and cruell blowes giuen on either side. Not betweene diuers faculties, as the conscience and the will, the minde and iudgement against the affections and the sensuall faculties (the which is also in the vnregenerate;) but the selfe-same faculties, as they are regenerate, fighting against themselues as they are vnregenerate; as errour against truth, and truth against errour in the same mind and vnderstanding, faith against doubting, and doubting against faith in the same heart; willing against nilling, and nilling against willing, about the chusing and refusing of good and euill in the same will; the loue of God conflicting and combating with the loue of the world, the feare of God with the feare of men, affiance in God with diffidence in him, and confidence in the creatures; hope of heauenly happinesse, with hope of enioying earthly vanities, as also with presumption and despaire; and contrariwise, obedience against disobedience and rebellion in the same desires and actions; as we shall more fully and plainly shew in the following discourse. All which doth plainely proue that their whole man is diuided, and part-takings in all their faculties and powers of body and minde, the one adhering and cleauing to God, the other drawing to Sathan and the world, the which is more feelingly discerned and experimentally felt by euery true Christian, than it can bee demonstrated and euidenced by any mans writing.

§. Sect. 3. That all the regenerate haue feeling and experience of this conflict.

Finally the contrary effects which euery Christian may obserue in himselfe, doe sufficiently argue and demonstrate, that there are contrary causes in him from which they proceede, and (as it were) many souldiers of contrary factions, led vnder their Captaines the flesh and spirit, which like mortall enemies enemies continually make warre the one against the other. For who findeth not, after his regeneration and conuersion, himselfe to be as a Kingdome diuided, and that as in his spirituall and renewed part, he hath a great desire to serue his Lord and Redeemer, and taketh delight in his Lawes, preferring them with Dauid before all manner of riches; so in his fleshly part and the old man that he is inclinable vnto the seruice of sinne and Sathan for the base hire of worldly vanities? that as in the one hee affecteth and loueth Piety and Purity, Righteousnesse, Mercy and Holinesse of conuersation; so in the other he is transported with selfe-loue, and is much addicted to the pleasures of sin? As in the one he beleeueth God and the truth of his promises and threatnings, trusteth in his word, power and prouidence, loueth & feareth him aboue all things; so in the other hee is subject to doubting and infidelity, to distrust in God and affiance in the creatures, to the loue of earthly things and the immoderate feare of man. Finally, as in the one he aspireth vnto immortality and euerlasting happinesse, and hauing his conuersation in Heauen, mindeth not earthly things, but chiefly seeketh after those things which are aboue; so in the other he lyeth grouelling on the earth, walloweth himselfe in the puddle of sensuall pleasures, and vnlawfull lusts, meditateth and thinketh onely on momentany riches and mutable preferments, or the meanes whereby he may compasse them, neuer seeing, seeking nor regarding, that heauenly happinesse and waight of eternall glory prepared for the faithfull. And from this contrariety in affection and disposition, the Christian may discerne the like contrariety in all his actions which arise and spring from them. For one while the Spirit lifteth him aloft in heauenly meditations, and another while the flesh pulleth downe his thoughts, and fixeth them vpon earthly vanities; now with posting speed hee runneth in the wayes of God, and sayleth with full sayles, hauing the wind and tide to helpe him forward; and soone after the flesh diuerteth him into the by-paths of sin, or maketh him sit still, or to returne into his old courses, or tripping at his heeles causeth him to fall, or so fettereth his feet and presseth him downe, like a heauy burthen, that (like them troubled with the Ephialtes or the night Mare) though he hath a great desire to run a pace, yet can he scarce stirre, but he runneth, as it were, vp a steepe Hill, and sayles against the wind and tide. Finally now he loueth God and is rauished with delight when hee enjoyeth his presence in his Courts, and feeleth sweet communion and fellowship with him to his inestimable joy and comfort, and this maketh him to contemne the World, and to take all his pleasure in spirituall and heauenly things: and by and by the World catcheth him in her bird-lime of carnall delights and fetereth him in her golden chaines, so as hee is made negligent in Gods seruice, and therefore either omitteth it altogether, or else performeth it with drowsie dulnesse, senselesse deadnesse, and carnall wearinesse, whereof it is that he can take no manner of comfort and contentment in it. Yea, rather he seeth Gods angry countenance frowning vpon him in the abuse of his holy Ordinances, and being terrified therewith, hee goeth away discontented and dismayed.

§. Sect. 4. The contrarie effects which the Christian feeleth in himselfe, do proue plainely that this conflict is in them.

Psal.119.

Psal.5.9.

Phil.3.20.

And of these contrary effects and fruits of the Spirit in the same Christian the Apostle plainly speaketh, Gal.5.19. Now (saith hee) the workes of the flesh are manifest, which are these Adultery, Fornication, Vncleannesse, Lasciuiousnesse, Idolatry, Witchcraft, Hatred, Variance, Emulation, Wrath, Strife, Seditions, Heresies, Enuyings, Murthers, Drunkennes, Reuilings and such like. For the seeds of all these grieuous sins lie lurking in our corrupt flesh, and though they be so nipped and suppressed by the contrary motions of the spirit, that they can neuer come to full ripenesse, yet doe they often appeare to the best Christians in their first motions and suggestions. So contrariwise hee saith, that the fruit of the Spirit is loue, ioy, peace, long-suffering, gentlenesse, goodnesse, faith, meeknesse and temperance. To which purpose, Hierome saith, Whatsoeuer we speake, doe or thinke, is sowed in two grounds the flesh and the Spirit; if the things be good which issue from the mouth, hand and heart, they are sowne in spirit, and shall bring forth abundant fruit to eternall life; if they be euill they are taken from the field of the flesh, and will bring forth vnto vs the fruit of corruption.

Q. Sect.5. The point proued by Gal.5.19.

Verse 21.

Omne quod loquimur, agimus, cogitamus in duobus seminatur agris, carne & spiritu, &c. Hyeronym. in Gal.6.

Chap. II.

What the Conflict betweene the Flesh and the Spirit is, and what are the causes of it.

Q. Sect.1. The conflict betweene the flesh and the spirit described.

BY this it appeareth that there is a Combate in euery Christian betweene these epemies: now in the next place let vs consider what it is; and the causes of it. Where there needeth no curious definition, seeing the very name doth sufficiently expresse the nature of it; For it is nothing else but a continuall conflict betweene the vnregenerate part the flesh, with the lusts thereof, and the part regenerate, the spirit, with all the holy qualities, graces and motions thereof, by reason of their contrarietie in nature and conjunction in place, whereby they mutually lust and striue one against the other, the flesh willing and imbracing that euil which the spirit willeth and ha-hateth, and nilling and shunning that good which it willeth and affecteth, and contrariwise. For in this conflict they mutually assault one another with vnreconciliable enmity and immediate and vnplacable contrariety, so that as the one getteth, the other looseth, as the one gathereth strength, the other is weakened; and looke how much this preuayleth and triumpheth, so much his enemy and opposite is foyled and dejected. Like herein to a paire of scales, in which the rising of the one is alwayes joyned with the going downe of the other; or like the spleene in the body, the swelling whereof is joyned with the consumption of the other parts. Yea alike, nay, much more contrary than light and darknesse, heate and colde, the one whereof increaseth, as the other decreaseth.

2. Sect. 2. Of the first & chiefe cause of the conflict which is Gods will for the manifestation of his owne glory.

The causes of this Conflict are either efficient and more remote, or formall and essentiall; the latter is plainly expressed, the former implyed in the description of this conflict, namely, Gods will appointing this fight; and to this purpose, not perfecting our sanctification in this life, but in part regenerating, and in part leaving vs vnregenerate. Yea, but why did not the Lord, who through his infinite wisdome was able to haue re-created and renewed vs at once by his sole Word as he did first create and make vs, perfect this worke of regeneration, replenish vs with abundance of his Spirit and sanctifying graces, and quite abolish the flesh with the lusts thereof? I answere though there were no other reason but the good pleasure of his most wise will, it were sufficient to satisfie vs, for he best knoweth what to giue, and when to giue it, what measure of his grace is fittest for him to bestow, and the most seasonable time for vs to receiue it. But yet diuers reasons may be yeelded, why the Lord suffereth the flesh and the sinfull lusts thereof, still in some measure and degree to remaine in vs, and to fight with and assault the spirituall part, all which may be reduced to two heads; first because this course is most profitable, and secondly most fitting and seasonable. It is most profitable both for the setting forth of Gods glory, and the aduancing and furthering of our own good. It doth more manifest and magnifie the glory of God, for the weaker we are in our regenerate part, and the stronger the flesh is with all other the enemies of our saluation, the more clearely his wisdome and power shineth and appeareth, which so strengtheneth this weake part, that it is able to stand in the day of battaile, yea, that it obtaineth a full and finall victory, and putteth all its mighty enemies to flight. Whereas if wee were perfectly regenerate and the flesh vtterly vanquished and abolished, it were no great wonder, that wee were not ouercome, if wee had no enemy or but a weake one to set vpon vs. And this moued the Lord to suffer the pricke in the flesh to molest the Apostle, and the messenger of Sathan to buffet him, notwithstanding hee so earnestly prayed to bee deliuered from them, that the all-sufficiency of his grace assisting him might appeare, and his power might be gloriously manifested in his weaknesse and infirmity. Secondly, God is more glorified, when as wee seeing the strength of our flesh and naturall corruptions, and our frailty and weaknesse, wants and many infirmities of our spirituall part, are moued hereby to attribute the whole glory & prayse of our saluation to the alone mercy of God, both in respect of the beginning, and perfecting thereof, and vtterly denying our selues and our owne righteousnesse, doe wholy rest and rely vpon the perfect and all-sufficient righteousnesse and obedience of his Sonne Iesus Christ: where as if there were in vs perfection in holinesse, we would hardly acknowledge the Lord to be all in all in the worke of our saluation, but would be ready to attribute something vnto our selues. Thirdly, the wisdome and power of God is more manifested and glorified, when as hee doth his great workes by contrary meanes and causes which in their owne nature would rather hinder them. And therefore he will haue vs blind, that wee may see, foolish that wee may become wise, poore that he may inrich vs, weake that we may be strong, imperfect in our grace, that wee may be endued with more perfection, and finally, will haue vs passe by the gates of Hell, that we may come to a greater measure of heauenly happinesse. It were not so much, if the Lord should perfectly sanctifie vs, and presently giue vs eternall glory; but to giue this blessednesse to vs who haue so many wants and corruptions, yea, to make our imperfections to serue as meanes for the increasing of our happinesse, this doth exceedingly magnifie his power and wisdome. Fourthly, we are hereby made more thankfull vnto the Lord, and more chearefull in singing to his prayse, when we are supported and saued notwithstanding our imperfections, than if he should indue vs at the first with all perfection. For the more sensible wee are of Gods benefits, the better wee esteeme them, and so consequently receiue them with greater thankfulnesse: but the more wee haue found the want of them, and how little wee haue deserued them, the more sensibly doe wee apprehend their excellency when wee enjoy them; the more wee haue groaned and laboured vnder the burthen of our infirmities and corruptions, the more wee rejoyce when wee are freed from them; and our restoring out of a state of imperfection vnto perfection, is much more acceptable, than if we had had alwayes beene preserued in it. Euen as it giues vs more contentment hauing beene poore to be made, than to be borne rich; to enjoy our liberty after thraldome, than if we had neuer beene imbondaged; and makes vs more thankfull to our benefactors, when as by them we haue beene adopted, than when we haue been borne to a goodly inheritance. And so in the like case we are more thankfull vnto God for freeing vs from our sinfull corruptions, by little and little, than if at the first he had made vs pure and perfect; and for giuing vs victory ouer the flesh after a painfull and doubtfull conflict, than if we had neuer bin assaulted, but had alwayes enjoyed a secure peace. And this wee may see in the example of the Apostle, who hauing through the violence of the flesh bin led captiue vnto sin, and thereby forced lamentably to cry out, O wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer mee from the body of this death? Doth presently in the sense of Gods mercy which had deliuered him, burst forth into thankfull prayses; I thanke God through Iesus Christ my Lord. Lastly, hereby wee more glorifie God when we are assured by our growth in sanctification, and in all sauing graces of the Spirit, by which we are inabled to resist the flesh and the lusts thereof, that they are the free gifts of God, and that he beginneth, continueth and increaseth them in vs, which if they were alwayes from the beginning perfect in vs, we would thinke them to be some naturall faculties and abilities, and not giuen vs of God. And these are the reasons which doe chiefly respect the glory of God.

2. Cor. 12. 9.

John 9. 41. 1. Cor. 3. 18. Apoc. 3. 18. 2. Cor. 12. 9.

Rom.7.24,25.

4. Sect.3. That this conflict is profitable for the faithfull, to traine them vp in humility.

Secondly, the Lord suffereth the flesh still to dwell in vs and daily to assault vs, because it is profitable for our owne good, and the furthering and assuring of our heauenly happinesse. First, because it is a notable meanes to traine vs vp in humility, which is a grace most acceptable vnto God, and to subdue our pride and all vain-glorious conceit, which aboue all other vices is most odious and hatefull, when as we see and consider what a miserable vastation and spoyle of all those graces and excellent endowments which we had by creation, sinne hath made in vs; how it hath poysoned, corrupted and disabled all the powers and faculties of our soules and bodies; how it hath made vs vnfit for any good thing, and prone vnto all euill; and that these staines and blots of sinfull corruption doe in a great part remayne in vs after our regeneration, so assaulting vs with all malice and fury, darkning our vnderstandings, wounding our consciences, perverting our wils, hardening our hearts, & corrupting & disordering all our affections, that were we not continually assisted and vpheld by the speciall grace of the Almighty God, wee should take and fall in the conflict, and be made an easie prey to our malicious enemies: this may well subdue our lofty and proud conceits, and make vs pull downe with shame our Peacocks plumes, when as wee looke to the foule feet of our filthy corruptions, see the ruines remayning of Gods goodly building, and how all our naturall forces do quite faile vs & forsake vs, when as we most relie on them; yea, when as we see euen after regeneration such reliques of corruption and rebellion remayning in vs, that did not the Lord continually send vnto vs fresh aydes of renued graces we were not able to stand nor maintaine the fight against our carnall corruptions. In consideration whereof we are justly moued to humble our selues and to giue all glory vnto God, who worketh in vs the will and the deed, and not onely beginneth, but continueth and perfecteth the worke of our saluation; and finally to acknowledge, that what grace or spirituall strength we haue more than others, we haue it from God and not from our selues, and therefore that wee haue no cause to boast of it seeing it is receiued, but must returne God the glory of his owne gifts. And thus doth the Lord in his infinite power and wisdome turne euill into good, and like the most skilfull Physitian doth make our sins (as it were the flesh of the Viper) a most wholesome preseruatiue and cordiall for the dispelling from our hearts more dangerous poysons.

1.Cor.4.7.

5. Sect.4. This conflict is effectuall to make vs deny our selues.

Secondly, whereas wee cannot be Christs Disciples vnlesse wee deny our selues, nor be partakers of his righteousnesse for our justification, vnlesse we renounce our owne; nothing can be more effectuall to this purpose, than the sight and sense of our owne imperfections and coruptions; for when we plainly discerne, that there is nothing in our selues to rest vpon for the satisfying of Gods Iustice, this will make vs to flee vnto Christ, to hunger and thirst after his perfect and all-sufficient righteousnesse, and to make vs wholy to relie vpon him for our justification and saluation. Which when we doe, we may be more secure and better assured of heauenly happinesse, than if wee were as perfect in our owne inherent righteousnesse, as our first Parents in the state of innocency, seeing they fell into sin and misery through the strength of Sathans temptations, but wee cannot; so long as we wholy rest vpon Christ, and are vpheld by his omnipotency. And as hereby our selues haue great assurance of our happy condition; so doe we more glorifie our Lord and Redeemer, seeing wee acknowledge the all-sufficiency of his grace, and yeeld vnto him the whole glory of our saluation.

6. Sect.5. By this conflict we are moued the more to hate sinne.

Thirdly, we are hereby moued to abhor sin which God so hateth, with greater detestation, when as by our owne experience wee find and feele the venome and poyson of it working in our selues, and to bewayle and for-forsake it with more earnest endeauour, when we discerne and see what miserable effects it produceth, and what bitter and cursed fruits it bringeth forth in vs. As namely that it hath corrupted our whole nature, disabled all our strength, defaced in vs Gods glorious image, incensed his wrath against vs, made vs subiect to the curse of the lawe, depriued vs of the glory of God, and made vs guiltie of eternall damnation. From all which miseries nothing could free vs, vnlesse the sonne of God had dyed for vs, and washed vs from the guilt & punishment of all our sinnes in his most precious blood. All which plainely discouereth the haynousnes and tyranny of sinne, and maketh vs thankfull vnto our Sauiour who hath freed vs from it.

Q. Sect. 6. We are moued hereby to flie vnto God by frequent and feruent prayers, Fourthly, by the sight and sense of these sinfull corruptions still dwelling in vs, we are occasioned to flee oftener vnto God by feruent prayers, acknowledging and bewailing them before the throne of grace, earnestly craving the remission of them, and the assistance of Gods grace and holy Spirit, whereby wee may bee inabled to mortifie our corruptions, and to flee all sinne for the time to come; and to returne vnto him prayse and thankesgiuing when we haue receiued these graces from him. Fiftly, whereas there is nothing more dangerous vnto vs than sloth and security, we haue through these corruptions dwelling in vs the benefit of spirituall exercise, whilest wee make warre against them, withstand their assaults, prepare our selues for the conflict, watch ouer our owne hearts that wee be not surprised at vnawares with their deceitfull policies, mortifie and subdue them with the Sword of the Spirit, exercise the spirituall graces receiued from God, and our selues in all holy duties which God requireth for the obtaining of victory; by which they are more and more confirmed and encreased. So also hereby we haue great cause to be more carefull and watchfull ouer our hearts and wayes, seeing we haue dwelling in vs a secret enemy who watcheth all opportunities to supplant and betray vs into the hands of Sathan and the World; the which should make vs worke out our saluation with feare and trembling; and whilest we stand to take heed of falling; this should cause vs to stand daily and hourely vpon our guard, and to keepe the the spirituall armour girded fast vpon vs as the Apostle exhorteth vs.

Phil. 2. 12. 1. Cor. 10. 12. Ephes. 6. 10.

Q. Sect. 7. It serueth to worke in vs patience and contentment. Lament. 3. 39.

Sixtly, it may serue to make vs goe on in our pilgrimage with contentment, and to beare all afflictions which are laid vpon vs with meeknesse and patience, not onely because we haue deserued them by this sin that dwelleth in vs, according to that in the Lamentations; Wherefore doth a liuing man complaine, seeing he suffereth for his sinnes? but also because wee know and haue experience that these corrections are necessary to bridle and mortifie the flesh with the lusts thereof, and serue as drawing salues to draw out the core of corruptions, as the launcher and searing Iron to helpe and heale our impostumations of sinne, as bitter potions to purge away our corrupt humours, and as salt to season vs, that wee may not be tainted and perish in our fleshly putrefaction; and to make vs more wise and wary, that wee may not nourish our enemy, but mortifie and crucifie it, seeing it is the chiefe author of all our calamities.

Q. Sect. 8. By this conflict our hearts are weaned from the World.

Seuenthly, it is profitable for the weaning of our hearts and affections from the World, and to make vs long after our heauenly happinesse, when as wee find our selues tyred and wearied in fighting, not onely with forraigne foes, but with these inteestine and secret Traytours in our owne bowels; whereas if hauing gotten full conquest wee should haue continuall peace and our victory crowned with earthly prosperity, we would neuer so much long after our heauenly happinesse. And this chiefly made the Apostle to long after his dissolution and to be with Christ, because he found himselfe so often foyled with this law of his members, and led away captiue by his sinfull flesh.

Phil. 1. 21. Rom. 7. 23.

Eighthly, as it causeth vs to long after the crowne of victory, so it will make it, when we shal obtain it, much more glorious; for the Lord will haue vs first to fight and ouercome our spirituall enemies, and then he will reward vs with the crowne of victory; first he will haue our spirituall graces exercised and manifested in the conflict, and then being approued he will giue vs a proportion of glory according to the proportion of our graces. So our Sauiour promiseth (not to the Souldiers which lie quietly in their Garrison, assaulted with no enemy) but to them who fighting ouercome, that they shall sit with him on his Throne, clothed with white rayment, and shall eate of the Tree of Life, which is in the middest of the Paradise of God. And this order Paul vseth in laying hold on these blessed hopes, first to fight the combate, and then to receiue the crowne. I haue (saith he) fought a good fight, I haue finished my course, I haue kept the faith; henceforth is laid vp for me a crowne of righteousnesse.

Apoc. 2. & 3.

2. Tim. 4. 8.

Q. Sect. 9. This conflict is suitable for the time and place wherein we liue.

Lastly, as it is profitable that these reliques of sin should remayne in vs, so also suitable and seasonable to the time and place wherein we liue. For it is appointed by God that wee should not in this life attaine vnto perfection, but that we should only labour after it, and attain vnto it in the life to come; that we should, whilest we be here, be in our nonage and come to our perfect age in Christ

Christ and our heauenly inheritance after wee are dissolued and be with Christ. This World is appointed for our painfull pilgrimage, wherein we must toile and trauell, indure many miseries and be indangered to the malice and furious assaults of our spirituall enemies; and it is not seasonable to expect our rest and joyes, vntill wee bee arriued safe in our owne Country. Finally, it is appointed of God to be the place of our Warfare, and therefore wee must not looke to haue our enemies quite expelled or vanquished, but here wee must fight daily and approue our faith and Christian valour to our chief Soueraigne; and then afterwards when by death we haue gotten a full and final conquest, we shall be crowned with the crowne of victory. Finally, it is not Gods pleasure that we should in this life attaine to our full stature and perfect measure of sanctification and holinesse, but that wee should bee still growing from one measure of grace to another, and by peece-meale consume the body of sin which hindreth our growth, vntill by death it be fully abolished.

Chap. III.

Of the formall and essentiall causes of this Conflict.

1. Sect. 1. That there was no conflict in vs in the time of innocencie.

HAue shewed the chiefe efficient causes of this conflict: let vs now consider of those causes which are formall and essential; and because contraries are best illustrated by their contraries, as heat by cold, darknes by light, and the miseries of a dangerous warre, by the blessings and benefits of an happy peace; let vs consider (that wee may reduce this discourse ad vnum, euen the first principles and grounds) how that there was a time, when this conflict and ciuill broyles were not to be found in the little World of Man. The which was two-fold, the one was that truly golden Age, in which man created according to Gods owne Image, liued in the state of innocency; when as there was a blessed peace and heauenly harmony betweene the body and the soule and all the faculties, powers and parts of them both. For the vnderstanding being inlightened from God with heauenly wisdome, did both know and obserue the Law of Nature written in the heart; the which serued as a just rule, whereby it was directed in the knowledge of good and euill, truth and falshood, right and wrong. Wherein the judgement being thoroughly informed, the mind gaue vnto the wil true euidence and information, concerning all things presented vnto it, the which it readily receiued, cheerefully imbracing what it approued, and refusing and auoyding what it disallowed. The affections also quietly and joyfully obeyed reason as their Lord and Soueraigne, like Souldiers following their Captaine, and as blind men doe their guides; and the body was both a fit & ready instrument vnto the soule for the executing of all good designes, and in all things like a faithfull seruant was ready at command. And thus whilest the vnderstanding and reason, placed as Gods Vice-roy in vs obeyed him as the supreame Soueraigne, the will was also ruled by reason, and the affections with all the parts of the body were subject vnto them both; and all conspiring and agreeing together made a sweet harmony, and like louing and wel-agreeing Subjects in a well ruled Common-wealth, they all stood firme in their vnited forces.

2. Sect. 2. How the causes and occasions of this conflict were begun in vs.

But when Satan the arch-enemy of mankind, and chiefe authour of all discord and dissention, saw and seeing enuied our happy estate and condition, hee plotted all meanes whereby hee might worke our ruine. And perceiuing, that though our estate were strong, yet it was mutable, wee being left of God to our owne free will, either to stand or fall, to retaine the good, or to choose the euill; he musereth together all his forces, and layeth siege to this wel-walled and strong-manned City; against which hee could no more preuayle (than the Grecians at the siege of Troy) by powerfull violence and fierce assault; still with his Sinon-like or rather Serpentine subtilties, he had perswaded vs vnder shew of loue and peace to put off our armour of created graces, and to pull downe with our own hands the walls of our defence. And then seeing vs thus weakened and disarmed; and yet lying in the drunken and drowsie sleepe of reckelesse security, hee entreth in vpon vs, accompanied with a crew of hellish Souldiers, the first and chiefe whereof were disobedience, vnbeliefe in God, and credulity to the Deuill, damnable pride, enuy, discontent, aspiring ambition, and vnthankfulnesse. All which being let in by that breach which our free will abusing its liberty had made in our soules, presently they all fell to burning, sacking and spoyling vs of all Gods rich graces, our created wisedome and holinesse, and surprize all our strong holds, making themselues conquerours of all our powers and parts, and euery one of this hellish crew and sinfull vices chusing for their dwelling and possession those places and parts which they thought most fitting for them. And as Souldiers hauing sacked a City, doe thrust the Citizens out of their Habitations and euery one make choice of such houses as best please them: so these in like case. As for example ignorance, errour, curiosity and many thousands of sinfull imaginations, like the Iebuzites surprize and keepe the chiefe tower of the minde; worldlinesse and prophanesse, subdue and hold reason in subjection; peruersnesse and rebellion surprize the will; but in the heart there are encamped (as it were in the chiefe market place of the City) such a multitude of our hellish enemies, as cannot either bee named or numbred, euen many legions of vnlawfull lusts, infidelity, wicked hopes, hellish despaire, hatred of God, loue of the World, Pride, Disobedience, Deceit, Cruelty, Ambition, Couetousnesse, Voluptuousnesse with the rest. All which with innumerable others of this hellish Army, being entred; did not vterly raze downe this goodly built City, but onely killing and casting out Gods graces which were the naturall inhabitants, they kept their holds and places for their owne vse and dwelling. Neither were the substance of the soule or body, or the essentials, the powers, parts and faculties of them, lost, annihilated or vtterly destroyed by the fall of our first parents (although their energy and vertue was greatly impaired, their edge blunted, and vigour deaded) but onely those excellent qualities, and rich ornaments of heauenly wisdome, holinesse and righteousnesse, wherewith they were beautified after Gods owne Image, were quite taken away. The which (being as it were the strong Garrison which kept the City) were no sooner expelled, but the sinfull lusts triumphing in their victory, held all vnder their subjection to the Deuils vse as their chiefe Soueraigne.

§. Sect. 3. No conflict betweene the Flesh and the Spirit in the state of corruption.

Now there was not in either of these estates this combate & conflict in vs betweene the flesh and the spirit whereof we intreate; not in the state of innocency, for then was there in vs a sweet harmony and consent betweene all our powers and parts of soule & body, and there being no sinfull lust or vnruly passion in vs, but a great multitude of wel-agreeing graces, wee enjoyed a blessed peace. Nor in the state of corruption was there any such conflict, because the strong man Sathan possessing all, all that he possessed was in peace; onely (as it happeneth often among Souldiers of the same Band, who striue one with another about the booty and prey) there was some contention betweene the Will and the Conscience, and betweene one vnruly passion and another, but it was onely like those hot contentions betweene the Iesuites and the Priests, who much disagreeing about profit and soueraignty one with another, yet all agreed and joyned together, as one man, like true Vassals, to doe all seruice to their Lord God the Pope, yea (as it may probably be suspected) euen their quarrels and contentions were part of his seruice, and in their disagreeing they yeelded obedience to their holy Father: for so in the like manner in the hotteſt contention betweene our sinfull lusts, they yeelded their obedience to the Deuill as their chiefe Soueraigne, who if he saw by this strife any disaduantage arising to his hellish Kingdome through this hot contention, was both able and ready to accord their differences (as the Pope did those betweene the Priests and Iesuites) and so to joyne them together like friends in doing him seruice.

§. Sect. 4. The peace of the vnregenerate more pernicious than the most dangerous warre.

But this hellish peace was ten thousand times more dangerous and pernicious to our poore soules and bodies, than the most cruell and perillous warre to the weakest enemy; and so much the rather because wee had no apprehension of the danger, nor feeling of our owne misery. Because wee were borne the bond-slaues of the Deuill, and so still brought vp in doing him seruice in the vnfruitfull workes of darknesse, for which we had onely the present pay of worldly vanities, though when wee had laboured most in his toylesome workes wee were oftentimes coozened of our wages. Herein like vnto the Israelites vnder the Egyptian Pharaoh, who when they were best vsed, had but their Onions, Garlicke and Flesh-pots, whereby onely they were but better enabled to doe their drudgery and work in their brick-kils; and sometime in stead of these poore comforts, they had for all their labour, sore beatings and cruell blowes; and yet being bred in this seruitude and knowing no better, they rather chuse to returne vnto it againe, than to take any paines in going to the Land of promise. So and much worse was our miserable bondage to the Pharaoh of Hell, for at the best we had for all our drudgery, but the stinking Garlicke and Onions of worldly vanities, which hee gaue not for loue to vs, but in loue to himselfe, giuing vs this food (as the Rider giueth prouender to his horse) that wee might be the more hartened to doe him seruice. And out of his hellish hatred and cruelty towards vs hee often with-held from those who did him most faithfull seruice, this pay of earthly prosperity, and in stead thereof afflicted and misused them with the blowes and stripes of misery and affliction. Neuertheleſſe, being borne and inured to this hellish thraldome (such was the height of our misery) wee desired still to liue and die in it, taking our whole delight, and placing our chiefe happinesse in pleasing our tyrannicall master by seruing him in the workes of darknesse, and doing all abhominable wickednesse; although wee were sure after that we had beene toyled in his seruice and scorched in his brick-kils, we should for the accomplishment of our reward be cast into the fire of Hell.

§. Sect. 5. Gods infinite loue in sending his only

But when wee were in this desperate condition, and now come to this height of misery, that wee desired still to liue in it, and (like the Israelits with Moses) would haue cap. 9 to redeeme vs, made way for this spirituall conflict.

haue been angry with any who should haue offered vnto vs meanes of deliuerance, because not onely our other parts and faculties, but also our wils and hearts, our loue and liking, with all other our affections, were enthralled in this seruice, and voluntarily leauing their Lord and creatour, wholy adhered to Sathan and delighted to doe his will: euen then our gracious God, infinite in all mercy and goodnesse, of his meere grace and free good will, sent his onely sonne into the world to redeeme vs with his precious death, to vanquish and subdue all the enemies of our saluation, and to set vs at liberty, who were embondaged, and so in loue with our thraldome, that wee did not so much as desire to bee freed from it. Who hauing thus paide the price of our redemption, and prouided a soueraigne salue for all our sores of sinne, doth not so leaue vs (for then wee should haue beene neuer the better) but applyeth the power and efficacy of his merits vnto vs, and (as it were with his owne hand) layeth the plaster vpon our mortall wounds, whilest by his word made effectuall by his Spirit, he maketh knowne vnto vs this excellent worke of our redemption, and the promises of grace and saluation made to all beleeuing and repentant sinners, by which he begetteth this faith in vs, wherewith, as with an hand, wee lay hold on and apply vnto vs his righteousnesse, death and obedience for our justification and redemption, and so in respect of right wee are freed from our sinnes, so as they cannot condemne vs, because God in Christ hath forgiuen them, and also from the tyranny and thraldome of Sathan, death, hell, and condemnation, so as they shall neuer bee able to hurt vs or lay any thing to our charge. And not resting here, our powerfull Sauiour sendeth his spirit with many legions of his graces into our hearts, who pull vs out of the dominion of sinne and Sathan, so as they cannot rule and raigne in vs as in times past; regenerate and purifie vs from the filth and corruption of sin by the power of the same death which deliuered vs from the guilt and punishment due vnto it, and enabled vs to serue God in newnesse of life, by applying likewise vnto vs the vertue of his resurrection.

Rom. 8. 1. 33.

§. Sect. 6. Sanctification begun and not perfected in the formall cause of this conflict, first because of the great contrarity betweene grace and corruption.

But this (as I haue before shewed) is onely begunne and not perfected and accomplished in this life; not for want of sufficient vertue in Christs death and resurrection, but through the weakenesse of our faith wee being but partly regenerate and partly vnregenerate, in part spirituall, and in part carnall. And that I may follow the similitude, though the great tyrant Sathan bee thrust from his throne, so as hee cannot any longer rule vs as a King, yet hee is not quite expelled out of our quarters, but still doe molesteth vs as an enemy, and though the legions of his lusts are beaten from the strong holds, and driuen out of the market place and chiefe gate of the City, yet they lye lurking in the suburbs and secret corners; and no sooner giue wee them through our retchlesnesse the least aduantage, but they steale through our sleepy watch and guard, or cunningly thrust in at some posterne gate, and so assault vs with all violence and malice. So that there may bee two maine and essentiall causes giuen of this conflict betweene the spirit accompanied with Gods graces, and the flesh attended with many sinnefull lusts; the one is the antipathy and contrarietie which is betweene them, which is exceeding hostile and full of all enmity and opposition, as it may appeare if wee consider the contrariety of their natures. For what is the spirit, I meane the created spirit infused into vs, but the quality of holinesse and righteousnesse renewed according to Gods image? And what is the flesh, but the defacing of this image, the depriuation of this originall righteousnesse, and the staine of naturall corruption which hath ouer-spread and defiled all the powers and parts of our soules and bodies? so that the flesh resisteth the spirit in a double opposition, both as it is a priuation and want of righteousnesse, and as it is a corruption making vs prone to all vnrighteousnesse. And therefore the contrarietie which is betweene them is as great and vnreconcilable as betweene light and darkenesse, health and sickenesse, heate and colde, good and euill, so that the prospering of the one is the ruine of the other; the encreasing of the one is the decreasing of the other, and the ones preuayling and victory, is the others weakening and vtter ouerthrow.

§. Sect. 7. Secondly because these enemies so contrarie and opposite dwell together.

The other is their cohabitation and dwelling together in the same place and subject, which ministreth vnto them mutually occasion, and imposeth a necessity of their continuall opposition, euen as when fire and water, heate and cold meete together, there can neuer bee any agreement, or so much as truce till the one of them haue gotten the vpper hand, and the other as much as lyeth in the power of the contrary quality, bee subdued and abolished. Neither are wee so to conceiue it, as though these enemies so opposite dwelled in the same City, but in diuers holds, or in the same man in respect of his diuers parts, but euen (as it were) in the same house and chamber, in the same faculties and parts. More plainely, the flesh doth not onely dwell in the body or inferiour and sensuall parts, and the spirit in the soule alone, or the intellectuall and reasonable faculties; for so they might part their bounds and dominions, shut the doore against one another, and sometime enjoy a peace or truce without the others molestation, but in the same same vnderstanding and will, body and affections, so that the whole soule in respect of its diuers faculties, is partly flesh and partly spirit, and cannot bee deuided, but onely distinguished, the vnderstanding, will, affections and body being partly regenerate and partly vnregenerate, partly sanctified by Gods spirit, and partly sinnefull and corrupted with those reliques of sin remaining in them. For example, the image of God is in part renewed, and the image of sinne and Sathan in part remaineth. As in the vnderstanding ignorance is inchoatiuely dispelled and driuen away, and the light of knowledge shineth in it, not perfectly, but still the fogge and mists of ignorance remaining, obscure this light being wholy mingled with it. So the peruersenesse and rebellion of the will is changed into loyalty and obedience, but yet imperfectly, and therefore the reliques of corruption remaining, the same will obeyeth and rebelleth, willeth and nilleth both good and euill; the affections which were corrupted and disordered, are by the spirit sanctified and reduced to order, yeelding their obedience to their soueraigne holy reason; but this sanctification being but begunne and imperfect, the reliques of corruption doe still remaine, so that the same man loueth and loatheth both spirituall and carnall things, trusteth and distrusteth God, and contrariwise distrusteth and trusteth in the creatures, hopeth and dispaireth in Gods mercy, feareth God and immoderatly feareth man, humbleth himselfe before God ascribing vnto him the whole glory, and is puffed vp with pride, arrogating some part of that which is due vnto God onely, vnto himselfe. So the same appetite being but in part sanctified, is partly temperate and partly intemperate, partly sober and partly addicted to excesse; and the same body in the like respect, is partly the instrument of righteousnesse vnto holinesse, and partly the instrument of vnrighteousnesse vnto sinne. In which respect the new man and regenerate part, may fitly bee compared to a child, which is perfect in all the parts of a man in the first houre he is borne, but yet little and weake in respect of his strength and stature, notwithstanding still increasing and growing till hee come to be a man of ripe and perfect age. And contrariwise the part vnregenerate is as fitly resembled to an old man, worne out with age and decrepite, who also hath in himall the parts of a man, but yet weakened and enfeebled. Who, though hee hath a greater stature, yet is not much stronger than a childe: and though hee bee, yet herein is his disaduantage, that whereas the other encreaseth daily and waxeth stronger, hee decreaseth and decayeth, waxing euery day more feeble than other, till at last by death all his strength is wholy abolished, so as now the weake childe being growne to mans age, may tryumph ouer him and trample on his graue.

Q. Sect. 8. How such contraries can dwel together and not abolish one an other.

Yea but how can such mortall enemies and contraries so opposite, dwell together without the abolition and vtter destruction of the one partty, seeing they doe not onely like the Canaanits and Israelits dwell in the same land, or the Israelits and Iebusits in the same City, but in the same man, and which is more, not in diuers, but euen in the very same part and faculty? To this I answere, that though these contraries cannot dwell together in their prime vigour and full strength, and therefore in the state of perfection, there could bee no conflict, because there could bee no flesh, nor yet in the state of corruption, because there could bee no spirit; yet they may, when their degrees are abated and their vigour and full strength is somewhat blunted and deadded. In which respect this residence of the flesh and spirit, is fitly compared to the residence of the light and darkenesse in the ayre, in the twilight or dawning of the day, when as there is not one part of the ayre darke and another light, but the whole ayre partly light and partly darke, the darkenesse and light being mingled together; or of heate and cold in the same luke-warme water, where they are not diuided in place, but the whole water is partly cold and partly hot; or of water and wine in the same vessell, in which there is not one part wine and another water, but the whole mixture is partly water and partly wine; or of sicknesse and health in those which wee call weake and sickly, through some spice or reliques of an Ague or Feauer; of whom it cannot be said, that he is sicke in one part and sound in another, but that he is partly healthy in his whole body, so farreforth as he is recouered, and partly sicke so far forth as the reliques of his sickneese remaine in him. In all which these contrary qualities doe not friendly conjoyne themselues, nor agree one with another, neither doe they communicate their properties, vertues and contrary qualities to produce this mixture, but both of them stand still in hostile termes in the same subiect, labouring continually to get the victory, and wholly abolish his enemy and opposite.

CHAP. IIII.

Of the Combate it selfe and the manner how it is fought in vs.

Q. Sect. 1. When we are called by God to this conflict.

HAue shewed what are the causes of this conflict; and now we are in the next place to speake of the combate it selfe, and of the manner manner how it is fought in vs. To which purpose we are to know, that the acceptable time and day of saluation being come, when as the Lord is purposed to deliuer vs eternally out of the hands and power of sinne and Sathan, raigning and ruling in our hearts as Kings, yea Gods, as the Scripture speaketh; holding the whole man with all the powers and faculties of his soule and body in subjection to doe their will; that for the time which remaineth, we may bee his seruants and souldiers, to obey him in all things, and to make warre vnder his standard, against the spirituall enemies of our saluation, it pleaseth him by the ministry of his word, made effectuall by the operation of his spirit, to open our blinde eyes, that we may see and plainely discerne, that wretched bondage vnder sinne and Sathan in which we liue, the innumerable miseries into which it plungeth vs for this present life, and that hellish condemnation and euerlasting torments, which if we liue and die in this thraldome, doe attend vs in the life to come. Thereby is discouered vnto vs the tyranny of the Diuell, whereby hee raigneth and rageth in vs, working our hearts to his will, and inclyning vs to drudge in his seruice, for no other reward but the vncertaine pay of worldly vanities, which shall bee accompanied with endlesse destruction; the vglinesse and intolerable waight of sinne which as an heauy burthen presseth vs downe to hell; the terrible wrath of God inflamed against vs by our sinnes; and the curse of the law ready to attach vs. Finally that our liues bee momentany and vncertaine, and therefore also the pleasures of sinne can be but alike vnsure and of short continuance; but the life to come and both the pleasures and ioyes, and the paines and torments of it are euerlasting, and that there is no hope to enioy the one and escape the other if wee liue and dye in our present condition. And thus when by the ministery of the word wee are brought to a sight and sense of our damnable and wretched estate, our sleeping consciences are awakened, our hard and flintie hearts are throughly humbled and softned, bruised and made contrite, so as our former carnall securitie being shaken of, wee relent and mourne in the sight of our sinne and misery. Being thus cast downe and humbled, the Lord by the preaching of the Gospell maketh knowne vnto vs his loue in Christ, the infiniteneſse of his mercy and goodnesse together with that singular pledge thereof his deare and onely sonne, giuen to the death for our redemption; the sweet promises of the Gospell assuring all of the mercy and forgiuenesse of their sinnes, and deliuerance out of the hands of all our spirituall enemies whom Christ by his death hath vanquished and subdued, and of eternall life and saluation of body and soule, if wee will lay hold vpon Christ and his righteousnesse by a liuing faith, and bring forth the fruits thereof by forsaking our sinnes and turning vnto God by vnfained repentance. Which meanes of comming out of our present misery and of attaining to a better estate, being made knowne vnto vs, wee begin to conceiue that there is some possibilitie of comming out of the thraldome of sin and Sathan, and of attaining to saluation; the which inflameth our hearts with an earnest desire to come out of our bondage, and to this end, to bee made partakers of Christ and his righteousnesse, who alone can helpe vs, and a firme resolution to deny our selues and all other meanes as vaine and vnprofitable, and to cast our selues wholy vpon our Sauiour Christ for our justification and saluation. From hence ariseth a constant endeauour in the vse of all good meanes to attaine vnto faith, whereby we may be assured of Christ and his benefits, and particularly apply them vnto our selues for our owne vse, which being likewise wrought in vs by the sweet and gracious promises of the Gospell and we thereby perswaded of the pardon our sinnes, of Gods loue and our owne saluation, in the next place we desire to haue our assurance confirmed more and more by a liuely sense and feeling, and an experimentall knowledge that wee are by Christ our redeemer deliuered out of the hands of our spirituall enemies. To which end wee desire the assistance of Gods grace and holy spirit, by which we may be actually deliuered out of the bondage of sinne and Sathan, that they may no longer haue dominion ouer vs; and to find and feele the vertue and power of Christ Iesus his death as effectuall for our sanctification as our justification, for the inriching vs with sauing grace, as for the assuring vs of eternall glory, for the mortifying and subduing of the corruption of sin, as for the freeing of vs from the guilt and punishment.

Phil. 3.

Which desires are no sooner wrought in vs by the ministery of the word, made effectuall by the inward operation of Gods spirit, but presently the Lord, rich in mercy and goodnesse, by the same meanes doth satisfie them, and sendeth his spirit accompanied with a strong army of sanctifying graces to take possession of vs for his vse, to raigne and rule in vs, and to thrust downe Sathan from his throne, and to depose him from his regencie or rather tyranny ouer vs; and to subdue, kill and mortifie all those garrisons of sinnefull lusts, so as they shall not bee able vnder their great Generall to rule and raigne in vs as they did in former times. For example he causeth knowledge, spirituall wisedome, judgement, discretion, holy

2. Sect. 2. The second summons to this conflict.

holy reason and spirituall cogitations to enter into the head, and by strong assault to encounter ignorance, curiositie, carnall wisedome, errour, rash giddinesse and carnall imagination; Christian resolution and holy obedience to enter the will, and to set vpon cowardly feare and vnconstancy, vnflexible stubbornesse and stiffe rebellion; faith and loue with innumerable numbers of holy affections to take possession of the heart, and to subdue and vanquish infidelitie, selfe-loue and loue of the world, with those many legions of vnlawfull lusts and vnruly passions which Sathan had placed in it; spirituall concupiscence and holy desires; temperance, sobriety and chastity, to seate themselues in the inferiour faculties and sensuall appetite, and to thrust out, and to hold possession against carnall concupiscence, worldly lusts, intemperance, wantonnesse and vncleannesse with the rest of their opposites; Finally puritie and honour, to seaze vpon the body and all the members thereof, and to driue out and cleanse it from all vncleannesse and noysomnesse, wherewith it had beene defiled like a filthy stye of impure beasts, through the inhabitation and abuse of sinnefull lusts.

§. Sect. 3. The manner of the conflict it selfe.

Which royall and heauenly army of Gods sauing graces, led vnder the conduct of his holy spirit, doe no sooner enter the field and encounter their enemies, but presently they put them to the worse, and causing them to retire doe get the victory. Satan the strong tyrant that held all in quiet possession and ruled as he list, is put to flight, spoyled of his power and regency, and the Spirit of God seateth himselfe vpon the throne, and the flesh and the lusts thereof in the first conflict receiue such deadly wounds, that they neuer recouer of them, but languish in a continuall consumption till at last they bee wholy abolished. And therefore being in the first battell thus weakened, foyled and discomfited, they haue neuer the courage afterwards in a martiall manner to proclaime warre against the spirit, and the army of Gods graces which doe accompany it, to bid them battell and to fight against them in a pitched field; but craftily and cunningly re-entrouping their scattered forces, they like the sauadges or Irish kernes, will onely fight vpon aduantages, and therefore make secret ambuscadoes, and hide themselues (as it were) in the woods and thickets, from which they sally out at vnawares, when we are most secure, and so skirmishing with vs they sometime wound and foyle vs and for a time cause vs to retire. And so otherwhiles they set out some booty of worldly profit or pleasure, with which they allure vs to come, when we thinke not of it, within the danger of their shot; and sometimes (as it were in the night) when wee are brought into a deepe sleepe of retchlesse securitie, they make some inroads vpon vs, wast and spoyle, and doe much mischiefe, firing our hearts with vnlawfull lusts, corrupting or gagging the conscience which as the centinell should giue vs warning of their approach, wounding and misleading the will vnto some peruersnesse, and carrying the members of the body as captiues vnto sin. But when the Spirit taking notice of these conflicts riseth vp to giue them battell, gathereth his scattered forces and entring the field soundeth the alarme to the fight, then the rebells quit their standings and runne away; or yeeld themselues as captiues to suffer the punishment which their rebellion hath deserued. Howbeit they doe not long continue in subjection, being onely kept vnder by slauish feare, but vpon euery opportunitie they rebell againe, and giue fresh assaults to Gods graces in vs, though in the end they are assured of an vtter ouerthrow. Like herein vnto theeues and cutpurses, who when they are apprehended and cast into prison, are onely restrained from their wicked courses, but not reclaimed and amended; or vnto gally-slaues who are forced to labour at the command of their enemies, whilest they are tyed in chaines and feele the smart of the whip, but no sooner doe they breake loose and make an escape, but they are ready to encounter with all fury the same persons who not long since they so seruilely obeyed; or finally like vnto their father the diuell, who though hee be continually foyled and put to flight, yet is so wholy transported with his inueterate malice, that he continually opposeth God in all things, especially in the saluation of his Elect, and maketh continuall warre against Michael the Arch-angell, or the Prince of Angels Iesus Christ, and the army of his Saints; though he bee not able to preuaile against them.

§. Sect. 4. That this fight is not corporall but spirituall.

Now this fight betweene these enemes is maintained on both sides not by handy blowes, sword and shield, pike and shot, for of the fight of the Spirit the Apostle saith, that though wee walke after the flesh, yet wee doe not warre after the flesh. (For the weapons of our warfare are not carnall, but mightie through God to the pulling downe of strong holds) casting downe imaginations, and euery high thing that exalteth it selfe against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captiuity euery thought to the obedience of Christ. And hauing in a readinesse to reuenge all disobedience, when your obedience is fulfilled. 2. Cor. 10. 3. 4. 5. But as the enemies are spirituall, so is the manner of the fight spirituall, by inward lusting and concupiscence, whereby motions and inclinations, either good or euill are stirred stirred vp in the heart and soule. And thus there is a contrary lusting betweene these enemies: the flesh lusting against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, as the Apostle plainely teacheth vs.

In which their contrary lusting, they both of them mainely ayme at two generall ends. The first end at which the flesh in its lusting aymeth, is to stirre vp and incline vs vnto such lusts, desires and motions, as are sinnefull and contrary to the law of God, as to infidelitie, impenitency, pride, selfe-loue, hatred, enuy, vncleanesse, couetousnesse and such like; or to speake more distinctly, it endeauoreth to beget and stirre vp, preserue and nourish euill cogitations in the minde, wicked inclinations in the will and sinnefull affections, and desires in the heart, in which respect it is fitly compared to a fiery furnace or boyling pot, which continually send vp sparks and smoke; and by the Apostle Iames it is likened to a filthy harlot, which by her alluring baytes inticeth men to commit folly with her, vpon which followeth the conception and birth of sinne and death. And our Sauiour Christ telleth vs, that from within, euen in the heart, (that is, the sinnefull flesh and naturall corruption, which chiefely resideth in the heart) proceed euill thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murthers, theftes, couetousnesse, wickednesse, deceit, lasciuiousnesse, an euill eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishnesse, &c. Contrary to this is the lusting of the spirit, which endeauoureth to stirre vp and preserue good motions and inclinations in vs, as good meditations in the mind, good resolutions in the will, good desires and affections in the heart which are conformable and agreeable to the holy will and word of God. Thus the Apostle Iohn saith, that wee haue receiued an vnction from the holy one whereby wee know all things. And Saint Paul exhorteth vs not to quench the spirit, that is the good motions which arise from it, as it were sparkes from the fire. So Dauid. I will blesse the Lord who hath giuen mee counsell; my reynes also instruct mee in the night season, that is, those sweete meditations and motions which the spirit secretly in the night season putteth into our mindes and hearts. And the Prophet Esay saith, that the eares of the faithfull shall heare a voyce behind them, saying: This is the way walke yee in it, when they turned to the right hand, and when they turned to the left. Which is to be vnderstood not onely of the voyce of Gods Ministers, outwardly speaking vnto vs in the ministery of the word, but also of the voyce of the spirit, secretly by the good motions thereof leading vs into all truth. For so our Sauiour accordingly promiseth, that he would send his spirit the comforter, who should conuince the world of sinne, righteousnesse and iudgement; and that when hee is come, hee should leade the faithfull into all truth; and reueale vnto them things to come.

Gal.5.17.

1. Sect.5. The first end at which the flesh aymeth in lusting against the spirit.

Iam.1.14.15.

Mat.15.18.19.

Ioh.2.20.

1.Thes.5.19.

Psal.36.9.

Esa.30.21.

Ioh.16.8.13.

2. Sect.6. The second maine end at which the flesh aymeth in lusting against the spirit.

The second maine thing at which the flesh aymeth in this conflict is, either to represse and smother the good motions and inclinations which the spirit exciteth and stirreth vp in vs, or else to poyson and corrupt them, that they may become vnprofitable and turned into sinne. So when the spirit moueth vs to performe some good duty of Gods seruice, of iustice or mercy, it will labour to quench this motion, and to withdraw vs from it, either by alluring vs vtterly to neglect it, and to spend our time rather in pursuing worldly vanities; or by perswading vs, that there is such difficultie in it, that wee shall not bee possibly able to compasse and atchieue it; or if wee doe, that it will not bee worth our labour, or finally by intycing vs to deferre and delay it, because we may bee fitter, or haue better opportunities to performe it hereafter, than at this present; in which respect the Apostle saith, that through this opposite lusting of the flesh, wee cannot doe the good wee would. But if it cannot perswade vs either vtterly to neglect the duties of Gods seruice which hee commaundeth, or to deferre them till wee get some better opportunity, then it will endeauour to interrupt and distract vs in them, and to staine them with our corruptions and imperfections, that they may not bee acceptable. As when wee set our selues to pray or heare the word, it will put into our minds worldly cogitations and wandring thoughts, that so we may not intend these holy exercises, or else oppresse our hearts with drowsie dulnesse, deadnesse of spirit and carnall wearinesse, so as wee cannot performe them with any chearefulnesse. And of this the Apostle complaineth; namely, that when hee delighted in the law of God in the inner man, he saw another law in his members, warring against the law of his minde, and and bringing him into captiuitie to the law of sinne which was in his members. And this is the cause why our best righteousnesse becommeth like a menstrous cloth, and why our best prayers, neede to be perfumed with the sweete odours of Christs intercession, before they can ascend vnto God, and become sweete incense in his nostrils.

Gal.5.17.

Rom.7.22.23.

Esa.64.6.

3. Sect.7. The ends at which the spirit aymeth in lusting against the flesh.

Contrariwise the spirit labooreth and endeauoureth to suppresse and subdue those euill motions which the flesh rayseth in vs, and still moueth vs to take the first and best opportunities of serving God and doing his will. So also it purifieth our hearts by faith from all our sinfull corruptions, and maketh vs to labour and striue against our infirmities and imperfections, that we may with feruency of spirit and chearefulnesse of heart, performe all holy seruice vnto God; and when when in these our endeauours wee come short of our desires, through this sinnefull flesh which doth so easily encompasse vs, it moueth vs to bewaile our imperfections, and still more and more to labour in the vse of all good meanes, whereby we may attaine vnto more perfection; as wee see in the example of the Apostle Paul, who kept vnder this body of corruption, beating it, as it were, blacke and blew, that he might hold it with the lusts thereof in subiection; whereof when hee fayled and was either hindred from doing good, or led captiue vnto sinne, he makes lamentable complaints of these rebellious lusts, and not contenting himselfe with that portion of grace and godlinesse vnto which hee had attained, he forgate what was past, and still did labour and striue to attaine vnto more perfection. And thus the spirit mastereth and subdueth the flesh, so as it cannot haue full liberty, and take its full swinge in sinne, as it desireth; according to that of the Apostle, Whosoeuer is borne of God doth not commit sinne, for his seed remaineth in him, and hee cannot sinne (namely like the vnregenerate with full swinge and consent of will) because he is borne of God.

Heb. 12. 1.

1. Cor. 9. 27.

Rom. 7. 23. 24.

Phil. 3. 12.

1. Ioh. 3. 9.

CHAP. V.

Of the manner of the fight betweene the flesh and the spirit in our seuerall faculties and parts.

1. Sect. 1. The conflict betweene the flesh and the spirit in the mind.

BVt let vs descend to some particulars, and consider the manner of this fight betweene the flesh and the spirit in our seuerall faculties and parts. And that both the superiour and inferiour faculties. In the superiour, as both the minde and the will, whether wee consider them seuerally or ioyntly. Concerning the former, the minde of the faithfull being but in part renewed and regenerate, the reliques of our sinfull corruption doe remaine in it, which continually fight against the renewed graces of the spirit, they labouring to expell and thrust them out, and the other to keepe their possession and continue in them. So Nazianzen: There is in mee (saith he) a double mind, the one being good followeth that which is good, the other being euill followeth also euill. That cheerefully and willingly obeyeth Christ, and desireth the light; this contrariwise is deuoted to flesh and blood, and is ready to entertaine Beliall drawing vs to darkenesse. Whereof it commeth to passe that this is delighted in earthly things and in the slitting and fraile profits of this life, as though they were the chiefe good, and loueth riotous feastings, hatred, gluttony, and the filthinesse and wily deceits of the workes of darkenesse, and goeth the broade way, being compassed about with such a darke cloud of folly, that it saueth vnto it selfe pleasure out of its owne destruction. But the spirituall minde reioyceth in heauenly things, which we enioy through hope, placeth all confidence of life and saluation in God alone, esteemeth worldly profits subiect to vnnumerable casualties, as vile and contemptible smoke, loueth honest labours, pouerty and laudable cares, and taketh the narrow way that leadeth to life.

Est mihi mens duplex, altera bona & boni sequax: altera mala & mali consectatrix: &c. Nazianzen. de calamit. animæ sua. Tom. 2. Pag. 934.

Now this conflict in the minde betweene the flesh and the spirit, may be diuersly considered in respect of the diuers faculties which belong vnto it. And first the vnderstanding being in part regenerate and sanctified, and in part vnregenerate and corrupted, partly inlightened with spirituall and sauing knowledge, and partly obscured with the reliques of ignorance; and not onely so, but also much defiled and depraued; there is a conflict maintained in it, betweene sanctified knowledge and spiritual wisedome on the one side, and carnall curiositie, palpable ignorance, and that wisedome of the flesh which is worldly and diuelliſh on the other side. For first carnall curiositie neglecting those things which are profitable, necessary and reuealed to this end that wee should know them, laboureth after nice and idle speculations and curious questions, which as they are vseleſse and vaine, so also abstruse and secrete; or else diueth into Gods hidden counsels which he hath forbidden vs to search and pry into. But sauing knowledge not onely leaueth secret things as belonging to the Lord our God, but also represseth and mortifieth, as much as may bee, that vaine curiositie, and restraining vs from going about to vnderstand aboue that which is meete to vnderstand, it vnderstandeth in sobrietie, according as God hath deale to euery man the measure of faith. It apprehendeth things reuealed as belonging vnto vs, and aymeth more at the vse and fruit in practice, than at the theorie and speculation, and to haue feeling and experience of a little, rather than a bare conceit and abilitie to discourse of much. And yet it resteth not in a small measure, yea in truth not in the greatest proportion, but still it laboureth after spirituall growth and encreaseth daily more and more vntill it come to perfection in Iesus Christ. Secondly, this sauing knowledge continually combateth with the contrary extreame, palpable ignorance; for our vnderstandings are but partly inlightened with the knowledge of Gods truth, and the reliques of ignorance doe in part remaine. So the Apostle saith, that we know but in part and see but as through a glasse darkly; and yet wee stand not at a stay, but labour to attaine vnto that perfection of knowledge whereby wee

2. Sect. 2. The conflict betweene the flesh and spirit in the vnderstanding

Deut. 29. 29.

Rom. 12. 3.

1. Cor 13. 12.

shall shall know as we are knowne. And this is the cause of this conflict whilest ignorance striuing to keepe its place in the vnderstanding, rayseth thicke mists and darke fogges to obscure the light of truth, and to put out or dazle the eyes of the mind; and on the other side sauing knowledge doth endeuour with the Sun-shine of truth shining clearely in Gods Word, to dispell and scatter these misty fogs by little and little, vntill it shine forth brightly vnto perfect day.

3. Sect. 3. The conflict betweene spirituall & carnall wisdome. Iam.3.15.

Finally, spirituall and renewed wisedome fighteth with that wisedome of the World which is earthly, sensuall and deuilish, as the Apostle calleth it; the one being so wholy taken vp and exercised in spirituall and heauenly things, which it seeth, knoweth and esteemeth as most excellent, and therefore contemning worldly vanities as drosse and dung, yea losse, in comparison of them, it little looketh after them, whereof it commeth to passe, that it hath little policy, either to get and compasse, or to possesse and keepe them; the other being wholy deuoted to earthly things and transitory trifles, looketh onely downe-ward, and not being able to discerne the beauty of those diuine excellencies (no more than those eyes which hauing long pored in the darke, can behold the bright beames of the Sun, but are made more blind than any way illightened with them) it is onely delighted in beholding those things whose beauty is subject to the senses and naturall reason; about which being continually exercised, it groweth very wise and quick-sighted in discerning them, and very politique in plotting and vsing of all meanes both for the getting and keeping of them. And as these two vse contrary Organs and Instruments, the one a spirituall, the other a carnall eye, so also contrary meanes and lights to discerne their contrary objects. For the spirituall eye is best enabled to see diuine and spirituall things by the cleare light of Gods Truth shining in his Word, and the inward illumination of his Spirit, which maketh it better able to discerne those things which are spirituall and heauenly; but the carnall eye (like the eyes of Bats and Owles) not being able to endure this Sun-like brightnesse discerneth best of the excellency of worldly things in the night of ignorance, and then it is most cleare-sighted to hunt after them, and most wily and politique to catch and hold them. And thus it is said of meere naturall men, that the eyes of their minds doe only serue them to act cunningly the workes of darknesse, because they best suite with the darknesse of their vnderstanding, according to that of the Prophet; My people is foolish, they haue not knowne mee, they are foolish children, and haue none vnderstanding, they are wise to doe euill, but to doe good they haue no knowledge. So the Apostle telleth vs, that they that are after the flesh doe mind or sauour the things of the flesh, but they that are after the spirit the things of the spirit; where by sauouring or minding, he meaneth vnderstanding, approuing and magnifying these things. The which as it is true of diuers persons and subjects, so of the diuers parts regenerate and vnregenerate in the same person; and so whereas the Apostle saith, that the naturall man vnderstandeth not the things that are of the spirit; learned Zanchie vnderstandeth it not of him who is meerely carnall, but of the vnregenerate part of him who is sanctified. And so in truth must the like words spoken by our Sauiour to the Apostle Peter be necessarily vnderstood of his part alone which was vnrenued, Math.16.23. Get thee behind mee Sathan, Thou art an offence vnto me; for thou sauourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men; seeing at this time hee was truly conuerted, and a famous Apostle of Iesus Christ, who a little before had shewed, that in his part regenerate hee sauoured the things of God, by that notable confession of his faith in Iesus Christ.

Rom.8.5. 1.Cor.2.14. Mat.16.23. Mat.16.16.

4. Sect. 4. The conflict betweene the iudgement of the flesh and spirit.

And thus wee see the conflict betweene spirituall wisdome and carnall; from which ariseth another betweene the iudgement of the flesh and the spirit, for so farre forth as the mind is illightened with spirituall wisedome and knowledge, answerably the iudgment discerning betweene truth & falshood, right and wrong, good and euill, doth allow, approue and esteeme the one, and disalloweth, rejecteth and vilifieth the other, but so farre forth as it still remayneth blinded and misled through naturall ignorance, the iudgment mistaketh errour for truth, wrong for right, and euill for good. So our Sauiour saith to the Pharisees, yee erre not knowing the Scriptures. And Dauid himselfe being ignorant of the state of the godly and wicked in this life in respect of prosperity and aduersity, and that these things happen alike to all, was ready by a false iudgement to condemne the generation of Gods children; but after that going into the sanctuary, his mind being inlightened with the knowledge of the truth, his iudgement then gaue right euidence. And the Apostle Peter being ignorant of the abrogating of the Ceremoniall Law after the death of Christ, and of the breaking downe of the partition wall betweene the Iewes and Gentiles, iudgeth the creatures of God vncleane which hee had sanctified, and that he was so confined within the Land of Iury, that hee might not preach the Gospell vnto the Gentiles: but when God by Vision had inlightened his mind with the knowledge of the truth, hee reformed also the errour of his judgement.

Mat.22.29. Eccles.9.2. Psal.73.15. Acts 10.14, 34,35. Acts 10.

5. Sect. 5. How these

And this is the conflict fought in the mind betweene knowledge and ignorance, true & false faculties of the mind preuaile one against the other.

false judgement, in which they (as it were) stab and wound one another, and interchangeably either of them preuayle sometimes, and sometimes are againe foyled and get the worst. As for example, knowledge in the regenerate part of the minde assaulteth ignorance in the part vnregenerate, and with the light of Gods Truth, scattereth and dispelleth the darke mists of ignorance; and soone after ignorance through the neglect of reading, meditation, hearing the Word, Prayer and holy conferences gathereth strength, and bleareth againe the eyes of the vnderstanding, that it cannot so clearely, at least after a sauing feeling and experimentall manner, discerne the things of God, but then againe knowledge being renewed & strengthened by those holy exercises, recouereth it selfe and winneth the field. So truth in that part of the judgement which is regenerate entreth the lists, and striketh at errour in the vnregenerate part, giuing it such a deadly wound that it neuer recouereth throughly of it, and for the present, it may be, falleth into a dead sownde, but yet it oftentimes through the helpe of subtile sophistry, nice and subtle distinctions and cunning Paralogismes, brought in to ayde it by the World, and corrupt affections of the sinfull flesh, which make aduantage to themselues of vnprofitable errours, it recouereth strength, and truth getteth a foyle for the time; but being againe renewed and confirmed by the light of Gods Word, it giueth errour in the end a shamefull ouerthrow.

Q. Sect. 6. The cause why the godly learned differ in iudgement from one another.

From hence wee learne what is the cause why men not onely very learned, and enduced with a great measure of knowledge, but also regenerate, godly and religious, doe often in their judgement much differ from one another in points of Religion; namely, because their minds and judgements are but in part regenerate, so that the reliques of ignorance and errour do still remayne in them, which is the cause that they know but in part, and see the truth of God (as it were) through a glasse darkly; like the man in the Gospell who when his sight was first restored, discerned men walking, as it had beene trees; the which imperfection of their spirituall sight and knowledge, worketh in them onely a doubtfull opinion, and not any wel-settled judgement, which maketh them to take that way which their conceipt apprehendeth as the most likely and probable. Like diuers men intending to trauell towards the same City, who being vncertaine and doubtfull of the right way, doe choose diuers paths, one being more direct, and others leading them out of the way or much about; but yet all ayming to goe towards the same place, they are ready to returne into their way againe, and to make more haste in trauelling, when vpon inquiry receiuing better information, they doe perceiue their former errour. And this also is the cause why the same men otherwise godly and religious, doe leaue the way of truth and fall into errours after their judgements haue beene truly enlightened, the flesh preuayling ouer the spirit in a new assault, and dazling the eyes of their minde, whilest with its mists and fogs, it darkeneth the light which formerly did shine vnto them. The which befalleth them sometimes not onely in the knowledge of those points of Religion which are of lesse consequence, but also exceeding waighty & fundamentall, as we see in the example of the Corinthians and the Galathians, euen after the truth of the Gospell had beene preached vnto them, the one erring in the doctrine of the resurrection from the dead; the other in the mayne point of justification by faith in Christ without the workes of the Law. Where, by the way, we may note the errour of the Church of Rome, whilest it teacheth that the Church cannot erre. For euery man liuing, hath the flesh still dwelling in him, & with it the reliques of errour and ignorance, which sometime misleadeth and misguideth him; and that which is the condition of euery man, is the case of all, the same reason being of the whole and all the parts. And where as it may be obiected that the Church hath speciall promises of being enlightened by the Spirit and guided into all truth; to this I answere, that the like promises also are made to euery particular member of it, who notwithstanding may and doe erre in some particulars, and therefore the promise is to be limited, first, vnto all truth necessary to our saluation; and secondly, that they shall by the Spirit receiue this priuiledge, that whereas the wicked continue and perish in fundamentall errours, the faithfull though they may fall into them & continue in them for a time, yet they shall not liue and die in them, but shall in Gods good time after their going astray, heare the voice of Gods Word and Spirit reuoking and recalling them into the right path, and saying, this is the way walke yee in it.

Iohn 16.13. 1. Iohn 2.20,27.

Esay 30.21.

Q. Sect. 7. That this should make vs to conforme our iudgement to the analogy of faith.

Againe, seeing through the flesh dwelling in vs we are subject to ignorance and error, this should make vs to conforme our judgement and opinion to the analogy of faith, & as to hold fast those doctrines which are manifestly grounded vpon the Scriptures, so to be modest and sober in mayntayning such points as are doubtfull and controuersall, when as other of our Brethren differ from vs; because wee may erre by reason of those reliques of ignorance remayning in vs; and they may erre also out of humane frailty, & therefore are rather to be pitied than hated, and to be drawne not with rigour, but with the spirit of meekenesse. Finally, seeing the reliques of ignorance and errour will neuer leaue

Mark 8.24.

Phil. 3.15. Gal. 6.1.

leaue vs till death diuide vs, this must make vs labour continually in the vse of all good meanes, whereby our mindes may be more and more illightned and our judgements informed in the knowledge of Gods Truth, that so we may be strengthened against those sharpe encounters wherewith ignorance and errour will daily assault vs. And especially we are to heare the Word, study and meditate in the Scriptures, and call often and earnestly by feruent prayers for the assistance and illumination of Gods holy Spirit, whereby we may be preserued from all errours and led into all truth. For if Danid who was wiser than his Ancients, and had attained vnto more knowledge than his Teachers, had need to make that prayer; Open mine eyes, O Lord, that I may see the wonderfull things of thy Law; and if the Apostle Paul who was immediately taught by Christ, and had receiued such abundance of Reuelations, desired aboue all things still more and more to know Christ, and to find and feele the vertue and power of Christs Death and Resurrection, then how much more should we, who come farre short of their perfection?

Psal. 119. 18.

Phil. 3. 10.

§. Sect. 8. The conflict in our thoughts and imaginations.

The next conflict which is to be considered in the minde is betweene the actions and operations of it, which like vnto the minde it selfe being partly spirituall, and partly carnall; doe continually striue and fight against one another. And these are our thoughts and cogitations, our meditations and imaginations, which labour mutually to expell one another, and to keepe the minde in their sole possession. For when the Spirit lifteth vp the mind in diuine Contemplations, and causeth it to thinke and meditate on heauenly things as the end of our hopes; or on the seruice of God, the duties of Christianity, or of our lawfull callings, as the meanes whereby wee may attaine vnto them; then the flesh depresseth and pulleth it downe, and (as it were) clippeth the wings, or casteth vpon them the lime or slime of sin, when as it is soaring this lofty pitch, and by suggesting such thoughts as are simply worldly and wicked, or else impertinent and vnseasonable in respect of the present employment, doe cause it to stoop vnto earthly vanities, and so leauing the substance to catch a shadow. But the spirituall part finding it selfe thus defeated of those spirituall excellencies, which so earnestly it pursueth, doth not rest thus dejected and depressed, but shaking off the thoughts of sinful vanities and sensuall delights, and bathing it selfe in the precious bloud of Christ by a liuely faith, it is washed from the filth of earthly corruption, and as it were picking and pruning it ruffled feathers, when the Sun beames of Gods louing countenance shine vpon it, it leaueth the earth and vp againe it mounteth in spirituall & heauenly thoughts. And remembring that we are but Pilgrimes on earth, and that Heauen is our Country, it causeth vs by diuine Meditations to haue our conuersation there, whilest our bodies are on earth; and knowing that wee are risen with Christ, it maketh vs to seeke those things which are aboue, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God, and to set our affections on things aboue, and not on things which are on the earth.

Phil. 3. 20. Col 3. 1, 2.

And this is the conflict betweene the flesh and the spirit in our mindes and vnderstandings. To this wee may adde the combats that are betweene them in our memories; for these being but in part regenerate, and the reliques of corruption remayning in them, there is a great conflict whilest the memory so far forth as it is spirituall, laboureth to blot out and deface all worldly, wicked and sinfull impressions, and to haue imprinted in it, those heauenly and spirituall documents and instructions which haue beene entrusted vnto it by the sanctified vnderstanding; and whilest it endeauoureth to cast out the rubbish and noysome filth of prophanenesse, ribaldry, scurrilous jests, maliciousnesse and all manner of impiety and wickednesse, that so it may be a fit, sure, and faithfull treasury of wise Sayings and Religious Discourses. And contrariwise whilest on the other side the flesh and vnregenerate part standeth in direct opposition to the spirit, by re-printing and repeating those lessons of impietie and prophanenesse which before our conuersion especially, and since also wee had learned in the Schoole of the Deuill and the World; & by working in vs obliuion and forgetfulnes of all good things, whereby these heauenly treasures and spiritual jewels are (as it were) presently cast out of doores, as soone as they are receiued, these holy lessons are no sooner written but they are presently blotted out & cancelled; and these waters of Life doe no longer stay with vs, than common water continueth in a leaking vessell, or in a Siue.

§. Sect. 9. The conflict betweene spiritual and carnall memory.

Finally, there is also the like conflict betweene the flesh and the spirit in the conscience, whereby I vnderstand not the fight betweene it and the will, affections, and carnal appetite, which may be in those who are vnsanctified and meerely naturall, of which I shall speake more in the following discourse; but that conflict which is in the same faculty, as it is partly regenerate and renewed by the sanctifying grace of the Spirit, and partly vnregenerate, the reliques of sinfull corruption remayning in it. For as it is regenerate, it is so inlightned and rectified by the Spirit of Grace, that like a true witnesse, it giueth an infallible testimony betweene God and vs, excusing vs when we doe well, that wee may proceed in well doing, and accusing vs when we haue done euill, that we may forsake it and recouer our selues by vnfained repentance, yea, before the doing of either of them both, it giueth testimony and approbation vnto that which is good, that wee may imbrace and practise it, and also discouereth that which is wicked and sinfull, that wee may shun and auoid it. Neither doth it onely play the part of a witnesse, but also of a Iudge, and according to this true euidence, it either iustifieth vs or pronounceth the sentence of condemnation against vs. From the former whereof arise peace, comfort and spirituall joy in the Holy Ghost, whereby wee are incouraged to proceed in all holy duties, and from the other, either feare whereby we are restrained from falling into sinne, or sorrow vndrepentance not to be repented of, causing saluation; after that wee are falne. But contrariwise as the conscience is vnregenerate it remayneth blinded with ignorance & corrupted with maliciousnesse, and therefore is continually ready to play the part of a false witnesse, either dawbing and colouring ouer our sin with deceiptfull colours, that we may ignorantly fall into it; or excusing it, being committed as though it were veniall or none at all, that we may continue in it without repentance; or on the other side it is ready to accuse vs when we do wel, and in the seruice of God, or the vse of our Christian liberty about things indifferent, to raise in our minds superstitious feares and causelesse doubts, that so we being affrighted, may be hindered from Christian duties, or discouraged after wee haue done them. And so answerably it playeth the false Iudge, condemning where God and a good conscience iustifie, & justifying where they condemn. The which false sentence is the cause of carnall security, when we continue in sin, & of causelesse terrours & needlesse feares, when we are carefull to performe our duty. The which if at any time it be reuersed by a good conscience inlightened by Gods Word and holy Spirit, and the vglinesse and haynousnesse of sin be discouered and layed open; then the carnall and corrupt part of conscience which before seemed seared and senseless, being pricked and awakened, filleth the minde with loude cryes and grieuous accusations, with terrible horrours and hideous feares, and now as eagerly moueth to despaire, as it did before to security and presumption; telling vs that our sinnes are vnpardonable, and that it is too late to turne from them by repentance. But then againe the good conscience putteth it to silence, and allayeth and quieteth the fury of it, by witnessing vnto vs that our hearts are vpright with God, notwithstanding that wee haue beene ouertaken, and haue falne through frailty and infirmity; or at least by bathing it selfe from the filth of sin in the precious bloud of Iesus Christ, which is sufficient to purge vs from the pollution euen of those sinnes which are wilfull and presumptuous; with which washing of bloud applyed by the hand of a liuely faith, it causeth vs to joyne that washing of water, in the teares of vnfained repentance and amendment of life.

§. Sect. 10. Of the conflict betweene the Flesh and the Spirit in the conscience.

2. Cor. 7. 10.

CHAP. VI.

Of the manner of the conflict betweene the Flesh and Spirit in the will, heart and affections.

9. Sect. 1. Of the conflict betweene the carnall and renewed will.

AND thus haue wee shewed the conflict betweene the Flesh and the Spirit in the mind and vnderstanding with those faculties which belong vnto it. Come wee now to that fight which is between them in the will; the which is much more sharpe and sensible; for it likewise being partly regenerate and partly vnregenerate, there is a continuall combat betweene these contrary factions, whilest the regenerate part willeth and imbraceth that which is good, and nilleth and rejecteth that which is euill; and contrariwise the part vnregenerate willeth & chooseth that which is euill, and nilleth and refuseth that which is good. As for example, the spirituall part being guided by the vnderstanding, inlightned with sauing knowledge, chooseth and imbraceth God as the chiefe happinesse, and refuseth and contemneth the World and earthly vanities, the seruice of Sathan, and the momentany pleasure of sin, which in the end bring death & destruction, though they for the present be bitter to the flesh, and much more imbittered by afflictions, and these be sweet and delightfull to the carnall appetite. But contrariwise that part of the will which remayneth vnregenerate, being directed by that wisdome of the flesh which is worldly, sensuall and Deuillish, neglecteth and refuseth the present comforts of grace which it relisheth not, and the future hopes of heauenly happinesse, which it knoweth not, as being out of sight and beyond the apprehension of sense, vncertaine and not to be compassed without great difficultie; and contrariwise chooseth and imbraceth this present World with the vaine honours, vncertaine riches and sinfull pleasures of it because they are subject to the senses, and may be had in present possession. In which conflict they mutually encounter one another; and as they get their aduantages, sometimes the one and sometimes the other preuaileth, and causeth the aduerse part to giue ground. And this conflict with the issue of it the Apostle feels in himselfe, Rom. 7. 15. For that which I doe I allow not; for what I would, that doe I not, but what I hate that doe I. And againe, To will is present with mee, but how to performe that which is good I find not; for the good I would, I doe not, but the euill which I would

Rom. 7. 15.

would not, that I doe. So Augustine confesseth, that whilest he desired his found conuersion, he found himselfe bound, not with other mens chaines, but by his owne Iron and obdurate will. The enemy (saith he) did hold my will, and thereof made a strong chaine to binde me; for out of peruerse will, sprung vnlawfull lust, and whilest I obeyed lust, it became a custome, and whilest the custome was not infringed it became necessity, with which linkes infolded one in another, a chaine, as I said, was made, and held me bound in a miserable seruitude. And my will renewed which begun to moue mee to worship and enioy thee freely my God, and only sure ioy, was not yet fit to ouercome the other confirmed by age. And so my two wils, one old, the other new, that carnall and this spirituall, did fight betweene themselues renting my soule in sunder by this their discords. And so I vnderstood in mine owne experience that which I had read, how that the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh. And I surely was in both, but yet more I in that which I approued in my selfe, than in that which I disallowed. For in this rather I was not I, because for the most part I did suffer that vnwillingly which I did willingly. And a little after. Doe not diuers wils distract the heart of man when hee deliberateth what to preferre in his choyse? And all appeare good and striue with themselues, till at length one thing be chosen, vnto which all the will is carried, together which before was diuided in sunder. And so when eternity delighteth aboue, and the pleasure of temporall good detaineth below, the same soule doth not with the whole will, will this or that, and therefore it is distracted with much griefe, whilest it preferreth that in true iudgement, and yet cannot part with this through long acquaintance.

Confess. Lib. 8. cap. 10.

Sect. 2. Of the conflict between faith and infidelitie and presumption.

And thus wee haue seene the combat betweene the flesh and the spirit in the vnderstanding and will seuerally; now let vs come to that conflict which is in them being joyntly considered, betweene faith and the contrary extreames, infidelity and vaine presumption. The which I referre to both these faculties, because (as I take it) the first beginnings and least degrees of faith are chiefly in the will and heart, euen as the perfection and highest degrees of it are in the mind and vnderstanding. For after a man by humiliation and contrition is fitted and prepared to receiue faith, and after that the Law hath brought him to a true sight and sense of his sins, of the punishments which by them hee hath deserued, and that by himselfe his estate is desperate and remediless, being vtterly vnable to come out of this miserable & forlorne condition; and that the Gospell hath generally shewed that Iesus Christ, sent into the World by his Father to this end, is an all-sufficient Sauiour, who by his bloud purgeth vs from the guilt and punishment of all our sins, and by his righteousnesse and obedience iustifieth sinners; then the Spirit of God assisting the Ministery of the Word, worketh thereby in his heart some earnest desires to be made partaker of Christ and these benefits, which wee call hungring and thirsting after his righteousnesse: and this I affirme to be the first degree of iustifying faith, and not onely a preparation vnto it, because they are pronounced blessed who thus hunger and thirst after Christ and his righteousnesse, and there is no blessednesse to those who liue in the state of infidelity. Then there is wrought in his will a firme resolution to chuse Christ alone for his Sauiour, and to rest and relye vpon him onely for his saluation, which is the second degree of true faith, vnto which when the Christian hath attained by the liuely sense and experimentall feeling of Gods loue in his holy Ordinances, of the vertue and power of Christs Death and Resurrection for the mortifying of his sins, and the renewing and quickening of him in all sauing graces, and finally, by his daily walking with God in the works of holinesse and righteousnesse, and that sweet communion which he hath with him in spirituall exercises, hee groweth from one degree of faith to another, till at last there be wrought in the mind not onely a certaine, but also a full perswasion of Gods loue, the remission of his sins and his owne saluaion. But yet the flesh and reliques of corruption remayning in vs, when wee haue attained vnto the greatest perfection which this life yeeldeth; as in the part regenerate, there is full and certain perswasion, so in the vnregenerate part dwelleth doubting, infidelity and vaine presumption, which continually assault one another, and sometimes the one, sometimes the other preuayleth and getteth the better in the particular skirmishes, although in the conclusion and end of the fight, faith alwayes ouercommeth and obtaineth a full and finall victory. In the meane time, euen after that by faith we haue laid hold on the promises, and haue growne to a great measure of strength, and to an high degree of perswasion, doubting and infidelitie taking the opportunity of some grieuous temptation, doe giue vnto our faith many wounds and foyles, of which notwithstanding it recouereth vpon the renewing of our couenant with God, receiving the Sacrament which is the seale of it, the applying afresh of Gods gracious promises, the remembrance of his former mercies, and the renewing of our repentance, especially for our latter slips and fals. And this we see in the example of Sara and Abraham, who after that by faith they had receiued Gods promise, were so farre foyled with doubting, that they could think of no meanes of bringing it to passe, but by substituting Hagar in her place. Of Peter who beleeuing in his Lord and Master, so rested vpon his Word and Power, that he walked towards him on the waters, but sunke into the water, after he had first sunke through doubting and vnbeliefe, when he saw a boysterous blast of wind threatning a storme, and therefore was reproued for his doubting. So the father of the possessed childe cryeth out, I beleeue, Lord helpe mine vnbeliefe. But most notably doth this appeare in the example of those great Worthies Iob and Dauid; for the former we shall see him sometime complayning as a man vtterly desperate, cursing the day of his Natiuity, and challenging God as his enemy, and at another time professing his faith and assurance of saluation, and resoluing that though God should kill him, yet hee would still trust in him. And for the other we shall see him in the Booke of the Psalmes, one while (as it were) a man vtterly rejected of God and forsaken, and soone after (as it were) riding in triumph after victory, and euen glorying in the strength of his faith and confidence in God. Whereby it appeareth that there is in euery man regenerate a notable conflict betweene faith and vnbeliefe, whereof it commeth to passe, that Gods dearest children may oftentimes, not onely be foyled with diffidence and doubting, but also in some grieuous temptations may fall into some despaire of Gods mercy and loue towards them; the which notwithstanding differeth from that despaire which is in the wicked and reprobate, in that theirs is totall and finall, whereas the faithfull lie in it onely for a time, whilest the violence of the temptation pressed vpon them by the Deuill and the flesh last, and is not totall, seeing their faith euen in the greatest brunt fighteth and striueth against it, and in the end getteth the vpper hand. Contrariwise, our faith is sometime assaulted with presumption, whereby the flesh moueth vs falsly to apply the promises, and to presume of Gods loue and our owne saluation, for though these doe potentially belong to all the faithfull, yet they cannot actually be applyed vnto them, so long as they liue and lie securely in some knowne sins without repentance, especially those promises which concerne temporary benefits, which are present pledges & pawns of Gods loue and fauour. But against these also faith preuayleth, when as it purifieth our hearts, bringing vs to a sight and sense of our sinnes, to a loathing and detestation of them, and to a constant resolution and earnest endeauour to labour to forsake them for the time to come; and so againe afresh applyeth the promises vnto vs, as hauing now iust interest and right vnto them.

Math. 5. 6.

Heb. 11. 11. Rom. 4. 19.

Matth. 14 30.

Iob 3.1.3. & 7. 20. & 6,4.

Iob. 13,15. & 19.25.

Psal. 42.6. & 73 13,77,10. & 23 4.31.23.46.2.

¶. Sect. 3. That the conflict betweene the flesh and the spirit in the superiour faculties: the like may be obserued in the inferiour seated in the heart, as affections, passions and sensuall appetite; the which though they be no more corrupt than the other, yet the corruption in them is much more sensible, and though the conflict be no more dangerous, yet is it much more turbulent and violent. For as the poyson in the braine is as mortall and pernicious as any other, and not resting there alone, but diffusing it selfe into all the parts of the body, doth benumme and dead them; but that which is receiued into the stomacke is much more raging and painfull, sending vp poysonous vapours into the head wherewith it is annoyed and mortally affected: so the poyson of corruption hauing tainted the vnderstanding faculties, doth from thence descend to the heart and affections, infecting them with their malignity; but that which is infused into them, doth cause a more raging and violent disease, which is more sensible and grieuous, and becommeth more dangerous to the soule sick in sinne, because these inferiour faculties being corrupted, doe worke also vpon the will and vnderstanding, striking vp their poyson backe againe vnto them with redoubled violence. For as the outward obiects moue and affect the senses, and they the heart and affections, so they being thus moued doe moue the wil, and the will draweth also the iudgement and vnderstanding. But though these sensuall faculties are more grossely poysoned, and therfore seeme more desperately incurable; yet the Spirit of God working also vpon these parts, doth purge them from their contagious humours, and comforteth the heart with such spirituall cordials, and strengtheneth it with such heauenly antidotes, that spirituall health is in some measure recouered. But for as much as in this life the poyson of corruption is not wholly expelled, and so they are not fully perfected, there is a continuall conflict betweene health and sickneſse, the antidotes and the poyson, the heart and affections, as they are renewed and sanctified, and as they remayne corrupted and vnregenerate. For the hard stone in the heart striueth with the soft flesh, rebellion with obedience, corruption with grace, and whilest the Spirit draweth the heart vnto God, and spirituall and heauenly things, that it may inseparably cleaue and adhere vnto them, the flesh pulleth it backe & withdraweth it from them, and laboureth to keepe it still fixed and fastned vpon earthly & worldy vanities.

flict betwe ene the flesh & the Spirit is most turbulent and sensible in the affections & sensuall appetite.

¶. Sect. 4. Of the conflict betweene the affections and passions.

And from the same cause springeth that continuall conflict which is betweene the affections and passions, wherein sometimes the same affections diuided (as it were) betweene grace and corruption, doe fight and striue against themselues, and sometimes being crosse matched doe mutually oppose and and encounter other affections and passions which are contrary & opposite vnto them; the former combate being exercised in contrary, the latter about the same subjects. Thus the loue of God, and of spirituall and heauenly things is assaulted with selfe-loue, loue of the world, and hatred of those Diuines excellencies; Affiance in God, his prouidence and promises, with confidence in the creatures, and diffidence in the all-sufficient creatour; zeale of Gods glory with carnall blind zeale, coldnesse and lukewarmenesse: the feare of God which is ingenuous and filiall, with feare of men, and that feare of God which is slauish and seruile; Hope in God, with earthly hopes; and also with presumption and despaire; sorrow for sinne, with worldly sorrow which causeth death, and also with retchlesnesse and carnall securitie; joy in the holy Ghost and spirituall rejoycing in God, with carnall joy in the pleasures of sinne, and desperate griefe for worldly losses; Alacritie and chearefulnesse in Gods seruice, with carnall chearefulnesse in pursuing our sensuall and sinfull lusts, and also with lumpish heauinesse, dulnesse, deadnesse of heart and carnall wearinesse. In which conflict though the spirit receiue many foyles through the raging violence of these wilde and rebellious passions, and is oftentimes so wounded, that in outward appearance there seemeth to bee no life remaining, yet it proueth to bee but a dangerous sownd, out of which recouering with redoubled valour, it reneweth the conflict and getteth the victory. Though it seeme but a small sparke remaining of a great fire, almost extinguished with a flood of passions, and so couered vnder the ashes of corruptions that it scarce appeareth, yet when the spirit of God doth blow vpon it, it encreaseth in strength to a great flame; and finally though whilest the storme lasteth, like a ship in a mighty tempest, it is so hid vnder the waues of sinfull passions, that scarce any shew or semblance of grace remaineth, yet the good spirit of God asswaging the tempest and becalming these rough and raging Seas, like the ship which seemeth lately suncke, they re-appeare & shew themselues in their former beautie, and being helped on with that diuine breath, they carry vs forward in all Christian courses (as it were) vnder full sayles, with a prosperous wind and tide.

CHAP. VII.

Of the effects which this Conflict betweene the flesh and the spirit produceth in vs.

Sect. 1. That the man regenerate cannot, with full consent of will chuse or refuse either good or euill.

HEE haue seene the manner of the conflict betweene the flesh and the spirit in our seuerall parts and faculties: now let vs briefly consider of the effects which it produceth in vs. And these are either in the will and desires, or in the workes and actions. Concerning the former; from this conflict betweene the flesh and the spirit, arising from the imperfection of our regeneration this effect is wrought and caused in the man regenerate, that hee cannot with his whole will and full consent, either choose and embrace, or refuse and reject either good or euill; because being partly regenerate and partly vnregenerate, his will is deuided, and accordingly doth at the same time refuse and choose, both the euill and the good. For when the will as it is regenerate would doe that which is good, or auoide and shun that which is euill, that part which remaineth vnregenerate struggleth and hindereth, and when this would embrace the euill or refuse the good, the regenerate part resisteth and opposeth. And this is that Law which the Apostle saith hee found in himselfe, namely, that when hee would doe good, euill was present with him; and that when hee delighted in the law of God after the inner man, he saw another law in his members, warring against the law of his minde, and bringing him into the captiuity of the law of sinne which was in his members. From whence ariseth a notable difference betweene the sins of the regenerate and the vnregenerate, which though they be all one in respect of the act and deed done, yet not in respect of the agent and manner of doing. For the regenerate man cannot commit a knowne sinne with full consent of will, but there is a reluctation and resisting against the flesh, not onely in his conscience, but also in his heart, will and affection. For being spirituall and regenerate in all the faculties of his soule, the chiefe and principall part of his will adhereth to the law of righteousnesse desiring in all things to yeeld obedience vnto it. And consequently it resisteth the motions of the flesh, willing that which it willeth; And if through frailty and weakenesse it be ouercome, it hateth and and detesteth that sinne with which it is taken captiue, and maketh the Christian to be much displeased with himselfe because hee hath committed it. Hee consenteth to the law of God that it is holy and good, and is more delighted in it, than in the bewitching pleasures of sinne. An example whereof we haue in Dauid, who though by his flesh he was drawne, not onely in his will to embrace, but also in his actions to practise some grieuous sinnes, yet hee truely saith of himselfe, that in his heart hee hated euery falsoway, and that he would haue respect to Gods statutes continually. But the vnregenerate man though he sometime feeleth some pangs of conscience checking him for his sinnes, so as hee cannot securely sleepe in them without disturbance, yet he liketh and loueth

Rom. 7. 21. 23.

Psal. 119. 104. 128.

loueth them with all his heart, he willingly obeyeth his sinnefull lusts, he pleaseth and delighteth himselfe in them; neither doth any thing trouble him, but the feare of a guilty conscience, apprehending and expecting deserued punishment; so that hee inuerteth the Apostles speech and is ready to say, the euill I loue that doe I not, but the good I hate that doe I.

Q. Sect. 2. The regenerate man cannot at all times doe the euill which the flesh chuseth. Gen 39.9.

The effects which arise from this conflict in the actions and workes of the man regenerate are diuers: first that hee cannot doe the euill at all times which the flesh chuseth and imbraceth. And this Ioseph intimateth in his deniall of the wicked suite which his mistresse made vnto him: How can I doe this great wickednesse and sinne against God? And what restrained him? surely the feare of God and his holy spirit which would not suffer him to fall into so great a wickednesse. Secondly that hee cannot commit sinne as the wicked doe with full consent of will; for sinne being deposed from its regency, cannot raigne and rule in the whole man as in times past, but is confined vnto a part alone; and so farre forth as wee are regenerate wee cannot sinne. According to that of the Apostle; Hee that committeth sinne is of the Diuell, whosoeuer is borne of God doth not commit sin, for his seed (that is regeneration or the seed of the spirit) remaineth in him; and hee cannot sinne because hee is borne of God. 1. Ioh. 3.9. Thirdly that hee cannot walke in the way of sinners, but propoundeth vnto himselfe to worship and serue the Lord in holinesse and righteousnesse; in which course though sometime he slippeth and falleth, and sometime erreth out of the right way for a little space, yet the Spirit of God dwelling in him and conuincing him of his sinnes, and shewing vnto him the digressions and errors of his life, exciteth him to rise againe after his fals, and to returne into his old and right way by renewing his repentance. Whereby it appeareth that they who liue and continue in knowne sinnes, and make a daily practice of committing wickednesse, haue not the worke of regeneration so much as begun in them, though they make neuer so glorious a profession, and (like Herod) doe many things prayse-worthy in the sight of men.

Q. Sect. 3. By reason of this conflict he cannot doe the good hee would.

Secondly, by reason of this conflict the man regenerate cannot doe the good hee would, nor yeeld that perfect obedience to Gods law which it requireth and hee desireth. So the Apostle out of his owne experience saith, that the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, so that wee cannot doe the things that we would. Gal. 5.17. Rom. 7.15.18. And againe; what I would that doe I not, but what I hate, that doe I. To will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good I find not. For when hee would runne the Christian race, the sinne that compasseth him doth clinge about his necke, and either maketh him for wearinesse to sit downe, or to runne forward slowly and with great difficultie. It giueth him such blowes and wounds, that hee is often foyled and faileth in his course; and when he recouereth himselfe and riseth by repentance, though hee laboureth and much desireth to redeeme his lost time with his future hast and swiftnesse, yet after his wrastling & combate, he goeth on his iourney but haltingly, yea and is often times so dazled and blinded with the deceits of the flesh, that he erreth and goeth astray, and oftentimes is haled with violence into the by-wayes of sinne and wickednesse. Whereof it is that our best obedience is imperfect, euen after wee are regenerate, and our best actions so stained and defiled by our sinfull flesh, that were not their imperfections couered with Christs perfect obedience, and their pollutions washed away in his blood, they would neuer be acceptable in the sight of God; for though they spring from the pure fountaine of Gods spirit, yet running through the filthy puddle of our sinnefull flesh, they are hereby defiled and loose their native beautie and puritie.

Heb. 12.1. Hab. 1.13.

Q. Sect. 4. That though the flesh cannot wholly hinder the spirit from good actions, yet it interrupteth it in them.

It is true, that the flesh in this conflict doth not wholly hinder and withdraw the regenerate man from performing of his duty, nor alienate his mind and heart from the study and embracing of godlinesse and righteousnesse, but yet it still endeauoureth to doe it, and though it cannot make him to stand still or turne backe againe, yet like a heauy burthen is presseth him downe and hindereth him in his iourney; though it cannot make him desist running the Christian race, yet it casteth many blocks in his way, and often trippeth at his heels to make him stumble & fall; though it cannot quench and extinguish his desire to serue and please God, yet it much abateth the heate and feruour of his zeale; and though it cannot quite crush and sincke him; yet it will so shrewdly bowe and buckle him together, that hee is ready to complaine with Dauid, that he is crooked and bowed downe greatly, and therefore goeth mourning all the day long. Psal. 38.6. The consideration whereof should moue euery Christian to bee humbled in the sight of his owne frailtie, wants and imperfections, to deny himselfe and his owne righteousnesse, that hee may wholy rest vpon the perfect and al-sufficient righteousnesse and obedience of Iesus Christ for his justification, and to ascribe vnto God the whole glory and prayse of his saluation. For the mind, will, heart and affections, which are the causes and fountaines from which all our workes doe spring, being in part regenerate, and in part vnregenerate, partly spirituall and partly carnall, all our workes and actions which proceed and spring from them Esa. 64.6.

them must needs bee of the like nature. So also it should moue vs to worke out our saluation with feare and trembling, and whilest wee stand to take heede of falling; seeing wee are so full of frailty, and are so much weakened vnto all good actions through the malignitie and continuall opposition of our sinnefull flesh. This should make vs to keepe a narrow watch ouer our hearts, that they bee not hardened through the deceitfulnesse of sinne, and to lift vp the hands which hang downe, and the feeble knees, and to make straight pathes for our feete, least that which is lame be turned out of the way, as the Apostle exhorteth. It should cause vs to mourne and grone in the sight and sense of our carnal corruption, hindering vs in all good actions, and leading vs captiue vnto sinne, and to cry out with the Apostle, wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer me from the body of this death? Finally it should moue vs to poure forth daily vnto God most feruent and effectuall prayers, desiring him to annoynt our stiffe limbes with the oyle of his Spirit, and to enlarge our hearts, that wee may runne more chearefully and swiftly in the way of his Commandments, to strengthen vs daily with his might, and to send continually into vs fresh ayds of his sanctifying graces, whereby wee may bee inabled to withstand the continuall assaults of the flesh, to subdue and mortifie it with the lusts thereof, that it may not bee able to resist the good motions of his Spirit, and hinder our Christian course in the way of godlinesse; and in his good time wholy to abolish this our enemy, and to giue vnto vs a full and a finall victory ouer it in Iesus Christ.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the subject of this Conflict betweene the flesh and the spirit.

§. Sect. 1. There can be no conflict in them that are perfectly sanctified.

THe next point to be considered in this conflict betweene the flesh and the spirit, is the subject of it where and in whom it is fought; The which is such persons as are regenerate, and the faithfull onely, whilest they liue in the world: for in them only is the cause of this conflict, which is the cohabitation of these enemies which assault and resist one another. Neither can there bee any such combate in the glorified Saints, because they are perfectly sanctified, and haue no reliques of the flesh or sinnefull corruption remaining in them, and consequently no enemy to oppose and resist the spirit. For whereas it may be obiected that there was a conflict in our Sauiour who was perfectly holy, when being in his agony he prayed to haue the cup passe from him, and then submitted his will to his Fathers, Not my will but thine bee done; To this I answere, that this was not the conflict betweene the flesh and the spirit; but as the Schoolemen speake betweene two wils in Christ, the superiour and the inferiour, or the will of reason, and the will of sensuality, the one being the will of the flesh or naturall appetite and concupiscence, the other the will of the man or the reasonable creature, as the Apostle Iohn seemeth to distinguish them. Thus the Disciples hauing long watched, by their inferiour will and sensuall appetite desired sleepe; But the will of reason should haue ouerruled this, and therefore because it did not, our Sauiour reproueth them, Could you not watch with me one houre? So a man may by his inferiour will desire to eate and drinke, and in his superiour will may desire rather to abstaine, that it may bee conformable to Gods reuealed will, requiring that wee should humble our selues by fasting and prayer. So when death approacheth a man may in his inferiour will and naturall appetite, desire to liue, and yet in his reasonable will submit himselfe to Gods good pleasure; Yea desire in many respects to bee dissolued and to bee with Christ. And thus our Sauiour being man and in all things like vnto vs, sinne onely excepted, desired that the cup of his passion might passe from him in his inferiour will and naturall appetite, which shunneth death and seeketh the preseruation of it selfe; but in his reasonable will considering the end why hee came into the world, which was by his death to glorifie God in perfecting the worke of our redemption, he ouerruled the naturall appetite and did wholy submit himselfe to the will of his Father. Neither is the sensuall will sinnefull and vnlawfull, when it is subiected to the reasonable, but when it goeth about of a subiect to become a Soueraigne, and to resist and ouerrule that vnto which it should yeeld obedience. Euen as it is no fault in a subiect to desire that his owne will in things lawfull or indifferent may bee done, so that when hearing the contrary pleasure of his Prince he doe not rebell against it, but is content willingly to submit himselfe vnto it. Or if wee would haue this strife and conflict to be in the same will of Christ, wee may say that it was a combate, not betweene grace and corruption, but betweene diuers desires in the same will, which may lawfully be in a man, if they bee grounded on diuers respects; as a man may at the same time lawfully desire to liue, that hee may glorifie God, or to dye, that hee may cease to sinne and be glorified by him; hee may desire to eate, for the refreshing of nature and the repelling of the paine of hunger, and to fast, that hee may bee fitted the better for some religious exercise.

Mat.26.42.

Iob.1.13.

Mat.26.42.

ercise. And so our Sauiour desired to haue the cup passe from him, hauing respect to the preseruation of his nature, and at the same time was willing to die, that he might yeeld obedience to his fathers will, and perfect the worke of our redemption, and yet as one saith, Vtrobique Christus, neutrobique peccatum, Christ in both, but sinne in neither.

Q. Sect. 2. That this conflict is not in the vnregenerate.

Secondly this conflict is not at all in those who are vnregenerate and vnsanctified, for in these one of the combatants which is the spirit is wanting, and they are wholy ruled by the flesh vnder their cheife commander Sathan, whose kingdome is not deuided in the carnall man, but hee quietly raigneth without any resistance, and possesseth all in peace. Neither is there in him any power of opposition, for hee is not onely sicke, but Eph.2.1. starke dead in trespasses and sinnes; and there is not any sparke of spirituall life and grace which is wholy from the spirit, according to that of the Apostle, 2.Cor.4.4. Eph.2.2. to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. Sathans throne is set vp in them, and hee raigneth not onely like a King, but also like a God in the children of vnbeleife, hauing not onely their bodies and outward man, but euen their hearts and soules, their wils and affections at his command, so as they are neither able nor willing to make any resistance, but yeeld vnto him chearfull obedience. The flesh as Sathans Vice-roy also ruleth in them, and they willingly obey it in the lusts thereof. It raigneth in their mortall bodies, as the Apostle speaketh; Rom.6.12. yea in the most excellent parts of their soules, the mind and vnderstanding; for their wisdome is earthly, carnall and diuellish, Iam.3.15. standing in direct enmitie against God, and Rom.8.7. being in the flesh they doe only mind things Eph.2.3. of the flesh. And therefore the Apostle ioyneth both these together as being all one; fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind. And as they are wholy flesh so all their actions are Iob.3.6. fleshly and carnall; for as our Sauiour saith, that which is borne of the flesh is flesh, and as the Apostle telleth vs; when we were in the Rom.7.5. flesh, the motions of sinnes which were by the law, did worke in our members to bring forth fruite vnto death; and being the seruants of Rom.6.17.19. sinne, they yeelded their members as seruants to vncleannesse, and to iniquitie vnto iniquitie. And therefore in those who are meerely naturall and vnregenerate there can bee no such conflict, because they are onely flesh and no spirit, neither can it rightly be said August. Contra. Iulian pelagian. l.6.cap.11. Tit. 7.col.1136. (as Augustine affirmeth) that the spirit of any man can lust against his flesh, vnlesse the spirit of Christ doe dwell in him.

Q. Sect. 3. That the conflict that is in the regenerate and that which is in the vnregenerate differ much, and first in their grounds and causes from which they arise.

Howbeit wee are to know, that there is euen in the carnall man another fight and skirmish, which hauing some seeming shew and similitude of the spirituall conflict, is by worldly and ciuill men mistaken for it; in which respect it will not bee amisse to distinguish them one from another. First then they differ in their ground and cause from which they arise; for whereas (as hath beene shewed) the spirituall conflict ariseth from the grace of regeneration and sanctification, whereby the gifts and graces of Gods Spirit, being infused into all our powers and faculties, doe make warre against our carnal corruptions & fleshly lusts; the conflict which is in the vnregenerate, ariseth from those reliques of Gods image defaced in vs, opposing the image of Sathan and our sinnefull corruption. For the minde retaineth some small sparkes of the light of nature, and certaine common notions, which receiue some little strength and lustre from the view and study in the booke of the creatures, and yet a larger increase of illumination from the word of God, which inlightneth the minde euen of a meere naturall man, with speculatiue & literall knowledge, whereby hee is in some sort enabled to discerne betweene good and euill, truth and falsehood, right and wrong. With which light of the vnderstanding the conscience being directed, it retaineth also a power to excuse vs when wee doe well, and to accuse, condemne, terrifie and torment vs when wee doe euill. So the Apostle saith, Rom.2.15. that the Gentiles who had not the law, did shew the worke of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witnesse, and their thoughts the meane while accusing, or else excusing one another. The will likewise retaineth a kinde of freedome, not only about things materially euill, but also such as are naturall, ciuill and meerely morall, though herein also it bee very weake, corrupt and defectiue. And these reliques are common to all men, and in some are much encreased, and rise to a farre higher pitch and degree, by the common gifts of the spirit and meere ciuill graces, which in a farre greater measure are conferred vpon some men, than vpon others. But there being mingled in all these faculties a sea of corruption, with some small droppes of those created reliques, ioyned with a world of wickednesse in the inferiour and sensuall faculties of the soule; and many of these carnall corruptions being in their speciall kinds contrary one to another (although they generally agree in being all sinfull and euill) from hence ariseth this warre and discord betweene them like vnto theeues and robbers, who all agree together in robbing and spoyling of a true man, but fall out among themselues when they come to deuide the prey. Thus the vnderstanding by the light of nature or common grace discerning in particular actions what is good and to be embraced, & what is euill to & be shunned, informeth informeth the conscience accordingly, and leaueth it to its censure and determination, either to approue vs for the doing of good and forsaking of euill, or to condemne vs for the doing of euil and neglecting of good. Vpon which censure sometimes the will is excited and moued to embrace that which the conscience alloweth, and to refuse that which it condemneth; sometime being transported by its owne sinnefull corruption, and sometime ouerswayed with the violence of the inferiour will, carnall appetite and vnruly passions, it harkeneth vnto them and stoppeth the eares to reason and conscience. For example, the vnderstanding discerning that it is grounded on reason and equitie, that wee should serue God who created vs, and doth continually preserue vs, according to that of the Apostle; For we are his workmanship created in Christ Iesus, vnto good workes which God hath before ordained that wee should walke in them; propoundeth this to the conscience, that by the Law of creation, wee are all bound to serue him, the which approueth vs when we set our selues to serue him, and accuseth vs when we neglect the duties of his seruice. So the vnderstanding discerning Gods excellency, goodnesse and perfection, proposeth this to the conscience, that God aboue all is to be honoured and loued, the which light when it hath receiued from the vnderstanding, it accuseth and condemneth vs when wee loue or reuerence any thing more than him, condemning vs as guilty of sinne and liable to fearefull punishments; wherewith the heart being affrighted and terrified, it is cast downe with griefe and sadnesse, and oftentimes plunged into vtter despaire. But when the vnderstanding and conscience through the light of nature, helped and encreased by the Scriptures, haue thus in some poore sort and small degree performed their dutie, the will being peruerted with the baites of worldly vanities, doth rise vp in open rebellion against the vnderstanding and conscience, and though it acknowledgeth the truth of their propositions and conclusions, yet it commeth in with a non obstante, and resolueth notwithstanding they perswade to the contrary, that it will doe what it list, and goe on in its owne course, though it bee conuinced to bee the worst, because howsoeuer it hazardeth the soule for the time to come to the losse of Heauen and the torments of Hell, yet it bringeth the present fruition of earthly vanities. And no sooner is reason and conscience ready to subdue the rebellion of the will, and to perswade by other arguments vnto obedience, but presently a tumultuous route of vnruly affections and raging passions, come to rescue and strengthen the will in its rebellion by presenting vnto it the honours, riches and pleasures of the world, which it may gaine by following wicked courses; and if the reason and conscience oppose future dangers and would hinder the wils euill choise by further perswasions, they stop the mouth of reason with tumultuous rage, and with loud shouting and clamorous cryes drowne the voyce of the conscience, that it is constrained to cease directing and accusing, or to continue doing it in vaine and to no purpose. An example whereof wee haue in Laban; for though reason and conscience told him, that hee ought to vse Iacob well, and richly to reward his seruice because God blessed all hee had for his sake, yet his will being corrupted, and his heart and affections wholy caried away with worldly wealth, hee oppresseth and wrongeth him with one injury after another. So though reason and conscience told Pharaoh, that he did wickedly in disobeying Gods commandements and keeping backe his people from seruing of him, which made him sometime, when hee was on the racke of some present judgement, to confesse that hee had sinned, yet afterwards his heart was hardened, his will rebelled, and his affections being set vpon the profit of their seruice, did stop his eares to all perswasions, and to the accusations of his owne conscience. Thus Saul in his vnderstanding conceiued that Dauid was innocent; and therefore his conscience accusing him that hee did wickedly in pursuing him, made him to justifie him, and to condemne his owne vnjustice and faultinesse; Thou art more righteous than I, for thou hast rewarded me good, whereas I haue rewarded thee euill; but by and by his will and affections being wholy set vpon worldly honour, and transported with ambition, he harkeneth neither to reason nor conscience, but persecuteth him againe with more than wonted rage. Finally, thus Pilate, aduised by reason and conscience, justified our Sauiour as innocent and faultlesse, but his will and affections chiefly desiring to continue his esteeme with Cæsar, and to be applauded by the Priests, Pharisies and vulgar multitude, he reuerseth the sentence of reason and conscience, and vnjustly condemneth the innocent to dye with malefactours.

Ephes.2.10.

Exod.9.27.34.

1.Sam.24.17.

Secondly the conflict betweene the flesh and the spirit, differeth from that which is betweene the reason and will, the conscience and affections in the mouing causes, for the spirit is moued to assault the flesh by the true loue of God, which causeth it to make warre against carnall lusts, because they are odious vnto him, as being enemies to his grace, and contrary to his holy will; and by a filiall feare of his Majestie which maketh the man regenerate loth to yeeld vnto any motions of sinne, lest hee should hereby offend and displease him; but the combate betweene the con-

9. Sect.4. The second difference is in the mouing causes of these conflicts.

conscience and affections ariseth from selfe-loue and seruile feare, which make the man vnregenerate to withstand the motions of sinne in the will and affections for feare of those punishments, which will accompany his sinnes, as horrour of conscience, shame, corporall paine, eternall death and hellish condemnation, like the slaue who dare not offend his master, not because hee disliketh the fault, but because hee feareth the whip: or the thiefe who is restrained from robbing, not in obedience to the law, or because hee hateth sinne or loueth iustice and truth, but because hee feareth to be hanged on the gallowes. And so likewise they differ in their ends; for the end at which the regenerate man aymeth in fighting against the flesh, is that he may glorifie God in his victory ouer his sinfull lusts, and be more & more assured of his loue and his owne saluation; but the end at which the conscience of the man vnregenerate aymeth in opposing his corrupt will and carnall affections, is that hee may the better compasse his worldly desires, either in the obtaining of some earthly good, or the auoyding and escaping of some imminent euill. In which regard although the same effect be produced in them both, & both the man vnregenerate and regenerate doe or leaue vndone the same thing, yet the like actions which make a like glorious shew in outward appearance, are farre vnlike in the iudgement of God, because they arise from contrary causes, and are directed to contrary ends; and therefore the same actions done by the one are approued and accepted as lawfull and good, and of the other rejected and condemned as euill and wicked.

Q. Sect. 5. A third difference between the conflict in the regenerate and the vnregenerate, is that this is betweene diuers faculties and that in the same.

Thirdly there is a difference betweene these conflicts in respect of the combatants; for in the combate betweene the flesh and the spirit, there is a conflict betweene grace and corruption, in the same faculties, knowledge and ignorance, spirituall wisedome and carnall wisedome, in the same vnderstanding; willing and nilling good and euill in the same will; accusing and excusing for euill in the same conscience; loue of God and loue of the world, feare of God and feare of men, trust in the Creatour, and trust in the creature in the same affections; temperance and intemperance in the same appetite. And here all the powers and faculties of the whole man as they remaine vnregenerate, doe with vnited forces fight against the spirit, the reason, mind and conscience not excepted. But in the combate which is in the vnregenerate, the conflict is betweene diuers faculties, which are all carnall and corrupted, fighting one of them against another, as betweene the reason and the will, the conscience and the carnall concupiscence, passions and affections; in which whithersoeuer party preuaileth still the vnsanctified man is drawne vnto sin. And so also they differ in the manner of the fight, for that which is betweene the spirit and the flesh is done by contrary lusting the one against the other in a practicall, reall, and effectuall manner; but that which is betweene the reason and the will, the conscience and the affections, is maintained by logicall disputes, and mentall discourses, whilest the conscience inferres fearefull conclusions of punishments, and Gods ensuing iudgements vpon the wicked choyse of the will, and their yeelding to satisfie their carnall affections. For though in the creation the will was in subiection to reason, and embraced or shunned that which it approued or disallowed, and though this order bee commonly obserued betweene the faculties, euen in this state of corruption; yet after that man rebelled against his chiefe Soueraigne, there followed rebellion therupon in the inferior faculties against their superiour in the little common-wealth of man; and now the will yeelding obedience no further than it liketh and lusteth, doth often resist reason which is his King, and refuseth to follow its directions, and to allow of its conclusions, but rather embraceth the cleane contrary. Now whilest reason is earnest in perswading by arguments, and the will rebellious and violent in crossing and thwarting it, the conscience being awakened and rowsed vp, commeth in to the rescue of reason, restraining the will from embracing that euill it liketh, by the terrours of punishment which it adjudgeth the offender vnto, vpon the committing of the sinne: wherewith oftentimes when the violence of the will is abated and the courage thereof cooled, so that it beginneth to stagger and faint in its resolution, then enters in a tumultuous troope of passions & affections, as fresh aydes to strengthen the will in rebellion, which being themselues first hyred and corrupted to doe seruice vnto Sathan in sinnefull desires and actions, with the present pay or expected wages of worldly vanities, doe by the same proffers perswade the will to continue stiffe and obdurate in rebellious courses, and with all resolution to oppose it selfe against reason and conscience. But yet consider, that in all this conflict betweene these diuers faculties, there is no enmitie & contrariety betweene them in their natures, neither is there more grace or lesse corruption in the reason and conscience, than in the will and affections, for they as well as these doe like and loue sin with the pleasures and profits of it in its owne nature, if they were not deterred with the fearefull consequents of Gods iudgments and punishments, which they see will necessarily follow vpon such sinfull premises. Nor is there lesse enmitie betweene them them and Gods grace and goodnesse, for were they out of the gun-shot of danger, they would as willingly imbrace the pleasures of sin, as doe the affections and will; but here onely is the difference, that they are more politique enemies to God and all goodnesse, and more wisely louing themselues dare not seeke pleasure in such sinfull attempts, as will cause more bitternesse and sorrow in the end, through sense of punishment, than can be counteruailed with the short joy which they shall take in the fruition of their wicked delights; whereas the other being more rude and sensuall, doe onely looke vpon present objects, and therefore when they see a bait and booty of sin set out before them, they run vnto it with a headlong violence, not fearing nor caring for the imminent danger of denounced punishments.

Rom. 2. 14.

6. Sect. 6. The conflict betweene the flesh and the Spirit is in the same faculties.

But it is farre otherwise in the conflict betweene the spirit and the flesh, which is not betweene diuers faculties all still remayning and agreeing in their naturall corruption, & onely differing one with another, like Souldiers in the same Campe, and fighting vnder the same Generall, vpon their diuers reasons and grounds in the managing of the Warre, the one being more willing in running into dangers, the other more wary to auoid and escape them: but it is betweene the same faculties, fighting against themselues, reason against reason, and will against will, not arising from a Syllogisticall discourse vpon outward grounds of ensuing mischiefes, but from a reall change of their nature wrought by Gods Spirit, the which because it is but begun and imperfect, the reliques of sinfull corruption remayning and dwelling in the same house and heart with spirituall and renewed graces, these being euen in their owne nature as contrary one to another as fire to water, light to darknesse, good to euill, there necessarily followeth a continuall conflict betweene them, in which, as vnreconciliable enemies, they seeke to destroy one another; not moued hereunto by discourse of reason, no more than in the fight betweene the Lion and the Dragon, the Dogge and the Beare, the fire and water, but by the antipathy and contrariety which is in their natures. Whereof it is that a new born babe in Christ who hath little learning, and a small degree of knowledge and spirituall vnderstanding, doth with as great resolution withstand the encounters and motions of sinne, and endeauours to please God, though hee be scarce able to render a reason of his doings, as those who are growne vnto a riper age, and haue attained vnto an higher degree of learning and wisdome. An example whereof we haue in many poore, simple and illiterate men, who as conscionably auoid all sin, & practise the holy duties of a Christian life, as other Christians who are learned and haue a greater measure of knowledge and wisdome; and also in many Martyrs, who being vnlearned and not able to maintaine the truth of their cause by syllogisticall disputes, did yet as resolutely oppose themselues against Idolatry & Popish Heresies, and as willingly and couragiously seale the Truth with their bloud, as others who had attained to the greatest Learning. Which plainly sheweth that their opposition to errour and falshood, was not chiefly grounded on mentall Discourses (for then those who most excelled in learning & knowledge should haue as much exceeded in their resolution and opposition) but vpon that secret change of nature, made in them by Gods Spirit, by which they opposed that which was euill, not onely in their reason and vnderstanding, but also in their will, hearts and affections, with all other powers and parts of their soules and bodies. By which it appeareth that the Christian is no sooner conceiued of the seed of the Spirit, and by communication of sauing grace, receiueth spirituall life, birth and being, but he presently becommeth one of Gods Souldiers, and as naturally and voluntarily by vertue of his regeneration, fighteth against the Flesh, the World and the Deuill, without any pressing by the conscience, or inticement by the promises, or inforcing by the terrours of the Law denouncing punishment, if he goe not on this Warfare, onely out of his loue and obedience towards God and his owne inclination carrying him against these enemies, as it were by a naturall antipathy and inward contrariety, as the fire striueth against the water, health against sickneesse or life against death.

7. Sect. 7. The fourth difference is in their contrary effects.

The fourth difference betweene the combat of the Spirit and the flesh in the regenerate, and betweene the reason and will, the conscience & affections in the vnregenerate, is in their contrary effects; for by the conflict betweene the flesh and the Spirit, our faith is confirmed in the assurance of our regeneration, seeing the Spirit of God, which is one of the Combatants dwelleth in vs; of Gods loue and fauour, seeing hee hath chosen vs for his Souldiers to fight his battels; & of our owne saluation, seeing Gods Spirit fighting in and for vs, wee are assured of victory (for who can withstand his power or resist his will?) and of the Crowne of victory, euerlasting glory promised by truth it selfe to all those who ouercome. But contrariwise from the conflict of conscience in the vnregenerate (where in oftentimes the worser part preuaileth) ariseth doubting and incredulity, terrours, feares and vtter despaire in the apprehension of Gods wrath & those dreadfull punishments which sin hath deserued. Secondly, from the combat of the flesh and spirit, vnfained repentance is begun, or renewed and increased in those who are regenerate, nerate, for there is a change in them, principally in their wils, hearts and affections, whereby in all things they oppose the flesh, hating that which it loueth, and louing that which it hateth, willing what it nilleth, and nilling that which it willeth; vpon which followeth the purifying of the heart and the purging of it from all sinfull corruptions, the hating and forsaking of all sinne, and a hearty desire and earnest endeauour to serue the Lord in holinesse and newnesse of life; and not onely a reformation in part, but totall obedience in all our affections and actions, in the renouncing of all sin, and the imbracing of all good duties in the whole course of our lines. But there is no such change following the conflict betweene the conscience and affections, reason and will, onely there may be some pangs of sorrow and shedding of teares, caused not by the loue of God or hatred of sin, but by the apprehension and expectation of deserued punishments. There may be also some confession and acknowledgement of sin, whilest they are vpon the racke of conscience, and are terrified with the feare and apprehension, or pinched with the present sense and smart of punishment; and some promise, or it may be purposes, of leauing and forsaking their wicked courses, as we see in the example of Pharaoh, who whilest the hand of God was vpon himselfe and his people, confessed his sin and promised amendment. And finally, they may out of this seruile feare, leaue the most of their sins, and outwardly reforme themselues and conforme their practice in many things to such obedience, and to the performance of so many good duties, that they may thinke themselues and perswade others that they are notable Conuerts, as we may see in the example of Herod; and yet for all this, there is in them no sound repentance, no change of nature, no purging & remouing, but onely a temporary restraynning of their corruptions, wrought in them not by grace and the Spirit, but by other corruptions of a different nature, namely, seruile feare and terrour of conscience; As hereby it plainly appeareth, in that when as they are taken from the racke, and secured in their conceit from the feeling of further punishment, they returne againe to their wicked courses, and become more obdurate and rebellious than they were before, or if there is any shew of some amendment, yet it is not a through reformation, or a purging of the heart from all the filth of sin, such as followeth the conflict of the spirit and the flesh, but a reducing of the vnregenerate man from extremity to some mediocrity, from being a Publican and notorious sinner, to be a Pharisie, Hypocrite, or at the best a meere ciuill man, conformable to the Politique Lawes in the state, and no opposer to outward Discipline and Order in the Church. And this also is the worke of naturall reason, which perswadeth them to this reformation for worldly respects: whereas the other is the worke of the Spirit, which in loue and obedience to God beginneth and continueth this amendment in them; the fruit and benefit whereof redoundeth chiefly to the preseruation of humane society, the good of Common-wealths in the mayntayning of externall Discipline, which could not stand against the rage and fury of tumultuous passions and affections, were it not that their strength is abated and their violence restrained by the conflict of conscience; whereas the fruits of the combate betweene the spirit and the flesh are much better; namely, the aduancement of Gods glory by our worshipping and seruing him in spirit and truth, the strengthening and increasing of our faith, the inward purging and purifying of the heart and conscience from the hidden and secret corruption of all sin, humiliation in this life, and glorification in the life to come; for all that thus fight shall surely ouercome, and receiue for their reward, the Crowne of victory, euerlasting blessednesse. Thirdly, the warre betweene the spirit and the flesh causeth vnto vs the most secure peace, euen peace with God, when as becomming his Souldiers we fight vnder his Standard, against his and our enemies; peace betweene the faculties of our soules when as the inferiour faculties are in quiet subjection to the superiour, the affections harkening vnto and obeying the conscience, the will yeelding voluntary obedience to reason as Gods Vice-roy, and all to God as their supreame Soueraigne. It bringeth also with it vnspeakable comfort, spirituall rejoycing & joy in the Holy Ghost, because it assureth vs of Gods loue and gracious assistance, of a full and finall victory ouer all our enemies, & the Crowne of Victory euerlasting Glory. But the conflict of conscience in the vnregenerate causeth continuall garboyles and hot dissention, tyranny in the superiour faculties ruling onely by seruile feare, and rebellion in the inferiour, when as they haue power to breake the yoke of Gouernment; horrour and anguish of minde, disconsolate sorrow and hellish despaire, when the affrighted conscience beareth sway; or the mad and tumultuous joy of frantique men, when the wilde affections and disordred passions, by gagging and silencing the conscience, doe get the vpper hand, the which oftentimes lasting no longer than a blaze of thornes, doth leaue behind it redoubled griefe and desperate despaire. Finally, the conflict betweene the spirit and the flesh maketh the man regenerate with more care and diligence to obserue his own heart, and more conscionably to watch ouer all his wayes, that that he giue no aduantage to his sinfull flesh. It causeth him studiously to affect and earnestly to endeauour, in the vse of all good meanes, whereby the spirituall part may be more and more strengthened, and the flesh with all carnall lusts may be mortified and subdued; that so it may not rebell and gather strength to preuayle against it, as wee see in the example of the Apostle. But the conflict of conscience is commonly joyned with secure retchlesnesse; whereby the vnregenerate man doth carelesly neglect the causes and occasions of this bitter conflict, vntill he be ouer-taken with them, and onely auoideth the punishment and not the sin which causeth it, or the sin onely, when hee is sensible of the punishment. It worketh in him no care to mortifie his sins, vnlesse it be onely in outward fact, and that alone for seruile feare of paine and smart, and not in loue and obedience vnto God: yea, still hee loueth them as his dearest darlings, and when he dare not giue them place and entertainment in his workes and actions, as it were, in his outward roomes, hee secretly lodgeth them in his heart, as in his secret closet or priuate Chamber. It doth not make him vse any meanes to subdue his flesh and mortifie his corruptions, yea, rather it bringeth him into a sluggish despaire, which maketh him to cry out, that there is a Lion in the street, to starue his soule because hee will not take paines to plucke his hand out of his bosome and put it to his mouth; to stop his eares against all good counsell; and to harden his heart against all instruction and exhortation, whereby he is taught the way whereby he may come out of his misery, or is incited and stirred vp to walke in it, complayning that all these meanes are vnto him vseless & boordlesse, seeing hee is already irrecouerably plunged into a desperate condition. Or else if he vse at all the meanes of his recouery, it is onely in hypocrisie, not with a desire to profit by them, but onely to stop the cry of conscience, vpon this perswasion that God will be contented with this formall seruice, notwithstanding that he still goeth on in his wicked courses.

Marke 6. 20.

Luke 9.27.

§. Sect. 8. The fift difference is in the subiect matter or occasion.

The fift difference is the subiect matter or occasion, about which these conflicts are made by these diuers enemies. For the Flesh and the Spirit do in all things oppose against one another; the Spirit, the Flesh in all that is euill; the Flesh, the Spirit in all that is good. For there is no good action which the spirituall man performeth, but the flesh interposing, hindreth and interrupteth him; as in Prayer, hearing the Word, receiuing the Sacrament, Sanctification of the Sabbath, the workes of Iustice and Mercy, Temperance, and Sobriety, sometime wholy withdrawing him from them, and sometime distracting and disabling him in them, which maketh him to complaine with the Apostle; To will is present with mee, but I find not how to performe that which is good. For I find a Law, that when I would doe good, euill is present with me; the which is to be vnderstood, not only of particular actions but also of our whole life and conuersation. And contrariwise there is no euill knowne to the spirit, and done by the flesh, wherein the spirit doth not crosse and oppose it, (no not those sins which by carnall men are thought sleight and veniall) either hindering and restraining the regenerate man, that he may not fall into it, or mouing him being falne to rise againe by vnfained repentance. But the conflict of conscience extendeth not to the whole course of life, but onely to some particular actions, and yeelding vnto the will and affections in lesser, common and ordinary sins, it onely contendeth with them about the committing of such sins as are hainous and outragious, and especially those which are against the second Table, not so much regarding or restrayning them in those which are committed against the first.

Rom. 7. 18, 21.

§. Sect. 9. The last difference is in respect of time.

The last difference betweene these diuers conflicts is in respect of time; for the combat betweene the flesh and the spirit beginneth at the time of our regeneration and conuersion, and not before; and being begun it is constant and continuall to the very end of our liues, though it may haue some intermissions in respect of our sense and feeling, as when the spirit through the thicke vapour of corruption raised by the flesh, is cast into a slumber, or by some mighty blow wounding the conscience, astonishing the senses, and hardening the heart, is (as it were) cast into a sowne, and hath no signes of spirituall life remayning in it, out of which it alwayes recouereth being excited and re-enliued by Gods quickening Spirit. But the combat of conscience doth begin oftentimes long before conuersion, euen as soone as wee haue the vse of reason and vnderstanding, receiuing common notions from the light of Nature; but it is neither constant and continuall but only by pangs and fits, vpon the occasion of some grieuous sin already acted, or about to be committed; nor yet alwayes permanent and lasting to the end of life, seeing oftentimes by customable sinning the conscience becommeth so deaded & seared, that it taketh no notice of sin, nor opposeth against the will & affections, but (as it were) casteth the reines in their necke, neuer at all checking or curbing them in, but suffering them to run on in an head-long course, vnto the committing of all manner of wickednesse.

CHAP. IX.

That the Conflict of Conscience is not in all that are vnregenerate nor in them onely.

Q. Sect. 1. That no comfort ariseth out of the conflict of conscience.

AND thus we haue shewed the many differences betweene the combat of the Flesh and Spirit, and of the Conscience and Affections. Whereby it is plaine, that as the former giueth vnto vs comfortable assurance of our Regeneration, Adoption and Saluation, so there can no such hope arise from the other. For, as we see, it may be, and most commonly is in the wicked and reprobate, it hath no reference to God, nor springeth from Faith, Loue, filiall feare and obedience, but from carnall selfe-loue, and seruile feare of iudgement and punishment; not from any dislike of sin, the which the wicked in the hottest of this conflict doe loue with all their heart, but onely because they desire to auoide the punishment, like vnto children, whose teeth water when they see licorous meats, but yet dare not touch them for feare of the rod. An example whereof wee haue in Balaam, who with all his heart would haue sinned in cursing Gods people, that he might haue gained the reward of vnrighteousnesse, but yet durst not doe it for Balaacs Kingdome, because he was afraid to bee ouer-whelmed by Gods fearefull vengeance. And though these Combatants fight one with another, yet are both corrupt and sinfull, and both Souldiers in Satans Campe, joyning together in the common cause, howsoeuer dissenting in some particular quarrels, and fighting one against another, like contrary vices, prodigality against couetousnesse, presumption against despaire, rash foole-hardinesse against base cowardize; or like Pirats in the same ship who fall together by the eares about some particular wicked designes; though they all agree to rob the Merchant.

Q. Sect. 2. That the conflict of conscience may bee in the regenerate.

But howsoeuer this conflict of conscience be in the wicked and reprobate, yet weeare to know that it is not in them onely, nor yet in all. For this combat may also be in the faithfull and regenerate; yet not in the part regenerate, for the sanctified will and affections doe not oppose the sanctified conscience and reason, but there is a goodly harmony betweene them, the will and affections being guided & ruled by the vnderstanding, & it by God our supreame Soueraigne, and conscience approouing of this holy gouernment and subjection. But in the vnregenerate part euen the faithfull themselues doe feele this conflict in them betweene conscience accusing for feare of judgement & punishment, and carnall concupiscence drawing them to sin. The which is more weake on that side of passion, because their corruption is much abated and subdued, but stronger on the side of conscience, because it is excited with a greater illumination discouering more manifestly the odiousnesse of sin, and fearefulnesse of those punishments which it deserueth. Howsoeuer in another respect the violence of it is abated, namely, as it terrifieth with seruile feare, and denounceth against the offender hell and condemnation, from which those who are in Iesus Christ are freed and deliuered. But let vs know that though this fight be in the faithfull, yet it bringeth not (like that of the spirit & the flesh) any comfort or assurance of Gods loue, sanctification, adoption or saluation, because it is not proper to the godly, but is also common to the wicked and vnregenerate. Rom. 8. 2.

Q. Sect. 3. This conflict of conscience is not in those who are extremely ignorant.

Secondly, this conflict is not in all the vnregenerate. For first it is not in them who are either extremely ignorant or outragiously wicked. The former are of two sorts, first, such as are not capable of knowledge, as young children, Ideots, and madmen, who though they haue the facultie of reason habitually or potentially in respect of the vse, yet not in the act or exercise of it; & therefore their conscience receiuing no illumination from their vnderstanding, putteth no difference betweene good and euill, neither accuseth them for any sin, nor at all resisteth their will and affections. For though they haue conscience in them in respect of the faculty, yet like those that are in a dead sleepe, they haue it not in act and operation. Secondly, such as being capable of knowledge, haue through their negligence or wilfulnesse suffered those sparkes of the light of Nature to goe out for want of blowing vpon them by vse and exercise, or nourishing them with fit meanes (as it were) necessary fuell, which is the case of many Ethnicks, and Barbarians, yea, of some who would be called by the names of Christians, who through affected ignorance, are so farre from the illumination of grace, that they haue quite obscured and extinguished the light of Nature. Those also who are outragiously wicked haue seldome in them the conflict of conscience, because the Lord punisheth their other sins by giuing them ouer to their owne vile affections and a reprobate mind, whereof it commeth to passe, that their vnderstanding being darkened, and euen quite blinded, the common notions and the light of Nature being cleane put out and extinguished, their cōsciences also are seared & senseles, so as they neuer checke and controule them for any sins, and such a callum and thicke skin ouergroweth their hearts, and so hardeneth them through their often committing of knowne wickednesse, that without any feeling or remorse, they commit any manner of sin with with delight and greedinesse. An example whereof wee haue in those Idolatrous Heathens of whom the Apostle speaketh, who not worshipping God according to that light which they had by nature, and by looking into the booke of the creatures, they became vaine in their foolish imaginations, and had their minds so darkened, as that they gaue the glory of God to the basest of the creatures; whereupon God gaue them vp to vncleanesse, to their owne vile affections, and to a reprobate minde to do those things which are not conuenient. So else where he saith of them, that they walked in the vanitie of their minds, hauing their vnderstanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God, through the ignorance which was in them, because of the blindnesse of their heart, and being past feeling, had giuen themselues ouer vnto lasciuiousnesse to worke all vncleanesse with greedinesse. And writing to Timothy hee speaketh of some in these later times, who should haue their consciences seared with an hote iron: Wherby they become so senseless, that they take no notice of any sinne, nor accuse for the committing of any wickednesse. For as the greatest blowes which light vpon an anuile, doe not at all moue it, but it causeth the waightiest hammer to rebound back againe; and as the deepest gashes and most griesly wounds, giuen to a member which is mortified, or to a part gangrened, are not at all felt; and therefore the partie vpon whom they are inflicted neuer complaineth nor shrinketh for them: So when the gangrene of sin hath ouerrun the intellectuall faculties, blinding the vnderstanding and deading the conscience, though there be deepe gashes made in them they feele them not, and therfore bewray neither feare nor griefe by accusing and complaining of the causes of their euils.

Rom. 1. Verse 21. Verse 31.

Ephes. 4 17, 18, 19.

1. Tim. 4. 2.

2. Sect. 4. The conflict of conscience is seldome in simple people.

And among all these the conscience and affections, the reason and will are at a secure, sensles se and sinfull peace. There are diuers other sorts of men in whom their peace is not so continuall and permanent, but yet there is often a truce betweene them, which is sometimes of shorter, and sometimes of longer continuance according as the occasions be of their agreeing or discording with one another. The first are ignorant and simple people whose consciences through defect in knowledge and want of vnderstanding, wanting illumination and direction, doe seldome checke them for any thing they doe, vnlesse it bee so grossely wicked, that euen the light of nature doeth discouer and condemne it. And here the reason and will, the conscience and affections, continue friends and maintaine peace, because they are not able to discerne those iust causes which are offered of discording from one another; like enemies who lye quietly in their tents in the darke night, when the aduerse party doeth goe a spoyling and forraging, because they haue no light to discouer their attempts. Opposite vnto these are those carnall men who hauing a great measure of speculatiue knowledge, art, and learning, are able by their paralogismes and subtill sophistry, their nice distinctions, and cunning shifts, to make blacke seeme white, darkenesse light, falsehood trueth, and good euill: whereby they blinde the eye of reason, stoppe the mouth of conscience, and so corrupt and dazle the iudgement, that they can do what euill they list, and satisfie in all things their carnall lusts and affections vncontrouled and condemned. Of these it is truely said, that they haue much science and litle conscience, like those Lamiæ who were sharpesighted when they went abroad, but starke blinde, when they entred into their houses; or the Pharisees who sitting in Moses chaire were able to teach others their duties, and to rebuke and controule them for their smallest sinne, but were not able to see their owne carnall worldlinesse, hellish pride and damnable hypocrisie, & as our Sauiour chargeth them, could discerne a mote in their neighbours eye, though there were a beam in their owne. In these there is no conflict of conscience because like crafty and skilfull Lawyers, they can with false colours and collusions blinde the eyes of the Iudge, making their euill cause seeme just and good; or like cunning Theeues, they doe so subtilly and secretly atchieue their wicked designes, that when they come to be arraigned they shift off and elude the most pertinent accusations.

Matth. 7. 5.

2. Sect. 5. That the conflict of conscience is not in proud Iusticiaries and ciuill Worldlings.

Vnto these wee may adioyne proude Iusticiaries, who taking away from the Law of God the life and vigour of spirituall sense, do expound it after a grosse and literall manner, that so they may satisfie it with their grosse obedience; and because their obedience cannot reach to the spirituall meaning, therefore they frame a meaning sutable to their carnall obedience. And so justifying themselues as though they had done all which the Law requireth, their consciences sleepe securely in all their sinfull courses, & neuer accuse them for any sin; of which we haue an example in the Pharisies, who justified themselues when our Sauiour most condemned them; in the young Iusticiary who boasted that hee had done all which was required, when as he had done nothing; and in the vain-glorious Papists, who farre out-strip them both, affirming that they can fulfill the Law, and doe more than it requireth; for which indeed they haue speciall helpes, seeing they giue what sense they list to euery Commandement; and if they can make no sense seeme sensible & probable to their too dim-sighted followers, then for more surety they will quite cancell and blot it out, as they deale with the second Commandement, condemning their Imagery and Idolatry, and ha-

Luke 18. 11. Matth. 19. 20.

uing made none of one, they make of one two, by diuiding of the tenth, and so filling vp the number, that their theft and falsehood may not be discouered. Like vnto these are our ciuill Worldlings and ignorant Protestants, who placing all Religion in outward abstaining from haynous faults, as perjury, whoredome, drunkennesse & such like, and in performing formall seruice to God, according to the Princes Lawes, and morall duties of honesty and justice to one another, doe thinke that God is throughly satisfied when they haue attained to this period of perfection, which themselues haue pitched. And therefore their consciences are quiet, and suffer them to enjoy a secure peace, though they liue in ignorance and vnbeliefe, in the neglect of Spirituall Seruice, Swearers, Sabath breakers, and in all things follow those courses, which Ambition, Couetousnesse, Voluptuousnesse and Selfe-loue will prescribe vnto them.

§. Sect. 6. That the conflict of conscience is seldome in those who are transported with violent passions.

Finally, wee may adde vnto these such others, as are violent and furious in their affections, who whilest the fit and feauer of their passion lasteth, can commit any wicked out-rage, and neuer feele any conflict of conscience. Not because reason is quite blind, and conscience dumbe, but because seeing & speaking, they are not heard and discerned; no more than the speech of a wise Citizen & Senator in a tumultuous vproare of common people. Not because they vtterly refuse to doe their office and make resistance, but because they are so carried away and hurried with the violence of the throng, that they are not able to keepe their standing or hinder their proceedings. Or if we will, wee may here compare reason and conscience in them, to that they are in Drunkards, which are so hindred & disabled with intoxicating fumes, that they are not able to doe their functions, till by naturall heate they be spent and scattered. But in these commonly, when the heate and violence of passion is somewhat spent and abated, reason, and conscience especially, doth recouer strength, and (like a Prince foyled and put to flight by his rebellious subjects) recouering by force his state and dignity, of a King becomes a Tyrant, and so much the more seuerely keepeth them vnder, by how much hee hath tasted more sensibly of the mischiefes accompanying their rage and disloyalty. For thus experience teacheth vs, that when conscience hath beene foyled and wounded with rage and passion, their power being spent by their owne fury, it doth afresh set vpon them, and beating them out of their holds doth put into their place affrighting terrours and astonishing feares, & so terrifieth the heart with its vehement accusations, that oftentimes it sinketh into the gulfe of despaire; the which wee see manifest in the example of Caine, Saul, Iudas & many others. And these are the men in whom either a peace or truce is maintayned betweene the conscience and affections, there being whilest it lasteth no conflict betweene them. Now if we would know in whom principally this combat is fought, it is in such vnregenerate men as haue still remayning in them some common notions of the light of Nature, encreased by their study in the Volume of the Creatures, and in the Booke of holy Scripture, and their obseruation of the due execution of Gods fearfull judgements. In such whose conscience remayneth liuely and sensibly soft and vigorous, because it is not yet cautherized and seared with the often and wilful committing of haynous sins. Finally, in such whose affections are somewhat gentle and moderate, and whose hearts are not so hardened nor wholy taken vp with wicked infidelity, but that they giue some credit to Gods fearefull threatnings.

CHAP. X.

Whether the Conflict betweene the Flesh and Spirit be in all the regenerate, and whether, if it be, it bee in same manner and measure.

§. Sect. 1. That this spirituall conflict is in all the regenerate that are of yeeres.

WE haue shewed that the conflict betweene the flesh and the spirit is onely in the regenerate, and how it differeth from that conflict of conscience, which is oftentimes in many of the wicked; now let vs consider whether that combate bee in all the regenerate. Secondly whether it bee in all in the same manner and measure. Thirdly how we may know whether this conflict bee in vs or no. And lastly, if it bee when it beginneth and how long this conflict is to continue. Concerning the first wee are to know, that this conflict betweene the flesh and spirit is in all the regenerate, who haue receiued spirituall illumination, and haue the vse of their reason and vnderstanding, being possessed of Gods sanctifying graces, not onely in their habites but also in their acts and operations, not in the faculties alone, but also in their functions and exercises. For as long as these cursed corruptions (like the Canaanite in the land) doe co-inhabite with vs, they will continually be as scourges to our sides, and thornes in our eyes; and still there will bee warre betweene vs, whilest they labour to hold their possession, and wee endeauour to roote them out. And howsoeuer our chiefe Commander may sometime sound a retraite, and giue vs some intermissions for the renewing of our forces, and recouery of our breath, yet vtter dismissions wee shall Iosh. 23. 13.

not

not haue from this warlicke seruice, till hauing (like our Head and Sauiour) by death ouercome all our enemies, wee shall receiue the crowne of victory, and for euer tryumphantly rejoyce in the security of our peace.

§. Sect. 2. What we are to thinke of Infants and Ideots.

But whereas I say that this conflict is in all the regenerate who haue the vse of reason and vnderstanding, I doe from among them exempt such infants and ideots as want the vse of reason, and yet belong to Gods election; in whom God worketh for their iustification, sanctification and saluation, after an extraordinary, secret and wonderfull manner, applying Christ vnto them his righteousnesse, obedience, and the vertue of his death and resurrection by his holy spirit, who al-sufficiently supplyeth vnto them the defect of all inferiour instruments & meanes, and hereby purgeth and cleanseth them from the guilt, punishment and corruption of all their sinnes. Now in these there cannot actually bee this conflict betweene the spirit and the flesh, because they haue not the acts and operations of spirituall graces, but only the seeds of them, which though they may haue their potentiall inclinations to this conflict, yet no present actuall exercise and voluntary imployment of them in this spirituall warfare. Although it may bee, thus much may bee granted, that seeing by their regeneration there is a change in their nature, by which they are spiritually renewed in all their powers and faculties, there may bee in them all, an auersenesse in their renewed nature to their olde corruptions (as it were) by an holy instinct and disposition, wrought in them by Gods spirit, although there bee no discourse of reason or vse of vnderstanding, euen as wee see by naturall antipathy fire and water, light and darkenesse contending and striuing against one another, though they haue no will or reason to stirre them vnto the fight. For though (as wee haue shewed) the conflict of conscience ariseth out of logicall disputes and the discourse of reason and vnderstanding, and therefore can onely bee in them who haue the vse of these, yet this combate of the spirit springing from another fountaine, euen the change of a nature through spirituall regeneration, there may (in that sense which I haue shewed) euen in children and ideots, bee some kind of conflict betweene the spirit and the flesh, the seed of grace and of corruption striuing against one another. All which is to bee vnderstood not of all infants belonging to Gods Election, but onely of those which dye in their infancy, who hauing much to bee done for the quicke perfecting of that great worke of their saluation, whilest they are going that short passage betweene the wombe and their heauenly inheritance, God to manifest his infinite wisedome, power and goodnesse, doth thus worke in them after a wonderfull and extraordinary manner. And as for those who liue to riper age, and vntill they haue the vse of reason and vnderstanding, they haue not this conflict in them before their regeneration and conuersion, because then onely the spirit and its sanctifying graces doe begin to dwell in them, and to make warre against their carnall corruptions.

§. Sect. 3. That this conflict is not in all the regenerate in like manner and measure.

As touching the second point, we are to know, that the conflict betweene the spirit and the flesh is not in all the regenerate after the same manner, nor in the same measure, but diuersly as it pleaseth the Lord to glorifie himselfe in the manifestation of his wisdome, goodnesse, and omnipotencie, either by giuing vnto his seruants a great measure of strength and spirituall grace by which they obtaine an easie victorie, wherein the bounty of his goodnesse clearely shineth, or a lesse and scanter proportion, by which notwithstanding they are inabled as certainely, though not so speedily to ouercome, hereby magnifying the all-sufficiencie of his power, which more manifestly appeareth in our greater weakenesse. For according as the measure of our spirituall strength and riches of Gods grace, as also of carnall corruption differ in respect of their diuers proportions; such is the difference in this Christian combate betweene one faithful man and another. For some receiue but a small measure of spiritual illumination, the least degrees of faith, confidence, loue and other spirituall graces; and these through their weakenesse, commonly make weake assaults against the flesh and fleshly lusts, and as weakely withstand their encounters, whereof it commeth to passe that they stand in the battaile with much more faintnesse & frailetie, and receiue many wounds, foyles and falls, before they obtaine the victory. Though the Lord performing euen to these his gracious promises, doth not suffer them to bee tempted aboue their power, but either assisteth them by his owne might, or fitteth them with slight tentations, according to their weakenesse. Sometimes there is in the regenerate lesse reformation of their corrupt natures by the restraining grace of God and the common gifts of the spirit, by reason whereof the flesh is of greater strength and the corruptions thereof are much more malignant, raging and violent in all the faculties of their soules, especially in their wils, passions and affections. So that though they haue a great measure of strength and spirituall grace, yet they cannot with any ease, or in short time get the vpper hand, but there is much struggling and wrastling, sharpe and fierce assaults on both sides, as is betweene mighty enemies equally matched, and sometimes the one, sometimes the other preuaileth, and wound-

2. Cor. 12. 9.

eth and foyleth the aduerse party; like those warres of old betweene the Romanes and Carthaginians, and those mighty enemies the Turkes and Persians in these dayes. And because both parties continue in their great strength, hereof it commeth to passe, that these sharpe and fierce encounters doe also last euen to the end of their liues, vntill the Lord by death do put an end to the battaile, giuing vnto the spirituall man full and finall victory ouer all his enemies, and the crowne of victory euerlasting happinesse.

9. Sect. 4. That this conflict is often weake in strong Christians.

Finally the Lord to shew the riches of his bounty, doth sometimes giue vnto his seruants such a large measure of spirituall strength, sauing grace, knowledge, faith, loue, Christian magnanimitie and the rest, that like those mighty worthies in the time of Dauid, none of their spirituall enemies are able to withstand them, but in the first encounters after this strength receiued, they foyle, wound, and vanquish them, either leading them captiue without any great resistance, or else putting them to a shamefull flight. So as they neuer againe gather their scattered forces, nor once dare to enter the field; onely they may perhaps after a treacherous manner lye in ambushment, and make some attempt vpon some great aduantage. And in this case the spirituall souldiour gloriously tryumpheth ouer his spirituall enemies, and keeping them vnder with vnresistable power, doth enioy his victory with much peace and heauenly comfort. But all this while wee are to remember that the Christian Champion, and the Lords great Worthy, doth not thus preuaile by vertue of any naturall strength which hee hath aboue others of his fellow souldiers, but (like Sampson) through the gifts of the spirit, and the power of God communicated vnto him; which because through their pride and selfe-loue they are apt to forget, and being swollen vp in their owne conceipts, to rob God of his glory, by arrogating some part of the prayse of their spirituall strength and victories vnto themselues; the Lord leaueth them by spirituall defections vnto their owne abilities, and letteth loose their enemies to assault and encounter them. In which case they are vtterly vnable to stand in the least conflict, but are shamefully foyled, put to flight, and led captiue of sin, as wee see in example of Noah, Lot, Iob, Dauid, Peter, and many others. And then being discouraged and discomfited they complaine with Iob, that God opposeth them as a mighty enemie, making them his markes, and shooting against them his enuenomed arrowes; With Dauid, that God hath forsaken them, will be no more intreated, but hath shut vp his kindnesse in displeasure, that his terrours doe fight against them, dry their bones, and drinke vp their spirits; And finally with the Church they cry out; O Lord, why hast thou made vs to erre from thy wayes, and hardened our heart from thy feare? Be not wroth very sore O Lord, neither remember iniquitie for euer. On the other side the flesh all this while proudly swelleth in victorie, insulting ouer the spirit, and saying, is this the man that tooke God for his hope? And carryeth away the spoiles, vaunting it selfe in a wicked tryumph. But though God hath withdrawne himselfe a little, that the spirituall man might more earnestly seeke him, yet hee doth not vtterly forsake his souldiers and seruants, and those his graces in them; and though in respect of sense, motion & outward operation, they seeme quite dead and vtterly extinguished, yet in truth they are but in a swound, and (as it were) couered ouer with the ashes of corruption; and therefore when the Lord reuiueth them, bloweth vpon them with his spirit, and cherisheth their inward heate, by fresh fuell, and a new accesse of sauing grace, then Sampsons haire growing out againe, hee recouereth his strength, and the Christian Champion being grieued and ashamed for his former foyles, gathereth together his scattered forces, and with more than wonted valour and resolution encountering his enemies, he putteth them to flight, obtaineth the victory, and for euer after holdeth them vnder in more base subjection.

Iob.6.4.

Psal.22.1.& 77.8.

Esa.63.17.& 64.9.

CHAP. XI.

How wee may know whether this conflict bee fought in vs, that is, whether the spirit of God dwell in vs or no.

9. Sect.1. That euery faithfull man may and ought to be assured that the Spirit of God dwelleth in him.

THe third point propounded is how a Christian may know, whether there bee in him this conflict betweene the spirit and the flesh, or no; which is in effect as much as to know, whether we bee sound Christians, whether wee bee the children of God, whether wee belong to Gods election; and finally whether we haue in vs any sauing grace yea or no; seeing in all these, and these onely, this conflict is or wilbe fought, as soone as they are regenerate and conuerted vnto God. The which waighty question hath already in part beene resolued, when as I shewed the differences betweene the combate of the flesh and spirit, and the conflict of conscience, and the will and affections; and now commeth to bee more fully and directly handled. For the clearing whereof we neede not to make any further search, but onely to examine whether the Spirit of God accompanied with his sauing graces which is one of the combatants doth reside and dwell in vs or no. For if it doe, then there is no question but this this conflict is in vs, seeing it no sooner entreth and taketh possession of vs, but presently it maketh warre against our flesh with all the carnall lusts thereof, deposeth them from their regency, giueth them deadly wounds, holdeth them in subiection, and laboureth all it may, vtterly to displace and roote them out. Now euery faithfull man ought to be assured of this, namely, that the Spirit of God dwelleth in him; or if he haue not this assurance as yet, hee is neuer to be at rest, till it bee euident and cleare in his owne heart and conscience, as being the greatest question, and the waightiest and most important case of conscience, that can bee propounded or knowne of vs. The which as it may bee knowne, so no Christian ought to bee ignorant of it; as the Apostle implyeth by that interrogation: Know yee not that yee are the Temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? And againe, Know yee not that your bodies are the temples of the holy Ghost? And therefore wee must not content our selues with the doubtfull opinion of the Papists, nor with the vncertaine and vngrounded hope of carnall gospellers, but labour after certaine assurance that we are the Temples of God, and that his holy Spirit dwelleth in vs. Which that wee may studiously indeauour to attaine vnto, let vs consider, first that God in his Word reuealeth this truth of the Spirit's dwelling in euery faithfull Christian, by many infallible marks and signes, to this end and purpose, that we may take notice thereof, and labour to attaine to the knowledge and assurance of it, being a truth so important and comfortable. Secondly, if we doe not know that the Spirit dwelleth in vs, wee cannot know that wee haue any part in Christ; and consequently, that wee are true Christians, seeing the holy Spirit is the principall bond of the vnion betweene him and vs, by which he dwelleth in vs, and wee in him. Thirdly, if wee doe not know that the Spirit dwelleth in vs, wee cannot know that wee are justified; for wee haue nothing to doe with Christs righteousnesse by which wee stand righteous before God, till by our spirituall vnion he is made ours, whereby wee haue right and interest in all his benefits; we cannot know that we are adopted the children of God, vnlesse we know that wee haue the spirit of Adoption, whereby we cry in our hearts, Abba Father. Nor that we are sanctified, vnlesse we haue the sanctifying Spirit which is the beginner and perfecter of all our holinesse; nor that our prayers are heard of God, seeing of our selues wee know not how to pray as we ought, but it is the Spirit of supplication, which helpeth our infirmities, and teacheth vs to pray with sighes and grones which cannot bee expressed. Neither doth the Lord heare any Prayers but such as the Spirit inspireth, because such only are according to his will. And when without his helpe wee pray, Wee aske and receiue not, because we aske amisse, as the Apostle speaketh. Fourthly, vnlesse wee know that wee haue the Spirit, wee cannot know whether we are in errour or truth, or whether our Religion which we professe, bee true or false, because he is the Spirit of illumination, who onely inlightneth vs, and teacheth and leadeth vs in all truth. Now how shall hee shew vs other things, so as wee may know that he sheweth them, if hee doe not shew vs himselfe, and make it knowne vnto vs, that he dwelleth in vs, and teacheth vs? Fiftly, if wee be not assured that hee is in vs, wee can haue no sound comfort, because hee is the onely true Comforter, from whom all sound comfort springeth, and all other comforts of which hee is not the author, are false, vngrounded and meere delusions. Lastly, wee must labour after the knowledge of the fruits of the Spirit dwelling in vs, as that we haue faith, and that Christ dwelleth in vs, and therefore wee must also bee assured that wee haue the tree and roote; for the effect argueth his cause as well as the cause his effect, and not to know that wee haue the Spirit, is not to know that wee haue any grace.

Now wee may know whether the Spirit of God be in vs or no: First by the Ministery and meanes which it vseth to make entrance, and to take possession of vs the which is the Ministery of the Word of God: For when the flesh with the lusts thereof are somewhat amazed and affrighted with the Cannon shot of legall threatnings, making (as it were) a large breach into the heart and conscience, and the trumpet of the Gospell soundeth, offering remission of sinne and eternall saluation to all that beleeue and repent, then this victorious captaine maketh his entrance, assaulteth the flesh and driueth it into corners, taking possession of all for Gods vse, the great Monarch of Heauen and Earth. And this the Apostle sheweth, where he saith, that the Galathians receiued the spirit, not by the workes of the law, but by the hearing of faith; that is, the doctrine of faith contained in the Gospel of Iesus Christ. Whereof it is that the Ministers of the New Testament are by him called the ministers of the spirit; because by their preaching they prepare the way for the spirit, as Iohn the Baptist for Iesus Christ, and are (as it were) his harbingers, to take vp a lodging for him in our hearts and soules. So that wee may discerne the spirit by the meanes whereby it entreth, which is not by dreames, and extraordinarie reuelations, for this is the fanaticall spirit of Anabaptists, and Familists; nor by the preaching of the law only; For he commeth not in this great and strong wind, that rents the Mountaines, & breakes

in

1.Cor.3.16. & 6.19.

Deut.29.19.

Rom.8.15.

Rom 8.26.

Iam.4.3.

Ioh.2.10.27. Ioh.14.26.

2.Cor.13.5.

9. Sect.2. The first infallible signe is the ministry and meanes by which it hath beene wrought in vs,

Gal.3.2.

2. Cor.3.6.

1. King.19.11, 12.

in pieces the Rockes; nor in this earthquake which shaketh the foundations of mans heart, not in this fire which consumeth all sinners that come in the way of it: But when these haue gone before (like a peale of Canons that giue warning of the comming of this mighty Prince) then the still voyce of the Gospell is vttered by the Ambassadours and Heralds of the great King, and with it he entreth and seateth himselfe in our hearts (as it were) vpon his royall throne.

Q. Sect. 3. The second signe is the effects and fruits of the Spirit: and first by the nature of the gifts in vs wee may discerne the Spirit.

Secondly wee may know whether the spirit dwelleth in vs, and fighteth against the flesh, by the effects and fruits of it. And first generally by the nature of the things wrought in vs, and then by their constancie and continuance. For if the gifts and endowments which wee haue be but meerely naturall, or such as may be attained vnto by our owne art, industrie and indeauours, then are they no infallible notes of Gods sanctifying Spirit or sauing graces dwelling in vs, the which are supernaturall, diuine, and sent downe (as it were) from Heauen into vs. Whereof it is that the Apostle opposeth this Spirit of God and that which is in worldly men, the one against the other. Wee haue receiued not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God. And a little after, the naturall man perceiueth not the things of the Spirit of God. Againe, if they bee but the common gifts of the Spirit, as meerely Morall vertues, and restraining graces, which are common to ciuill worldlings, and haue been also in many Heathens and honest infidels, then cannot wee by them gather any assurance that the sanctifying Spirit dwelleth and warreth in vs against the flesh, onely there is a fight betweene conscience and affections, vice is curbed and ouerruled by vice, and one corrupt facultie by an other of the same kinde.

1. Cor. 2. 12. 14.

Q. Sect. 4. The graces of the Spirit may be knowne by their constant and continuall actions and operations.

Secondly the Spirit and the sauing graces thereof are constant and continuall in their actions and operations, daily more and more mortifying and subduing the flesh and carnall corruptions, and inciting vs vnto all Christian and holy duties; like the Sunne which from the rising shineth still more gloriously vntill noone day, or a liuely fountaine which continually springeth and sendeth forth its cleare and sweet streames; but the common gifts of the restraining Spirit doe worke and shew themselues onely by fits, like flashes of lightning which suddenly appeare and as suddenly vanish, leauing nothing behind them but grosse and palpable darknesse; or like standing waters and winter brookes, which swell and ouerflow vpon the fall of raine and descent of land waters, but soone after fall and are dryed vp in the time of drought. So the sauing graces of the sanctifying Spirit are lasting and permanent, euer continuing with increase euen to the very end of our liues; but all gifts meerely naturall endure but for a time, and (like the body) after they are growne to their full strength and ripenesse, they decrease, till by a daily consumption they come to nothing, as wee see in naturall knowledge and wisedome, which decayeth with age, vntill at last it commeth to dotage and childish ignorance.

1. Iob. 2. 17.

Q. Sect. 5. Of the particular effects of the Spirit, the first whereof is spirituall illightning.

But let vs descend to some particular effects which the Spirit worketh, for these arguing their Cause will plainely shew the residence and abiding of this holy guest in vs. And first the Spirit of God is the Spirit of illumination, inlightning our blinde eyes, reuealing vnto vs the things of God, and leading vs into all truth, according to that of our Sauiour; But the Comforter which is the the holy Ghost whom the Father will send in my name, hee shall teach you all things. And that of the Apostle; But yee haue an vnction from the holy one, and yee know all things. And againe; But the annoynting which yee haue receiued of him abideth in you; and yee needs not that any man teach you; but as the same annoynting teacheth you of all things. And hence it is, that this holy Spirit is called the Spirit of wisedome and reuelation in the knowledge of God. Yea but the wicked also may haue some illightning of the Spirit, as the Apostle sheweth, and which is more, they may haue a taste of the heauenly gift, be partakers of the holy Ghost, that is of the gifts and graces of the sanctifying Spirit, and haue also a taste of the good word of God, and of the powers of the world to come, yea and hereby they may attaine vnto a farre greater measure of knowledge than those who are truely regenerate, and how then can this be a difference, whereby wee may discerne the one from the other? To which I answer, that though there be no difference betweene the knowledge of the regenerate and vnregenerate in the quantity, in which respect the knowledge of the wicked, yea of the Diuell himselfe, doth oftentimes exceed the knowledge of the godly and faithfull, yet there are many other differences betweene them; for first the knowledge of the regenerate is much better grounded, euen vpon that infallible foundation of the holy Scriptures, the which they carefully and conscionably heare, reade, study and meditate in them, that they may bee more and more edified and inlightned, grounded and built vpon this sacred authoritie, as vpon the firme and vnmoueable corner stone; whereas the knowledge of the vnregenerate is chiefly founded vpon humane authorities, the doctrines and traditions of men, which as they are sometimes true, so sometimes false and erroneous, and neuer in themselues certaine and infallible. So also their knowledge is confirmed by the experience which they

Iohn 14. 26.

1. Iob. 2. 20, 27.

Eph. 1. 17.

Heb. 6. 4.

they haue of the things they know in themselues, by a liuely and powerfull sense and feeling of the operation of it, in their owne hearts and consciences, purging and purifying them from all sinfull corruptions, and renewing them to all obedience, and inuiting and prouoking them to the performance of all Christian duties of holinesse and righteousnesse; which moueth the Lord to reueale vnto them his great secrets and the mysteries of his Kingdome; according to that; The secret of the Lord is with them that feare him, and he will shew them his couenant; and againe, his secrets are with the righteous. Whereby they not onely know the things themselues barely vttered, but also Gods secret will and purpose in them. But the knowledge of the wicked is onely in theory and speculation, whereby they are enabled onely to talke and discourse of the things they conceiue, and haue no sense, feeling or experience of that powerfull working of it for their inward sanctification or outward reformation, but still lye frozen in the dregs of their sinnes, and neuer conscionably practise any duties, though they can learnedly and eloquently discourse of them. In which respect it is said, that the seed of the word taketh no roote in them, because their knowledge is not setled and grounded vpon these onely true foundations which neuer faile. Secondly the knowledge of the regenerate is more cleare, distinct, and particular, and therefore sufficient to direct and guide them, not onely after some generall manner, but also in all particular duties and actions; but the knowledge of the vnregenerate is more generall, confused and darke, onely inabling them to set downe generall rules of duties, or if particular, yet rather to others than to themselues, who are so blinded with their passions and carnall lusts, that their knowledge giueth them no sufficient direction for their owne cariage in particular duties. Thirdly the knowledge of the regenerate still applyeth the things knowne to particular vse, bringing the word of God home to their owne hearts and consciences; as the threatnings of the law for their humilation to driue them to Christ, to restraine them from sinne, when they are ready to fall, and to raise them being fallen by vnfained repentance. So Iob kept his eyes vnder couenant, that they should not glaunce wantonly vpon women, because hee knew that destruction was to the wicked, and a strange punishment to the workers of iniquitie. And hereby Ioseph was restrained from harkning to his mistresses wicked suite. How can I doe this great wickednesse and sin against God? And so likewise hereby they are inticed & spurred forward vnto all good duties, when as they feele themselues dull and slow. For so the Apostle hauing spoken of Gods fearefull judgement, he applyeth this knowledge to particular vse; knowing therefore (saith he) the terrour of the Lord wee perswade men, as though hee should say, I dare not knowing this terrible judgement, but perswade you to obedience and dehort you from sinne, lest neglecting my duty, I also bee lyable vnto it. And thus also knowing the promises of the Gospell, they apply them for their owne consolation; according to that of the Apostle; Whatsoeuer things were written aforetime, were written for our learning, that wee through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might haue hope. But the wicked by their knowledge apply not or misapply, they either apply all vnto others, or apply falsely vnto themselues, arrogating all the promises of life and saluation, though they doe not at all belong vnto them. Fourthly, the knowledge of the regenerate drawes them neerer vnto God, and vnites them more firmely vnto him in loue and true obedience. First in loue of God and of that truth which he hath reuealed vnto them; for when hee hath made knowne vnto them not onely his infiniteneſse in all perfection; but also his goodnesse and mercy towards them, then this flame of Gods loue kindleth in their cold hearts the fire of loue towards God againe, which maketh them to thinke nothing too much or enough which they can doe or suffer for his sake; whereby they are moued to make an holy vse of all they know, both for the auoyding of all which God hateth, whom they so loue, and the embracing and practising of all which hee loueth and requireth. But the knowledge of the vnregenerate is a light onely without heate which drieth them further from God, and alienateth their hearts from him, because they cannot apply to their owne vse his sauing attributes, but rather are terrified with his wisdome, power and justice, whereby he is able and willing to punish and take vengeance on all sinners. Neither doth it stirre them vp to any obedience, (vnlesse it bee for seruile feare) but rather enableth them to rebell and disobey more securely, whilest by their great learning, their subtill shifts and nice distinctions, they can more cunningly vntwist the cords of Gods Commandements which should binde them to their dutie, and so winde themselues and slip their neckes out of the yoke of Gods Law, that it cannot hold them, and whilest thereby they are enabled to defend their sinnes with their subtill sophistry, and to preserue themselues from just censures, their names from deserued shame, and to stop the cry of their consciences, that they may not checke and accuse them for their sinnes. Finally the knowledge of the regenerate bringeth them to true humility, and the better and more clearely they conceiue

Psal.25.14. Prou.3.32.

Mat.13.6.7.

Iob.31.1.3.

Gen.39.9.

2.Cor.5.11.

Rom.15.4.

ceiue of Gods goodnesse, power and glorious Majestie and of their owne misery, sins and imperfections, the more they abase themselues and become vile in their owne sight, as we see in the example of Abraham, who when he most neerely and familiarly conuersed with God, had the meanest conceit of himselfe, acknowledging that he was but dust and ashes; in Dauid who hauing attained vnto a greater measure of spirituall knowledge than his teachers, confesseth that he was but a worme and no man; in Iob who hauing come vnto a more cleare knowledge of God by seeing him with his eyes, abhorred himselfe in dust and ashes; and in Agar, who being inlightened with a large measure of heauenly wisedome, professeth that he was more brutish than any man, and had not the vnderstanding of a man. But contrariwise the knowledge of the vnregenerate puffeth them vp with pride, according to that of the Apostle, knowledge puffeth vp, but loue edifieth; and causeth them to vilifie and contemne others in comparison of themselues, as we see in the example of the Pharisies, who despised all them who confessed the truth concerning our Sauiour Christ as ignorant and simple ideots; But this people who know not the law are cursed. And the reason is because their knowledge is onely speculatiue, confused and generall, and doth not bring them to any sense and feeling of their sinne and misery, or to a liuely and experimentall apprehension of Gods sauing attributes.

Gen. 18.27.
Psal 22.6.
Iob. 42.5.6.
Pro. 30.2.
1. Cor. 8.1.
Iob. 7.48.49.

CHAP. XII.

Of the second effect of the Spirit whereby wee may know that it dwelleth in vs.

Q. Sect. 1. How the Spirit prepares our hearts for faith and then workes it in vs.

A Second effect of the Spirit whereby wee may bee assured that it dwelleth in vs, is the preparing of our hearts to receiue the grace of a liuely and iustifying faith, and the effectuall working of it in vs being thus prepared. It prepareth them, first by enlightning our minds, and by shewing vnto vs our sinne and misery by the Law of God, and that in respect of our selues wee are brought into a damnable and desperate condition, out of which wee cannot recouer by any means of our owne, nor by all the helpe of men and Angels. And when hereby it hath throughly humbled vs and made vs despaire of all our owne abilities, then it reuealeth vnto vs the infinite mercies of God, his free grace and eternall loue in his Sonne, and the al-sufficient merits of Christ, together with the sweete promises of the Gospell made in him, offering grace and mercy, for the forgiuenesse of sinne, and the saluation of our soules, to all that will receiue them by the hand of faith, and will turne vnto God by vnfained repentance; vnto which truth of God reuealed in the Ministery of the Word, the holy Spirit by a secret operation worketh an assent as being most infallible, seeing it proceedeth from him who is truth it selfe and cannot lye; which assent being effectuall worketh in our vnderstandings a perswasion that our sinnes though many and haynous, are yet pardonable; and in our iudgements a most precious esteeme of Gods mercies and Christs merits, from and by which alone wee receiue remission. In our hearts also this effectuall assent worketh an earnest and constant desire that they may bee pardoned, and to this end an hungring and thirsting after Christ and his righteousnesse; in our wils a firme resolution to rest vpon Christ imbracing him as our onely Lord and Sauiour and casting our selues vpon him alone for iustification and saluation; and in our actions a conscionable endeauour in the vse of all good meanes, whereby we may bee more and more assured, that wee shall haue our parts in the mercies of God and the merits of Christ. And these are the first degrees of iustifying faith which who so want are destitute of it; the which being wrought in vs, the Lord blesseth the meanes of saluation, which the beleeuer conscionably vseth with a desire to profit by them, as the Word, Sacraments, Prayer and the rest for the increasing of these first degrees in vs, vntill they grow from a graine of Mustard seed to a great tree, from an assent to an apprehension and application of the promises, with some assurance that Gods mercy and Christs merits belong vnto vs. Vnto which degree the most Christians who labour after it doe attaine, if death preuent them not and hinder them from comming from their spirituall infancy to their riper age in Christ. Now this faith being come to application of Christ and the promises, and some assurance that they belong to the Beleeuer, groweth daily in the carefull and diligent Christian to more strength, by his often feeling and experience of Gods loue, by his acquaintance with him in his holy Ordinances, by testifying and approouing of his loue towards God againe, in his continuall fruits of new obedience, the exercises of a Christian life in good workes, and by his cheerfull readinesse to suffer any thing which it pleaseth God to call him vnto for his sake, vntill at last it come to that plerophory and full perswasion of Gods vnchangeable loue, and our Election, Adoption and Saluation which was in the Apostle Paul, who was fully perswaded that nothing in the World was able to separate betweene Gods loue and him. And this is accompanied with such peace of conscience,

Rom. 8 38.39.
1. Iob 4.18.
1. Pet. 1.8.
Rom. 5.3.

ence, as passeth all vnderstanding. For when we are assured that we haue the remission of our sins, and are quite freed from them both in respect of their guilt and punishment, then the terrours and feares which did accompany them are taken away, and both Sathan and our owne consciences which did continually accuse vs are put to silence, so as they can no longer affright vs nor disturbe our peace. From whence springeth spirituall joy vnspeakable and glorious, whereby wee rejoyce not onely in the fruition of Gods benefits, but also in afflictions and tribulations, as the Apostle witnesseth, when as wee see our selues freed out of the hands of all our spirituall enemies, the wrath of God, the curse of the Law, Death, Hell, and Condemnation, and now brought into an happy and blessed estate of grace and saluation, in and by Iesus Christ, and his benefits apprehended and applyed by faith. Which effects who so find thus wrought in them, they may be assured that they haue the spirit which is the cause and authour by which they are wrought, euen as the Light bringeth vs to the Sunne, the streames to the fountaine, and the branches and fruit vnto the root from which they flow and spring.

Sect.2. The differences betweene a iustifying faith and the faith of presumptuous carnall worldlings.

Yea, but Hypocrites and vnregenerate men doe boast most of their faith and assurance of saluation, and therefore they also may haue the Spirit, or else this faith is no infallible signe of it. To which I answere that they haue no true faith, but (as it were) in a dreame and dotage, they delude themselues by mistaking their carnall and secure presumption for a liuely and justifying faith. But how shall wee discerne the one from the other, seeing they seeme to haue oftentimes as strong confidence and assurance of their saluation as the best Christians? I answere that though there bee betweene them some seeming similitude, yet there is as great difference as betweene pure Gold and a rotten post gilded ouer. For first true faith is grounded on the Scriptures and the Word of God; but presumption hath no ground but an idle conceit arising out of pride and selfe-loue. True faith alwayes followeth vnfained humiliation in the sight and sense of our sin & misery; whereas the presumptuous man was neuer humbled, but hath a proud conceit of his owne righteousnesse and worthinesse. Faith followeth illumination and knowledge, and first wee must know God and his Christ, before we can truly beleeue in them; but presumption riseth commonly out of ignorance, and the more destitute the worldly man is of the knowledge of God and his wayes, the more bold and confident hee is in his perswasion. True faith is joyned with all other graces, as loue, zeale of Gods glory, humility, patience and obedience, manifesting it selfe by the fruites that it bringeth forth in good workes: But presumption is seuered from them all, & goeth alone without any such company and Attendants. True faith is not discerned before sound conuersion, and then it beginneth in some small and weake degrees; but presumption is borne & bred with vs, and in an instant commeth to its full strength; which maketh the secure Worldling to brag, that hee hath alwayes beleeued, and is so strong in faith, that he neuer doubted of his saluation. True faith is not attained vnto without great difficulty, it being no lesse a worke to beleeue the Gospell than to fulfill the Law; but presumption voluntarily creepeth into our hearts, and the lesse paines wee take in the vse of Gods holy Ordinances, the more easily it entreth, and the stronger it waxeth. Faith is alwayes assaulted with doubting, and the one being a fruit of the Spirit, the other of the Flesh, there is a great and continuall conflict betweene them; but presumption is bold and confident, and he who is possessed of it, professeth that hee neuer doubted of his saluation, neither feeleth hee any conflict in him, because he is wholy carnall, and corruption warreth not against corruption, but onely runneth out of one extreme into another; for when the secure Worldling being by some meanes awakened out of his Lethargy ceaseth to presume, then hee beginneth to despaire. Faith purifieth the heart and worketh by loue, and is neuer seuered from vnfained repentance; but presumption nourisheth and increaseth all sinfull corruptions, & they who most presume are most destitute of all true loue towards God and their Neighbours. And howsoeuer they leaue some grosse sins for worldly respects, yet they repent of none, there being no change in their affections, but onely in their actions; yea, in this respect also they nourish many sins in their bosomes which they thinke most sweet and aduantageable, and will by no meanes be perswaded to part with them. Faith vniteth and applyeth Christ vnto the Beleeuer for all vses for which God gaue him, that is as well for his sanctification as for his justification and saluation, and applyeth the vertue of his precious bloud, for the taking and purging away of the pollution and corruption of sin, as well as the guilt and punishment; and as it taketh hold of Christ to make him ours, so it giueth and offereth our soules and bodies vnto Christ, that wee may become his, and be wholy deuoted and dedicated to his worship and seruice: but presumption onely apprehendeth Christ for the remission of sin and the obtayning of euerlasting Life, & not for the mortification of sin by vertue of his death, nor spirituall quickening and renewing by power of his Resurrection; and so also it is onely a receiuer but no giuer, it taketh all in shew which Christ offereth, offereth, but it will in lieu of thankfulnesse returne nothing vnto him againe. Faith finding its owne weaknesse, and the sharpe encounters of doubting and incredulity, laboureth earnestly in the vse of all good meanes whereby it may bee more and more increased and confirmed, as hearing the Word, receiuing the Sacrament, Reading, Prayer, Meditation and such like; but presumption finding no such assaults, securely neglecteth all these helpes, feeling it selfe then the strongest when it is most destitute of them. Finally, true faith endureth in the day of fiery tryall & temptation, and euen when God seemeth to frowne, to withdraw outward testimonies of his loue, and in stead of them sendeth afflictions and crosses, then the Beleeuer with a Abraham, hopeth aboue hope, and beleeueth against beliefe, it pierceth through all these clouds of discomfort with a liuely and spirituall eye, and beholdeth the face of a louing Father in Christ, euen when hee still holdeth the rod in his hand; yea, though it haue no sensible comfort, nor present feeling of Gods fauour, yet being the substance of things hoped for, and the euidence of things not seene, it still maketh the Beleeuer to flee vnto God, and to rest vpon him alone for freedome from euil or fruition of good. But the presumptuous man swelled with the wind of confidence like a bladder, letteth out all with the pricke of a pin, & after all his Thrasonicall braggs of strength and fortitude, hee fainteth and cowardly yeeldeth, when hee is first encountred with crosses and afflictions. His courage is presently cooled, his confidence turned into distrust, his proude presumption into affrighting terrours and hellish despaire; and as it was chiefly grounded on outward things & worldly prosperitie, so when these are taken away then it also quaileth, faileth, and commeth to nothing.

Rom.12.1.

Rom. 4.18. Iob 13.15. & 19.25.

Heb. 11.1.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the differences betweene iustifying faith, and that which is temporary and hypocriticall.

§. Sect. 1. Of the first difference in preparation vnto them.

BVt though presumptuous Worldlings haue no true faith, and consequently haue not the spirit dwelling in them; yet perhaps Temporaries and Hypocrites may, seeing in the Scriptures they are said to beleeue, and therefore they also may haue the Spirit. I answere, that though this temporary faith be a common gift of the Spirit, yet it differeth much from a true iustifying faith, and therefore is no signe that Gods sanctifying Spirit doth dwell in them that haue it. For first they differ in the preparation whereby men are fitted to receiue them. For before true iustifying faith goeth sound humiliation, a true sight and sense of sin, as sin, and not onely in regard of punishment, and an earnest desire to be vnburthened of it: But the temporary is neuer thus throughly humbled, for whilest he seeth some sins hee winketh at others, hee grieueth and groneth, rather vnder the punishment, than vnder the sin; he is willing to part with some sins which rather pinch his conscience than please his affection, but esteemeth others no burthen, yea, rather his chiefe delight; and though hee leaueth many, yet he truly repenteth of none, because there is onely a surceasing of the action, but no change of the heart and affection.

Luke 8.13. Iohn 2.24.

§. Sect. 2. The second difference in their nature and parts.

Secondly, they differ in their nature and parts. For true faith highly esteemeth Christ, and preferreth him and his righteousnes before all the World, counting all things in comparison of him dung and losse; and therefore is ready to forsake all that it may injoy him: but temporary faith preferreth the World before Christ, and though it make some account of him in an inferiour place, yet it will rather leaue him than leaue the World, if the one of necessity must be parted with. Secondly, true faith effectually assenteth to the whole Word of God, as being his vndoubted Truth, and especially to the promises of the Gospell concerning the remission of sin, reconciliation with God, and eternall saluation of all that beleeue; Whence arise those desires in the heart, and resolution in the will before spoken of, whereby the Beleeuer hungreth after Christ and his benefits, and casteth himselfe vpon him alone for iustification: But temporary faith either assenteth onely to the truth of some part of the Word and not to some other, as to that which will stand with humane reason and a mans owne experience, but not to that which is aboue or contrary vnto them; to the promises of the Gospell, not to the threatnings of the Law, or to some of either, and not all of both; or if to all, yet this assent is not effectuall, as appeareth by the differences that are in the desires and resolutions of true Beleeuers from those that are in Temporaries and Hypocrites. For the desires of the true Beleeuers to be made partaker of Christ & his benefits are exceeding feruent and earnest, like the desires of a couetous men after riches, of b Rachel after children; of the c louing Bride after her beloued Bridegroome, of the d dry and chopped ground after pleasant showres, e of the hungry and thirsty, after meate and drinke, f of the woman with childe after desired meates, who so longeth that shee is ready to miscarry and perish, if her longing desire be not satisfied. But the desires of temporary faith are faint and cold, and though they can be content to haue the things belonging

1. Cor. 2.2. Phil. 3.9. Gal. 6.14.

a 2. Cor. 14.1.
b Gen. 30.1.
c Cant. 2.5.
d Psal. 143.6.
e Math. 5.6.
f Psal. 119.20. 40.

longing to saluation, if they will come with ease and small cost, they chooſe rather to be without them, than that they ſhould be ouer-chargeable, or take vp too much of their time and labour. Secondly, the deſires of true faith are alwayes joyned with a carefull indeuour in the vſe of all good meanes whereby they may be ſatisfied, and in auoiding all contrary meanes whereby they may be hindred: But the deſires of temporary faith are ſo idle and ſlothfull, that they neglect all meanes whereby they might atchieue their deſires as wee ſee in Balaam, who deſired to die the death of the righteous, but could not be content to imitate them in their liues. Thirdly, the deſires of juſtifying faith are conſtant and continuall like Dauids whoſe ſoule breaked, for the longing that it had to Gods iudgements at all times: but the deſires of temporary faith are but by fits & flaſhes, as when they are at a Sermon, & haue their conſciences conuinced with the powerfull Miniſtery of the Word, when they are in the houſe of mourning, and haue before their eyes ſpectacles of their mortality; when they ſee ſome notable example of the Worlds vanity and mutability, or of the happineſſe of thoſe who feare God, & make conſcience of their wayes; when they are caſt downe by ſome grieuous affliction, and find themſelues croſſed in all their earthly deſires. Secondly, there is great difference betweene the reſolutions of faith in true Beleeuers, and thoſe who are but Temporaries and Hypocrites. For true juſtifying faith reſolueth to cleaue vnto Chriſt alone, and to forſake all rather than to be ſeuered from him: But the faith of Temporaries cauſeth them to cleaue vnto Chriſt ſo far forth as the World will let them, and if they may ſhare with him in his benefits, and not be hindred of their worldly deſires, they are willing then to giue him entertainment; but if they be put to part with all, that they may haue him, this is an hard ſaying, and they cannot abide it, but though they came rejoycing to Chriſt, they will goe away (with the young man) ſorrowfull, and will not buy him and his benefits at ſo deare a price; Like herein vnto Merchants who like the beſt Wines when they taſte them, but leaue and let them goe, when as they heare how deare they are prized.

Pſal.119.21.

9. Sect.3. The third difference betweene them is in their properties, 1.Tim.1.1,5.

Thirdly, juſtifying and temporary faith doe differ one from another in their properties and qualities. For true faith is hearty and vnfained, and therefore is called by the Apoſtle ἀνυπόκριτος, Faith that is not fained, and if there be any hypocriſie lurking in the heart, it is an enemy vnto it, and laboureth to purge and root it out: but the faith of Temporaries is hypocriticall and purpoſely affecteth and delighteth in diſguizing and diſſimulation. Againe, true faith is conſtant and courageous to indure the fiery tryall; It will come vnto God and catch hold on him for mercy, when hee frowneth and ſeemeth angry; It applyeth the promiſes, when they ſeeme void and hopeleſſe, and wayteth Gods leyſure, when he deferreth to performe them. For he that beleeueth (as the Prophet ſpeaketh) ſhall not make haſt. It cleaueth vnto the Lord when hee ſeemeth to reject and ſhake vs off, and will not leaue the profeſſion and practice of his Truth, when it is beaten from it by afflictions and perſecutions. But temporary faith though it make a glorious and golden ſhew in the time of proſperity, yet it becommeth droſſe in the fiery tryall; and though it commeth joyfully to God, when he inuiteth with benefits, yet it will cowardly run away, when he threatneth or correcteth. It ſpringeth and ſprouteth, when it is watered with the ſhowres of proſperity, but withereth and fadeth, when the hot Sunne of perſecution ariſeth; and though the temporary be ready to receiue all good from God, yet hee is not patient with Iob of receiuing euill alſo.

Eſay 28.16. Habac.2.3.

9. Sect.4. The fourth difference in reſpect of their concomitants.

Fourthly, juſtifying Faith differeth from the Faith of Temporaries in reſpect of the companions which doe accompany them. For true faith is joyned alwayes with a great conflict betweene it and doubting, which maketh the poore Chriſtian to cry out with the Father of the poſſeſſed child, I beleeue, Lord, helpe mine vnbeliefe; and with the Apoſtles, Saue vs, Lord, we periſh. Neither doth it obtaine the victory ouer vnbeliefe, & get quiet poſſeſſion of our hearts, without much ſtruggling, ſtriuing, and painfull labouring in the vſe of all good meanes, whereby it may ſtrengthen it ſelfe, and weaken its enemy. But the faith of Temporaries is eaſily attained without any great oppoſition or long labour, for no ſooner doth hee heare the Word, but preſently hee receiueth it with joy, and as ſoone as the ſeed is caſt into the ſtony ground, it forthwith ſpringeth and ſhewеth it ſelfe in the greene blade of a glorious profeſſion. It rejoyceth before it grieueth, & comfort commeth before mourning; It is exalted before there was any humiliation, and triumpheth in victory without any conflict. And the reaſon is, becauſe the Temporary Beleeuer is not much croſſed in his preſumptuous conceit by Sathan or his owne fleſh, who are content to let him flatter himſelfe with a ſhadow and ſemblance of faith which is without vſe or fruit, that reſting in this, he may neuer labour after ſuch a faith as is ſound and ſubſtantiall; knowing well enough, that it will nothing profit him, ſeeing within a while his inlightning will turne to greater darkneſſe, his beleeuing to deſperate denying or deepe deſpairing, his waſhing and cleanſing, to greater pollution and defiling, and that hee may at pleaſure make his re-entrance with ſeuen ſpirits worſe

Mat.13.20. Mark 9.24. Mat.8.25.

Heb.6.4,5,6. Mat.12.44,45.

2. Pet. 2. 20.

than himselfe, and so make the last end of this man worse than his beginning. Againe, true faith is joyned with all other sanctifying & sauing graces, for from this fire of Faith riseth the flame of loue and zeale; from this holy root springeth the fruit of all new and true obedience; From this fountaine floweth affiance in God, Feare, Hope, Humility and the rest; all which as they are the effects of faith in respect of their birth and being, so are they companions, props and stayes of it after they are wrought in vs. But especially the most knowne and apparant companion of a liuely Faith is a good Conscience. For he that assuredly apprehendeth Gods loue in Christ maketh conscience of all his workes and wayes, carefully doing those things which may please him who hath so loued him, and whom he so loueth, and flying those things which may offend him. Whereof it is that the Apostle joyneth them together; The end (saith he) of the Commandement is Charity, out of a pure heart, and good conscience, and faith vnfained. And againe, Let vs draw neere with a true heart in full assurance of faith, hauing our hearts sprinkled from an euill conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water, But the Temporary, as he hath onely a seeming faith, so hath he also but counterfeit and seeming graces; he hath no true loue of God and his Brethren, but such as springeth from selfe-loue and loue of the World; no affiance in God longer than he vnderproppeth it with secondary meanes and sensible helpes; no hope, longer than the promises are joyned with present performance; no feare of God but seruile and slauish; no zeale, but (like that of Iehu) such as will further his worldly ends; neither doth he make conscience of imbracing and practising all duties commanded, but some onely, which best fit, or least crosse, his carnall affections; nor of mortifying and forsaking all manner of sin, but of such onely as bring least pleasure or profit; and that little which he doth, is not performed in loue and obedience towards God, but out of pride and vain-glory, selfe-loue, seruile feare, or worldly respects.

1. Tim. 1. 5. & 3. 9.

Heb. 10. 22.

Q. Sect. 5. The fift difference in their effects. First, True faith purifieth the heart.

Lastly, justifying faith differeth from that which is temporary in their fruits and effects. For true Faith purifieth the heart from all manner of sin, especially those inward and secret corruptions which are knowne onely to God and a mans owne conscience, and not onely bindeth the hands to the good behauiour, but reneweth and changeth the affections of the heart, causing it to hate mortally those vices which it formerly loued, & to resist and subdue them in their birth and first beginnings. But the Faith of Temporaries doth not purifie the heart, but onely seemingly reformeth the outward actions; or if it purgeth it from any sins, it is from such as are contrary to naturall appetite, or from those which are least pleasing and profitable, and not from those whereunto nature chiefly inclineth, and wherein the corrupt heart doth especially delight.

Secondly, justifying Faith worketh by loue, and is fruitfull in the duties of holinesse and righteousnesse, and not by fits & starts, but as an holy root and tree of Gods planting, it beareth and bringeth forth ripe fruits continually in due time; and as a liuely fountaine of grace and goodnesse, it sendeth forth the pleasant streames of good workes, and vertuous actions: But the faith of Temporaries worketh seldome and but by fits, and onely when they haue some pange of deuotion wrought in them by the power of the Word conuincing their consciences, or out of naturall passion moued with some pitifull object. Neither are these true fruits of holinesse and righteousnesse, because they spring not from a liuely faith, vnfained loue, and true obedience, but from selfe-loue, prayse of men or other worldly respects; they are not ripe fruits fit to be reaped and carried into the Barne, but onely greene blades, semblances and shewes which wither before the time of harueft.

Q. Sect. 6. The second effect, wherein they differ is in respect of their operation.

Gal. 5. 6. Psal. 81. 3. Iohn 4. 14. & 7. 37, 38.

Thirdly, true Faith causeth peace of conscience, and joy in the Holy Ghost, which is no slight nor flitting joy, but as the Apostle calleth it, vnspeakable and glorious, the which in the nature of it is spirituall, like the authour which worketh it, and most sheweth it selfe, when as we are exercised about spirituall objects and exercises, as hearing the Word, reading, meditation, praying, holy conferences, and such like: But temporary faith bringeth no such peace; For there is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked. And howsoeuer they haue some joy, yet there is great difference betweene it, and that which proceedeth from true faith. For the faithfull delight in the Word, as being the Word, not of man, but of God himselfe, and because they find it his strong power (whatsoeuer the instruments be) to their sanctification and saluation. But Temporaries rejoyce in it for nouelties sake, and as it is the word of man, not so much in respect of the spirituall matter, as the manner how, and the person by whom it is deliuered, because they loue him as a friend for worldly respects, or for his naturall gifts and parts, because he is learned, witty and eloquent; the which joy ceaseth and turneth oftentimes into anger and spleene, when as the word commeth home to the conscience, and reproueth him sharply for his darling sins. Secondly, the faithfull man rejoyceth in spirituall things, the assurance of Gods loue, the remission of his sins and his owne saluation: and though hee taketh some joy and comfort in the things of this life, yet it is but small

Q. Sect. 7. The third effect respecteth peace and joy. 1. Pet. 1. 8.

Esay 57. 21.

Math. 13. 20. 1. Thes. 2. 13. Rom. 1. 17.

small in comparison of the other. But the temporary Beleeuer contrariwise taketh some small joy in spirituall things, as hauing some little taste of them; but his chiefe rejoycing is in things worldly and earthly, which maketh him to neglect the other joy, when as they crosse one another, and will not stand together. Thirdly, the joy of the faithfull, like the cause of it, which is our faith, is small at the first, but increaseth by degrees vntill it come to fulnesse of joy, like that of Dauids; Thou hast put gladnesse in my heart, more than in the time, that their corne and their wine increased: but the joy of Temporaries is greatest at the first entrance, and then decayeth by little and little, till at last it be vtterly consumed and come to nothing. Finally, the joy of true Faith is strong and constant, and not only continueth in the fruition of worldly prosperity, but also in affliction and persecution, as wee see in the example of the holy Apostles, who rejoyced and sung Psalmes vnto God, when as they were persecuted for preaching the Gospel: But the joy of Temporaries, like that of the Grashoppers, continueth onely whilest the Summer of prosperity lasteth, but decayeth and dieth in the Winter of afflictions.

Psal. 4.7.

Rom. 3. 28. & 5. 1. & 16 25.

b. Sect. 8. The fourth effect respecteth confession and Christian Apologie. Rom. 10. 10. 1. Pet. 3. 15.

Fourthly, true Faith, as it inwardly in the heart beleeueth vnto righteousnesse, so outwardly with the mouth it confesseth to saluation: and the true Christian, as he beleeueth in Iesus Christ, so hee is alwayes ready to render a reason of his faith and hope that is in him, when the glory of God or good of his Neighbours requireth it, although it be with the hazard & losse of his goods, lands, liberty and life. And being indued with the spirit of faith, hee is ready to say with the Psalmist and Apostle, I beleeued, and therefore I haue spoken: But the Temporary Beleeuer confesseth his faith when as it will stand with his worldly credit or aduantage, but smothereth his profession in time of danger, and vtterly denieth it, rather than hee will vndergoe any damage for it.

Psal. 116. 10. 2. Cor. 4. 13.

b. Sect. 9. The fift effect respecteth contentment. 2. Cor. 5. 7. Rom. 1. 17. Hab. 2. 4.

Fifthly, true Faith giueth a Christian comfort and contentment in all estates; for he liueth and walketh by faith and not by sense, and therefore when hee wanteth Friends or Wealth, and such like worldly helps, he resteth contented, because his chiefe treasure & sufficiency is in Gods neuer failing prouidence, vpon which he chiefly relyeth; according to that of the Apostle, I haue learned that in whatsoeuer estate I am, therewith to be content. And againe, Neuertheless I liue, yet not I, but Christ liueth in me; and the life which I now liue in the flesh, I liue by the faith of the Sonne of God, who hath loued mee and giuen himselfe for mee. But the Temporary Beleeuer liueth by sense and not by Faith, and trusteth in God when as hee hath in his hands the pledges and pawnes of earthly benefits, but distrusteth in his promises and prouidence when as secondary helps and inferiour meanes faile, and therefore vseth vnlawfull meanes to helpe himselfe.

Phil. 4. 12. Gal. 2. 20.

b. Sect. 10. The sixt effect is the ouercomming of the world. 1. Ioh. 5. 4. 5.

Sixtly, true Faith ouercommeth the World, according to that of the Apostle, Whosoeuer is borne of God ouercommeth the world, and this is the victory that ouercommeth the world, euen our faith. Who is he that ouercommeth the world, but he that beleeueth that Iesus is the Sonne of God? And it contemneth all earthly things as vaine and worthlesse, in comparison of spirituall grace and heauenly glory. But the temporary Beleeuer when hee is at the best, is but a meere Worldling and a deuoted slaue, to his worldly lusts and desires after honours, riches and pleasures. And therefore embraceth grace and glory so farre forth onely, as they will stand with the fruition of his earthly Idols, but rejecteth and renounceth his part and interest in them, when as they crosse, and will not stand with his earthly desires.

b. Sect. 11. The last effect reioycing to thinke of Christs comming to iudgement.

Lastly, true justifying Faith maketh vs to rejoyce when as we thinke of the appearing of our Saviour Christ vnto judgement, and euen to long for this time as being the day of our full redemption, when both in body and soule wee shall bee freed from all sinne and misery, and enjoy all glory and endlesse happinesse, according to that of our Saviour; When these things begin to come to passe, then looke vp and lift vp your heads for your redemption draweth nigh. And so the Apostle saith, that we which haue receiued the first-fruits of the Spirit, euen wee our selues groane within our selues, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body. The which joy in thinking on this day, and mourning because it is deferred, commeth through our assurance of faith and confidence of hope. For therefore doe wee desire to leaue this World and to be dissolued, because wee know, that if our earthly house of this Tabernacle were dissolued, wee haue a building of God, a house not made with hands, but eternall in the Heauens: and because through the Spirit, wee waite for the hope of righteousnesse by faith. But no such joy or longing accompanieth the faith of Temporaries, because they haue no such assurance of this happinesse, and are besides so besotted with the loue of worldly things, that they cannot without terrour and amazement thinke of that Day, which when it commeth will wholy depriue them of all their earthly joy.

Luke 21. 28. Rom. 8. 23. 2. Cor. 5. 1. 5. Gal. 5. 5.

CHAP. XIV.

Of two other effects of the Spirit, whereby wee may know that it dwelleth in vs.

9. Sect. 2. The third effect is the spirit of adoption

A Third effect of the Spirit dwelling in vs is to perswade and assure vs that wee are the children of God, and to entitle vs as heires to our heauenly inheritance; the which is a priuiledge and prerogatiue that belongeth to all the faithfull, and to them alone, according to that of the Euangelist: But as many as receiued him, to them gaue he power to become the sonnes of God, euen to them that beleeue on his name. And this is an vndoubted fruit of the spirit, as the Apostle witnesseth; For yee haue not (saith hee) receiued the spirit of bondage, againe to feare, but yee haue receiued the spirit of Adoption, whereby wee cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit it selfe beareth witnesse to our spirit, that we are the children of God; and if children then heires, heires of God, and ioynt heires with Christ. And againe; Because yee are sonnes, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Sonne into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father. In which regard the Spirit of God dwelling in vs is called the spirit of Adoption, which doth not giue vnto vs a doubtfull testimony of this inestimable priuiledge, but certainly assureth vs, that it doth belong vnto vs. In which regard it is called an earnest, which God therefore giueth vs, to put vs out of all doubt, that hee will make good this heauenly bargaine which he hath promised vnto vs. Which is (saith the Apostle) the earnest of our inheritance, vntill the redemption of the purchased possession. And in the same respect it is called a Seale, which by the powerfull impression, that it imprinteth in vs, assureth vs, that God will make good vnto vs the promise of grace and saluation in Iesus Christ. So the Apostle saith; In whom also after yee beleeued, yee were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise. And grieue not the holy Spirit of God, whereby yee are sealed vnto the day of redemption. If therefore by this earnest and seale wee haue attained vnto this assurance of our Adoption and right vnto our heauenly inheritance, we may be assured also that the Spirit of God dwelleth in vs, for the cause and the effect cannot bee seuered, and our assurance of our heauenly bargaine doth plainly argue, that wee haue receiued this earnest and seale by which alone it is confirmed vnto vs. But that wee may not be deceiued with a false and counterfeit seale, let vs remember that this seale onely is annexed vnto the couenant of grace, which requireth on our part the condition of faith and repentance, and as it is Gods priuy Seale, according to that, the Lord knoweth them that are his, so there is a broad Seale ioyned with it, Let euery one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquitie; and therefore those who liue in their infidelity and impenitency, haue not receiued this Seale, for what haue they to doe with the Seale, to whom the Couenant doth not appertaine?

2. Tim. 2. 19.

9. Sect. 2. The fourth effect is the spirit of supplication.

A fourth effect of the Spirit is to enable vs vnto Prayer, and to powre forth our soules vnto God in such an acceptable manner, as that our suites and petitions are heard and granted by him; whereof it is called by the Prophet Zecharie, the spirit of grace and supplication, which the Lord promiseth to power vpon the house of Dauid, and vpon the inhabitants of Ierusalem, that is, all the true members of the inuisible Church militant here on earth. So the Apostle plainly telleth vs, that we know not for what to pray as we ought, but it is the spirit which helpeth our infirmities, and maketh intercession for vs with groanings which cannot bee vttered. And therfore the Apostle Iude knowing our insufficiency in our selues to performe this duty, doth exhort vs to pray in the Holy Ghost. Whereby it appeareth, that the Spirit of God dwelleth in all those, who in the sight and sense of their owne spirituall wants doe powre forth their hearts and soules vnto God in Prayer, with faith and feruency of spirit, which properties I require in that Prayer, which assureth vs that the Spirit dwelleth in vs, and not ability on the sudden vpon euery occasion to conceiue a Prayer, & to vtter it in eloquence of words, choice phrases, or a continued and ready discourse of speech. For it is not said, that the Spirit teacheth vs words & fluent phrases, but to pray in the heart and Spirit, with sighes and groanes which cannot be vttered, which language God that searcheth the heart vnderstandeth and accepteth, as the Apostle speaketh; yea, being a Spirit and requiring to bee worshipped in Spirit and Truth, he esteemeth not the most eloquent Prayers conceiued and vttered, without this sight of our wants, zeale and feruency of Spirit; and contrariwise where these are, he heareth and granteth our suites and supplications, though with Ezechias, wee are not able to expresse them, but chatter like a Crane or Swallow; or with Hannah onely moue our lips, yea, in truth though wee should not so much as moue them, so that with her we speake vnto him in our hearts. Neither hath the Lord promised, that he will hearken vnto them, who can speake eloquently, but that he will satisfie the desires of them that feare him, heare their cry and saue them, and that he will be nigh vnto them that call vpon him in truth. Of which wee haue an example in Moses, who though he were

Rom. 8. 15, 16. Gal. 4. 6.

Iohn 1. 11.

Ephes. 1. 14.

Ephes 1. 13. & 4. 30.

Rom. 8. 26.

Iud. vers. 20.

Rom. 8. 27. Iohn 4. 24.

Esay 38. 14. 1. Sam. 1. 13.

Psal. 145. 18, 19

Exod. 4. 10, 16.

not

not eloquent, but so slow of speach that hee needed to haue Aaron to be his spokesman, and in stead of a mouth vnto him, for the deliuery of his ambassage to Pharaoh and the people, yet God gaue audience vnto his slow and vnready suites, rather than vnto Aaron, who exceeded him in eloquence, in so much that when Moses must pray in the behalfe of the people, Aarons office was to stay vp his hands, that hee might more fitly continue and persuere in this holy exercise. Againe to conceiue a prayer vpon euery occasion, and to vtter it in a continued and eloquent phrayse of speech, is no assured signe, that the Spirit of God dwelleth in vs, because it is neither proper to the faithfull, nor commune to them all. For an hypocrite may attaine vnto this abilitie, yea euen excell in it by vertue of his naturall endowments, memory, eloquence and liberty of speech, boldnesse and suchlike, especially when as he hath had vertuous education, and hath beene instructed in the doctrine of godlinesse, and also trained vp in these Religious duties not onely by precepts, but by the examples of the godly, which hee is able to imitate by helpe of these naturall endowments in the exercise of Prayer, as well in the function of Preaching and Ministery of the Word. And so likewise it is not commune to all the faithfull to haue this ability, for there are many who haue a great measure of grace, light of sinne, and sense of wants, feruent desires and strong faith, who are so disabled through naturall imperfections, want of memory, and boldnesse, or slownesse, or vnreadinesse of speach, that they are not able to performe this duty, especially when they are in the presence of others. And this I write not to detract any thing from the excellency of their gifts, who are able vpon all occasions to expresse the desires and prayers of their heart in good words and conuenient discourse of speach; seeing this is a gift of God, which not onely stirreth vp our owne deuotion, but is profitable also for the edification of others, who can onely conceiue of holy desires, as they are by vtterance made knowne of those that haue them; but partly to giue vnto the prayer of the heart and soule a superiour excellency, farre aboue the prayer of the lippes, euen then also when it is without it; partly that none should please themselues in it, though they could rauish others with the admiration of their gifts, if they be not as earnest, deuoute, and feruent in the desires of their hearts as they are able and eloquent in the prayers of their mouthes: for of these in their greatest excellency, it may be truely said, that they are in Gods estimate but meere lip-labour, which will for reward draw vpon vs that just censure, this people draweth neare vnto me with their lips, when Isa. 29. 13.

their hearts are farre from me. And partly, yea especially, for the comfort of all those, who hauing holy desires, through want of naturall parts, haue no ability to vtter them, seeing if such can but make their suites knowne vnto God by their sighes and grones, it is an euidence vnto them, that the Spirit dwelleth in them who enableth them thus to pray, and whose suits and supplications are sure to bee heard and granted. But yet wee are not truely capable of this comfort if wee doe not labour after perfection and striue to attaine vnto the best gifts, much lesse if wee are disabled for the performance of these holy duties, not through want of naturall gifts but of spirituall grace, and through sloth and negligence which hindreth vs from imploying and vsing them. Of which this is an euident signe, when as wee haue libertie of speach and plenty of words, to discourse readily and freely, vpon all occasions of worldly and earthly things, but are then onely tongue-tied, when wee should speake vnto God, and can finde no fit words to expresse our minds in any sensibly manner, when as by prayer wee should make our suites knowne vnto him. 1. Cor. 14. 1.

Chap. XV.

How wee may know that Gods Spirit dwelleth in vs by our sanctification and the qualities and gifts of holines infused in vs.

1. Sect. 1. The first effect of the Spirit Is the worke of sanctification.

The first effect of the Spirit, whereby he may bee knowne to dwell in vs, is the worke of sanctification, and the qualities of holinesse infused into vs, which is so proper and peculiar to the Spirit, that none besides him can effect it. For as impossible it is for any man to giue vnto himselfe this spiritual renewing, as it was at first to be the cause of his owne being; as vnable are we to be the causes of our regeneration, as we were, to be of our generation; and therefore as the Creature euidently proueth that it had a Creatour, and the Child that it had a Father, so alike certainly may we bee assured by our renewing and regeneration, that the Spirit of God dwelleth in vs who hath beene the sole authour of this worke. And thus our Sauiour ascribeth it to his holy Spirit, where he saith, that vnlesse wee bee borne of Water and the Spirit wee cannot enter into the Kingdome of Heauen. So the Apostle hauing told the Corinthians that they had beene notorious sinners, saith that they were washed and sanctified by the Spirit of our God. And hereof it is that hee is called not onely the holy Spirit, but the Spirit of holinesse, the Spirit of sanctification or the sanctifying Spirit, not onely because hee is infinitely Ioh. 3. 5. 1. Cor. 6. 11. Rom 1. 4.

holy himselfe, but also doth sanctifie and make vs holy who were in our selues corrupt and sinnefull. The which sanctification hee worketh by begetting a liuely faith in vs which purifieth our hearts, and so applyeth vnto vs the vertue of Christs death and resurrection, whereby wee are cleansed from our filthie corruptions and quickened in the inner man to holinesse of life; the which sanctification, mortification, and spirituall quickening alwayes beginneth at the heart, minde, will and affections, and then afterwards sheweth it selfe in our outward actions. And therefore whosoeuer finde this worke of sanctification thus begun in them, they may be assured, that the Spirit of God dwelleth in them.

Sect. 2. Of the sixt effect of the Spirit, which is repentance and of the preparation thereunto. Iob. 16. 8.

A sixt effect of the Spirit dwelling in vs is like vnto the former, namely vnfained repentance and amendment of life; vnto which it maketh the same preparation, that it doth for faith. For first by the Ministery of the Law, the Spirit (as our Sauiour speaketh) conuinceth vs of sinne, shewing vnto vs both the hainousnesse of our sinnes, together with their multitude, and also the grieuous and endlesse punishments which they haue deserued. And this it doth commonly at the first in a more generall and confused maner, amazing and astonishing vs with terrours and feares horrours of mind, and panges of conscience, when as we see the huge masse or mountaine of our manifold and grieuous sinnes (as it were) in the whole lumpe; and the wrath of God, the curse of the Law, the plagues and punishments of this life and the life to come, which wee haue by them deseruedly and (in respect of our own meanes) inuitably drawne vpon vs; and afterwards more particularly and distinctly it setteth our sinnes in order before vs; and especially presenteth to our view those sinnes which wee are most guiltie of, and by which wee haue most dishonoured God and wounded our owne consciences. By all which it worketh in vs that which we call penitence, contrition, and humiliation, whereby wee are cast downe vnder the heauie waight of our sinnes and lye grieuing and groning vnder them; as it were vnder an intolerable burthen, finding no rest or comfort in our selues, or in any worldly things besides. And thus the spirit by the Law (as it were) with an yron hammer, bettereth & bruiseth our hard and stony hearts in pieces, that he may mixe with them, being made contrite, the oyle of his spirituall graces; and vseth it like a plow to breake vp these clunge, stiffe, and fallow grounds, that being thus prepared hee may sow in them these holy seedes. For when hee hath thus cast vs downe and throughly humbled vs, then he raiseth vs vp againe, by reuealing vnto vs the mysterie of saluation, the mercies of God, and merits of Christ, offered vnto all who will receiue them by faith. And then (as hath beene shewed) it worketh in vs an hungring desire after Christ and his righteousnesse, and a carefull, earnest and constant endeauour in the vse of all good meanes, as the hearing of the Word, Prayer, and the rest, whereby wee may bee made partakers of them. The which by his inward and secret operation, hee so blesseth and sanctifieth vnto vs, that they become effectuall to worke in vs a liuely faith, whereby wee lay hold vpon Christ and his benefits, and so are assured of the mercie of God and the remission and pardon of all our sinnes, of Gods grace in this life, and eternall glory in the life to come.

Ier. 4. 3.

Sect. 3. That faith is the cause and foundation of our repentance.

And thus being possessed by faith of all these inestimable benefits, our hearts are rauished with the apprehension of the infinite loue of God, and our Sauiour Christ, and inflamed with vnfained loue towards them againe; which faith thus working by loue doth cause a change and alteration which is called repentance, beginning in the minde and heart, and so proceeding to the outward parts and actions; and worketh in vs a godly sorrow because by our sinnes we haue so much offended and displeased so gracious a God and a good Father; a true hatred of those sinnes and corruptions which wee haue either formerly committed, or which yet adhere and cleaue vnto vs, and a setled resolution and constant purpose to mortifie and subdue, leaue and forsake them for the time to come, and to serue the Lord in holinesse and newnesse of life. All which wee doe not out of seruile feare, but out of childe-like loue and affection, which maketh vs willing and desirous by our new obedience to please and glorifie our heauenly Father, not for feare of condemnation, but because through the mercies of God, and merits of Christ, wee are assured that wee shall neuer bee condemned. Where, by the way, we may note a notable difference betweene that sorrow for sinne which the spirit worketh in the regenerate, and that which is in carnall men: For though these may sorrow and grieue after they haue sinned, yet it is not for sinne it selfe, the remembrance whereof is pleasant vnto them, but for the punishments, which they either presently feele, or feare and expect in time to come: where as the sorrow of Gods children is a floud or streame that springeth from faith and loue, making vs to bewaile our sinnes because wee haue offended and dishonoured so good a God, who hath freed vs from the guilt and punishment of them by giuing his onely Sonne to death as the price of our redemption.

Sect. 4. That the Spirit dwelling in

So that if the Spirit of God dwell in vs, then hath it wrought in vs, this worke of revs purgeth vs from our natural corruptions.

repentance in all the parts thereof and hath made in vs an happy and blessed change, from euill to good, from sinne to holinesse, and from corruption to grace. For as in nature corruption goeth before generation, the abolishing of the old forme, before the bringing in of the new; so before we can be spiritually renewed, the old man must bee killed and crucified, and then the new man will bee quickned and reuiued; sinne and corruption is purged away, and then holinesse and righteousnesse is wrought in vs. First then in effecting this worke of repentance, the Spirit of God dwelling in vs, purgeth and purifyeth vs from all our sinfull corruptions in all the parts of our soules and bodies, by applying vnto vs the efficacie and power of Christ Iesus his death, which mortifieth and crucifieth them in vs, so as they do no longer raigne in our mortall bodies as in time past. As for exaumple it causeth the scales of ignorance to fall from the eyes of our minde, it freeth in some measure our iudgements from errour, our imaginations from vanitie, our consciences from dead workes, our hearts from hardnesse, our wils from peruersenesse and rebellion, our affections from corruption and disorder, and all the members of our bodies from the seruitude of sinne. All which are the proper and peculiar workes of the spirit, and the fruits of our regeneration, and new birth, according to that of the Apostle; Whosoeuer is borne of God doth not commit sinne: for his seed remaineth in him, and he cannot sinne because he is borne of God.

1.Ioh.3.9.

9. Sect. 3. That the Spirit is knowne to be in vs by his quickning of vs in the inner man.

Yea but in the vnregenerate also there may seeme to bee some mortification, some mourning for sinne, some leauing and forsaking of it: As we see in Herod who heard Iohn the Baptist gladly, and did many things according to his instructions: In Simon Magus who for a time left his sorcerie, beleeued and was baptized: In Ahab, who humbled himselfe before God, wearing sackecloth, and going mournfully: In Iudas, Demas, Ananias and Sapphira, with many such like, and how then may we discerne the one from the other? I answere, that though there bee some seeming similitude betweene them, yet there are many great and essentiall differences whereby wee may know the one from the other. For the regenerate man mortifieth and forsaketh his sinnes out of loue and obedience to God, but the vnregenerate out of selfe-loue for the obtaining some temporall good, or the auoiding of some euill. Hee renounceth all sinne, and laboureth most in the mortification of those corruptions vnto which he is naturally most inclined, as wee may see in the example of Dauid, who shewed his vprightnesse before God, by keeping himselfe from all his iniquities, by hating euery false way, and esteeming all Gods precepts. So that his repentance and mortification is without restraint or limitation, and extendeth to the subduing and rooting out of all sinne without exception. But the other in his fained repentance renounceth onely some sinnes which he can best spare, as being least pleasant or profitable; but as for those which are most aduantageable and delightfull, hee keepeth them like sugar vnder his tongue, and will rather part with any thing, euen the first borne of his body, as the Prophet speaketh; yea loose his owne soule, than leaue and forsake it; As wee see in Herod and many others. The man regenerate is constant in his repentance and casteth away his sinnes with detestation like filthy rags, with a purpose neuer againe to returne vnto them; but the Hypocrite onely leaueth them for a time, and then returneth vnto them againe, hee layeth them aside like his apparell, with a purpose to resume them when hee hath fit opportunitie, and there is not a through diuorce betweene him and them, but onely a temporarie separation (as it were) by mutuall consent. Hee leaueth his sinnes willingly and chearefully, because they so beset him, and clinge about his necke, that he cannot in such hast flie from them as hee desireth, therefore hee is content that the Lord should pull him out of this sinnefull Sodome with some violence, burne away his drosse with the fire of tribulation, and cut the throate of those which hee hath esteemed his darling sinnes, with the sword or razor of afflictions; but the other vnwillingly forsaketh his darling sinnes, and when he is dragged from them by the feare of Gods approaching iudgements, he doth with Lots wife, looke backe vpon them, as being loath to part with them, vnlesse hee were constrained by meere necessitie. From whence another maine difference plainely ariseth betweene them. For the sound Christian by his repentance hath his minde and affections changed, and whereas in the dayes of his ignorance he allowed and approued, loued and liked his sinnes; now hee condemneth, loatheth and disliketh them; so that hee is freed, not onely from the outward act of sinne, but also from the inward loue, yea more from the corrupt affection, than from the sinnefull action, as wee see in the example of the Apostle Paul, who did the euill which he hated, and was delighted in the Law of God in the inner man, when by the Law of his members hee was led captiue of sinne: But the vnregenerate doe onely leaue their sinnes in respect of the outward act, when as in the meane while their hearts and affections doe cleaue vnto it. As wee see in the example of Balaam, who rendereth this as the reason why hee would not curse the people of Israel, nor because he loued them,

Tit.3.5.

Eph.2.1.

Iob 20.13. Mic.6.6.

Esa.58.5.

Heb.12.1.

Rom.7.15.23.

Num.23.20.26.

Psal.119.6.128. Ioh.6.63.

as being the Church of God and his peculiar and choſen people, but becauſe the Lord would not giue him leaue; whereby hee implyeth that he would very gladly haue done it, that by gratifying Balaac he might haue receiued the wages of iniquitie; but was reſtrained by the terrours of the Almightie, ſo as hee durſt not for his life preſume to doe it. In which reſpect it may bee truly ſaid, that Pauls ſinning through infirmitie, and in ſome ſort vnwillingly, was leſſe ſinfull, than Balaams not committing of that act of ſinne in curſing the people, yea than his bleſſing of them, ſeeing all hee did was through feare and conſtraint, which made him to bleſſe them whom hee curſed in his heart, as appeareth by that his curſed counſaile which he gaue vnto Balaac, namely that hee ſhould by alluring the people to commit firſt carnall, and then ſpirituall fornication, vtterly diſarme them of Gods protection, and leaue them naked to their enemies. And the Lord doth not ſo much regard the hand as the heart; nor the outward action, as the minde and inward affection.

Num.24.14.& 25.1.2.& 31.16.

Q. Sect.6. That the Spirit is knowne to be in vs by his quickning of vs in the inner man.

Secondly as the Spirit mortifieth and crucifieth the old man with the luſts thereof, ſo it quickeneth vs in the inner man and reneweth in vs all ſanctifying and ſauing graces; as it maketh vs to flye all euill, ſo to imbrace that which is good; as it cauſeth vs to forſake our old ſinnefull workes, and corrupt converſation, ſo it inableth vs by our new obedience to ſerue the liuing God. Thus our Sauiour aſcribeth to the Spirit this ſpirituall life and quickening; It is (ſaith he) the Spirit that quickeneth; And the Apoſtle telleth vs, that God according to his mercie hath ſaued vs, by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the holy Ghoſt. If therefore the Spirit of God dwelleth in vs, then are wee who were dead in treſpaſſes and ſinnes, quickened with ſauing grace, and raiſed and inabled vnto new obedience; our vnderſtandings which were darkened with ignorance are inlightened with the knowledge of Gods truth, the worke of redemption, and myſteries of godlineſſe. Our iudgements are informed ſo as we can diſcerne betweene truth and falſehood, good and euill. Our minds which onely minded earthly vanities, are now ſet, not on things beneath, but vpon thoſe, that are aboue; our conſciences which were loaded with dead workes, doe now ſerue the liuing God, performing that dutie for which they were created, in excuſing vs when we doe well, and accuſing vs when wee doe euill. Our wils which were ſtubborne and rebellious, are now obedient, pliable and ſubiect to the will of God. Our hearts of ſtone, are made hearts of fleſh, and becomming broken and contrite are fit ſacrifices which God accepteth. Our corrupt affections are now ſanctified and brought in order; our loue of the world is changed into the loue of God, and of ſpirituall and heauenly things; our confidence in the creature into aſſiance and truſt in God; Our feare of men into a godly feare which reſtraineth vs from ſinne, and inciteth vs to all good duties; Our carnall joy into ſpirituall rejoycing; our corrupt anger into godly zeale, which ſcreeth it ſelfe againſt all the impediments of Gods glory, eſpecially our owne ſinnes. And finally being freed from the ſeruice of ſinne, wee are now become the ſeruants of righteouſneſſe, ſetting before vs the whole Law of God, as the rule and ſquare of our lines, and all our actions, and conforming our ſelues in obedience vnto all and euery of the commandements both in the hating and forſaking of whatſoeuer it forbiddeth and condemneth, and in the imbracing and practiſing of whatſoeuer it commendeth and injoyneth.

Joh.6.63.

Tit.3.5.

Eph.2.1.

Col.3.2. Heb.9.14.

Pſal.51.17.

Q. Sect.7. The differences betweene the quickning of the Spirit in the regenerate, and that which ſeemeth to be in the vnregenerate.

But here let vs take heede that wee doe not deceiue our ſelues; for though thoſe onely in whom the Spirit dwelleth are thus truely quickened, yet there may bea ſhew of it in them that are vnregenerate, as we may ſee in the example of the Angell of the Church of Sardis, who had a name that he liued, and yet was dead: and of the Church of Laodicea, who thought himſelfe quicke ſighted and rich in all ſpirituall grace, when as hee was wretched and miſerable, poore, blinde, and naked. And though all new and true obedience is the fruit of the Spirit, yet there is in the vnregenerate ſome reſemblance and ſhewes of it, though it be not in them in truth; euen as there are many things done by beaſts, which a man would thinke did proceede from reaſon and vnderſtanding; where as in truth they are by inſtinct of nature; they propounding no ends vnto themſelues in all their actions, but are directed vnto them by him that made them; and by phantaſie and imagination, reaſons Ape, which inableth them to produce ſuch ſtrange effects, that diuers being hereby deceiued, haue thought them reaſonable. Now that we may not be thus deceiued, let vs remember, that he who is led by the Spirit, performeth ſimple obedience vnto the Law of God, becauſe hee requireth it, but the vnregenerate in diſſimulation for worldly and ſiniſter reſpects; hee yeeldeth totall obedience vnto the whole Law of God, and with all the powers and faculties of his ſoule and body; but the other onely in the outward man and that vnto ſome commandements alone, making no conſcience of the reſt. Hee is conſtant in his obedience, becauſe the cauſe thereof Gods loue towards him, and his loue towards God is conſtant and permanent; and hee walketh daily and continually in Gods

Apoc.3.1.17.

Law,

Law, as in this way; but the other is obedient by fits only, going forward and backward, as he is spurred on, or curbed and rayned in, by worldly respects, which being mutable and vnconstant doe make his obedience like vnto them. In which respect the motion of the vnregenerate in the wayes of godlinesse may be said to be dead and accidentall, incited and stirred on by outward causes, as the horse which would not goe vnlesse he were compelled by the spurre, or like the wheeles in the clocke, which no longer moue than the waights and poyzes doe hang vpon it: But the motion of the regenerate is liuely and naturall, proceeding from an inward cause, euen the Spirit of God dwelling in vs, which quickneth vs (as it were) with a new soule of life and power, whereby wee are inabled to goe on in the wayes of godlinesse, euen as a man naturally moueth and walketh by vertue of his soule; which quickeneth and strengtheneth his body to the performance of those actions. So that in a true Christian there is the right perpetuall motion, whose cause is not outward, but in himselfe, making him constantly and continually to goe on in his holy way as kindly and naturally, by vertue of that godly nature whereof he is made partaker by the holy Spirit, euen as the fountaine springs and the riuer runnes. And howsoeuer there may bee both in the regenerate and the vnregenerate an heate of loue and zeale which is the cause of all their motion and actions, yet there is great difference betweene them, for the one is like the heate in a bath, whose cause is naturall and in it selfe, and is therefore constant and continuall, and not abated and lessened but rather intended and increased by the outward cold of crosses and afflictions; but the other like the heate of ordinarie hot water, which being naturally cold, and onely hot by accident and heate of the fire, is not constant, but though for a time it may be much more hot than the other, yet the cause being not in it selfe, but outward and accidentall, when this is put out, the heate continueth not, but againe returneth to more than wonted coldnesse. For so the heart in the vnregenerate being onely caused by outward prosperitie and temporall benefits, they seeme feruent in their loue towards God whilest these continue, but if this fuell which nourisheth it, be taken away, and they bee compassed about with afflictions and persecutions, they become more cold in their loue and zeale towards God than euer they were before. Or else they may be resembled to a liuing body, and a dead carkase, the one whereof is hot by an inward cause, euen the radicall and vitall heate which warmeth the bloud in all the veines; but the other howsoeuer it may bee made hotte by the heate of the fire and by much friction and rubbing, yet it continueth not any longer than these meanes are applyed, because it hath no inward cause, but they being remoued, it becommeth againe as cold as a stone, or the earth and clay whereof it is made.

Chap. XVI.

The former operations of the sanctifying Spirit illustrated by diuers similitudes.

And these are the effects respecting our repentance which the Spirit worketh in vs, the which are also implyed by diuers metaphors or similitudes, by which in the Scriptures it is represented vnto vs. For it is likened vnto winde, because like it (yea much aboue it) it is mighty and powerfull to cast downe all that standeth in the way, as proud reason, stubborne will, and rebellious affections; and to make the strong Oakes and lofty Cedars equall with the lowest shrubs. Secondly in respect of its secret operation and the vnknowne liberty which it taketh in working where it listeth. Thirdly, because the more it bloweth vpon vs, the more it causeth vs to burne and flame out in the feruent zeale of Gods glory. And fourthly because it hath a cleansing and purifying vertue, whereby it purgeth vs from the contagion and corruption of our sinnes, euen as the winde purgeth the wheate and driueth away the chaffe, cleanseth the ayre, and purifieth it from all hurtfull and dangerous infection. Secondly it is likened to oyle, and the operation thereof to outward annointing, in respect of that suppling and softning vertue which it hath, whereby it mollifyeth our hard and stony hearts, and makes them to become flesh; tender and pliable to Gods will and word, and also because our powers and parts being spiritually annoynted with this holy oyle, they are made strong and vigorous, nimble & actiue to runne in the wayes of Gods Commandements; as our limbes annoyted with materiall oyle, are made more agill and fit for any bodily exercise or feates of actiuity. And finally it is likened to oyle because like it, it maketh a chearefull countenance, whilest it comforteth and cheareth the heart, bringeth peace of conscience, which passeth all vnderstanding, and repleniseth our soules with such inward joy as is vnspeakable and inestimable.

Thirdly, it is compared vnto water, For I will (saith the Lord) powre water vpon him that is thirsty, and floods vpon the dry ground; I will powre my Spirit vpon thy seede, and my blessing vpon thy off-spring; because in many things

1. Sect. 1. The Spirit compared to Winde and Oyle.

Ioh. 3. 8.
2. Cor. 10. 5.

2. Cor. 1. 21.

1. Ioh. 2. 20.

2. Sect. 2. The Spirit, compared to water.
Esa. 44. 3.

things it doth resemble it, for it cleareth the eyes of the mind, (as materiall water doth the eyes of the body) and maketh vs much more perfectly to behold the wayes of God and mysteries of his Kingdome; to which end the Lord promiseth his Church that hee will powre the water of his Spirit vpon all flesh, the effect whereof should be this, that they should prophecy, their young men see visions, and their olde men dreame dreames. Secondly like water it cooleth and refresheth vs, when wee are scorched with the heate of Gods displeasure, with afflictions and persecutions, and are ready to faint with wearinesse, as we are trauailing in our journey towards our heauenly country. Thirdly (like water) it quencheth our spirituall thirst, by applying vnto vs the liuing spring and fountaine of liuing waters, Iesus Christ his bloud, his righteousnesse and obedience; to which purpose is that speech of our Sauiour to the woman of Samaria; Whosoeuer drinketh of the waters that I shall giue him, shall neuer thirst; but the water that I shall giue him, shall be in him a well of water springing vnto euerlasting life. And that proclamation which hee made at the feast; If any man thirst let him come vnto me and drinke. Hee that beleeueth in me, out of his belly shall flow riuers of liuing water: the which (as the Euangelist expoundeth it) hee spake of his spirit which they that beleeued on him should receiue. Fourthly, he is compared to water, because like it he hath a cleansing vertue, to purge vs by the application of Christs merits and bloud-shead from the guilt, punishment and corruption of all our sinnes. So the Apostle saith to the Corinthians, that they were washed and cleansed from their sinnes, in the name of the Lord Iesus, by the Spirit of God. Lastly like water, it watereth our dry and barraine hearts, and maketh them fruitfull in holines and righteousnesse, for so the Lord hauing said, that he would powre the water of his Spirit vpon his Israel, addeth in the next words, and they shall spring vp as among the grasse, and as willowes by the water courses. And againe, Thou shalt bee like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters faile not.

Ioel.2.28. Esa.61.3.30 Ioh.4.14. and 7.37. 1.Cor.6.11. Tit.3.5. Heb.10.22. Zach.13.1. Esa.44.45.

2. Sect.3. The Spirit compared to to fire. Ioh.3.11. Act.2.3.

Finally it is compared to fire, according to the Baptists speech of our Sauiour Christ, Hee shall baptise you with the holy Ghost and with fire: and so when hee descended vpon the Apostles; it is said that there appeared vnto them, clouen tongues like as fire, and it sate vpon each of them. The which similitude is most likely to signifie and represent the vertue and operation of the holy Ghost. For first like fire it giueth light, euen in the darkest places and dispelleth and scattereth the blacke and thicke fogges of ignorance and errour, so that all things about it which were hidden and secret are spiritually discerned, in which respect hee is called the a Father of lights, which causeth the b light of grace bringing saluation to shine vnto vs, by which wee are c illightned who sate in darknesse, and in the shadow of death, that wee might d know the things of God, which cannot otherwise bee discerned, and might haue our feete guided into the wayes of peace. Secondly as fire burneth all things that are combustible, as straw, wood, chaffe and such like; so the Spirit of God burneth and consumeth in vs whatsoeuer may be consumed, as sinne, corruption, and all manner of fleshly lusts, and so offereth vp our bodies as a liuing sacrifice, holy, acceptable and without blame, which would not bee acceptable vnto God, vnlesse like the whole burnt offring, it were thus salted, seasoned, and purified with this holy fire, as our Sauiour speaketh. Thirdly, as fire by consuming the rust and drosse doth refine and purifie the mettall, so that the more it is tryed the purer it waxeth. So this holy spirit consuming the rust and drosse of our sins and corruptions, doth make vs pure and refined mettals, yea it also (like the fire) hath the vertue of separation, parting asunder our Tinne and Copper, from right Siluer and Gold, that so wee might bee a treasure vnto God, and (as it were) fit vessels for his owne Table. So the Lord promiseth; I will turne mine hand vpon thee, and purge away thy drosse and take away all thy Tinne. And againe, Euery one that is written among the liuing in Ierusalem, shall be called holy, when the Lord shall haue washed away the filth of the daughters of Zion, and shall haue purged the blood of Ierusalem from the middest thereof, by the spirit of iudgement, and by the spirit of burning. Fourthly, as it is the propertie of fire to turne things into its owne nature, and to make them like vnto it selfe: so the Spirit doth turne and transforme vs, making vs of earthy, naturall and carnall, to become heauenly, supernaturall and spirituall. More specially as it is the propertie of fire, to take from yron its owne qualities when it is put into it, and to communicate vnto it such qualities as it selfe hath; and whereas naturally it is blacke and hard, cold and heauy, it maketh it bright and shining, soft and liquid, hot and light, so that a man would thinke that the yron were transformed and changed into fire it selfe; So it is the property of the Spirit to communicate the like qualities to the naturall man, for whereas naturally he is darkned in his vnderstanding through blacke and palpable ignorance, it inlightneth his mind with the bright beames of sauing knowledge whereby he is enabled to see and vnderstand the high and deepe mysteries of Gods Kingdome. Whereas his heart is so hard and obdurate, that nothing will make it relent, but it will rather breake than a Iam.1.17. b Tit.2.11.12. c Luk.1.79. d 1.Cor.2.13.14. Rom.12.1. Mark.9.39. Esa.1.25. Esa.1.25. Esa.4.4. 1.Cor.2.14.10. Eph.4.18. Esa.42.16. Psal.36.9. 1.King.22.19. Act.2.37.

than bow and incline to any good; the Spirit of God maketh it to melt like the heart of Iosiah, and so suppleth and softneth it, that it becommeth flexible to Gods will, and fit to receiue any impression which hee is pleased to stampe vpon it, or any forme which hee will frame it vnto; as if it were no more Iron, but now become clay or waxe. So wheras he is naturally of a more than earthly coldnesse and like Iron, which maketh other things cold with the very touch thereof; Gods Spirit so heateth and inflameth him with feruent loue and ardent zeale, that hee hath not onely liuely heate in himselfe, but spirituall fire hee communicateth his heate and warmth of holinesse and righteousnesse euen like to all that are neere vnto him; making them which were cold and dull, hot and zealously feruent in all Christian and holy duties.

Ephes.5.1. Psal.34.48.

Finally, whereas like Iron hee is naturally so lumpish and heauy, that he is wholy fixed and fastened to the earth, minding onely worldly things, and can no more mount vp aloft in holy and heauenly meditations, than Iron of it selfe can ascend into the ayre; or if by some outward force his thoughts be raised vp to minde those things which are aboue, no sooner is the strength of the outward agent spent, but presently like an Iron bullet it falleth downe againe, and euen presseth it into the earth with more than wonted waight & violence; contrariwise when as his earthy massinesse is attenuated with the fire of Gods Spirit, he not onely becommeth more light, but being throughly heated in this holy forge, hee sendeth vp the sparkes of spirituall Meditations, and now forgetting his old earthy nature, hee doth no longer lie groueling on the ground, minding onely earthly things, but being risen with Christ, hee seeketh not things beneath, but those things that are aboue, and euen whilest his body is on earth, his conuersation is in Heauen, and though hee cannot corporally ascend, yet he continually sendeth vp thitherward the sparkles of holy and heauenly thoughts, and euen taketh his chiefe comfort and delight to spend his spirits in diuine contemplation. Lastly, as fire by the warmth and heate thereof refresheth and cheareth those creatures which are frozen and benummed with cold, and communicateth vnto them the operations of life, strength and nimblenesse: So this holy fire of the Spirit giueth spirituall life and quickening vnto vs who are dead in trespasses and sins; and by the diuine heate of Gods loue, it warmeth, cheareth and refresheth, our icy and benummed hearts, and inflameth them with a feruent zeale of his glory, and an ardent loue towards him who hath so loued vs, and also to our Neighbours for his sake; whereby it commeth to passe, that we who were frozen in the dregs of our sinnes, and so weake and stiffe, that wee were not able to stirre a limbe for the doing of any good action; are now made by this vitall heat, strong and actiue for all good duties. So our Sauiour saith, that it is the spirit that quickneth, the flesh profiteth nothing; and the Apostle telleth vs, that the spirit giueth life. And therefore he calleth him, the law of the spirit of life; and saith, that this Spirit is life because of righteousnesse.

Col.3.2. Phil.3.20.

Iohn 6.63.

2.Cor.3.6. Rom.8.2,10.

If therefore we would know whether the spirit of God dwell in vs or no, we must examine our owne hearts, and try our selues, whether there be in vs these operations and effects of the Spirit which are resembled by these Metaphors and similitudes; as first if it haue like a mighty winde cast downe the strong holds of sinne, and (as it were) laid flat on the ground our proud carnall reason and rebellious will subiecting them to the will of God and the rule of his Word; if it hath caused vs, not onely to burne in loue of Gods Majesty, but euen to blaze out in the zeale of his glory, and if it hath cleansed vs like pure wheate from the chaffe of our corruptions, and from the light corne of humane inuentions and vngrounded superstitions. Secondly, let vs consider and try our selues, if like an Oyle it hath suppled and softned our hard and stony hearts, so as they are plyable to Gods will; if by this spirituall anoynting we be made more strong, actiue and nimble to performe holy and Christian duties, than euer we haue beene in time past; and finally if it haue comforted and cheared our hearts in the assurance of our reconciliation with God, and remission of our sins, filling them with spirituall joy, and hath brought peace of conscience which maketh vs to looke with a chearefull countenance, euen whilest the World frowneth vpon vs. Thirdly, let vs examine, if like water it hath cleared the eyes of our minds, and hath giuen vnto vs a sauing, feeling and experimentall knowledge of God, our selues, and his holy Truth; if it hath cooled and refreshed vs who were scorched with the apprehension of Gods anger for our sins, or with the heat of troubles and afflictions, and hath quenched our spirituall thirst by applying vnto vs Christs righteousnesse and bloud-shed (as it were) a Fountaine of liuing waters; if it hath by applying vnto vs the vertue of Christs death, cleansed and purged vs, not onely from the guilt and punishment, but also from the corruption of our sinnes, so as though they dwell, yet they doe not raigne in our mortall bodies; and lastly, if it haue watered our hearts, as it were, dry and barraine grounds, and hath made them like a fertile soyle, to bring forth plentifull fruits of holinesse and righteousnesse. Finally, let vs examine and try our selues, if it haue been vnto vs a spirituall fire,

Q. Sect.4. That wee may know that the spirit dwelleth in vs by the operations signified by the former Metaphors.

to

to giue vnto vs light who sate in darkneſſe and in the ſhadow of death; if like a fire it haue conſumed the droſſe and ruſt of our corruptions; and in ſome meaſure hath refined and made vs veſſels of grace, fit for Gods vſe; and finally, if it hath warmed our cold and frozen hearts with the zeale of Gods glory, and the loue of him and our Neighbours, ſo as we who were ſtiffe and benummed are become ſtrong, liuely and actiue in performing all holy and Chriſtian duties which we owe vnto them. And if wee find theſe effects and operations in vs, then may we be aſſured, that the Spirit of God which is the cauſe and authour of them dwelleth in vs, though they be not in vs in perfection, if they be in ſincerity and truth. But if vpon tryall we find that they are altogether wanting, then haue wee not the Spirit of God, which can no more be ſeuered from theſe effects and ſignes of it, than light from the Sunne, or theſe effects before ſpoken of from the winde and Oyle, the water and the fire.

CHAP. XVII.

Of the laſt effects and operations of the Spirit whereby we may know that it dwelleth in vs.

§. Sect. 1. That the ſpirit worketh in all thoſe in whom it is ſanctifying and ſauing graces.

THe laſt effects which are infallible ſignes of the Spirits dwelling in vs, are all the ſaning and ſanctifying gifts and graces which it worketh in vs; as firſt a liuely faith apprehending the promiſes, and applying vnto vs Chriſt Ieſus and all his benefits, of which I haue already ſpoken. The ſecond fruit of the Spirit is vnfained loue of God, not onely for his benefits receiued or expected, preſent proſperity, the confluence of worldly benefits, and euerlaſting ſaluation; but alſo in his owne nature and in reſpect of his goodneſſe, mercy, iuſtice, holineſſe and all other his ſauing attributes. In which the faithfull in their loue reſemble children, who loue their Parents out of naturall affection, ſimply and ſincerely, when as they haue no other outward motiue, euen when they croſſe them in their deſires, and doe correct and chaſtiſe them for their amendment. For ſuch is the loue of Gods Children, free and generous, (although their loue may be increaſed, and made vnto them much more ſenſible by temporall benefits and heauenly hopes,) in which reſpect they are ſaid to haue receiued a free ſpirit, and ſo ſerue God in the liberty of it. Whereas contrariwiſe if there be any loue towards God in the wicked, it is onely ſeruile and ſlauiſh, not for his owne ſake, or out of their owne diſpoſition and naturall affection, but onely for the hire of worldly proſperity, honours, riches, pleaſures, peace, health, eaſe and ſuch like temporary benefits; the which when hee doth at any time take from them, and inflict vpon them the contrary croſſes, then the cauſe of their loue ceaſing, their loue it ſelfe alſo ceaſeth; as wee ſee in the example of Saul, Iehu, Iudas, Demas, and many others. Thirdly, the Spirit bringeth with it peace of conſcience, which is a fruit of faith that the Spirit worketh in vs, aſſuring vs of the remiſſion of our ſinnes and our reconciliation with God; for ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, that being iuſtified by faith, we haue peace with God through our Lord Ieſus Chriſt: and therefore hee alſo reckoneth it among the fruites of the Spirit. Fourthly, by this aſſurance of faith and inward peace, it alſo worketh in vs inward comfort and conſolation, which maketh vs with patience to indure all afflictions, and to ſtand againſt all the temptations of our ſpirituall enemies, in which reſpect our Sauiour Chriſt calleth the holy Spirit, the Comforter, becauſe hee is the authour and fountaine of all conſolation. Fourthly, from this peace and comfort, hee raiſeth ſpirituall joy and rejoycing in God, our hearts being raiſhed in the aſſurance of his mercy, and the ſenſe and feeling of his loue and fauour in Ieſus Chriſt, in the freedome out of the hands of all our ſpirituall enemies, and our aſſured hopes of heauenly happineſſe, the which alſo is a fruit of the Spirit, as the Apoſtle reckoneth it in the ſame place; and is ſo to bee ſeene in the faithfull, not onely when their wine and oyle abounds, in which the wicked alſo may rejoyce but alſo when in the abſence of theſe, the light of Gods countenance doth ſhine vpon them, which cauſeth vs to joy and rejoyce euen in the middeſt of croſſes and tribulations, as the Apoſtle telleth vs. Fiftly, from all theſe ariſeth thankfulneſſe vnto God, from whom we haue receiued all theſe benefits, the which is ſhewed not with our lips alone, but by our conſcionable care and zealous endeauour to glorifie God in all our thoughts, words and actions; and our earneſt deſire to approue our ſelues vnto God in all things, and to retaine his loue and auoid his diſpleaſure, in louing and practiſing whatſoeuer hee loueth and requireth, and in hating and forſaking all that hee abhorreth and forbiddeth.

2. Tim. 3. 14.

Rom. 5. 1. Gal. 5. 22.

Ioh. 15. 26.

Gal. 5. 22.

Pſal. 4. 6, 7.

Rom. 5. 3.

§. Sect. 2. Of other ſpeciall fruits of the ſpirit reſpecting our Neighbours.

Vnto which duties immediately reſpecting God, the Apoſtle alſo joyneth as fruites of the Spirit, diuers others reſpecting our Neighbours and our owne perſons. As firſt, long-ſuffering, when as conſidering how the Lord hath borne with vs, when he might haue conſumed vs with his wrath, wee doe alſo beare with our brethren, and when they wrong & injure vs, indure it with patience, or elſe at leaſt deferre and put off our anger,

Col.3.12. or restaine and moderate the rage and heate of it; according to that of the Apostle; Put on as the Elect of God holy and beloued, bowels of mercies, kindnesse, humblenesse of minde, meekenesse, long-suffering, forbearing one another, and forgiuing one another, if any man haue a quarell against any: euen as Christ forgaue you, so also doe yee. The second is gentlenesse, whereby a man carryeth himselfe courteously and affably in his words, and friendly and kindly in all his actions vnto all men, mildly to his inferiours, and reuerently and respectiuely to his Superiours. And this the Apostle requireth, that wee should be no brawlers, but gentle, shewing all kindnesse vnto all men. The third is goodnes, whereby we are ready by all meanes we can to doe good vnto our Neighbours, both in the duties of iustice and mercy vnto their persons and states, soules, bodies, & name. And this we are bound vnto by Gods Commandement, namely, that we should by loue serue one another; and also by that bond of the Spirit which vniteth vs together in one body vnder one Head Christ, which should cause vs to demeane our selues towards one another, as it becommeth members of the same body. The fourth is faith or fidelitie, whereby in our words we keepe all our lawfull promises and couenants, though it be to our owne hinderance, and in our actions carry our selues truly & honestly without falshood, lying and deceit. The fift is meekenesse, which consisteth in two things; the first patience, in forbearing to reuenge by our owne priuate meanes, wrongs and injuries, from which our Sauiour would haue vs so farre, that wee should rather offer our selues to beare new injuries, than reuenge the old; and the other lowlinesse, whereby laying aside all proud conceit of our own worth and excellency, we thinke better of others than of our selues, and in giuing honour, striue & labour to goe before them.

Tit.3.2.

Gal.5.13.

Matt.5.

9. Sect. 3.
Of some other speciall fruits of the spirit respecting our owne persons,

In respect of our owne persons the fruits of the Spirit are principally two; the first whereof is temperance, whereby a man rightly ordereth, ruleth and moderateth his appetite in his meate, drinke and apparell, pleasures and recreations, according to the rules of Gods Word, hating and forsaking gluttony and drunkennesse, excessiue braue-ry and strange fashions, sinfull delights and vnlawfull and excessiue pastimes. The other is sobriety, which especially teacheth vs the right vse of all Gods blessings and benefits both temporall & spirituall. And for the first this sobernesse of mind maketh vs contented with that measure of earthly blessings which we enjoy, as being that portion which God hath allotted vnto vs; and not so much as to desire any more, but when the Lord offereth it vnto vs by honest and lawfull meanes. Contrary whereunto are the desires and indeauours of worldly men, who when they haue little, murmure and repine against Gods prouidence, and are ready vpon all occasions to vse vnlawfull meanes for the bettering of their earthly estate, and when they haue much and more than enough, are not contented & satisfied with their abundance, but still labour after more, carking and caring as though they were in want, and biting at euery bayt which promiseth gaine, although the hooke of sinne bee hid vnder it. Secondly, from contentation springeth thankfulnesse, whereby wee ascribe all wee haue receiued vnto God, as being his gifts, and hauing nothing else to returne, doe render vnto him prayse and thanksgiuing. Whereas contrariwise those who are wicked and vnregenerate, howsoeuer they rejoyce in the fruition of his temporall benefits, yet not in him; for they doe not giue vnto him the glory of his owne gifts, but rather glory in themselues, and sacrifice (as the Prophet speaketh) vnto their owne nets, and kisse their hands, as though by their own wisdome and prouidence, industry and painfull indeuours, they had made themselues owners of all these things; whereby they are mooued to an high and proud conceit of their excellency and sufficiency, and in comparison of themselues to contemne all others. So in the second place this sobriety of minde appeareth in the right vse of spirituall graces; For the spirituall man looking vpon them as the gifts of God, and beholding them as the first-fruits of the Spirit, which are not perfect but only begun, and seeing the many faylings, defects, wants, and weaknesses which are in them, and the strong corruptions which are mixed with them, hee resteth contented and satisfied with the portion which he hath receiued, but like a new borne babe, hungreth and thirsteth after the sincere milke of the Word, that he may grow vp thereby, and still inlargeth his desires, and striueth and indeuoureth in the vse of all good meanes, whereby hee may attaine vnto more and more perfection; in the meane time waiting vpon the Lord with faith and hope, meekenesse and patience for his blessing vpon these meanes, whereby they may become effectuall and profitable for the ends for which they vse them. As we see in Dauid who expected and waited for the Lord more than they who watch for the morning; and as the eyes of seruants looke to the hands of their Masters, and of the Maiden vnto the hand of her Mistris, so his eyes waited vpon the Lord his God, vntill hee had mercy vpon him. But yet the faithfull doe not so looke after more increase of spirituall graces, as that they forget to be thankfull vnto God for that measure which they haue already receiued, but considering that they are no naturall gifts and endowments, but Gods free and Hab.1.16.

1.Pet.2.1.2.

Psal.130.6.

Psal.123.2.

gracious gifts, which of meere loue he hath granted vnto them, without any their deserts; denying them to many others which are by nature as good as they; this maketh them not onely for the present to enjoy the graces they haue receiued with contentation and much comfort and spirituall rejoycing, but also to laude and magnifie Gods mercy and goodnesse towards them, and to render vnto him all thankes and prayse for his gracious gifts.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of the euent and successe of the fight betweene the Flesh and the Spirit.

Q. Sect. 1. Of the foyles which the spirit receiueth in this conflict.

THe last thing to bee considered in this conflict betweene the Spirit and the flesh, is the euent and successe of the fight betweene them, which is two-fold; the first whereof is the repulses & foyles which the spirit receiueth and suffereth through the malice and fury of the flesh; the second is the victory & triumph of the spirit ouer it; the first being Temporary and lasting onely for a time; the other permanent and euerlasting. Concerning the former, the Spirit is often foyled in this combat, when as by the subtilty or violence of the flesh, it is hindred in the course of godlinesse and allured or forcibly drawne to the committing of sinne; Of which the Apostle complaineth: I see (saith he) another law in my members, warring against the law of my minde, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sinne which is in my members. Rom. 7. 21, 22. And againe, I find then a law, that when I would doe good, euill is present with me. The which happeneth either through the weaknesse of the spirit or want of watchfulnesse, and spirituall care to keep the whole armour of God fast buckled vnto vs. Of which foyles there follow two notable effects; the first is vnfained and bitter griefe and sorrow for our slips and fals; the other an earnest and feruent desire to rise againe, to be deliuered from the bondage of the flesh, and hauing regained the victory to subdue and keepe it vnder for the time to come. Of the former we haue an example in the Church, which finding her failings and fals into sin, pittifully complaineth and cryeth out vnto God for helpe; O Lord, why hast thou made vs to erre from thy wayes? And hardened our heart from thy feare? Returne for thy seruants sake, the tribes of thine inheritance. Esay 63. 17. Wherein we may obserue an apparant difference, betweene the fals of the faithfull and vnregenerate. For whereas these being false willingly doe liue and lie in their sinnes with pleasure and delight. The godly being surprized at vnawares or being ouercome through their frailty, and weakenesse, and the violence of tentation, doe mourne and grieue for their sinne, and labour to rise out of it by vnfained repentance; and whereas they yeeld vnto it voluntary and cheerefull obedience, as vnto their lawfull King and Soueraigne; the other being held vnder a forcible and tyrannicall subjection, doe bewayle their thraldome, and are neuer at rest till they haue found out some meanes to be deliuered out of it.

Q. Sect. 2. That from the foyles of the spirit arise earnest desires to bee freed from the slauery of sinne. Rom. 7. 24.

And from hence arise vehement and earnest desires to be freed from the slauery of sinne, (like that of the holy Apostle;) O wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer me from the body of this death? And to serue the Lord in the duties of Holines and Righteousnesse: For as the Needle in the Dyall which is touched with a Loadstone, may by a forcible motion turne and winde too and fro, but will neuer stand fixed and stedfast till it bend vnto its owne proper point; so the heart of the regenerate touched with Gods holy Spirit, howsoeuer through the violence of the flesh, and strength of Sathans tentations, it may be auerted from God, and turne this way & that way, after the vanities of the world, & the deceitful pleasures of sin, yet it neuer resteth till it be againe returned and inclined towards him from whom it had first motion and being. It may be whilst the storme of tentation lasteth, the Spirit may be hid like the Sun vnder a thick cloud, or a ship couered ouer with the waues; but afterwards the beames and beauty of it will burst through and dispell these foggy mists, and like a goodly ship it wil againe aduance it selfe and appeare vnder full sayles, speedily hasting towards the holy Land. And finally, though these carnall lusts (like those cursed Amalekites) may on a sudden make inroades, waste, spoyle, sacke, burne, lead captiue and carry away a great booty for some small way, yet the spirit (like Dauid) being excited by Gods Oracle, will rise vp, pursue these enemies, obtaine victory, and vindicate and recouer all out of their hands. Where againe wee haue a notable difference betweene the regenerate and vnregenerate. For whereas they being ruled by a free and generous spirit, do after their foyles earnestly desire and labour to regaine their liberty, and repaire and increase their strength, that giuing a new on-set, they may put their enemies to flight, and obtaine victory; the other being of a slauish disposition after they are once subdued, doe contentedly liue in the bondage of sin, neuer labouring or endeuouring to come out of it and better their estate. Or if there be in them any strugling at all, it is onely out of seruile feare and terrours of conscience, arising from expectation of deserued punishments, which (as hath beene shewed) may make some assaults against the will will and affections, and yet neither part be more ſanctified or leſſe corrupted than the other, but (like the good Witch which vndoeth that which the bad Witch hath done,) they remayne both cuill and the limbes of Sathan, agreeing well enough in their common deſignes of wickednesse and impietie.

Q. Sect. 3. Secondly, an indeuour in the vſe of all good meanes to be preſerued from ſuch foyles for the time to come.

But it is not thus with the man regenerate, who after his foyles receiued from the fleſh, not onely earneſtly deſireth and indeuoureth to recouer himſelfe from the captiuity of ſinne, but hauing obtained his deſire, vſeth all good meanes whereby hee may for the time to come be preſerued from being againe ſurpriſed by the like ſtratagems and aſſaults. To which purpoſe he doth firſt keepe a narrow watch ouer all his wayes, and eſpecially ouer his owne heart, wherein the fleſh hideth its chiefe ambuſhments, not eaſily and ſuddenly yeelding to the ſatisfying of euery deſire of profit and delight, but firſt trying and examining them by the rule of Gods Word, whether they are to be lawfully imbraced as Gods bleſſings, or to be rejected ſeeing they cannot be compaſſed without ſinne. Secondly, he will be moſt carefull to comfort and ſtrengthen the ſpirituall part, to keepe the Armour of God faſt buckled on him, to be alwayes well prouided and furniſhed with weapons and munition before the time of conflict; or rather becauſe this conflict with the fleſh is continuall, hee will take care, that hee may neuer bee found vnprouided. Finally, he will ſhew the like care in weakening and diſabling his enemy the fleſh, by withdrawing from it the chief weapons and munition whereby it hath formerly preuailed, and will ſtudiouſly indeuour to be ſo furniſhed at all points, that hee may be able to incounter it in the open field, or to defeate the politique ſtratagems and eſcape the ſecret ambuſhments which it layeth to intrap him. Thirdly, the regenerate man after his fals will more zealouſly hate his ſinne (and eſpecially that wherewith he hath beene ouer-taken) than euer hee did before, and in this deteſtation will auoide and flee from it; yea, the oftner he hath falne into it, the more his hatred increaſeth againſt it, as againſt his greateſt enemy from whom hee hath receiued moſt wrong and damage. Euen as a man moſt feareth & ſhunneth that ſickneſſe which hath moſt vexed him, abhorreth that meate whereon hee hath dangerouſly ſurfeited, and moſt hateth that Serpent the venome & poyſon of whoſe ſting hath moſt afflicted and tormented him. Laſtly, after his foyles and fals he will carefully performe all holy duties which are contrary to his former ſinnes, as if hee haue falne by couetouſneſſe, hee will being riſen exerciſe himſelfe in bounty and liberality; if by pride, he will abaſe himſelfe in all humbleneſſe and meekneſſe of ſpirit; if by ſurfeiting and exceſſe in meates and drinkes, he will practiſe moderation in diet, and oftentimes faſting and totall abſtinence. Yea, the regenerate man after his relapſes into the ague fits of ſin, will much increaſe and thriue in his ſpirituall ſtature, being much more feruent and zealous in all holy and Chriſtian duties than he was before, redeeming his loſt time by future diligence, and running after hee is riſen vp ſo much the more ſwiftly, by how much he findeth himſelfe hindered in his ſpirituall race by his ſlips and fals.

Q. Sect. 4. How farre the fleſh may preuayle againſt the ſpirit, firſt, common graces may be loſt for a time,

But here a waighty queſtion may fitly and ſeaſonably be moued and determined; namely how farre the fleſh in this conflict may preuayle againſt the Spirit, and whether it may by the furious aſſaults thereof, be not onely foyled, but for a time quite ouercome, not onely cooled but vtterly quenched, loſt and extinguiſhed. For the reſoluing of which doubt, wee muſt firſt diſtinguiſh betweene the gifts of the Spirit, and the perſons in whom they are. The gifts may be conſidered both in their kind and in their qualitie. Concerning the former, the gifts and graces of the Spirit are either common to the regenerate and vnregenerate, or proper and peculiar to the Faithfull and Elect. The common graces are eſpecially thoſe Morall vertues of wiſdome, ciuill honeſty, Fortitude, Temperance, Patience and ſuch like, which may not only be loſt and extinguiſhed in worldly ciuill men, but alſo in the faithfull, becauſe they are not eſſentiall to a Chriſtian, but rather ornaments than parts of the ſpirituall man. And thus Danid may be a foole in ſeeming ſo, and be ſpiritually mad whileſt he counterfeiteth naturall madneſſe; thus he was diſhoneſt in his dealing with Bathſheba and much more with Vriah his faithfull ſeruant; and both vnjuſt and vngratefull in that vnrighteous ſentence for Ziba againſt Mephiboſheth, the innocent and diſtreſſed ſonne of his deareſt Ionathan. Thus Noah made a temporary forfeiture of his Temperance, Lot of his Chaſtity, Ieremy and Ionah of their Patience, and many other of Gods beſt ſeruants of the like graces. But as for thoſe ſanctifying and ſauing graces, proper and peculiar to the faithfull which are ſo eſſentiall vnto a Chriſtian, that without them he ceaſeth to be the Childe of God, a member of Chriſt, and in the ſtate of grace and ſaluation, the like judgement is not to be giuen of them; for being once had, they can neuer be loſt, nor be vtterly extinguiſhed with all the power and malice of the Deuill and the Fleſh, ſeeing the gifts and calling of God are without repentance, and Chriſt who holdeth them is ſtronger than all, neither is there any power able to pull his ſheepe out of his hand.

Rom. 11. 29.

Ioh. 10. 28.

Q. Sect. 5. Secondly, the

Secondly, the ſanctifying and ſauing gifts and graces of the Spirit may be conſidered ſhewes & ſemblances of ſauing graces in Temporaries may periſh vtterly.

in their quality; For they are either true, ſincere and ſubſtantiall, or falſe, hypocriticall, and but in ſhew and ſemblance onely, In which regard they haue their diuers ſubjects and perſons in whom they are; the former in the faithfull and regenerate alone; the latter in Hypocrites and Temporaries who continue but only for a time. Now theſe may loſe their illumination, faith, loue and zeale, whether wee conſider them as common gifts, or as they are ſhewes and ſemblances both to themſelues and others of ſauing graces, becauſe in this ſenſe they are not ſo in them in truth, ſimple and ſincere, but hypocriticall, counterfeit and onely but in ſhew. And thus our Sauiour hauing ſaid, Mat.25.29. that from him that hath not, ſhall be taken away, euen that which he hath, expoundeth his meaning by another Euangeliſt; Luke 8.18. Whoſoeuer hath not, from him ſhall be taken, euen that which hee ſeemeth to haue, or thinketh that he hath. As though he ſhould ſay, doe you aske how a man can haue that taken from him which hee hath not? Why know that there are many men that haue no gifts truly, that yet doeſeeme to haue them, and from theſe ſhall be truly taken the gifts that they ſeeme to haue, or the ſhew and ſeeming of their gifts, that is, euen that Apiſh imitation which they haue of Gods ſauing graces ſhall be taken away, and ſo their Hypocriſie being diſcouered, it ſhall plainly appeare that what ſhow ſo euer they haue made, yet they neuer had them in ſincerity and truth. For example, though the vnregenerate may haue ſome illightning in ſpeculation, which at the firſt appearance may reſemble that ſauing, feeling and experimentall knowledge, which is in the faithfull, yet indeed there is (as hath beene ſhewed) many and great differences betweene them, and therefore that ſhew and ſemblance whereby for a time they deceiue themſelues and others, wil in a while vaniſh, when as being ſeuered from al power of godlineſſe and fruits of obedience, it ſhall be diſcouered to haue beene in reſpect of the quality of it falſe and counterfeit. Though they may ſeeme to haue a true and juſtifying Faith, becauſe they giue aſſent to the whole Word, and eſpecially to the gracious promiſes of the Goſpell, which cauſeth in them ſome temporary joy; yet being vneffectuall, and neither working in their will any conſtant reſolution to imbrace Chriſt, and to be ready to forſake the World and earthly vanities, nor in their hearts any hungring and thirſting deſire after him and his righteouſneſſe for their juſtification, but onely as it may ſtand with their worldly deſignes and ends; it continueth not in the time of tentation, but either when they are allured with the baits of proſperity, or preſſed and pinched with croſſes and perſecution, they fall away and become Apoſtates from the Faith.

So though their mortification may ſeeme to reſemble, yea, and ſometimes to goe before that which is ſincere and in truth, yet it is not generall and indefinite, but alwayes limited either to ſome few ſinnes, or all ſauing ſome few; and ſtill the Hypocrite and Temporary Beleeuer hath ſome darling and beloued ſinne which hee nouriſheth in his boſome, and holdeth (like ſweet meates) vnder his tongue, as wee ſee in Herod, Iudas, Demas, and many others; which as it preſently diſcouereth to thoſe that diſcern it, that their mortification is but counterfeit, (for if it proceeded from loue and obedience towards God and not from worldly reſpects, it would as effectually crucifie all their corruptions, as onely ſome of them) ſo it will like a fretting Canker eate out the heart of their mortification and put a quicke end vnto it; ſeeing thoſe ſinnes retained and nouriſhed, will make way for all the reſt, whilſt they harden their hart againſt Gods feare, & ſeare & dead the conſcience (as it were) with an hot Iron, whereby they will become ſecure and ſenſles in the committing of any wickedneſſe. In which reſpect the Apoſtle fitly compareth ſuch, as by this counterfeit mortification & fained repentance cleanſe themſelues from many ſinnes, to the Swine, which being waſhed doth ſoone after returne to wallow againe in the ſame myre becauſe he was onely cleanſed from the outward filth, but not inwardly freed and purged from his ſwiniſh nature; yea, becauſe not their quality but onely the outward act is changed, they not onely returne to their old courſe, but alſo become much worſe than they were before, as the Apoſtle ſheweth. That reſtraint maketh them more eager in the purſuite of the ſins they loue, and to run with more head-long violence, when as the bands that tyed them being vntwiſted or broken, they are now left to their licentious liberty. Finally, though there may ſeeme to be in the vnregenerate ſome renouation and new obedience, ſome heat of loue & zeale of Gods glory, yet being not in truth, but ſpringing out of ſelfe-loue and ayming onely at worldly ends; there is no conſtancy and continuance in theſe ſeeming graces and counterfeit fruits; but when the cauſe and foundation of them faileth and ſinketh, then preſently all vaniſheth, and all their goodly building commeth to vtter ruine. But all this proueth not, that the Spirit or the ſauing graces of it, may in the conflict of temptations receiue deadly wounds, die and periſh in thoſe who are truly regenerate; becauſe thoſe which are but ſemblances, ſhewes, and Apiſh imitations of them in the wicked and vnregenerate, may be loſt vtterly, and quite extinguiſhed.

John 8.10 12. 2.Pet.2.22.

And thus wee haue ſhewed what graces of the Spirit, both in reſpect of their kinde and

9. Sect.6. True ſauing graces in the regenerate may be loſt ſeemingly.

and qualitie may bee loſt and quenched, namely common gifts in all men, & ſeeming ſauing graces in the vnregenerate. Now let vs conſider a little further of this queſtion, and examine whether in this ſpirituall conflict, true ſanctifying and ſauing graces in the elect and regenerate may bee vtterly killed, or for a time quenched, or no. For the anſwere whereof wee are to know, firſt that as ſeeming graces in the vnregenerate may bee truely loſt, ſo true graces in the faithfull may bee loſt ſeemingly, though not in deede, for our Sauiour hath promiſed, that to thoſe that haue ſhall bee giuen, and they ſhall haue abundance; and that euery branch that beareth fruite ſhall bee purged that it may bring forth more fruite. How be it, they may (as I haue ſaid) ſeemingly looſe thoſe graces which they keepe in truth. For example they may ſeemingly looſe their illumination and ſauing knowledge, whenas through the reliques of ignorance remaining in them, they fall ſometimes into groſſe errours, & when through the ſubtile ſophiſtry of the World and the Fleſh, they are already fallen or ready to fall into Schiſmes or hereſies. They may alſo ſeemingly looſe their faith, when as being violently aſſaulted with the temptations of their ſpirituall enemies, it receiueth grieuous foyles, and lyeth hid and couered with doubting and incredulitie, like fire vnder the aſhes, or the Sun beames vnder a darke cloud. So they may ſeeme to haue loſt the grace of repentance, when as they are ouertaken afreſh with their old ſinnes; and when their corruptions after they haue receiued a deadly wound, doe ſeeme to reuiue againe, and to recouer ſome ſtrength, by exerciſing their vigour in their earthly members; eſpecially when as after they are cleanſed, they relapſe and fall into the ſame groſſe ſinnes, not onely ignorantly and through infirmitie, but alſo wittingly and willingly againſt their owne knowledge and conſcience. Finally, when as they are growne colde or luke-warme in their loue and zeale, and ſlacke and negligent in the performance of all Chriſtian duties, becauſe they doe not ſtirre vp Gods graces in them, or doe ouerwhelme them with fleſhly cares, or the eager purſuite of worldly vanities. And yet all this while theſe ſauing graces are not loſt, but onely hid and couered; they are not outright killed, but onely brought into a deadly ſownd, the faculties themſelues are not quite periſhed, but the functions and operations of them onely for a time are hindred and interrupted.

Mat.25.29. Iob.15.2.

§. Sect.7. Other graces ſpringing from theſe which are fundamentall may for a time be loſt.

Secondly, though the prime and principall, the radicall and fundamentall graces which are eſſentiall to the life and being of a Chriſtian cannot be loſt, as faith, hope, charitie, affiance and the true feare of God, without which a Chriſtian ceaſeth to be a Chriſtian, and of the Child of God becommeth the Child of the Diuell. for the iuſt ſhall euer liue by their owne faith; yet other graces which are ſecondary fruits ſpringing from them, and neceſſary to the wel-being of a Chriſtian, as fulneſſe of perſwaſion peace of conſcence; zeale of Gods glory, the ſenſe and feeling of Gods loue and fauour, the comforts of the Spirit; familiar acquaintance with God, and ioy in the holy Ghoſt, which are the life of our life, may for a time through the aſſaults of the fleſh and violence of temptations be much blunted and deaded, yea, in reſpect of preſent apprehenſion, quite loſt and extinguiſhed; as wee ſee in the example of Iob, who ſometimes conceiued of God, as of his enemy, and in Dauid who complaineth that hee was rejected and forſaken, & that the terrours of God did fight againſt him, & prayeth that God would create in him a cleane heart, and renew a right ſpirit in him; that he would make him to heare ioy and gladneſſe, and reſtore him to the ioy of his ſaluation. Implying by theſe phraſes that theſe graces were ſo vtterly loſt in his ſenſe and feeling, that being quite aboliſhed and adnihilated, there needed not onely a renouation and repayring but a new making and creation. Euen as a man by ſickneſſe may looſe his beauty and complexion, his fleſh, ſtrength, and the kindly motion of his pulſe and vitall Spirits, his memory and diſcourſe of vnderſtanding, and with them all the pleaſure and comfort of his life, and yet remaine a man, becauſe theſe are not eſſentiall to his humane nature and being. And when theſe are gone for a time the chiefe principles of nature, the radicall heate and moyſture, the breath, life and reaſonable ſoule may ſtill continue, though much weakened in their functions and operations, and within a while recouer and reſtore him to all which was loſt in as great perfection as euer they were before. And ſo a Chriſtian may looſe the fruits of his chiefe graces, which are the delight and comfort of his life and being, yet thoſe eſſentiall, radicall and fundamentall vertues euer remaining, hee continueth ſtill a Chriſtian and the Childe of God; and theſe preſeruing his life and being, will recouer and reſtore the other to their former or greater perfection, ſo that when hee dyeth hee ſhall bee richer in all ſpirituall grace, than hee euer was in the whole courſe of his life. Neither can grace and vertue more decay in the faithfull and regenerate, than ſinne and corruption in the wicked and vnregenerate, in whom there may bee ſome intermiſſions or temporary ſurceaſing in reſpect of the acts of ſinne and practice of wickedneſſe, though they be habitually as corrupt as euer they were, and the more they are for carnall and worldly reſpects reſtrained from the committing of ſinne, the more in their longing deſires, hearts and affections they adhere and cleaue vnto it; for ſo alſo there may be ſome interruptions in the practice of godlineſſe, and ſome ſurceaſing of the acts and operations of Gods ſauing graces, and yet the graces themſelues doe not dye and periſh; and in theſe intermiſſions the ſound Chriſtian hath reſtleſſe longings after the ſenſe and feeling of renewed graces, and ſhewes as much feruency of affection and entireneſſe of loue towards them by his bitter mourning for their abſence, as hee formerly did by his ioy and rejoycing in their preſence, and his comfortable fruition of their ſweete ſocietie.

Hab.2.4.

Pſal.32.1.& 38. & 51.8 10, 11. 12.

6. Sect. 8. That ſauing and fundamental graces may be loſt in ſome degrees or left in reſpect of their operations.

Lastly thoſe fundamentall graces themſelues, howſoeuer they cannot by the aſſaults of the fleſh be wholly or finally loſt, yet may they, in ſome ſenſe bee weakened and impaired in reſpect of their degrees. As for example the ſtrong faith may be ſhaken with doubting, the moſt feruent loue may be cooled and looſe the firſt degrees of heate, the moſt aſſured hope and affiance may ſomewhat quaile and bee abated; and ſo in the reſt. The which wee ſee in the example of Iob, Dauid, Peter, the Galathians and the Angell of the Church of Epheſus, who is reproued for hauing loſt his firſt loue; and of Sardis who is exhorted, to ſtrengthen the things that remained and were ready to dye. Yea theſe graces may be not onely ſhrewdly ſhaken and ſore wounded, but alſo caſt into a dead ſwonde in which there will appeare, neither to others, nor thoſe that haue them, any motion, breathing or ſigne of life, ſo as there ſhall bee little difference betweene them, whileſt this trance laſteth, and thoſe carkaſes which are dead in ſinne. But yet as I take it (ſubmitting my judgement herein to the godly learned) all this is to be vnderſtood of the functions, acts, and operations of theſe graces, which may decay in their degrees, till they ſeeme periſhed and loſt; but as for the habits of theſe graces themſelues, they neuer decay in Gods Children, not ſo much as in their degrees, but are in a continuall growth vntill they come to their full ſtature and perfect age in Chriſt. In which regard they are ſaid to be trees of righteouſneſſe of Gods own planting, which are not one yeere larger and taller, and the next leſſe and lower, but in continuall growth, till they bee tranſplanted into the heauenly Paradiſe; and howſoeuer they may haue ſometimes leaues and fruite, and ſoone after beare neither, yet in reſpect of their eſſentiall parts as roote, body and boughes, they are ſtill in growing, the roote in the winter of affliction, the body, and branches, in the ſpring-time of proſperitie. So they are called Gods building, in which after the foundation is laid, the wiſe builder proceedeth to bring them to perfection, that they may be fit Temples for himſelfe to dwell in, and doth not one day ſet vp, and another pull downe, a courſe better befitting Penelopes webbe, than ſo excellent workemanſhip of ſuch a maſter builder. They are alſo the children of God, who grow till they come to their full ſtature and to a perfect age in Chriſt, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh; And wee know it to be a monſtrous thing in nature, that the ſame perſon ſhould interchangeably bee this yeere of good ſtature, and the next yeere a little dwarfe. Finally theſe graces are fountaines of liuing waters, which are not like ſtanding pooles, ſometimes full and ſometimes empty, but are continually ſpringing and ſending forth their ſweete and pleaſant ſtreames. And in this reſpect the wiſe man compareth the path of the iuſt to the morning light, which ſhineth more and more vnto the perfect day. Againe the wicked which are the children of Sathan, doe ſtill grow in wickedneſſe, vntill their meaſure being full, God ſweepeth them away with his iudgements, and howſoeuer their growth is ſometimes leſſe and ſometimes more, yet they ſinne, euen whileſt they ſeeme to leaue ſinning, and commit euill whileſt they appeare to doe good; and whatſoeuer their particular actions may be, yet ſtill they grow and goe on in their wicked courſes, ſo that it may be truly ſaid, that his laſt eſtate is his worſt eſtate, and the longer hee liueth the more he treaſureth vp wrath againſt the day of wrath, daily piling vp fuell to maintaine the fire of Hell, in which he ſhall euerlaſtingly bee burned. And ſo in like manner the children of God doe ſtill grow in ſpirituall grace, and when they doe actually euil, through Gods mercy it tendeth and turneth to the furthering of their growth in grace and goodnes. Finally if there might bee a ſurceaſing of their ſpirituall growth, and that their graces in part and in ſome degrees might bee loſt and periſh; then might they alſo be wholly aboliſhed ſeeing the ſame reaſon is of the whole which is of the parts, and if the finger bee corruptible, then alſo is the whole body, if one drop of water, or the leaſt mote of the Sunne, might be annihilated, then alſo might the maine Ocean and the whole World.

Epheſ. 4. 13. 14. 15.

Eſa. 58. 11.

Pro. 4. 18.

Apoc. 2. 4.

Apoc. 3. 2.

Math. 13. 43. 2 Pet. 2. 20. Rom. 2. 5.

Pſal. 1. 3. Eſa. 61. 3.

Pſal. 92. 14.

7. Sect. 9. Whether Dauid loſt any degree of his fundamental graces when he committed adultery and murther.

Yea but did not Dauid looſe ſome degree of his graces when hee committed thoſe fearefull ſinnes of murther and adultery; and the Apoſtle Peter when hee denyed his Maſter? I anſwere that there might bee a decay, yea an vtter ſurceaſing of them for a time, euen till they were renewed by repentance; yet not in the habits, and (as it were) the eſſence of their graces, but onely in their actions and operations. So the Sunne ſhineth continually in his full brightneſſe, and yet it is often hid from our eyes by the darke darke clouds or opacous Earth. The fire ſtill retaineth his naturall heate, and may increaſe it ſelfe in combuſtible matter, when it is couered with aſhes, or is ſo pend in through the cloſeneſſe of the place, that it cannot for the preſent bee ſeene or felt. The faculties of the ſoule are not loſt or leſſened in the time of ſleepe or in a dead ſwond, although there bee a ſurceaſing of the actions. A Child which is growing doth not in the fit of an ague looſe his growth, and howſoeuer the fleſh may be abated and ſtrength impaired, yet the radicall moyſture and heate being inwardly preſerued, well may his growth bee a little while hindred, but when the ague is loſt and paſt, hee groweth faſter than euer before. So the ſtreames that come from the fountaine may bee for a time ſtopped in their courſe, but in the very time of the ſtopping they are multiplyed and encreaſed, vntill at laſt they grow ſo ſtrong, that they beare downe that which hindreth their courſe, or riſe ſo high, that they ouerflow and runne ouer it. And that I may fit the ſimilitude to our preſent purpoſe, a worthy Champion may be ſo tyred in the fight, that hee may haue no more ſtrength than a Childe to performe any valorous enterpriſe; and yet the act and operation of his ſtrength is onely hindered for a time; and as for the habite it ſelfe it is not impaired, but much increaſed by this martiall exerciſe, and will alſo appeare more able for like employments after a little reſt, and much more vigorous and ſtrong euen in reſpect of act and operation. And thus it is with the faithfull in this ſpirituall conflict; their outward foyles doe not impaire their inward valour, but rather excite them to vnite all their forces againſt their enemie, that they may recouer their loſt honour; and their falls in the Chriſtian race, doe not take away their habituall ſwiftneſſe, but make them more earneſt after their riſing to ſhew it more apparantly, whileſt they labour to recouer that diſaduantage by making better ſpeed than they did before. Gods graces in them increaſe in the fountaine when they are ſtopped from running in the ſtreame; and when this holy fire is kept by ſome outward obſtacle and (as it were) the Antiperiſtaſis of ſinnefull corruption, ſo as it cannot flame out, nor extend the heate farre off, then doth it increaſe inwardly; and when it burſteth out doth burne with greater heate than it did before, when it had full liberty, and was not curbed in with any outward violence.

Q. Sect. 10. That our ſpirituall graces in the conflict doe not ſtand in their owne ſtrength.

By all which it appeareth, that the chiefe and fundamentall vertues by which a Chriſtian is a Chriſtian and the Child of God, are not in reſpect of their habits and eſſentiall being, ſo much as impaired in the leaſt degree in the ſpirituall conflict with the fleſh, but onely in regard of their actions and operations, which for a time through the ſtrength and violence of corruption may bee hindred, intermitted, yea in outward appearance wholy annihilated & aboliſhed. But wee muſt take heed that wee doe not aſcribe the permanency and growth of theſe ſauing graces to any propertie or excellency which they haue in themſelues, as though they were able in their owne vertue and ſtrength to withſtand all temptations and to continue and increaſe in their perfection. For if Adam in the ſtate of innocency could not thus ſtand in the ſtrength of his graces, which were farre more perfect and excellent, than any meere man euer ſince the fall attained vnto; then how much leſſe can wee, whoſe graces are mingled with imperfections and ſtained with corruptions, eſpecially the weakeſt of Gods Children, whoſe faith is like the ſmoking flax and bruſed reede, which in their owne nature are ſoone quenched and eaſily broken; or like the graine of muſtard-ſeede, which is (as our Sauiour ſpeaketh) the leaſt of all other. But yet euen of their firſt and ſmalleſt ſeeds of graces, it may be as truely ſaid as of the ſtrongeſt, that they are not, no not in reſpect of their degree abated and impaired, for then being already the leaſt degree, if they ſhould fall from that, they ſhould come to nothing, but that in the middeſt of the temptations of Sathan and their owne fleſh, they ſtill grow from one degree to another vnto a perfect age in Chriſt, euen as the little infant thriueth as certainly in the naturall growth, notwithſtanding his weakeneſſe and all outward lets and impediments, to childhood and youth, as the youth doth to ripe and perfect age. But this our ſtanding and thriuing in the ſtate of ſauing graces, is to bee aſcribed to the power and promiſes of God, to our vnion with Chriſt, from whom wee receiue liuely ſap and iuyce, by which wee are nouriſhed in all grace and goodneſſe, and to the continuall and gracious aſſiſtance of our good God, who ſtrengtheneth and ſupporteth vs againſt all the power of Hell.

*Mat.*13.20.& 17.20.

Q. Sect. 11. An obiection againſt the former doctrin anſwered.

But ſome wil ſay, that this doctrine is lyable to much abuſe, ſeeing many wil take occaſion hereby to become preſumptuous and ſecure, becauſe being (as they ſuppoſe) indued with theſe graces which are eſſentiall to a Chriſtian, they ſhall neuer looſe them, no nor ſo much as in ſome degrees, but euen when they ſinne their graces are in the ſpirituall growth vnto perfection. To which I anſwere, that ſo is the doctrine of juſtification through Gods free grace by faith, yea Gods mercy, redemption by Chriſt, and all the promiſes of the Goſpell; For where as the Apoſtle taught, that where ſinne abounded, grace abounded much more, ſome

*Rom.*3.7.8.& 6.1.

were

were ready to ſay, Let vs ſinne then, that grace may abound; and when with beſt caution wee deliuer the truth, wee ſhall finde that that which to ſome will bee the ſtrong power of God to ſaluation, will bee to others a ſtumbling blocke of offence, to others fooliſhneſſe, and that the ſame Word of God, wil bee as to the elect, the ſauour of life vnto life, ſo the wicked and reprobate the ſauour of death to their deeper condemnation. But it is not poſſible that any ſound Chriſtian who is indued with theſe graces in truth, ſhould thus abuſe that which hath beene ſaid to ſecuritie and preſumption; for though the Spirit of God fighting in them againſt the fleſh cannot be ouercome, yet may it bee ſhrewdly ſhaken and foyled in the conflict; though wee cannot looſe theſe fundamentall vertues, neither in whole nor in part, yet through our neglience, vnworthineſſe and corruption, they may bee ſuſpended by God from their functions and operations, and all their ſweet fruits and effects, the peace of conſcience, aſſurance of Gods loue, and joy in the holy Ghoſt, may be taken from them, which is their chiefe comfort and the very life of their life, without which it is but a continuall torment, and painefull agony of bitter death; they may looſe the ſenſe and feeling of all theſe graces themſelues, and be brought into ſuch an apoleptical fit, that no life of grace will appeare in them, either to themſelues or others. In which eſtate there can bee to them nothing but horrour and vexation of Spirit; out of which they cannot recouer but with great difficultie and appearance of danger. For before they can purchaſe their former peace, they muſt paſſe through the painefull purgatorie of bitter repentance, ſhed from their eyes many a ſalt and briniſh teare, if not from their hearts drops of bloud, they muſt ſend forth many a deepe ſigh and bitter grone, haue outwardly leane bodies, and pale viſages, and inwardly afflicted minds, and many a pinch & pange in their wounded conſcience; and the longer that they lye ſecurely ſnorting in their ſinnes without bringing forth the timely fruit of repentance, the liker it is to bee the Hedg-hogs birth, which the longer it is deferred, the more dangerous and painefull it alwayes proueth. For if wee bee preſumptuous Children, the Lord like a wiſe Father will make vs drinke ſo deepe of the cup of his wrath, and feele the waight of his heauy hand, that after we haue taſted of this bitter potion, wee will euer after be more carefull of preſeruing our health, that wee may not be forced againe to take ſuch phyſicke, and hauing felt his ſtrength wee will neuer willingly neglect any meanes of maintaining peace with him, as the Prophet ſpeaketh. Which who ſo well conſidereth, he will worke out his ſal-

Rom. 1. 16. 2. Cor 2. 16.

Eſa. 27. 5.

2. Cor. 10. 13.

uation with feare and trembling, and whileſt hee thinketh that hee ſtandeth, hee will take heed of falling. Hee will giue kind entertainment to the good Spirit of God, auoiding all things which might vexe and grieue it, hee will earneſtly vſe all meanes whereby the graces thereof may be increaſed, and diligently auoide the contrary meanes, whereby they might bee weakened and impaired; hee will keepe a narrow watch ouer all his wayes, and buckle cloſe vnto him the whole Chriſtian armour whereby hee may bee able to ſtand in the day of tentation; hee will labour and ſtriue with all diligence to make his calling and election ſure, and courageouſly reſiſt all the encounters of his ſpirituall enemies; and knowing that hee ſtandeth more firmely in the power of Gods promiſes than in his own ſtrength, hee will oftentimes lay claime and challenge to them by feruent prayer, crying out with Dauid, O Lord remember the promiſe made to thy ſeruant, wherein thou haſt cauſed me to truſt.

Phil. 2. 13.

Pſal. 119. 49.

The ſecond thing to bee conſidered in the ſucceſſe of this conflict, is the aſſured victory which the Spirit alwayes obtaineth ouer the fleſh; for though it be often weakened and wearied, yet it can neuer bee vtterly vanquiſhed, but ſtill recouereth ſtrength and courage, whereby againe it preuaileth and putteth the fleſh to flight; though it receiue many wounds, foyls and fals in the combate, yet the wounds are recured by applying of the precious balſum of Chriſts bloud, by the hand of faith, and it recouereth of the foyles and fals through the power and promiſes of God apprehended by the ſame meanes, and through the gracious aſſiſtance of Gods Spirit which ſupporteth our weakeneſſe, and when wee are ready to faint and ſinke, ſendeth freſh ſupplies of renewed graces which re-enforcing our decayed bands, encourage vs to giue fierce aſſaults, againſt the fleſh and the luſts thereof, and enable vs to obtaine the victorie. Neither is it poſſible that the fleſh or the Diuell himſelfe ſhould finally preuaile againſt the man regenerate, not becauſe hee is mightier than they, or is ſuperiour in power or policie, (for herein euen the ſtouteſt Champion commeth far ſhort of our ſpirituall enemies) but becauſe God hath in many places of holy Scripture promiſed vnto them victorie, and that if they will reſiſt and fight, their enemies ſhall flee and be diſcomfited, and therefore the iſſue of the battell reſteth not vpon their ſtrength, but vpon the infallible truth of God which can neuer faile. Secondly, becauſe wee fight not with our owne weapons, but with the ſword of the Spirit which nothing can withſtand; we ſtand in the field not in our owne armour, but in the compleat armour of God, which being of

Eph. 6. 10. 11.

9. Sect. 12. Of the aſſured victory which the ſpirit obtaineth ouer the fleſh in this conflict.

of his making, muſt needs bee high proofe, and will not by its weakeneſſe and inſufficiencie diſcredit the workeman; wee goe not on warfare in our owne priuate quarrell, but (like Dauid againſt Goliah) wee goe out againſt them in the name of the Lord of Hoſts, the God of the armies of Iſrael whom they deſie, and his battailes we fight who is all-ſufficient by his ſole word to giue vs victorie, and therefore wee are ſure to preuaile in ſo good a quarrel, neither will our Grand-captaine, let his mightieſt enemies deſtroy the weakeſt of his ſouldiers, who beare his colours & fight vnder his ſtandard, ſeeing it is his owne cauſe, and he is able alone without other helpe euen with a word of his mouth to vanquiſh them all, and put them to a ſhamefull flight. Thirdly, becauſe it is the ſpirituall conflict wherein the Spirit of God with the royall armie of his graces, fighteth againſt the Diuell and his chiefe-taine the fleſh with the luſts thereof; and therefore wee cannot doubt of victory, vnleſſe we ſhould imagine, that the holy Spirit ſhould want power to preuaile againſt the wicked Spirit, or hauing it, would in his wiſedome ſuffer himſelfe to bee ſo much diſhonoured as to bee vanquiſhed in the conflict. Finally, we are ſure of victory, and that the enemies of our ſaluation ſhall neuer be able to preuaile againſt vs, becauſe our victorious Eleazar Ieſus Chriſt hath already ouercome them all, and onely putteth vs to fight againſt conquered enemies; yea and that we may receiue no mortall hurt in this conflict, hee holdeth vs by the right hand and biddeth vs to fight without feare, yea himſelfe holdeth vs in his right hand, and as he is powerfull to keepe vs, ſo he hath bound himſelfe by his gracious promiſe, that none of our enemies ſhall pull vs from him. Yea which is moſt of all, he hath inſeparably vnited vs vnto himſelfe by his holy Spirit, and made vs liuely members of his body, and therefore being powerfull to defend vs, he will neuer ſuffer vs to periſh, for ſo ſhould his owne bleſſed body receiue a mayme.

1 Sam. 17. 45.

Eſa 41. 10. 11. 12 & 42. 6.

Iob. 10, 18.

Q. Sect. 13. An obiection againſt the former truth anſwered.

Now whereas it may bee obiected that there are many Chriſtians, who by themſelues and others are reputed members of Chriſt, that yet quite fall away from him, and become limmes of Sathan; to this I anſwere that the members of Chriſt generally ſo called are of two ſorts: Firſt ſuch liuely members as are inſeparably vnited vnto him by his holy Spirit and a liuely faith, the which neither the Diuel, nor the fleſh, nor all the power of Hell can plucke away from him. Secondly, ſuch as are improperly called Chriſts members, being dead and fruitleſſe, and onely ſo in their outward profeſſion; the which they making onely for worldly reſpects, muſt neceſſarily fayle when they fayle, and bee quite ſeuered from Chriſt, when their outward profeſſion which is the onely bond of their vnion is taken away. Euen as a woodden legge which is tyed to a liuing body with ſtrings and points, muſt needs fall from it, when they are cut in ſunder; the which ſeparation doth not proue that the true members of Chriſt may periſh, but rather that theſe who haue thus periſhed, were neuer the true members of his body. As for the liuely members of Chriſts body, they can neuer bee parted from him in reſpect of their ſpirituall vnion, becauſe the Spirit of God which is the chiefe band of it can neuer faile. It is true that there may bee a temporary ſeparation betweene our bridgroome Chriſt, and the Chriſtian ſoule eſpouſed vnto him, but not in reſpect of their ſpirituall vnion, for hee betrotheth her vnto himſelfe for euer, in righteouſneſſe, iudgement, louing kindneſſe, mercie and faithfulneſſe, as the Prophet ſpeaketh; and not ſinne it ſelfe can ſeparate them, for it is one branch of the mariage couenant, that he will forgiue her ſinnes and remember them no more; nor death, for they are both immortall. Onely they may be parted for a time in reſpect of communion, and fellowſhip, and of that ſweet influence of his ſpirituall graces, at leaſt in her feeling and apprehenſion. Euen as the wiſe and louing husband may for the hainous faults of his wife, ceaſe for a time to communicate vnto her his perſon in reſpect of ſweet ſocietie, & delightful familiarity, & yet the vnion of marriage remaining firme, he may receiue her againe vpon her repentance into his wonted fauour, & communicate vnto her himſelfe with all teſtimonies of his loue. But this chaſt ſpouſe, the Chriſtian ſoule, can neuer ſleepe in ſecuritie nor reſt contented in this eſtate, but with the Church in the Canticles, ſhee lamenteth the abſence of her deareſt loue; ſhee neuer ceaſeth ſeeking of him in his holy ordinances, and in the exerciſes of faith and repentance, till ſhee haue found him, and haue the ſenſible fruition of his ſweet ſociety; whereby ſhee approueth her ſelfe to bee vnited vnto Chriſt in coniugall affection, ſeeing it is as vndoubted a ſigne of it, to mourne for the abſence of our bridegroome, as to rejoyce in his preſence, and fruition of his loue.

Hoſ. 2. 19.

Ier. 31. 34.

Cant. 3, 1.

Now being thus vnited vnto Chriſt, the faithfull are ſure to obtaine the victory; yet not all at once, for there are two principall degrees of it; the firſt in this life, in which this conqueſt ouer the fleſh is but inchoate and begunne, the carnall luſts thereof not being wholy aboliſhed, but onely in part and in ſome degrees mortified; to which purpoſe one ſaith, that theſe vnlawfull motions of the fleſh cannot bee taken from vs, as long as wee carry this body of fleſh about vs, the violence onely of moning may bee abated.

Q. Sect. 14. That there are two degrees of the Spirits victory, firſt in this life.

Gregor. in 1. Reg. lib. 5. Cap. 11.

Neither

Neither can wee wholy hinder it, but that the Law of the flesh will moue the members, but yet we may take from the flesh the violence of its motion. By reason whereof the conflict betweene these enemies continueth (because these cursed Cananites are not quite rooted out but remaine still in the land) not onely in our first conuersion, when as wee are but babes in Christ, but euen throughout the whole course of our liues. But still, for the most part, the end and issue of it, is the victory of the Spirit ouer the Flesh, although it be obtained with many foyles in the fight. And howsoeuer the spirituall man may haue such mists of ignorance cast before his eyes, that he sometime erreth; though he may be sometimes allured with the baytes of worldly vanities to turne aside out of the right path, and sometimes may be thrust out of it through afflictions, and the violence of tentations, yet his generall course whereof he hath resolued, and wherein he hath constantly set himselfe, is the great Kings high way of holinesse and righteousnesse, out of which if at any time hee hath erred he returneth into it againe, and trauelleth in it with more than wonted diligence; whereof it is that the Apostle maketh it a signe of those who are in Christ Iesus, that they walke not after the flesh, but after the spirit, whereby is meant that whatsoeuer their particular slips or errors may be, yet it is an infallible marke of a sound Christian, that hee generally and for the most part constantly holdeth on in his Christian course of holinesse and righteousnesse, notwithstanding all the encounters of his spirituall enemies, and the manifold blockes which they cast in the way.

Rom.8.1.

Q. Sect.15. Of the second degree of victorie at the houre of death.

But yet whilest we continue in this life, the victory is neither gotten nor held without a conflict, wherein the Spirit is often foyled; and so thrust on with a kind of violence into sinfull courses, and interrupted and hindered in its holy indeauours, that the spirituall man is forced to complaine often with the Apostle, that he omitteth the good he would, and doth the euill which he would not; and that there is a Law in his members warring against the Law of his minde, and bringing him into captiuitie to the Law of sin. But in the end of this life we shall obtaine a full and perfect victory ouer the flesh and the lusts thereof, which shall not onely bee mortified and kept from raigning, but also wholy abolished and rooted out, so as it shall haue no residence or being in vs, for then we shall tryumph ouer all our enemies, and so trample them vnder feete, that they shall neuer be able to rise againe, & disturbe our peace; and then there shall bee no place or time for fighting, but for receiuing the Crowne of Victory, and the enjoying of euerlasting peace, and with it glory, immortalitie, and endlesse happinesse in Gods Kingdome. According to that of the Apostle, I haue fought a good fight, I haue finished my course, I haue kept the faith; henceforth is laid vp for mee a crowne of righteousnesse, which the Lord the righteous iudge shall giue mee at that day: And the promise of our Sauiour; To him that ouercommeth, will I grant to sit with me in my throne: euen as I also ouercame and am set downe with my Father in his Throne.

Rom.7.19.23.

1.Tim.4.8.

Apoc.3.21.

CHAP. XIX.

Of the reasons which may encourage vs to this conflict against the flesh.

Q. Sect.1. The first reason because it is the will of God that we should fight against it.

AND thus haue we shewed, both the nature of this enemy the flesh, and of the conflict betweene it and the spirit: now we are to speake of the meanes whereby we may obtaine the victory in this combate; vnto which there are two things required. First a due preparation to the fight; and secondly a wise and valourous cariage and behauiour in the conflict it selfe. Vnto the former also two things are required. First a serious consideration of those reasons and arguments which may put courage into vs, and make vs resolute and valourous in assaulting this enemy. Secondly a right vse of certaine meanes whereby wee may bee enabled to ouercome. The reasons which may incourage vs to set vpon this enemy are many: first because it is the will of our graund Captaine, the Lord of Hosts, that we should encounter this enemy, vnto which he doth no lesse often and earnestly presse vs to yeeld our obedience, by his expresse commandements, than that we should make daily warre against the World and the Diuell. As first that we should depose it from the throne of regency; let not sinne raigne in your mortall body, that you should obey it in the lusts thereof. That we should giue it no satisfaction or content: walke in the spirit, and yee shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh. Yea rather that we should vtterly renounce it; for the grace of God which bringeth saluation teacheth vs, that wee should deny these worldly lusts, and that wee should liue soberly, and righteously, and godly in this present world. So the Apostle from God requireth, that we should put off concerning the former conuersation the olde man; which is corrupt according to the deceitfull lusts; yea that we should mortifie these earthly members, and doe our best, not onely to subdue them, but to put them to death, yea to a shamefull death, crucifying the flesh with the affections and lusts, as the Apostle speaketh. The which commandement hath a grieuous cõmination and

Rom.6.12.

Gal.5.16.

Tit.2.11,12.

Eph.4.22.

Col.3.5.

Gal.5.24.

and gracious promise annexed, whereby wee are prouoked and encouraged to yeeld our obedience vnto them; namely, that if we liue after the flesh, we shall die; but if through the spirit we doe mortifie the deeds of this body of sinne, we shall liue. That is either die temporally and eternally, or liue the life of grace heere, and of glory in the life to come.

Rom. 8. 13.

§. Sect. 2. The second reason is the necessity of this conflict.

Secondly, let the necessity of this fight animate & encourage vs to enter into it, seeing we can haue no peace or truce with our sinful flesh but vpon most wofull and miserable conditions; if we doe not fight against it, it will fight against and ouercome vs; if we delicately bring vp this slaue from his youth, he will not onely be as a Sonne, but as a tyrannous Lord and Master at the length; if wee hold it not strictly vnder in base subjection, it will lead vs captiue vnto sinne, and inthrall both our soules and bodies in most wretched bondage; so that much better it were for vs to be miserable Galley-slaues to the merciless Turkes, than to be held in this cruell bondage, although a generous and noble death were much to be preferred to either of them. Better it were with the Prodigall sonne to become Swine-heards and feed filthy Hogs, than to become seruants and slaues to these sensuall and more filthy lusts, which make vs to take delight in nothing but in wallowing in the myre and sink of sinne. Now how vnworthy is it our being and breeding, that wee who were by our creation the sonnes and children of the glorious Creatour of Heauen and Earth, should by yeelding our selues to our carnall and sinfull lusts, become slaues to such cruell Tyrants; who will make vs imploy our bodies and mindes which were created for the seruice of the great God, in the miserable bondage of sinne and Sathan? The Heathen man could say that he was more noble, and borne to more excellent ends than that hee should become a slaue to his owne body; and should not we who farre exceed him in spirituall Nobility, as hauing God for our Father, and Iesus Christ for our elder brother, fight rather in this Warfare vnto bloud and death, than to become captiues and thrals to a farre worse Master, euen the body of sinne and death which dwelleth in our members?

Prou. 29. 21.

Maior sum & ad maiora genitus quam vt mancipium sim mei corporis, Seneca.

But as the flesh is hatefull for its base and cruell tyranny; so is it in respect of the pollution and filthinesse thereof most odious & lothsome; for there is no filthy sinke, no stinking carrion to bee compared vnto it. Now which of vs (as one saith) ennobled by birth, and liberally brought vp, that being clothed with loathsome rags, sprawled on with filthy spittle, and in most beastly manner defiled with noysome excrements and filth, that would not exceedingly loath and abhorre them, hastily strip them off, and with indignation cast them away. And therefore hee who findeth not his garment, but himselfe within, vnder his garment, to be such an one, it becommeth him to grieue so much the more, and to be astonished in his minde, because he beareth, and is faine to carry about with him, that which being much more neere, is also much more loathsome and abhominable.

Bernard. lib. de dilig. Deum.

Thirdly, let the manifold euils which are done vnto vs by the flesh, make vs to vndertake this combate against this malicious and pestilent enemy with all courage and resolution. For it is more mischieuous vnto vs than the Deuill himselfe, who (as hath beene shewed) could neuer hurt vs, if we were not first betrayed by this inbred enemy. Yea, it is worse than Hell and Damnation, as being the cause of them both, and without it Hell were no Hell, neither could condemnation fasten vpon vs, vnlesse we walked after these carnall lusts. It is the root of all sinne, and the wel-head and fountaine of all other wickednesse, from which Idolatry, Blasphemy, Murther, Adultery, and all impiety and vnrighteousnesse grow and spring. Consequently it is such an enemy as maketh God himselfe our enemy, exposing vs to the hot flames of his fiery wrath; and would innumerable times cast vs head-long into the euerlasting torments of Hell fire, if the infinite mercies of God did not stay vs in the way. It is the prouoker and inticer to all wickednesse, and all the outrages and horrible crimes which are committed in the World, may challenge the flesh as their chiefe cause and Authour. From it came Caines Murther, Lots Incest, Dauids Adultery, the malice of the Iewes and Priests which moued them to slander, apprehend, accuse, condemne, whip, crowne with thornes, and crucifie the Lord of life. It was it that pierced our Sauiours hands and feet, that thrust the Speare into his side, that made him to be in that agony and perplexity in the Garden and vpon the Crosse, & which moueth men daily to crucifie him afresh, and to trample his precious bloud vnder their filthy feet, as though it were an vnholy thing; and can wee find in our hearts to haue any peace or truce with such a malicious enemy to our blessed Sauiour? And shall we not rather with implacable anger and constant resolution assault, pursue, wound and kill it which offered all these indignities to our dearest Lord? Moreouer, as it is the cause of all sinne, so also of all punishment in this life, of all our miseries, of sickenesse and diseases of the body, trouble of conscience, and terrours of minde, of pouerty and penury in estate, losse of our good names, shame and reproch, and all other deserued punishments of sinne, and for conclusion of all, of death in the end of our liues and of euerlasting condemnation and destruction in the World to come.

§. Sect. 3. The third reason taken from the mainfold euils which are done vnto vs by the flesh.

come. For if we liue after the flesh wee shall die, the death of body and soule, and not onely be depriued of Gods fauour, of the eternall fruition of his heauenly Kingdome, and those vnspeakable ioyes which shall neuer haue end, but for euer be plunged into the Lake of perdition, where is weeping and gnashing of teeth. Now what can iustly more incense our anger to take sharp reuenge vpon such an enemy, than to consider that it is vnto vs the authour of all mischiefe, and plungeth vs into all euill both of sinne and punishment?

§. Sect. 4. The fourth reason is taken from the assurance of victory.

Lastly, let this encourage vs to fight, in that if wee make warre against our flesh and the lusts thereof, we shall be sure to obtaine the victory, and not onely ouercome them, but with them the World, the Deuill and all other enemies of our saluation. To which purpose Augustine excellently speaketh, There (saith hee) the inuisible powers which are at enmity with vs are ouercome, where the inuisible lusts are conquered and subdued. And therefore wee who ouercome the desires of worldly things in our selues; it is necessary, that wee should also ouercome him who by these desires raigneth in man, &c. For within vs we ouercome those who assault vs without, whilest wee ouercome our lusts by which they raigne and rule in vs; as on the other side those whom they find like vnto themselues, them they draw with them into the like punishments. For as I haue said these outward enemies haue no power to hurt vs, but when this secret Traytour betrayeth vs into their hands; they haue no weapons that can pierce and wound vs, vnlesse our owne corruption both steele and point them, and also disarme and leaue vs naked to their malice and fury: they cannot enter and sacke our soules, robbing and spoyling them of all spirituall treasures, and leading them captiue vnto all manner of sinne, vnlesse the flesh did open the gates, disarme vs of Gods protection, and breaking downe the wals of our defence, did expose and lay vs open to their mercilesse cruelty.

Ibi ergo vincuntur inimice nobis inuisibiles potestates, vbi vincuntur inuisibiles cupiditates, &c. Aug. de Agon. Christ. lib. cap. 2. Tom. 3. col. 762.

CHAP. XX.

Of the meanes whereby we may be enabled to ouercome the Flesh.

§. Sect. 1. The first meanes, that we put on the whole armour of God.

AND these are the reasons which may encourage vs to this fight. Now of the meanes whereby we may be enabled to ouercome: the which are principally two; the first that we take vnto vs and put on the whole spirituall armour of God; the second that we carefully obserue and put in practise diuers rules fit for this purpose. For the former, the battell is to be maintained against the flesh, and therefore the weapons of our warfare must not be carnall, seeing they will rather strengthen and cherish, than wound and mortifie fleshly corruptions, but they must be spirituall, euen that whole armour of God described by the Apostle in the sixt Chapter to the Ephesians. For as the Apostle telleth vs, though wee walke in the flesh, yet wee doe not warre after the flesh; for the weapons of our warfare are not carnall, but mighty through God to the pulling downe of strong holds, casting downe the imaginations, and euery high thing which exalteth it selfe against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captiuity euery thought to the obedience of Christ. But of this spirituall armour I shall not need to speake in this Treatise, hauing already intreated of it in the first part of this Christian Warfare. Onely let me perswade euery Christian that is willing and desirous to get the victory in this Christian Warfare, that they doe with all diligence put it on, not onely by piece-meale; for spirituall death, as well as corporall, can make entrance by one place vnarmed and defended, as if the whole armour were left off; but wee must be armed at all points, that all being couered none may be indangered. Otherwise wee shall neuer bee able to maintaine this fight with any true valour or hope of victory. For howsoeuer a Souldier may be, euen vnarmed and without weapons, foolehardy and desperate, yet hee can neuer be truly valorous, and though hee may be rash in making attempts and rushing into the fight, yet can he not being vnarmed and receiuing one wound after another, be courageously constant in holding out vnto the end of the conflict, but is fitter by reason of his lightnesse to run away, than to maintaine such a fight as yeeldeth vnto him no hope of victory. And in the second place let vs perswade euery one who fighteth in this Warfare, that they doe not trust in their owne strength, but in the power of Gods might, nor in the spirituall armour and weapons, which in themselues are farre too weake to beare off the Canon-shot of our mighty enemies, but in the promises of God which assure vs of victory, and in his gracious assistance which wee are daily to craue by feruent Prayer, whereby, and by nothing else we shall be enabled to obtaine the victory.

2. Cor. 10. 3, 4.

§. Sect. 2. The second meanes is to obserue certaine rules for the weakning of the flesh. And first that wee doe not nourish the enemy which we would ouercome.

The rules of direction which are to be obserued and practised of those who desire to get the victory in this spirituall conflict are of two sorts. For either they tend to the weakening and subduing of the flesh, or to the nourishing and strengthning of the spirit. The former also are of two kinds. The first is that we withdraw and withhold from the flesh all meanes whereby it may gather strength; the second that we vse the contrary meanes, whereby it may be weakened and dis-disabled. Concerning the former: it is the care of all men that are to fight against mighty enemies, to deale with them as the Philistims with Sampson; first curiously searching where their chiefe strength lyeth and wherein it consisteth, and then in the next place vsing all meanes to disable and depriue them of it; whereby the victory becommeth more easie and assured, and lesse dangerous and disaduantageable to the conquerours. The which course must be held also by vs in this combate with the flesh, if we desire to ouercome. To which purpose let vs obserue these three rules. The first is, that we doe not nourish and strengthen the enemy which we desire to ouercome. As for example we must not feed our flesh with sinfull pleasures and carnal delights, nor giue it ease and contentment by satisfying and glutting it with all worldly superfluities; we must not cocker and pamper it with ease and delicacy, with gluttony and drunkennesse, with vnlawfull sports or immoderate vse of honest recreations, with chambering and wantonnesse, merry meetings and the voluptuous delights of worldly men. For though this might goe for good policy betweene Nation and Nation, to helpe foward their enemy in their voluptuous delights, because hereby they are weakened and made effeminate; yet it is not so in this conflict with the flesh, seeing the more it is effeminated and pampered with carnall delights, the more it is strengthened against the Spirit. Now what folly is it to victuall a mighty Enemy which warreth against vs, and to put weapons into their hands, whereby they may kill or put vs to flight? The which notwithstanding is daily committed by innumerable Christians, who professe themselues enemies to the flesh, and yet in the meane time giue themselues ouer to all voluptuous courses, and take more care to satisfie the lusts of the flesh, and to nourish and strengthen it with worldly delicacies, than euer they did for the enabling of the spirit, that it might obtaine the victory against our spirituall enemies. And as wee are not to nourish the flesh by ministring food vnto it, so are wee not to leaue it to its owne liberty, and to make free prouision for it selfe without restraint; which if we doe, it will need no other Purueigher to prouide victuals enough, for the satisfying of our carnall lusts. To which end let vs remember that it is far vnfit that the flesh should haue the liberty of a sonne and friend, seeing it is a base slaue and bitter enemy: and therefore if wee doe not put it (as it were) vnder hatches, and keepe it like a Gally-slaue in fetters and chaines, no sooner shall those great Pirats Sathan and the World set vpon vs, but it will joyne with them, and betray vs into their hands. There is no enemy that maketh warre against another, when as he hath besieged their City, will send them in prouision of victuals, neither yet will they suffer them to vse their liberty in going out and in at their pleasure, to forrage in the fields, and to furnish themselues withall necessaries to mayntaine them in the time of siege; but they begirt the wals on al sides with trenches and Bulwarkes, and keepe a narrow watch and strong guard to restrain them from all liberty; and thus must we deale with our enemy the flesh, if euer we meane to get the victory. For if we doe not keepe a diligent watch and strong guard ouer it, but giue it liberty to roue and range at its owne pleasure, it wil be to small purpose that the spirituall man doth not puruaigh for it, seeing it will make enough prouision for the satisfying and nourishing of our carnall lusts, and for the strengthening of it selfe against the spirit. If we lay the reines in the necke, and suffer it to go which way it will, it will quickly carry vs out of the narrow path into the broad way which leadeth to destruction. If wee suffer our deceitfull hearts (Dinah-like) to wander about and gaze vpon worldly vanities, they quickly meete with wicked Copes-mates, who will dishonest and allure them to commit spirituall whoredome. If we giue them leaue to enjoy their liberties without restraint, to follow their pleasures, and euen to seeke after the occasions and meanes of euill; it will not be long ere the flesh will preuaile, and lead vs captiue to the committing of sin. When wee with care and diligence keepe vs in our wayes, we haue promises from God of his protection and assistance, and of our own safety and preseruation: but if with Shemei we will for our worldly aduantage passe the appointed bounds, and go such wayes as our owne hearts can tell vs, are full of danger; it is no great wonder if we be surprized, and pay a deare price for our presumption, as we see in Dauids example, who giuing ease and liberty more than ordinary to his flesh, and keeping no watch ouer his senses, was easily ouertaken, and made a captiue and slaue to his filthy lusts. And therefore if we would auoid the like danger, let vs carefully keepe our selues within holy limits, & bridle and curbe in the flesh by religious feare, not pleading for vnlawfull liberty, or esteeming it too great strictnesse and precisenesse to auoid, not onely all sinne, but euen the occasions and meanes which bring vnto it, for if we giue the least liberty to the flesh it will draw vs on from one degree to another, till at last it bring vs to all manner of licentiousnesse.

Psal. 91. 11.

The second rule is, that wee doe not only not giue willingly liberty to the flesh to make its owne prouision for the satisfying of its carnall lusts, but also when it would take it whether we will or no, that we forcibly restraine it; and like those who besiege their ene-

9. Sect. 3. We must withdraw from the flesh the prouision and munition whereby it is strengthened.

enemies in a City, that we stop all passages by which it might be victualled; whereby being famished and starued, it will be forced to yeeld vnto the spirituall part. Whereas on the other side if we suffer it to be stored with prouision and to be fed vnto the full with all carnall dainties, it will waxe stronger than the spirit, despise its forces, and sally out vpon it, committing many outrages, and doing much damage and mischiefe vnto the Christian soule. Yea, it will waxe proud and insolent, foyle the regenerate part, and force it to liue in most miserable bondage. To which purpose one saith, That is fareth with the flesh and the spirit as with two mortall enemies in the field; for he that by any meanes aideth and strengtheneth the one, doth thereby make way for the vanquishing of the other. He that ioyneth with the flesh doth oppose the spirit, and he that standeth on the spirits side, doth bring the flesh into bondage and oppression. If then we would haue the flesh kept vnder the rule of the spirit; we must vse it (as Augustine speaketh) as men vse to feed Horses or pamper Asses and resty jades, which because when they are full fed, are ready to kicke against their Master, to wince and fling, and either to cast the rider, or getting the bridle betweene their teeth, to carry him out of the high way, ouer hedge and ditch, and places of danger; therefore as they are trauailing they keepe backe the prouender, and giue them neuer more then necessity requireth; that so they may rand him with hunger whom they cannot rule with the bridle and spurre. For so must wee weaken and tame the vnruly flesh with fasting and abstinence, when it is growne so lusty and insolent, that neither the bridle of comminations nor the spurre of Gods iudgements will keepe it in order. And hereby we shall adde strength vnto the spirit. For as one saith; The weakenesse of the flesh increaseth the strength of the spirit; euen as contrariwise the strength of the flesh doth bring weakenesse to the spirit; and indeed what great wonder is this, if a man be made stronger by the weakening of his enemy? But yet we are not to vnderstand this of the naturall strength of the body, as though the weakenesse of it did giue strength to the regenerate part, or did represse and subdue the vnruly passions and sinfull lusts of the flesh, seeing these may remayne in their full strength in a leane and weake body; but of the power and vigour of the body of sinne and carnall corruption, which by the exercises of mortification, fasting and abstinence, are weakened and held in subiection, because the flesh, by the body, as by an organ and instrument, doth enioy its sensuall delights, and carnall pleasures, whereby it is strengthened to the committing of sinne, by which the spirituall part is wounded and weakened. In which respect (as Cyrill well saith) We giue stings and weapons to the flesh, arming and strengthening it against the spirit, when as we pamper the body with delicacy, inflame it with wine, handle it daintily and effeminately, and nourish in it all entisements and prouocations to lust. Which who so doth; what doth he else but strengthen his enemy for his owne ruine and ouerthrow? What doth hee but cocker a slaue, and famish a sonne? There are (saith one) two by God committed to thy custody, a noble man and a slaue, on this condition, that thou shouldest feed the slaue like a captiue with bread and water, and entertaine the Noble man with all prouision befitting his dignity. But thou contrariwise consumest and killest the Noble man with hunger, thirst, & many injuries; but nourishest the slaue with all dainties and delicacies; whereby making him insolent, hee becometh a rebell against his Lord, and rising against him in armes, hurteth, woundeth, and at last killeth him. What then wilt thou answere vnto him, who hath committed both vnto thee? Thou hast shewed thy selfe cruell, who hast not refreshed the Noble man, the Spirit, with the dainties of vertue, with the fat and marrow of deuotion; but hast nourished the contumacious slaue delicately, and pampered the flesh, with gluttony, drunkennesse, and the sinfull pleasures of this life. And so it rebelleth against the Spirit, wounding, killing and constraining it to become a seruant vnto sinne.

But what is the prouision of the victuals which must be withheld from this our enemy? And from what places and parts is it to be kept backe that it may receiue no benefit by it? To the later I answere first, that the flesh is resident in all the parts and faculties of our bodies and soules, and therefore our care must bee generally and particularly to keepe it from all and euery of them. Now the prouision it selfe which wee are to withhold from it, are all the meanes whereby it may be nourished and strengthened, and so enabled to resist the Spirit. As for example, we must vse our best indeuour to keepe from our corrupt minds all sinfull cogitations, and from our phantasies all vaine imaginations, wee must not entertaine wicked deliberations, and vngodly counsailes, pernicious errours, and false doctrine, but cut them off, when they are approching, or cast them out, as soone as they are entred. And contrariwise let vs furnish our minds in the regenerate part, with holy thoughts, and diuine meditations, with religious counsailes, wholsome instructions, and pure doctrine, concerning God and his Will, according as in his Word hee hath reuealed it vnto vs; following herein the Apostles counsaile, Set your mind on things aboue, not on things on the earth. So let vs keep out of our consciences all manner of sinne, and purge them daily

Si carnem nutriatis, & ipsam frequenti mollitie, ac ingi delicarum fluxu fouatis; insolescet necessario aduersus spiritum & fortior illo efficitur, Cyril. in Leuit. l. 9. Col. 129

Perinde atque in acie hinc atque hinc infrulta ad consilium qui alterius parti fert suppetias facit vt alter eincatur, Basil. de ieiunio

Aug. de Cantico nouo lib cap. 3. Tom. 9 cap 936

Carnis infirmitas robur spiritui auget & subministrat vires; ita è contrario nouerit carnis fortitudinem debilitatem spiritus operari, Bern. serm. 29. in Cant.

In Leuit. lib. 9. Col. 129.

2. Sect. 4.
Wee must stop all the passages to keepe backe prouision from the flesh.

Col. 3. 3

Heb. 9. 14. from all dead workes, that wee may serue the liuing God; Let vs as much as in vs lyeth preserue them from the hotte searing Iron of knowne, voluntary and presumptuous sins, from vaine excuses of that which is euill, and false accusations for doing good; from the deepe lethargie of carnall security, and from the tormenting corrasiues of terrours and feares, and let vs labour to keepe them pure, peaceable and tender. Let vs keepe or blot out of our memory the remembrance of sinfull pleasures, vnlesse it be to repent of those that are past, and to loath and flee from those which are present and to come; of ribald speeches, obscene jests, injuries receiued with a purpose of reuenge, with all other lessons of impiety imprinted in them by Sathan, the World, or our owne corruption, and let vs write and euen engraue in them all holy documents which out of the Word haue beene imparted vnto vs. Let vs preserue our hearts from all vnlawfull lusts, wicked desires, vnruly passions, and vngodly affections, especially from couetousnesse, ambition, and carnall voluptuousnes; and labour to haue them fixed and fastened on spirituall and heauenly things, and to be wholy taken vp & constantly possessed with sanctified affections and holy desires. Let vs keepe out from our appetite intemperance, and all desire of excesse, and nourish in it temperance, sobriety, modesty, and chastitie. Let vs preserue our tongues from all corrupt communication, our eares from vngodly and dishonest discourses, our eyes from wanton and wicked obiects, and finally, our bodies from sloth and idlenesse, effeminate delicacie, excessiue sleepe, and all manner of carnall and sinfull pleasures; and contrariwise let vs entertain watchfulnesse, sobriety, man-like exercises, befitting our spirituall Warfare, and when being too full fed it beginneth to bee wanton, let vs keepe it vnder with fasting, watching, and painfull labours.

Col. 3. 13. Phil. 3. 20.

1. Pet. 5. 8, 9.

9. Sect. 3. We must take heed especially of some principall sins which most strengthen the flesh.

More especially we must take heed of such principall sinnes as are the chiefe prouision whereby the flesh is nourished and strengthened against the spirit, as ignorance of God and his Will, whereby the eyes of our vnderstanding being hood-winkt or quite blinded, we may easily be misled into all the by-wayes of sinne, infidelity and vnbeliefe, which nourisheth the flesh in all impiety, whilest neither beleiuing Gods promises nor threatnings, wee neither care to please him, hauing no assurance of reward, nor to offend and displease him, because wee doe not feare his judgements; security, impenitency and hardnesse of heart, than the which nothing more confirmeth the flesh in all wickednesse, because hereby it goeth quietly on in sinne without cheeke or remorse, and putteth the euill day farre out of sight. But especially we are to take heed of the loue of the world, and of setting our hearts and affections vpon earthly things. For this will easily weaken the spirit, and quench all the good motions which crosse and hinder vs from the fruition of those momentany and mutable vanities, honours, riches, and pleasures; it will root out of our hearts the loue of God from which springeth all true obedience; & thrust vs headlong into noysome tentations and all manner of sinnes, which promise vnto vs the satisfying of our earthly desires. And therefore he who will be a good Souldiour in this spirituall Warfare, must not intangle himselfe with the affaires of this life, but labour chiefly to please and approue himselfe to him who hath chosen him to be a Souldiour. Hee that will haue Heauen for his City and Country, must haue his conuersation there, euen whilst he liueth in the World, and if we be risen with Christ, wee must seeke and set our affections on things aboue, and not on things on the earth. But chiefly let vs flee couetousnesse and voluptuousnesse; For they that will bee rich fall into tentations, and snares, and into many foolish and hurtfull lusts, which drowne men in destruction and perdition. For the loue of money is the root all euill. So also we must take heed of voluptuous pleasures, as surfeiting and drunkennesse, chambring and wantonnesse, lust and vncleannesse, sloth and idlenesse. For the more we pamper the body, the more we pine and starue the soule; and no more effectuall are these meanes for the fatning of the naturall flesh, than for the strengthening and increasing of sinfull corruption, and the weakening and wasting of the spirituall part. And this wee see in the example of Noah, who giuing liberty to his voluptuous appetite, was ouer-taken with drunkennesse; of righteous Lot, who by the same meanes became not onely drunken but incestuous; and of holy Dauid who neglecting the duties of his Kingly calling, and giuing way to drowsie sloth and idlenesse, was further foyled by his flesh, and drawne to the committing of those shamefull sinnes of adultery and murther. And this is the cause why the Lord so strictly restraineth vs from the immoderate vse of these fleshly pleasures, and so much and earnestly vrgeth, Temperance and Sobriety, Fasting and Abstinence, Modesty, Sobriety and painfull labour in our honest callings, because they are notable meanes to mortifie and subdue our carnall corruptions, and to strengthen the spirit vnto all holy and Christian duties. Euen as with like earnestnesse he forbiddeth the contrary, because thereby the spirit is weakened and disabled, and the flesh nourished & strengthened vnto all manner of wickednes. To this purpose one saith, that (as the flesh injoying quiet rest) the spirit fainteth and faileth, so contrariwise the flesh being sicke, the spirit injoyeth health. As soft and delicate Iames 5. 5. 1. Iohn 2. 15.

2. Tim. 6. 9, 10.

2. Tim. 2. 4.

Phil. 3. 20. Col. 3. 1, 2.

1. Tim. 6. 9, 10.

Sicut enim carne quiescente spiritus deficit, ita ea laborante conualescit, &c. Greg. In 7. Psal. Pœniten. expla. 32. Psal.

cate things nourish the flesh, so those which are high and hard doe aduance the spirit. That is fed with delights, this strengthened and made more vigorous with bitter diet. That is cherished with such things as are tender and effeminate, but this exercised and strengthened with such as are seuere and rough. And againe, as harsh vsage woundeth the flesh, so ouer tender handling doth weaken the spirit; and as that is wasted and consumed with laborious exercises, so this is pinched with voluptuous delicacy. And this is the reason why when God seeth our impotency in ruling our sensuall appetite, he tieth our hands and maketh temperance which is so profitable to become also necessary, by with-drawing from vs that worldly plenty, in which he suffereth wicked Worldlings to abound and to fat and pamper themselues to their perdition. Finally, this is the cause why he teacheth vs temperance, not onely by his Word but also by his example; for being to feed his beloued Prophet, in stead of strong men to attend his Table, hee sent him his meat by silly Rauens; and surely they were no great dainties that were of their dressing and prouiding. And when hee would more immediately feast him by his owne hand that hee might goe forward in his iourney, with more strength and cheerefulnesse; hee that could haue prouided for him all manner of Delicacies, doth onely set before him a Cake baked on the coales and a pot of water, not regarding the pleasing of his appetite, but hauing respect onely to the necessity of Nature. And thus when our Sauiour Christ would by miracle feast the multitude, hee prouided onely Bread and Fish for their cheere, the ground both for their stooles and table, and the grasse for their cloth and carpet; whereas hee was as able (if hee had seene it as fit) to haue furnished this Feast with all manner of Dainties, which either Water or Land could haue yeelded vnto him: because hee well knew that the satisfying of our fleshly appetite, doth not for the present bring so much pleasure and contentment to the body, as it doth afterwards griefe and vexation to the spirit.

1. Kings 17. 6.

1. Kings 19. 6.

Math. 14. 19.

9. Sect. 6. Wee must moderate our selues in the vse of things lawfull and indifferent.

It is not then enough that we restraine the flesh from things wicked and vnlawfull, whereby it is nourished and strengthened, but wee must also moderate and diet our selues in the vse of those things which in their owne nature are lawfull; yea, there must not onely be a sober and moderate vse of meates and drinkes, and worldly pleasures, but sometimes also, as occasion serueth, totall abstinence, for the better taming and subduing of the flesh. So one saith, That he onely saileth not in things vnlawfull, who sometimes wisely and warily restraineth himselfe from those which are lawfull. And Augustine telleth vs, That the best way to restraine the flesh from vnlawfull pleasure, is to refraine sometimes from those which are lawfull delights; for he who abstaineth from no delights that are lawfull, is in the next neighbourhood to those that are vnlawfull. Marriage is lawfull, and adultery vnlawfull: and yet temperate men, that they may be farre off from vnlawfull adultery, doe moderate themselues in the vse of lawfull Marriage. Sufficiency in diet and drinking is lawfull, and drunkennesse vnlawfull; and yet modest men, that they may bee farre off from the beastly filthinesse of drunkennesse, doe somewhat restraine themselues of the liberty of society. And this is need full for vs to doe, because (as another Father saith) Whilest we giue free liberty for our refreshing, we are often deceiued and carried beyond our bounds; and whilest the mind flattereth it selfe with a conceit of necessity, it is allured and deceiued with the will and appetite, &c. And whilest we doe vnwarily condescend to necessity, we become slaues to our lusts and appetite. And again, we are to know (saith he) that voluptuousnesse doth so cloake it selfe vnder necessity, that the most perfect man can scarcely discern it. For whilst necessity calleth vpon vs to pay our debt to nature, voluptuousnesse doth satisfie it lust and appetite; and so much the more securely doth gluttony carry vs away with headlong violence, by how much the more cunningly it couereth it selfe with the honest name of supplying necessity. And oftentimes in the way of eating, pleasure stealingly followeth after, & sometime impudently taketh the way and goeth before; now it is easie to see when pleasure goeth before necessity; but very hard to discerne when in our eating it followeth after.

Qui enim à nullis refrenat licitis vicinus est & illicitis, Augustin. de vtilitate ieiunii, tract. 9. Col. 1167.

Sed sæpe dum incauti necessitati condescendimus, desiderijs deseruimus, Greger. Moral. lib. 30. cap. 14.

In eodem capite.

Yet heere wee are also to take heede of the contrary extreame, namely that wee doe not destroy the body whilest we indeauour to tame the flesh, nor kill or hurt our friend, whilest we intend warre against our enemy; as when by watching, fasting and such strict exercises, we so weaken our bodies that they are disabled vnto all good duties. For as we are not so to pamper it, as that it should become a fit slaue for the flesh, so wee are not so to afflict and weaken it, as that it should bee made vnfit for the seruice of God. So the same authour saith, that sometimes whilest wee doe immoderately withstand our naturall desires, wee thereby increase the miseries of necessitie. And therefore there is a certaine kind of art of continency and temperance to be learned, so as wee may not kill the body, but the corruptions of the flesh. For oftentimes whilest it is restrained more than is fit, it is weakened and disabled for the execise of good workes, and so a man is made vnfit for praying and preaching and such like duties, whilest with vndiscreete hast he would at once choake the inticements to vice. For wee haue our bodies

9. Sect. 7. That we are to auoid the other extreame of hurting our bodies whilest wee goe about to tame the flesh.

Greg. Moral. lib. 30. cap. 14.

Solus in illicitis non cadit, qui se aliquando & à licitis cauè restringit, Greg. in Moral.

Sæpe verò dum in illo hostem insequimur, etiam eiusmodi quem diligimus trucidamus, ac sæpe dum quasi teneri parcimus ad prælium hostem nutrimus.
Gregor. moral. lib. 30. cap. 14.

bodies giuen vs as helpers of our spirituall intentions; and as in them dwell the prouocations to lust and wantonnesse, so they also are the instruments of well-doing. But oftentimes whilest in them wee pursue an hated enemy, we doe vnawares kill a beloued friend, and whilest we spare a friend, we nourish an enemy to fight against vs.

The last rule is, that we spoyle our enemy the flesh of its armour, munition and weapons wherewith it fighteth against vs, imitating herein the pollicy of the Philistins, who would not suffer their enemies to haue any swords or speares, nor yet any smethy to forge them in, or smith to make them; and so shall wee get an easie conquest, when as our enemy being disarmed and left naked, hath neither meanes to defend himselfe nor offend vs. Now these weapons are those fiery lusts, and those darts and speares of temptations, wherewith the flesh encountreth vs, and forceth vs as much as in it lyeth to commit sin, either in our thoughts, words or actions, of which wee are to depriue the flesh by taking away the matter whereof they are made, and all occasions and means of them, as neere as we can. Or if we cannot preuent their making, yet if it be possible, we are to wring these weapons out of our enemies hands, and to turne the point and edge of them against himselfe, by taking occasion from these temptations to the committing of sinne, of performing some holy duty contrary vnto it. As when it encountreth vs with wicked thoughts, to take occasion thereby of exercising our selues in diuine and spirituall meditations; when it prouoketh vs to corrupt and sinnefull speaches, which either tend to Gods dishonour, to the disgrace of our neighbour, or wounding of our owne soules, that wee take occasion by this temptation, to vtter some godly and wholesome discourse, tending to Gods glory & the edification of the hearers. And finally when it tempteth vs to any euill actions, to take occasion therby of being more forward vnto all religious duties and more zealous of good workes. Or if we haue not power enough to pull these weapons out of our enemies hand, then must we vse all diligence & good means, wherby we may break the point & blunt the edge of them, that they may not pearce and wound vs, or at lest so to arme our selues with the Christian armour, especially the shield of Faith and sword of the Spitit, that by the one we may beare off these fiery darts and cruell blowes of temptations, and by the other beate backe our enemies and put them to slight. And, being alwayes thus well appointed, let vs continually stand vpon our fence, watching with a quicke and vigilant eye, on which side or part our enemy striketh at vs; whether on the right side with temptations of prosperitie, or on the left side with temptations of aduersitie and affliction; whether it assaulteth our head with errours and heresies, or our hearts with vnlawfull lusts; our eyes with rotten and corrupt speeches, or our eares with wanton and wicked objects, that as soone as we obserue to what part the blow is intended, we may instantly cast the shield of faith betweene it and vs, and (according to the example of our Sauiour fighting with the Diuell) make a contrary thrust or blow against our enemy, and so not onely defend our selues, but also offend him by wounding, foyling, or putting him to flight. And all these are required by the Apostle in our conflict against our spirituall enemies. As first that we should be sober, pining and famishing them, by withdrawing all prouision of food whereby they should bee nourished; then that hauing on the whole Christian armour, we should keepe watch and ward, that we be not surprised on the sudden, nor receiue any wounds for want of vigilancy; and lastly that we should resist them stedfast in the faith, which if we do they wil not stand to it, but betake themselues to a shamefull flight. 1. Pet. 5. 8, 9. Iam. 4. 7.

Sect. 8. That we must take from the flesh the weapons and armour whereby it most preuaileth.

Chap. XXI.

Of other meanes whereby the flesh may be subdued and ouercome.

Now hauing thus farre proceeded in the withdrawing of all meanes whereby the flesh is nourished and strengthened, wee must not rest heere, but in the next place vse all good meanes whereby it may bee subdued and ouercome. And first of all wee must keepe a narrow and diligent watch ouer our selues, and ouer our enemie, not onely to preuent all occasions whereby it may circumuent and surprise vs at vnawares, but also that we may take the fittest opportunities, and best aduantages for killing and crucifying of all our fleshly lusts. And this carefull watch is most necessary, for in this life we get not a full conquest ouer the flesh, but after we haue gotten the better in many conflicts, haue put it to shamefull flight, wounded, weakened it, and brought it in subjection, as a captiue and bondslaue, yet still it is plotting and practising new treasons. For the atchieuing whereof it hath great aduantages; for it not onely lyeth about out Citie walls, but euen in euery secreet corner of our streetes, and no sooner doe our forraigne enemies, the Diuell and the World, beseige and assault vs, but presently this lurkling traytour is ready to open the gates of our soules, and letting them in, to joyne with them to work our ouerthrow. In which regard who would not appoint a continuall centinell, and keepe a very narrow watch? who would giue any place to carnall secu-

Sect. 1. We must keepe a narrow watch ouer our selues and ouer our enemies.

ritie, and carelesly sleepe in the middest of these dangers? who can walke securely among Serpents and Scorpions and rest quietly in his bed when the enuious man watcheth about his house with a purpose to fire and burne it? Heere in this World is no place of safetie, and therefore let there be no time for securitie. Wee shall bee onely safe in Heauen when as wee shall haue a full and finall victory ouer all our enemies, and therefore let vs not bee retchlesse on Earth, but let circumspection and watchfulnesse accompany vs euen vnto Heauen gates, not onely beginning but working out our saluation with feare and trembling. Phil.2.12.

Q. Sect.2. That we must keepe this watch all in things.

Now this watch as it must be kept at all times, so also in all things, for euen one gate of the Citie vnguarded, is sufficient to let in an whole army of enemies, though all the rest bee carefully watched; and therefore following the Apostles exhortation vnto Timothy, wee must watch in all things. For it is not enough that wee keepe this watch about things, simply and in their owne nature euill, that wee may auoide them, but euen in things indifferent, that we doe not abuse our Christian libertie vnto sinne; yea in those actions which are in their owne nature good, that wee may doe them in a good manner and to a right end, least otherwise they be turned into sinne. For example we must keepe this watch ouer our selues when we pray, least our minds being caried away with wandring thoughts, we call vpon God with deceitfull lips, our bodies being present, but our hearts in the meane time farre from him. So likewise our Sauiour warneth vs to take heede when wee giue almes, because we are in danger to be tainted with pride, and to ayme at the applause and prayse of men. Now if there be such neede of watchfulnesse, when as we are exercised in the duties of Gods seruice, and in the best actions which we performe, then how much more in the vse of things indifferent, which become sinfull if they be not vsed with much caution and moderation? how much more when we intermeddle with wordly affaires and earthly things, which like birdlime are apt to defile and intrap vs, and are commonly vsed by Sathan, the World and our owne corruption, as snares and nets to intangle and catch vs, and as baites to couer the hookes of sin, which will mortally choake vs, if wee swallow them downe, vnlesse wee cast them vp againe by vnfained repentance. 2.Tim.3.18. Luk.8.18. Mat.6.4.

And as we must keepe this watch in all things: so ouer all the parts and faculties of our bodies and soules, especially ouer our senses which being the gates of our soules, do either let in, or keepe out both our friends & enemies; and therefore these gates must be well watched and strongly guarded, seeing wee haue so many forraigne enemies who besieging vs, doe watch all opportunities of getting entrance, and so many secret traytors within vs, which are daily and hourely ready to open these gates and to betray vs into their hands. Thus we must watch ouer our eyes, that they doe not wander after wanton and wicked obiects, and with Iob keepe them vnder couenant, that they doe not by lustfull glances betray vs into the hands of our enemies. And before we walke abroad and looke into the world we are to forecast the dangers which may come by giuing them their full liberty to wander after vanities, that wee may preuent them. And because our owne prouidence is not sufficient without Gods assistance, wee are to pray with Dauid, that hee will turne away our eyes from beholding vanities. Neither are we to take lesse care in watching ouer our eares, because they being the instruments of the most learned sense, and the conduit pipes to conueigh vnto our minds all notions and instructions, either good or euill, therefore we must take heede how we heare, and what wee heare, whether the language of Canaan for our edification and instruction, or the voyce of the Serpent, Dragon, or bewitching Syren, tending to corrupt, poyson and destroy vs; whether it be sauoury communication powdred with the salt of spirituall wisdome, which ministreth grace vnto the hearers, or wanton iests, scurrilous speeches, wicked blasphemies, backbiting and slandering with such like euill words, which if wee giue them admittance, will, as the Apostle telleth vs, corrupt good manners. We must hauing gotten the victory ouer our enemies, like the Gilsadites take all the passages, and strongly guard them against them, and if those who goe by, giue vs the watch word, wee may giue them entrance, and if they speake plainely the language of our spirituall & heauenly countrey, and pronounce Shibboleth let them passe as friends, but if they say Sibboleth and by their lisping language, appeare to be our enemies, let vs not onely stay them from entring, but wound and slay them. Thus also must wee set a straight watch ouer our tast and appetite, least giuing liberty vnto it, our spirituall enemies prevaile against vs and draw vs to intemperance and excesse in dyet. And this counsell the wise man giueth vs; Put (saith hee) a knife to thy throate (sitting to eate with a ruler) if thou be a man giuen to appetite; Bee not desirous of his dainties, Q. Sect.3. That we must keepe the watch ouer all the faculties and parts of our soules and bodies. Iob.31.1. Psal.119.37. Col.4.6. 1.Cor.15.33. Iudg.12.6. Pro.23.2.

dainties, for they are deceitfull meate. Which temperance if we vse, it will bee vnto vs a wall of defence to preserue vs against the assaults of our spirituall enemies. Whereas contrariwise, if wee doe not rule our tast, and bridle our appetite, wee shall bee like vnto a Citie, whose wals being broken Pro.25.28. downe is made an easie prey, and lyeth open to the spoyle: as the wise man speaketh.

9. Sect.4. That we must keep a speciall watch ouer our tongues.

With no lesse diligence are wee to set a carefull watch ouer our tongues, which the flesh abuseth as a notable instrument of all euill, and as a razour and sharpe two edged sword, not onely to wound our neighbours, but also our owne soules and consciences. Whereof wee haue an example in Dauid, Psal.39.1. who resolued with himselfe, to take heede vnto his wayes, that hee might not sinne with his tongue, & to keepe his mouth as with a bridle, that his tongue might not passe its bounds and take vnto it selfe licentious liberty.
Psal.108.1. Which if Dauid had neede to doe, whose tongue and heart were continually prepared to prayse the Lord, how much more had wee, who are apt to vtter so much vanity and lyes? If he found it necessary, who cals Psal.57.8. his tongue his glory, because it was such a notable instrument of glorifying God, why should not wee much more, who haue just cause to call our tongues our shame, because they vtter so many vaine and euill speeches, wherby his holy name is much dishonoured? But that this necessitie of keeping a strict and narrow watch ouer our tongues may better appeare, let vs further consider, first that God requireth it, and so bindeth vs to Psal.34.13. this duty vpon our allegeance vnto him; according to that of the Psalmist, Keepe thy tongue from euill, and thy lips from speaking guile, where is required not onely that wee doe not speake euill, but that we keepe our tongues vnder a narrow watch, that wee doe not speake it. Secondly, consider that this narrow watch is of great importance in respect of that power and potency which is in the tongue to draw vs to good or euill, life or death, according to that of the wise
Pro.18.21 & 13.3. man: Death and life are in the power of the tongue, and they that loue it shall eate the fruit thereof. In regard whereof hee saith in another place, that he who keepeth his mouth keepeth his life: but he that openeth wide his & Chap.21.23. lips shall haue destruction. And againe, Who so keepeth his mouth and his tongue, keepeth his soule from troubles. Thirdly, the naturall maliciousnesse of this little member should make vs to watch ouer it with great care, for as the Psalmist, and the Apostle Paul,
Psal.52.4. Rom.3.13. describe the effects and fruits of it; It deuiseth mischiefe & like a sharpe razour worketh deceitfully, it speaketh deceit, and loueth to lye, rather than to speake righteousnesse; it delighteth in deuouring words, it cutteth as a sword, and the poyson of Aspes is vnder the lips. So the the Apostle Iames telleth vs that the tongue as much needeth restraint, as an vnruly horse the bridle; and compareth it to the Helme of a ship which being little Iam.3.5.6.7.8.
turneth about the whole body, and to a fire inflamed by Hell and setting on fire a whole world with wickednesse; affirming that it defileth the whole man, that it is hardly tamed being an vnruly euill full of deadly Iam.3.2. poyson. Finally, let vs consider that Christian perfection consisteth in well ordering of the Iam.1.26. tongue; For if any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and is able to bridle the whole body. Whereas on the other side though we seeme neuer so religious, yet if we doe not bridle our tongue, we deceiue our own hearts, and our religion is vaine; as the same Apostle pronounceth. Now in this our watch we are to keepe our tongues from euil speaking, whether it be such impious words as are directly darted against Gods owne Majesty, by blaspheming his holy name, prophaning his word and ordinances, scorning and abusing his workes and creatures; or such dishonest and vnjust words, as are vttered to the preiudice and hurt of our neighbours, as by infecting and poysoning them with scurrilous iests, ribaldry and such corrupt and rotten communication, or taking away their goods or good name by lying and obtrectation, backbiting and slandering. The former whereof the Apostle forbiddeth: Let no corrupt communication (saith hee) proceede out of your mouth, but that which is Eph.4.29. good to the vse of edifying, that it may minister grace vnto the hearers; the other in the ninth commandement, and in the nineteenth of Leuiticus; Thou shalt not goe vp Leuit.19.16. and downe as a tale-bearer among the people; like vnto a pedlar which carryeth his packe from house to house, venting here a little and there a little, vntill at length he hath vttered all his wares. And the Apostle dissuadeth it by a waighty argument: Speake not euill Iam.4.11. (saith he) one of another, brethren: he that speaketh euill of his brother, and iudgeth his brother speaketh euill of the Law and iudgeth the Law; namely, by doing that which it forbiddeth and condemneth. Secondly, wee must containe them from idle speaking and consequently from much speaking; for if we speake much, we can hardly keepe our selues from speaking vainely and to little purpose, and by venting vanities, wee shall easily be brought to set our tongues on sale to speake also that which is wicked and euill. And therefore the wise man telleth vs, that in the Pro.10.19. multitude of words there wanteth not sinne, and that in this respect, he that refraineth his lips is wise. And againe, that hee who hath knowledge spareth his words, where as with a foole is much babling. That euen a foole when hee holdeth his peace is counted wise, and hee that shutteth his lips is esteemed a man of vn-

der-

derstanding. Now that we may thus refraine our tongues from much babling and idle speaking, let vs remember that fearefull saying of our Sauiour, namely that euery idle word that men shall speake, they shall giue account thereof at the day of iudgement, and this will make vs carefull to speake then, when as our speech is better than silence.

Mat.12.36

Q. Sect.5. That aboue all other parts we must keepe this narrow watch ouer our hearts.

But aboue all other parts wee are with greatest care to guard our hearts, and to set a strickt and strait watch ouer them, according to the counsell of the Wiseman: Keepe thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life. And this is most necessary first because aboue all other parts it is most cunning and crafty, according to that of the Prophet: The heart is deceitfull and wicked aboue all things: Who can know it? And therefore as wee are carefull to keepe a vigilant eye when as we haue to deale with a cunning couzener, or deceitfull thiefe, and keepe a narrow watch ouer subtile and politique traytors, who are still ready to spy all opportunities to betray and deliuer vs into the hands of our malicious enemies that seeke our liues and indeauour to spoyle our goods: so must we deale with this couzener, thiefe and traytour which doth intend nothing more than our vtter ruine and destruction. Secondly, because it is the chiefe Monarch and commander in this little world of man, which ruleth and commandeth all the other parts; It is their guide and captaine which leadeth and directeth them in all their courses; It is like the primum mobile which moueth all the inferiour spheares, and the first and chiefe wheele in the clocke which setteth all the rest on going. It is the spring and fountaine of all our thoughts, words and actions, which being defiled defileth them, and being purged doth communicate vnto them its purity & cleanesse. For according to the direction of the heart, the tongue speaketh, the hand worketh, the eye seeth, the foote walketh. A good man out of the good treasure of his heart (saith our Sauiour) bringeth forth that which is good, and an euill man out of the euill treasure of his heart, bringeth forth that which is euill: For out of the abundance of his heart his mouth speaketh. And againe: Those things which procede out of the mouth, come forth from the heart, and they defile the man. For out of the heart procede euill thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witnesse, blasphemies. And therefore it neerely concerneth vs at all times, in all places, and vpon all occasions, in our mirth and in our mourning, in our properity and in our affliction, when we are alone, and when we are in company, in our abstinence and in our eating and drinking, in our painefull labours and in our honest recreations, in our dealings which we haue with God, as hearing, reading, meditating, praying, receiuing the Sacrament; and in our commerce and affayres with men, talking, walking, buying, selling, in those actions which we performe abroad, and those which are done by vs in secret in our own houses and priuate chambers, that wee keepe a narrow watch ouer our hearts, that they be vpright with God, honest, just & mercifull towards our neighbours, pure and holy, sober and temperate towards our selues, least they be surprised and ouertaken with the tentations of the Diuell, the World and our own Flesh, and being corrupted and misled doe defile and mis-guide all other powers and parts. And seeing our owne watchfulnesse is not sufficient, because they are so wilye and subtile that we cannot know them, and so stubborne and rebellious that wee cannot rule them; let vs continually pray vnto the Lord, who alone searcheth the heart and reines, and ruleth and turneth euen the hearts of Kings like the riuers of waters, that hee will keepe a straite watch ouer them, and taking them into his hand will rule and guide them, so as they may bee alwayes subject vnto his will, that so with themselues they may bring all our other faculties into this sauing subjection; that hee will cause them to loue that which he loueth, to loath that which hee hateth, and to flee that which hee forbiddeth, and to doe that which he commandeth. Let vs earnestly desire him with the Prophet Dauid, that hee will apply our hearts vnto his testimonies and not to couetousnesse; that our hearts may be found in statutes, that so wee may not be ashamed; that hee will create in vs cleane hearts, and renew a right spirit within vs: and because they are naturally flitting and remouing, that he will knit them fast vnto him that wee may alwayes feare his name.

Luk.8.45.

Mat.15.18.19.

Mat.19.18.18.

Psal.141.3.

Psal.119.36.

Psal.51.10.

Psal.86.11.

Q. Sect.6. That we must keepe this watch in our spirituall armour.

And thus you see what is the Christian watch ouer our enemy the flesh: Now we are further to consider, that we are not to watch vnweaponed and disarmed, but as wee are to haue our compleate armour on our heads and backes, so especially the shield of faith and sword of the Spirit in our hands, that we may be ready to assault the flesh and the lusts thereof, as soone as euer they appeare and approach towards vs; sometimes beating them downe, wounding, and killing them with the terrible threatnings of the Law, and sometime piercing and thrusting them through, or beating them backe and putting them to flight with the sweet promises of the Gospel, encouraging vs to a godly life, and the remembrance of Gods loue in Christ, and what our sweete Sauiour hath done and suffered, to free vs from our sinnes. Yea we must not onely in some generall manner vse this sword of the Spirit

Spirit againſt the fleſh and our ſinfull corruption (as it were) in the whole lumpe; but we muſt draw it out, and fight with it againſt euery particular luſt, when it ſetteth vpon vs. As when it withdraweth vs from the ſeruice of God, to the ſeruice of Sathan and the World; let vs withſtand the tentation, by remembring that wee are bound by Gods Law to worſhip and ſerue him and no other; and that wee are purpoſely redeemed by him, that vve ſhould worſhip and ſerue him in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe all the dayes of our lines. When it moueth vs to neglect good workes, let vs remember, that vve are Gods workemanſhip created vnto them; that he hath therefore purged vs, and made vs his peculiar people; that wee might be zealous of good workes. When it perſwadeth vs to deferre our repentance, let vs remember, that wee are commanded to remember our Creator in the dayes of our youth: & that euen to day we muſt hearken vnto Gods voyce and not harden our hearts. When as worldly luſts doe ſet vpon vs, let vs remember, that the amitie of the world is enmitie with God, and that whoſoeuer maketh himſelfe a friend to the world doth in the very act, make God his enemy; that wee muſt not loue the world nor the things of the world, for if any man loue the world, the loue of the Father is not in him. When the luſts of pride do aſſault vs, let vs call to minde, that God reſiſteth the proud, but giueth his grace to the humble; that a mans pride ſhall bring him low, but honour ſhall vphold the humble in Spirit; that the heart of a man is haughty before deſtruction, and before honour is humilitee. So when the luſts of couetouſneſſe doe fight againſt our ſoules, let vs beate them backe and foyle them by the ſword of the Spirit, calling to minde, that Godlineſſe with contentment is the greateſt gaine, and that the loue of money is the roote of all euill; That we haue an expreſſe charge from God, to haue our converſation without couetouſneſſe, and that wee ſhould be content with ſuch things as wee haue, hauing this gracious promiſe from him, that hee will neuer leaue vs nor forſake vs if we ſtill depend vpon him. And thus muſt we vvith the ſword of the Spirit, giue euery other ſpeciall luſt, ſpeciall blowes and vvounds, that they may be foyled and get no ſtrength to preuaile againſt vs. Yea not onely are wee thus our ſelues to draw out this ſpirituall ſword, but alſo in the publique miniſterie of the Goſpell, wee are to lay open and naked all our ſinnefull luſts to thoſe powerfull blowes and thruſts, which Gods Miniſters by the Word ſhall make againſt them, ſuffering meekely the Word of exhortation, admonition and reproofe, and by diligent application bringing it home to our owne hearts and conſciences, for the wounding and killing of all our ſinnefull corruptions.

Exod.20.3. Deut.6.13. Mat.4.10. Luk.1.74. Eph.2.10. Tit.2.14. Eccle.12.1. Pſal.95.7.8. Iam.4.4. 1ob.24.15. 1.Pet.5.5. Pro.29.23. & 18.12. 1.Tim.6.6.10. Heb.13.5. Ezek.16.63.

Chap. XXII.

Of two other rules to bee obſerued of thoſe whoe ould ſubdue the fleſh.

THe third rule in reſiſting and aſſaulting of the fleſh is, that we withſtand it in all occaſions which it taketh, and meanes which it vſeth to preuaile againſt vs, and that wee doe with equall care auoide and ſhunne them, as we doe the ſinnefull luſts themſelues, or the wicked actions vnto which they doe incline and tempt vs. To which purpoſe one ſaith, that this ſhall bee vnto vs the occaſion of the greateſt ſecuritie, if wee will not onely carefully flee ſinnes, but alſo the meanes whereby they doe ſupplant vs &c. For as hee who goeth vpon the edge of a ſteepe and craggie Rocke, though hee falleth not, yet with feare trembleth, and ſo falleth through his trembling: ſo hee who leaueth not ſinne aloofe and farre off, but approcheth cloſe to the brinke of it, hath iuſt cauſe to liue in feare, ſeeing hee is apt often to ſlip into it. He that feareth death, if he be wiſe, hee will not drinke poyſon, nor thruſt himſelfe into needleſſe and dangerous quarrels, nor expoſe his perſon to any other perils, which threaten his deſtruction. Hee that would preſerue the riches which hee loueth, will not entertaine occaſions of needleſſe expences, much leſſe will he ſuffer his doores to ſtand wide open in the night, or inuite knowne theeues to lodge with him; and he who would not haue his houſe burned, will not be ſo fooliſh to bring and leaue fire careleſſely in the roome where is ſtore of flaxe, gunpowder, or ſuch like matter as is combuſtible: How much greater care therefore becommeth it vs to vſe, to withſtand all meanes and occaſions of ſin vnto vvhich our corrupt natures are ſo much inclined? For if vve bee ſo frayle and vveake through our corruption, that of our ſelues we are prone to fall, when as there is no outward meanes or occaſion to moue vs thereunto; how much more ſhall we be ouertaken and foiled with our fleſhly luſts, when as their obiects doe preſent themſelues, and both time, place and company inuite vs to imbrace them, and offer all opportunitie of inioying our ſinfull pleaſures. Eſpecially conſidering, that by expoſing our ſelues to theſe needleſſe dangers we do tempt the Lord, & moue him to giue vs ouer to our owne weakenes and to the malice of our ſpirituall enemies, that ſo by our fals and lamentable experience of our foole-hardineſſe, we may for the time to come be more wiſe and wary. Hee therefore who would withſtand the fleſh tempting him to idolatry, muſt auoide the meanes and occaſions which bring vnto it, as wil-worſhip, ſuperſtition, making of images

Q. Sect.1. The third rule is that wee withſtand the fleſh in all the occaſions and meanes of ſinfull luſts.

Chryſoſt. ad pop. Antiot. Hom.15. T.5.Col.141.

images for religious vses, company and alliance with idolaters; for though he were as wise as Salomon himselfe, yet if he auoide not these meanes and occasions hee will be ouertaken with this sinne. Hee that wil resist the flesh tempting him to murther, must also auoide vnjust anger, reuiling speeches, needlesse quarrels and desire of reuenge, wherewith the heart being enraged, will excite also the hand to the shedding of blood. Hee that will resist the flesh prouoking him to commit fornication, adultery or other vncleanesse, must turne away his eyes from beholding vanitie, and keepe them vnder couenant, that they looke not with wanton glaunces vpon a woman; and shut his eares against filthy communication and obscæne jests, which wicked men as the bawdes of the Diuel and the Flesh, doe vse to defile our hearts and allure vs vnto sinne. And this is the reason why the Apostle hauing forbidden fornication and vncleanesse, doth in the next place forbid the naming of them, together with filthy and foolish talking, and dishonest and scurrilous iesting, which are the meanes and occasions of those sinnes. For if Dauid giuing himselfe to ease and sloth, and suffering his eyes to gaze on strange beauty, was ouertaken and foyled by his sinnefull flesh, how shal vve stand and get the victory ouer our fleshly lusts, if we giue them the aduantage of meanes and opportunitie? Thus hee who would not hearken vnto the flesh sollliciting him to theft and sacriledge, must not with Achan cast a lusting eye vpon the wedge of gold and Babilonish garment; nor looke vpon his neighbours vineyard with a greedy desire to haue it from the owner, though it were vpon a just price; seeing if he cannot thus preuaile, he is ready in the next place with Ahab to wrest and wring it from him with wrong and cruelty. In a word if we would resist the flesh tempting vs vnto any sinne, let vs not entertaine the meanes and occasions of them, when it offereth them vnto vs. But principally let vs auoide the societie and company of wicked men, which are the Diuels brokers, and the flesches bawdes to sollicite vs vnto all euill. For though they doe not finde vs like vnto themselues, yet if wee consort with them, they will make vs such, like vnto those who being tainted with the plague or leprosie, which are ready with their contagion to infect those who being sound doe keepe them company. So the wise man telleth vs. Hee that walketh with wise men shall bee wise, but a companion of fooles shall be destroyed. And the Sonne of Syrach; He that toucheth pitch shal be defiled therewith: and he that hath fellowship with a proude man shall bee like vnto him. And therefore Dauid hauing resolued to keepe Gods Law, doth first baniſh from him euill company; Away (saith he) from mee yee wicked, I will keepe the Commandements of my God. And thus the Apostle forbidding the workes of darkenesse, doth vse this phrase, that we should haue no fellowship with them; implying that if we keepe company with the workers of iniquitie, we should hardly restraine our selues from their workes and actions. Now if any shall pretend, that it is a thing of too great precisenesse and strictnesse, yea of difficultie and impossibilie to auoide these meanes and occasions, or to bridle our appetite and carnall lusts from seeking after them; let such know that if they cannot restraine themselues from these occasions and meanes, which oftentimes in and for their owne sakes are not much desireable, much lesse shall they be able to restraine and curbe in their vnruly lusts when as they haue once gotten the aduantage of these opportunities, and when being mad and headstrong in themselues, they haue these goads and spurres in their sides to pricke them forward.

Iob.31.1. Gen.39.10. Eph.5.4. Pro.13.20. Eccl.13.1. Psal.119.115. Eph.5.11.

The fourth rule for the resisting of the flesh is somewhat like the former, namely that we withstand the first beginnings of sinne, and labour to quench our fiery lusts when they are first kindled in vs. As soone as sin appeareth to be sin, and maketh vnto vs the least shew of euill wee must presently flee from it, according to that of the Apostle; Abstaine from all appearance of euill. For being the spawne of the old wilie Serpent, it resembleth the Father in subtiltie, pressing first to get in the head, and then easily gliding in with the whole body. So Hierom. The Deuill (saith he) is a slippery Serpent, & if we doe not keepe out his head, that is, his first suggestions, it is not to be doubted, but that he will stealingly slide into the most secret corners of the hearts. Hence it is that the Apostle Iude requireth, that we should be so farre off from giuing entertainment to this enemy our sinfull corruption, that wee should not suffer his weedes to abide in our sight, and so farre from louing the body of sin, that wee should hate the garments which are spotted with it. For if we giue sinne an inch, it will take an ell; it knoweth better how not to begin, than hauing begunne to make an end; and with more ease may we keep it from entring into the outmost suburbs of our soules, than hauing come thus farre, to stay it from going on into the very heart of the City. At the first perhaps it will seeme maidenly and modest, and not come in before it haue knocked at the doore of our conscience, but if we giue way to it, and doe not shut it out with bolt and bar, it will quickly grow familiar and rush suddenly vpon vs without giuing vs any warning. To this purpose, one saith, That a man though otherwise wicked, before hee hath committed sin, commeth more slowly

Q. Sect. 2. The fourth rule that wee resist the flesh in the first beginnings of sinne.

Hieron in Ieſ. cleſ.9. Iude.21.23. Chriſoſt.in mat. 4.Hom.6.T.2. c.799.

slowly to the worke of wickednesse; but when he hath done it, hee is afterwards more ready for euery sinfull worke. Herein like vnto a beast which though hee be naturally sauage, yet if he be not prouoked will not easily set vpon any; but hauing once killed a man or beast, and thereby gotten a taste of his bloud, he is now so fleshed, that no sooner doth he see a man, but without any delay hee presently fleeth vpon him. Let vs therefore take heed lest wee taste of sin, for though we haue now no great stomacke to it, yet as it fareth with vs in our corporall diet, so heere wee shall find, that one bit will draw on another, vntill at last we euen surfet of sinne, and take more paines and griefe in getting it vp, than euer we tooke pleasure in swallowing it downe. It is of the nature of sweet meats to our carnall appetite, which deluding and bewitching vs whilest they please the pallet, doe make vs to eate too much before we euer thinke that we haue enough, and so become lothsomely bitter in the disgestion, which were but too pleasant in the eating. From which danger if we would be secure, our best way were not to taste them, for much more easie is it to abstaine altogether, than hauing eaten a little to restraine our carnall appetite from eating more; and a much surer course were it for our spirituall estate, to haue no dealing with sinne, than to breake off the bargaine when as we haue receiued the least earnest. Exhort one another daily (saith the Apostle) while it is called to day, lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulnesse of sinne. Implying that the flesh is a wily enemy, which if it be not denied in the very first motions, will more and more grow vpon vs, vntill by often acts it bring vs to a custome of sinning, and allure vs to proceed from one degree to another, till at last wee grow to a habit of wickednesse, and haue our hearts so hardned, and our consciences seared, that we are now fit instruments for all impiety.

Heb. 3. 13.

If then we would get the victory ouer our sinfull lusts let vs preuent them with our speed, take them vnprouided, and set vpon them before they are aware; for so much the more difficult and doubtfull wee make the conquest, by how much we are more slacke & slow in setting vpon our enemies. If we take them as they lie scattered, and single out our fleshly lusts by one & one as they appeare vnto vs, we shall easily ouercome; but if we giue them time to muster their forces, and to march against vs in huge multitudes, like a well ordred Army, we shall neuer be able to withstand their power. It is our best course here to vse Pharaoh his policie (not fearing in this kind the censure of tyranny and cruelty) designing our fleshly lusts to be drowned in the waters of repentance, as soone as they are borne, if wee cannot hinder them from being conceiued; for otherwise they will increase vpon vs and grow too strong for the native subiects of the spirituall Kingdome. If wee would imitate wise Warriours wee must labour to keepe these mighty enemies from setting foot in our Country, or from shooting an Arrow or Bullet into our Citie; But if at vnawares they haue approached, planted their Ordinance and made a breach in our wals, we must either countermure against them, or blow them vp when they make their assault, or stand in the breach and fight valiantly against them; for more easily shall we repel and keep them from entrance, than expell and driue them out when as they are entred; with lesse paines and danger shall we keepe them out of the gates or breach of the wall, than being entred from comming to the Market-place and making themselues Masters of the whole City. We must destroy sinne in the first conception, and choake and smother corruption in the heart, and as it were, in the wombe, not suffering it to receiue birth and breath in our words and actions; that so that which bred it may also entombe it; for if we suffer it to liue, it will receiue growth and strength to our perdition, seeing (as the Apostle telleth vs) When lust hath conceiued, it bringeth forth sinne, and sinne when it is finished, bringeth forth death. So that our sinfull lusts are a viperous brood, which if we let liue after they are conceiued, will eat out the belly in which they are bred. They are of the Cockatrices kinde, which must bee crushed in the shell, seeing if wee spare them till they be hatched their very sight will bee fatall vnto vs. At least-wise if through our negligence they haue had their birth and being, yet let vs not suffer them to come to their growth and strength, lest prouing to hard for vs, we be forced to giue them lodging, because wee want power to thrust them out of doores. And therefore let vs dash this Babyloniſh brood against the stones, whilest yet being in their swath-clouts they are vnable to make resistance. Let vs obserue well (saith Augustine) the Serpents head, that we may giue it mortall wounds, or keepe it from entring and gliding into our hearts; and what is the head of the Serpent, but the first suggestion and temptation vnto sinne? we must deale with the flesh, as Cyprian would haue vs to deale with the Deuill, seeing it is his child and much resembleth the wicked father. Withstand (saith he) the Deuils first alluring suggestions, neither let vs cherish the Snake, least within a while it grow to a Serpent. The motion of sinne is but too too naturall, and therefore it is our best course to stop it at the first, when as it is but slow and weake, for the longer it lasteth, the more it increaseth in strength and violence. It is an exorbitant and vnlimited euill which admitteth of no bounds, if wee let it haue full liberty to inlarge it selfe; and (like Elias Cloud)

Iames 1. 15.

Caput Serpentis obserua; quod est caput Serpentis? prima peccati suggestio, Aug. in Psal. 103. T. 8. cap. 1212.

Diaboli primis titillationibus obuiandum est, nec coluber foueri debet donec in Serpentem formetur, Cyprian, de ieiunio.

¶ Sect. 3. The longer we defer the fight the more difficult & doubtfull we make the victory.

Cloud) though at first it seeme so small, that it can scarsly be discerned, it will extend it selfe to such a largenesse, that it will hide from vs all our heauenly hopes, & let vs haue no warmth nor comfort by the light of Gods countenance.

9. Sect. 4. That if we doe not withstand the first assaults of the flesh wee are not so wise as worldlings in their generation.

O then that we were as wise for our soules, as we are wise in our generation about the things of the earth. For who hauing fire cast into his bosome, will not as soone as hee discerneth it, presently cast it out? Who is not ready with all speed to quench it, when as it first taketh hold of his house? And what folly and madnesse would we thinke it, if any should let it alone because the fire is but new begun, supposing that it may more conueniently be quenched when it is increased to a great flame? Wee cause our garments to be mended when the rent is but small, because it will then bee both best and most easily done; whereas if wee let them alone, euery thing catcheth hold, and will by increasing the rent spoyle the vesture. If the waters haue made a breach in the bankes, wee thinke it our wisdome presently to mend and make it vp, and if we spie a leake in our ship we presently stop it, and doe not stay till it be ready to sinke with water. And why should wee then suffer our sinfull lusts to burne in our brests, and not rather cast out this hellish wild-fire as soone as we perceiue it hath inflamed vs? Why should wee not be as carefull for our soules, as we are for our houses, and with all speed extinguish the flames of carnall concupiscence, as soone as they are kindled, when as wee may doe it with more ease and farre greater safety and security. The least sparke (saith one) groweth in time to a great flame; and oftentimes the seed of the Viper hath destroyed a man. And therefore knowing this; let vs flee and shunne the least fault, seeing though it be small, yet it will become greater if we suffer it to goe on. A small errour and digression in the beginning of the way, becommeth great in the end of the journey; and whereas when wee begin to erre out of the right path into some by-way, we might recouer soone our errour by returning backe or crossing ouer to the way whence wee so lately digressed; if wee hold on, the longer we trauel (like the lines in the Circumference drawne from the Centre) the further we shall be from the right end of our journey; and so our errour will not be amended without great trauell and labour. O why doe wee not then presently mend the rents, which sins newly committed haue made in our consciences, because being thus torne and tottred, new sins will more easily catch hold, and make them farre worse than they were at the first? Why should not wee make vp the breach when it first appeareth, but suffer it still to be more & more increased, vntil we be ouer-flowed and drowned with a flood of wickednesse? And why should we not presently stop the leakes which sin hath made in the ship of our soules, but put it off to the time of sickenesse and death, when as being full of all impiety we are ready to sinke into the gulfe of Hell? Excellently speaketh Augustine to this purpose; As soone (saith hee) as any sins haue stolne vpon and surprized vs, let vs presently take care to cure the wounds of our soules by applying the medicine of vnfained repentance. The stitching Needle and Playster are fruitfully applyed to wounds whilest they are yet warme, and the sore is soone healed which is not suffered to fester and rancle with negligent handling. And therefore as oft as wee offend, let our sinnes find vs Iudges and not Patrons, Accusers and not Defenders. Doe thou acknowledge and God will forgiue; and how shall God vouchsafe to forgiue, if wee will not vouchsafe to acknowledge that wee haue offended him? For the good of our bodies wee are carefull to obserue the rules of Physick, meeting and preuenting approching diseases before they seize vpon vs, because health is with more ease and safety preserued whilest we haue it, than recouered when it is lost, or if we haue neglected this, yet wee are ready to withstand the beginnings of our diseases by the vse of all good meanes, because we know that the medicine is prepared too late, when as the sickenesse hath taken fast hold, and is increased to its full strength. Let vs then be as wise for our soules: for what is sinne but a spirituall sickenesse which causeth and bringeth euerlasting death? And therefore our best course is to preuent it; and the next, quickly to cure and remoue it. It is the Gangrene of the soule, which is cut off with little danger when it first tainteth, and but slightly toucheth a member; but if it be let alone, it will creepe and spread it selfe ouer one part after another, vntill at last it grow desperate and incurable. It is a spirituall plague which first insensibly infecteth the ayre, and by it the spirits, and so spreadeth ouer the whole body till it come to the heart; and therefore here if euer the Physicians rule is good to be obserued, Cito, longè, sarde, for wee cannot flee from it too speedily, nor goe too farre from it, and it will be much too soone and exceeding dangerous, if wee doe at any time returne vnto it. Sinne is that euill seed which the wicked one soweth in our hearts, which if it be watered and cherished, will insensibly grow first to a blade, and then to an eare, and so bring forth a plentifull haruest of all manner of wickednesse; and therefore our best course is to preuent the casting of it into the ground, or if it be sowed, quickly to weed and pull it vp by the roots. It is a plant of the Deuils planting, which is easily plucked vp when it is new set, but if wee let it grow till it be deeply rooted, wee shall not stocke Vel exigua scintilla flammam ingentem accendit, & hominem sæpenumerò vipera semel perdidit, &c. Nazian. in sent.

Aug. de tempore serm. 83. Tom. 10. cap. 785.

Malum nascens facilè curatur, Cicero de Offic.

Vitia corporis non sunt emenda coalescere, sed in exordijs statim euecanda sunt, &c. Hilarius enarrat. in Psal. 36. pag. 194.

stocke it vp without great difficulty, nor cut it downe when it is growne to a great Tree, without many blowes and much labour. To which purpose one saith, That wee must not suffer these fleshly vices to grow and spring, but wee must presently kill them in their first beginnings. For these lusts proone dangerous when they are growne to their strength, and being come to ripenesse they are hardly killed. And it is much more easie to pull them vp when they first spring, to cut them downe when they are yong, and to writhe them which way we will when they are tender and flexible. Carnall corruption is best killed in the root, and whilest yet it remayneth hidden in the heart, and hath not brought forth fruit in our words and actions; the which is best done when as we often, yea, continually lop this tree of vnrighteousnesse, and as much as in vs lieth, neuer suffer it to beare any fruit. For as the spirit is soonest quenched when as we smother the flames thereof in the duties of holinesse and righteousnesse by restraining them from hauing any vent; And as this tree of Gods planting is soone killed in the root, if we will not suffer it to bring forth fruit in its due time and season; and contrariwise, if we let it haue a free passage, increaseth to a great flame, and the more fruit it beareth, the more liuely and strong it waxeth; the many acts of holinesse and righteousnesse increasing and strengthening the habits of these graces in vs: so fareth it also with our carnall corruption, the more vent we giue these fiery lusts in our words & actions, the more hotly they rage and burne, and the onely way to extinguish and quench them, is by stopping the vent and returning vpon them their owne flame and smoke. The more fruit of wickednesse these trees of vnrighteousnes beare, the more they may beare, and the meanes to strengthen these lusts, is to fulfill them. For habits are strengthened and intended when as they are exercised in their acts: and euery actuall sinne addeth to our habituall corruption; leauing behind it a blot and staine in our soules, whereby they are made more apt and actiue to the committing of more wickednesse.

¶. Sect. 5. How dangerous it is to giue way to the first motions vnto sinne shewed by examples.

And this will manifestly appeare by examples in the Scriptures. Because Caine did not repent of his prophanesse and wicked enuy, towards his Brother hee proceedeth to horrible murther. Because Salomon gaue way to the excessiue vse of lawfull pleasures, they brought him vnto those that were vnlawfull, and not repenting of them, hee is drawne by carnall whoredome with strange Women to spirituall Whoredome with strange Gods. So Ionas not mortifying his priuy pride, which made him to respect his owne credit more than Gods glory, is moued thereby to flat disobedience and open rebellion, and giuing way to his impatiency, hee falleth to direct chiding with God, and that after he had so largely tasted of his mercy & goodnesse in his maruellous deliuerance. Thus Sampson not quenching at the first his fiery lusts, is moued by them to marry with the enemy of God and the Church, contrary to his Commandement. And holy Dauid giuing place to sloth, is drawne first to gaze on a strange Woman, then to lust, then to commit the act of adultery, and not seasonably repenting of this sin, to adde vnto it one more haynous, the murther of his faithfull seruant. Thus Herod not repenting of his incest, cutteth off Iohn the Baptist his head; and Iudas nourishing his couetousnes, groweth discontented with Christs seruice, because it yeelded no more profit, and then betrayeth and selleth his Lord and Master for thirty pieces of siluer, who could not bee valued with many Worlds. And therefore let vs by these mens harmes learne wisdome, and labour to mortifie our corruptions and fleshly lusts in their first and weakest degrees, seeing if out of our security we neglect this duty, they will gather more and more strength, and (like carrion Crowes) hauing seized vpon vs, will call others to joyne with them, vntill at last they grow so strong and numerous, that we shall be vtterly vnable to withstand or ouercome them.

CHAP. XXIII.

Of thee other Rules to be obserued for the subduing of the flesh.

¶. Sect. 1. We must think no sin so small as that we may willingly commit it, to which end consider first that by the least sin Gods Law is transgressed.

THe fift Rule to be obserued of those who desire to resist and subdue the flesh is, that we do not esteeme any sinne so small and veniall, as that we may safely giue it entertainment, & continue in it without repentance. But contrariwise that wee judge our selues, euen for the least sinnes, and flee from them with so much the more diligence, by how much we are naturally more apt to neglect them as slight and of no great importance. For as one saith, It is not the least thing in mans life to neglect such things as seeme to be least; and I know not concerning what faults wee may be secure, seeing we must be iudged euen for sins of ignorance, and giue an account of our idle words and thoughts. And euen the Heathen Orator could say, That we are with greater diligence to auoid those vices which seeme so small, that they are not knowne of the most to be faults. To this end let vs consider, that euen by the least sins Gods Law is transgressed, his Iustice violated, and his wrath prouoked; and wee must not esteeme that to be small which doth offend his infinite Majesty. To this purpose Hierome saith well; I do not know how we can esteeme that a light

Non est minimum in vita hominum negligere minima, &c. Euseb. emissen. ad Monach Hom. 5. Cic. 1. de Offic.

Hieron. de ratione piè viuendi ad Celantiam

Ne conſideres quod parua ſint peccata, ſed quod magnus ſit Deus cui diſpliceant.
Nullum enim peccatum adeò paruum, quod non creſcat neglectum. Non enim conſiderandum quid fecerit, ſed quem offenderit Aug. de Penitent. vera & falſa, cap.8, T.4. Col.1042. Aug. de contrit. cordis, cap.4. T.9 Col.837.

§. Sect.2. The great euils which come of the leaſt ſins.

ſin, which is committed in contempt of God. And hee is moſt wiſe who doth not ſo much conſider what is commanded, as who he is that hath commanded it, nor the extent and quantitie of the gouernment, as the dignitie of him that gouerneth. And againe; Doe not conſider the ſmalneſſe of thy ſins, but the greatnes of thy God who is diſpleaſed with them. So Auguſtine: There is no ſin ſo little which being neglected doth not increaſe, and wee muſt not conſider what we haue done, but how great he is whom we haue offended. Let vs conſider further that the eternall Sonne of God ſuffered the bitter death of the Croſſe, as well for the leaſt, as the greateſt ſins; and can we thinke any ſin ſmall which could not otherwiſe be purged away, but by the precious bloud of our Sauiour Chriſt? Perhaps (ſaith Auſtine) Thou eſteemeſt ſome ſin to be but ſmall; but (alas) doth not euery ſin by preuarication diſhonour the perſon of our Lord: how dare then a ſinner call any ſin ſmall: when as the Sonne of God gaue his life for it, aboue which nothing in the World can be eſteemed?

Secondly, Let vs conſider the great euils which come of the leaſt ſins; for firſt euen our ſmalleſt ſins defile our perſons, and leaue ſuch blots and ſtains behind them, as make vs vgly and loathſome in the ſight of God, eſpecially when as we giue vnto them voluntary entertainment, and willingly liue in them againſt knowledge and conſcience. Now how ill doth it become vs, who are the Temples of the Holy Ghoſt to haue in vs ſuch ſluttiſh corners, and noiſome filth as is odious & abhominable to this bleſſed gueſt? How ill beſeemeth it vs who are eſpouſed vnto Chriſt, to come into his preſence ſpotted and blemiſhed with loathſome defilements? Wee will not (as neere as we can) ſuffer our faces to be ſprinkled with the leaſt ſpecks of ſtinking channell dirt, nor to haue our apparell beſpotted with noyſome excrements; and ſhall we make more eſteeme of our apparell than of our perſons, and take more care for our corruptible faces, than for our immortall ſoules, to preſent them to our Bridegroome without ſpot or wrinkle, holy and vnblameable, that he may preſent vs ſuch to his heauenly Father? Againe, the leaſt ſinnes doe wound, and being often committed doe ſeare the conſcience, euen as ſlight labours being continuall, doe brawne and bring an hard thicke skin vpon the hands, many little drops doe dint the hardeſt ſtone, and many ſmall blowes cut downe the ſtrongeſt Oake; and as they ſeare the conſcience, ſo they harden the forehead, make the countenance to become impudent, and take away all ſhamefaſtneſſe and bluſhing. According to that of Chryſoſtome; by often ſinning the ſoule is made impudent; for euery ſin when it is committed, and is come to its perfection, doth leaue behind it a poyſon in the ſoule. And ſo being fleſhed in wickedneſſe, wee are made more bold to venter vpon the committing of thoſe which are more haynous: For as one ſaith, when we bend from the right courſe by lighter faults, we afterwards feare not to commit thoſe which are greater, vſe and cuſtome ſmoothing the way that leadeth vnto it. And the Heathen Satyriſt could ſay; Who hath made an end of ſinning, when as they haue giuen ouer their bluſhing? Or whom haſt thou obſerued of theſe men to reſt contented with one crime? Furthermore, if we would know how much euen thoſe ſinnes which in the World, and according to the judgement of the fleſh are eſteemed ſmall, doe prouoke the Lords wrath againſt vs, wee may eaſily diſcerne it by thoſe ſeuere and grieuous puniſhments which hee hath inflicted on offenders in this kind. Nadab and Abihu, becauſe they did offer ſtrange fire, in ſtead of that which was continually to haue beene preſerued in the Temple, were preſently deſtroyed with fire ſent from God. Becauſe Vzzah put out his hand to ſtay the Arke in the Cart, which he with the reſt of his Brethren ſhold haue carried vpon his ſhoulders, was ſmitten with preſent death. Becauſe Achan tooke of the ſpoile of his enemies a Babyloniſh garment, a wedge of gold, and two hundred ſhekels of ſiluer, which in it ſelfe had beene lawfull enough, had not God forbidden it, diuers of the people were ſlaine with the Sword of their Enemies, and he with all his, were ſtoned to death and burnt with fire. Becauſe a man in contempt of Gods Commandement gathered ſticks on the Sabbath Day, hee likewiſe by expreſſe order from God was put to death. Becauſe Ananias and Saphira in the hypocriſie of their hearts, kept backe part of the price of their owne poſſeſſions, after it was dedicated to the common vſe of the Church, they both died for it in a fearefull manner. But aboue all, moſt dreadfull and terrible is the example of our firſt Parents, who by the eating of the forbidden fruit (a ſinne very light and ſmall in the eſtimate of worldly men, although in truth it were not ſo, all circumſtances being rightly conſidered) brought death, the curſe, depriuation of Gods Image and their owne happineſſe, all the miſeries and puniſhments of this life, and eternall condemnation in the World to come. So that no ſmall euils and miſchiefes doe come of thoſe which ſeeme to the World but ſmall ſins; but although our ſins when they are repented of become ſmall, veniall and nothing through Gods infinite mercy, yet they are made great vnto ſinners through their negligence and impenitencie. What lighter offence, and lightlier eſteemed, than to be vnaduiſedly angry with our Brother, and in our heate to call him Racha and Foole, and yet this alone as our Sauiour teacheth vs will indanger vs to judgement, and our Cum per leuia delicta deſtillimus, vſu cuncta leuigante, non timemus poſtea grauiora committere, Greg. in Moral lib.10 cap.14. Nam quis peccandi finem poſuit ſibi, quando recepit exitum ſemel attrita de fronte rubore? quiſnam hominis eſt, quem tu contentum videris vno flagitio? Iuuenal Satyr. 13. in fine.

Leuit.10.1,2.

2.Sam.6,6.

Ioſu.7.

Numb.15.32.

Act 5.

Chryſoſt. in Act 29. Homil.42. T.3. col.716.

Hæc peccata eſſe parua ſint per miſericordiam, ſiunt magna peccatoribus negligentiâ, Aug. de penit. vera & falſa, cap.8, T.4. Col.1042. Matth.5.22.

our bodies and ſoules to be caſt into Hell? What ſeemeth to the iudgement of fleſh and bloud more ſlight and veniall than to vtter now and then ſome idle words? and yet euen of theſe we ſhall giue an account at the Day of Iudgement; and thoſe that are Accountants are ſure to be caſt into the priſon of vtter darkneſſe, if our Sauiour Chriſt who hath fore-warned vs of it, doe not himſelfe diſcharge vs by paying our reckoning. If then (as Auguſtine ſaith well) it ſeeme a ſmall & little thing vnto thee to call thy brother foole; yet let the fire of Hell ſeeme great vnto thee. If thou contemneſt the leaſt ſinne, yet be affrighted from it by the greatneſſe of the punishment.

Mat.12.36.

Si parum tibi videtur aut modicum fratri dicere, fatue, vel gehenna ignis videatur tibi magna, &c. Auguſt. in Pſal. 129. Tom. 8. Col. 1507.

Thirdly, That wee may not giue way to the leaſt ſinnes let vs conſider, that if we willingly entertaine them, they will prooue no leſſe dangerous than the greateſt, becauſe they are the continuall errours of our liues which are much more often committed than haynous offences, and therefore what they want in waight they haue in number. Now conſider, that of many ſmall graines of corne is made a great heape, that the greateſt flouds which ouer-flow the Countrey come of the little drops of raine; that the richeſt treaſures are made by the multiplying and gathering together many little pieces of gold and ſiluer; and that the talleſt ſhip may be ſunke by the waight of the ſmalleſt ſands. Excellently ſpeaketh Auguſtine to this purpoſe. Thy treaſure ſhall be found (ſaith he) in the day of wrath; thou diddeſt lay it vp daily by little and little, but afterwards thou ſhalt find a maſſe; thou diddeſt put it into thy treaſury by ſmall pieces, but thou ſhalt finde an heape. Doe not looke vpon thy daily ſins as being ſmall: For great riuers are filled with ſmall drops. And againe: But thou wilt ſay, that thy ſinnes are ſo ſmall, that this life cannot be without ſuch. Why, doe but gather the leaſt things together, and they will make a great heape. For graines of Corne are but ſmall; and yet they make a maſſe; & drops are ſmall and yet they fill riuers, and carry downe the ſtreame things of great waight. And therefore deſpiſe not ſmall ſins, for though thou doeſt but lightly eſteeme them whileſt thou doeſt waigh them, yet at leaſt feare, when thou beginneſt to number them. It is true that hainous ſins are more terrible, becauſe they waſte and deſtroy the conſcience at once, and caſt men into Hell with headlong fury; but little ſinnes are no leſſe dangerous if they be not repented of, ſeeing they cauſe a conſumption of piety, and bring men by degrees to eternall condemnation. By them the Deuill (as it were) with cables and yron chaines draweth men to Hell: by theſe as with cartropes, which though they be not ſo ſtrong as the other, yet are they of ſtrength ſufficient, if they be not cut and broken off by vnfained repentance. They (as Auguſtine compareth them) are like vnto ſauage beaſts which deuoure vs at one bit, or like Ionas his Whale which ſwallowed him vp at once; theſe are like thoſe little vermine which with their multitude plagued Pharaoh and his people, and by little and little deuoured proud Herod and Antiochus. But what ſpeake I of multitudes and heapes of theſe ſins, ſeeing the leaſt of them vnrepented of, is ſufficient to condemne vs, eſpecially when being neglected it is often committed. For as one little chinke in a ſhip if it be not ſtopped, will in time let in water enough to ſinke it, as well as a great leake, or that ſtrange ſpout ſpoken on by Trauellers, which from on high falleth downe into it like a great Riuer: ſo will theſe little ſins drown vs in perdition as well as the greateſt, if wee careleſſly commit them, and ſecurely continue in them. A Ship (ſaith Auguſtine) cannot be ſo cloſe built and well pitched, but that betweene the ribs and ioynts it will let in ſome ſmall quantity of water; and if Mariners ſhould neglect it becauſe it comes in by little at once, and not labour euery day to empty it out by the pumpe, it would as well indanger it as the greateſt flouds and waues which ouer-flow and daſh into it, and ſo if we doe not take notice of our leſſer ſinnes, which are daily committed, to caſt them out of our ſoules by vnfained repentance, they will make vs ſinke into a ſea of deſtruction.

Aug. de diuerſis, ſerm. 34. T. 10. Col. 1646.

Hoc facit ſentina neglecta quod facit fluctus irruens, paulatim per ſentinam intrat, ſed diu intrando, & non exhauriendo mergit nauem, &c. Aug. in Ioan. 5. tract 12. T. 9. c. 113.

Aug in Pſal. 93. T. 8. Col. 1047.

Aug in Pſal. 129 Ne contemne peccata parua: etſi parui facias dum expendes, time ſaltem quando annumeras.

Fourthly, Let vs conſider that if wee be carefull to flie the leaſt ſins, it will be a notable meanes to preſerue vs from falling into thoſe which are greater. For example, he that will giue no place to the firſt motions of couetouſneſſe, he is ſafe from vſury and bribery, extorſion and oppreſſion, theft and robberies. Hee that keepeth his tongue from ſpeaking any thing irreuerently of God, is hereby eaſily preſerued from curſing and blaſpheming; and hee that maketh conſcience of vain ſwearing, is in no danger of periury and falſe ſwearing; hee that keepeth his eyes vnder couenant, that he doth not ſuffer them to looke wantonly on a Maide, is not ſubiect to the peril of vnlawfull luſting, and much leſſe of committing actually whoredome and vncleanneſſe. It is a good caution (ſaith Hierome) in auoiding ſin, to take heed of the leaſt, as though they were the greateſt, for ſo much the more eaſily ſhall wee abſtaine from any offence, by how much the more wee are affraid of committing it. Neither doth a man eaſily proceed to the greater, who is affraid of doing the leſſe. Where as if wee ordinarily ſwallow ſmaller ſins, it makes our throates wider to let downe thoſe that are great, and if we once begin to go downe the Ladder of ſinne, one ſtep will bring vs to the next, vntill wee come to the bottome of wickedneſſe; according to that of the ſonne Satis proderit ad cautionem dicimus etiam minima pro maximis cauere, &c. Hieron. ad Celantiam deinſtit. matriſſam.

¶. Sect. 3. Small ſinnes willingly entertained are no leſſe dangerous than the greateſt.

¶. Sect. 4. That auoiding ſmall ſins is a notable meanes to preſerue vs from greater.

Eccluſ.19.1.

of Syrach; He that contemneth ſmall things, ſhall fall by little and little.

Q. Sect.5. That euen the leaſt ſinnes are the poyſon of the ſoule and the liuery of Sathan.

Fiftly, Let vs call to minde that ſin is that deadly poyſon which Sathan the great Red Dragon caſteth out of his mouth, and who would drinke that which he hath diſgorged out of his venemous ſtomacke? who would be allured to ſwallow downe theſe poyſons which are ſo mortall becauſe they are delightfull to our carnall appetite? Let vs conſider, that ſin is the liuery of Sathan, which who ſo willingly weare, they doe acknowledge his ſoueraignty and their owne ſeruitude; the which is not onely true of haynous crimes, but euen of the ſmalleſt ſinnes, which (like a Badge vpon the ſleeue) though they be ſmall in quantity, are ſufficient, if we liue in them without repentance, to put a plaine difference betweene the Seruants of God and the ſeruants of Sathan, although they goe in the like Liuery of an outward profeſſion. And although thoſe who are moſt perfectly ſanctified haue ſtill their imperfections and frailties, their ſlips and falls, yet to like and liue in the leaſt ſinnes againſt knowledge and conſcience, and to commit them freely with full conſent of will, is an euident ſigne that we are not come out of the Deuils bondage. For as if the Bird be but catched by one foot or toe in the ſnare, it is as euident a ſigne that ſhee is wholy in the power of the Fowler, as if her whole body were couered with his Net: ſo if the Deuill that ſubtle Fowler haue ſurely taken hold of vs in any part with the ſnares of ſinnes, hee keepeth vs as ſurely in his cruell bondage, as thoſe that are guilty of many crimes; and therefore the Apoſtle Iohn telleth vs, without any exception of few or ſmall ſins, or limitation vnto thoſe which are many in number or haynous in quality, that Hee who committeth ſinne is of the Deuill, and that Whoſoeuer is borne of God doth not commit ſinne (willingly yeelding vnto it as a ſlaue with full conſent of will, and liuing in it with pleaſure and delight) becauſe his ſeed remayneth in him, and he cannot ſin, becauſe he is borne of God.

1.Iohn 3.8.9.

Q. Sect.6. That enemies proouе moſt dangerous when they are moſt deſpiſed.

Sixtly, Let vs not neglect the leaſt luſts of our ſinfull fleſh, nor willingly giue place vnto any ſinne, becauſe we eſteeme it ſmall, becauſe nothing more increaſeth the danger of our Conflict, nor maketh the iſſue more doubtfull and hazardous, than when wee deſpiſe theſe Enemies, becauſe of their ſuppoſed weakneſſe. For hereby we are brought to neglect our watch, to lay aſide our Armour and Weapons, and to fal into the dead ſlumber of carnall ſecurity; and what enemy is ſo weak and contemptible, that is not able to ouercome, and to cut the throat of the ſtrongeſt, when he findeth him in a deep ſleepe, diſarmed, vnguarded, and ſuſpecting no danger? And therefore (as Chryſoſtome exhorteth vs) When wee haue ſinned a little, or haue beene benummed with ſloth in the performance of ſome good duties, let vs not deſpiſe theſe ſinnes as being but ſmall, becauſe being neglected they will ſpeedily become great; like a garment that is a little rent, which if it be neglected will bee torne to the bottome; and the roofe vntyled, which if it bee not amended, cauſeth the whole building to rot and the houſe to fall. And therefore reuoluing this in our minds, let vs not countenance any ſinne as being ſmall, leſt it be vnto vs an occaſion of falling into greater.

Chryſoſt. in 1. Iohn 3. Hom.8. Tom.4.c.387.

Nullum peccatum tam paruum eſt quod contemptum non fiat magnum, Auguſt.

Finally, Let vs conſider that if wee doe not hate all ſins, ſmall and great, wee doe not hate any with Chriſtian hatred, for they that abhorre ſin truly and ſpiritually, doe it on theſe grounds. Firſt, becauſe it hath the Deuils ſtampe and ſuperſcription vpon it, who is Gods and our greateſt Enemy, and his image and title is on all his Coine, vpon his Peny as well as his Shilling, his ſmalleſt ſinnes as well as on thoſe which are of a larger ſize: and therefore with them that hate ſinne as ſinne, and the Deuils preſſemoney which hee giueth to his Seruants and Souldiers, his leaſt Coines are no more currant than the greateſt, but all are cried down and rejected as baſe and of no value, both for the mettall and alſo the Maſters ſake. Secondly, they who purſue ſinne with a Chriſtian hatred doe therefore hate it, becauſe they loue and feare God, and would not doe any thing which might diſpleaſe him; therefore they abhorre and deteſt it becauſe it is ſo odious and abhominable in his ſight, and ſo oppoſite to his Law and contrary to his nature. Now they who truely hate any ſin vpon theſe grounds, they will hate euery ſin, and in all degrees according to this meaſure and portion as it is more or leſſe odious in the ſight of God; and though they doe not equally hate all, becauſe there is an inequality amongſt them, yet are they not in loue with any, nor can find in their hearts to giue the leaſt ſinnes willing entertainment. And therefore thoſe who abſtaine from haynous crimes, and make no conſcience of liuing in ſuch ſins as they eſteeme but ſmall, they doe it not out of their loue and filiall feare of God, which would make ſinnes of all ſorts odious vnto them, but either for feare of worldly ſhame or puniſhment, or out of a ſeruile feare of Gods judgements, hell and condemnation, or that they may more quietly ſleepe in their carnall ſecurity without any trouble of minde or torment of conſcience, which they could not doe, if they were awakened and terrified with the guilt of haynous ſinnes and outragious crimes.

Q. Sect.7. That if we doe not hate ſmall ſins as well as great, we hate none with Chriſtian hatred.

Q. Sect.8. The ſixt rule

The ſixth rule to be obſerued for the reſiſting and ſubduing of the fleſh, is that as we is that wee must neglect no sinne, as though wee were in no danger of falling into it.

Phil. 2. 12.

1. Cor. 10. 12.

we are not securely to neglect any sinnes, though we seeme neuer so farre off from falling into them (because wee haue in vs the seedes of all sinne, and neede nothing to the committing of them, but that God should giue vs ouer to our owne strength and to be tryed with Sathans temptations; In which regard we are to worke out our saluation with feare and trembling, and when we thinke wee stand to take heede of falling) so that we bend our chiefe study for the mortifying of those fleshly lusts which are strongest in vs, and endeauour most earnestly to withstand and ouercome those enemies which haue most preuailed against vs; and that wee keepe the narrowest watch, and place the strongest guard vpon that part of the Citie of our soules, where the wall hath beene most battred, and the enemy hath giuen the strongest assaults. For when they haue preuailed, there they are most likely to attempt againe, and when these vnruly beasts haue broken downe the hedge and made a gap, there they will againe seeke to enter and come ouer euen after the passage is stopped; and those sinnes which haue formerly ouercome vs, will be ready in confidence of their victory to make new assaults, and are likely againe to giue vs the foyle, vnlesse we keepe a more diligent watch, stand stoutly vpon our guard, and be well armed and furnished with spiritual weapons and munition. Euen nature teacheth vs to be more wise and prouident in auoyding those euils which in our owne feeling and experience haue beene most harmefull, and (as we say) the burnt child will euer after dread the fire. He that hath beene bitten with suerty ship and hath had his goods attached and his person arrested, and laide vp in prison, will if he haue any wit afterwards take heed how he striketh the hand and becommeth suertie for a stranger. He that hath beene notably cousened to his great losse and hindrance, will keepe a vigilant eye, vpon the cousener for the time to come, that he be not againe deceiued especially by the same wiles; and he that hath gotten sore fals by going in slippery places, will afterwards looke better to his footing, when he is to come backe in the same way. And therefore let grace teach vs the same vigilancy and wise prouidence in spirituall things, and cause vs to double our care in withstanding those sinnes wherewith wee haue beene most often surprized, and bend our whole strength and endeauour for the subduing and mortifying those carnall corruptions and fleshly lusts which are most strong and raging in vs.

9. Sect. 9. The seuenth rule is that we set no stint to our mortification,

The last rule is that we set vnto our selues no stint in mortifying & subduing our fleshly lusts, but that wee labour from one degree to aspire vnto another, vntill we attaine vnto perfection. Wee must not deale with these spirituall enemies as Ioash with the Aramites, contenting our selues with two or three victories ouer them, for then they will againe gather head and renewing their forces afresh assault vs, but we must continually make warre against them, vntill we haue giuen them a finall ouerthrow. We must not deale with them, as the Israelites with the cursed Nations, suffering them quietly to dwell with vs, on condition that they will contribute something to our pleasure or profit, but wee must make warre against them according to Gods Commandement, and neuer make any peace or truce, vntill wee haue vtterly rooted them out; or at the best let vs deale with them as Ioshuah with the Gibeonits, if they must needs dwell with vs, let vs hold them vnder as our slaues, and make them to become droyles and drudges ready to yeeld obedience to euery spirituall motion. Let vs not deale with our carnall lusts as Ahab and Saul with Benhadad and Agag, get the victory ouer them and suffer them to liue, least in Gods just judgement our life be exchanged for theirs, and they kill vs, because we killed not them. Neither let vs with Saul destroy the loweſt of the people, and the vileſt of these carnall cattell, reseruing aliue the chiefe of our corruptions, and the fattest of our fleshly lusts, whereby wee haue most gaine and aduantage, most pleasure and delight. Let vs not bee like vnto Herod, who refrained from many sinnes, but would not leaue his incestuous darling, or like vnto Iudas and Demas who hauing outwardly reformed themselues of many sinnes, did still nourish their couetousnesse and loue of the World. For if when we cast out Sathan and the Flesh, wee suffer any of their spawne or sinfull corruptions to remaine in vs, they will bee pledges and pawnes vnto vs of their returning, and when they come backe and bring many other wicked spirits and sinfull corruptions with them, these retained and nourished sinnefull lusts, will like secret traytours open the doore of our hearts, and let them in, and then taking more strong possession of vs, our latter end will be worse than our beginning.

1. King. 13. 18.

Mat. 12. 44. 45.

9. Sect. 10. Our mortification must extend it selfe to all sinfull corruptions and to all times.

But our mortification must bee without stint or restraint, extending it selfe in respect of the obiect vnto all our lusts and not vnto some onely; in respect of the time also it must bee continuall euen to the very end of our liues, because (as with Sampson) our enemies will liue with vs euen vnto our death, and then with it wee shall destroy more of them than we haue done in the whole course of our liues; yea in truth then, and not before, shall wee destroy them all, so as for euer after they shall neuer bee able to assault vs or disturbe our peace. And therefore in the meane time wee must neuer thinke that wee haue long enough fought againſt our fleſhly luſts, and that now wee may make a truce and take our eaſe, but we muſt continue fighting till we haue by death gotten a full and finall victory, and then ouercomming and continuing faithfull vnto death we ſhall receiue the crowne of life. Apoc. 2.10. Finally in reſpect of the degree wee muſt not content our ſelues to haue ouercome and mortified all our ſinnefull luſts in ſome ſmall meaſure, but wee muſt labour and ſtriue after perfection, driuing our enemies not onely out of the heart of our Citie but out of our ſuburbs alſo, and the vtmoſt borders and confines of our countrey. Wee muſt not ſuffer it to haue any footing either in the ſecret corners of our hearts by entertaining fleſhly luſts, or in our tongues, by vttering vaine, prophane and filthy ſpeaches, or in our hands by acting wicked, vnjuſt & diſhoneſt workes; but (as the Apoſtle exhorteth vs,) we muſt cleanſe our ſelues from all filthineſſe of the fleſh and Spirit, and perfect our holineſſe in the feare of God; 2. Cor. 7.1. and if we would approue our ſelues to be Gods children, wee muſt ſtriue after perfection, as our heauenly Father is perfect, Mat. 5.48. and becauſe we cannot effect this great worke of our ſelues, we muſt deſire with the Apoſtle, that the God of peace will ſanctifie vs throughout, and that our whole Spirit, and ſoule, and body, may bee preſerued blameleſſe vnto the comming of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. 1. Theſ. 5.23. Yea wee are to deſire our Sauiour who hath giuen himſelfe for vs; That hee will ſanctifie and cleanſe vs with the waſhing of water by the word, that he may preſent vs vnto himſelfe a glorious people, not hauing ſpot or wrinkle or any ſuch thing, but that wee may bee holy and without blemiſh. Eph. 5.25. In the meane time we muſt with Gods worke joyne our owne earneſt deſires and hartie endeauours to abound more and more, and to increaſe in the meaſure of our mortification, getting daily new victories ouer all our ſinnefull luſts. For hee that thinketh in this kind that he hath done enough, hath as yet done nothing at all as hee ought to doe, hee that is come to his ſtint, and meaneth there to take vp his ſtanding, is ready to turne backe and to relapſe into all his former wickedneſſe; and he that continueth not ſtill fighting, is neare vnto foyling, and being ouercome, to bee made a ſlaue to his ſinfull luſts. True grace is growing grace, and that which groweth not is falſe and counterfait; and they who euer made any progreſſe in the wayes of godlineſſe with vpright hearts and good conſciences, they will neuer ceaſe trauelling till they come to their journeyes end; neither, is it poſſible that wee ſhould in this way ſtand at a ſtay, but if wee goe not forward wee ſhall goe backward, if we doe not row continually againſt the tide of our corruptions, they will carry vs downe the ſtreame into the dead Sea and gulfe of perdition.

CHAP. XXIIII.

Of the firſt meanes to ſtrengthen the Spirit, which is to auoide the meanes whereby it is weakned.

WEE haue ſhewed how neceſſary it is, if we would get the victory againſt our ſpirituall enemies and fleſhly luſts, that we ſhould firſt vſe our beſt endeauour to weaken them, and then ſet vpon them with all our forces: But this is not enough, but as we are to weaken and diſarme our enemy the fleſh; ſo on the other ſide we muſt with like earneſtneſſe and diligence, ſtrengthen and arme the Spirit, it being no leſſe neceſſary for the obtaining of victory, to nouriſh our friends, than to famiſh our enemies; and to furniſh them with all prouiſion, armour and munition, than to withdraw and keepe backe from the other all theſe warlike helpes. Although in truth in this ſpirituall warre both theſe concurre and meete in the ſame actions, for the famiſhing of the fleſh, is the nouriſhing of the Spirit, the weakning of the one, is the ſtrengthening of the other, and vvhileſt we diſarme and diſfurniſh our ſpirituall enemies of their prouiſion and munition, vvee furniſh our regenerate part with all neceſſaries. So Baſill ſaith: Looke how much thou detracteſt from the fleſh, and ſo much thou makeſt thy ſpirituall part to proſper and flouriſh in good health and liking. And therefore I ſhall bee the more briefe in this argument, howſoeuer I thinke it fit that ſomething ſhould bee added. And firſt we will conſider this point negatiuely, ſhewing that all meanes are to bee ſhunned whereby the Spirit is weakened and quenched; and then affirmatiuely, ſhewing that weare to vſe all the meanes whereby it may be cheared and ſtrengthened. Concerning the former. The cheife meanes whereby the Spirit is weakened and quenched are our ſinnes, which doe vexe and grieue the good Spirit of God dwelling in vs, and make him weary of his lodging and habitation. For no ſtinking filth can bee ſo noyſome vnto vs, as ſinne is vnto this holy gueſt, and therefore hee cannot indure to continue in our bodies and ſoules as his temples, if they be profaned and defiled with it. But aboue other ſinnes wee weaken the Spirit with ſinnes committed againſt knowledge and conſcience, wilfully, and preſumptuouſly: for ſuch ſinnes doe moſt oppoſitly croſſe and thwart the good motions of it, and doe as plainely contradict it, as if they ſhould ſay in plaine termes, though we

9. Sect. 1. That our ſins are the cheife meanes where by the Spirit is weakened, Quantum carni detrahes, tantum facies animam ſpirituali bona habitudine relucere. Baſil. de ieiunio, Con. 2.

we take notice of thy vvill, we will not doe it but the cleane contrary. With which kinde of obſtinate rebellion the Spirit is ſo wearied and tyred, that it will no longer contend with vs to bring vs vnto goodneſſe, but will leaue vs to our owne vile luſts, and a reprobate minde to goe on in ſinne with greedineſſe to our perdition. So the Lord profeſſeth that when the old World reſiſted the motions of his Spirit in the preaching of Gen.6.3. juſt Noah, it ſhould no longer contend with them, but ſeeing this pure Water of his Spirit, would not quench their fiery luſts, hee would quench them by other meanes, euen the vniuerſall flood which drowned the whole Earth. Thus hee complaineth, that Amos 2.13. hee was preſſed vnder their ſinnes as a cart is preſſed that is full of sheaues; and therefore threatneth that he vvill preſſe them downe with his heauy judgements. And thus becauſe the Gentiles ſinned againſt the common gifts and illumination of the ſpirit, and ſo againſt knowledge and conſcience, therefore Rom.1. the Lord gaue them vp to their owne vile affections and to a reprobate mind, to commit with greedineſſe all manner of abhominable wickednesse. And therefore if we woud not haue the Spirit to beſo weakened and wearied, that it will leaue, and forſake vs; wee
1.Theſ.5.19. muſt not (as the Apoſtle exhorteth vs) quench it, and the good motions thereof by continuing in thoſe ſinnes from which it diſſwadeth vs; nor by making his lodging loathſome with the noyſome filth of ſinne;
Eph.4.30. grieue the good Spirit of God, whereby wee are ſealed vnto the day of redemption. To which end let vs conſider, that if we giue good entertainment to this holy gueſt, hee will ſup with vs and with his company make all our cheare comfortable, yea rather he will feaſt vs, and make vs a moſt pleaſant banquet of all ſpirituall delicacies; he will beare part with vs in all our griefes; and as the Prophet ſpeaketh, he will by ſympathy
Eſa.63.9. and compaſſion be afflicted in our afflictions. Yea hee will comfort vs in all our ſorrowes; and therefore let vs take heede of vexing him, for if grieuing our comforter we make him to leaue vs, who ſhall cheare and refreſh vs in all our miſeries?

9. Sect.2. Of ſome ſpeciall ſins wherby the ſpirit is moſt weakened.

But howſoeuer all ſins generally wound and weaken the Spirit, yet there are ſome ſpeciall ſinnes aboue the reſt which doe infeeble it, and quench all the good motions of it; the firſt whereof is ignorance and blindneſſe of minde, the which pulleth (as it were) out of the hand of the Spirit his chiefe weapon, the two edged ſword of Gods Word, whereby it defendeth it ſelfe, and and offendeth his ſpirituall enemies, and like a blacke foggie miſt dazeleth and blindeth the eyes of the vnderſtanding, ſo as it cannot diſcerne the ſleights and ſubtilties, the wiles and ſtrong delu ſions of our ſpirituall enemies, nor on which ſide they ſtrike vs, nor how to ward off their blowes, nor withſtand the malice and fury of their tentations. The ſecond is infidelitie which diſableth the Spirit, whileſt it depriueth it of the chiefe comforts and encouragements whereby it is ſtrengthened againſt the aſſaults of the fleſh, namely Gods ſweet promiſes of grace in this life and glory in the life to come, to all thoſe who walke in the Spirit, and mortifie the fleſh with the luſts thereof. Yea it weakeneth and looſeneth the ſpirituall bond of our vnion with Chriſt, which is our faith, by which alone he is applyed, and ſo ſtoppeth and hindreth the influences of his graces, and the vertue and vigour, the iuice and ſap which from this roote of Ieſſe is deriued vnto vs, by which wee are ſtrengthened againſt the fleſh and enabled to withſtand all the aſſaults of our ſpirituall enemies. The third is impenitencie the which is moſt pernicious to the health and vigour of the Spirit, for beſides that it hindereth all the operations of our faith, the application of Chriſt and all the promiſes made in him, our communion and ſweet fellowſhip with God, hiding from our ſight his fatherly face and the bright beames of his fauourable countenance, in the apprehenſion wherof the life of our life conſiſteth, and depriueth vs of the peace of conſcience and joy in the holy Ghoſt, by which wee are in the ſpirituall man made ſtrong and couragious in the day of tentation; after that we haue receiued wounds of the fleſh in the ſpirituall fight, it hindreth their cure, and cauſeth them to feſter and ranckle, and to grow euery day more dangerous and incurable than other. And after wee haue beene allured to drinke the ſweet poyſons of the fleſhes bewitching cup, this impenitencie doth cauſe vs to retayne them in the ſtomacke, vntill working they doe make vs ſicke vnto death, where as they would not bee hurtfull and pernicious, if as ſoone as they were ſwallowed, they were caſt vp againe by vnfained repentance. The fourth ſinne that weakeneth the Spirit is carnall ſecurity and hardneſſe of heart, whereby wee bleſſe our ſelues when our eſtate is dangerous, and haue no ſenſe and feeling, neither of Gods mercy and loue, nor of his anger and diſpleaſure, by the one whereof the Spirit is ſtrengthened vnto Gods ſeruice, and by the other preſerued from ſinning againſt him. So alſo the ſtrength of the ſpirit is by this carnall ſecuritie much impayred, becauſe it maketh vs to put the euill day farre from vs, and vtterly to neglect our ſpirituall enemies as though we had a ſecure peace and all cauſe of danger were farre remoued; it cauſeth vs to neglect our Chriſtian watch, and ſo to lye open to the malicious and ſecret aſſaults of our ſpiritual enemies, and to neglect the meanes of our ſafety and defence, our ſpirituall food and prouiſion, our weapons and munition, our fortifications and all other preparations which ſhould be any meanes of defence in the day of battell; whereby the ſpirituall part is betrayed and ſuddenly ſurprized before it expecteth any danger. The laſt ſpeciall ſinne whereby the ſpirit is weakened and all the good motions thereof quenched, is the loue of the World, which like birdlime ſo beſmeareth the ſpirituall part and the wings of the ſoule, that it cannot flee aloft, but is intangled and catched, fixed and faſtened to the Earth and worldly vanities. More eſpecially the loue of honours and the glory of the world, doth make the ſpirituall man ſlacke and ſluggiſh in the purſuite of eternal glory and heauenly happineſſe. The loue of riches hindreth him from ſeeking with all earneſtneſſe, ſpirituall graces, and thoſe incomparable treaſures which are laide vp for vs in Gods Kingdome; it choaketh the ſeed of the Word, ſo as it cannot take roote and beare fruit, and fruſtrateth all the good motions of the Spirit, ſo as they cannot take effect; it expoſeth vs to many tentations and ſnares, and cauſeth vs to fall into many

and

1. Tim. 6. 9. 10. fooliſh and hurtfull luſts, which drowne men in deſtruction and perdition. And ſo alſo the loue of earthly pleaſures doth much enfeeble the ſpirituall part in the purſuit of thoſe eternall pleaſures, and fulneſſe of ioy which are at Gods right hand for euermore; and as they weaken the body and effeminate the minde, ſo as they are made vnfit, euen for any warlike imployments in the World, ſo much more doe they diſable the ſoule and Spirit for this warfare againſt the enemies of our ſaluation. For when the fleſh is pampered with theſe carnall delights, the ſoule is ſtarued and pined: when it is diſtended and growne fat and groſſe with gluttony and belly-cheare, the Spirit is made leane and infeebled; when it reuelleth in fleſhly ioy, the regenerate part droopeth and mourneth, being ſpoyled and robbed of the joyes of the holy Ghoſt. When it is filled and euen glutted with exceſſe, the ſpirit is ſtraitened of roome, and hath no place where it may reſide: and therefore the Apoſtle requireth
Eph. 5. 18. firſt emptineſſe of wine, and then that wee ſhould be filled with the Spirit, to note vnto vs, that fulneſſe of both will not ſtand together.

9. Sect. 3. We muſt not prouide for the Spirit poyſon inſtead of wholeſome food nor carnall weapons inſtead of ſpirituall.

A ſecond meanes of weakening and diſabling the Spirit, which is to be auoided, reſpecteth our prouiſion which we are to make for the armie of Gods graces, as firſt that we doe not prouide for their nouriſhment poyſon in ſtead of wholeſome food: as for example in ſtead of the pure Word of God, the ſpirituall Manna, the ſincere milke of the Goſpell and Sacraments inſtituted by our Sauiour Chriſt; humane traditions and inuentions, will-worſhip and our owne ſuperſtitions deuotions, which haue no ground or warrant out of the Scriptures, nor ſcarce any reſemblance of that holy and wholeſome food which is by God appointed for our nouriſhment. Of which meate the more liberally wee feede, the more leane and lanke wee waxe in our ſpirituall ſtrength and ſtature, the more feeble and faint wee grow in all ſauing graces: becauſe howſoeuer it bee ſweet to our naturall and carnall appetite, yet it is of a quite contrarie qualitie to the Spirit and the graces and gifts thereof, and it is no better than the Diuels moſt artificiall poyſons, which cauſe them that taſt and feed on them to waſt and weare away in a continuall conſumption of all pietie and true godlineſſe. Secondly, we muſt beware that we doe not prouide for this ſpiritual Warfare carnall weapons and munition: For as the Apoſtle ſaith, the weapons of our warfare are not carnall, but ſutable 2. Cor. 10. 4. vnto the Spirit it ſelfe, and mighty through God to the pulling downe of ſtrong holds. As for example wee muſt not fight againſt the fleſh with fleſhly anger and carnall reuenge; for here eſpecially the ſaying of the Apoſtle is verified, The wrath of man worketh not the Iam. 1. 20. righteouſneſſe of God; wee muſt not fight againſt and indeauour to ſubdue it with ſpiritual watchings as reſting in the deed done, and not deſtinating it to a ſuperiour end, namely in the imploying of our time in prayer with it; Watch and pray; and the watching ouer our hearts, that wee doe not ſinne, rather than ouer our eyes, that wee doe not ſleepe. Wee muſt not ſeeke to ſubdue it by popiſh faſting which is nothing elſe (but like all other their deuotions) a bodily exerciſe, conſiſting in their ſuperſtitious abſtinence from certaine meanes, (contrary to the Word of God, which calleth it a doctrine 1. Tim. 4. 1. 3. 4. of Diuels, and teacheth vs that all the creatures of God are cleane if they be ſanctified by the Word and Prayer;) and allowing the vſe of all the daintieſt fiſh, and delicateſt wines and fruits which pamper the fleſh more than the moderate vſe of ordinarie dyet. But as occaſion ſerueth, wee muſt vſe totall abſtinence, when we would tame the fleſh and humble our ſelues before God, yet not like them reſting in the deed done, much leſſe eſteeming it ſatisfactorie and meritorious, but onely vſing it as an exerciſe of mortification, and as an helpe for the increaſing of our repentance, and for our better fitting and inabling to call vpon God more earneſtly by feruent prayers, whereof it is that theſe are vſually joyned together in the Scriptures, Faſt and pray, the one being the end, the other the meanes inabling vs thereunto. Much leſſe muſt wee vſe thoſe carnall weapons of whippes, to torment our bodies, which which onely offend in yeelding themselues as instruments to our sinnefull soules; or of popish pennances and pilgrimages which are the meere inuentions of men and haue no warrant out of the Word of God, and being carnall weapons, doe as ill fit the Spirit as the armour of Saul did fit Dauid, and therefore doe but cumber and hinder it in the spiritual warfare: Yea (like Achilles launce) doe cure the flesh in stead of killing it, and make it more strong and full of courage, by filling it with spirituall pride, and a glorious opinion of our own merits and well deseruing.

§. Sect.4. We must not remit any thing of our first zeale in holy duties.

The third meanes of weakening the spirit which wee are to auoid is, to remit any thing of our former zeale in the duties of Gods seruice, and to giue way vnto any declination in grace and Christian duties. For wee may much more firmely stand in the highest pitch of our sinceritie (as it were) on the top of the mountaine, than in our declinations and discent, from that measure of perfection vnto which wee had attained (as it were) on the side of the hill; we may more easily preserue the health and strength of the Spirit, whilest it is in the best plight, than recouer it when it is impeached and in some degrees of declination. Wee may liue much more comfortably and plentifully when our stocke is whole and daily increasing, than when it decayeth, and is in some part spent and wasted; wee may better defend our selues against our spiritual enemies, when as wee are in our compleate armour, than when we haue put off some pieces of it. And wee shall much more easily discourage them and weaken their fury, by taking away all hope of victory, when wee haue remitted nothing of our Christian valour and fortitude, but stand couragiously vpon hostile termes, and at open defiance with them, and when we keepe them out from entring into our borders, than when wegrow to a parley, and yeeld a little to their conditions; or when wee haue suffered them to inuade some part of our country, and haue receiued some foyles in the spiritual conflict. Againe the more resolutely we stand in the strength of grace receiued, the more willing the Lord is to assist vs in fighting his battailes; the more carefull we are to increase his spiritual talents, the more ready hee is to re-double them, whereas it is just with our great Commander to leaue vs to our selues, and to deliuer vs into the hands of our enemies, when we begin cowardly to leaue his standard, and somewhat to incline to the enemies part by our remisnesse in fighting or faintnesse in yeelding; it is a righteous thing with our Lord and Master, when we wast his rich talents and spend ryotously some part of the stocke, to take that which remaineth from vs, and giue it to another, who will bee more carefull and faithfull in imploying of it. Finally, that wee may not decline, no not in the least degrees, let vs consider that it is most dangerous; for who can bee assured, if he begin once to slip that hee can preserue himselfe from catching a fall, or that hauing begun to runne downe the hill, he can stay himselfe before he come to the bottome? And therefore if we would stand surely, let vs stand in our sinceritie; if wee would not weaken the Spirit, nor haue the gifts thereof to perish in vs, let vs preserue them, euen in respect of their least degrees, from wasting and consuming.

§. Sect.5. That we must auoid fleshly sloth and negligence.

The last meanes of weakening the Spirit which we are to take heed of, is fleshly sloth and negligence, when as hauing Gods graces and gifts of the Spirit, wee doe not imploy and exercise them in holy and Christian duties to the glory of him that gaue them, and the edification of our neighbours, for whose sake also wee haue receiued them. For as the strength of the body is much weakened and impayred, when as we liue in sloth and idlenesse, and neuer imploy it in any good exercise; so is it also with our spiritual strength. Our knowledge must be then exercised in the holy practice of that we know, our faith in good workes, our loue towards God and our neighbours, in performing all duties which wee owe vnto them; our zeale in aduancing all meanes of Gods glory, and in removing all impediments whereby it is hindred and impeached. And if wee thus imploy Gods spirituall graces, which are his talents committed vnto vs, then will our Lord and Master increase and multiply them, and wee shall haue abundance; but if with the slothful and vnprofitable seruant, we hide them in a napkin, neuer imploying our graces receiued to the glory of our Master, nor the good of our fellowes in the same family, he wil take these talents from vs, and cast vs into outer darknesse. Finally though it were possible, that we could abound in the graces of the Spirit, yet if we did not vse them for our owne defence, and discomforting and indamaging of our enemies, we should be neuer the neerer the obtaining victory. If wee haue the sword of the Spirit and neuer smite with it, nor draw it out, but suffer it to rust in the scabberd; if we haue all the seuerall parts of the Christian Armour, and neuer put it on, nor girt it to vs, but suffer it (as it were) to hang rusting vpon the wals without vse; if wee haue powder and good peeces of Ordnance, but neuer charge nor discharge them against the enemy; wee shall neuer ouercome and put them to flight, but notwithstanding our furniture and munition wee shall bee vanquished in the first assault, and become an easie prey vnto them; but if hauing these warlike preparations, we doe imploy them in the spirituall Warfare with all care and diligence, wee shall bee sure to obtaine the victory.

in

CHAP. XXV.

Of the meanes for the comforting, chearing and strengthening of the spirit vnto the Conflict.

§. Sect. 1. Earnest and longing desires after spirituall strength.

THE second thing required is, that we vse all meanes for the comforting & cheering, the strengthening and inabling of the Spirit vnto this spirituall Conflict. And first we must earnestly desire to haue the Spirit more strengthened, and the gifts and graces thereof inlarged and multiplyed in vs: For as wee haue Gods promise, that if wanting the Spirit, we doe desire and pray for it, he will giue him vnto vs; so also when hauing it, we desire to haue it and the graces thereof increased in vs, the Lord will satisfie our desires, and bring this worke of grace begun to accomplishment and perfection. For therefore doth the Lord inlarge our hearts with these longing desires, that he may satisfie them, therefore doth he make vs to hunger after grace, and to find and feele our own emptinesse, that he may fill and replenish vs with them. Wee must not therefore rest contented and satisfied with that measure of grace which wee haue receiued, or that portion of the Spirit wherewith we are already indued, but we must hunger after more perfection, and grow from grace to grace, from strength to strength, and from one degree of spirituall stature vnto another, vntill we come vnto a perfect age in Christ. And this is an inseparable and infallible signe and property of the faithfull and regenerate, who are said to bee trees of righteousnesse of Gods owne planting, which bring forth more plenty of fruit in their old age, and are not doted and rotten with yeeres, but when they are at the eldest, they are most fat and flourishing. They are like vnto the morning light, which shineth more and more vnto the perfect day. They are Gods building, which is still in framing and setting vp vntill it be fully finished. They are Gods children who grow from strength to strength, vntill they come to perfect stature, neither haue they any time of old age, but are in a continuall spring of youth. They are branches ingrafted into the true Vine Iesus Christ, which bearing fruit in him, he purgeth and pruneth them, that they may bring forth more fruit. That therefore wee may approue our selues to bee in this number, let vs not content our selues that wee haue receiued some measure of the Spirit, but (as the Apostle exhorteth vs) let vs desire to grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord Iesus Christ: For they who haue once tasted of these spirituall excellencies, are not satisfied with a small pittance, but rather thereby their desire is inlarged, their appetite sharpened, and their hunger increased after a more full and perfect allowance.

Luk. 11. 13.

Psal. 145. 19. Phil. 1. 6.

Psal. 92. 14.

Pro. 4. 18.

Eph. 2. 20.

Eph. 4. 13. 33.

Ioh. 15. 2. 2. Pet. 3. 18.

§. Sect. 2. The second meanes, a carefull indeauour in the vse of al good means for the strengthening of it,

Now as wee are thus to desire more and more an accesse of all spirituall grace vnto perfection; so in the second place, wee are to endeauour in the vse of all good meanes appointed by God for the strengthening and increasing of them. And first we must bee carefull and diligent in hearing, reading and meditating in the word of God, which is the ministery of grace and saluation, and not onely the seed whereby wee are regenerate and made new borne babes in Christ, but also the food whereby we are nourished and increased in grace and spirituall strength, vntill we come vnto a full age in Christ; Milke for our tender infancy, and more strong and perfect nourishment for our riper age. Now because there may come a deare yeare, when as this spirituall food will be very scarce, so as we may wander from Sea to Sea, and run to and fro, from the Northeuen vnto the East, to seeke the word of the Lord, and shall not find it, as hee threatneth by the Prophet; therefore we must with Ioseph foreseeing this danger in our yeeres of plenty lay vp store against the time of scarcity and penury, that our Spirit doe not loose its strength, nor our soules be famished with this spirituall famine; and not like the foolish Egyptians, for want of prouidence, be driuen to seeke our food with much inconueniency, when as we should feed vpon it. Yea we are not onely to lay vp sufficient store for our owne prouision, but as Ioseph did, for the relieue and comfort of all that sue and seeke vnto vs, that their soules may blesse vs when as they finde themselues refreshed and comforted with this spirituall nourishment. And this meanes of comforting and strengthening the Spirit, Cyrill commendeth vnto vs. If (saith hee) comming often vnto the Church thou giuest eare to the holy Scriptures, and conceiuest the meaning of these diuine precepts; then as the flesh is pampered with excesse of meates and daintie dishes, so the Spirit will grow strong, by feeding on this heauenly Manna, and becomming more powerfull than our sensuall desires and carnall lusts, it will bring the flesh into subiection, and make it to submit it selfe to be ruled by its lawes. Whereas contrariwise if wee withdraw this food from the Spirit, it will grow so faint and languish in strength, that it will not bee able to stand against the assaults of the flesh in the day of battell. And vnto the Ministery of the Word we must adioyne the frequent vse of the Lords Supper, which is a spirituall feast, purposely ordained by our Sauiour

Amos. 8. 12.

Cyril in Leuit. lib. 9. Col. 129.

Sauiour Christ, for the confirming and strengthening of our communion with him by his Spirit; and for the filling and repleniſhing of all thoſe with his ſanctifying and ſauing graces who come with a good ſtomacke and an hungring appetite to this holy Table; for the ſtrengthening of thoſe that are weake and faint, the reſtoring of them who are entred into a ſpirituall conſumption, and for the confirming of ſuch in their vigour and ſtrength, who already enjoy deſired health. Finally, we muſt vſe the helpe of holy conferences, inſtructing, exhorting, admoniſhing, counſelling and comforting one another, that we may be further edified in our holy faith. For as ſticks ſcattered aſunder will hardly keepe fire, but if they be laid together will quickly grow to a great flame; ſo if we ſingle our ſelues from one another, and admit no communion by religious conferences, wee ſhall quickly coole and quench the fire of the ſpirit: but if we meete together and exerciſe our ſelues in holy conferences, wee ſhall hereby ſtirre vp Gods graces in vs; we ſhall like vnto Kniues whetted one vpon another, ſharpen our gifts, and ſet an edge on our deſires to the performance of all good duties; wee ſhall pile vp our graces one on another, and with theſe bellowes of conference, blow vpon them vntill they grow to a great flame.

Ibid. verſe 20.

Sect. 3. The third meanes is to nouriſh the good motions of the ſpirit.

The third meanes of cheriſhing & ſtrengthening the ſpirit is to nouriſh the good motions thereof, neither vtterly quenching them, nor delaying to put them in practice, but preſently harkening vnto them and labouring after the firſt and beſt opportunity of performing thoſe duties which it requireth. For it is a great comfort and encouragement to this ſpirituall Vice-roy, whom God hath ſet vp in his ſtead to raigne and rule in vs, when as we yeeld obedience vnto him, and ſuffer our ſelues willingly to be gouerned by his direction. It much cheareth and delighteth this heauenly Counſellour, when as we hearken to his counſels, and be aduiſed by him in all our courſes: whereas there can be no comfort to any Prince in his gouernment, when as his ſubjects vpon euery occaſion ſtand out in open rebellion, and continually reſiſt him in all his lawful Commandements; and who would not refuſe it, as an irkſome office to be ſtil aduiſing a man of ſuch a refractory ſpirit, as will either neuer follow his counſaile, or make it vnſeaſonable and vnprofitable by vnneceſſary delayes? If therefore we would comfort and cheriſh the ſpirit, let vs willingly entertaine the good motions which it putteth into our minds, and ſpeedily put them in practice and execution. As for example, when as fit opportunity being offered, it moueth vs to call vpon God by Prayer, either to begge the graces which wee want, or to giue him thankes for benefits receiued, wee are not to tread this motion vnder foot by vtter neglect, nor yet to coole or quench it by caſting vpon it the cold water of delayes, but wee muſt preſently nouriſh the motion and not deferre to put it in execution. When it moueth vs to attend vnto the hearing of the Word, either on the Lords Day, when as wee are bound to meet in the holy Aſſemblies; or on the weeke day, when as our neceſſary imployments in the workes of our callings will giue vs reaſonable opportunity, wee are to take hold of the occaſion offered, and not deferre it by cauſleſſe delayes. And when God preſenteth vs with an object of miſery, and his Spirit moueth vs to take the preſent occaſion of doing a worke of mercy; as by giuing an almes to the needy, viſiting the ſicke and ſuch as are in priſon, helping the impotent, and comforting the comfortleſſe and afflicted, we muſt not neglect theſe works of Charity, nor put them off to another time, but as willingly and chearefully apprehend the preſent opportunity, as the Husbandman doth the Seaſon of Sowing, the Merchant of Trading, and the Mariner of hoyſing vp ſayles, when as he hath gotten a good gale of wind; ſeeing otherwiſe God may juſtly puniſh our negligence by neuer granting vs againe ſuch ſeaſonable occaſions.

Sect. 4. The fourth meanes is ſerious care to maintaine our peace with God and the peace of conſcience.

The fourth meanes of cheriſhing and ſtrengthening of the ſpirit is to be carefull of maintayning our peace with God, and our aſſurance of his loue and fauour; the which is beſt done by preſeruing peace in our owne conſciences, and by keeping them cleare of knowne and voluntary ſinnes, whereby the anger of our heauenly Father is prouoked againſt vs, and wee expoſed to his heauy judgements. For if God be offended how ſhall his Spirit be well pleaſed with vs? How ſhall he be willing to renew our ſtrength, and to ſend vnto vs freſh ſupplyes of his graces, to aide and aſſiſt vs againſt our ſpirituall Enemies? Or how ſhall the created Spirit dwelling in vs with courage and comfort fight againſt the Deuill, the World, and the Fleſh, when as it is deprived of the Light of Gods countenance, and hath its peace interrupted with him; yea, when it apprehendeth his wrathfull diſpleaſure, and (as it was with Iob and Dauid) conceiueth that God hath not onely forſaken him, but is alſo become his Enemy? How ſhall the ſtreames of Gods graces continue running, when as they are ſtopped and cut off from the ſpring and fountaine? Or how ſhould our ſtrength hold out, when the God of our ſtrength doth with-draw himſelfe from vs? If therefore we would haue the Spirit in vs ſtrong and vigorous, let vs preſerue, as much as in vs lyeth, our intercourſe with God, and vſe all good meanes to ſtrengthen our faith in the aſſu-

rance

rance of his loue, and our reconciliation and peace with him; for if God be with it, the Spirit will be so couragious and magnanimous, that it will not care who oppoſeth against it. Yea, our care must be not onely to strengthen our faith in this assurance, that God who hath chosen vs will neuer leaue vs, and that hauing begun the good worke of regeneration, hee will neuer giue it ouer, till he hath fully finished it, because he is vnchangeable in his loue, and his gifts and calling are without repentance; but if we would haue the Spirit strong and vigorous, wee must not neglect the feelings of faith, nor the sensible comforts of Gods loue, warming and comforting our hearts, but wee must labour to find the vertue and efficacie of his grace working in vs, and haue the experimentall apprehension of the comforts of his Spirit. Wee must endeuour to haue not onely Gods graces habitually, but to feele their seuerall actions and operations working our hearts to all good duties. For though the Sun-shine of Gods fauour once shining vpon vs, can neuer vtterly faile, yet the beames thereof may by the interposition of our sinnes be eclypsed from vs for a time; though the Fountaine of his grace towards vs can neuer be dried vp, yet the streames thereof may be so stopped that wee can by present apprehension feele little comfort by it. And though our faith which is the life of our spirit, cannot be lost of those who euer had it, yet when the life of our life, the comfortable feelings of faith, our communion with God, peace of conscience and joy in the Holy Ghost, are taken away, or for a time suspended and hid from vs, wee are exceedingly weakened in the spirituall part, and haue little comfort or courage in maintayning the fight against our spirituall Enemies. Now these feelings of faith and comforts of the spirit are best obtained and kept, when as wee preserue our communion, fellowship & familiar acquaintance with God in the conscionable and frequent vse of his holy Ordinances, the hearing of his Word, Prayer, the vse of the Sacraments, keeping company with him in his holy Assemblies, where hee is present by his Spirit; when as with the Spouse in the Canticles we reioyce in his company, & with Dauid be rauished with joy and delight, when as we meet him in his holy Temple; and when as with them we mourne and grieue for his absence, and when hee withdraweth himselfe doe seeke his face and fauour, and aboue all things desire and long after his comfortable presence. When as we labour daily in the mortification of our sins, which doe make a separation betweene our God and vs, and doe exercise our selues in all holy duties of his seruice, thereby glorifying his holy Name, and edifying our neighbours by our good example.

Psal.84.1.
Psal.42.1,2.

Which if we do, then shal the beams of Gods fauour, and the streames of his graces, haue a cleare passage vnto vs, with which our spirituall part shall be so cheared, cherished and increased in strength, that wee shall easily withstand all the malice and fury of our spirituall enemies, and obtaine an happy victory in our Christian Warfare.

The fifth meanes to nourish and cherish the Spirit in vs, is to preserue our bodies and soules, which are his temples, in their cleanesse and puritie from all pollution of sinne and wickednesse; for as a good ayre and sweete habitation doth much refresh and strengthen our naturall and vitall Spirits, and preserue our bodies in health; so no lesse doth it comfort our Comforter, and cheare and cherish the Spirit of God in vs, if wee prouide for him a wholesome and pleasant lodging, cleansed and purged from all noysome filth of sinfull impuritie, and sweetned and adorned with the incense and odours of our prayers, and the flowers and fruits of our good workes and holy obedience.

9. Sect.5. The fift means is to preserue our selues pure and cleane from all pollution.

The sixth meanes to preserue and strengthen the Spirit, and to increase in vs the graces and gifts thereof, is to keepe them in continuall exercise; and to cause these habits to shew themselues in their functions and operations. For no more necessary is breathing and mouing for the preseruing the life of our bodies, than fruitfull working and holy walking in all Christian duties, is for the preseruing and cherishing the life of the spirit; according to that of the Apostle; If we liue in the spirit, let vs also walke in the spirit. And as in naturall things, the causes are preserued by producing their effects, and habits and qualities confirmed and strengthened by their functions and operations; so is it also in the spirit and spirituall graces. We find by experience that the sight is bettred by seeing, and much weakened when it is depriued of fit obiects. The habituall memory is much strengthened by the practical; and made feeble and vnfaithfull, when as it hath no exercise or imployment; the vnderstanding becommeth more intelligent by minding and conceiuing, and is much impaired when it is not vsed; the strength of the Arme, Hand, Legge, and the whole Body is much strengthened and increased by action and exercise, and decayeth and is greatly enfeebled by sloth and idlenesse. And thus it is also with the spirit and spirituall graces; let vs vse them and we shal haue them; let these rootes of holinesse bring forth their boughes and branches, their leaues of profession and their fruits of practice, and they will liue and prosper, spread inwardly and spring and sprout outwardly, but if we hinder them from bearing their leaues and rootes, and be still cutting and lopping of their boughes and branches, they will in a while

9. Sect.6. The sixt means is to keepe the spirit and the graces thereof in continuall exercise.

Gal.5.25.

dye and perish. Let this fire of the Spirit haue fit vent to send out its flames of holy and righteous actions, & it will still liue, burne & blaze; but if once we beginne to stop this vent, it will presently dye and turne to cold embers. Let faith exercise it selfe in apprehending the promises, in waiting for the performance, in fighting against doubting, and in bearing the fruits of good workes, and from a graine of mustard seed it will grow to a great tree, from smoking flaxe to a burning flame, and from a feeble assent to a firme and full perswasion. So let loue bee exercised in doing and suffering for Gods sake, in performing vnto him all holy seruice and Christian duties; and in the works of mercy and charitie towards our neighbours, and of a little sparke it will increase to a great fire. Let the shoulders of patience bee inured to bearing of the Crosse, and suffering afflictions, in putting vp wrongs and ouercomming euill with good, though they bee weake and tender at the first, they will in a little while become hard and strong, and so it is in all other graces; by exercise they are increased, by sloth and ease they are weakned and wasted. And therefore Dauid no sooner thinketh of receiuing grace and strength from God, than hee resolueth to exercise them to the vttermost; I will runne (saith he) the way of thy Commandements when thou shalt inlarge my heart. And againe; teach me O Lord the way of thy Statutes and I will keepe them vnto the end. Giue me vnderstanding and I shall keepe thy law, yea I shall obserue it with my whole heart.

Psal. 119. 32. 33. 34.

§. Sect. 7. The last meanes is frequent and feruent prayer.

The last and principall meanes of strengthening and cherishing the spirit, is earnest and effectuall prayer vnto God, that he will strengthen our weakenesse, and quicken our dulnesse, and support our faintenesse, by continuall renewing his spirit in vs and sending fresh supplies of his sauing graces, to re-enforce and refresh our decayed bands, that by these new aides wee may be enabled to stand in the day of battell, and to get the victory ouer all our spirituall enemies; for it is this holy fire descended from Heauen, which kindleth this spirituall fire in vs, whereby we offer incense, sacrifices and oblations acceptable vnto God, the smoake whereof driueth away the enemies of our saluation. His eternall spirit is the liuing fountaine of these cleare and Cristaline waters, whereby our thirsty soules are refreshed in the spirituall conflict, and our hands, and eyes, and all other parts when they are wearied and tyred doe recieue renewed strength. It is he that teacheth our hands to warre, and our fingers to fight, and giueth vnto vs full and finall victory ouer all our enemies, and the crowne of victory euerlasting glory. And therefore when we see the battell hot against vs, and our selues weary and weake to make resistance, let vs imitate the good King Iehoshaphat, and cry aloud vnto the Lord to succour and strengthen vs; when we see our graces spent and our spirituall strength wasted and weakened in making resistance, let vs call vnto him for fresh aides and renewed strength, whereby wee may be enabled to hold out and ouercome.

Psal. 144. 1.

1. Kings 22.

§. Sect. 8. The conclusion of the Booke.

And thus haue I, through Gods mighty and most mercifull assistance, finished also this last part of the Christian Warfare, a worke so much the more difficult, because the flesh which is the enemy against whom I intend it, holdeth a strong party in my selfe, darkening my vnderstanding, that I might not discouer its slights and subtilties, malice and might, nor discerne the best meanes for the defeating of its pollicies & subduing of its power. The Lord make me euer truely thankefull vnto his holy Majesty for this mercie, and giue me grace alwayes to esteeme it as one of his chiefest benefits in this life, that he hath vsed mee the weakest and vnworthiest of many hundreds of my brethren, as his poore instrument in so good an imployment, and stirre vp in his good time some other of his choysest and chiefest Worthies, for the further perfecting of that which I in my mediocrity haue begun, hitting the marke at which I haue but aymed, and training exactly the Christian Souldiour in the feates of spirituall armes whom I (as I was able) haue but in some little measure acquainted with the knowledge of the Christian Warfare. And the Lord giue his grace vnto vs all, both strongest and weakest, that we may not onely instruct others in this spirituall Art of fighting against the enemies of our saluation, but that wee our selues may put on the spirituall armour, and fight continually with courage and resolution vnder the standard of the Lord of Hoasts; and because wee are vnskilfull and know not how to fight, and exceeding weake and feeble in our strength, and vnable to stand in the incounter and beare the brunt of the battell, that he will teach our hands, or rather our hearts, to warre, and our fingers, or rather our affections, to fight; and that he will continually renew our strength, and send vs daily fresh supplies of his spirituall and sauing graces, whereby wee may be enabled with constancy & perseuerance to maintaine the fight, vntil hauing gotten a full and finall victory, we be like conquerours crowned with glory and immortality; the which hee vouchsafe vnto vs euen for his Christs sake, the Son of his loue, and the author, continuer, and finisher of our saluation, to whom with the blessed Father, and holy Spirit, be ascribed of vs, and his whole Church, all prayse and glory, power and dominion, from this time forth and for euermore. Amen.

FINIS.

The Printer to the Reader.

CHriſtian Reader, it hath beene the Authors ſcope and deſire, to fit and furniſh thee in all eſtates and conditions. For whereas wee are in this life a Church Militant, that is, not onely a people called, and called out of the World, that being gathered into one body or ſocietie, wee ſhould call vpon God and doe him ſeruice; and like fellow-citizens of the new Hieruſalem ſhould liue vnder the ſame gouernment; and as loyall Subjects ſubmit our ſelues to be ruled by the Lawes of our Soueraigne: But alſo Souldiers, fighting the Lords battailes againſt our ſpirituall enemies who labour to diſhonour him, by hindring vs in the courſe of our obedience, and in the enioying of our ſpirituall priuiledges: Hee hath endeuoured to accommodate and helpe, both all other his fellow-citizens and Souldiers, and himſelfe alſo, in both theſe reſpects.

And as in this worke of the Chriſtian Warfare, he hath endeuoured to inſtruct thee in military Diſcipline for thy better enabling to ſtand in the day of battaile as a valiant Souldier:

So in another worke of his called A Guide to Godlineſſe, or a Treatiſe of a Chriſtian Life, he hath giuen vnto thee Inſtructions and Directions, how to carry thy ſelfe as a good Citizen and Subject to our great Lord and Soueraigne: Which Worke the Authour hath diuided into ſix Bookes, the generall contents whereof are theſe following.

The firſt Booke ſheweth the excellencie, profit and neceſſitie of a holy Life, with the definition thereof, and wherein it doth conſiſt. Where alſo is ſhewed how Chriſtian duties ought to be performed, together with the maine grounds of a godly Life, viz. Saning Knowledge, a Liuely and Iuſtifying Faith, a pure Heart, and a good Conſcience; and all handled reſpectiuely in ſeuenteene Chapters.

The ſecond Booke containeth the maine parts and principall duties of a godly Life, which we ought to performe at all times, and vpon all good occaſions, containing thirteene Chapters.

The third Booke containeth thoſe duties which are required in our daily exerciſe, both generally at all times of the day, and vpon all occaſions, and ſpecially in the ſeuerall parts of it, containing forty two Chapters.

The fourth Booke containeth the properties of a godly Life, and all the duties required vnto it, in ten Chapters.

The fifth Booke containeth the helpes and meanes which inable vs vnto a godly Life, in forty fiue Chapters.

The ſixt and laſt Booke intreateth of the impediments which vſually hinder and diſcourage men from entring into, and proceeding in the Chriſtian duties, which are required vnto a godly Life; and of the helps and meanes whereby they may be remoued, in twentie Chapters.

Whereunto is alſo added a Treatiſe of Securitie in two Bookes, the former intreating of Carnall Securitie and Hardneſſe of Heart, the latter of Spirituall and Chriſtian Security, and are publiſhed as an Antidote againſt the dangerous Securitie of theſe laſt times.

Vſe them, both in the time of warre and peace, as thy occaſions ſhall require, but chiefly reſt vpon the power of Gods might, and the good guidance of his holy Spirit, giuing him the whole glorie both of the Authours labours and thine owne endeuours, without whom of our ſelues we can doe nothing.

A PARTICVLAR ACCOVNT OF ALL those Texts of Scripture, whether in the Old or New Testament, that are in this elaborate Worke, either wholy expounded, or in part explained, as followeth.

Genesis.

*Gen.*4.7.Part.1. Lib.2.Cap.31.p.191.Col.2.Num.40.

Exodus.

*Exod.*19.10.part.1.lib.2. cap.28. p.181.§ 2.

*Exod.*32.32.lib.3.c.16.p.323. col. 2.num.20.& p.324.col.1.§ 3.

1. Samuel.

1.*Sam.*2.2.part.2. lib.3.c.9.p.727 col.1. ad finem.

1.*Sam.*7.6 part.3.lib.1.c.23.p.939. col.1.num.30.

1.*Sam.*9.2.part.1.lib.3.c.20.p.338 col.1.num.30. & inde.

1.*Sam.*10.24. idem,ibidem.col.1. ad finem.

1.*Sam.*12.21.part.2.lib.2.c.21.pag. 561.col.1.num. 20. & inde.

1.*Sam.*16.14.part.1.lib.1.c.5.p.12 col.1.num.50.

1.*Sam.*24.1.part.3.lib.1.c.1.col.1. ad initium.

1. Chronicles.

1.*Chron.*21.1.part.3. li.1. c.1.p. 756.col.1. ad initium.

The Booke of Iob.

Iob 9.21. part.1. lib.2. c.13. p.130 col.2.§ 6.

Iob 14.17.part.3 lib.2.cap.9.p.855 col.2.num.50.

Iob 19.27.part.2. lib.3.c.10.p.730. col.1.num.10.

Iob 20.11.part.1.lib.2.c.30.p.188 col.1.num.30.

The Booke of Psalmes.

*Psal.*19.13.part.1.li.3.c.10.p.305 col.1.num.20.

*Psal.*41.1. part.1. lib.1.c.9.p.20. col.1.ad initium.

*Psal.*49.12. part.2. lib.2.c.29.p. 624.col.1.num.10.

*Psal.51.10. part.1. lib.2.c.41. p. 289.num.50.col.2.& inde* & lib.3 c.16.p.324.col.1.§ 5.

*Psal.*62.10.part.2. lib.2.c.4. p.45 col.1. ad initium.

*Psal.*69.28. part.1.li.3.c.16.p.323 num.30. & inde.

*Psal.*82.1,6.part.2.li.2.c.2.p.438 col.1. ad finem, & inde.

*Psal.*91.11,12. part.3. lib.2.c.28. p.969.col.1.num.10. & inde.

The Booke of Prouerbs.

*Pron.*1.32.part.2.lib.1.c.5.p.370 col.1.num.40.

*Pron.*1.30.part.2.li.2.c.33.p.664 col.1.num.20. & inde.

*Pron.*15.6.part.2.lib.2.c.25.p.586 col.2.num.50.

*Pron.*28.14. part.1.c.13.p.128. col.2.num.60. & inde.

The Booke of Ecclesiastes.

*Eccles.*2.24.& *Eccle.*3.12,13.part 2.l.2.c.20.p.554. c.2.ad initiū.

*Eccles.*3.19.part.1.lib.2.c.5.p.97 col.1.num.10.

*Eccles.*5.1.part.1.lib.2.c.28.p.181 col.1.§ 2.

*Eccles.*7.3.part.2.lib.2.c.2.p.435 col.1.num.40.

*Eccles.*9.1. part.1. lib.2.c.5.p.96 § 10.& 11.

*Eccles.*11.3.part.1.lib.2.c.31.p. 191.col.2.num.50.

The Prophecie of Isaiah.

Isaiah 1.21.part.1.lib.3.cap.16.p. 225.col.1.num.50.

*Isa.*28.19.part.3.lib.2.c.20.p.921 col.1.num.40.

*Isa.*30.21.p.4. lib.2.c.4. p.1091. col.1. ad finem.

*Isa.*40.2. part.3. lib.2.c.9. p.854 col.1. ad finem, & inde.

*Isa.*54.13.part.1.lib.2.c.16.p.145 col.1. ad initium.

*Isa.*64.12.part.3.lib.2.c.10.p.863 col.2.num.10.

*Isa.*66.3. part.2. lib.1.c.7. p.380 col.1.num.40.

The Prophecie of Ieremiah.

*Ier.*10.24.part.3.lib.2.c.11.p.867 col.2.num.30.

*Ier.*17.1. part.3. lib.2.c.9. p.855 col.2.num.50.

*Ier.*17.7.part.3.lib.2.c.35.p.1007 col.1.num.50. & inde.

*Ier.*30.11.part.3.lib.2. cap.11. p. 867.col.2.num.30.

*Ier.*31.34.part.1.lib.2.c.16.p.145 col.1. ad initium.

The Lamentations of Ieremiah.

*Lament.*2.18,19. part.3. lib.2.c. 5.p.820.col.2 ad finem, & inde

The Prophecie of Ezechiel.

*Ezech.*17.19. part.4. lib.1.c.3.p. 1022.col.1.num.40.

Ezech. 18.26. part.1. lib.3. c.16. p.325.col.2.§ 7.

Ezech. 33.11.part.1. lib. 2. c.32. p.195.col.2.num.50.

*Ezech.*36.26.& c.37.vers.14.part. 4.lib.1.c.3.p.1022.col.1.num.40.

The Prophecie of Daniel.

Daniel 12.3. part 2. lib. 3. cap 7. p. 719. num. 20.

The Prophecie of Hosea.

Hosea 6.6. part. 4. lib. 1. c. 12. pag. 1056. col 1. num. 10.

Hosea 13. 12. part. 3. lib. 2. c. 9. p. 855. num. 50.

The Prophecie of Ioel.

Ioel 2.14. part. 1. lib. 2. c. 13. p. 131 col. 2. § 8.

Ioel 2.28. part. 1. lib. 2. c. 16. p. 145 col. 1. ad initium.

The Prophecie of Amos.

Amos 5.15. part. 1. l. 2. c. 13. p. 131 col. 2. § 8.

The Prophecie of Ionah.

Jonah 3.9. part. 1. lib. 2. c. 13. p. 131 col. 2. § 8.

The Prophecie of Haggai.

Haggai 2.13,14. part. 2. lib. 1. c. 17 p. 421. col. 1. num. 50.

The Booke of Ecclesiasticus.

Eccles 5.5. part. 1. li. 2 c. 13. p. 132 col. 2. § 10.

The Gospell by Saint Matthew.

Math. 3.17. part. 1. lib. 2. c 35. p. 208. col. 1. ad finem.

Math. 5.6. part. 1. lib. 2. c. 33. p. 200 col. 2. num. 40. & p. 245. col. 2. § 3.

Math. 7.14. part. 2. lib. 2. c. 26. p. 604. col. 1. num. 30. & inde.

Math. 7.22,23. part. 1. lib. 3. c. 17. p. 326. § 1.

Math. 9.13. part. 1. li. 2. c. 32. p. 195 col. 2. num. 50. & c. 33. p 197. col. 2 num. 20.

Math. 10.9,10. part. 2. lib. 2. cap. 20 p. 556. col. 2 num. 20. & inde.

Math. 10.16. part. 2. lib. 1. c. 8. p. 385 col. 2. ad initium.

Math. 11.28. part. 1. lib. 2. c. 32. pag. 195. col. 2. num. 50. & c. 33. p. 197. col 2 num. 20.

Math. 11.29,30. part. 3. lib. 2. c. 28 p. 969. col. 2. ad finem & inde, p. 970

Math. 16.23. part. 2. lib. 2. c. 3. pag. 445. col. 1. num. 50.

Math. 13.22. part. 4. lib. 2. c. 5. pag. 1093. col. 2. num. 20.

Math. 19.27. part. 2. c. 9 p. 727. lib. 3. col. 1. ad finem.

Math. 19.21. part. 2. li. 2. c. 3. p. 446 col. 2. § 10.

Math. 19.24. idem ibid. num. 30

Math. 19.27. part. 2. lib. 2. c. 3. pag. 445. col. 2 ad finem, & inde.

Math. 20.9. part. 2. lib. 3. c. 7. pag. 220. col. 2. num. 40. & inde.

Math. 22.30. part. 2. lib. 3. c. 5. pag. 709. col. 2. num. 50.

Math. 24.12. part. 1. lib. 3. c. 17. p. 326. § 2.

Math. 25.29. part. 4. lib. 2. c. 18. p. 1134. col. 1. num. 20. & inde.

Math. 25.21. part. 2. li. 3. c. 7. p. 718 col. 2. ad finem, & inde.

Math. 26.41. part. 4. lib. 1. c. 2. pag. 1017. col. 2. num. 60.

Math. 26.42. part. 4. lib. 2. c. 8. pag. 1101. col. 2. ad initium.

Math. 27.26. part. 1. lib. 2. c. 5. p. 93 col. 1 num. 50.

The Gospell by Saint Marke.

Marke 9.2. part. 2. lib. 2. c. 35. p. 682. col. 1. num. 40.

Marke 15.28. part. 1. lib. 2. c. 52. p. 276. col. 2. num. 30.

The Gospell by Saint Luke.

Luke 2.34. part. 1. lib. 2. c. 16. pag. 142. ad initium.

Luke 6.26. part. 2. lib. 2. c. 10. pag. 481. col. 2. num. 40.

Luke 8.13. part. 1. li. 3. c. 17. p. 340 col. 1. num. 40. & inde.

Luke 12.29. part. 1. lib. 2. c. 9. pag. 107. col. 2. num. 30.

Luke 12.29,30. part. 2. lib. 3. c. 5. p. 708. col. 1. num. 40. & inde.

Luke 16.9. part. 2. lib. 2. c. 3. p. 445 col. 1. num. 50.

Luke 16.25. part. 2. c. 6. p. 377. col. 1. num. 50.

Luke 18.1. part. 1. lib. 1. c. 16. p. 27 § 3.

Luke 18.28. part. 2 lib. 2. c. 3. col. 2 ad finem, & inde.

Luke 22.32 part. 1. lib. 3. c. 20. pag. 340. col. 1. num. 40. & inde.

The Gospell by Saint Iohn.

Iohn 3.3. part. 4. lib. 1. c. 3. p. 1020. col. 2. num. 30.

Iohn 3.6. part. 4. lib. 1. c. 2. p. 1017 col. 2. num. 30.

Iohn 3.32 part. 1. lib. 2. c. 16. p. 145 col. 1. num. 10.

Iohn 3.16. part. 2. lib. 1. c. 1. p. 358 col. 2. num. 10.

Iohn 4.14. part. 1. lib. 3. c. 14. p. 320 col. 2. num. 10.

Iohn 6.27. part. 1. lib. 2. c. 10. p. 115 col. 1. num. 50.

Iohn 6.54. part. 1. lib. 3. c. 14. pag. 320. col. 2. num. 30.

Iohn 10.14. part. 1. lib. 2. c. 11. pag. 118. col. 1. num. 60.

Iohn 11.52. part. 1. lib. 2. c. 16. pag. 142. col. 1. num. 20.

Iohn 12.31. part. 2. lib. 1. c. 2. p. 359 ad finem & p. 360. ad initium.

Iohn 12.32. part. 1. lib. 2. c. 16. pag. 144. col. 2. num. 60.

Iohn 15.2. part. 1. lib. 3. c. 17. p. 327 col. 2. § 5. & p. 328. § 6,7.

Iohn 17.3. part. 3. lib. 2. c. 20. pag. 922. col. 2. num. 50.

Iohn 17.12. part. 1. lib. 3. c. 20. pag. 341. col. 1.

Iohn 16.11. part. 2. lib. 1. c. 2. pag. 359. ad finem & p. 360. ad initium.

Iohn 21.18. part. 3. lib. 2. c. 1. p. 795 col. 2. num. 10. & inde.

The Acts of the Apostles.

Acts 6.3. part. 1. lib. 3. c. 20. pag. 343. col. 2. ad initium.

Acts 8.22. part. 1. lib. 2. c. 13. p. 131 col. 2. ad finem, & inde.

Acts 16.14. part. 1. lib. 2. c. 19. pag. 155. col. 2. num. 20.

Acts 20.28. part. 1. lib. 2. c. 18. pag. 150. col. 2. ad initium.

Acts 22.16. part. 1. lib. 3. c. 1. p. 283 num. 20. col. 1.

The Epiſtle to the Romans.

*Rom.*4.20.part.1. lib.2.c.9.pag. 107.col.2. ad initium.

*Rom.*5.2. idem ibidem, pag.108 col.2.num.10.

*Rom.*5.12. part.2. lib.1.c.1.pag. 358.col.1.num.60.

*Rom.*6.6. part.4.lib.1.c.2.p.1018 col. 2.num.40.

*Rom.*6.12.part.4.lib.2.cap.7.pag. 1038. & inde, col.2. § 5.

*Rom.*7,8,11.23. part.4. lib.1.c.2 p.1019.col.1. ad finem capitis.

*Rom.*7.22. part.4. lib.2.c.3.pag. 1020.col.1.num.40.

*Rom.*7.23. part.4. lib.1.c.3. pag. 1020.col.1.num.50. & inde.

*Rom.*7.24.part.1.li.1.c.2.p.1019 col.1.num.10.

*Rom.*7.18.part.1.lib.2.c.14.pag. 135.col.1.num.50.& part.4.li.1.c.5 p.1030. § 6.

*Rom.*8.1.part.1.lib.2.c.11.p.119 col.1.num.20.25.

*Rom.*8.1,2.part.1.lib.3.c.7.p.296 col.1. num.20. & c.9.p.301. col.2 § 4. & part.4.lib.1.c.3.p.1020.col.1 num.50. & inde.

*Rom.*8.5.part.4.lib.2.c.5.p.1093 col.2. ad initium.

*Rom.*8.8.part.4. lib.1.c.5.p.1028 col.1.num.30.& inde.

*Rom.*8.10. part.4. lib.1.c.2.pag. 1019.col.1. ad initium.

*Rom.*8.38. part.1. lib.2.c.8.pag. 104.col.1.

*Rom.*8.6. part.2. lib.1.c.9.p.394 col.1.num.60.

*Rom.*9.3,20.part.1. lib.3.c.18.p. 328. § 1. & 2. a place excellently opened.

*Rom.*11.29. part.1. lib.3.c.13.p. 318.col.1. § 8.

*Rom.*11.20. part. 1. lib.2.c.13.p. 129.col.1.num. 20.

*Rom.*11.32. part.1. lib.2.c.34.p. 205.col.1.num.40.

*Rom.*14.13.part.1.lib.1.c.18.p.34 col.1.num.40. & inde.

*Rom.*14.15. part.1. lib.2.c.16.p. 145.§ 6.col.1.& lib.3.c.18.pag.329 col.2. § 3.

The firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians.

1 *Cor.*2.12.part.1.lib.2.c.44.p. 247.col.1.num.40.

1 *Cor.*2.14.part.4.li.1.c.2.p.1018 col.2.num.40. & inde.

1 *Cor.*2.16.part.1.lib.2.c.14.pag. 136.col.2.§ 7.

1 *Cor.*4.3,4. part.1.lib 2.c.13.p. 131.col.2. § 7.

1 *Cor.*5.5.part.4.lib.1.c.2.p.1018 col.2.num.10.

1 *Cor.*7.31.part.2. lib.1.c.3.pag. 364. col.2. num.50. & lib.2 cap.35 p.682.col.2. ad finem, & inde.

1 *Cor.*9.17. part.4. lib.1.c.2.pag. 1019.col.1.ad initium.

1 *Cor.*9.27,part,1.lib.3.c.18.pag. 330.col.1. & 2. § 4.

1 *Cor.*10.2,3,4.part, 1.lib,3.c.20 p.341.col.2. ad finem, & inde.

1 *Cor.*10.11, part,1. lib,2.c.13.p. 128,col:2.num.40.

1 *Cor.*10.13. part,3. lib,2.c.33.p. 995.col.2.num.30. & inde.

1 *Cor.*10.31.part,2.lib,2.c.2.pag. 439.col.2.num.50.

1 *Cor.*11.25, part,1. lib.2.c.36.p. 209.col.2. ad initium.

1 *Cor.*8.11.part,1.lib,3.c.18.pag. 229.col.2. § 3.

1 *Cor.*13.3, part,1.lib,2.c.2.p.75 num.10.

1 *Cor.*13.11, part,2.lib,3.c.10.p. 729.col:1.num:40. & inde.

1 *Cor.*15.22. part,1.lib,2.c.16.p. 145,col:1. & inde, § 7.

1 *Cor.*2.14,part,4,lib,2.c.5.pag: 1093,num:10,col:2.

1 *Cor.*3.16, & 1 *Cor.*6.19,p.1021 col:1,num:40.

1 *Cor.*9.27, p.1024, col:1, ad finem & inde, & p.1038, col:2, § 4

The ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians.

2 *Cor:*1.8,part,3. lib:2. cap.11 pag.875. col:2, § 9,& p.876

2 *Cor:*1.12, part,2,li:1.c.9.p.389 col:2,num:30.

2 *Cor:*3.6, part,4, lib:2.c.11.pag. 1113,col:2.num:40.

2 *Cor:*4.4, part:1, lib:1.c.5.p.11 col:1.num:50. & part:2. lib:2.c.34 p.668.col:2.num:20. & inde.

2 *Cor:*5.15,part:2.lib:3.c.8.pag. 724.col:1. ad initium.

2 *Cor:*5.17. part:4.lib:1.c.3.pag. 1020.col:1.num:40, & inde.

2 *Cor:*5.19,part:2.lib:1.c.1.p.358 ad initium.

2 *Cor:*5.21.part:1.lib:2,c.52.pag. 276.col:2.num:30.

2 *Cor:*6.9, part:3.lib:2.c.10.pag. 865.col:1.num:30.& inde.

2 *Cor:*13.5,part:1.lib:2.c.8.p.105 col:1. ad finem.

The Epiſtle to the Galathians.

*Gal:*3.3.part:1, lib:3.c.18. pag. 330, & p.331, §5.

*Gal.*4.6, part:4,lib:1.c.3.p.1021 col:2, ad finem.

*Gal:*5.4,part:1, lib:3,c.18,p.331 § 6, col:2.

*Gal:*6.14. part:2,lib:1.c.1.p.359 col:1.num:20.

*Gal:*6.15,part:4.lib:1.c.3.p.1020 col:1.num:40, & inde.

The Epiſtle to the Epheſians.

*Ephes.*1.2.part.2.lib.1.cap.2.pag 359. col.2.ad finem, & pag.360 ad initium.

*Epheſ.*3.16. part.4. lib.1.ca.3.p. 1030.col.1.num.40.

*Epheſ.*4.22. part.4. lib.1. ca.2.p. 1018.col.2.num.40.

*Epheſ.*4.23. part.4. l.b. 1. ca.5.p. 1028.col.2.num.40.

*Epheſ.*5.5.part.2.lib.2.c.6.p.469 col.2.num.20,

*Epheſ.*5.18. part.4. lib.2. c.24.p. 1162.col.2.num.20.

*Epheſ.*5.26.part.1.lib.2. ca.18.p. 151.col.1.§ 4. & lib.3.c.1. pag.283 col.1.num.20.

*Epheſ.*6.11.part.1.lib.1.c.9.pag. 19.col.2.num.30.

*Epheſ.*6.13.idem, ibidem. num. 60. & inde.

*Epheſ.*6.14.part.1.lib.1.c.9.pag. 20.col.1.ad finem, & col.2. & pag. 21.c.20.col.1.per totum.

Epheſ.

*Ephes.*6.15.part.1.lib.1.c.12.p.23 col.pri.& 2.
*Ephes.*6.16. part.1. lib.1.c.13.p. 23.& 24.
*Ephes.*6.17.part.1.lib.1.cap.14 & 15.p.24,25.per totum.
*Ephes.*6.18. part.1.lib.1.c.16.p. 26,27,28. & inde.
*Ephes.*6. 12. part.2. lib.1. c.2.p. 359.ad finem,& p.360.ad initium.

The Epistle to the Philippians.

*Philip.*2.12. part.1.lib.2.c.13.p. 129.col.1. § 4.
*Philip.*2.21. part.1.lib.2.c.16.p. 145.col.1.ad initium.

The Epistle to the Colossians.

*Colos.*1.24.part.3.lib.2. c.14.p. 890.col.2.num.30.& inde.
*Colos.*3.5. part.1. lib.3.c.3. p.286 col.2.num.10.& part.2.lib.2.c.6.p. 460.col.2.num.20.
*Colos.*3.9. part.4. lib.1.c.2. pag. 1018.col.2.num.40.

The former Epistle to the Thessalonians.

1. *Thes.*4.13. part.3. lib.2. c.1. p.796.col.1.ad initium.
1.*Thes.*5.17. part.1.lib 1.c.16.p. 27.§ 3.
1.*Thess.*5.23. part.1.lib.3.cap.2. col.2.p.284.num.10. & inde.

The former Epistle to Timothy.

1. *Tim.*1.17. part.2.lib.3.c.9 p. 727.col.1.ad finem.
1.*Tim.*2.4. part.1.lib.2.c.32 pag. 196. col 1.ad initium.
1.*Tim.*2.6. part.1. lib.2. c.16. p. 143.col.2.§ 4.
1.*Tim.*29.part.2.lib.2.c.15.p 511 col.1. num.20. & inde.
1.*Tim.*3.7.part 2.lib.2.c.2.p.437 col.1.num.20.& inde.
1.*Tim.*3.15. part.1.lib.1.c.10.p. 21.col.2.num.20.
1.Tim. 4.4. part. 2. lib.2. c.1.p. 434.col.1.num.60.
1.*Tim.*4.8. part.2. lib.2. c.21.p. 565.col.2.num.40.
1.*Tim.*6.6. part.2. lib.2. c.21.p. 565.col.2.num.40.
1.*Tim.*6.9.part.2.lib.2.c.3.p.445 col.1.num.60.
1.*Tim.*6.10.part.2. lib.2.c.30.p. 630.col.1. ad finem.
1.*Tim.*1.19.
1.*Tim.*4.1.
1.*Tim.*6.10.part.1. lib.3.c.18.p. 332.col.1.§ 7.

The Epistle to the Hebrewes.

*Heb.*2.9.part.1. lib.2.c.16.p. 143.§ 4.col.2.
*Heb.*3.13.part.4.lib.2.c.22.p.1153 col.1.num.30.
Heb. 6.4,5,6. part.1. lib. 3. c.10 p.303.§ 2.& c.18.pa.332. col.2.§ 8 & p.333.
*Heb.*10.26,27, 29. part.1.lib.3.c. 18.p.334.col.pri.§ 11,12,13,14.
*Heb.*10.26. part.1. lib.3. c.10. p. 304.col.2.num.40.& inde.
Heb. 10.29. part.1. lib.2. c.16.p. 145.§ 6.col.1.
Heb. 11.1. part.1.lib.2.c.9. p.108 col.1.num.40. & inde.
*Heb.*11.6.part.1 lib.1.c.18.p.34 col.1.num.40. & inde & part.2.lib. 1.c.7.p.381.col.1.num.50.
*Heb.*12.1.part.4.lib.1.c.2.p.1019 col.1.num.30.
*Heb.*6.17,18. part.1. lib.2. c.8.p. 103.col.2.num.30.& inde.

The Epistle of Saint Iames.

*Iam.*1.5.part.3.li.2.c.1.p.801.col. 2.num.10.
*Iam.*1.12. part. 1.lib.1. c.3. p.6. col.2.num.40.
*Iam.*1.13,14. part.4. lib.1.c.2.p. 1019.col.1.num.20.
*Iam.*3.15.part.2.lib.1.c.9.p.388 col.1.num.20.& inde.
*Iam.*4.4. part.2. lib.2.c.6.p.460 col.2.num.20.

The first Epistle of Saint Peter.

1. *Pet.*1.17.part.1.lib.2.cap.13. p.130.col.2.ad initium.
1.*Pet.*1.23. part.4. lib.1.cap.3. p.1020.col.1.num.30.
1.*Pet.*3.3,4.part.2. lib.2.c.15.p. 511.col.1.num.20. & inde.
1.*Pet.*3.4. part.4. lib.1.c.3. num. 1020.col.1.num.40.
1.*Pet.*3.18. part.4. lib.1.cap.2.p. 1017.col.1.num.50.

The second Epistle of S. Peter.

2. Peter 1.9. part.1.lib.2.c.16.p. 145.§ 6. col.1. & part.1. lib. 3.c.19 p.335.§ 1.
2.*Pet.*2.1.part.1.lib.2.c.16.p.145 § 6.col.1.
2.*Pet.*2.20. part.1.lib.3. c.19.p. 335,§ 2.

The first Epistle of Saint Iohn.

1. *Ioh.*2.1.part.1.lib.2 c.36.p.211 col 1.num.20.
1.Iohn 2.2. part.1. lib.2. c.16. p. 143. col.2. § 4. & pag. 144. col. 1. num.60. & inde.
1.Iohn 2.16.part 2. lib.2. c.1. p. 429.col 1.num.40.
1.Iohn 2.2.part.2.lib.1.c.1.p.358 col.2.ad initium.
1.Iohn 3.2.part.2.lib.3.c.10.p.729 col.1.num.20. & inde.
1.Iohn 3.6,8,9.part.1.lib.1. c.11 p.22.col.1.ad finem & col.2.
1.Iohn 3.8.part.1.lib.2.c.16.col.1 ad finem, p.142.
1.*Ioh.*3.8,9. part.4. lib.2.c.23. p. 1156.col.1.num.40.
1.*Ioh.*4.18. part.1. c.13. lib.2. p. 130.col.1.§ 5.
1.*Ioh.*4.19. part.1. lib.2.c.11. p. 118.col.2.num.20.
1.*Ioh.*5.19 part.2.lib.1.c.1.p.358. col.1.num.40.

The Reuelation.

Reuel. 2.4. part.1.lib. 3.c.19.p. 336.§ 3.
*Reuel.*3.5. idem,ibid,col.2.§ 4.
Reuel. 12.4. part.1. lib. pri. c.5. col.2.p.10.num.30.
*Reuel.*12.7.ibid.p.11.col.2.nu.40
*Reuel.*21.10,11. part.2. lib 3.c.8 p.722.col.2.num.30.& inde.
Reuel. 22.11. part.1. lib 3. c.7.p. 295.col.2.num.30.
*Reuel.*2.2, 3. part.1.lib.2 c.46.p. 255.col.2.num.10.

FINIS.

A TABLE OF ALL SVCH PRINCIPALL Points and passages, as are handled or occasioned, in these foure Parts of the Christian Warfare: For the more easie vse whereof, let the Reader vnderstand the shorter Directions set downe after this manner: Part signifieth the Part, L. the Booke; C. the Chapter, P. the Page: Col. the Columne: §. the Section: num. the number, printed in the middle Margent.

A

THe Deuill is mans continuall Accuser, Part.1.Lib.1 Cap.4.Pag.9. Col.2.paulo ante initium.

Aduersitie is a sore tempter, part.1.lib.1. ca.6.pag.15.col.1.§ 3

How to arme our selues against it, idem ibidem § 5.

Aduersitie is nothing so dangerous, as prosperitie, part.2.lib.1.c.5.p.370.col.2.§ 2.

Sathan in his temptations worketh vpon our affections, part.1.l.1 c.17.§ 1.

Afflictions are markes of Gods loue, part.1. lib.2. c.3. p.90.col.1 § 1. Though they be euill in their owne nature, yet they turne to the good of Gods childrē, idem ibid.§ 2

How afflictions are good as trials, how good as chastisements, idem ibidem, & p.91.

Spirituall afflictions are more fearefull than corporall, yet they are no signes of Gods hatred where they are inflicted, § 3. They tend to mortification, p.92.§ 4. Gods deerest children are subiect to afflictions, § 5. Christ did vndergo them, § 6. Of not profiting by afflictions, p.94.§ 7

Afflictions make Gods children bewray their corruptions, p.94.§ 8 And why, p.95.§ 9.

Temptations arising from afflictions, are lesse dangerous than those that arise from prosperitie, part.3. lib.1 c.1.p.752.col.2. & inde § 2.

Diuers descriptions of afflictions being diuersly considered, p.753.§ 3. & inde.

Afflictions are either punishments, or sinnes, p.754.§ 4. & inde. The Lord is the efficient cause of all afflictions, if they be not sinnes, c.2 p.756.§ 1. whereby hee manifesteth his iustice, and declareth his mercy. The instrumentall causes of afflictions are the whole army of all Gods creatures. Of the ends, effects, subiect, and adiuncts of afflictions, p.757.§ 2.

Afflictions are euill in their owne nature, p.758. § 3. They incline to good, thorough Gods power, and wisdome, p.759.§ 4. Out of affliction ariseth a dangerous temptation, c.3.p.759.§ 1. How the Deuill presseth the same, p.760.§ 2. How the world, p.761.§ 3. And how the flesh, p.762.§ 4.

Afflictions may not discourage vs from fighting against our common enemies, c.4.p.762.§ 1. Wee ought to prepare our selues to fight against afflictions, and to that end prouide our selues with all spirituall armour, § 3.

Rules to be obserued by those that prepare to conflict with afflictions. First, study Gods Word, p.773.c.5 § 1. Secondly, be frequent and fernent in prayer, p.774.§ 2. Thirdly, in prosperity moderate and mortifie thine affections, p.775.§ 3. Fourthly, faint not afflictions in thine imagination, p.776.§ 4. Fiftly, by feare do not anticipate thine afflictions, p.777,778 § 5. Yet with Christian prouidence we ought to foresee them before they fall, p.780.§ 7.

They that will be able to grapple with afflictions, may not fixe their hearts on worldly things, nor enioy them as perpetuities, but moueables, p.781.§ 8.

Looke for afflictions if thou wilt be able to vndergoe them, pag.782 num.20. & inde.

In prosperity fore-cast what afflictions may befall thee, § 9.

Wee may neither secretly contemne afflictions, nor faintly yeald vnder them, p.783.§ 10.

Wee ought not wilfully to runne into afflictions, p.784.§ 11.

Wee are to vse all good meanes for auoiding of, or being deliuered from afflictions, pag.789. & inde, § 12.

Three Rules to be vsed by those that desire to vse the meanes that they may be freed from afflictions, idem ibidem, p.790.

Affliction is the obiect of patience, p.793.§ 3.

How to auoid stupiditie in affliction, p.795.§ 6.

Moderate griefe in afflictions was foretold by our Sauiour, and practised by the Saints, p.796.§ 7.

In all afflictions flie to God by prayer, part.1. lib.2. p.809.&c. § 3,4,5,6. For affliction is the most seasonable time for prayer, idem ibidem.

Gods

Gods Saints in their afflictions, haue alwayes prayed, pag. 811, 812 § 7, 8.

How Prayers against afflictions ought to be qualified, c. 5. p. 817. & inde.

After what manner it is lawfull to pray for deliverance from afflictions, p. 818. § 2.

God is the principall cause of all our afflictions, as hee doth preordaine vs to suffer them, c. 6. p. 824 § 1. As he executeth his Decree, p. 825. § 2. As he is good, p. 826 num. 30. col. 1. The consideration whereof is very comfortable in trouble, p. 827. § 3.

No affliction happeneth to man without Gods speciall appointment, c. 7. p. 829. § 1.

In all afflictions God ruleth the afflicters, whether creatures reasonable, or vnreasonable: Good and euill Angels, p. 831. § 3. Intentions of wicked and vngodly men, p. 832 § 4.

Why God afflicteth his people rather by wicked instruments, than with his owne hand, p. 833. § 5. & 6

How it stands with Gods iustice to punish the wicked, that are afflicters of his people, p. 834. § 7.

We are not vtterly to neglect inferiour causes of our afflictions, § 8

The inferiour causes of our afflictions, haue all their ends so ordered, as may best make for Gods glory, and most for the saluation of his Elect, p. 835. § 9.

Gods prouidence disposeth of all our afflictions, for their manner, measure, and continuance, p. 836 § 10.

Sin is the deseruing cause of all afflictions, c. 8. p. 837. § 1.

If God doe not alwayes afflict for sin, yet the best vse wee can make of afflictions, is to ascribe them to our sinnes, p. 838. § 2.

All our afflictions must bring vs to a sight of sin, and repentance for it in particular, p. 839. § 3.

If wee impute our afflictions to our sinnes we will not murmure against them, p. 840. § 4.

Those confuted that say they suffer afflictions vndeserued, pag. 841 § 3.

The smalnesse of our afflictions compared with the greatnesse of our sinnes, may be a great comfort in trouble, p. 846. § 12. So to consider that others lesse offending than we, are more punished than we, pag. 847 § 13.

They are madde, that think themselues more punished, than others that haue more offended, pag 848 § 14.

Wee ought to be assured that all our afflictions doe spring out of the Fountaine of Gods loue, c. 9. p. 849 § 1.

It is a worldly practise, and a very dangerous temptation to iudge of Gods loue or hatred to men, by their outward estate, pag 850. § 2, 3

Afflictions are no signes of Gods hatred, p. 851. § 4.

The afflictions of the faithfull are no punishments properly, but paternall chastisements: and why, p. 852, 853, 854, 855. & inde, § 6, 7, 8 9, 10, 11.

Their obiection answered, that affirme, Dauids afflictions were punishments of his sinnes, p. 856. § 12

The death of the faithfull no punishment of their sinnes, pag. 857 858. § 13, 14.

Of the differences betweene the afflictions of the faithfull, and the punishments of the wicked, p. 858 859. § 15.

There could be no comfort in afflictions, if they were punishments, p. 860. § 15.

God in afflicting his children, loueth them like a good Father to profit them, not like a fond Mother to please them, c 10. p. 861. § 1.

The Lord sheweth his fatherly loue in afflicting his children, p. 862 § 2.

God in his loue appointeth his a certaine measure of affliction which cannot be exceeded, p. 863. § 3.

The afflictions of Gods children are small and light, pag. 864, 865 § 4.

They are momentany and short, § 5.

Those that say they are long, answered, p. 866. § 6.

Our afflictions exceed not our strength, p. 867, 868. § 1. c. 11.

Christ tempereth that cup, that it exceed not our strength, p. 869. § 2

The Holy Ghost assisteth the godly in all their afflictions, p. 870. § 3

He giueth strength to beare them p. 871. § 4.

Hee mingleth comforts and benefits with our afflictions, p. 872. § 2

Those answered, that affirme, their afflictions exceed their ioyes, p. 873. § 6.

The afflicted may comfort themselues by the consideration of those commodities they yet enioy, p. 874 § 7.

In affliction God giueth spirituall comforts, p. 875. § 8.

Paul not afflicted aboue his strength, p. 876. § 9.

The complaints of the faithfull, doe not argue their afflictions insupportable, § 10.

They that fall away in affliction doe not thereby proue afflictions to be insupportable, pag. 877. § 11. All which yeeldeth much comfort, § 12

Our state of corruption necessarily requireth affliction, c. 12. p. 878 § 1.

God taketh no delight in our smart, but vseth all meanes to preuent our punishment, p. 879. § 2

The measure of our afflictions goeth not beyond our necessitie, pag. 880. § 3.

By the greatnesse of our afflictions we should learne to guesse at the grieuousnesse of our sinnes, p. 881 § 4.

Great afflictions vsually doe argue grieuous sinnes, § 5.

God is glorified in his afflicted children, they fight therein as Souldiers, they are corrected thereby as children, c 13. p. 882. § 1.

God manifesteth his goodnes and power, in supporting his children, when they are afflicted, pag. 883. § 2

Afflictions are trials of our spirituall graces, p. 884. § 3.

It is a great comfort to consider that God is glorified, when wee are af-afflicted, pag. 885. § 4.

Our Neighbours receiue benefit by the afflictions of the faithfull: Learning to feare God in his iudgments, p.886. § 1. c.14.
They restraine from like sinnes which they see punished in the faithfull, § 2.
As they manifest Gods graces in his people, making them examples of pietie vnto others, p.887. § 3
As they are patternes of humane frailtie, p.888. § 4.
They are brought to see Gods perfections in the imperfections of his people, p.889. § 5.
By afflictions Gods people are made compassionate, more ready and able to comfort others, § 6.
The good of our brethren that comes to them by our afflictions, should much comfort vs in induring of them, p.890. § 7.
The nature of afflictions which is euill, is changed to the faithfull, p.891. c.15. § 1.
Afflictions cannot hurt the faithfull, § 2.
They deprive not of blessings which are of the greatest worth, but rather increase them, p.892 § 3.
They bring not vpon vs the chiefest euils that are to be feared and auoided, but rather the contrarie good, § 4.
It is a great euill to be wholy exempted from afflictions, p.893 col.1. § 5.
God in afflicting his aymeth at their good, c.16 p.893. § 1.
Sometimes they are trials of his graces, p.894. § 2.
God afflicting his trieth them not that he may know them better, but that they may be the better known vnto themselues and others, p.895. § 3,4.
By afflictions the Lord trieth whether wee be true Christians or no, p.896. § 5.
By afflictions hee trieth to what measure of grace we haue attained, p.897. § 6.
Hee thereby trieth the measure of our loue, patience, humility and obedience, p.898. § 7.
Hee principally afflicteth vs for his own glorie, & for the aduancement of our esteeme, pag. 899. § 8
By afflictions he discouereth our corruptions and infirmities, for our humiliation, p.900. § 9.
We ought to reioice in our afflictions, for in them God is glorified, and we assured of our adoption, vbi supra, c.17. p.900. § 1.
How wee may know whether afflictions be trials of grace, or chastisements for sins, p.901. § 2.
When afflictions haue a good issue and tend to our profit, then wee may be comforted in them, § 3.
Those answered, that obiect the greatnesse of their afflictions, and the smalnesse of their strength, § 4
Greatest afflictions should bring greatest comforts: because they are greatest signes of Gods grace bestowed vpon vs, p 903. § 5.
God much honoureth his children in their fiery afflictions, p.904 § 6.
Our afflictions further our conuersion, c.18. § 1, 2. p.905.
They prepare to heare the Word, p.906. § 3.
They worke in vs contrition and humiliation, p.907. § 4.
Afflictions are the last meanes that God ordinarily vseth to conuert obstinate sinners, pag.907. § 5
The afflictions that further conuersion bring much comfort, p.908 § 6.
One maine end of afflictions is, to keepe those that are afflicted from falling into those sins, whereunto they are naturally inclined, c.19. p.908,909. § 1.
Which may moone vs to beare them patiently, p.910. § 2
Afflictions moone effectually to forsake sin, p.911. § 4.
Afflictions cause vs to vse all good meanes for the mortifying of our sins, p.912. § 5.
God by afflictions mortifieth pride, carnall concupiscence, and selfe-loue, § 6.
If wee were not weaned from it, by afflictions wee should immoderately loue the world, pag.913. § 7
It is a great mercy thereby to be weaned from it, pag. 914. & inde, § 8,9,10.
God vseth afflictions to mortifie our sins, p.616,917, § 11.
Our grieuous afflictions argue our great sins, p.918, § 12.
If wee can indure, to be eased of temporall afflictions; much more ought we to beare, to be freed from those that are eternall, p.919, § 13
Afflictions exercise, and thereby preserue Gods sauing graces in vs, c.20, § 1, pag. vbi supra.
Afflictions do not onely preserue and confirme, but also increase Gods sauing graces in vs, pag.920, § 2.
God by afflictions increaseth in vs sauing knowledge, and spirituall wisdome, p. 921, § 3.
The hurt of our afflictions is exceeded by the spirituall wisdome that we gaine thereby, pag.922, § 4
Afflictions are notable meanes, to put vs in remembrance of God, p.923, § 5.
Afflictions strengthen our faith, by making vs more carefull in the vse of good meanes, and by exercising it with these trials, c.21. p.924 § 1.
Hereby wee gaine experience of the truth of Gods threatnings, and promises, p.925, § 2.
Afflictions cause vs to renew our repentance, and assure that sins repented, shall not come into condemnation, § 3.
Afflictions strengthen our faith as they are signes of our Election, § 4. And of our effectuall calling, p.926. § 5. And of our Adoption, p. 927. § 6.
By afflictions our affiance in God is confirmed and increased, c.22. p. 428, § 1.
So is our hope, p.929, § 2. And our loue towards him, § 3. Our feare of him, pag. 930, § 4. col:2 And our humilitie, pag. 931, 932 § 5.
By afflictions wee come to examine our wayes, see our sins, and to bewaile them with bitter griefe, c. 23. p.932, 933, § 1.

Wee are by afflictions mooued to hate sinne, to confesse and forsake it, to serue the Lord in holines and righteousnes, § 2.

By afflictions God worketh in vs obedience to his will, pag. 934, 935 § 3, & 4. All which considerations may moove vs to beare them with patience, § 5.

By afflictions Gods people are made more deuout and zealous in the duties of his seruice, p. 936, § 6 They are made able to performe the duty of prayer, p. 937, § 7.

For in affliction we can stirre vp our selues to call vpon God with many waighty Reasons, p. 938, § 8

We are made more frequent and feruent in prayer, p. 939 § 9.

By afflictions we are made more sincere in confession of sin, and more earnest in our petitions, pag. 940 § 10.

By them we are moued to heartie thanksgiving, § 11, col: 2. Which may serue vs to comfort in our afflictions, p. 941, § 12.

God by afflictions worketh and increaseth patience in vs, pag. 942 § 13.

By afflictions we are moued to do iustice to all men, c. 24 p. 942, 943 § 1.

By afflictions wee are made more mercifull to those that are in misery, § 2.

Afflictions make vs more meeke, humble and courteous towards others our Neighbours, § 3, col: 2.

By afflictions wee attaine the knowledge of our selues, pag. 944 945, § 4.

The exercise of afflictions increaseth our strength to bear them, p. 946, § 5.

Afflictions increase our courage, p. 947, § 6.

By afflictions men may profit much in ciuill wisdome and policy, c. 25, p. 948, § 1.

By afflictions wee may learne to distinguish betweene our Friends and Flatterers, p. 949, § 2.

When afflictions discouer our spirituall graces, they crowne vs with a good Name, § 3, col: 2.

By afflictions we come to haue a relish of Gods blessings, pag. 950 § 4.

Afflictions preserue vs from condemnation, cap. 26, p. 951, col: 2, § 1.

God by afflictions furthereth our euerlasting glory and saluation, p. 952, col: 2, § 2.

Afflictions fit and prepare vs for the Kingdome of heauen, p. 953, § 3

By afflictions wee are assured of euerlasting happines. First, through Gods gracious promises made to those that are afflicted, p. 954, § 4 Secondly, by Gods workes, pag. 655 § 5. Thirdly, they keepe vs in the way of righteousnes, that leadeth to euerlasting happines, p. 656, § 6

Afflictions are the way whereby we must enter into Gods Kingdom, p. 957, § 7.

They further vs in attaining vnto happinesse, p. 958, § 8.

By our afflictions our heauenly glory shall be much increased, § 9

How we may come to rejoyce in afflictions, p. 959. 960, § 10.

God altereth their nature, and maketh them by his power to become profitable, c. 27, p. 961, § 1.

Afflictions make the wicked worse and worse, p. 962, 963, § 2, 3, 4.

The afflictions of wicked men now, doe not free them from punishmenents hereafter, but increase them rather, § 5.

Afflictions out of their right vse bring no present benefit to the faithfull, p. 964. § 6.

God hath appointed his to suffer afflictions, in this world, that in the other they may inherit happinesse, c. 28. p. 965, § 1.

This world is the place of affliction, p. 966, § 2, 3.

Our afflictions are profitable, short and light, 968, § 3.

God appoints his Angels to assist his when they are afflicted, § 6.

In all our afflictions, Christ is our co-partner and assistant, p. 969 § 7.

Our Father Adam indured great afflictions, c. 29. p. 970. So did other Saints, p. 971, § 1.

Of the afflictions of Abraham, p. 972. § 2.

Of Isaacs, and Iacobs, p. 973, § 3, 4

Of the afflictions of Moses, Job, and Dauid, p. 974, § 5, 6.

Of the Apostles afflictions, especially those of S. Paul, pag. 975. § 7.

It is the lot of the whole Church Militant to suffer afflictions, pag. 976, § 8.

The Scriptures foretell the afflictions of the faithfull, p. 976, § 9

It is a comfort to communicate with the Saints in affliction, p. 977 § 10.

They that complaine they are afflicted for their sins, may be comforted, p. 978, § 11.

Of the manifold afflictions Christ suffered for vs, both in his life, and death, c. 30. p. 978, 979, § 1.

He suffered all afflictions being innocent and iust, p. 980. § 2.

Hee was afflicted for vs that are sinners, § 3.

They that cannot suffer afflictions with Christ are not worthy to raigne with him, p. 981, § 4.

God hath pre-ordained those to be like Christ in suffering afflictions with him, that shall be like him in glory, p. 981, § 5.

Many are content to raigne with Christ in glory, few to suffer with him in affliction, p. 983, § 6.

Of the manifold afflictions, worldlings suffer for the attaining of earthly vanities, c. 31. pag. 984 985, § 1, 2.

Of the afflictions they vndergoe to attaine earthly trifles, pag. 985, 986, § 3.

Our light afflictions compared with the hellish torments of the damned, are very comfortable, p. 987, § 4.

Compare earthly afflictions with heauenly ioyes, and they will be comfortable, col. 2. § 5.

Wee ought to neglect no lawfull meanes, for attaining comfort in, or freedome from afflictions, cap. 32 p. 988, § 1.

Wee ought to make our afflictions knowne to faithfull and able friends, § 2. & p. 984, § 3.

We

We muſt mingle lawfull recreations with our heauy afflictions, p. 990. § 4. col. 2.

God deliuereth his from their afflictions in fit time, c. 33. § 1.

God taketh notice of all our afflictions, to free vs from them, pag. 991. § 2.

God is preſent with the faithfull in their afflictions, to helpe and relieue vs in them, p. 992. § 3. Which conſiderations are exceeding comfortable, p. 993. § 4. col. 2.

His power is al-ſufficient, col. 2 § 5.

His loue ſheweth hee is willing and ready to helpe vs, p. 994. § 6.

He eſpecially ſheweth his loue to the faithfull, in the time of their afflictions, § 7. col. 2.

Gods promiſes to helpe in afflictions, yeeld much comfort, pag. 996. § 8.

Therefore he is called the God of comfort, p. 996. § 9.

Examples of ſome in affliction, that haue beene deliuered, § 10.

The deliuerance of others may worke great comfort, to the hearts of thoſe that are afflicted, pag. 997 § 11.

Our owne deliuerances may be a comfort in preſent afflictions, col. 2. § 12.

How the promiſes of God concerning deliuerance out of troubles, are to be conceiued, c. 34. pag. 998. § 1.

After deliuerance out of afflictions, giue God his glory, p. 1007 1008. § 7.

For patience in afflictions, and meanes how to attaine vnto it. See Patience.

Affinitie with the wicked is dangerous, part. 2. lib. 1. c. 17. p. 422 col. 2. § 13.

All not to be ſaued, part. 1. lib. 2 cap. 7. p. 99. § 1.

How the word All is vſed in holy Scripture, lib. 2. c. 16. p. 144. col. 2. § 5.

An incouragement and exhortation to Almes. A direction how to doe that duty, part. 2. lib. 3. c. 25. p. 591, 592. § 14, 15.

How the Deuill tempteth an ambitious perſon, part. 1. lib. 1. cap. 1 § 1.

How the Deuill transformeth himſelfe into an Angell of Light, part. 1. lib. 1. c. 21. p. 44. § 6.

God is not angry with the faithfull, when hee ſeemeth to frowne vpon them, part. 1. lib. 2. c. 18. pag. 152. col. 1. § 6.

How God may be ſaid to be angry with his people, and what we ſhould doe, when the effects of his anger are vpon vs, c. 34. p. 203, 204

How God is ſaid to be angry with his children, lib. 3. c. 13. p. 318 col. 1. ad initium.

In what ſenſe God is ſaid to be angry with his children, and to puniſh them, p. 852. § 5.

Sathan preſſeth with aſſaults where allurements will not preuaile, part. 1. lib. 1. c. 5. p. 8, 9. num. 60. & inde.

Coſtly apparell is lawfull for thoſe that are in high place, part. 2 lib. 2. c. 15. p. 510. col. 2. § 1.

Thoſe of ranke and qualitie may not weare apparell that is ſordid and baſe, p. 511. col. 1. § 2.

Of the great abuſe of apparell through exceſſiue brauery, col. 2 § 3.

Apparell extreamely abuſed in reſpect of coſtlineſſe, pag. 512. col. 1. § 4.

Of the abuſe of apparell in reſpect of faſhions, col. 2. § 5.

Of the abuſe of apparell in regard of the ends of it. Thoſe are honeſty, and profit, pag. 513. col. 1 § 6.

How coſtly apparell may be abuſed in the vſe of it, col. 2. § 7.

Reaſons to diſſuade from all abuſe in apparell: Firſt, God forbiddeth it, p. 514. col. 1. § 8.

Secondly, the originall inſtitution of apparell ſhould make vs beware of pride in it, § 9. col. 2.

Thirdly, exceſſiue brauery in apparell, doth not become Chriſtians, p. 515. col. § 10.

Fourthly, brauery therein hath no worth or excellency, col. 2. § 11 They that weare it, haue no preheminence aboue thoſe that are of baſe condition, pag. 516. col. 1. § 12.

Fiftly, it doth not better the wearers of it, col. 2. § 13.

It makes them not the more commendable, § 14.

It neither graceth the beautifull, nor the deformed: the vertuous, nor the vicious, p. 517. § 15.

Coſtly apparell makes not thoſe that weare it to be more reſpected, p. 518. § 16.

The euils which accompany exceſſiue brauery in apparell, are diuers. Firſt, it is a ſin againſt God, col. 2. § 17.

Secondly, it argueth the neglect of the ſoule, p. 519. § 18.

Thirdly, they giue offence vnto their brethren, col. 2 § 9.

Diuers elegant reſemblances of thoſe that are proud in their apparell, p. 517. col. 2. num. 4. & p. 519 col. 1. ad initium, & inde.

The weakneſſe of their excuſe that plead internall humility, notwithſtanding their outward brauery. p. 520. col. 1. § 20.

It is ill for a woman to pleaſe her husband by brauery in apparell, § 21.

Exceſſe in apparell is the cauſe of many ſins, in reſpect of thoſe that weare it. It cauſeth many euils, both to priuate perſons, and to Common-wealths, pag. 521, 522. § 22, 23.

Coſtly and vaine apparell is the fruit of ſelfe-loue, col. 2. § 24.

Of the puniſhments that God inflicteth vpon pride in apparell, p. 523. col. 1. § 25.

The ſpirituall ornaments of the ſoule, to be preferred before any coſtly apparell of the body, col. 2 § 26.

By temptations God directeth his to betake themſelues to their ſpirituall armour, part. 1. lib. 1. cap. 2 p. 4. col. 2. num. 50.

The neceſſitie of this Chriſtian armour. The armour of a Chriſtian muſt be ſpirituall, lib. 1. c. 9. p. 19 § 1, 2, 3.

The defensiue armour of a Christian is set downe in all the parts of it, ibid, c.10,11,12,13,14.

The offensiue, lib.1.c.15,16.

Arts Mechanicall and Liberall are in themselues good, and the gifts of God, part.2.lib.1.c.11.pag. 398.col.2. § 1.

How they are abused, p.399.col. 1. § 2.

In which abuses, they are to be contemned, idem ibidem, § 3.

Assaults of spirituall enemies are not to be auoided, by those that begin to be faithfull, part.1.lib.1.c. 1.p.1. & 2.

All are assaulted, some are foiled, idem, ibidem, pag.2.col.2 ad finem.

The Councell of Trent holds assurance to be hereticall, part.1.lib. 2.c.8.p.102. § 2.

Wee may be assured of our particular election, p.103.col.1.num. 30.& inde.

The indefinitenes of Gods promises hinders not the assurance of his seruants, p.104.col.2. § 5.

They may bee assured they are faithfull, to whom the promises of the Gospell are made, ibidem, § 6.

A weake Christian is not assured at all times, and why, pag.106 § 7.

By what Arguments good Christians may be assured of their Election, c.9.p.106.& inde.

Wee must be assured of our Redemption, p.107. § 2.

Our assurance is not to be mixed with doubting, § 3.

To further a Christians assurance, the Sacraments be great helps, pag.110. So is prayer, pag. 111. § 8. And the profession of our faith, § 9.

There is assurance arising from the testimony of Gods Spirit, cap. 10. p.114. & inde.

Of those meanes whereby assurance of Election may bee gained, part.1.lib.2.cap.11.p.118.& inde.

Testimonies against assurance answered, cap.13.p.127. § 1.

It is no Arrogancie for a Christian to be assured of his saluation, c.14.p.133. & inde.

Saint Augustines three things whereby he gained assurance, p.134 col.1.num.40.

Arguments against particular assurance answered, cap.14.per totum caput 11.

God particularly assureth our Election, § 8.p.137.

It dependeth not vpon the assurance of our faith and repentance, col.2. § 9.

The faithfull may be assured that Gods Spirit dwelleth in them, and how, part.4.lib.2.c.11.p.1112 § 1 & inde.

The Deuill is very audacious against Mankind, part.1. lib.1.c.5 p.11.col.2.

The Consideration whereof should make vs the more valiant and courageous, idem, ibidem, lege totum caput.

How worldly Authoritie may bee iudged either good, or bad, part. 2. lib. 2. cap. 11. pag. 484. § 1.

There is no great excellencie in earthly Authoritie, pag. 485 § 2.

It profits not to attaine grace, col.2.§ 3.

Hee that hath most Authoritie in ruling others, hath many times least power to rule himselfe, pag.486.col.1. § 4.

Worldly Authoritie freeth not from the greatest euils, col. 2 § 5.

It is vsually accompanied with Pride and Tyranny, pag. 487. § 6.

With Iniustice and oppression, p.488. § 7.

It exposeth men to enuy, and many dangers, p.489. § 8.

Abused Authoritie subiecteth men to Gods vengeance, § 9.

Spirituall Authoritie to bee preferred before worldly, col.2. § 10.

B

THere is no armour set out for the safegard of a Christians backe. And why, part.1. lib.1. cap.16. pag. 30. § 12. col. 1.& inde.

Many are baptized, that neuer shall bee saued, part. 1. lib. 3. cap.21. pag.344. col.1.num.40.

What benefit wee haue by Baptisme, part.1. lib.2. cap.36.col.1 num. 30. & inde.

Euery one shall be a Conquerour that will combat in the Lords battailes, part.1. lib.1.c.3.p.7.col.2. ad finem capitis.

Christians must persuere in fighting the battailes of the Lord, cap.22.lib.1.part.1.pag.44 § 6.

How they that liue after the flesh, are bound to beleeue, part. 1.lib.2. cap.9. pag.111. col. 2. & inde.

They that truly beleeue need not doubt, because Hereticks and Carnalists boast of Faith, part. 1. lib.2.cap.14. pag.138. col.2. § 11.

Beauty is good as being the gift of God, part.2.lib.1.cap.13.p.403 § 1.

The things that are required to make it good, p.404.col.2.

Beautie of the body without that of the mind, is of no worth, § 3.

Beautie ill becommeth, when we are proud of, and set our hearts vpon it, p.405. § 4.

Beauty is a gift common with Mankind, to the brute creatures, col.2.§ 5.

The vanitie of beauty prooued, both by testimonies, and reasons, p. 406. § 6.7.8.9.

Where is shewed, that God esteemes it not. It is good rather to those that see, than those that haue it. It is momentany and mutable.

Wee must neglect the beauty of the body, and labour after that of the mind, pag.408,§ 10.

Beauty too much affected, maketh keth the body tender, soft, and sickly; it hindereth vertue, and furthereth vice, § 11,12.

Beautie and Chastitie seldome meete together, pag. 408. col.2, § 13.

It maketh proud, and neglectfull of all holy duties, pag. 409 § 14.

It deceiueth, and allureth to sin, col.2.§ 15.

One in Saint Augustine censured for deforming himselfe, p.410. col.1.num.20.

Beautie is oftentimes hurtfull to the friends of those that enioy it, § 16.

Wee ought to fixe our loue vpon diuine beauty, § 17.

The beauty of the soule, is much more excellent, than that of the body, p.411.§ 18.

The beginnings of sinne are carefully to be resisted, part.4. lib.2.ca. 22.1152. & inde, § 2,3,4,5.

Bellarmines Workes not vsually read among the Papists without licence, part.4.lib.1.cap.6.p.1036 col.2.ad initium.

Of the blind woman mentioned in Seneca, dull for want of sight, and not of light, part.1. lib.2.c.23 p.170.col.1.num.20.

Of blasphemous suggestions which seeme to haue some ground, whence they rise, part.1.lib.3.c.11.p.308. col.1.§ 2.

How they may be resisted, § 3.

Of blasphemous thoughts void of reason, and of the Deuils scope in suggesting them, p.309. § 4,5.

What comforts there are, to strengthen vs against these wicked blasphemies, p.310.311. §.6,7,8,9 10.

In those Sections it is prooued, that they are not our owne sinnes, that they are common to afflicted Christians, that it is not a sinne to be tempted with them, so be it we resist them. How to know when we resist them. That they are not sins but crosses to the faithfull.

Though our corrupt flesh be tainted with blasphemous thoughts yet we haue no cause to despaire, pag.312. § 11.

The meanes whereby men may be freed from hellish blasphemies; First, Prayer; Secondly, an appeale to God; Thirdly, make small account of them. Fourthly, trouble not the mind too much with them; Fiftly, auoide idlenesse, and solitarinesse. Sixtly, strive not too earnestly against them, pa. 212, 213. § 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18.

The body of man compared to Earth, to Tabernacles, and Glasses, part. 2.lib.2.c.29. p.620.col.1 num.10. & inde.

The body is but the seruant of the Soule in committing sinne, part.4.lib.1. cap.6. pag.1034. § 6.

Of the Booke of Life, what it is to be written in it, and what to be blotted out of it, part.1.lib.3.c. 16. p.323. § 1,2,3,4.

What is meant by the brest-plate of righteousnesse, part.1.lib.1.c.11 p.22.col.1. § 1.

The necessitie of the brest-plate of righteousnesse is great, the lack of it is very lamentable, idem ibidem. § 2.

C

Every good person hath a Calling both particular and generall, wherein he ought to be and abide, part.1. lib.1. cap.9. pag.10. col.2.

Our Calling is not grounded vpon our worthinesse, part.1.lib.2. c.4.p.87. § 4.

No mans particular should withdraw him from the duties of his generall calling, part.4.lib.1.c.15.p. 1067. § 5.

Certaintie may stand with weakenesse of faith, part.1. lib.2.c.14.p. 134.col.1.& inde. § 3.

It is no certaintie, that is neuer shaken, idem ibidem, col.2. ad initium.

A ciuill life is no sure signe of being in the estate of grace, part. 4. lib.1. cap.12. pag.1054. col.1. § 5.

The flesh will perswade men to rest in externall Ceremonies, pag. 1055. § 7.

Christ is an excellent Shield against all temptations, part.1.lib.1. c.22.p.54.55. § 15.16.

Christs Death and Merits belong to euery Beleeuer, lib.2.cap.18 pag.150.col.2. § 3.

Christ is giuen to Beleeuers, and they to him, and how, cap.19.pag. 156.col.2. § 4.

Let those that desire to be reconciled to God, come onely to Christ, c.33.p.201. § 8.

What it is to come to Christ, § 9.

The publique Church to be frequented of all, except Kings. Why they are exempted, part.2.lib.2.cap. 31.p.645. ad initium. & inde.

The Deuill takes aduantage of mens complexions, part.1.lib.1.cap. 17.pag.31. § 6.

Sathans combats with vs are most cruell and cowardly, c.21.pag. 42.col.1. § 1.

All spirituall comforts come vnto vs in Christ, part.1. lib.2. cap.4 pag.89.col.2. § 10.

Comminations are profitable for Gods children, lib.2.c.13.p.128.col. 1.§ 2.

The World allureth men to sin, by wicked company, part.2.lib.1.c. 17.p.418.§ 1.

All company with wicked men is not vnlawfull, § 2.

In what cases wicked company may be indured, § 3. & 4.

When it ought not to be admitted, p.419. § 5.

Wicked company is forbidden, § 6.col.2.

Gods Saints haue euer shunned it, p.420. § 7.

Wicked company a notable inducement to draw one to commit sin, p.421. § 8,9.

It is hard to keepe company with the wicked, and not to be accessary to their wickednesse, pag.421 § 10.

Wicked company brandeth their names with infamy that keepe it, § 11.

It maketh men lyable to Gods iudgements, p.422. § 12.

The Common-wealth of Israel was beyond all others, exceeding ancient, part.2.lib.2.cap.12.p.495 § 11. col.1.num.10.

Why the Lord is called the God of comfort, part.3. lib.cap.33.pag. 995.996. § 6.

How it is to be conceiued, when wee say the Church cannot erre, pag. 1094. c.5. col.2. num. 20.& inde.

Which should moue vs to conforme our iudgement to the Analogie of Faith, idem ibidem.

Our communion with Christ, assures the forgiuenesse of our sins, part.1.lib.2. cap.37.pag.217.col.2. § 10.

Of that communion which the holy shall haue with God in Heauen. See in this Table, the ioyes of Heauen.

The comfort that commeth by spirituall conflict, to the righteous, part.1.lib.1.cap.1.p.3.col.2.

The profit that comes by spirituall conflicts, c.3.p.5.col.2.

The conditions of Gods couenant with man, are sometimes vnderstood, sometimes expressed, but neuer excluded, cap.16.p.144. col.1.num.20.

Christian conference is a great helpe to hearing, cap. 28.pag.184 col.1.num.10.

There is a great conflict in euery regenerate person, part.4. lib.2.c. 1. per totum. p.1079.

There was no such conflict while man was innocent. What that conflict is, cap.2,3.

How afterwards this conflict began, § 1 2.p.1085.

There is no conflict betweene the flesh and the Spirit in the estate of corruption, p.1086. § 3.

Gods infinite loue in sending his Sonne to redeeme vs, made way for this conflict, p.1087.§ 5.

Sanctification begun, and not perfect, is the formall cause of this conflict. First, because of the contrariety betweene grace and corruption. Secondly, because these enemies dwell together, § 6,7.

When, and how we are called of God to the spirituall conflict, c.4. p.1089. § 1,2.

The manner of this conflict, it is not corporall, but spirituall, pag. 1090. § 3,4.

The effects of the conflict between the flesh and the Spirit, c.7.p.1099. § 1. & inde.

There can be no conflict in them that are perfectly sanctified, cap.8. p.1101. § 1.

This conflict is not in the vnregenerate, p.1102. § 2.

The conflict that is in the Regenerate and vnregenerate differeth much.

First, in the causes whence it ariseth, § 3.

Secondly, in the mouing causes of it, § 4.

Thirdly, that of the vnregenerate is betweene diuers faculties, that of the Regenerate in the very same, 1104,1105. § 5,6.

Fourthly, they differ in their contrary effects, col.2. § 7. & pag. 1106.

Fifthly, they differ in their subiect matter, or occasion. Sixtly in respect of time, pag.1107. § 8,9.

No comfort ariseth out of the conflict of conscience, c.9.p.1108 § 1.

This conflict may be in the Regenerate, § 2.

It is not in them that are extreamely ignorant, col.2. § 3.

It is seldome in simple people, p.1109. § 4.

Nor in subtle persons, proud Iusticiaries, or ciuill Worldlings, § 5.

This conflict is seldome in those that are transported with violent passions, p 1110. § 6.

The spirituall conflict is in all the Regenerate that are come to yeares of discretion, cap.10. § 1. & inde.

How wee may know whether this conflict be in vs, or no, cap. 11. pag 1112. § 1. & inde.

What the euent of the spirituall conflict in the faithfull is, cap.18. pag.1132.

Of the foiles the Spirit receiueth in it, § 1.

Whence arise earnest desires to be freed from the slauerie of sinne, col. 2. § 2.

And an indeauour in the vse of all good meanes to bee preserued from such foule inconueniencies in the time to come, p.1133.col.1.§ 3

In this conflict the spirit shall haue assured victory ouer the flesh, p.1138,1139. § 12,13.

The reasons that may incourage a Christian to this conflict. First, it is the will of God we should vndertake it, c.19.pag.1140.§ 1. Secondly it is necessary. Thirdly, the flesh against which wee are to conflict doth vs much iniury, pag.1141 § 2,3. Lastly wee shall attaine assured victorie, pag.1142. § 4.

And then, the longer we deferre the fight, the more difficult and doubtfull we make the victorie, p. 1153. § 3. c.22. See more of this conflict in the word flesh, in this Alphabeticall direction.

The aduantage of a good conscience, part.3. l.1.c.4.p.771,772 § 13.

The conscience compared to the Eye, part.1.lib.2.c.40.p.229.col.2 num.10.

What kind of contentions there are betweene the Iesuites, and the Priests, p.1086.col.1. num.50.& inde.

How contraries may dwell together in one man, p.1088.col.2 § 8.

Contentment is to be sought, not in the world, but in Gods spirituall graces, part.2. lib.2.c.19.p. 542. § 1.

Contentment is not to be had in earthly riches, p.532.col.2.§ 11

Spirituall contentment much exceedeth all content that can be taken in worldly things, pag.543 col.1. § 2.

Contentment is a medicinall cure for all maladies, col.2.§ 3.

Contentment is not to be sought in outward things, but is to be got into the heart and mind, p.544 § 4.

The way to seeke contentment, is not to multiply worldly vanities, but to moderate our desires and affections, p.544, & 545. § 5.

The way to gaine contentment in riches, is to abandon couetousnesse, § 6.

Contentment in pleasures is to be gained, not by giuing way to our desires, but by restraining our appetites, p.546.col.1. § 7.

The first and chiefe means to contentment is, wholy to resigne our selues vnto the will of God, p.547 & vbi supra. col.2. § 8.

Christians may safely rest with content vpon Gods promises, § 9 col.2.p 547.

A godly life is the ready way to contentment, p.550.col.1. § 12.

To thinke of Gods benefits as well as of our wants will breed and bring contentment, § 13.col.2.

Full contentment is onely in heauenly happinesse, p. 551.§ 14 col.1.

The estate of a man before his conuersion is exceeding dangerous, part.1. lib.2.c.31 p.191.col.2.§ 2

Many are the aduantages that will acompany speedy conuersion, p. 192. § 3.

Gods couenant assureth of the remission of our sinnes, part.1.lib.2 c.36.p.209.col.1. § 3.

How the Deuill vseth to tempt the couetous, part.1.lib.1. c.17.p. 31: § 4.

Remedies against the sinne of couetousnesse, p.32.col.2.num.50.& inde.

Why the Grecians call couetousnesse, πλεονεξία. How it comes to passe that rich men are still couetous, part.2.lib.2.c.17.p 531.col.1 num.30. & inde.

The couetous compared to Cormorants and Dogs, idem, ibidem. And to a Riuer, col.2.num.30.

The couetous the more they abound, the more still they want, § 9. col.2.

Couetous people are like Ants, they gather, but vse not their gold, p.533.col.1.num.40.

None can wish an heauier curse to a couetous man, than to pray that he may liue long, c.25 p.581 col.2.num.10.

Couetousnesse is a blinding sin, cap.34. pag.670,671. num. 40. & inde.

None are crowned but such as contend, part.1.lib.1.c.3.p.6.col. 2.num.30. & inde.

Custome is no good plea for continuance in sin, part.4.lib.1.c.13 p.1065,1066. § 3.

Cowardise ill becomes a Christian, part.1.lib.1.c.9. pag.20.col.1 num.30. & inde.

D

WHether Dauid lost any degree of his fundamentall graces, when hee committed Adultery and Murther, part.4.li.2 c.18.p.1136,1137. § 9.

The Saints of God in old time, would by no meanes be guilty of their owne death, part.1.lib.2.c.2 p.74. § 5.

Obiections to the contrary, answered, § 6.

Though the Saints die, yet they are redeemed from death, part.1.li. 2.c.18.p.153.col.2. § 8.

The houre of death a most vnfit time for repentance, cap.30.p.190 col.1. & inde. § 9.

The death of the faithfull is no punishment for their sins, part.3 lib.2 c.9.p.857,858. § 13,14.

Why God delayeth sometimes to grant the prayers of his people, part.1.lib.1.c.16.p.29.col.1.num 50.& inde.

How wee ought to behaue our selues, when our Prayers are delayed, § 10.

The longer we delay our turning to God, the more wee are disabled to make that returne, part.1.lib.2 c.30.p.189.col.1. § 6.

By delayes the meanes of grace grow ineffectuall, idem, ibidem, col.2. § 7.

Our sins are called debts, part.1 lib.2.c.35.p.207.col.2. § 2.

The Deuill draweth men to commit sin by degrees, part.1.lib.1 c.19.p.36. § 1.

How our desires to grace may be made acceptable instead of grace it selfe, part.1.lib.1.c.23.p.57,58 § 3.

How acceptable to God good desires are, part.1. lib.2.c.44.p.246 col.1.num.30. & inde.

We are not to despaire when we doubt of Gods loue, part.1. lib.2 c.5.p.95. ad finem & inde, § 10.

How Sathan vseth to vrge those that are called, to despaire, c.34.p. 202. & inde per totum caput.

How those his temptations may be resisted, idem ibidem.

An earnest desire to the meanes of saluation, is a pregnant signe of that parties election, part.1.lib.2 c.12.p.122.col.1. § 1.

Diuers names giuen to the Deuill, and the seuerall reasons of his being so called, part.1.lib.1.c.4.p.8 col.1. ad finem & inde.

Hee is called a great red Dragon. The disposition of that creature to mankind, idem ibidem, col 2.num.30.

Why the Deuill is called Satan and Sathan, cap.8.pag.17.col.2. num.30.

How men may defeat the Deuils policies, c.8.p.18.col.1. § 2.

Why the Deuill is called the wicked one, c.13.p.24.col.2.§ 4.

The Deuill is a great deceiuer of men, part.2.lib.2.cap.26.pag.596 § 2.

Yet wicked people trust him and the world, more than they doe God himselfe, p.597. § 3.

How wee are deliuered from sin by Christ, part.1.lib.2.c.18.p.150 col.1. ad finem, & inde.

The subtilty of the Popish Doctors in drawing men to doubt of their spirituall estates, part.1. lib.2.c.8 p.102. § 1.col.1.

The Papists make doubting a vertue, and yet it is a fruit of vnbeliefe, c.9.p.107. § 2.

In the matter of the saluation of Gods children. the Scripture indureth not doubting, c.13. § 128 & inde § 3,4,5,6,7,8,9,10.

Doubting proceedeth from pride cap.14.pag.133.col.2.ad finem & inde.

The meanes whereby men may be preserued from doubting and dispaire. Remember the promises are indefinite, the command is that we should beleeue, the mercies of God God are infinite, the merits of Christ inualuable, doubt and dispaire are horrible sinnes, the afflicted conscience easily inclineth that way, to mankind these two inconueniencies are most pernicious, part.1.lib.2.cap.47.pag.260,261,262. § 3,4,5,6,7.

Sathan will vrge people to doe religious duties, because he calleth vnto them, part.1. lib.1.c.20.pag.39.§ 2.

Neglect of duty doth not alwayes argue incredulity, part.1 lib.2.c.25.p.173. col.2.num.30. & inde.

They that dislike their own dulnesse to good duties, are accepted with God, lib.3 part.1.p.299.col.2.§ 2.

Difficulties in discharging diuine duties, should not discourage deuout people, in, or from them, part.4. lib.1. cap.16.p.1069,1070 § 2.

The doing of holy duties, ought not to be deferred, p.1071. § 3.

The more excellent duties ought not to be deferred, or neglected, for the doing of those that are inferiour. Good duties are not to be done vnseasonably. Neglect not present good duties, vpon pretence of doing some greater good afterwards, p.1072.§ 5,6,7.

Good duties done by vs are much hindered by the interposition of the flesh, for it poysoneth them, c.17.§ 1,2. And perswadeth to intermit them, or to rest in those that are already discharged, pag. 1074.§ 3,4.

In what sense Christ might be truly said to haue died for all, part.1.lib.2.c.16.p.144. col.1.num.40 & inde.

How Christ died for those that are damned, p.145. §6.&7.

To die is no disaduantage to Gods inheritance, to whom death is as the Brazen, part.1.lib.2.c.18 p.154.col.1.num.30.

E

IF you desire to read concerning earthly things. See the word, worldly, in this Table.

Gods Election is not grounded vpon mans workes or worthinesse, part.1.lib.2.c.4.p.86. § 2.

Of the author and chiefe efficient of our Election, c.6.p.97. § 1.

What Election is, idem, ibidem.

There is no cause of Election, but Gods good will, and free grace, § 2.

Foresight of our good workes, or any worthinesse in vs, respect of our faith, all excluded. The merit of Christ herein not to be admitted, p.98.ad initium.

The materiall cause of Election, is the purpose and counsell of God.

The formall is, a setting apart of such as are to be saued. The finall, Gods glory, and the saluation of the Elect, § 3.

What the effects of Election are, idem, ibidem.

Of the subiect, obiect, and properties of Election, § 4.

Sathan would make Wordlings beleeue, that there is no Election at all, cap.7.p.99. § 1,2.

Of the two ends of Election, § 3 & inde.

How the Deuill tempteth weake Christians to doubt of their Election, c.8.p.101. § 1. & inde.

We may be assured of our particular Election, pag. 103,104. & inde.

Our Election is manifested by the Gospell, c.9.p.106. col.2.num.40 & inde.

The meanes to assure our Election, c.11.p.118.col.1. & inde.

Of the seuerall signes of Election, c.12.p.122.col.1. & inde.

The certainty of Election, neither breedeth security, nor presumption, cap.14.p.138. & inde, § 12.

Why the Holy Ghost is called the earnest of our inheritance. Diuers significations of the word arrhabo, cap.10.p.115.col.1,2.num.60.

The Deuill tempteth men to propound bad ends to good actions, part.1.lib.1.c.20.p.39.col.2.§ 3.

Generall meanes whereby wee may withstand our spirituall enemies. First, Gods command, Secondly, hope of victory, Thirdly, alwayes to be in readinesse, Fourthly, to be doing good when we are tempted to euill, Fiftly, to withstand temptations when they are suggested, Sixtly, to prepare for another temptation, when one is past, part.1.lib.1.c.22. p.47. & inde, § 2,3,4,5.

Not to beleeue Sathans suggestions, neither to despise, nor too deeply apprehend them. To examine temptations before wee beleeue them, not ouer-much to trouble our selues, with conceits about the issue of them. To labour for humilitie, to mortifie pride, to obiect Christ against all temptations, idem, ibidem, p.50. & inde, § 7,8,9,10,11,12,13,14,15, & inde.

The Epicure prescribeth homely cates, to such as would be of his Sect: because dainties are so hard to be procured, and so soone lothed, part.2.lib.1.c.25.p.583.col.2.

It is not lawfull to doe euill, for the auoiding of euill, part.1.lib.2.c.2.p.73.col.1.num.40.

How Sathan suteth his temptations to mens estates, whether corporall, or spirituall, part.1.lib.1.c.18.

How to resist him in both these, § 1,2,3,4.

They that would heare Gods Word as behoueth, must examine their sins, and wants, part.1.lib.2 c.28.p.181.col.2.§ 5.

Euill examples of Superiours are most pernicious, part.2.lib.1.c.18.p.423.§ 3.

Wicked examples allure and perswade ſwade vnto ſinne, p.422.col.2 § 1.

Euill examples nouriſh pride, & hinder repentance, § 4.
Euill examples vexe and grieue the ſeruants of God, p.424.§ 5.
They that will not follow euill examples are hated of the wicked, § 6.
Example is a poore incouragement to draw on to ſin, part.4.lib. 1.c.14.p.1064. col.2. § 8.
Sathan is an Executioner of all Gods iudgements vpon men, part.1 lib.1.c.4.p.10.col.1. ad initium.
We muſt not liue by example, but by precept, part.1.lib.1.cap.21.p.45 col.2. ad initium.
Holy exerciſes are excellent meanes to auoid Sathans temptations, part.1.lib.1.p.55. § 17.
Our vnfitneſſe to holy exerciſes, muſt not diſcourage vs from the conſtant vſe of them, part.1.lib.3. c.11.p.213.col.1. § 15.
Exerciſe of piety is a good meanes to increaſe in godlineſſe, part.4.lib.2.cap.25.pag.1166.col. 2. § 6.
Sathan endeauoureth to draw people from one extreame vnto another, lib.1. part.1.cap.19.pag 37 § 3.

F

THe teſtimony of Gods Spirit will prooue whether wee haue faith, or no, part.1.lib.2.cap.44.p. 247. col.1. § 10.
The ſhield of faith is neceſſary, part.1. lib.1.cap.13. pag.23. ad finem.
The markes and ſignes of true faith, cap.22. pag.51. col.1. num. 30.
Though faith in nature goe before repentance, yet the fruit and act of it, commeth after, c.23.p.56 num.40.
True faith purifieth the heart, and is alwayes operatiue, lib.2.c.3 p.83.col.2.num.50.
The nature and the worke of faith, c.4.p.89.col.1.num.10,20.
Many contented with carnall ſecurity inſtead of faith, cap.8.p. 105. § 6.
Faith certainly aſſureth, and euidently perſwadeth, idem, ibidem, § 6. num.40.& inde.
Faith a certaine particular perſwaſion, not a doubtfull opinion, or a generall notion, c.9.p.108. § 4,5
It perſwadeth the faithfull of their election, p.109. § 6.
Weakneſſe of faith and certainty may well ſtand together, c.14.p. 134.col.1. § 3.
A weake faith doth aſſure election, aſwell as a ſtrong, col.2. § 4.
How faith that is aſſaulted with doubting may be certaine, pag.135 § 5.
Faith aſſaulted with doubting retaineth his owne nature and properties, § 6.
We may know whether wee haue faith by examining the degrees of it. And they are, illumination, a perſwaſion that our ſins are pardonable, and hungring and thirſting after grace, an approaching to the throne of grace, lib.2.part.1.c.44 p.245,246.col.2.num.20.& inde. And an eſpeciall application of the promiſes, 6.7,8,9.
The fight betweene the fleſh and the ſpirit will prooue whether wee haue faith, or no, idem, ibidem, § 11,12.
Our ſanctification and fruites from thence will prooue whether wee haue faith, § 13,14.& inde.p.248
Wee muſt beleeue before wee can diſcerne the fruits of faith, p.249. col.1.& inde. § 15.
The habit and the acts of faith are to be diſtinguiſhed. The firſt alwayes continueth in the children of God, not the ſecond, c.45.p.250, 251. col.1.num.50.& inde.
They may not conclude they haue no faith, that cannot at all times ſenſibly diſcerne it, pag.251 col.2. § 3.
Hee that euer felt faith in himſelfe, when it failes muſt comfort himſelfe, in his former feeling, cap.46.pag.252.col.1. num.10.& inde.
Such as cannot feele their faith, muſt labour to diſcerne it in the fruits of it, pag.253.col.2. § 2.
Faith, and all other the graces of God haue a proportion betweene them, § 3.
They that apprehend Gods wrath, may yet haue true faith, pag.256. §4.
All that are indued with true faith vſe the meanes whereby it may be increaſed, cap.47. p.258.col.2 § 1.
The meanes of faith are, diligent hearing Gods Word, meditation in it, holy conference, vſe of the Sacraments, feruent prayer, pag.259 col.1. § 2.& inde.
There is no faith ſo perfect, but it is aſſaulted with doubting, cap. 48.p.263.col.1. § 1.
There are diuers degrees of Faith in Gods Children idem. ibedem.
A weake faith may bee true, col.2. § 2.
All the power of Hell cannot preuaile againſt the leaſt meaſure of true faith, pag. 264. col. 1. §. 3.
We muſt not content our ſelues, with a ſmall meaſure of faith, idem ibidem num.50.& inde.
The leaſt faith is acceptable to God, col.2.§.4.
Faith doth not iuſtifie as a faculty, but as an inſtrument, col.2.& inde § 5.
Faith and doubting may bee in the ſame ſubiect, in regard of diuers parts, cap.49. pag. 265. col. 2. num. 20.& inde.
The faith of the fathers was as fraile as our is, pag. 266.col. 1. ad initium.& inde.
The Scriptures ſet forth vnto vs diuers degrees of faith in the ſame beleeuer, col.2.num. 50. & inde. And why.
Sathan cannot preuaile againſt the weakeſt faith that is true, p.267 col. 1.& inde. §. 3.
God both can and will vphold the weakeſt true faith, p.267,268 col.2.§ 4,5.

Why faith is said to bee our righteousnesse, cap. 50. p. 270. col. 1 num. 20.

Faith alone iustifieth, cap. 52. p. 275. § 1, 2, 3.

There are diuers kinds of faith, lib. 3. cap. 17. pag. 327. num. 10. & inde.

The word faith is diuersly taken in Scripture, c. 18. p. 332. col. 1 num. 40.

Of iustifying faith, read part. 3. lib. 1. c. 4. p. 764. § 5.

Faith must be shewed by repentance, lib. 2. cap. 4. pag. 814, 815. § 3.

Faith is strengthened by afflictions, c. 21. p. 924, 925. § 1, 2, 3, 4. & inde.

How we may discerne true iustifying faith from that which is temporary part. 4. lib. 1. c. 13. pag. 1057 § 3.

How iustifying faith and presumption differ from one another, lib. 2. c. 12. p. 1117. § 2.

How iustifying faith differeth from that which is temporary, c. 13 p. 1118.

First, in preparation, Secondly, in parts, § 1, 2.

Thirdly, in their properties, p. p. 1119. § 3.

Fourthly, in their concomitants, § 4.

Fiftly, in their effects, which are, First, purification of the heart, p. 1120. § 5. Secondly, they differ in their operations, Thirdly, in their ioy and peace, § 6, 7. Fourthly, in their confession, p. 1121. § 8. Fiftly, in their contentment, § 9 Sixtly, they ouercome the world, § 10. Lastly, reioyce to heare of Christs comming, § 11.

Faith is the cause and foundation of repentance, cap. 15. p. 1124 col. 2. § 3.

Familiarity with Princes is like the playing with a Lion, part. 2. lib. 2. c. 10. p. 1184. col. 1. num. 30.

The fauour of Princes mutable and vnprofitable, idem ibidem, p. 483. § 12, 13.

Fauourites compared to Counters in casting vp of reckonings, Princes fauours like a tender eye, p. 484. 3bi supra.

If feare follow our fallings, it argueth diffidence in God, and self-confidence, part. 1. lib. 1. c. 23. p. 63 col. 2. § 12.

Why the Lord suffereth the faithfull to be afflicted with feares lib. 2. part. 1. cap. 1. p. 65, 66. § 1. & inde.

There are confused feares which haue no ground but melancholy, idem ibidem, § 2.

How a Christian may be eased of them, § 3. First, by considering his sinne the cause of all calamities. Secondly, by labouring for faith and repentance, p. 68. § 4. Thirdly, this repentance must chiefly be for our most hainous sins, § 5.

Of those feares that haue ground, as Sathans malice, or violence, p. 69, 70. § 6.

Those feares are friuolous that arise vpon being alone, or in the darke, idem ibidem.

Of the seruile and filiall feare of God, part. 1. lib. 2. cap. 13. pag. 130 § 5.

Christ his true members can neuer fall away totally, or finally, part. 4. lib. 2. c. 18. § 13.

Wee are rather to beleeue Gods Word than our owne feeling, part. 1 lib. 2. cap. 46. p. 257. § 10.

Conclusions grounded vpon feeling are often false, § 11.

Gods deerest children doe not alwayes feele the graces of the Spirit in them, § 12.

The Spirit of God is compared to fire for fiue Reasons, part. 4. lib. 2. cap. 16. pag. 1128. 1129. § 3.

When Sathan flattereth, then is he most to be feared, part. 1. lib. 1 c. 21. p. 44. § 7.

What is to bee vnderstood by flesh, part. 1. lib. 1. cap. 7. col. 1. num. 40. p. 16.

It is a great enemy to mans felicity, idem, ibidem.

The sundry names giuen to the flesh in Scripture, col. 2.

The dangerousnesse of the flesh, § 3.

How men may weaken the flesh, § 4.

Our owne flesh and fleshly lusts, are most dangerous enemies, part. 4 lib. 1. c. 1. p. 1016. § 3, 4.

There is in euery good Christian a fight betweene the flesh and the Spirit, c. 2. § 1.

The diuers significations of the word flesh, as it is taken for things materially subsisting, pag. 1017. § 2.

Diuers significations of the word flesh, as it is taken for accidents and quailities, col. 2. § 3.

The word flesh is taken for the corruption of nature, pag. 1018. § 4.

It is taken for the vnregenerate part in a Christian, or the reliques of corruption remayning after sanctification, col. 2. § 5.

The combate betweene the flesh and the Spirit, is not performed by bare qualities, p. 1020. § 3. & pag. 1021. § 4.

The principall Doctours among the Papists by flesh vnderstand the body of man, c. 4. p. 1023. § 1, 2.

Those that are purest of them, take it for the bodie, and sensitiue faculties onely, pag. 1024. & inde § 3, 4.

The contrary to this assertion is proued by Scripture, c. 5. p. 1027, 1028. § 1, 2. And then by reasons, p. 1029. § 3. First, from the names giuen vnto it. Secondly, from the actions of it. Thirdly, from the sinnes ascribed vnto it, vbi supra. Fourthly, original corruption hath ouerspread the whole man, col. 2. § 4. Fiftly, the body and spirit are louing friends, p. 1030. § 5. Sixtly, there is no good in the flesh, § 6. Seuenthly, the body is not absolutely euil. Eightly, the faithfull are tempted to much sinne, properly belonging to the vnderstanding, and the will, p. 1031. § 8.

Testimonies of the Fathers proouing that the body is not our sinfull flesh, c. 6. § 1. & pag. 1032.

That the body is not our sinfull flesh is prooued by the testimonies of our aduersaries, p. 1035. § 8, 9.

Ob-

Obiections made against this truth answered, c.7.p.1036.

Wherein is first shewed, why our spirituall enemy is vsually called flesh, § 1. & pag.1037. § 2,3. & p. 1038.

Why the enemy of our soules is called flesh, § 4,5.p.1039. § 6,7.

Through the flesh alone wee are exposed to all danger, c.8.p.1040. § 1. col.1.

In the flesh dwelleth nothing that is good, col.2. § 2.

The flesh called caro a carendo, quia caret omni bono, col.2.num. 40.

All manner of euill is in the flesh, p.1041. § 3.

The flesh is the authour of all wickednesse, col.2. § 4.

The flesh is more malicious to vs, then either the Deuil or the World, p.1042. § 5.

For it is the authour of all sin, § 6.

The cause of depraving our nature, and defacing Gods Image in vs, col.2. § 7.

The flesh bringeth vs into a base condition, p.1043. § 8.

Whilst we liue in the flesh we cannot please God, col.2. § 9.

It setteth men at enmitie against God, § 10.

The flesh is the cause of all our punishments, p.1044. § 11.

Its malice is more dangerous being masked vnder the colour of friendship, § 12.

How to defeate the malicious treasons of the flesh, p.1045.col. 2. § 13.

The flesh is to the vnregenerate a mightie King, to those that are renued a miserable Tyrant, p.1046 § 1.

Of the strength of the flesh considered in it selfe, § 2. & pag. 1047.

Of the strength of the flesh compared with the spirit, § 3.

The lusts of the flesh are many, § 4.

Which should moue vs to shake off security, § 5.

And make vs the more courageous, § 6.

The policie of the flesh is in its nature exceeding pernicious, c. 10 p.1048. § 1.

Of the strength of the flesh considered in it selfe, § 2.

The policie of the flesh should moue vs to be the more vigilant, p.1049.col.2. § 3.

Concerning our persons the first deceit of the flesh, is to make vs beleeue we are not so euill as indeed we be, c.11.p.1050. § 1.

How to defeate this policie, § 2

Then secondly, it perswades, that the good things in vs, are much better than they are, pag. 1051. § 3.

How to disappoint this euill, p.1052. § 4.

The policies of the flesh respecting our estate are, first, to perswade those that are afflicted, they be hated of God, c.12. § 1.

Secondly, that we are in a happy condition, when wee be in truth most miserable, § 2.

And this is indeauoured vpon two false grounds, First, that outward priuiledges are sure testimonies of Gods loue. Secondly, that worldly prosperitie is so to, p.1053 § 3,4.

Ciuilitie or outward profession is not sufficient to saluation, pag 1054. § 5,6.

The deceits of the flesh in perswading men to rest in externall ceremonies. How to defeat this policie, p.1055. § 7,8.

The flesh deceiueth temporarie Professors most subtilly, c.13.pag. 1056. § 1.

The deceit of the flesh in mouing men to leaue off doing good duties that they may auoid Hypocrisie, p. 1058. § 6.

The policies of the flesh in perswading men to sinne are, first, that sinne is no sinne, c.14.p.1059. § 1.

Secondly, that the sinne to be committed is small, p.1060. § 2.

Thirdly, that the committing of the lesser will preserue from falling into the greater sinnes, pag.1061 § 3.

Fourthly, That wee are in no danger of falling into some sinnes, pag.1062. § 4.

Fiftly, that wee may safely vse the means and occasions of sin, § 5

Sixtly, to draw vs by degrees to commit dangerous sins, pag.1063 § 6.

Seuenthly, to draw vs from things indifferent to commit sin, § 7.

Eightly, to perswade vs to sinne, from the example of the Saints, p. 1064. § 8.

The policies that the flesh vseth to hinder our repentance. First, it reports common sins to be no sins; and mortall sins to be but veniall, c.15.p.1065. § 1.

Secondly, it teacheth to extenuate and couer our sinnes with vaine excuses. As first; corruption of nature. Secondly, to pretend custome, § 3. col.2. Thirdly, to vrge poverty, pag.1066. § 4.

Fourthly, a necessity of liuing in sinne, by reason of our calling, § 5.

Fifthly, because the times are corrupt, p.1066.1067. § 6.

Sixtly, because God is mercifull p.1068. § 7.

Seuenthly, to deferre our repentance, § 8.

The policies the flesh vseth to hinder vs from performing holy duties. First, it blindes our mindes that wee be not able to discerne betweene good and euill, c.16.p.1069 § 1.

Secondly, tels vs, Christian duties are difficult to doe, § 2.

Thirdly, desireth to deferre the doing of good duties, § 3. & pag. 1071.

Fourthly, to rest in faire promises, and faint performances, § 4.

Fiftly, to withdraw vs from more excellent discharges, by occasion of doing some lesser good, p. 1072. § 5.

Sixtly, to doe good duties vnseasonably, § 6.

Seuenthly, to neglect some present good duty, vpon pretence of doing some greater matter afterwards, § 7.

How the flesh interposeth in doing good duties, and corrupteth our hearts in the discharge of them c.17.p.1073. § 1, 2.

Perswadeth to intermit them, or rest in those, that are dispatched already, p.1074. § 2,4.

Our enemy the flesh hath great aduantages ouer vs, because it dwelleth in vs, c.18.pag.1075. col.2. § 1.

Cohabitation of it makes it exceeding dangerous, pag.1076. § 2. col.2.

How to preuent these dangers, p.1077. § 3.

The flesh is indefatigable, col.2. § 4.

How to frustrate these dispositions, p.1078. § 5.

There is a conflict betweene the flesh and the spirit in euery regenerate man, lib.2.c.1.p.1079.& inde § 1,2.

What this conflict is, c.2 p.1081 § 1.

The cause of it, p.1082 § 2.

What the spirit and flesh is, that is in vs, c.3.1087.col.2.num.20.& inde.

What the ends of the flesh are in lusting against the spirit, c.4.pag. 1091. § 5,6.

What the spirit aymeth at in lusting against the flesh, § 7.

The conflict betweene the flesh & the spirit in the mind, c.5.p.1092 § 1.

Of that in the vnderstanding, col.2. § 2.

The conflict betweene spirituall and carnall wisdome, p.1093. § 3.

The conflict betweene the iudgement of the flesh and the spirit, col. 2. § 4.

How the faculties of the minde preuaile one against another, pag. 1094. § 5.

The conflict between our thoughts and imaginations, p.1095. § 8.

The conflict betweene spirituall and carnall memory, § 9.

The conflict betweene the flesh and the spirit in the conscience, § 10.

Of the conflict betweene the carnall and renewed will, c.6.p.1096 § 1.

The conflict betweene faith, infidelitie, and presumption, p.1097 § 2.

The conflict betweene the flesh and the spirit, is most turbulent in the affections and sensuall appetite, p.1098. § 3.

Of the conflict betweene the affections and passions, § 4. & pag. 1099.

See more of this conflict, in the head conflict.

Though the flesh cannot hinder the spirit in good actions, yet it sorely interrupteth it, c.7.p.1100 § 4.

How farre the flesh may preuaile against the spirit. First, common graces may be lost for a time, ca.18 p.1133. § 4. col.2.

Secondly, Semblances of sauing graces in temporary beleeuers may perish vtterly, p.1134. § 5.

Thirdly, True sauing grace in the Regenerate may be seemingly lost, pag.1135. § 6.

Other graces springing from those that are fundamentall may for a time be lost, § 7.

Saving and fundamentall graces may be lost in some degrees, at least in their operations, pag.1136, 1137. § 8,9,10,11.

Meanes whereby wee may be enabled to ouercome the flesh, cap.20 p.1142.

First, Put on the whole armour of God, § 1.

Secondly, obserue certaine rules to weaken it. First, doe not nourish it, § 2.

Secondly, withdraw from it that prouision whereby it is strengthened, pag.1144. § 4. pag.1145. § 5. Which is to stop all the passages wherby it commeth. To take heed of some speciall sins whereby the flesh is strengthened. To moderate our selues in the vse of things lawfull and indifferent, p.1146.§ 6.

Wee must take heed of hurting our bodies, when wee goe about to tame the flesh, § 7.

Wee must take from the flesh the weapons and armour wherely it most preuaileth, p.1145. § 1.

Meanes whereby the flesh may be subdued and ouercome, c.21.pag. 1145. § 1.

Wee must keepe a narrow watch ouer our selues, and ouer our enemies at all times, p.1148,1149.§ 2.4.5.

Wee must keepe it in all things, pag.1150. § 6. And keepe it in our spirituall armour.

Those that would subdue the flesh, must withstand it in all the occasions of it, and the meanes of sinfull lusts, c.23.p.1151. § 1.

They must resist the flesh in the beginnings of sinne, p.1152. § 2,3 4,5.& inde.

Other meanes to be obserued for the subduing of sin, or of the flesh, c.23.p.1155. per totum caput.

Comforts for those that are foiled in fight against Satan, part.1.l. 1.c.23.p.61.num.40.

Why God suffereth his children to be foiled, p.61.col.2.

Christ forgiues sinnes authoritatiuely, his Apostles and their successors ministerially, part.1. lib.2. cap.9.p.109.col.2.num.30.

To forgiue those that offend vs, is a signe of true loue, c.12.pag.125 col.2.num.40.& inde.

How a man may be assured of the forgiuenesse of his sins, c.34.p.203 col.2. num.20.& inde, & cap.35, 36,37,38.

Fooles are called Naturals, because the wisest naturall man is a very foole, part.2.lib.1.ca.9.p.392 col.2.num.20.

True friendship is much to be esteemed, part.2.lib.1.cap.19.p.425 col.2.§ 1.

In what respects friendship with the wicked is to be auoided, p.526 § 2.

We cannot hold friendship with worldlings, and be at peace with God, p.426.§ 3.

Their friendship is false and counterfeit, col.2.§ 4.

Wordly friends forsake when wee haue most need of their helpe, p.427 § 5.

In

In time of aduerſitiy worldly friends doe often become our enemies, col.2.§ 6.

Worldly friendſhip is pernicious to the ſoule, § 7.

Thoſe confuted that hold there comes no harme by friendſhip with the wicked, p.428. § 8.

A friend is hardly diſcouered in the time of proſperitie, lib.2.c.34.pag. 674.col.1.num.20. & inde.

Reade of frugalitie, what it is, and that it is required, lib.2.c.4.p. 453.col.1.num.4.

Chriſts true members can neuer be ſo foiled, as to fall away finally and totally, p1139. § 13.

G

THe Holy Ghoſt may be gained of the Saints, and how, part.1 lib.2.cap.11.pag.119. col.1.ad finem.

The Holy Ghoſt aſſureth the forgiueneſſe of our ſins, c.37.pag.218 col.2.§ 11.

What the ſinne againſt the Holy Ghoſt is, lib.3.cap.12.p.314.col.2 num.20.

How to diſtinguiſh this, from other ſins, § 2.

More concerning the Holy Ghoſt. See this head, the Spirit of God.

Giuing to thoſe that want, is a ſigne of true loue, part.1.lib.2.cap. 12.p.125.num.20.& inde, col.2.

What is meant by the Girdle of Veritie, part.1.lib.1.c.10.p.21.col. 1.§ 1.

The Grecians call Gluttony, the Throat, or Belly frenzie, part.2.lib. 2.c.21.p.563.col.1.num.50.

Many more haue died of ſurfet, than by the Sword, col.2.num.10.

It is worſe to die with gluttony, than of hunger, num.30.

A Glutton is like the Sea-aſſe, that hath his heart in his belly, not in his breaſt, part.2. lib. 2.c.30.p. 634. col.2. ad initium.

Gods glory is manifeſted in the temptations of the godly, and their good is effected by them, part.1.lib. 1.c.2.p.4.col.1.num.40.& inde.

The temptations of the godly increaſeth in them ſpirituall grace, pag.5.col.1. § 6.

The wofull eſtate of them that haue onely a ſhew of Godlineſſe, lib 2.c.11.p.121.col.2. § 13.

Godlineſſe is the ready way to content, part.2.lib.2.c.19.col.1.& 2.§ 12.p.550.

The glory of God ought to be the end of all good actions, part.2.lib. 1.c.7.p.382. § 10.

What the Goſpell of peace is, what it is to be prepared with it, part.1.lib.1.cap.12.pag.23.col.1, & 2.

The differences betweene the Goſpell and the Law, part.1.lib.2. c.9.p.106.col.2.num.30.

The Goſpell manifeſteth to Gods children their Election, idem, ibidem,col.2,num.40,50.

A deſire of Gods graces, is accepted for the graces that wee deſire, part.2.lib.1.cap.23.pag.57.col.1. num.20.& inde.

It is no fit time to iudge of our ſpirituall graces, in the conflict of temptation, part.1.lib.2.c.5.p.94 col.1,2.

There is a proportion betweene faith and all other ſauing Graces. And between thoſe graces one with another, cap.46. pag.253. col.2. § 3.

How this truth is to be maintained, § 4.

Obiections againſt it anſwered, p.254.& 255.col.2.§ 5,6,7.

The conſolations which ariſe, from the equall proportion of Gods ſauing Graces in vs, p.256. col.1. § 8.

What, and how farre the Graces of God may be loſt, part.4. lib.2.c. 18.p.1133.§ 4,5. pag.1134, 1135 1136.& inde, § 4,5,6,7,8, & inde.

Wee may be ſure to obtaine Gods ſpirituall Graces, and his Glory, if we ſeeke them, part.2.lib.2.c.26.p. 602,603. § 10,11.

Though our ſpirituall growth be ſlow, yet it is certaine, part.1.lib.1 cap.23.pag.59. & inde § 5.

Growth in grace is required of Gods children, part.4.lib.2.c.25.p. 1164.col.1.num.40.

Gods Word is our beſt guide, part.1.lib.1.c.19.p.37.§ 4.

H

NAturall Habits may be loſt, ſpirituall cannot, part.1. lib.3. cap.21.pag.343.ad finem col.2.& inde.

God ſoftens mans heart, part.1. lib.2.c.39.p.223. § 3.

There is a two-fold hardneſſe of heart fit to be obſerued, of both the ſenſible and inſenſible. See cap.40. pag.228.col.1. § 2,3 & cap.41. p. 229. & inde.

The bight of health is the firſt degree to ſome dangerous ſickneſs, part.2. lib.1.c.5. pag.370. col.1. num.30.

Health of body in it ſelfe is a great bleſſing, but much abuſed through our corruption, c.16.pag. 415.& inde.

Health is a common mercy granted to the wicked, pag.416. § 2.

Health is momentany and vncertaine, § 3.

It is imperfect and full of infirmitie, § 4.

Of the manifold euils that vſually accompany bodily health, pag. 417.§ 5.

The heart is heedfully to be watched ouer, part.4.lib.2.c.21.p. 1050.§ 5.

Motiues to perſwade to the diligent hearing of Gods Word, part.1.lib.2 cap.20. pag.158.col.2. § 3. & inde.

Why thoſe that haue knowledge ſhould yet heare often, p.161.col.1 § 9.

Our vnworthineſſe and vnfitnes to heare, ſhould not yet hinder our hearing, cap.27.pag.177. col.2.& inde.

Wee ought to heare, though wee ſin in hearing, p.179.col.1. § 4.& inde.

Sathan tempteth to negligence in in hearing, cap.28. pag.180. § 1. col.2.

Wee should prepare our selues before we heare, p.181.col.1. Wherein this preparation consisteth, § 2,3,4,5,6.

Duties that are to be performed in hearing, p.182.col.2. § 7,8,9, 10,11.

How wee ought to behaue our selues after hearing, p.183.col.2. § 12.

The benefits of hearing Gods Word, c.39.p.223.col.1. ad finem & inde.

Comforts for such as complaine of their imperfections in hearing Gods Word, cap.41.pag.231.col.1 § 3.

Comforts for those that bewaile their want of feeling the fruit of their hearing, idem ibidem. § 4.

Heauen is to be preferred before earth, because it is our owne Country part.2.lib.3. ca.3.pag.700.col. 2. § 1.

It is impossible to describe the ioyes of Heauen, p.701,702. § 2.

What the ioyes of heauen are, and what titles are giuen vnto them in holy Scripture, p.702,703, § 3.

All the defects in mans soule shall be supplyed in Heauen, cap.4. p.704. § 2.

The vnderstanding shall be there freed from ignorance and curiosity, p.705. § 2.

Our wils from peruersenesse, § 3 & p.706.

Our memories and consciences from imperfection and corruption, § 4.p.707.

The excellent parts and qualities wherewith our soules shall be adorned in Heauen, § 5.

In Heauen we shall be freed from all bodily wants and griuances, c.5.p.708,709. § 1.2.

Of the many euils from which we shall be deliuered in body, of the many good things wherewith wee shall be inriched, when we come to Heauen, p.709. § 3.4.

They shall be indued with immortality and agility p.710. § 5.

Our bodies shalbe strong, free from suffering hurt, beautifull, and of a comely stature, p.711. § 6.7.

They shall shine and be glorious, p.712. § 8.

In heauen we shall not be molested with turbulent affections, cap.6.§ 1.p.713.

Wee shall be free from impotencie and impietie, p.714. § 2.

Wee shall be exempt from all externall euils, p.715. § 3.

The ioyes of heauen must needs be excellent and blessed, p.715.716 § 4.

In heauen the Image of God shall perfectly be restored vnto vs, repaired in vs, c.7.p.717. § 1.

The ioyes of heauen will fill without glutting, and satiate without loathing, § 2.& p.718.

The ioyes of heauen are excellent, in regard of those things that are about the glorified, § 3.

There are diuers degrees of glory and happinesse in Heauen, p.719 720. § 4,5.

The heauen of heauen shall be the place of the Saints happines, which is beautifull and glorious, c.8.pag. 721,722. § 1.

The great felicity that shall come to the godly in heauen, by the societie of the Saints and Angels, § 2 & p.723.

Whether the Saints glorified in heauen shall know one another, § 3

A great part of the happinesse in heauen, is to enioy the company of our Sauiour Christ, p.724. § 4.

The Lord is the chiefe matter of all heauenly ioyes, cap.9.p.725. § 1.

All ioy accompanieth the fruition of God, hee being the perfection and accomplishment of all, § 2.

The fruition of God, must be the perfection of heauenly ioy, pag.726 727. § 3.

All heauenly ioyes without the fruition of God, could not make perfectly happy, pag.728. col. 1. § 4.

The vision of God, is one of the principall ioyes of heauen. And that is, a cleere knowledge of him, cap. 10.p.728. § 1.

Our vision of God in heauen is spirituall. How farre wee shall see him, with our bodily eyes. In him we shall haue knowledge of all diuine mysteries, p.729.731. § 2.

Of the communion we shall haue with God in heauen, pag.732. § 3

Our communion with God shall be much more excellent in the life to come, than it is now, pag.732. § 4.

In this communion, God will be all in all vnto vs, p.732.733. § 5.

In heauen we shall perfectly loue God, and be happy in that loue, cap. 11.p.733. § 1.

In heauen all our delight shall be to sing prayses vnto God, p.734 § 2.

In heauen the Saints shall keepe an eternall Sabbath, p.735. § 3.

In the heauenly happinesse, wee shall haue all ioy, comfort, peace, and reioycing in God, p.736. § 4.

The ioyes of heauen shall be eternall, and euerlasting, pag.737. § 5.

We should rather spend our care to come to the ioyes of heauen, than curiously inquire what they are, c. 12.p.738. § 1.

The difficulty to obtaine the ioyes of heauen, should not discourage vs, p.739. § 2.

How we may be assured, we shall attaine vnto, and possesse the ioyes of heauen, § 3. & p.740.

Of the helmet of saluation. Hope is that helmet, read part.1.lib.1.c. 14.p.24.col.2. & inde.

What a dangerous temptation may arise, vpon a pretence of being carefull to auoid hypocrisie, part.4. lib.1.c.13.p.1058.col.2. § 6.

How the Deuill tempteth ciuill honest men, part.1.lib.1.c.18.p.33 § 3. num.60. & inde.

Ciuill honestie severed from true pietie, is nothing else but glorious iniquitie, p.34.col.1.§ 4.

Honestty and [illegible] are inseparable, [illegible]. pag.34.col.2. § 5. & inde.

How to distinguish between true and false holinesse, lib.2.p.120.c. 11.col.2. ad finem & inde.

There are diuers kinds of honours, nours, part.2.lib.2.c.2.p.434.col. 2. § 1.

Honour in it selfe is good and lawfull, § 2.

It serueth for diuers good vses, p.435. c.2. § 3.

Many of the children of God haue beene very honorable, col.2. § 4.

Wee must principally seeke honour from God, pag.436.col.1. § 5.

We ought to striue to be honoured of the good and vertuous, col.2 § 6.

Whether it be lawfull to desire honour of wicked people, pag.437. col.1. § 7.

Honour is onely to be desired for well doing, § 8. col.2.

Wee ought to affect such honours as are moderate, and proportionable to our deserts, p.438.col. § 9

Greater titles then are fit for men are blamed, idem, ibidem.

Honours ought not immoderately to be desired, col.2. § 10.

Good meanes onely must be vsed for the attaining of honour, p.439 § 11.

We may not let honour rest with vs, but returne it wholy vnto God, col.2. § 12.

Wee may not propound our owne honour, as our chiefe and mayne end, § 13.

Wee must imploy our honour to good vses, p.440. col.1. § 14.

Lawfull honours are to be desired for Gods glory, col.2. § 15. And for our neighbours good. For first hereby he doth his dutie, § 16.

Secondly, that he may doe his duty, p.441. § 17.

Thirdly, to auoid scandall, col. 2. § 18.

Wee ought to desire honour for our owne sakes, that it may reuiue and refresh vs, § 19.

Wee are bound by Gods commandement to preserue our honour and good name, p.442. § 20.

Honours plunge men into many dangerous temptations, lib.2.cap. 6.p.459.col.1. § 4.

Honours are of high esteeme through opinion, c.9.pag.472.col. 1. § 2. And of competition, p.473 § 6. And in regard that they are difficult to be obtained, pag. 475. col.2. § 8.

The branches of vaine honour are, vain-glory, popularity, priority, fauour of Princes: all poore snares to insnare a Christian, cap. 10. pag.477. § 1. & inde per totum caput.

Honours bring no contentment to those that haue them, c.17.pag. 529. § 6. Where it is compared to thr breath of a Kitchen

Worldly honours are vnprofitable, p.552.col.1 § 2.

Of the vncertainty in obtayning worldly honours, p.599. § 5.

When men seeke after them, too earnestly they loose them, § 6. & pag.600.

Honour is called the shadow of vertue, p.599.num.30.& inde.

What the right way is, to seeke and find true honour, p.600. § 7.

Of the miseries that are incident to the getting, enioying, and losing of worldly honours. See Misery in this Index.

Worldly honours are momentany and vncertaine, p.608. § 6.

Of the mutabilitie of worldly honours, c.28. § 3.

The causes why they are so variable, p.615. § 4.

The honourable are as short liued as others, cap.29.pag.623. & 624. § 11.

Worldly honours bring much hurt to those that dote vpon them, c.30.p.629. & inde, § 2.

Honours withdraw mens hearts from God, p.633. & inde, § 6.

Worldly honours affected, bring men into slauery, cap.33.p.656.657 § 7.

Honours are accompanied with many dangers, cap.33. pag.665. § 14.

Honour can hardly discerne friends from Flatterers, cap.34.p. 672. § 7.

Honours expose men to temptations, p.678.col.1. § 13.

Earthly honours hinder those that set their hearts on them, for attaining the Kingdome of heauen, c 35. p.684. § 4.

Earthly honours increase a mans account at the last day, p.687,688 § 8.

Earthly honours worth little in regard of heauenly, part.2.lib.3.c. 2.p.698. § 4.

Wee ought to hope against hope, part.1. lib.2. cap.47.p.262.col.2. § 7.

How men delude themselues with false hopes, part.2.lib.2.c.26 pag.597. col.1.num.50.& inde.

The whole time from Christs Incarnation till his comming to iudgement, is called an houre, c.27 p.605.col.1.num.20. & c.29. pag. 618.col.1.num.20.

Labour for humility, part.1.lib.1 c.22.p.53.col.1. § 11.

The worth of humilitie is great, for it makes all other vertues commendable, part.2.lib.1.c.7. p.381 col 2. § 9.

Humilitie will much helpe the people of God to beare afflictions, part.3.lib.1.c.4.p.767,768. § 9.

I

Worldly things immoderately loued are causes of Idolatry, part.2.lib.2.ca.30.p.635 § 8.

Ambitious, couetous and voluptuous men, are Idolaters, p.636. § 9.

How things indifferent may be grieuously abused, part.4. lib.1.c. 14.p.1063.1064. § 7.

What to thinke of the estate of Ideots and Infants, lib.2.c.10.pag. 1111. § 2.

Imputation is taken two wayes in Scripture, part.1.lib.2.cap.52. p.276.

Infirmities are discouered in the faithfull by their temptations, part.1.lib.1.c.2.col.4.num.40.

Sight of imperfections is no cause cause to moue a man to doubt of his election. lib. 2. c. 14. pag. 137. col. 2 § 10.

Infidelity is more damnable then any other sinne. cap. 38. p. 219. c. 1. num. 20.

Why some and not all the infirmities of the Saints are registred in the booke of God. cap. 49. pag. 266. c. 1. num. 10.

Where innocency is, there is alwayes security, part. 1. lib. 2. c. 1. pag. 68. ad initium.

How Sathan abused the children of God in things indifferent. lib. 1. part. 1. c. 20. § 1. p. 38.

Sathan assaults sometimes by himselfe, sometimes by his instruments. cap. 21. pag. 43. §. 5. And how hee doth it by those instruments. p. 45. § 8. 9.

The intercession of Christ assureth the forgiuenesse of our sinnes, lib. 2. part. 1. c. 37. pag. 216. col. 1. §. 7.

Ionahs resolution to dye, is maintained, part. 1. lib. 2. p. 74. c. 2. ad finem.

Iudas was alwayes an Hypocrite and destitute of saving graces, part. 1. lib. 3. cap. 2. p. 340, 341. § 8.

An earnest desire of Christ comming to iudgement, is an infallible signe of the election of those that are so affected, part. 1. lib. 2. cap. 12. pag. 127. § 11.

Our iustification is not grounded vpon our workes, or worthinesse, lib. 2. part. 1. cap. 4. pag. 87. col. 1. num. 50.

It is not repugnant to Gods iustice to punish Christ for vs, cap. 18. p. 149. col. 2. §. 1.

What iustification is, cap. 50. Pag 269. col. 1. num. 10.

The efficient cause of iustification, is God alone, the impulsiue cause, his mercy. The instrumentall on Gods part, the word and sacraments on our faith. The materiall cause is the actiue and passiue obedience of Christ. The formall a reciprocall imputation of the sinnes of a beleeuer to Christ, and of Christs righteousnesse to a beleeuer, pag. 270. the finall, Gods glory and mans saluation. The parts of iustification are, the remission of our sins & imputation of Christs righteousnesse, col. 2. § 4. & pag. 271.

The faithfull are iustified, when true faith is begotten in them, col. 2 §. 5.

Sins conuerting, are not iustified by their workes, cap. 51. p. 272. § 3. Although they bee the workes of the morrall law, pag. 273. § 4. 5.

Why God will not haue men iustified by their workes, p. 274. §. 6.

Faith alone iustifieth, cap. 52. pag. 275.

Though workes doe not iustifie, yet they are necessarily required to iustification, § 1. 2. 3.

Not our own, but Christs righteousnesse is imputed vnto vs for iustification, pag. 276. col. 2. § 5. 6. 7.

Perfect righteousnesse is required to iustification, pag. 277. col. 1. §. 8.

Iustification by imputation, is a reall truth, pag. 278. §. 3.

Our iustification is plainely reuealed vnto vs, pag. 278. & inde.

We are made iust not by infusion, but imputation of another righteousnesse, cap. 53. pag. 279. § 2.

Good workes are no causes, but effects of our iustification. pag. 280.

K

CHrist being a King, assureth the remission of our sins, part. 1. lib. 2. c. 37. p. 216. col. 2. §. 8.

Kingly authority is good in it selfe, much to bee reuerenced and respected. part. 2. lib. 2. ca. 13. pag. 497. § 1.

It is the gift and blessing of God. pag. 498. §. 2.

The troubles that a Kingdome bring with it are manifold, col. 2. § 3.

Of the cares that accompany a Kingdome in respects of the King that raigneth, pag. 499. § 4.

The care that a King taketh in respect of his subiects. The great burthen and labour of a King, pag. 500. § 6.

Kings are much troubled with the violence of their vnruly affections, § 7.

What dangers are incident to Kings, pag. 501. col. 1. §. 8.

The ingratitude of the people is a great griefe to Kings, col. 2. § 9.

Of the great account that Kings haue to make at the iudgement day, pag. 582. col. 1. §. 20.

Worldly Kingdomes abused, are the cause of many sins, col. 2. §. 11.

Of the punishment which God inflicteth vpon euill Kings, pag. 503. col. 1. §. 12.

God bringeth hasty destruction vpon euill Kings, col. 2 § 13.

Euery one should labour after a spirituall Kingdome, and the Kingdome of Heauen, pag. 504. col. 1. §. 14. 15.

Knowledge is the eye of the soule, lib. 1. part. 1. cap. 18. p. 36. col. 1. num. 10.

Hee that hath the spirit of God may know it, and how, part. 1. lib. 2. c. 10. p. 115. § 5. & inde.

Christ knoweth not the workes of iniquity, lib. 2. c. 16. p. 142. col. 2. num. 20.

Knowledge of God and his truth, is in it selfe an excellent gift, yet liable to the abuse of worldlings, part. 2. lib. 1. c. 12. p. 399. col. 2. § 1.

Our knowledge is maymed and vnperfect, p. 400 col. 1. § 2.

Vnfruitfull knowledge is vaine and to no purpose, col. 2. §. 3.

It is vnprofitable, p. 401. § 4.

It doth much hurt, first in regard of our bodyes, col. 2. § 5.

Secondly in respect of our soules, for first it puffeth vp with pride, p. 402. § 6. It aggrauateth our other sins, §. 7. And increaseth the account at the day of iudgement, col. 2. § 8.

Of saving knowledg, par. 3. lib. 1 c. 4. p. 763. col. 2. §. 9.

Saning knowledge is gained by ſanctified afflictions, cap. 20. pag. 921.922. per totum.

How the knowledge of the righteous doth differ from that of the vnregenerate, lib. 2. c. 11. p. 1114. col. 2. & p. 1115.

L

THe difference betweene the commandements of the Law, and thoſe in the Goſpell, part. 1. lib. 2. cap. 9. p. 106. col. 2. num. 30.

How farre forth a Chriſtian is free from the law. cap. 18. pag. 151. col. 2. §.

The workes of the morall Law, doe not iuſtifie, cap. 51. pag. 273. §. 45.

Read of the Iulian Law, part. 2. lib. 2. cap. 2. p. 439. col. 1. num. 30.

Learning indueth not with grace, part. 1 lib. 2. cap. 25. p. 173. col. 1. num. 20. & inde.

Learning in its owne nature, is very good and commendable, part. 2. lib. 1. cap. 10. p. 395. § 1.

It becommeth euill when it is abuſed. § 2. Worldly learning is to be contemned, firſt becauſe it doth not profit vs, p. 396. § 3. Secondly it is vaine, and of no excellency, § 4 Thirdly it helpeth not to the attaining of Gods ſpirituall graces, pag. 397. § 5. Fourthly it furthereth not to the attainment of life eternall, pag. 398. § 6. Fifthly it much hurteth thoſe that ſet their hearts vpon it, § 7. Sixthly it is to bee contemned in compariſon of diuine learning, Why the Godly learned doe differ in iudgement from one another, part. 4. lib. 2. c. 5. p. 1094. § 6.

Mans life is ſhort, therefore euery one ſhould repent ſpeedily, part. 1. lib. 2. cap. 29. pag. 185. § 3.

They that liue well cannot dye ill, c. 30. p. 192. col. 2. ad finem.

The things of this life are onely commended by neceſſitie, part. 2. lib. 2. cap. 22. pag. 570. col. 1. § 4.

Mans life is a continuall diſeaſe, and worldly things are medicines to eaſe it, col. 2. § 5.

Of the adherent euils incident to mans life. pag. 571. § 7.

Mans life is very ſhort, though ſome dreame of immortality, c. 28. pag. 617. § 1, 2.

Which is proued by Scripture, pag. 618. And illuſtrated by ſimilitudes, § 3.

Mans life is fraile, vncertaine, and aſſaulted euery way by death, pag. 619. § 4.

Mans life is daily ſubiect to innumerable dangers, col. 2. § 5.

From birth till death our liues are in a continuall conſumption, cap. 29. pag. 621, 622. § 7.

Through the ſhortnes of this life, all things here are to vs, momentany, & vncertaine, p. 622. § 9.

The honourable and rich mans life is as ſhort and vncertaine, as the life of any other, pag. 623, 624. § 11, 12.

So is the life of the voluptuous man, pag. 626. & inde § 14.

The ſhortneſſe of mans life ſhould moue him to vndervalue the world pag. 627. & inde § 15.

Sathan tempteth men to looſeneſſe from the conſideration of the loue of God, part. 1. lib. 2. c. 3. p. 82. & inde § 1.

How to withſtand this temptation, § 1. Temporall aduantages no infallible ſignes of Gods loue, § 2. col. 2. num. 20. & inde.

How the Deuil vſeth to perſwade Chriſtians that God loues them not pag. 83. § 3.

How to euade the danger of this ſnare, § 4.

Euery particular Chriſtian may aſſure himſelfe of Gods loue, pag. 84. § 6.

To doubt of Gods loue, is to doe him iniury, col. 2. § 7. It is pernitious to the doubter, § 8. We cannot loue God vnleſſe we be aſſured, that hee loueth vs, pag. 85. num. 20. col. 1. & inde.

Loue is the whatſoeuer of loue, idem, ibidem.

Doubt not of Gods loue, § 9.

Our vnworthines need not make vs diſtruſt Gods loue, lib. 2. cap. 4. p. 85. & inde § 1.

Gods loue is the ground of our election, p. 86. § 2. And of our redemption, § 3. And of our calling, § 4. Afflictions are ſignes of Gods loue, c. 5. p. 90. col. 1. § 1.

Wee may neither diſpaire nor doubt of Gods loue, p. 96. § 10.

How Gods loue may be knowne, p. 97. § 12.

Gods loue is the cauſe of our loue, cap. 11. pag. 128. num. 20. & inde col. 2.

Loue of the brethren becauſe God commandeth it, is an infallible ſigne of our election, c. 12. p. 133. §.

What the ſignes of this loue are, col. 2. num. 20. & inde.

The reaſons why we cannot both loue earthly and heauenly things together, part. 2. lib. 2. p. 682. c. 35 col. 2. § 2.

The Deuill in regard of mankind is called a Lyon, bee it ſo, and much worſe than that creature, part. 1. lib. 1. c. 4. col. 2. num. 10.

The Deuill either alwayes lyeth, or elſe ſpeaketh the truth to deceaue, part. 1. lib. 2. c. 38. p. 220. col. 1. num. 20.

The Libard hateth man ſo much, that it ſpyeth vpon his picture, part. 2. lib. 1. c. 2. pag. 361. col. 1. num. 50.

M

THe Deuils malice againſt mankind is very mighty, and implacable, and why part. 1. lib. 1. c. 4. p. 8. col. 1. num. 10. 20, 30.

It is very violent, num. 40. & inde col. 2.

And attended with treaſonable falſhood, ibid. & p. 9. col. 1. num. 10, 20, 30.

Sathan is malitious vnto it ſelfe, pag. 10. col. 1. § 3.

A great difference betweene the ſufferings of Martyrs, and thoſe of heretickes, part. 1. lib. 2. cap. 1. p. 164. §.

Simon Magus neuer had iustifying faith, lib. 3. cap. 20. p. 340. col. 2. § 7.

Why the Grecians call a man ἀνθρωπον, and wherefore his head is farthest from the earth, part. 2. lib. 3. c. 2. p. 697. ad initium col. 2.

The Marchant in Plutarch dranke his worst wine himselfe, and kept his best for others, part. 3. lib. 2. cap. 11. pag. 874. col. 1. ad finem.

The golden meane to bee kept, part. 1. lib. 1. cap. 19. pag. 37. col. 2. § 4. & inde.

Sathan tempteth to vse euill means, for the effecting of good ends, p. 40. col. 1. § 4.

Meanes of grace in no sort to be neglected cap. 20. pag. 158. col. 1. § 2. & inde.

They that delight not in the meanes of grace for the present, may do well to examine themselues what they haue done in times past, cap. 42. p. 235. col. 2. § 6.

Generall meanes whereby to repell Sathans temptations, vrging that we haue no faith, c. 44. p. 244 col. 2. & inde. § 5.

A meane estate is to be preferred before a mighty, part. 2. lib. 1. c. 6. p. 375. col. 2. § 2.

Meanes to be carefully vsed, for the attainment of grace, part. 4. lib. 2. cap. 25. p. 1164. col. 2. § 2.

Meditate not vpon Sathans temptations, but vpon the contrary preseruatiues, part. 1. lib. 1. cap. 22. pag. 55. 56. § 18.

Meditation, when we haue heard, is an excellent helpe of hearing, part. 1. lib. 2. c. 28. p. 183. col. 2. ad finem & inde.

Misapplying of Gods mercy keeps many in impenitency. How this misery may be remedied, c. 31. pag. 194. col. 1. & inde. § 1, 2.

God is delighted in exercising of mercy, c. 34. p. 204. col. 2. § 4.

Mans sinne cannot hinder the working of Gods mercy, pag. 205. col. 2. § 5.

Gods mercy is ouer all his works, p. 206. § 6.

God is infinite in mercy, § 7.

It is pride to doubt of Gods mercy in regard of our vnworthinesse, § 8.

The greatest part of Gods royall Title consisteth in mercy, cap. 36. p. 208. col. 2. § 2.

Gods mercy no fit motiue to incourage men to continue in their sins, p. 1068. § 7. part. 4. lib. 1. c. 15.

To make dispatch in inflicting paine vpon those that are punished is a kind of mercy, part. 1. lib. 2. c. 5. p. 405. num. 50.

The dangerous effects of melancholy, p. 112. col. 1. ad finem. & col. 2. num. 50.

To loue Gods Ministers is an vndoubted signe of election, part. 2. lib. 2. c. 12. p. 126. col. 1. § 10.

The liues of Ministers many times a great scandall to their Ministery. How this offence may be made lesse offensiue, c. 25. p. 172. col. 2. § 1. & inde.

How ministers haue authority to forgiue sinnes, c. 38. p. 219. col. 1. § 2. ante. 50. & inde.

The miracles mentioned in scripture, need not to bee doubted of, c. 21. p. 164. col. 1. num. 10. & inde.

The misery of worldly things is proued by testimonies, lib. 2. part. 2. cap. 22. p. 568. § 2.

The miseries of mans life in respect of sin, pag. 569. § 3.

The miseries of this life are much like Iobs messengers. p. 571. col. 1. ad finem.

Why miseries make vs more sensible than comforts, p. 572. col. 1. ad initium.

Of the miseries incident to a mans estate, § 8. Of those to his person, in regard of his body, § 9. And of his soule, p. 573. § 10.

Of the miseries of man through the contrariety of his own passions, p. 574. col. 1. § 11.

Of the miseries of mans life in respect of his friends, col. 2. § 12.

Of mans misery whereunto he is subiect in his mothers wombe, cap. 23. pag. 575. § 1.

Of his misery in his birth, § 2.

Of the miseries of infancy, childhood and youth, p. 576. § 3.

Of the miseries incident to man, in his perfect age, p. 577. § 4.

Of the miseries incident to old age, pag. 578. col. 1. § 5.

Of the miseries incident to single life, and wedlocke, cap. 24. p. 578. & inde. § 1.

Of those miseries that are accidental to diuers estates, p. 579 § 2

Of some seciall miseries belonging to Christians peculiarly, §. 3. & pag. 580.

Of the miseries that accompany honours, riches and pleasures, cap. 25. p. 581. § 1, 2.

Of those miseries that hang about the purchasing of these particulars, pag. 583. § 5.

Of the miseries that accompany the possession of worldly things, p. 586. § 9. p. 587. § 10. p. 588. 589. § 11

Of the miseries, that accompany worldly things when they are lost, § 16. 17.

Of the miseries incident to men for the losse of honours, riches, and pleasures, p. 594. § 18.

The Athenians vsed their money onely to tell, part. 2. lib. 1. cap. 10. pag. 395. col. 2. num. 10.

Money is stamped round, because it is rolling, and remoning, pag. 616. col. 1. num. 20.

What mortification is, and how it is wrought, part. 1. lib. 3. pag. 285. 286. col. 2. § 2.

Popish mortification is onely a bodily exercise, part. 4. lib. 1. cap. 4, p. 1025. § 4.

The Papists iustly taxed for this p. 1026. col. 2. § 5.

Our opposition of this popish doctrine is necessary, p. 1027. § 6.

Meanes to bee vsed in the exercise of mortification, lib. 2 cap. 20. pag. 1142. per totum. caput.

We must set no stint to our mortification, c. 23. p. 1159. § 9.

Our mortification ought to extend it selfe, to all our corruptions, and to all times, § 10. p. 1160.

The multitude of our spirituall enemies may not dismay vs, c. 5. part. 1. lib. 1. p. 13. col. 1. § 9.

Multitudes ſhould not make vs ſin, or to be unwilling in the ſervice of God, part. 4. lib. 2. cap. 15. pag. 1067. §6.

We communicate with all creatures in their mutability, beſides the changes whereunto wee our ſelues are ſubiect, cap. 28. lib. 2. part. 1. p. 613. §2.

Sathan is a murtherer of mankind. p. 8. col. 2. ad finem, & inde.

For temptations to ſelfe-murther, ſee lib. 2. part. 1. c. 2. p. 70. § 1.

The ſubtilty of the Deuill in vrging men to this ſin, p. 71. §. 2.

The world, the fleſh, and inward cauſes mone thereunto, §. 3. & pag. 72.

There is extreame cowardiſe in ſelfe-murther idem, ibid. num. 40.

It is a thing in no caſe lawful, § 4.

No Saint euer committed this ſinne, pag. 74. § 5.

Obiections made againſt this truth, anſwered, § 7. & pag. 75.

Selfe-murther is a moſt haynous ſin againſt God, § 7. & pag. 76. Againſt his law and image, and as he is the Lord of hoaſts, haynous. Selfe-murtherers ſinne againſt Chriſt, as redeemer, col. 2. § 6. And againſt the holy Ghoſt, pag. 77. § 9. They ſinne againſt God in his gifts, and common graces.

They ſin againſt their Neighbours, § 10. and againſt themſelues pag. 78. § 12.

It is dangerous to determine abſolutely the damnation of all thoſe that murther themſelues. They draw vpon themſelues intolerable puniſhments, p. 179. § 12. 13.

How this ſin of ſelfe-murther may bee auoyded, p. 80. § 14, 15.

N

Actions of nature are not troubleſome, part. 1. lib. 2. c. 34. p. 204. col. 2. num. 30. & inde.

The fight ſpirituall of a Chriſtian is neceſſary, and not to be auoyded, cap. 3. p. 6. col. 1. ad finem, & inde.

Negligence in ſpirituall duties is very dangerous, part. 4. lib. 2. cap. 24. pag. 1163. col. 2. § 5.

Nicholas the Deacon cannot be proued to bee the founder of the doctrine of the Nicholaitains, par. 1. lib. 3. c. 21. p. 343. col. 1. num. 40.

There is no great matter affirmed of him in holy writing, idem, ibidem, per totum, § 12.

What nobility is, and of the ſignes thereof, part. 2. lib. 2. cap. 12. pag. 490. col. 1. § 1.

Nobility in it ſelfe, is good, and lawfull, § 2.

True Nobility, is much to bee honoured, and reſpected p. 491. col. 1. § 3.

Worldly Nobility is of ſmall worth or excellency, col. 2. § 4.

There is no cauſe why any ſhould glory in worldly Nobility, pag. 492 col. 1. §. 5. For God reſpecteth it not, § 6. Chriſt neglected it, pag. 493. § 7. It is momentany and mutable § 8.

Vpſtart Nobility ioyned with vertue, is to bee preferred before that which is ancient, if it bee deſtitute of goodneſſe, §. 9. col. 2.

Why the Nobillity of Rome did were Moones vpon their ſhoes, col. 2. num. 10.

Worldly Nobility is vnprofitable, pag. 494. § 10.

Which is ſhewed by diuers examples, col. 2. §. 11.

It maketh men proud, and negligent in the duties of religion, pag. 495. col. 2. §. 12.

Nobility ſeuered from vertue, diſgraceth thoſe that haue it, pag. 496. col. 1. §. 13.

Spirituall Nobility is farre to bee preferred before that which is worldly, col. 2. § 14.

For the priuiledges of it, are farre greater, pag. 497. § 17.

The number that is to be ſaued, in it ſelfe is very great, though in compariſon of the reprobate it bee very ſmall, part. 1. lib. 2. c. 6. p. 98. col. 2. num. 10.

O

Obedience is an infalible ſigne of election, part. 1. lib. 2. cap. 12. p. 124. § 7.

The properties of true obedience are, it muſt bee total, perpetuall, grounded on Gods word, referred to his glory, ibem, ibid. § 8. & cp. 125.

The Lord in the Goſpel requireth not of vs perfect obedience to the Law, lib. 3. c. 7. p. 296. § 6.

Wherein the obedience of the faithfull and the hypocrite, doe differ, part. 4. lib. 1. c. 13. col. 1. § 5.

Many purpoſing to repent when they were old, haue beene cut off before that time, part. 1. lib. 2. cap. 29. p. 186. col. 1. § 4.

Old age is more vnfit for repentance then youth, c. 3. p. 190. col. 1. § 8.

Repentance when people come to be old is not ſo acceptable, p. 193. c. 31. col. 1. § 1.

Why the Deuill is called one, part. 1. lib. 1. c. 5. p. 10. ad finem. & p. 11. ad initium.

Opinion is that which ſets a price vpon earthly things, part. 2. lib. 2. cap. 9. pag. 471. per totum caput.

The Oſtrich wings helpe them not to fly, part. 2. lib. 1. 391. cap. 9. num 50.

The Oſtrich eateth and makes good nouriſhment of Iron, part. 3. lib. 2. c. 1. p. 800. col. 2. num. 30.

Ouercome, looke victory.

We owe our ſelues to Chriſt, by a double right, part. 1. lib. 1. c. 3. p. 6. col. 2. num. 10.

The Spirit of God is compared to Oyle, for two reaſons, part. 4. lib. 2. c. 16. p. 1127. col. 2. num. 40. & inde.

P

THe Children of God in the time of trouble want patience, part. 1. lib. 2. cap. 5. pag. 94. & inde § 8. 9.

A deſcription of patience, part. 3. lib. 2. cap. 1. p. 791. § 1.

There was neuer any true patience among the Heathen pag. 792. § 2.

Of the Obiect and properties of true patience, pag. 193. § 354.

Stoicall stupidity is no patience, p. 794. § 5.

There can bee no true patience, where there is no passion, pag. 797. § 9.

Patience must bee ioyned with willingnesse and cheerefulnesse, to beare the crosse, p. 798. § 10, 11.

Patience must be associated with constancy, idem, ibidem. § 9.

It must be assisted with ioy, and spirituall reioycing, p. 800. § 12.

None can bee perfectly patient, yet every one must labour after patience, p. 801. § 13.

Patience is a grace of great excellency and much utility, cap. 2. pag. 802, 803. § 1, 2. & inde pag. 804, 805.

Patience is a necessary vertue, § 3. p. 805, 806, 807.

Of seuerall meanes to worke patience in vs, c. 3. per totum pag. 807. & inde.

Patience is not naturall it is the free gift of God vnto vs, p. 808, col. 2. § 2.

Patience in afflictions may bee procured, by looking vp to God the supreme cause of them, and not too much or onely vpon their inferiour causes, c. 6. p. 827. § 4. & p. 828.

How to get patience in trouble, first meditate vpon Gods command requiring vs to waite, c. 34. p. 999. § 2. Secondly meditate on Gods gracious promises, c. 2. § 3. Thirdly consider Gods promises are infallible. Fourthly God vsually deferreth to helpe those that are most strong in grace, and most deare vnto him, p. 1000. § 4, 5. Fiftly God neuer failed those that waite for him, p. 1001. § 6. Sixtly the Lord deferreth to deliuer vs, for the furthering of our spirituall good, p. 1002. § 7. Seauenthly the Lord many times deliuereth the faithfull out of affliction, when their state is most desperate, p. 1003. § 8. Lastly, the Lord waiteth on vs, to deliuer vs in the fittest time, p. 1004. § 9.

Duties to be done by those that would gaine patience, first let them often renewe their repentance, for those that are negligent herein, can haue no assurance of deliuerance, c. 35. p. 1004, 1005. § 1, 2. Secondly renew their faith in Gods promises, p. 1006. § 3. Thirdly submit themselues to Gods good pleasure, col. 2. § 4. Fourthly trust in God at all times, whether inferiour meanes be at hand, or farre away, p. 1007. § 5. Fiftly be frequent and fervent in prayer, § 6.

Parsimony is not to be indured, part. 2 lib. 2. cap. 4 pag. 453. col. 1. ad finem & inde.

The Diuell was the inuenter of the art of painting of the body, lib. 1. cap. 14. pag. 411. col. 2. § 1.

It is both the effect and cause of sin, p. 412. § 2.

Such as paint their faces abuse and deceaue others, § 3. And most of all offend against themselues § 4.

They destroy their naturall beauty, and disgrace their names, col. 2 § 5.

They slander their profession of Religion, p. 413. § 6.

It is a friuolous excuse in those that say they doe it to please their husbands, § 7.

Wee are not to expect peace in this world, part. 4. lib. 1. c. 1. p. 1. 1015. § 1, 2.

The peace of vnregenerate persons is more dangerous, than the most pernitious warre, lib. 2. c. 2. p. 1086. col. 2. § 4.

The peace of the wicked ariseth not from faith but security, part. 1. lib. 1. c. 1. p. 2 & 3.

The perfection of a Christian, consisteth in a desire of, and a labour after perfection, part. 1. lib. 1. c. 23. p. 58. & inde, § 4, 5.

The Lord will pardon, and perfect the wants of them that desire perfection, p. 60. § 6, 7.

Our weakenesse in performing holy duties, argueth our perfection in desiring to discharge them, lib. 2. c. 27. col. 1. § 6.

How to withstand the Deuils temptation, concerning perseuerance. The generall way, is not to relie vpon our owne strength, but tosly to God for it, part. 1. lib. 3. c. 13. pag. 316. col. 1. § 2.

The state of the controuersie concerning perseuerance, col. 2. § 3.

Arguments to assure our perseuerance.

The first grounded vpon the will of God, considering in the decree of election, p. 317. § 4. The second vpon his reuealed will, c. 2. § 5. The third vpon the immutability of his loue, § 6. And vpon the vnchangeablenesse of his gifts p. 318. § 8. The fourth vpon Gods omnipotency, cap. 14. p. 319. § 1. The fifth vpon Gods truth in his couenant, § 2. Where wee see our faultinesse is no impediment, because God hath made a new couenant with vs, and we haue particular promises of our perseuerance. The sixth is taken from Christs intercession, cap. 15. pag. 321. § 1. The seauenth from our vnion with Christ, § 2. The eight from the Spirit of God dwelling in vs. pag. 322. § 3. The ninth from the effects of the Spirit, § 4. The tenth from Gods continuall aide, col. 2. § 5. The eleauenth from the nature of faith § 6. The twelfe from examples. The thirteene from the inability of the opposits which goe about to hinder the perseuerance of the Saints, p. 323. col. 1. § 8.

Obiections against perseuerance answered, cap. 16. p. 323, 324, 325.

Those are taken out of the old testament. Reade of those that are in the new, cap. 17, 18, 19. pag. 326. & inde.

The obiections answered that are grounded vpon examples, cap. 20. p. 337. & inde.

Where yee may read of the fallen Angels, Adam, Saul, Dauid, Solomon, Peter, Simon Magus, Iudas, the Israelits in the Wildernesse, the Corinthians, the Galathians, of Nicholas the Deacon.

Reasons alledged against the Doctrine of perseuerance answered, c. 21. p. 343, 344, 345.

God

God hath pardoned many others, to incourage his seruants to make sute for the like fauour, part. 1. lib. c. 38. p. 220. col. 2. § 4. & inde.

Peters sinne was vpon infirmity, not malice, lib. 3. c. 20. pag. 340 § 8.

We are Pilgrimes in this World, and shall doe well to looke for such entertainment to that kind of people part. 3. lib. 2. cap. 26. p. 966. § 2.

Of diuine pleasures, part. 2. lib. 2 c. 5. p. 454. § 1.

They are much to be desired, col. 2. § 2.

Naturall & ciuill pleasures are in their own nature good. In respect of vs and as they may be vsed, they are indifferent, § 3.

Honest pleasures are warranted by Scriptures, p. 455. § 4.

Naturall and ciuill pleasures, serue to good ends and purposes, col. 2. § 5.

Democritus his comparison of a man deprived of all pleasure, num. 40.

Pleasures are good when they are well vsed, and enioyed by them that are iustified, pag. 456. col. 1. § 6.

We may neither ouer-value, nor immoderately affect them, col. 2. § 7.

Pleasures must be moderated, and referred to their lawfull ends; as first to Gods glory, § 8. And secondly, to the good both of our bodies and soules, § 9.

Take heed Sathan intangle not in the vse of pleasures, pag. 457 § 10.

Temptations grounded vpon pleasures are very pernicious, c. 6 p. 456. col. 2. § 6.

Pleasures are made precious by opinion, cap. 9. pag. 473. col. 1. § 4. And by competition, pag. 474 § 6.

Pleasures are the more set by, because they are difficult to obtaine, p. 476. col. 1. § 9.

Worldly pleasures are of no worth in comparison of heauenly ioyes, c. 16. p. 524. col. 1. § 1.

Pleasures are gifts of an inferiour nature, plentifully bestowed vpon the wicked, § 2.

The brute creatures haue the largest share in earthly pleasures, p. 525. col. 1. § 3.

They are easie to be abused, § 4. col. 2. & p. 526.

The vanity of worldly pleasures should moue vs to seeke heauenly ioyes, p. 526. § 5.

They doe not satisfie, or giue contentment, c. 17. p. 535, 536. col. 2. § 17.

Worldly pleasures are vnprofitable, c. 20. p. 555. col. 1. § 5.

They are void of sound delight, c. 21. p. 560. § 4.

Pleasures doe not cure diseases, p. 562, 563. § 8.

How vncertaine it is to purchase earthly pleasures, pag. 602 § 9.

Of the miseries that attend the getting, the enioying, and parting with worldly pleasures. See the word Misery.

They are short and momentany, c. 27. p. 611. § 10.

They are vnconstant, and subiect to change, cap. 21. pag. 616. § 6.

The liues of people wallowing in pleasures, are short, and full of frailty, cap. 29. pag. 626, 627 § 14.

Pleasures hurt those that affect them, being occasions vnto sin, and in themselues sinfull, pag. 631. § 4 c. 30.

Worldly pleasures with-draw mens hearts from God, p. 634. col. 1 num. 40.

Pleasures make men become slaues, p. 660. c. 33. § 10.

Pleasures are the cause of great dangers, p. 686. § 16.

Pleasures blind those that are ingaged vnto them, p. 671. col. 1. num. 30. & inde.

Pleasures immoderately loued become the Deuils snares pag. 679 § 15.

Earthly pleasures hinder from attaining euerlasting ioyes, c. 35. p. 686. col. 2. § 6.

Pleasures increase the account of such as enioy them at the last day, p. 688. § 8.

Pleasures in this World, are of no account, in respect of those in Heauen, attainable in the World to come, part. 2. lib 3. cap. 2. p. 698 § 4.

Philosophy yeelds no sound comfort in the times of affliction, part. 3. lib. 2. c. 3. p. 808, 807. § 1.

The poore are to be releeued by the rich, part. 2. lib. 2. cap. 4. p. 434 § 14.

The best vse of Riches is to giue them to the poore, pag. 591. cap. 25 § 14.

The Popish is not the true Religion part. 1. lib. 2. c. 26. p. 176. col. 2. num. 10. & inde.

The way of Popery is little pleasing vnto God, part. 4. lib. 2. cap. 24 p. 1162. § 3.

Popularitie ought not to be affected, because it is impossible to content the multitude, and please God, part. 2. lib. 2. cap. 10. p. 480, 481. § 7, 8.

It is a vaile of much wickednes, § 8. p. 482,

The Deuill is exceeding full of power, in respect of himselfe, part. 1 lib 1 c. 5. p. 20. col. 2. num. 10. & inde, & p. 11. col. 1.

Yet the faithfull need not feare this power, for God still both curbeth it, and him, p. 12.

He is powerfull in regard of his aides, c. 6. p. 14. & inde.

The admirable vse of Prayer in the Christian Combate, part. 1. lib. 1. c. 16. p. 26. § 1, 2.

The properties required in prayer, § 3, 4, 5.

What is called for of those that pray in the spirit, § 5.

Perseuerance in prayer, is required of vs, § 9. p. 29.

How to behaue our selues when God delayeth to heare our prayers, § 10.

Prayer is to be made for all Saints, § 11. p. 30.

Ignorance in prayer, the heart on one thing, the tongue in another, & impure prayer, all odious, p. 28. § 5

Prayer helpeth much in the point of assurance, lib.2. cap.9. pag.111 § 8.

The spirit of Prayer is a signe of our Election, cap.12.p.122.col. 2. § 2.

Comforts for such as say, they cannot pray at all, cap.42.p.232. col.2. § 1. & pag.233.

The gift of Prayer is not in our power, idem, ibidem, num.30.& inde.

Comfort for those that complaine they cannot pray in any good forme, col.2. § 2.

Comfort for those that bewaile their coldnesse and dulnesse in Prayer, p.234. § 3.

Comfort for those that bewayle their wandring thoughts in prayer col.2 § 4.

Our infirmities in Prayer, should not make vs neglect that holy exercise, p.235.col 1. § 5.

Prayer is to be vsed in the times of trouble. First, because God requireth it. Secondly, to moone vs to it, is the maine end why we are afflicted. Thirdly, God hath promised to heare his. Fourthly, hee is our sole Saviour and Deliverer, part.3. lib.2.c.3.p.809,810. § 3,4 5,6.

Fiftly, trouble is a season for Prayer. Sixtly, Gods people haue alwayes prayed at such times, pag. 811,812. § 7,8.

They that make acceptable Prayers to God, must first be regenerate, c.4.p. 812,813. § 1.

How Prayers against afflictions ought to be qualified, c.5.p.817. & inde per totum caput.

In Prayer we must come to God, with all feare and reuerence, pag. 819. § 3.

Wee ought to pray in truth, § 4 p.820.

In faith, § 5.

With earnestnesse and feruency of spirit, § 6. & p. 821.

In humility, submitting our wils to the will of God, p.822,823 § 7.

Wee must perseuere in Prayer, § 8.

That is onely true Prayer that is made in the Holy Ghost, part.4. lib.2.c.14.p.1122.1123, § 2.

Why more perish through presuming, than by despaire, part.1. lib.1.c.1.p.4.col.1.

Nathans prevayling with the Saints is of Gods permission, not of his owne power, c.23.p.62. § 10.

It is foolish to play with Religion, in the point of Predestination, lib.2.c.7.p.99 100,101.

How to discerne betweene presumption, and the testimony of Gods Spirit, c.10.p.116. § 5,6,7,8 & cap.11.pag.118 col.1. ad finem &inde.

It is not presumption to labour for the assurance of our Election, c.14.p.136.col.2.& inde, § 7.

Preaching, the onely ordinary way of mans saluation, c.20.p.158. col.2. § 3.& inde.

Preachers are Gods Embassadors, idem ibidem, § 4.

Preparation to hearing is required. Wherein this duty consisteth, cap.28. pag.181. col.1.num.10.& inde.

Prejudice a great hurt to the profitable hearing of Gods Word, part.1. lib.2.cap.28. p.181.col.2. ad finem, & inde.

Precedency, and the favour of Princes are vaine things, part.2. lib.2.p.482,483. § 10,11.

How presumption differeth from iustifying faith, part.4.lib.2.c.12. p.1117. § 2.

The doctrine of saving grace not to be lost. Is no boulster for presumption, cap.18. pag.1137,1138 § 11.

Pride is to be mortified, part.1. lib.1.cap.22.p.53.col.1. § 11.

It is the chiefe cause of trouble of mind, § 12.

Of Discontent, and Melancholy § 13.

Spirituall Pride is the cause of Doubting and Despaire, pag.54 § 14.

Pride goeth before destruction, part.2.lib.2. cap.31.p.641. § 5.

The price paid for our Redemption, doth farre exceed all our sinnes, part.1. lib.2.c.37.pag.214. § 3. col.1.

Princes favours are inconstant, part.2. lib.2.cap.10.pag.483. § 12.

They are also vnprofitable p.484 § 13.

Outward Priviledges, no infallible testimonies of Gods love, or our happinesse, part.4.lib.1.cap.13 p.1053. § 3,4.

For Pride in Apparell see Apparell.

How we are to carry our selues in the time of Prosperitie, part.1. lib.1.c.6.p.14.§ 2.

Wee must have affiance in Gods promises, p.29. § 8.

How the Deuill deales with Professors of Religion in his temptations, c.18.p.34. col.2.§ 5. If they be not sound.

How he deales with them that be sincere, if they be weake, § 6,7.

How the Deuil deales with those that are strong, p.36. § 8.

The indefiniteness of Gods promises, hinders no Christians assurance, lib.2.c.8.p.104.§ 5.

They may be assured they are faithfull, to whom the promises of the Gospell are made, § 6.

Generall Promises that assure the forgiuenesse of sinnes, c.36.pag. 209.col.2. § 4.

These Promises are made indefinitely to all that beleeue, pag.210. col.2. § 5. num.20. & inde.

Christ being our Prophet assureth vs the forgiuenesse of our sins, p.215.col.2. § 5.

So doth his being our Priest, § 6. & p. 216.

Prosperity is good, in its owne nature, part.2.lib.1.c.4.p.368.col. 2. § 3.

In respect of our vse of it, it is of an indifferent nature, p.369.col.1 § 4.

We are apt to abuse our Prosperity to sin, col.2.§ 5.

The dangerousnesse of worldly prosperity, cap.5.pag.370.col.2. § 1.

The state of Prosperitie is much more dangerous than that of aduersity, col.2.§ 2.

Pro-

Prosperity yeelds not so good fruit as affliction, 371. col. 2. § 4.

The great danger of prosperity shewed by the example of former ages, p.372. col. 2. § 5. And by experience of the present times, pag. 373. col. 2. § 8.

The great difference betweene men in Prosperity and Aduersity, § 6.

Prosperity hath corrupted whole Nations, § 7.

Reasons why Prosperity is so dangerous, p.374. § 9.

A great measure of grace is required to the managing of Prosperity, col. 2. § 10.

In prosperity wee must keepe a narrow watch ouer our selues, § 11.

How wee are said to resist the temptations of prosperity, p 375. col. 1. § 12.

Reasons whereby wee may be moued to contemne worldly prosperity, c. 6. p. 375, 376, 377, 378.

First, it seldome bettereth our estate, § 1.

Secondly, the meane estate is to be preferred before the mighty, § 2

Thirdly, Prosperity is one of Gods ordinary gifts, § 3.

Fourthly, worldly prosperity and heauenly happines are still bestowed vpon one man, § 4.

Fiftly, prosperity abused, increaseth the condemnation of the abusers, § 5.

Prosperity is the cause of pride, p. 639, 640

It maketh men to be slacke in the seruice of God, p. 645, 646.

It is a great furtherer of pride, p. 650. col. 1, num. 50. & inde.

Many inconueniencies comming by prosperity. See worldly things.

It is an heauy iudgement for prosperity to follow sinne, pag. 674. col. 2. ad finem, & pag. 675.

Prosperity makes the impieties of men the more conspicuous, p. 676 col. 2. num. 30. & inde.

Continuall prosperity is distastfull and dangerous, part. 3. lib. 2. c. 11. p. 872. col. 2. num. 30. & inde.

Nothing but prosperity can make vs to much to dote vpon the world, c. 19. p. 915. § 9.

Prosperity is no infallible testimony of Gods loue, or our happines, part. 4. lib. 1. cap. 12. p. 1015. § 3, 4

Christians may safely rest vpon Gods prouidence, pag. 547. col. 2 § 9.

Bare profession of Religion is not sufficient to saluation, pag. 1054 § 6.

Pouerty is a great prouocation to sinne, which ought not to be so, p. 1066. § 4.

Faire promises, and faint purposes, will not preuaile to procure our peace with God, pag. 1071 § 4.

The faithfull cannot properly be punished for their sinnes, p. 852 § 5

Q

A Good Quarrell will make a good Combatant, part. 1. lib. 1. cap. 3. col. 1. num. 40. & inde.

What is meant by quenching the fiery Darts of the Deuill, lib. 1. c. 13 c. 24. § 2.

Why the shield of faith rather repels than quencheth the Deuils fiery Darts, idem, ibidem, § 3.

R

RAzis his vntimely death censured, part. 1. lib. 2. cap. 2. p. 75 col. 1.

Our Redemption is not grounded vpon our worthinesse, lib. 2. c. 4 p. 86. § 3.

God giueth Christ to be a Redeemer to those that are elected. What this Redemption is, c. 15. p. 139. & inde.

Christ onely in proper speech is our Redeemer, and why, pag. 140. col. 1. num. 10.

He redeemed vs by paying a price for vs, and by force freing vs out of the hands of our Enemies, § 2.

The end of our Redemption, what p. 141. § 4.

Vniuersall Redemption is a soare temptation, to presse worldlymen to presumption.

How to refell that Reason. The Scripture is against it, c. 16. p. 141 § 1, 2, 3.

Diuers Reasons also doe ouerthrow it, p. 142, 143. § 4. col. 2. & inde.

How Christ is said to haue died for all, p. 143. § 4. col. 2.

All those that are Redeemed are in like sort sanctified, lib. 2. cap. 17 p. 146. per totum caput.

The ends of mans Redemption are Gods glory, and mans happines, p. 147. § 3.

In the worke of our Redemption there be three degrees, idem, ibid. § 4.

Christ Redeemed the whole man, p. 148. col. 2. § 5.

Hee offered a sufficient price for our Redemption, c. 18. p. 150 § 2.

The falling of the Saints into sin, is no reason to proone that they are not Redeemed, p. 151. col. 1. ad finem.

Those that are once Redeemed cannot be brought againe into bondage, p. 154. § 9.

Why the Lord doth not perfectly regenerate his children in this life, part. 1. lib. 3, c. 7. p. 297. § 9, 10, 11, 12. & inde.

There is no Regenerate person free from the combat betweene the flesh and the spirit, part. 4. lib. 2. c. 1. p. 1079. § 1, 2.

They haue a feeling and experience of this conflict, p. 1080. col. 2 § 3. 1081. § 5.

What this conflict in the Regenerate is, c. 2. § 1.

The cause of this conflict in them, p. 1082. § 2.

Why God Regenereteth his children in part onely, col. 1. num. 30 & inde. p. 1083, 1084.

The Regenerate cannot with full consent of will, chuse or refuse either good or euill, c. 7. p. 1099. § 1.

He

Hee cannot at all times doe the euill which the flesh chuseth, p.1100 § 2.

§ He cannot doe the good he would, 3.

All the Regenerate that are of able age, haue a spirituall conflict in them, c.10.p.1100. § 1.

It is not in them all alike, nor in the like measure, p.1111. § 3.

It is often weake in strong Christians, p.1112. § 4.

Diuers differences there are betweene the Regenerate, and the vnregenerate, whereby the one may be known from the other, c.15.p.1125 col.1, num.50. & inde.

The differences betweene the quickning of the spirit in the Regenerate, and vnregenerate, p.1126 § 7 & p.1127.

We may ioyne lawfull Recreations, with honest labours, part.3.lib. 2.c.32.p.989. § 4.

Our Religion must be grounded vpon Gods Truth, part.1.lib.1.cap. 10.p.21.col.1. § 2.

How those that are vnlearned may discerne the true Religion, from the false, pag.176. col.1. § 3.

Why the reliques of sinne doe still remaine in the Saints, p.298. § 13 14,15,16.

Relapse into the same sin is too frequent with some that feare God. The difference betweene the Relapses of the godly, and vngodly, pag. 306,307.

The Deuill tempteth people to delay their Repentance. Yet those that be wise should hasten it, part. 1.lib.2.cap.29.p.184. And why, § 1 2,3.4.5.

It is the more hard to repent the longer we deferre our Repentance. And why, cap.30.p.187.col.2. § 1 & inde.

Motiues to hasten our Repentance, cap.31.pag.191.col 1.§ 1.& inde, per totum caput.

Two lets doe hinder worldlings from Repentance. They are removed, c.32.p.195.col.1. § 1.per totum caput.

How Sathan may be defeated when he tempteth men to counterfeit their Repentance, cap.33.pag. 197.col.1. & inde per totum caput.

We must repent seriously, § 1.

What things are required of those that truly repent, § 2,3.

The promises of the Gospell are onely made to repenting Sinners, p.199.col.1.§ 4.

What the vndoubted signes of true Repentance are, c.43.p.236 col.1. ad finem & inde.

What the parts of it are, idem, ibidem. What the degres, pag.239 col.1. § 2.

Repentance must be presently performed, § 3.col 2. It must be constant, p.240. § 4. It ought to proceed from faith, § 5.

There are teares often where there is no Repentance, and true Repentance when there is no teares, col.2 § 6,7.

Wherein true Repentance consisteth, c.43.p.241.col.1.

Assurance of the forgiuenes of our sins, depends not vpon the worth of our Repentance, p.242. § 8.

Gods children ought not to be discouraged, because Reprobates can shew more outward signes of Repentance than themselues, col.2.§9

Vnfained Repentance is euer accompanied with seuen fruits, lib.3. c.2.p.284.col.1.num.50.

We must renue our Repentance as we reiterate our sins c.9.p.301.§2

Repentance is a meanes to preserue vs from afflictions part.3.lib. 1.c.4.p.769,770. § 9,11.

Repentance bringeth singular ioy and comfort, to them that remayne vnder the crosse, p.771. § 12.

Repentance must shew it selfe by the fruits therof, li.2.c.4.p.815.§ 3

Such as repent must make humble confession of their sins, p.815,816

Why true Repentance is called μετανοια, part.4.lib.1.cap.6.p. 1033.col.1.num.30.

The differences betweene true & false Repentance, c.13.p.1057.col. 2. § 4.

It is dangerous to defer our Repentance, c.15.p.1068. § 8.

The Spirit of God worketh Repentance, of which Repentance Faith is the foundation, and the cause, p.1124.§ 2,3.

How the Deuill is said to resist God, part.1.lib.1. cap.5.p.12.col.2 § 6.

Saint Paul grounded not the assurance of his Election vpon any reuelation, lib.2.c.8.p.104.col.1.

Concerning the Romane Religion. See the word Popery, & read a touch of it, part.2.lib.1. cap.2.p. 363.col.2.num.20.

Riches are good in their owne nature, part.2.lib.3.c.3.p.442.col. 2.§ 1.

They are mutably good, and of no great excellency, § 2.

Riches are of an indifferent nature in respect of their vse, p.443. col.1. § 3.

Riches are truly good to the Regenerate, that haue the right vse of them, § 4.

They are instruments and means of well-doing, § 5.

Diuers Enemies to Riches, pag. 444. col.2. § 6.

Riches are not to be reiected, because they are the blessings of God, p.445.col.1.§ 7.

Why Riches are called the Mammon of iniquity, § 8.

In what sense the Apostles are said to haue forsaken all § 9.

We may not ouer-value riches in our iudgements aboue their worth, p.446.c.4.col.2 § 1.

Riches ought not to be immoderately affected and desired, p.447 col.1. § 2.

Man may desire so much Riches as are necessary, p.448. col.2. § 3. And that either for his person, or his estate.

It is lawfull to desire a sufficient plenty of riches, p.449 col.1. § 4.

How farre forth it is lawfull to desire abundance of riches, col.2. § 5.

It vnlawfull to desire superfluous riches, p.450.col.2.§.6. For this desire is a signe of diffidence and distrust in God, § 7.

We may not pray for abundance of of riches, pag.451. col.1. § 8.

Of the right vse of riches in regard of their possession. First, wee must praise God for them, p.451. col.2. § 9. Secondly, wee should sanctifie them to our vse, by the Word of God and Prayer. Thirdly, wee may not set our hearts vpon them, § 10.

Wee must be contented with the riches we haue lawfully gotten, and willing to leaue them, when God calleth them away, p.452. § 11.

Take heed thy riches become not Satans snares, § 12.

Of the lawfull vse of riches, in regard of dispersing and disposing them, p.453. § 13.

It is good to relieue the poore with our riches, p.454.col.1. § 14

Riches are the occasion of many dangerous temptations, c.6.lib.2. p.459. § 5.

Riches are esteemed excellent, through opinion, p.472.c.9.col.1. § 3.

Riches are highly rated by reason of competition, pag.474. § 6. And because of the difficulty in obtayning them, p.475. col.2. § 8.

Worldly riches are to be contemned as vain, and worthles, p.504.c. 14.col.2. § 1.

Of the vanity of great Lands & Lordships, p.505.col.1. § 2. Of the vanity of gold and siluer, col.2.

The vanity of rich Iewels and costly furniture, p.506.col.2. § 4

Of the vanity of sumptuous buildings, p.507,508.col.2.§ 5.& inde

Of the vanity of a numerous Family, p.509. § 6.

Riches are lawfull to them that are of high calling, c.15.p.510.col. 2. § 1.

There is no satietie, or content in riches, c.17.p.530.col.2. § 7.

Worldly riches promise contentment, but they performe it not. And why, p.531.col.1. § 8.

Why the Prince of Hell and a rich man haue one and the same name, col.2.num.20.

Rich men through their abundance become more couetous. They want more than the poore, § 9.& pag.532. col.1. § 10.

What it is to be truly rich, pag. 532 col.1 num.20.

It is vaine to seeke for contentment in riches, col.2. § 11.

Riches doe not satisfie, because they are not vsed, 533.col.1. § 12.

The bare possession of riches maketh not rich, col.2. § 13.

Rich misers are of all others the most poore, § 14.& p. 534.

The miserable condition of rich misers, § 15. col.1.& inde.

Rich misers are neither good for themselues, nor others, p.535 § 16.

Riches defined, c.16 p.545.col. 2.num.50. & inde.

Why God maketh not all his children to be rich, p.546. § 11.

There is no profit in worldly riches c.20.p.552. § 3.

Riches are most vnprofitable to base misers, p.553.col.2. § 4.

The dangerousnesse of riches in diuers respects, c.25.p.585.col.1. num.40. & inde.

Riches depriue their bodies of rest, and their minds of peace, that too much loue them, pag.589,590. § 12.

How a man that possesseth riches, may be freed from worldly miseries, § 13.

Why riches are called goods, col. 2.num.50. & inde.

Riches compared to Ban-dogs, Riuers, springing Fountaines, to moth-eaten garments, to corne and meale kept too long. And why, p.591 col.1. ad initium, & inde.

Riches are most surely preserued when they are giuen to the poore, § 14.

Rich men are no more willing to loose of their estates, than the poore, p.594.col.2.num.40. & inde.

The great vncertainty of gayning worldly riches, p.601. § 8.

Of the miseries in getting, keeping, and foregoing worldly riches. See Misery.

All worldly riches are transitory, p.609. § 7.

Riches are daily in danger to be lost, and the greater the losse, the heauier the griefe, pag.610. § 8.

Which is the best way to preserue riches from losing, p.611. § 9.

Of the mutability and inconstancy of worldly riches, c.28. p.615 § 5.

The rich mans life is short, and vncertaine, cap.29 p.624. § 12.

Riches hurt those that immoderately desire them, by drawing them to sinne, c.30.p.630. § 3.

Why Riches are compared to thornes, p.630.col.2.num.50.

Riches withdraw mans heart from God, p.633.& inde, § 6.

Riches bring their Owners into miserable bondage, p.657,658, § 8.c 33.

The seruitude of rich men to their riches, is most grieuous, pag.658, 659.§ 9.

Riches bring with them many dangers, p.665. § 15.

Riches make way for the temptations of the Deuill, c.34.p.678. § 14.

Earthly riches hinder men from attaining euerlasting treasures, c. 35.p.685,686. § 5.

Riches augment a mans account at the Day of Iudgement, p.688.§ 5

Earthly riches are to be vnderprized in regard of heauenly, part. 2.lib.3 c.2.p.698. § 4.

The righteous that fall labour to rise againe, part.1.lib.1.cap.23. p.56.col.2.num.50.

Hungring and thirsting after righteousnesse is a signe of Election, c.12.p.123.col.2. § 5.

Rest not vpon thine owne righteousnesse, lib.2. cap.34. pag.203. § 2.

Imputatiue righteousnesse is not putatiue, cap.52.pag.270.col. 1. § 4.

God accepteth our imperfect righteousnesse, and why, lib.3.c.7. pag.296. col.2. § 7,8,9.

S

THe Sacraments are great helps, to further our assurance of Gods fauour, part. 1. lib. 2. cap. 9 p. 110.

What benefit wee enioy in vsing the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, c. 36. p. 209. col. 1. num. 50. & inde.

Our saluation is not of any worthinesse in vs, p. 88. § 7. It is wholy wrought by God alone, § 8.

Saul was neuer elected to saluation, lib. 3. c. 20. p. 338. col. 1, § 3.

Sathan signifieth an Aduersary,

Why the Deuill is so called, pag. 8 col. 1. num. 50.

Of the stratagems of Sathan, read part. 1. lib. 1. c. 17, 18, 19, 20.

How to discerne betweene the suggestions of Sathan, and the motions of Gods Spirit, cap. 20. p. 39 col. 1.

Sathan assaults when men are most secure, c. 21. p. 42. col. 2. § 2.

How Sathan draweth men to commit sin, c. 4. pag. 288. § 2. col. 1

Sampsons death is defended, part. 1. lib. 2. pag. 74. col. 2. § 6.

Our sanctification is the free gift of God, c. 4. p. 87. col. 2. § 5.

Wherein our Sanctification consisteth, p. 101. c. 7. col. 1. num. 10.

Sanctification is no cause of, but a principall meanes to assure our Election, p. 120. col. 1. ad initium.

Wherein this Sanctification is comprized, § 9.

How to discerne betweene true and counterfeit Sanctification, § 11. col. 2. & inde,

They that are sanctified cannot but be in the number of them that are redeemed, p. 146. § 1. Read more of Sanctification, what it is, lib. 3. c. 1. p 281. col. 1. num. 50.

The efficient cause of it is God himselfe, idem, ibidem.

Why we are exhorted to sanctifie our selues, p. 282. col. 1. num. 30.

The worke of Sanctification wrought in vs, is common to the three persons in Trinitie, § 2.

The moouing cause of it is Gods onely mercy, and Christs merits, § 3.

The instrumentall causes of it, are externall and internall, § 4. & p. 283.

How Sanctification is wrought, § 5.

The finall causes are Gods glory, and mans saluation, col. 2. § 6.

Of the effects of Sanctification, c. 2. p. 285. § 1.

All Gods Elect are the subiect of it, col. 2. § 2.

Wee must be sanctified throughout, idem ibidem.

Sanctification is presently begun vpon conuersion, § 3.

How mortification and viuification are reckoned as parts of Sanctification, vbi supra, § 1.

The worke of Sanctification is not finished in an instant, pag. 287 col. 2. § 6.

Our Sanctification is imperfect, and mingled with corruption, c. 7. p. 294. col. 2. § 2.

Wee may not imagine perfection should be in our Sanctification, p. 295. col. 1. § 3.

Which ought not to discourage, but should cause that wee redouble our diligence, because the reliques of sin, shall not be imputed vnto vs, § 4, 5.

And the Lord now requireth not of vs perfect obedience, p. 296. § 6

Why the Lord accepteth our imperfect righteousnesse, § 7, 8.

Why he inabled vs not vnto perfection, p 297. & inde, § 9, 10, 11, 12, & inde.

The sanctified in their combate against sin, may be foiled, yet in the end they shall haue the victory, pag. 299. § 17.

God hath as certainly decreed our Sanctification, as our saluation: and will make it perfect, p. 300 § 3, 4.

To be sanctified is taken two wayes, p. 342. col. 2. num. 40.

The Deuils disabling of the Scriptures, is refuted, part. 1. lib. 2 c. 21. p. 161. & inde.

The Scriptures beyond all other Books are of greatest antiquity, § 2

They are pure and perfect, p. 162 col. 1. § 3.

The writers of them are sincere, § 4.

The Scriptures are admirable, for their consent, p. 163. col. 1. 5.

They haue been miraculously preserued, § 6.

Diuers miracles haue confirmed them, § 7. p. 163, 164. So hath the testimony of Martyrs, p. 164. § 8.

The argument handled in them, doth euidence the authority of them, c. 22. p. 164. col. 2. § 1.

Their stile shewes their authority, p. 165, § 2.

Why the Scriptures are penned in a plaine stile, p. 166. § 3.

The contents of Scripture, are aboue the reach of humane reason, p. 167. col. 1. § 4.

The Prophecies in the Scriptures, do proue the authority of the Scriptures, col. 2. § 5.

The writers of the Scripture are not forged, p. 168. § 6.

The Bookes of Scripture did not perish in the tyrannous time of Antiochus, p. 169. col. 1. § 7.

Gods Spirit can onely perswade, that the Scriptures are the word of God, c. 23. p. 169. col. 2. § 1.

Other arguments may conuince, yet they perswade not, p. 170. § 2.

The spirit fully assureth and perswadeth it, col. 2. § 3. And that by our owne feeling and experience § 4.

The Scriptures are truly translated, c. 24. p. 171. col. 2.

Differences of Translations are no hinderance to the holy, pag. 172 col. 1. § 2.

How to vnderstand darke and hard places of the Scripture, p. 176 col. 2. ad initium, & inde.

Varietie of Sects is a great snare of Sathan to preiudice Religion.

How it may be auoided, part. 1. lib. 2. c. 26. p. 175. col. 1. & inde.

Security is caused by earthly abundance, part. 2. lib. 2. c. 34. § 8. p. 673.

Carnall security is the ground of worldly peoples peace, part. 1. lib. 1. c. 1. p. 2.

Sin is oftentimes preuented by temptation, part. 1. lib. 1. c. 2. p. 4 col. 2. num 20.

Sathan is the father, and our flesh is the mother of sinne, cap. 7. pag.

pag. 16. col. 2. num. 20.

Thoſe ſinnes are moſt dangerous whereof wee haue the leaſt ſence, cap.21.pag.44.col.1. ad finem, & inde.

God ſpared not ſinne in his owne Sonne, lib.2. cap.5.pag.93.col.2. num.30.

The ſight of, and ſorrow for ſin, is a ſigne of a mans Election, pag.123. col.1. § 4.

Sin will quickly grow into a cuſtome, cap.30. pag. 187. col.2. § 4.

The ſtrength of ſin increaſeth by continuance, p.188.col.2. § 4.

So much ioy doth not accompany, as ſorrow followeth ſin, c.31.p. 191.col.1. § 1.

Repentance of ſin in the time of ſickneſſe is often vnſound, p. 193. 194.col.2. § 5.

How to obtaine a true ſight of ſin, cap.33. pag. 199,200. col.2. § 5.

Sinne muſt be grieuous to the Saints that would repent, pag.200 col.1. ad finem & inde.

They muſt deſire to be freed from it, § 7.

The grieuouſnes of ſinne cannot debarre Penitents from Gods mercy, cap.34.p 205.col.2. § 5.

God hath puniſhed the ſins of the Saints, cap.35.pag.207. col.2. ad initium, & inde.

The vſe of the Brazen Serpent, c.36.p.210.col.2.num.50. & cap. 48.p.265.col.1.num.30.

Sin cannot debarre them of Gods mercy, that repent and beleeue, p. 211.col.1. § 6.

How the ſinne againſt the Holy Ghoſt becomes vnpardonable, col.2 num.10.

Chriſts merits and Gods mercy are manifeſted, by the forgiueneſſe of grieuous Sinners, c.37.pag.214 § 4.

Chriſt promiſeth to receiue all Sinners, and he neuer refuſed any that came vnto him, p.217. § 9.

We are to beleeue the forgiuenes of ſins, it being an Article of our Creed, cap. 38. pag. 219. col. 1. § 1.

Impenitent Sinners haue nothing to doe with the comfort of the godly, p.222.col.2. § 8.

How wee may be preſerued from ſinne.

Firſt, by conſideration of Gods loue towards vs.

Secondly, of Gods benefits to vs.

Thirdly, of the ſufferings of our Sauiour for vs.

Fourthly, by remembring the vnion betweene vs and Chriſt.

Fiftly, thinking on the Spirit of God that dwelleth in vs, p.288 289,290. § 4,5,6,7.

Other preſeruatiues againſt ſin, ſight of Gods all-ſeeing Wiſdome, of his exact Iuſtice, of his fierce Anger, of the Day of Iudgement, of the manifold euils that come by ſinne, cap.5. pag.291. & inde. § 1,2,3,4,5.

Speciall meanes whereby men may be enabled to auoid ſin.

Firſt, flie the occaſion of it.

Secondly, make conſcience of the leaſt ſin.

Thirdly, ſtand ſtill vpon thy guard.

Fourthly, reſt not on thine owne power, but on Gods aſſiſtance.

Fiftly, pray feruently, c.6.p.293 294. § 1,2,3,4,5.

The differences betweene the ſins of the righteous, and vnregenerate, c.9. p.302. § 5.

Sinnes committed after repentance by the faithfull may be dolefull, but they are not deadly. And why, cap.10. pag.303. col.1.num. 30. & inde.

All ſins committed againſt knowledge and conſcience, are not preſumptuous, § 3.

What it is to ſinne preſumptuouſly, p.304. col.1. ad initium.

Sins of knowledge are pardonable, § 4.

A Chriſtian may fall into preſumptuous ſins, and yet be receiued vnto mercy, § 15.

It is a fearefull thing to fall often into the ſame ſinne willingly, p.305. § 6.

Yet it may be the caſe of many a deare childe of God, who for all that ſhall be receiued vnto mercy, p.306. & inde.

Of the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, c.12.p.314.

Sin in Scripture is vſually called by the name of folly, and Sinners are tearmed Fooles, part. 2. lib.1.cap 9.pag.388.col.2.num. 40.

God needeth not to infuſe ſin into Sinners, it is enough to the committing of it, that wee are left to our ſelues, part.3. lib.1. cap. 1. pag. 755. col. 1. ad initium.

God is not the authour of ſin, idem ibidem.

How God puniſheth one ſinne with another, col.2.num.50.

Sinners are made righteous by faith in Chriſt, and purged by repentance, lib 2. cap.4.p.814. § 2.

God inflicteth lighter puniſhments vpon Sinners than their ſins deſerue, cap.8.pag.842.col.1 § 6.

The hainouſneſſe of ſinne may appeare, firſt, from the perſon, who is with it offended, § 7.

Secondly, from the puniſhments that Gods Iuſtice allotteth vnto it, pag.842,843 § 8.

Sin is moſt odious to God, which appeareth firſt from the perſons that are puniſhed for it, pag.844 § 9.

Secondly, from the contrariety betweene it and Gods nature, pag. 845. § 10.

We are all guilty of all manner of ſin, § 11.

God vſeth meanes, firſt, to preuent ſin, and ſecondly, to mortifie and ſubdue it, c.19.p.110. § 3.

No ſin ought to bee eſteemed ſo ſmall, as that wee ſhould willingly commit it, part.4. lib.2. cap.23. p 1155.

For firſt by the leaſt ſinne, Gods Law is tranſgreſſed, § 1.

Secondly, great euils come by the leaſt ſins, p.1156. § 2.

Thirdly, ſmall ſins willingly entertained, are no leſſe dangerous than the greateſt, p.1157. § 3.

Fourthly, to auoid small sins, is a notable meanes to preserue from the greater, § 4.

Fifily, the least sins are the poyson of the soule, and the liuery of Sathan, p.1158. § 5.

Sixthly, Enemies proone most dangerous when they are most despised, § 6.

Seuenthly, If wee doe not hate the small aswell as the great, wee hate none with a Christian hatred, p.1158. col.2. § 7.

We must neglect no sin, as though we were in no danger of falling into it, p.1159. § 8.

Sin much weakens the Spirit of God, cap.24. pag.1160.col.2. § 1. See more of sin in the word flesh, and the lusts thereof.

Of some speciall sins whereby the Spirit of God in man is much weakned. Ignorance, Infidelity, Impenitencie, carnall security, the loue of the world, p.1161. § 2.

Wee may not prouide for the spirit poyson, in stead of wholsome food, nor carnall weapons in stead of spirituall, p.1162. § 3.

We may not remit of our zeale in holy duties, p.1163. § 4.

We must auoid fleshly sloth, and negligence, col.2. § 5.

The Deuill is a slanderer, and thereupon hath his name διάβολος, part.1. lib.1. cap.4. pag.9. col.2. ad finem.

Though the Enemies of our soules be spirituall, wee should not be dismayed to fight against them, c.5.p.13.col.2.§ 10.

Salomon was vndoubtedly saued, part.1.lib.3. cap.20 pag.339 col.1. § 5.

Wee are Souldiers in this life, and therefore haue reason to looke for hard vsage, part.3. lib.2.c.28. pag.967. § 4.

The soule of man is assaulted by Sathan aswell as his body. No part of man is more corrupted than his soule, part.4. lib.1.cap.6.pag.1032 § 2,3.

The soule chiefly sinneth, and therein the mind, and vnderstanding, p.1033. § 4,5,6.

The soule onely properly sinneth, p.1034. § 7.

Wee ought to labour to haue all our spirituall graces in sincerities, c.13.p.1056. § 2.

To the spirituall, the actions of the flesh cannot properly be ascribed, part.1. lib.1 c.23. p.59.col.1. num.10.

The testimony of Gods Spirit is vndoubted, and easie to be discerned. How we may judge between it and presumption, lib.2.cap.10. p.114,115,116,117. & inde.

How to discerne the fight that is betweene the flesh and the spirit, c.44.p.247. & inde, § 12.

The word Spirit is diuersly taken, part.4. lib.1. cap.3. pag. 1019 § 1.

It signifieth the regenerate part in man. And why it is so called, § 2.

The spirit of God dwelleth not in the Saints essentially, more than in other creatures, p.1021. § 5.

The faithfull haue a speciall right to the essence of the spirit, and hee dwelleth in them in respect of efficacy, p.1022.§ 6.

Euery faithfull person may be assured the spirit of God dwelleth in him, lib.2. cap.11.pag.1112. § 1.

First, from the meanes whereby it is wrought in him, p.1113.col.2 § 2.

Secondly, by the fruits of the spirit, by the nature of the gifts in vs, p.1114. § 3.

Which may be knowne by their continuall operations, § 4.

Particularly, the spirit inlightneth, § 5.

How the spirit prepares our hearts for faith, and then workes it in vs, c.12.p.1116. § 1.

We may know the spirit dwelling in vs, first, if it be a spirit of adoption. Secondly, of supplication, c.14.p.1122,1123.§ 1,2.

The worke of the spirit is to procure sanctification from, and repentance in, those that are spirituall, c.15.p.1123.§ 1. & inde.

The spirit dwelling in any, purgeth them from their naturall corruptions, pag. 1125. § 5.

It quickeneth in the inner man, § 6. And thereby is knowne to be in vs, p.1126.

The spirit of God is compared to Wine and Oile, cap.16.p.1127. § 1. To water, § 2. To fire, pag.1128. § 3.

By all which comparisons we may judge whether the spirit dwelleth in vs, p.1129. § 4.

The spirit worketh in all them in whom it is, sanctifying, and sauing graces, cap.17. pag.1130,1131.§ 1,2,3.

Meanes to strengthen the spirit of God in man is to auoid all things that may weaken it, whereof sin is the chiefe, c.24.p.1160. & inde, § 1,2,3,4,5.

Meanes whereby to comfort the spirit in the Christian conflict, first, haue earnest and longing desires after spirituall strength, cap.25.p. 1164. § 1.

Secondly, endeuour carefully in the vse of all good meanes for the strengthening of it, § 2.

Thirdly, Nourish the good motions of it, p.1165. § 3.

Fourthly, take serious care to maintaine peace with God, and our owne consciences, § 4. col.2. & p. 1166.

Fiftly, preserue your selues pure from all pollution, § 5.

Sixtly, keepe the spirit and the graces thereof in continuall exercise, § 6.

Seuenthly, be frequent and feruent in prayer, p.1167. § 7.

Euill speeches of vngodly men are very corrupting, with-draw from God, and are exceeding dangerous, part.2. lib.1.cap.18.p.424, 425. § 7,8,9.

Strength without wit, is like a Gyant without eyes, part.1.lib.1.c. 8.p.17.col.2.num.20.

The strength of the body is in it selfe good, but it is often abused through our corruption, part.2.lib. 1.c.15.p.414.col.1. § 1.

It is great vanity to glory in it, for God esteemeth it not, & beasts excell in it, § 2.

It is momentany, and of a short continuance, § 3.

It cannot deliuer from dangers and euils, pag. 415. § 4.

Why the sufferings of the faithfull are called the sufferings of Christ, part. 3. lib. 2. cap. 28. pag. 969. col. 2. num. 30. & inde.

Of the sword of the spirit. Reade part. 1. lib. 1. c. 15. p. 25. per totum caput.

There you shall find. First what it is. Secondly how fit it is for the vse of the faithfull. Thirdly how we are to vse it. Fourthly that it behoueth all good Christians to haue skill in the vse it. And lastly the folly of all such as neglect it.

The heathen man reproued those that rather sought pleasures in tauernes than in their owne houses, part. 2. lib. 2. cap. 16. p. 526. col. 1. num. 20.

Why teares are not numbred among the signes of vnfained repentance, part. 1. lib. 2. cap. 43. pag. 240. 241. § 6, 7.

Teares proceed from diuers causes, pag. 240. col. 2. num. 10. & inde.

Temporaries are terribly deceaued, part. 4. lib. 1. cap. 13. pag. 1056. § 1.

How to discerne true faith, from that which is temporary, pag. 1057. col. 1. § 3.

Why God suffereth his seruants to be tempted, part. 1. lib. 1. cap. 2. pag. 4. per totum & pag. 5. col. 1. ad initium.

The end of Sathans temptations is to dishonour God, and destroy vs, part. 1. lib. 1. cap. 3. pag. 6.

Why Sathan is called the Tempter, cap. 4. pag. 9. col. 1. num. 40. § 4.

The manner of Sathans tempting men, cap. 17.

How to defeate his temptations, § 7. pag. 32.

The Deuill will often change his temptations for his owne aduantage. Which is a good signe that he cannot preuaile with the tempted, cap. 21. pag. 43. § 4.

Sathans temptations are like our owne carnall thoughts. His aduantage thereby, how to auoid this danger, and discerne betweene the one and the other, pag. 46. § 10, 11, 12.

How they that are fallen into temptation, are to behaue themselues, cap. 23. pag. 56. col. 2. § 1.

Of temptations that come vpon Sathans bare command, and how they may be resisted, lib. 2. cap. 2. § 1. & inde.

The Deuils temptations no impediment to hinder the Saints from being assured of their redemption, cap. 18. pag. 151. col. 1. ad finem § 7.

Why God suffereth his children to be tempted, idem, ibidem. col. 2. num. 50. & inde.

How to discerne Sathans temptations from the testimony of the Spirit of God, cap. 44. pag. 243, 244. § 3, 4.

Worldly thoughts hinder the profitable hearing of Gods word, cap. 28. pag. 181. col. 2. § 4.

Many presume of mercy, vpon the example of the conuerted Thiefe. That instance examined, cap. 32. pag. 196. § 3.

Worldly things expose men to many temptations, part. 2. lib. 2. cap. 34. pag. 677. § 12, 13, 14, 15.

Thankes is to be giuen to God for our deliuerance out of afflictions. What kind of thankes it is, that is required, part. 3. lib. 2. cap. 35. p. 1007, 1008, 1009. § 7, 8.

What thriftinesse is, wee are exhorted to it, part. 2 lib. 2. cap. 4. pag. 453. col. 1. num. 30.

We ought to keepe an especiall watch ouer our tongues, part. 4. lib. 2. cap. 21. pag. 1149. § 4.

The venemous nature of the Torpedo. part. 2. lib. 2. cap. 33. pag. 660. col. 2. num. 30.

We must professe the truth, in truth, part. 1. lib. 1. cap. 10. pag. 21. col. 2. § 3.

The Deuill neuer speaketh truth but for aduantage, part. 1. lib. 1. cap. 21. pag. 50. col. 1. § 7.

God is true in all his promises, lib. 2. cap. 36. pag. 208 col. 2. § 1.

Reasons may be drawne from the Trinity and each person therein to assure a truely penitent sinner, of the forgiuenesse of his sinnes, cap. 37. pag. 213. col. 1. § 1. & inde.

V

MOtiues to make Gods children full of valour, to vndergoe the spirituall combate, part. 1. lib. 1. cap. 3. per totum.

How the Deuill assaulteth the vaine glorious, cap. 17. pag. 31. § 5.

Vaine glory is no true honour, but false and counterfeit, part. 2. lib. 2. cap. 10. pag. 477. col. 2. § 1.

It is vnprofitable, pag. 478. col. 1. § 2.

Wee are enioyned in Scripture to contemne vaine-glory, pag. 478 col. § 3.

It is folly to affect it, § 4.

The best glory is in Gods approbation, and the testimony of our owne consciences, § 5. col. 2. lit. p. 480.

It is vnseasonable now to seeke glory, col. 2. § 6.

It becommeth Christians to contemne earthly vanities, and affect heauenly excellencies, lib. 2. cap. 6. pag. 461. col. 2. § 9.

Sathan tempteth vs to be proud of our vertues, part. 1. lib. 1. cap. 26. pag. 41. col. 2. § 5.

Vertue deferred groweth more vnpleasant, lib. 2. cap. 30. pag. 189. col. 1. § 5.

Ciuill vertues do not benefit but hurt those that rest in them, part. 2. lib. 1. cap. 7. pag. 378. § 1.

What is required to a vertuous action to make it truely good, pag. 379. § 2.

Our vertues must arise from the true worship of God, pag. 380. col. 1. § 3.

They must bee grounded vpon godlinesse, § 4.

They must arise from true charity, § 5.

They must bee grounded vpon true knowledge, pag. 381. § 6.

Our morall vertues must bee ioyned with true faith, § 7.

They ought to bee discharged in obedience to God and true humility, § 8, 9.

Gods glory must be the end of all our vertuous actions, pag. 382. § 10.

Worldly men in their morall vertues regard none of the former conditions, § 11.

The Romans propounded to themselues honour as the end of all their vertues, p. 383. num. 20.

Wee are to contemne morall vertues, and to hunger and thirst after Christs righteousnesse, § 12.

Great honour attends them that get victory in the combate of godlinesse, part. 1. lib. 1. cap. 3. pag. 6. col. 2. num. 40.

We are, or may bee assured of victory, cap. 5. pag. 12. col. 2. § 7.

How to gaine it, pag. 13. § 8.

Whilst the Deuill is vanquished, he obtaineth victory, cap. 22. pag. 50. ad initium.

None are crowned but those that get the victory, part. 2. lib. 1. c. 1. p. 357. § 7.

There bee two degrees of the Spirits victory, in behalfe of the children of God, part. 4. lib. 2. c. 18. pag. 1139. & inde. § 14, 15.

The case of Virgins that murthered themselues discussed, part. 1. lib. 2. c. 2. p. 73. col. 1.

Of the vision of God. See the ioyes of Heauen.

Viuification what it is, and the cause thereof, part. 1. lib. 3. cap. 286 287. col. 2. § 4.

How this viuification is wrought in vs, § 5.

Of our vnion with Christ, which is not naturall, nor personall, but spirituall lib. 2. cap. 19. pag. 157. § 5. col. 1.

How many wayes our vnion with Christ is expressed, cap. 37. pag. 217, 218. § 10.

They may bee vnited to Christ, that yet bring forth no fruits, or those very small, of holinesse, p. 226. col. 2. § 10.

Of the vnregenerate. See in the head regenerate, of this table.

Vnworthinesse is cause, why we should doubt of our election, cap. 14. pag. 134. col. 2. § 2.

Of the meanes of our vocation, lib. 2. cap. 19. pag. 157. § 6. col. 2.

The benefit of vocation, cap. 7. pag. 100. ad finem, col. 2. & inde.

Of our vocation what it is, it is generall, and effectuall what these are, pag. 155. cap. 19. § 1. 2, 3. & inde.

The seuerall parts of effectuall vocation, idem, ibidem, & pag. 156. § 3, 4. 5.

How Sathan studieth, in his temptations to make the vocation of Gods Children ineffectuall, pag. 157. cap. 20 per totum, caput.

Holinesse is no cause of our vocation, but vocation is a cause of holinesse, p. 156. col. 1. num. 30. & inde.

How a man may know his vocation, whether he be effectually called, yea or no, cap. 39. pag. 223. per totum caput.

What the meanes of effectuall vocation are § 2, 3.

What the parts of vocation are, pag. 224, 225, 226. § 5, 8, 9.

How the Deuill tempteth the voluptuous, lib. 1. part. 1. cap. 17. p. 31. § 3.

W

Gods wages to them that fight for him, and Sathans for them that doe the contrary, part. 1. lib. 1. cap. 3. p. 6. col. 1. num. 10 & inde.

The cause of warre is a matter of of great waight. cap. 3. pag. 5. col. 1. ad finem & 2.

Peace is the daughter of warre, col. 2. ad finem.

Watchfulnesse required of Christians. Of the bodily and spirituall watchfulnesse, cap. 16. p. 28. § 6. 7.

How the way to heauen is said to be strait, part. 2. lib. 2. cap. 26. pag. 604. col. 1. num. 30 & inde.

The Spirit of God is compared to water, for fiue reasons, part. 4. lib. 2. cap. 16. p. 1127. § 2.

Wherein the chiefe wisdome of man consisteth, part. 1. lib. 1. cap. 8. p. 18. § 4.

How the Deuill tempteth the notoriously wicked, c. 18. p. 33. col. 2. § 3.

All the properties required in a true witnesse, concurre in the holy Ghost. part. 1. lib. 2. cap. 10. p. 114. num. 40.

A distinction of wisdome into diuine and morall, What either of these is, part. 2. lib. 1. cap. 8 pag. 384. § 1.

Wherein this spirituall wisdome consisteth § 2.

It is alwayes ioyned with practice and obedience, § 3.

It is onely to be learned, out of Gods Word, p. 385. § 4.

What the properties of it are, § 5

It is highly to be esteemed, § 6.

Of worldly wisdome, c. 9. p. 386.

The cautions that are required to make it lawfull, § 1.

The worldly wisdome is vnlawfull, first, when it is ioyned with prid, § 2.

Secondly when it is seuered from sincerity and simplicity, pag. 387, § 3.

VVorldly wisedome is to be contemned, First because God regardeth it not, §.

The deuill is the authour of it, pag. 388. § 5.
It resembleth Sathan in his malitious opposing against God, § 6.
It is foolishnesse with God, § 7.
It is ioyned with lying and vntruth, pag. 389. § 8.
Vpon dissimulation and deceit, § 9.
Vpon trechery and treason, § 10.
It propounded wicked ends, pag. 390. § 11.
Worldly wisdome hath alwayes beene much imbraced and esteemed in the world, § 12.
It vnderstandeth not the spirituall things of God, p. 391. col. 1. § 13.
The reason why it doth not so, § 14.
Worldly wisdome doth not assure men of the vaine things of this life, pag. 392. § 15.
God turneth it into foolishnesse, § 16.
Worldly wisdome hindreth the fruition of spirituall benefits, § 17.
It doth not priuiledge men, from Gods fearefull iudgement, pag. 393. § 18.
It bringeth with it much hurt, § 19.
Other euils whereinto it plungeth men, pag. 394. § 20.
Wee are to contemne it, and labour after that which is spirituall, § 21.
There is in man a reasonable, and a sensuall will. Neither of them being sinfull, or vnlawfull, part. 4. lib. 2. cap. 8. pag. 1101. col. 2. num. 40.
The Spirit of God is compared to wind, for foure reasons, cap. 16. pag. 1127. col. 2. num. 20. & inde.
Strength without wit is like a Gyant without eyes, part. 1. lib. 1. cap. 8. pag. 17. col 2. num. 20.
The Deuill is neuer weary of assaulting mankind, cap. 21. pag. 42. 43. § 3.
To be weaned from the loue of the world, is a good signe of election, lib. 2. cap. 12. pag. 122. § 3.
The titles that are giuen to the word of be admirable, cap. 20. pag. 159. col. 1. § 5.
By the word of God many benefits are deriued vnto men, col. 2. § 6.
The word of God is to be diligently heard, pag. 160. § 7.
It is the food of our soules, § 8.
How those that are giuen to Christ keepe his word, pag. 226. num. 10 & inde.
The benefits we haue by the word of God, part. 3. lib. 1. cap. 5. pag. 771. § 1.
How mens workes may become acceptable to God, part. 1. lib. 1. cap. 18. pag. 53. col. 1. num. 50. & inde.
Good works are necessarily required, as fruits of our iustification, lib. 2. part. 1. cap. 52. pag. 275. col. 1. num. 20. & inde.
They are no causes but effects of iustification, pag. 280. cap. 53. § 3.
What is meant by the world. It is a great enemy to the faithfull, part. 1. lib. 1. cap. 6. § 1. pag. 14.
The world is lesse dangerous when it frownes, than when it fawnes, ibidem. § 4.
Worldly wisdome cannot free from the danger of the Deuill, pag. 18. col. 2. § 3.
Why Sathan seldome tempteth meere worldlings, lib. 2. cap. 36. pag. 212. col. 2. ad initium.
How a good Christian may loue the world, and yet be blameless, c. 39. p. 224. col. 2. num. 30. & inde.
The world loueth them not whom Sathan hateth, p. 225. col. 2. num. 20.
The world is sometimes taken in good part, and so to be loued as a friend, part. 2. lib. 1. cap. 1. pag. 359. § 2.
In what sense the world is to be reputed our enemy, col. 2. & pag. 359. § 3.
How wicked worldlings may be hated, pag. 359. § 4.
The world is wicked in it selfe, yeelding obedience to Sathan as the prince thereof, cap. 2. col. 2. § 1.
Why the wicked in the world, are called the world, pag. 360. col. 1. num. 10.
The world fighteth vnder Sathan against God, § 2.
The world is a most dangerous enemy, § 3. And malicious, pag. 361. § 4. And subtle, § 5. And powerfull, § 6.
The worlds strength against vs is increased by our owne corruption, pag. 362. col. 1. § 7.
You may perceiue the power of the world, by the experience of former times, col. 2. § 8.
Why it ouercame the Heathen, pag. 363. col. 1. num. 10.
It hath preuailed with many professors of religion, num. 20. & inde.
The power of the world shewed by experience of the present times, col. 2. § 9.
The world often preuaileth with Gods seruants. pag. 364. § 10.
Reasons to moue vs to fight against the world.
First God commands it. Secondly, Christ suffrings require it. Thirdly, the friends of the world are enemies of God. Fourthly, if we renounce it not, we shall not appeare faithfull. Fiftly, Christian religion cals for it. Sixtly, the way of the world is the way of sinne. Seauenthly, if we doe it not, wee are not Christs disciples. Eighthly, we shall shew our selues apostates. Ninthly, we shall be sure of victory. Tenthly, at that time we shall atcheiue a great reward, cap. 3. pag. 364, 365, 366, 367. § 1. 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10.
The worlds weapons wherewith it assaults the seruants of God, are prosperity and aduersity. How it fighteth with these weapons, cap. 4. pag. 367. 368, 369.
Beware of the world when it fawneth, c. 5. p. 371. col. 1. § 3.
Worldly things are Sathans chiefe baites, to draw our hearts from God, part. 2. lib. 2. c. 1. p. 429. § 1.
Worldly honours, riches, and pleasures are in their owne nature good, and the gifts of God, col. 2. § 2.

They are but mutably good, and therefore subiect to abuse and corruption, pag. 430. col. 1. § 3.

We ought not to reiect worldly things, but to beware the abuse of them, § 4. col. 2.

To the right vse of worldly things is required, First that our persons be regenerate, pag. 431. § 5.

We must not preferre them before Gods spirituall graces, col. 2. § 6.

We ought not to set our hearts vpon them. p. 432. § 7. col. 1.

We must seeke them in the last place, pag. 433. § 8.

We must not seeke worldly things for their owne sakes, col. 2. § 9.

We ought onely to vse lawfull means for the getting of them, § 10

How these worldly things may be possessed, and disposed, pag. 434 col. 1.

Through our corruption we abuse Gods worldly blessings cap. 6. lib. 2. pag. 457. col. 2. § 1.

Hereby they come to be matter of grieuous temptation, pag. 458. col. 1. § 2.

Sathan vseth them as baits to allure to sin, § 3.

In what respects worldly things are to be contemned. And in what regards they ought to be desired, pag. 460. col. 1 § 7.

They are chiefly abused when we make idols of them, col. 2. § 8.

The signes wherby we may iudge, whether we be infected with the loue of the world.

First, such thinke vpon things in it, with greatest pleasure, with vnwearied delight, cap. 7. pag. 462. col. 2. § 1.

Secondly, they speake of them with greatest affection of comfort, pag. 463. col. 1. § 2.

In what sense these signes are to bee conceiued, pag. 464. col. 1. § 3.

Thirdly, they most desire them, take most care for, and vse no lesse meanes for the gaining of them, § 4.

Fourthly they take most ioy in keeping, and haue the greatest griefe for the loosing of them, pag. 465. § 5.

How this particular is to be vnderstood, pag. 466. col. 2. § 6.

The best are too much tainted with the loue of the world, cap. 18. col. 2. § 1.

Remedies to cure the disease of the loue of the world, pag. 467. col. 1. § 2.

The best things the world can boast of, are but meere vanities, col. 2. § 3.

This is proued by testimonies, pag. 468, 469. § 4, 5.

Worldly things are but Gods common gifts, pag. 469, col. 2. § 6. Bestowed vpon the wicked, aswell as the godly, pag. 470. § 7. Reprobates abound with them, aswell as Gods seruants, for they haue riches. § 8. Pleasures, col. § 9.

The Lord in worldly things dealeth with his people, as a Phisitian with his patient, pag. 471. col. 1. num. 20.

The commonnesse in bestowing worldly things sheweth their baseness, idem, ibidem. § 10.

Worldly things come to be highly valued onely by reason of opinion, cap. 9. pag. 471. & inde.

Competition, maketh worldly things to bee high rated, 473. § 5, 6.

Worldly things are extolled because they are difficult to be obtained, pag. 475. § 7, 8.

Worldly things are more esteemed for their rarenesse, than their goodnesse, pag. 476. § 10.

Worldly things doe not bring that contentment with they promise, cap. 17. pag. 526. & inde.

Worldly things possessed doe but inflame the desire, pag. 527. § 2.

Why the mind of man cannot be satisfied with worldly things, § 3.

It is great folly to seeke for content in worldly things when they abound, pag. 528, 529.

See examples shewing that worldly things will not giue content, § 5.

Why worldlings are full of discontent, cap. 18. pag. 538. col. 2. § 4.

Worldly things in stead of satisfaction, bring satiety, pag. 539. col. 2. § 5.

From the insufficiency of worldly things to satisfie, proceedeth an endlesse desire of change, pag. 540. 541. § 6, 7.

Why the Lord giueth worldly things to some, and not to others, p. 548. col. 2. § 10.

There is no profitablenesse in worldly things, to those that set their hearts vpon them, cap. 20. pag. 551. § 1.

Worldly things doe not make vs truely better, pag. 555. 556.

Neither riches, honours, nor worldly pleasures, § 6, 7.

Worldly things helpe not to inrich our minds with vertue, and Gods sauing graces, cap. 21. pag. 557. § 1.

They doe not make more fruitfull in good workes, p. 558. § 2.

They doe not make more merry or chearefull, p. 559. § 3.

They neither assure vs of the loue of God or men, pag. 560. col. 2. § 5.

They doe not deliuer vs from dangers, p. 561. § 6.

They doe not cure the body of diseases, § 7. & pag. 561. 562.

Worldly things profit not in the day of Gods fearefull visitation, p. 563, 564.

Nor at the houre of death, pag. 564. § 10.

Worldly things are like Ice, or the brookes of Arabia; faile at neede, idem, ibidem.

At the day of death, they bring much griefe and bitternesse, pag. 565. § 11.

They profit not after death, pag. 566. § 12.

Nor at the day of iudgement, § 13.

All worldly benefits art imbittered with manifold miseries, cap. 22. p. 568. per totum caput.

Of the loathsame satiety that many men find in worldly things, p. 571. § 6.

Worldly things are not gotten without great labour, cap. 25. pag. 582. § 3.

Worldly men take their chiefe paines for superfluities, § 4.

Mens labour in getting worldly things is vsually accompanied with sinne, § 6 & pag. 584.

Of the wicked courses which worldlings vse in getting honours and riches, pag. 584. § 7. & pag. 585.

Worldly pleasures are seldome procured without sinne, pag. 586. § 8.

Worldlings often faile in their desires, and loose all their labour, cap. 26. pag. 595. § 1. col. 2.

The world and the prince thereof, abuseth its fauourits with false promises, p. 596. § 2.

Worldlings by their immoderate labour doe often loose the aduantage of all their labour, pag. 598 § 4.

The World is corruptible, and shall haue an end cap. 27. pag. 604. § 1.

The corruptibleneſſe of the world and neereneſſe of its end, should moue vs not to loue it, pag. 605. § 2.

All worldly things are momentany and cannot be inioyed without feare of loosing them, pag. 606. § 3,4.

The corruptibility of worldly things, should weane our hearts from fond loue of them, pag. 607. § 5.

Worldly things are mutable and vnconstant, cap. 28. pag. 612. § 1.

Worldly men are compared to shell-fish, pag. 614. col. 1. num. 40.

Worldly things enioyed are not theirs that possesse them, cap. 29. pag. 623.

The hope of worldlings, that thinke they leaue all to their heires, is vaine and vncertaine, pag. 625. § 13.

Worldly things are immoderatly hurtfull to those that loue them, cap. 30. pag. 629. per totum caput.

They withdraw our hearts from God, pag. 632. & inde. § 5.

Preseruatiues against the loue of the world pag. 634. & inde.

Worldly things immoderately loued are occasions of idolatry, pag. 635. § 8.

Worldly things make men forgetfull of God, cap. 31. pag. 637. § 1. And vnthankefull vnto him, § 2. & pag. 638.

They bring with them contempt of God, pag. 641. 642. § 6.

And of spirituall grace, and heauenly glory, pag. 642. 643. § 7.

Worldly things abounded in, make men sloathfull in the duties of Gods seruice, pag. 643, 644. § 8,9.

Worldly things immoderately loued, are the cause of all kind of iniustice, cap. 34. pag. 646. § 1.

They thrust men on, to the committing of outragious sinnes, and wrongs, p. 648. § 2.

Worldly increases procure enuy and malice, p. 644. § 3.

They make men proud and insolent towards their Neighbours, § 4. & p. 640. § 5.

Worldly things inioyed doe effeminate a mans mind, cap. 32. p. 651. 652. § 1.

The fruition of them, makes a man stand in need of many things, p. 652, 653, 654.

They bring men into greeuous seruitude, pag. 654, 655. § 4.

Worldlings are slaues in diuers respects, § 5.

Worldly things make their owners slaues to themselues, pag. 656. § 6.

Fulneſſe of worldly things, brings enuy and hatred to the owners, pag. 661. § 11.

They are the causes of all emnity and discord, pag. 663. 663. § 12.

They expose their owners to innumerable dangers, pag. 664. § 13.

Worldly things choake the seed of Gods word, cap. 34. pag. 667. § 1.

They impouerish vs in Gods spirituall graces, § 2.

They doe infatuate the vnderstanding, pag. 668, 669. § 3.

They make men blind in finding the way to Heauen, pag. 670. § 4.

Worldly wealth makes men so ignorant, that they cannot know themselues, pag. 671. § 5. Nor their friends, pag. 672. § 6. Worldly wealth causeth security, pag. 673. § 8. It bringeth impenitencie and hardneſſe of heart pag. 674. § 9. The immoderate loue of the world, taketh away all true loue of our selues, pag. 675, 676. § 10. Aboundance of worldly things, aggrauates the sinnes of them that inioy them, § 11. Worldly store exposeth men to many temptations. p. 677. § 12.

They expose rich people to Gods wrath, p. 680, 681. § 16.

They hinder vs from attaining the ioyes of Gods Kingdome, cap. 35. p. 681. § 1.

The witcherie of the world, pag. 683. col. 1. ad initium & inde.

The Lord will not giue heauenly ioyes, to those that ouerprise worldly trifles, p. 683. col. 2. § 3.

The more that any abound in the things of this world, the greater shall be their rekoning at the last day, cap. 35. p. 687. § 7.

They increase our condemnation if wee abuse them, pag. 688 § 9. & p. 689.

A diswasion from the loue of the world and worldly things, p. 690 § 10.

All the faithfull haue euer acknowledged themselues to bee strangers in the world, lib. 3. part. 2. p. 691. c. 1. § 1.

It should weane vs from the world to consider that we liue as strangers in it, p. 692. § 2.

The world is to bee vsed as a passage to another place not as a place of our habitation, p. 693. § 3.

We ſhould not ſet our hearts on the world, becauſe it is the place of our warfare, p.694. § 4.

We ſhould contemne the world, becauſe we are Citizens of Heauen, and heires of better hopes, than any that are here, c.2.p.695, § 1.

The loue of the world ill beſeemes a Chriſtian, who hath aſſurance of after-happineſſe, p.696. § 2.

It is childiſh baſeneſs for an heir of Heauen, to ſet his heart on worldly things, p.696,697. § 3.

They that loue the world make forfeiture of their heauenly hopes, p.698,699. § 5.

All the faithfull haue from time to time contemned the world, § 6.

The loue of the world if it were not mortified in vs, would betray vs to the temptations of the Deuill, part.3.lib.2.c.19.p.916.§ 10 col.1.

Gods power is apparent in the weakneſſe of the Saints, part.1. lib.1.c.21 p.42,43. § 3.

Writing in the heart how vſually taken in the Scripture, lib.3.ca. 14.p.319.col.2.num.50.

Y

God requires of thoſe that are his their youth, part.1.lib.2. c.29.p.184.col.2. § 2.& inde.

Grace begun in youth will not eaſily be gone from them that ſo haue it, cap.31.pag.192.col.1. ad initium.

The exerciſes of Religion ſet vp-on in youth, will be pleaſant and eaſie, num.10.

They bring joy and peace, num. 40.& inde.

And cauſe a ſecurity in the expectation of death, col.2.num.30 & inde.

The inconueniencies of youth are many. A youth is compared to a Bird got out of a Cage, or a Colt broke out of a ſtable, part.2.lib.2.c. 23.p.577.col.2. num.20.& inde.

Z

IT is dangerous to remit any thing of the firſt zeale wee haue had in holy duties, part.4. lib.2.c. 24.col.1.p.1163. § 4.

FINIS.

LONDON,
Printed by William Stansby. 1634.